A GENERAL

DICTIONARY,

Hiſtorical and Critical:

IN WHICH

A New and Accurate TRANSLATION of that of the Celebrated

Mr. BAYLE,

WITH THE

CORRECTIONS and OBSERVATIONS printed in the late Edition at Paris, is included; and interſperſed with ſeveral thouſand LIVES never before publiſhed.

The whole containing the Hiſtory of the moſt illuſtrious Perſons of all Ages and Nations, particularly thoſe of Great Britain and Ireland, diſtinguiſhed by their Rank, Actions, Learning and other Accompliſhments.

With Reflections on ſuch Paſſages of Mr. BAYLE, as ſeem to favour Scepticiſm and the Manichee Syſtem.

By the Reverend Mr. JOHN PETER BERNARD;
The Reverend Mr. THOMAS BIRCH, M.A. and F.R.S.
Mr. JOHN LOCKMAN;
And other HANDS.

VOLUME VI.

LONDON,

Printed by James Bettenham,

For G. STRAHAN, J. CLARKE, in Cornhill; J. GRAY in the Poultry; J. SHUCKBURGH, C. CORBET, G. HAWKINS in Fleetſtreet; J. WILCOX, A. MILLAR in the Strand; T. OSBORNE in Grays-Inn; J. BRINDLEY in New-Bond-ſtreet; J. WOOD in Pater-Noſter-Row; C. WARD and R. CHANDLER at the Ship without Temple Bar, and ſold at their Shops in YORK-STREET in YORK, and at SCARBOROUGH-SPAW; J. BETTENHAM near, and E. CAVE at St. John's Gate.

MDCCXXXVIII.

A NEW and ACCURATE TRANSLATION
of the
HISTORY and CRITICAL
DICTIONARY
of
PETER BAYLE.

TO

MARTIN FOLKES Eſq;

VICE-PRESIDENT

OF THE

ROYAL SOCIETY,

This SIXTH VOLUME of the

GENERAL DICTIONARY,

Hiſtorical and Critical,

Is dedicated by

His moſt obedient and

Moſt humble Servants,

The Authors.

GENERAL DICTIONARY

OF THE

ROYAL SOCIETY

AND

LATIN LONDINENSIS.

TO

A GENERAL DICTIONARY Hiſtorical and Critical.

HALL (RICHARD) an Engliſh Divine of the Romiſh Communion, was, I think, one of thoſe who retired out of England, becauſe of the penal laws which were enacted under Queen Elizabeth againſt the Papiſts. He retired into the Spaniſh Low-Countries, and was Divinity Profeſſor at Doway, and Canon of St. Omer's. He publiſhed amongſt other works [A] a treatiſe of the origin of the wars of thoſe countries. He was not proper to treat on ſuch a ſubject. For his gratitude to the King of Spain, who furniſhed him with a ſafe retirement on the one hand, and on the other his reſentment for his baniſhment, which exaſperated him againſt all the Proteſtants, could not ſuffer him to examine with impartiality the conduct of thoſe Provinces, which rebelled againſt Philip II. And it is certain, that he ſhewed himſelf very paſſionate in that work [B]. He died in the year 1604 (a).

(a) Witte, in Diar. Biograph.

[A] He publiſhed ſeveral Works.] Here follow all that I know of his Writings: The Preface to John Giovanus's Book de Schiſmate ſeu Eccleſiaſticæ Unionis diviſione (of Schiſm or of breaking the eccleſiaſtical union) printed at Louvain in the year 1573, in 8*vo*. De tribus primariis cauſis Tumultuum Belgicorum, & contra coalitionem multarum Religionum, quam liberam Religionem vocant. i. e. Of the three chief cauſes of the "civil Wars in the Low-Countries, and againſt a "Coalition of ſeveral Religions, which they call a free "Religion." At Doway 1581. in 8*vo*: Pro Defenſione Regiæ & Epiſcopalis Auctoritatis contra Rebelles. "A "Vindication of the Royal and Epiſcopal Authority "againſt the Rebels." At Doway, 1584 in 8°. De quinque partita conſcientia Libri tres. "Three Books of "Conſcience divided into five parts." In the ſame City, 1598, in 8*vo*. De proprietate & Veſtiario Monachorum, aliiſque ad hoc vitium extirpandum neceſſariis. "Of the Propriety and Apparel of the Monks, and "of other things neceſſary to extirpate that exceſs." In the ſame City, 1585 in 8*vo*.

[B] He ſhewed himſelf very paſſionate in that work.] Particularly againſt the Prince of Orange: for he wrote whole Chapters to convict him of Tyranny, of endeavouring to make himſelf a King by tyrannical means like Abſalom, of having the ten Qualities, which according to Bartholus are the Character of a Tyrant, &c. He compared him to Julian the Apoſtate, and wrote all kind of invectives againſt that Prince, and againſt his Party (1), with a deſign to exaſperate the Roman Catholicks and to perſuade them not to grant the Liberty of Conſcience, which the Proteſtants demanded (2) A man who had ſo many Reaſons to be partial in favour of the King of Spain, and to be diſpleaſed with the Dutch, ſhould not have pretended to write the cauſes of that civil War. An Hiſtorian ought to be perfectly unbiaſſed, and as ſoon as a man has the leaſt reſentment againſt any nation, he ought to give over the writing of that nation's Hiſtory, particularly if he cannot follow his ill humour ever ſo little without pleaſing another nation, for whom he ought to have ſome complaiſance and gratitude. Such a man, I ſay, is obliged to decline the task, as honeſt Judges do, when they are themſelves ſome way concerned in a cauſe (3). Hiſtory ought not to be treated but by undefiled hands; it muſt be left to thoſe whoſe hands have not been imbrued with blood in a fight, either in a proper or in a figurative ſenſe; one ought at leaſt to wait, till time has purged the blots away, and conſolidated the wounds. Hiſtory muſt be revered like the houſhold Goods of the antients.

(1) Conſult Schultingius, Biblioth. Cathol. tom. 4. pag. 254.

(2) Idem, ibid. pag. 255.

(3) See what I have obſerved in the remark [D] of the article REMOND, and in the remark [L] of the article TIMÆUS.

Tu, genitor, cape ſacra manu, patrioſque penates.
Me bello e tanto digreſſum, & cæde recenti
Attrectare nefas; donec me flumine vivo
Abluero (4).

(4) Virg. Æn. lib. 2. ver, 717.

That is,

"Our Country Gods, the Relicks, and the bands
"Hold you, my Father, in your guiltleſs hands:
"In me 'tis impious holy things to bear,
"Red as I am with ſlaughter, new from War,
"Till in ſome living ſtream I cleanſe the guilt
"Of dire debate, and blood in battel ſpilt.

DRYDEN.

HALLE' (PETER) Profeſſor of Canon Law in the Univerſity of Paris was born at Bayeux in Normandy September the 8th 1611. He ſtudied Philoſophy, the Law, and Divinity during five years in the Univerſity of Caen. It muſt be added that he alſo applied himſelf with great care to Poetry, in which art his relation Anthony Hallé, one of the greateſt Poets of his time, gave him very good inſtructions. He made ſuch a progreſs under this eminent relation of his, that he gained the prizes in the poetical exerciſes, that are performed every year in theſe two cities (a). This gained him ſo great a reputation, that though he was ſtill very young, he was choſen Teacher of Rhetoric in the Univerſity of Caen. Some time after, being Rector of the Univerſity, he made, at the head of the four Faculties, a ſpeech to Monſieur Seguier Chancellor of France [A]. His Oration was was very much approved, and procured him the eſteem and protection of that head of the Law; ſo that he received the Doctor of Law's Cap from his hands in preſence of the Great Council, March the 18th 1640, after he had held a public diſputation in that illuſtrious Aſſembly (b). He attended Monſieur Seguier to Paris, and gained ſuch reputation by ſome pieces he publiſhed, that they offered him the Maſterſhip of five different Colleges, and he was in an unuſual manner incorporated in the body of the Univerſity (c) Auguſt the 14th 1641. He choſe to teach in the College of Harcourt rather than in any other, and had there a very great audience. He publiſhed now and then ſome Latin Poems, which increaſed his reputation, and gave his Mecænas an opportunity to raiſe him to the poſt of the King's Poet, and Reader of the Latin and Greek Tongues in the Royal College December the 18th 1646. His ſtrong application to ſtudy having ruined his health, he was obliged to reſt for two years, in order to recover it. When he enjoyed his health again, he reſolved to raiſe the glory of the Faculty of the Law, which was ſunk to a miſerable condition, there remaining but one Profeſſor of the Law [B]. In the year 1655, he obtained the poſt of Regius Profeſſor of the Canon Law, and employed all his cares to reſtore the ſtudy of that Science, the privileges of which he aſſerted vigorouſly [C], without being diſcouraged by the difficulties he met in his way. It is to him chiefly that the Profeſſors of Paris owe the privilege which they enjoy ſince the year 1679 [D]. He wrote very good books [E], and he had the ſatisfaction to reckon amongſt his friends the moſt illuſtrious learned men, who were ſtill more pleaſed with his virtue than with his learning. He died very well prepared [F] December the 27th 1689 (d).

(a) To the honour of the immaculate conception of the Virgin Mary.

[A] Monſieur Seguier Chancellor of France.] He was gone into Normandy to ſuppreſs the popular inſurrections, which had cauſed very great diſorders in ſeveral places of the province of Normandy.

(b) Propugnatis utriuſque juris theſibus laurea doctorali in ampliſſimo Comitum Conſiſtorianorum conſeſſu die 18 Martii 1640 ab ipſomet Cancellario decorari meruit. Vita Petri Hallé, de qua infra, Citat. (d).

(c) Abſens ab Univerſitate extra ordinem . . . exoptatur. Ibid.

(d) Taken from an Elogium written in Latin by John Hallé, Secretary to the K. of France; of which Elogium Mr. Pinſſon des Riolles communicated a manuſcript copy to me.

Since the firſt edition of this Dictionary I have read a Latin Elogium, which one (e) of this Profeſſor's pupils has conſecrated to his memory. This piece is very well written, and printed at Amſterdam for Henry Boom, in the year 1692. The readers will find in it a particular account of Peter Hallé's life, which will pleaſe them.

(e) Daniel Laet, Batavus, (a Dutchman.)

HAMADRYADES

[B] The Faculty of the Law . . . was ſunk to a miſerable condition, there remaining but one Profeſſor of the Law.] This was Monſieur Doujat. The faculty had loſt in a very ſhort time Francis Florent, and John Dartis. In juridicam deinde ſcholam geminato Franciſci Florentis, & Joannis Dartiſii funere afflictam ac prope deſertam cum Joanne Doujatio Collega primario extra ordinem accitus (1) anno 1655. Thus ſpeaks Monſieur Pinſſon des Riolles, in an Inſcription which he publiſhed to our Halle's honour.

(1) Obſerve, that he obtained the Profeſſorſhip without diſputing it, which was a favour and a diſpenſation. Ab eo (ſuo Mecænate) Regii Conſiſtorii placitum, quo Regii conſtitutionis anteceſſuras ad publici certaminis aleam ordinantis, remiſſo rigore, ad manus anteceſſorium promovebatur obtinuit. Vita Hallæi.

[C] He aſſerted the privileges of that Faculty vigorouſly.] Monſieur Pinſſon adds immediately, Quam quidem poſtea reſtitui, exornari, ac amplificari magis ac magis . . . procuravit. i. e. "which he afterwards "took care to have reſtored, commended, and im- "proved more and more." The Author of the Elogy gives us a more particular account. He aſſerts, that Halle obtained by his ſolicitations, that Pompone de Bellievre, firſt Preſident in the Parliament of Paris, ſhould reſtore to the Students of the common Law the privilege of poſtulating *, whence aroſe a great many diſputes (2). Hinc obrotæ lites: vicina Juris Collegia in eos acriter inſurrexerunt, & eos tum ad Senatum, tum ad Regis conſiſtorium traduxerunt. Ut tot malis ſuccurreret Hallæus, viginti quatuor viros pietate & doctrinâ commendatiſſimos, tanquam adjutores, in facultatem, re cum ſuis Collegis priùs communicata, adſcivit: facultate vix ab externo hoſte quietâ, nonnulli ex Doctoribus honorariis, Collegarum diſcordias in ſuum commodum alentes, plurima Anteceſſorum Jura ſibi arrogare tentabant. In hac temporum difficultate quâ facultas in partes ſcindi videbatur animum tantiſper ſuſtinuit, donec illa invidiæ tempeſtate feliciter pacatâ, & concordia facultati reſtitutâ, animum à negotio omni alieno revocans, ſedulo ſummaque diligentia ad reſtauranda Juris ſtudia totus incubuit (3). i. e. "Hence aroſe ſeveral Diſputes: "The neighbouring Colleges where the Law was "taught, roſe violently againſt them, and proſecuted "them both before the Parliament, and before the "King's Council. Hallé deſigning to provide againſt "ſo many evils, aggregated twenty men eminent by "their piety and learning, to the faculty that they might "aſſiſt him, having firſt conſulted his Collegues upon "this matter. The faculty was hardly free from thoſe "external enemies, when ſome honorary Doctors, who "found their account in fomenting the diviſions of their "Collegues, endeavoured to arrogate to themſelves "the Rights of the Law Profeſſors. During theſe "troubleſome times, when the faculty ſeemed to be "divided into parties, Hallé ſuſpended his undertaking a little; but when this ſtorm of envy was over, "and a good underſtanding was reſtored in the faculty, he applied himſelf zealouſly, and with the "utmoſt care to revive the ſtudy of the Law, neglecting all other Affairs that were foreign to this pur- "poſe."

* That is to ſay, of pleading in an inferior Court of Judicature.

(2) Juris Canonici auditoribus poſtulandi munus. Hallæo potiſſimum procurante, reſtitutum eſt. Ibid.

(3) Vita Hallæi.

[D] It is to him . . . the Profeſſors of Paris owe the privilege they enjoy ſince the year 1679.] They did not teach the Civil Law before that time. Ab eo præcipuè docendi rectam rationem inchoatam à Rege probatam & confirmatam fuiſſe affirmaverim. Studiis enim latius efflorescentibus ab invictiſſimo Rege Ludovico Magno, promovente illuſtriſſimo viro Michaële le Tellier Franciæ Cancellario, publica civilis Juriſprudentiæ profeſſio Pariſienſi ſcholæ, quâ ſuperiori ſæculo male exciderat, reſtituta eſt, & aſſerta Anteceſſoribus Juris Civilis interpretandi autoritas menſe Aprili 1679 (4), i. e. "I can aſſert, that the right method of teaching "was chiefly begun by him, and was approved and "confirmed by the King. For learning beginning to "flouriſh more and more, the moſt invincible King "Lewis the Great, by the advice of that very illuſtrious man Michael Le Tellier Chancellor of "France, reſtored to the Univerſity of Paris the privilege of teaching the Civil Law publicly, which "privilege that Univerſity had loſt in the preceding "century; and the Profeſſors obtained in April 1679 "the authority of reading Lectures on the Civil "Law."

(4) Ibid.

[E] He wrote very good books.] Here follow the words of his elogy. In auditorum favorem præter Inſtitutiones Canonicas, quas in lucem anno 1685 velut in famæ teſtamentum emiſerat, varios ad Jus Canonicum & Civile tractatus de Conciliis, de ſummi Pontificis autoritate, de Regalia, de Simonia, de Uſuris, de Cenſuris, de Regularibus, de Beneficiis Eccleſiaſticis, de Matrimonio, de Teſtamentis, & alia plura reconditæ doctrinæ monimenta exaravit. i. e. "Beſides his Canonical Inſti- "tutions, which he publiſhed in the year 1685 as a "proof that he deſerved his reputation, he wrote alſo "for the uſe of his pupils ſeveral treatiſes upon the "Civil and Canon Laws, as concerning Councils, "the Pope's authority, the Regale, Simony, Uſury, "Cenſures, Regular Perſons, Eccleſiaſtical Benefices, "Matrimony, Laſt Wills and Teſtaments, and ſeveral other monuments of his deep learning." He publiſhed in the year 1655 in 8*vo* a Collection of Latin Poems and Orations.

[F] He died very well prepared.] I refer to this the legacy he left to the Faculty of the Law. It is deſigned to have a maſs ſaid four times every year; all the Profeſſors and all the Doctors, who are preſent at it, receive a certain ſum of money (5).

(5) Legata prius Juris utriuſque Facultati ad ſacro-ſanctum Miſſæ ſacrificium ſtatis diebus quater in anno celebrandum ſummâ, ab Anteceſſoribus & Doctoribus utriuſque ordinis præſentibus percipienda. Vita Hallæi.

HAMADRYADES. Thus ſome nymphs were called, whoſe fate depended on certain trees, with which they were born and died [A]. It was chiefly with the oaks that they had ſo near a relation (a). It is reported, that they were ſometimes very thankful to thoſe who preſerved them from death [B], and that thoſe, who paid no regard to the humble

(a) See the remark [A], quotation (8).

[A] Their fate depended on ſome trees, with whom they were born and died.] Let us ſee Servius the Grammarian's note on the 62d verſe of Virgil's tenth Paſtoral. Hamadryades, ſays he, Nymphæ quæ cum arboribus & naſcuntur & pereunt, ἀπὸ τῦ ἅμα ἡ τῆς δρυὸς qualis fuit illa, quam Eryſichthon occidit: qui cum arborem incideret, & vox inde erupit, & ſanguis, ſicut docet Ovidius. i. e. "Hamadryades are Nymphs, who are born at "the ſame time with ſome trees, and die with them, "from ἅμα with, and δρὺς a tree; ſuch was ſhe, "whom Eryſichthon killed, who when he was cut- "ting a tree heard a voice come out of it, and ſaw "ſome blood run from it, as Ovid relates." Ovid quoted by this Grammarian has elegantly deſcribed the lamentations and the misfortune of this Hamadryad whom the impious Eryſichthon murthered: ſhe lived in an old oak prodigiouſly large, and which all the world revered (1). Eryſichthon's ſervants dared not to obey his command to cut that tree down, and he was forced to go himſelf to work about it.

(1) Stabat in his ingens annoſo robore quercus Una, nemus
. . . . .
menſuraque roboris ulnas Quinque ter implebat. Ovid. Metam. lib. 8. ver. 749.
That is,
"An ancient "oak in the dark "center ſtood.
. . . . .
"Full fifteen ells "it meaſured in "the waſte."
Mr. Vernon.

Dixit, & obliquos dum telum librat in ictus,
Contremit, gemitumque dedit Dodonia quercus:
Et pariter frondes, pariter palleſcere glandes
Cœpere, ac longi pallorem ducere rami.
Cujus ut in trunco fecit manus impia vulnus,
Haud aliter fluxit diſcuſſo cortice ſanguis,
Quàm ſolet ante aras ingens ubi victima taurus
Concidit, abrupta cruor è cervice profundi.
- - - - - - - - -
- - - - - - - - -
Editus è medio ſonus eſt cum robore talis:
Nympha ſub hoc ego ſum, Cereri gratiſſima, ligno:
Quæ tibi factorum pœnas inſtare tuorum
Vaticinor moriens, noſtri ſolatia lethi (1).
That is,
"He ſpoke, and as he pois'd a ſlanting ſtroak,
"Sighs heav'd, and tremblings ſhook the frighted "oak;
"Its leaves look'd ſickly, pale its acorns grew,
"And its long branches ſweat a chilly dew.
"But when his impious hand a wound beſtow'd,
"Blood from the mangled bark in currents flow'd.
"When a devoted bull of mighty ſize,
"A ſinning nation's grand atonement, dies,
"With ſuch a plenty from the ſpouting veins
"A crimſon ſtream the turfy altars ſtains.
- - - - - -
- - - - - -
"When from the groaning trunk a voice was heard,
"A Dryad I, by Ceres' love preferr'd,
"Within the circle of this claſping rind
"Coëval grew, and now in ruin joyn'd;
"But inſtant vengeance ſhall thy ſin purſue,
"And death is chear'd with this Prophetic view.
Mr. Vernon.

(2) Idem, ibid. ver. 763.

There are ſome Grammarians who ſeparate what Servius unites. They pretend that the Hamadryades were ſo called, either becauſe they were born, or becauſe they died with ſome oaks. Ἁμαδρυάδας νύμφας Μνησίμαχος φησὶ, διὰ τὸ ἅμα ταῖς δρυσὶ γεννᾶσθαι. ἢ ἐπεὶ δοκοῦσιν ἅμα ταῖς δρυσὶ φθείρεσθαι, νύμφαι ἁμαδρυάδες λέγονται (3). This ſeparation muſt be exploded, ſince the general opinion is, that the life of theſe Nymphs was exactly of the ſame length as the life of their trees. Hence it is, that Pindar ſaid in a Poem which is left, ἰσοδένδρῳ τέκμωρ αἰῶνος λαχοῦσα, I have obtained a life equal to that of my tree. Callimachus made uſe of the following expreſſion, ἡλικος ἀσθμαίνουσα περὶ δρυὸς, ſighing for her coeval oak (4). When he mentioned the Hamadryas Melya. Apollonius has imitated him, when he introduced an Hamadryad praying that a certain tree might not be cut down.

(3) Scholiaſt. Apollon. Rhodii in lib. 2. ver. 479. pag. m. 192. See alſo Plutarch. de Oraculor. Defectu, pag. 415. where he quotes Pindar's words.

(4) Callimach. Hymno in Delum, ver. 81.

Ἥ μιν ὑδρομένη ἀδινῇ μειλίσσετο μύθῳ,
Μὴ ταμέειν περέμνον δρυὸς ἡλικος, ἢ ἐπὶ πολλὴν
Αἰῶνα τρίζουσι διηνεκέες (5).
That is,
Who flattering him with a lamenting voice prayed

(5) Apollon. Rhod. lib. 2. ver. 480. pag. m. 193.

"with tears, that he ſhould not deſtroy her coeval "tree, in which ſhe had lived ſeveral ages."

Let us add to all theſe quotations another authority, namely, that of Homer. We read in one of his Hymns, that there are ſome trees, which are born at the ſame time with the Nymphs, and that theſe die when the trees dry and wither away.

Τῇσι δ' ἅμ' ἠ ἐλάται καὶ δρύες ὑψικάρηνοι
Γεινομένῃσιν ἔφυσαν ἐπὶ χθονὶ βωλιανείῃ.
- - - - - - - - - - - - - -
Ἀλλ' ὅτε κεν δὴ μοῖρα παρεξήκῃ θανάτοιο,
Αζάνεται μὲν πρῶτον ἐπὶ χθονὶ δένδρεα καλὰ
Φλοιῷ δ' ἀμφιπεριφθινύθει, πίπτουσι δ' ἀπ' ὄζοι,
Τῶν δὲ χ' ὁμῶ ψυχὴ λείπει φάος ἠελίοιο (6).
That is,
"With theſe Nymyhs ſome Fir-Trees, or lofty Oaks "are born upon earth; . . . But when their fatal hour "comes, theſe beautiful Trees begin to dry upon the "earth, the bark that ſurrounds them, decays, their "branches fall off, and at the ſame time the Nymphs "loſe the light of the ſun."

(6) Homer. Hymn. in Vener. pag. m. 852.

Statius mentions a wood, which laſted longer than its Nymyhs and Fauns; but this is not inconſiſtent with the tradition, which relates particularly to the Hamadryades. And beſides, who is there that knows that he regarded nothing in his poetical flights? It would not therefore be reaſonable to mind what he ſays, as though it could make an objection againſt the general opinion. You will find his words in the remark [D]. Auſonius, who was farther diſtant than he from the origin of that antient tradition, has yet followed it better. Non ſine Hamadryadis fato, ſays he (7), cadit arborea trabs. i. e. "The Tree does not fall, but the "Hamadryad dies at the ſame time."

(7) Auſon. Edyll. XII. pag. m. 483. Compare this with Balzac's Verſes, tranſcribed in the remark [K] of the article THOMAS (Paul).

Obſerve that Pauſanias expreſſes himſelf in ſuch a manner, as ſeems to prove that the Hamadryades were younger than their Trees. Τιθορέαν δὲ, ſays he (8), οἱ ἐπιχώριοι κληθῆναι φασὶν ἀπὸ Τιθορέας νύμφης, εἶναι τῷ ἀρχαίῳ λόγῳ τῶν ποιητῶν ἐφύσλο ἀπό τε ἄλλων δένδρων, καὶ μάλιστα ἀπὸ τῶν δρυῶν. i. e. "The inhabitants ſay "their country was called Tithoria, from the Nymph "Tithorea, one of them, who, as the Poets pretend, "were born of ſome Trees, and particularly of the "Oak." This is repreſenting the Trees as though they were the mothers of the Hamadryades: it is not true therefore that theſe Nymphs were born at the ſame time with their trees. But I do not think that we ought to lay too much ſtreſs upon Pauſanias's expreſſions: it was not his buſineſs to give a very accurate account of thoſe ancient fables. Let us therefore ſtick to this, namely, that the Poets have aſſerted, that thoſe Nymphs and the Trees were born at the ſame time. Take notice that Pauſanias obſerves that they were born chiefly of the Oak. I do not ſee that this can be refuted by Pherenicus's authority, for his account does not relate to the Hamadryades properly ſpeaking. He tells us (9), that the Fig-tree was called συκὴ, after the name of one of Oxylus's daughters; and that this Oxylus having lain with his ſiſter Hamadryas, begot eight daughters, who were all named Hamadryad Nymphs; but each of them had a particular name, which was afterwards given to trees. Amongſt theſe Nymphs, ſhe who was called συκὴ, gave her name to the Fig-tree. It ſeems to me that Hamadryas, Oxylus's ſiſter, was not of the ſame kind with the Nymphs who are the ſubject of this article; let this be obſerved with an illuſtrious author's leave (10).

(8) Pauſanias, lib. 10. cap. 32. pag. 879.

(9) Apud Athenæum, lib. 3. pag. 78.

(10) See Spanhem. in Callim. Hymno in Delum, ver. 83. pag. 378.

[B] It is reported that they were ſometimes very thankful to thoſe who preſerved them from death.] A certain man called Rhœcus, having obſerved an Oak that was ready to fall down, ordered his ſons to prevent its falling, by hardening the ground about its roots, and by putting props to ſupport it. The Nymph who would have periſhed, had the tree fell down, ſhewed herſelf to Rhœcus, gave him thanks for ſaving her life, and permitted him to aſk what reward he humble prayers which the Hamadryades made them to ſpare the trees on which their lives depended, were puniſhed for it [C]. Amongſt the mortal natures there were none that lived ſo long as this ſpecies of nymphs [D]. The Poets have ſometimes miſtaken pleaſed. He anſwered that he deſired to enjoy her. The Nymph promiſed him that he ſhould have in this reſpect all the ſatisfaction he could wiſh for, and commanded him to abſtain from all other women. She added that a Bee would be the meſſenger between them. But the Bee coming whilſt Rhœcus was playing, he gave her bad language, at which the Hamadryad was ſo exaſperated, that he was mutilated (11). This is what Charon of Lampſacus related, if we may depend on the Scholiaſt on Apollonius. He told alſo another ſtory, which ended better. Here it follows, as I find it in Natalis Comes, who does not quote the author from whom he borrowed it. Arcas, the ſon of Jupiter and Caliſto, was hunting in a wood, when he met with an Hamadryad, who was in great danger of periſhing; for the Tree with which ſhe was born had ſuffered very much about its roots by the overflowing of a river. She deſired Arcas to ſave that Tree. He granted her requeſt by making the river run another way, and ſettling the earth about the root of the Tree. The Nymph was not ungrateful; ſhe granted him what we call the laſt favour, and had two children by him. Her name was Proſpelea (12). Pauſanias tells us only, that Arcas was married with a Dryad Nymph, whoſe name was Erato, and by whom he had three ſons (13). One might infer from thence, that though the Hamadryades could not ſurvive their Oak or their Fir-tree, &c. yet they could ſometimes leave it; and if this conſequence were doubtful, we might confirm it by a paſſage from Homer, in which we read, that the ſame Nymphs, who were born and died with Trees, taſted the pleaſures of love in agreeable caves with the Sileni or Satyrs.

Τῇσι δὲ Σιληνοί τε καὶ ὐσκοπος Ἀρίσταιος
Μισγοντ' ἐν φιλότητι μυχῷ σπείων ἐροείνων (14).

[C] They, who paid no regard to the . . . . . prayers of the Hamadryades, ... were puniſhed for it.] Apollonius relates, that Peribœa's father drew a very heavy curſe upon himſelf and upon his children, becauſe he cut down a Tree, which a Nymph had begged him to ſpare. This Nymph had lived ſeveral ages in that tree. We have ſeen her prayer above; and we ſhall tranſcribe here the following part of the paſſage.

Αὐτὰρ ὁ τὴν γε
Ἀφραδέως ἔτμηξεν, ἀγηνορίῃ νεότητος.
Τῷ δ' ἄρα νηκερδὴς νύμφη πόρεν οἷτον ὀπίσσω
Αὐτῷ καὶ τεκέεσσιν (15).

That is,

" Yet he cut it down inconſiderately thro' a youthful " wantonneſs; for which the Nymph made him and " his children pay dear afterwards."

[D] None . . lived ſo long as this ſpecies of Nymphs.] Auſonius acquaints us with this in the verſes which I am going to tranſcribe, and which are a tranſlation of Heſiod's Greek verſes.

Ter binos decieſque novem ſuper exit in annos,
Juſta ſeneſcentum quos implet vita virorum.
Hos novies ſuperat vivendo garrula cornix:
Et quater egreditur cornicis ſecula cervus:
Alipedem cervum ter vincit corvus: & illum
Multiplicat novies Phœnix, reparabilis ales.
Quam vos perpetuo decies prævertitis ævo
Nymphæ Hamadryades, quarum longiſſima vita eſt.
Hi cohibent fines vivacia fata animantum.
Cætera ſecreti novit deus arbiter ævi
Tempora (16).

Heſiod's Poem, in which this doctrine is to be read, is not extant; but we find a fragment of it in a treatiſe of Plutarch; a fragment, I ſay, which contains but five verſes. Let us tranſcribe that paſſage of Plutarch, according to Amiot's tranſlation: it will ſhew us, that there were ſome Heathens, who maintained that the Deities of the ſecond rank were mortal. " Heſiod is " the firſt who diſtinguiſhed exactly four kinds of " reaſonable Natures, Gods, Dæmons, or Genii, " of which there are ſeveral, ſome good, ſome " bad, Demi-Gods, and Men . . . . He is of opi- " nion, that even the Dæmons die after a certain " revolution of years. For ſpeaking in the character " of a Naiad, he determines the time when they ceaſe " to be. The prating crow lives as long as nine men. " The hart as long as four crows; the raven as long as " three ſwift harts; the phœnix's life extends as far " as that of nine ravens put together. But as for you, Ha- " madryades Nymphs, the royal progeny of Jove, the ſpan " of your life is as long as that of ten phœnixes that " ſhould live ſucceſſively. Now they, who do not " well underſtand what the Poet meant by the " word Genea, that is to ſay, the life of a man, make " that ſpace of time amount to an immenſe number of " years, whereas it is but one year; ſo that the ſum " total is but of nine thouſand ſeven hundred and " twenty years, which is the ſpace of time allotted to " the dæmon's life. Several Mathematicians make it " ſhorter ſtill. Even Pindar does not make it longer, " when he aſſerts that the life of the Nymphs is equal " to that of the Trees, and that it is for this reaſon " they are called Hamadryades, becauſe they are born " and die with the Oaks (17)." Plutarch deſerves to be cenſured, becauſe he did not tranſcribe that verſe, wherein Heſiod ſet down the ſpace of man's life; for that was the ground of all the following calculations. I may very well ſuppoſe that Heſiod had ſet down that ſpace; becauſe his tranſlator, Auſonius, begins with obſerving that the age of man contains 96 years. This meaſure being once ſet down, we may calculate how long the harts, the ravens, &c. live: and we find that the crow lives 864 years; the the hart 3456; the raven 10368; the phœnix 93312; and the Hamadryad nine hundred thirty three thouſand one hundred and twenty. All this is ridiculous; and Pliny is in the right to explode it as abſolutely fabulous. De ſpatio atque longinquitate vitæ hominum, non locorum modo ſitus, verum exempla, ac ſua cuique ſors naſcendi incertum fecere. Heſiodus, qui primus aliqua de hoc prodidit, fabuloſe (ut reor) multa de hominum ævo referens, cornici novem noſtras attribuit ætates, quadruplum ejus cervis, id triplicatum corvis. Et reliqua fabuloſius in phœnice, ſac Nymphis (18). i. e. " The age of man, and the length of his life, is render- " ed uncertain, not only by the conſtitution of the " countries they live in, but by the inſtances we have, " and by every one's fate at his birth. Heſiod, who " is the firſt that publiſhed ſomething upon this ſub- " ject, relates fabulouſly (in my opinion) ſeveral " things concerning the length of man's life, aſ- " cribing nine times our age to the crows, four times " the crow's to the hart; three times this to the ra- " vens. What he aſſerts concerning the phœnix and " the Nymphs, is more fabulous ſtill." Though we ſhould reduce the thing to the loweſt computation, which is that which aſcribes but one year to the age of man (19), Heſiod's opinion concerning the Hamadryads would prove falſe: they could not live longer than their Trees; now there is no tree capable to live 9720 years. What Pliny relates of the long life of ſome trees (20), what others obſerve of the Oak of Mamre (21), a thouſand other ſtories of the ſame kind, though they were as true as they are doubtful, would prove nothing againſt me.

Obſerve that the Poet Statius ſuppoſed, that the demi-gods, who are mortal, do not live ſo long as the Trees. He mentions a wood, which ſaw its Dryades and Fauns entirely changed, and which might be compared to thoſe old caſtles, which were the dwelling places of the fathers, the ſons, the grand-ſons, &c.

Stat ſacra ſenectæ
Numine, nec ſolos hominum tranſgreſſa veterno
Fertur avos, Nymphas etiam mutaſſe ſuperſtes, Faunorumque greges (22).

That is,

" There ſtands a wood ſacred by its old age, which, " as is reported, did not only ſee the grand-fathers " paſs

(11) Σὺν πυρωθῆναι αὐτὸν. Schol. Apollon. in lib. 2. ver. 479.

(12) Taken from Natalis Comes, Mythol. lib. 5. cap. 11. pag. m. 465, 466. He obſerves that Charon of Lampſacus wrote this: but all this Author's works being loſt, Natalis Comes ought to have quoted the author who cited Charon of Lampſacus.

(13) Pauſan. lib. 8. cap. 4. pag. 604.

(14) Homer. Hymn. in Vener. pag. m. 852.

(15) Apollon. Rhod. lib. 2. ver. 482. p. 193.

(16) Auſon. Edill. 18. pag. m. 533. The ſenſe of theſe verſes is given in the following paſſage.

(17) Plutarch. de Oraculor. defectu, pag. 415.

(18) Plin. lib. 7. cap. 48. pag. m. 73.

(19) That is to ſay, ſuppoſing, as in the paſſage from Plutarch, that by the word Genea Heſiod meant but one year.

(20) Plin. lib. 16. cap. 44.

(21) See the remark [G] of the articles ABRAHAM and BARCOCHEBAS.

(22) Statius, Theb. lib. 6. ver. 93.

taken the Hamadryades for the Naiades [E]; they did not confine themſelves ſo exactly to the definition of every kind, but they confounded and blended them together when they pleaſed.

" paſs off the ſtage, but even changed its Nymphs,
" and herds of Fauns, and ſubſiſts after them."

He ſpeaks ſomewhat differently in another place; for he ſuppoſes that the Tree died, when the Hamadryad ceaſed to live.

Quid te, quæ mediis ſervata penatibus, arbor;
Tecta per & poſtes liquidas emergis in auras?
Quo non ſub domino ſævas paſſura bipennes?
Et nunc ignaro forſan vel lubrica Nais,
Vel non abruptos tibi demet Hamadryas annos (23).

(23) Idem, Silva 3. lib. 1. ver. 59. pag. m. 14, 15.

That is,

" Why ſhould you, a Tree, who have been preſerved
" by the Gods that dwell in you, ſhew your head
" now over gates and roofs? under what maſter will
" you eſcape the cruel ax? and now ſome Naid out
" of ignorance or wantonneſs, or perhaps your Ha-
" madryad will perhaps ſhorten thoſe days which have
" been ſpared till this time."

To conclude, it was eaſy for the Heathens to imagine, that there was ſuch a kind of Nymphs; for they entertained a great ſenſe of veneration and devotion for thoſe Trees, which they imagined to be very old, and whoſe extraordinary largeneſs was a ſign that they had lived very long (24). It was not a difficult ſtep to paſs from thence to a belief, that they were the dwelling place of ſome Deity. They made natural idols of them; I mean that they purſuaded themſelves that without the help of a conſecration, which made the Deities come down into the Statues that were conſecrated to them, ſome Nymph or ſome Deity had taken poſſeſſion of thoſe Trees. The Oak, which Eryſichthon cut down, was venerated for its loftineſs and antiquity: men uſed to adorn it as a ſacred place, and hung upon it the memorials of the good ſucceſs of their devotion, and the monuments of their prayers and vows that had been heard.

(24) Ennium ſicut ſacros vetuſtate lucos adoremus, in quibus grandia & antiqua robora jam non tantam habent ſpeciem, quantam religionem. Quint. lib. 10. cap. 1. p. m. 471. That is, " Let us reverence " Ennius as we " do thoſe woods, " which their " antiquity ren- " ders ſacred; " where the lofty " and antient " oaks appear " awful rather " than agreeable " to the eye."

Stabat in his ingens annoſo robore quercus
Una, nemus: vittæ medium memoreſque tabellæ,
Sertaque cingebant, voti argumenta potentis (25).

(25) Ovid. Met. lib. 8. ver. 746.

That is,

" An antient Oak in the dark Center ſtood,
" The Covert's Glory, and itſelf a Wood,
" Garlands embrac'd its ſhafts, and from the Boughs
" Hung Tablets, Monuments of proſp'rous Vows.

Mr. VERNON.

Muſt we wonder that it was taken for the dwelling-place of an Hamadryad?

[E] The Poets have ſometimes miſtaken the Hamadryades for the Naiades.] This is what Propertius has done ſpeaking of the Nymphs, who carried away Hercules's darling (26); he calls them ſometimes Hamadryades, and ſometimes Dryades, and yet they were Nymphs that belonged to a Fountain. Ovid on the contrary calls ſome Nymphs Naides, whoſe fate depended from a Tree.

(26) Propert. Eleg. 20. lib. 1.

Naida vulneribus ſuccidit in arbore factis,
Illa perit: fatum Naiados arbor erat (27).

(27) Ovid. Faſt. lib. 4. ver. 231.

That is,

" The Tree being wounded the Naias fell down and died;
" The Naiad's Fate was connected with that Tree."

I ſhall obſerve occaſionally, that it was ſtill more common to take the Hamadryades and the Dryades for each other. There is a Scene in the Hercules Oeteus, in which the effects of Orpheus's voice are deſcribed; it is aſſerted there amongſt other things, that the Dryads left their Trees to run to him.

Et quercum fugiens ſuam
Ad vatem properat Dryas (28).

(28) Senec. in Herc. Oeteo, ver. 1051. pag. m. 322.

It is ſomewhat likely, that thoſe Nymphs are meant here, who were born and died with a Tree, and who properly ſpeaking, were called Hamadryades, and not Dryades. It was not a conſtant Tradition, that theſe Nymphs could never leave their Trees, not even for a few moments. Seneca might therefore ſuppoſe, that they left them to go and hear Orpheus's Songs. Obſerve, that Servius was miſtaken, who imagined that the Poet Statius meant the Hamadryades in the following Verſes of the vith Book of the Thebais.

Linquunt flentes dilecta locorum
Otia, cana Pales, Silvanuſque arbiter umbræ,
Semideumque pecus, migrantibus adgemit illis
Silva, nec amplexæ dimittunt robora Nymphæ (29).

(29) Statius, Theb. lib. 6. ver, 110. pag. m. 234.

That is, " The gray-haired Pales, and Silvanus the
" the God of the ſhady Woods, and all the Herd of " the Demi-Gods, leave with tears in their Eyes the a" greeable retirement of that place; the Wood ſighs at " their departure, and the nymphs cannot part with the " Oaks they embrace."

It is certain that the Nymphs mentioned here, are they who were properly called Dryades: So that Servius was in the wrong to apply thoſe words, Nec amplexæ dimittunt robora Nymphæ, to the Hamadryades, whom he had juſt been deſcribing in theſe words. Hamadryades cum arboribus & naſcuntur & pereunt, unde plurumque, cæſa arbore, ſanguis emanat (30). i. e. " The Hamadryades are born and periſh with
" the Trees; whence it generally happens, that when
" the Tree is cut down, the blood runs from it."

(30) Servius, in Æneid. lib. 3. ver. 34.

Barthius has not obſerved this Grammarian's miſtake, and yet he quotes a paſſage which was very proper to diſcover it to him. Pulcra notatio in Commentario Antiquo, ſays he (31). Dimittunt] Non cum effectu intellige, dimittunt enim omnino, quamvis ſero dimittant. Sed diuturnitatem manifeſtat amoris, non abſceſſiſſe Nymphas, niſi penitus proſtratis arboribus. Sic ſolemus dicere: Ille modum non facit plorandi, non facit alius finem ridendi, cum diutius rideat aut fleat. i. e. " There is a very good Obſervation in an antient
" Commentary upon this word Dimittunt, i. e. they do
" not part with. You muſt not take it as though
" they really did not part with the Trees; it ſhews only the " long continuance of their love; the Nymphs did not " leave the Wood till the Trees were quite cut down.
" Thus we uſe to ſay, that man cries without ceaſing,
" the other laughs continually, when the one cries, and the
" other laughs a long while." Does it not appear very plainly from theſe words, that Statius does not ſpeak of the ſame kind of Nymphs with thoſe, of whom Servius has given a Deſcription, and who could not eſcape Death when their Trees were cut down?

(31) Barth. in Statii Theb. lib. 6. ver. 113. pag. 389. tom. 3.

☞HAMDEN or HAMPDEN (JOHN), deſcended of an antient family at Hamden in Buckinghamſhire, was ſon of John Hamden Eſq; by Elizabeth, ſiſter of Sir Oliver Cromwell of Hinchinbroke in Huntingdonſhire, Knight of the Bath. He was born at London (a) in the year 1594 [A], and entered a Commoner of Magdalen College in Oxford in 1609; but leaving the Univerſity without any degree, he removed to the Inns of Court, where he made a conſiderable progreſs in the ſtudy of the Law (b). He afterwards retired to his eſtate in Buckinghamſhire, and was choſen to ſerve in the Parliament, which began at Weſtminſter February the 5th $162\frac{5}{6}$, and all the ſucceeding Parliaments during the reign of King Charles I. The Earl of Clarendon obſerves (c), that though he became a Commoner of Magdalen College in 1609.

(a) Lib. Matric. Univ. Ox. P. pag. 104.

(b) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 30. 2d edit. London 1721.

(c) Hiſtory of the Rebellion and Civil Wars in England, vol. 2. Part 1. B. 7. pag. 265. edit. Oxford 1707 in 8vo.

[A] He was born at London in the year 1594.] Mr. Wood tells us (1), that he was 15 years of age, when

(1) Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 30.

though " in his entrance into the world he indulged to himſelf all the licence in ſports and " exerciſes and company, which were uſed by men of the moſt jolly converſation; he " afterwards retired to a more reſerved and melancholy ſociety, yet preſerving his own " natural chearfulneſs and vivacity, and above all a flowing courteſy to all men. Tho' " they who converſed nearly with him found him growing into a diſlike of the Eccleſi- " aſtical Government of the Church, yet moſt believed it rather a diſlike of ſome Church- " men, and of ſome introducements of theirs, which he apprehended might diſquiet the " public peace." In 1636 he became univerſally known by his refuſal to pay ſhip-money, as an illegal tax. Upon this he was proſecuted in the Exchequer, where he pleaded, and the Council demurring, the point in Law came to be argued for the King by his Council, and for Mr. Hamden by his Council; and afterwards the Judges particularly argued the point at the Bench, and all of them, except Hutton and Croke, argued, and gave their judgments for the King (d). His carriage throughout this agitation was with that rare temper and modeſty, that they who watched him narrowly to find ſome advantage againſt his perſon, to make him leſs reſolute in his cauſe, were compelled to give him a juſt teſtimony (e). When the Long Parliament began, in which he was returned as Knight of the Shire for the County of Buckingham, " the eyes of " all men, ſays the Earl of Clarendon (f), were fixed upon him, as their Pater " Patriæ, and the Pilot, that muſt ſteer the veſſel thro' the tempeſts and rocks, which " threatened it. And I am perſuaded, his power and intereſt at that time was greater to " do good or hurt, than any man's in the Kingdom, or than any man of his rank hath " had in any time; for his reputation of honeſty was univerſal, and his affections ſeemed " ſo publicly guided, that no corrupt or private ends could biaſs them." In the beginning of this Parliament he was appointed one of the Committee to prepare a charge againſt the Earl of Strafford, and to manage the evidence againſt him at his trial (g). But before this trial there was ſaid to be a propoſal for reſtoring the Earl to his former favour and honour, on condition that his Majeſty would promote Mr. Hamden to be Tutor to the Prince, and other eminent oppoſers of the Court to the moſt conſiderable poſts (h) [B]. January the 3d 164½ the King ordered articles of high-treaſon and other miſdemeanors to be prepared againſt the Lord Kimbolton, Mr. Hamden, and four other Members of the Houſe of Commons, and went to that Houſe to ſeize them, but they were then retired; and Mr. Hamden afterwards made a ſpeech in the Houſe to clear himſelf of the charge againſt him [C]. From this time " he was much altered, ſays " Lord Clarendon (i), his nature and carriage ſeeming much fiercer than it did before. " And

(d) Memorials of the Engliſh Affairs. By Bulſtrode Whitelocke Eſq; pag. 25. edit. London 1732, in fol.

(e) Clarendon, ubi ſupra.

(f) Ibid.

(g) Whitelocke, ubi ſupra, pag. 39.

(h) Idem, ibid. pag. 41.

(i) Ubi ſupra, pag. 266.

[B] A propoſal for reſtoring the Earl to his former Favour and Honour, on condition that his Majeſty would promote Mr. Hamden to be Tutor to the Prince, and other eminent Oppoſers of the Court to the moſt conſiderable Poſts.] We ſhall give Mr. Whitelocke's words upon this occaſion (2). There was a propoſal (the ſubject of much Diſcourſe) to prevent all this trouble [about the trial of the Earl of Strafford] and to reſtore the Earl to his former Favour and Honour, if the King would prefer ſome of the Grandees to Offices at Court, whereby Strafford's Enemies ſhould become his Friends, and the King's Deſires be granted. It was that  ſhould be made Lord Treaſurer, the Lord Say, Maſter of the Wards, Mr. Pym, Chancellor of the Exchequer; Mr. Hollis, Secretary of State; and Mr. Hamden, Tutor to the Prince; others to have other Places, in order whereunto the Biſhop of London reſigned up his Treaſurer's Staff, the Lord Cottington his Place of Maſter of the Wards, and the reſt were eaſily to be voided. But whether upon the King's Alteration of his mind, or by what other means is uncertain, theſe things were not effected; and the great men baffled thereby became the more incenſed and violent againſt the Earl, joining with the Scots Commiſſioners, who were implacable againſt him.

(2) Memorials of the Engliſh Affairs, pag. 41.

[C] Made a ſpeech in the Houſe to clear himſelf of the charge againſt him.] There was publiſhed at London 1641 in one ſheet in 4to the following Speech under Mr. Hamden's Name, " Mr. Speaker, It is a true " ſaying of the wiſe man, that all things happen alike " to all men, as well to the good man as to the bad. " There is no ſtate or condition whatſoever, either of " Proſperity or Adverſity, but all men are ſharers in " the ſame. No man can be diſcerned truly by the " outward appearance, whether he be a good ſubject " either to his God, his Prince, or his Country, un- " til he be tried by the Touchſtone of Loyalty. " Give me leave, I beſeech you, to parallel the Lives " of either ſort, that we may in ſome meaſure diſcern " truth from falſhood; and in ſpeaking I ſhall ſimilize " their Lives. 1. In Religion towards God. 2. In " Loyalty and due Subjection to their Sovereign; in " their Affection towards the ſafety of their Country. " 1. Concerning Religion, the beſt means to diſcern " between the true and falſe Religion, is, by ſearch- " ing the ſacred writings of the old and new Teſta- " ment, which is of itſelf pure, indited by the Spirit of " God, and written by holy men, unſpotted in their " lives and converſations; and by this ſacred Word we " may prove, whether our Religion be of God or no; " and by looking in this Glaſs we may diſcern whe- " ther we are in the right way or no. And look- " ing into the ſame, I find by this Truth of God, " that there is but one God, one Chriſt, one Faith, " one Religion, which is the Goſpel of Chriſt, and " the Doctrine of the Prophets, and Apoſtles. In " theſe two Teſtaments are contained all things ne- " ceſſary to Salvation. If that our Religion doth " hang upon this Doctrine, and no other ſecondary " means, then it is true; to which comes neareſt the " Proteſtant Religion which we profeſs, as I really and " verily believe; and conſequently that Religion, " which joineth with the Doctrine of Chriſt and his " Apoſtles the traditions and inventions of Men, Pray- " ers to the Virgin Mary, Angels, Saints, that are " uſed in the exerciſe of their Religion, ſtrange and " ſuperſtitious worſhipping, cringing, bowing, creep- " ing to the Altar, uſing Pictures, Dirges, and ſuch " like, cannot be true, but erroneous, nay deviliſh; " and all this is uſed and maintained in the Church " of Rome as neceſſary as the Scripture to Salvation; " therefore is a falſe and erroneous Church both in " doctrine and diſcipline; and all other ſects and " ſchiſms, that lean not only on the Scriptures, tho' " never ſo contrary to the Church of Rome, " is a falſe worſhipping of God, and not true Religion. " And thus much concerning Religion, to diſcern the " truth and falſhood thereof. I come now, Mr. " Speaker, to the ſecond thing intimated unto you, " which was to diſcern in a ſtate between good ſubjects " and bad, by their loyalty and due ſubjection to their " lawful Sovereign; in which I ſhall, under favour, " obſerve two things. 1. Lawful ſubjection to a King " in his own Perſon, and the Commands, Edicts, and " Proclamations of the Prince and his Privy Council. " 2. Lawful obedience to the Laws, Statutes, and " Ordinances made, enacted by the King and the " Lords,

" And without queſtion, when he firſt drew his ſword, he threw away the ſcabbard; " for he paſſionately oppoſed the overture made by the King for a treaty from Notting- " ham, and as eminently all expedients, that might have produced any accommodation " in this that was at Oxford, and was principally relied on to prevent any infuſions, " which might be made into the Earl of Eſſex towards peace, or to render them ineſ- " fectual, if they were made; and was indeed much more relied on by that party than " the General himſelf." In the beginning of the wars he undertook the command of a regiment of foot, and performed the duty of a Colonel upon all occaſions moſt punctually (k); and did good ſervice to the Parliament at the battle of Edge-Hill. In the beginning of the year 1643, it was reported about the City of London that the Earl of Eſſex was to reſign his poſt of General, and to be ſucceeded by Mr. Hamden (l). He received a mortal wound in an engagement with Prince Rupert in Chalgrave Field in Oxfordſhire (m), and died June the 24th 1643, and was interred in the Church of Great Hamden. We ſhall give his character in the note [D]. His eldeſt ſon, Richard Hamden Eſq; was choſen one of the five Knights for Buckinghamſhire to ſerve in the Parliament called by the Protector to meet at Weſtminſter September the 17th 1656. After

(k) Idem, ibid.

(l) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 30. 2d ed. 1721.

(m) Idem, ibid.

" Lords, with the free conſent of his great Council of " State aſſembled in Parliament. For the firſt, to " deny a willing and due obedience to a lawful Sove- " reign, and his Privy Council (for as Camden truly " ſaith, The Commands of the Lords, Privy Counſellors, " and the Edicts of the Prince are all one, for they " are inſeparable, the one never without the other,) " either to defend his Royal Perſon and Kingdoms a- " gainſt the enemies of the ſame, either publick or " private; or to defend the antient privileges and pre- " rogatives of the King, pertaining and belonging of " right to his royal Crown, and the maintenance of " his Honour and Dignity; or to defend and main- " tain true Religion, eſtabliſhed in the Land, accord- " ing to the Truth of God, is one ſign of an evil and " bad ſubject. Secondly, to yield obedience to the " Commands of a King, if againſt the true Religion, " againſt the antient and fundamental Laws of the " Land, is another ſign of an ill ſubject. Thirdly, " to reſiſt the lawful Power of the King, to raiſe " inſurrection againſt the King, admit him adverſe in " his Religion to conſpire againſt his ſacred Perſon, or " any ways to rebel, tho' commanding things againſt " our conſciences in exerciſing Religion, or againſt " the rights and privileges of the ſubject, is an abſo- " lute ſign of a diſaffected and traiterous ſubject. And " now having given the ſigns of diſcerning evil and " diſloyal ſubjects; I ſhall only give you in a word " or two the ſigns of diſcerning, which are loyal and " good ſubjects, only by turning theſe three ſigns al- " ready ſhewed on the contrary ſide. 1. He that " willingly and chearfully endeavoureth himſelf to " obey his Sovereign's Commands for the defence of " his own Perſon and Kingdoms, for the defence of " true Religion, for the defence of the Laws of his " Country, is a loyal and good ſubject. 2. To deny " obedience to a King, commanding any thing againſt " God's true worſhip and religion, againſt the antient " and fundamental Laws of the Land, in endeavour- " ing to perform the ſame, is a good ſubject. 3. " Not to reſiſt the lawful and royal power of the King, " to raiſe Sedition or Inſurrection againſt his perſon, " or to ſet Diviſion between the King and his good " Subjects by Rebellion, although commanding things " againſt Conſcience in the exerciſe of Religion, " or againſt the Rights and Privileges of the Subject, " but patiently for the ſame to undergo his Prince's " Diſpleaſure, whether it be to his Impriſonment, " confiſcation of Goods, Baniſhment, or any other Pu- " niſhment whatſoever, without murmuring, grudging, " or reviling againſt his Sovereign or his Proceed- " ings; but ſubmitting willingly and chearfully him- " ſelf, and his Cauſe to Almighty God, is the only " ſign of an obedient and loyal ſubject. I come now " to the ſecond means to know the difference between " a good ſubject and a bad, by their obedience to the " Laws, Statutes, and Ordinances, made by the King, " with the whole conſent of his Parliament. And in " this I obſerve a twofold Subjection, in the particu- " lar Members thereof diſſenting from the general " Votes of the whole Parliament; and ſecondly the " whole ſtate of the Kingdom in a full Parliament. " Firſt, I confeſs, if any particular Member of a Par- " liament, although his Judgment and Vote be con- " trary, do not willingly ſubmit to the reſt, he is " an ill ſubject to the King and Country. Secondly, " to reſiſt the ordinance of the whole ſtate of the " Kingdom, either by ſtirring up a Diſlike in " the hearts of his Majeſty's Subjects of the pro- " ceedings of the Parliament; to endeavour by le- " vying of arms to compel the King and Parlia- " ment to make ſuch Laws, as ſeem beſt to them; " to deny the Power, Authority, and Privileges of " Parliament; to caſt aſperſions upon the ſame; to " procure the untimely Diſſolution and breaking off " the Parliament before all things be ſettled by the " ſame, for the ſafety and tranquillity both of King " and State; is an apparent ſign of a traiterous and " diſloyal ſubject againſt his King and Country. And " thus having troubled your patience, in ſhewing " the difference between true Proteſtans and falſe, " loyal Subjects and Traytors, in a State or Kingdom, " and the means how to diſcern them; I humbly " deſire my actions may be compared with either, " both as I am a Subject, Proteſtant, and Native in " this Country, and as I am a Member of this pre- " ſent and happy Parliament; and as I ſhall be found " guilty upon theſe Articles exhibited againſt myſelf " and the other Gentlemen, either a bad or a good " ſubject to my gracious Sovereign and native Coun- " try, to receive ſuch ſentence upon the ſame, as " by this honourable houſe ſhall be conceived to a- " gree with Law and Juſtice."

[D] We ſhall give his Character in the Note.] Mr. Whitelocke tells us (3), that he was a Gentleman of the antienteſt Extraction in Buckinghamſhire, his Fortune large, his natural Abilities great; and his affection to publick Liberty and Applauſe in his Country, expoſed him to many difficulties and troubles, as in the Buſineſs of Ship-money, of the Loan, and now in Parliament, where he was a moſt active and leading Member. He ſpoke rationally and ſubtilly, and often propoſed more doubts than he reſolved. He was well beloved in his Country, where he had a great intereſt, as alſo in the Houſe of Commons. He died lamented. The Earl of Clarendon has drawn his Character at large; and obſerves (4), that " he was of that rare Affabilty and " Temper in debate, of that ſeeming Humility and " Submiſſion of Judgment, as if he brought no opi- " nion of his own with him, but deſire of Information " and Inſtruction. Yet he had ſo ſubtle a way of " interrogating, and under the notion of Doubts inſi- " nuating his objections, that he infuſed his own o- " pinions into thoſe, from whom he pretended to " learn and receive them. And even with them, who " were able to preſerve themſelves from his infuſions, " and diſcerned thoſe opinions to be fixed in him, with " which they could not comply, he always left the " Character of an ingenuous and conſcientious Per- " ſon. He was indeed a very wiſe man, and of " great parts, and poſſeſſed with the moſt abſolute ſpi- " rit of popularity and the moſt abſolute faculties to " govern the people, of any man I ever knew. For " the firſt year of the Parliament he ſeemed rather to " moderate and ſoften the violent and diſtempered hu- " mours, than to inflame them. But wiſe and diſ- " paſſion'd men plainly diſcerned, that that moderation " proceeded from prudence and obſervation that the " Seaſon was not ripe, rather than that he approved " of the moderation; and that he begot many opinions

(3) Memorials, pag. 70.

(4) Hiſtory of the Rebellion, vol. 2. Part 1, B. 7. pag. 265.

After the Reſtoration he was conſtantly elected to ſerve in Parliament during the reign of Charles II, James II, and King William and Queen Mary. In April 1689 he was made one of the Lords Commiſſioners of the Treaſury, and in November 1690 Chancellor of the Exchequer, and about the ſame time one of the Privy Council. He was father to John Hamden Eſq; who was one of the Knights of Buckinghamſhire in the Parliament, which begun at Weſtminſter October the 17th 1679, and one of the Burgeſſes for Wendover in that county in the Parliament, which began at Oxford March the 21ſt 1680. He was tried at the Court of King's Bench February 6, 168$\frac{3}{4}$ for a conſpiracy to diſturb the peace of the Realm, and fined forty thouſand pounds; and he was afterwards tried for High-treaſon at the Old Baily in London December the 30th 1685, and condemned; but his life was ſaved.

" and motions, the Education whereof he committed " to other men; ſo far diſguiſing his own deſigns, " that he ſeemed ſeldom to wiſh more than was con- " cluded; and in many groſs concluſions, which would " hereafter contribute to deſigns not yet ſet on foot, " when he found them ſufficiently backed by the ma- " jority of voices, he would withdraw himſelf before " the Queſtion, that he might ſeem not to conſent to " ſo much viſible unreaſonableneſs, which produced " as great a doubt in ſome, as it did approbation " in others, of his Integrity. What Combination " ſoever had been originally with the Scots for the " Invaſion of England, and what farther was enter- " ed into afterwards in favour of them, and to advance " any alteration of the Government in Parliament, no " man doubts was at leaſt with the Privity of this Gen- " tleman. . . . In the firſt entrance into the troubles, he " undertook the command of a Regiment of Foot, and " performed the Duty of a Colonel upon all occaſions " moſt punctually. He was very temperate in Diet, " and a ſupreme Governor over all his Paſſions and Af- " fections, and had thereby a great power over other " men's. He was of an Induſtry and Vigilance not " to be tired out, or wearied by the moſt laborious; " and of parts not to be impoſed upon by the moſt " ſubtle or ſharp; and of a perſonal Courage e- " qual to his beſt parts; ſo that he was an enemy " not to be wiſhed wherever he might have been " made a friend; and as much to be apprehended " where he was ſo, as any man could deſerve to be. " And therefore his Death was no leſs pleaſing to the " one party, than it was condoled in the other. In a " word, what was ſaid of Cinna, might well be appli- " ed to him; he had a Head to contrive, and a tongue " to perſuade, and a hand to execute any Miſchief. His " Death therefore ſeemed to be a great Deliverance " to the Nation." T.

☞HAMEL (JOHN BAPTISTE DU), a very learned French Philoſopher and Writer in the ſeventeenth Century, was ſon of Nicholas du Hamel, an Advocate, and was born at Vire in Lower Normandy in the year 1624 (a). He paſſed through his firſt ſtudies at Caen, and his courſe of Rhetoric and Philoſophy at Paris. At eighteen years of age he wrote a treatiſe in which he explained in a very ſimple manner, and by one or two figures, Theodoſius's three books of Spherics; to which he added a tract upon Trigonometry extremely ſhort and perſpicuous, and deſigned as an introduction to Aſtronomy [A]. At nineteen years of age he entered himſelf into the Congregation of the Oratory, where he continued ten years, and left it in order to be Curate of Neuilli upon the Marne. During both theſe intervals he joined an intenſe application to his ſtudies to the duties of his function. Natural Philoſophy, as it was then taught, was only a collection of vague, knotty, and barren queſtions; when our author undertook to put it upon a right foot (b), and began his deſign by publiſhing his Aſtronomia Phyſica [B], and his book de Meteoris & Foſſilibus [C]. In 1663 he quitted his Cure of Neuilli, after having held it ten years, and publiſhed at Paris his famous book De Conſenſu veteris & novæ Philoſophiæ [D]. In 1666 Monſieur Colbert propoſed to Lewis XIV a ſcheme, which was approved of by his Majeſty, for eſtabliſhing a Royal Academy of Sciences; and

(a) Du Pin, Nouvelle Biblioth. des Auteurs Eccleſiaſt. tom. 18. pag. 297. edit. Amſterd. 1711 in 4to. and Fontenelle, Eloge de Monſ. du Hamel, printed in his Hiſtoire du Renouvellement de l'Academie Royale des Sciences en 1699, & les Eloges Hiſtoriques de tous les Academiciens &c. vol. 1. pag. 148. edit. Amſterd. 1709.

(b) Fontenelle, ibid. pag. 148, 149, 150.

[A] At eighteen years of age he wrote a treatiſe, in which he explained . . . . . Theodoſius's three books of Spherics; to which he added a tract upon Trigonometry, extremely ſhort and perſpicuous, and deſigned as an introduction to Aſtronomy.] In one of his latter works he obſerves, that he was prompted by the vanity natural to a young man, to publiſh this book. But as Monſieur de Fontenelle remarks (1), there are few perſons of that age capable of ſuch an inſtance of vanity. And his inclination for ſcience muſt have been very general, to ingage him in the ſtudy of the Mathematics, which were then little cultivated, eſpecially in the place where he ſtudied (2).

(1) Eloge de Monſ. du Hamel, printed in his Hiſtoire du Renouvellement de l'Academie Royale des Sciences in 1699, & les Eloges Hiſtoriques de tous les Academiciens &c. vol. 1. pag. 149.

(2) Idem, ibid.

[B] His Aſtronomia Phyſica.] It was printed at Paris. 1659, in 4to. It is written in the form of a dialogue between Theophilus, a great zealot for the Antients, Menander, a warm Carteſian, and Simplicius, a Philoſopher, who is indifferent between the two parties, who endeavours to reconcile them, and has a right from his character to embrace what he thinks proper on either ſide. Simplicius is deſigned to repreſent Monſieur du Hamel. He has been reproached with not being impartial enough towards Des Cartes; and in reality Theophilus treats that Philoſopher with great ſeverity. Monſieur du Hamel anſwered, that Theophilus, who does ſo, is a man extremely bigotted to the Antients, and abſolutely averſe to any Moderns; and that Simplicius never ſpeaks of Des Cartes in reproachful terms. This is true; but as Monſieur de Fontenelle obſerves (3), it was Simplicius who made Theophilus ſpeak in that manner. This work of our Author is a collection of the principal ſentiments of the antient and modern Philoſophers upon light and colours, and the ſyſtems of the world. All that relates to the ſphere, the theory of the planets, and the calculation of eclipſes, is explained mathematically. (3) Pag. 153.

[C] His book De Meteoris & Foſſilibus.] It was printed at Paris, 1659, in 4to, and is written in the method of dialogue between the ſame perſons, who are introduced in his Aſtronomia Phyſica. It contains a collection of all that the authors of any reputation have ſaid upon Meteors and Foſſils; for Monſieur du Hamel did not confine himſelf to the reading of the moſt celebrated. In his dialogue upon Foſſils he ſhews a very extenſive knowledge of Natural Hiſtory and Chemiſtry, though the latter was, at that time, covered with a myſterious jargon, ſcarce poſſible to be underſtood.

[D] His famous book De Conſenſu veteris & novæ Philoſophiæ.] It was printed at Paris, 1663, in 4to, Oxford 1668, and Roan 1675. It contains an account of the firſt principles of Phyſics. It begins with the ſublime but obſcure Metaphyſics of Plato concerning Ideas, Numbers, and archetypal Forms; and tho' Monſ. du Hamel acknowledges this ſcheme of Metaphyſics to be far from intelligible, yet he could not refuſe it a place in his general Scheme of Philoſophy. He ſhews the ſame indulgence to the notions of Privation, ſubſtantial Forms, and other Scholaſtic Principles. But

(c) Idem, ibid. pag. 150-156.

and appointed our author Secretary of it (c). In 1667 he publiſhed at Paris in 12mo a Tranſlation of a French piece, under the title of Reginæ Chriſtianiſſimæ Jura in Ducatum Brabantiæ & alios Ditionis Hiſpanicæ Principatus; and the year following he publiſhed in Latin and French at the requeſt of Monſieur de Perefixe, Archbiſhop of Paris, a Diſſertation upon the rights of that Prelate in oppoſition to the pretended privileges of the Abbey of St. Germain des Prez. In 1668 he attended Monſieur Colbert de Croiſſy, Plenipotentiary for the peace at Aix-la-Chapelle. Upon the concluſion of the peace he accompanied him to England, where Monſieur Colbert de Croiſſi was Embaſſador. Here he formed an acquaintance with the moſt eminent perſons of this Nation, and particularly Mr. Boyle. Thence he went over to Holland, and ſo returned to France, having collected a great number of uſeful obſervations in his travels (d). In 1670 he publiſhed at Paris in 12mo his treatiſe, De Corporum affectionibus, cum manifeſtis, cum occultis; and in 1672 his book De Mente Humana, Paris in 12mo, and the year following his treatiſe, De Corpore animato [E], Paris 1673 in 12mo. In 1678 his Philoſophia vetus & nova ad uſum Scholæ accommodata, in Regia Burgundia pertractata was printed at Paris in four tomes in 12mo [F]. In 1681 there was publiſhed at Nuremberg in four volumes in 4to, a Collection of his Philoſophical and Aſtronomical Works. In 1691 his Theologia ſpeculativa & practica juxta SS. Patrum dogmata pertractata, & ad uſum Scholæ accommodata was printed at Paris in 7 vol. in 8vo; as his Theologiæ Clericorum Seminariis accommodatæ Summarium was at Paris in 1694 in 5 vol. in 12mo. In 1697 he reſigned his place of Secretary of the Royal Academy of Sciences, which by his recommendation he procured for Monſieur de Fontenelle. The year following he publiſhed at Paris in 4to his Regiæ Scientiarum Academiæ Hiſtoria [G], and his Inſtitutiones Biblicæ, ſeu Scripturæ ſacræ when he comes to intelligible Principles, as thoſe of the Laws of Motion, and thoſe laid down by the Chemiſts, he ſhews his inclination that way, notwithſtanding his endeavour to prove an univerſal agreement in Philoſophy. He appears to enter with reluctance into general queſtions, the reſult of which is only words, which have no other merit than to have paſſed upon the world for a long time for things. His inclination and good ſenſe always call him off immediately to Experimental Philoſophy, and eſpecially to Chemiſtry, for which he had a particular taſte (4).

(d) Idem, ibid. pag. 156, 157, 158.

(4) Idem, ibid. pag. 153, 154.

[E] His treatiſe De Corpore animato.] We may judge by the title, that Experimental Philoſophy is employed in this work. Anatomy is very frequently made uſe of in it. Monſieur du Hamel had gained great ſkill in that ſcience by the conferences of the Academy, and by a particular acquaintance with Monſieur Steno, and Monſieur du Verney. In this book he intimates that he had been reproached with not deciding of queſtions, and with being too undetermined between the different parties. He promiſed to correct this; but it muſt be owned, that he did not obſerve his promiſe exactly enough; though it is rare to meet with a Philoſopher, who is accuſed of not being ſufficiently deciſive (5).

(5) Idem, ibid. pag. 160.

[F] In 1678 his Philoſophia vetus & nova, &c. was printed at Paris in four Tomes in 12*mo.*] It was inlarged and reprinted at Paris, 1681, in ſix Tomes in 12mo, and there again in 1684, in two Tomes in 4to. The fifth edition was printed at Amſterdam, 1700, in ſix Tomes in 12mo. This work contains a judicious aſſemblage of the antient and modern opinions in Philoſophy. Several years after the publication of it the Miſſionaries, who carried it to the Eaſt-Indies, wrote, that they had taught this Philoſophy there with great ſucceſs, eſpecially that part relating to Natural Philoſophy, which of the four parts, into which the whole is divided, is that, in which the Moderns have the greateſt ſhare. It ſeems, that our Author was deſigned for the Philoſopher of the Eaſt. For Father Bouvet the Jeſuit, a famous Miſſionary in China, wrote into Europe, that when his brethren and himſelf engaged in drawing up a ſyſtem of Philoſophy in the Tartarian language for the Emperor of China, one of the chief ſources, which they made uſe of, was Monſieur du Hamel's Philoſophia vetus & nova (6).

(6) Idem, ibid. pag. 162, 163.

[G] His Regiæ Scientiarum Academiæ Hiſtoria.] It was reprinted with improvements at Paris, 1701, in 4to, under the following title: Regiæ Scientiarum Academiæ Hiſtoria, in quâ præter ipſius Academiæ Originem & Progreſſus, variaſque Diſſertationes & Obſervationes per triginta quatuor annos factas, quam plurima Experimenta & Inventa, cum Phyſica tum Mathematica, in certum Ordinem digeruntur. Secunda Editio priori longè auctior. The former edition contained four books, this includes a fifth and ſixth. In the firſt book he gives an account of the foundation of the Royal Academy of Sciences and its tranſactions, from 1666 to 1675. The ſecond continues the Hiſtory to 1684, the third to 1692; the fourth to 1696; the fifth to 1698; and ſixth to 1700 incluſively. As to the foundation of it, he tells us, that peace being concluded between France and Spain in 1659, Lewis IV thought proper to add the ſplendor of learning and ſciences to the glory of his Empire enlarged by ſo many victories. To this end he judged it the beſt way, that men eminent for learning ſhould form themſelves into a ſociety by the conſent of the public authority, and confer and debate together upon their inventions; which he perceived would be more advantageous, than if they laboured ſingly in the promoting of any one ſcience. He therefore ordered Monſieur Colbert to execute this deſign, which himſelf had projected. Monſieur Colbert having conſulted with men of good ſenſe and learning, reſolved, that the ſociety ſhould be formed of men well ſkilled in Natural Philoſophy and Mathematics, being of opinion, that thoſe Sciences were ſo ſtrictly united, that it was ſcarce poſſible for any perſon to excel in the former, who was not converſant in the latter. Others perſuaded him, that beſides Mathematicians and Natural Philoſophers, he ſhould adopt into the ſociety other learned men, who had applied themſelves to polite literature, and eſpecially thoſe, who were good maſters of Hiſtory. This advice being approved, he appointed that the Mathematicians and Natural Philoſophers ſhould meet ſeparately on Wedneſdays, and together on Saturdays, in that part of the Royal Library, which contained the books of thoſe Sciences. He ordered thoſe, who applied themſelves to Hiſtory, to meet on Mondays and Thurſdays in that part of the King's Library, which contained hiſtorical books; and that thoſe who ſtudied Polite Literature, ſhould meet together on Tueſdays and Fridays. He then appointed, that on the firſt Thurſday of every month all theſe ſocieties ſhould meet together; at which general meeting every one ſhould be permitted to deſire a ſolution extempore of thoſe things, which ſeemed difficult to him, but with this caution, that if the difficulties were greater than could be ſolved immediately, the objections and anſwers ſhould be given in writing, that the time of the meeting might not be ſpent in unprofitable diſpute. But this firſt conſtitution of the Academy did not continue long; for at the very beginning, the ſociety of thoſe, who met for the illuſtration of Hiſtory, was diſſolved for certain reaſons; for ſince Hiſtory, and eſpecially that of the church, hath a ſtrict connection with queſtions in Divinity, and particularly with thoſe relating to the government of the church, and ſince from matters of fact frequently matters of right are deduced, it was apprehended leſt this ſociety might offend thoſe, whom it was not ſafe to provoke. Monſieur du Hamel then gives an account how the ſacræ Prolegomena, una cum ſelectis Annotationibus in Pentateuchum [H], Paris, two volumes in 12mo. In 1701 he publiſhed in 12mo at Paris and Roan, In Pſalmos Commentarii cum Textu; and in 1703, In Libros Salomonis & Eccleſiaſticum Annotationes cum Textu, Paris and Roan in 12mo. His laſt work was Biblia ſacra Vulgatæ Editionis, unà cum ſelectis ex optimis quibuſque Interpretibus notis, Prolegomenis, novis tabulis Chronologicis & Geographicis. Paris 1706 in fol. He died at Paris Auguſt the 6th 1706, without any ſickneſs, and of mere old age, being almoſt eighty three years old. He went every year to viſit his old flock at Neuilli; and the day, which he ſpent there, was kept as an holy day by the whole village. While he was in England, the Engliſh Roman Catholics, who went to maſs at the French Embaſſador's chapel, uſed to ſay, Let us go to hear maſs ſaid by the holy Prieſt, ſuch reverence had his excellent character gained even among ſtrangers. Cardinal Anthony Barberini, grand Almoner of France, made him Chaplain to the King in 1656. He was highly eſteemed by the moſt eminent Prelates of France, though he enjoyed but very ſmall preferments (e). He was Regius Profeſſor of Philoſophy, in which poſt he was ſucceeded by Monſieur Varignon. He was a man of great modeſty, affability, piety, and integrity; he was diſintereſted and averſe to all conteſts, and exempt from jealouſy and affectation. He wrote Latin with prodigious purity and elegance (f).

(e) Idem, ibid. pag. 169, 170, 171.

(f) Du Pin, ubi ſupra, pag. 299.

the ſociety of Polite Literature was likewiſe ſeparated from that of Sciences. Moſt of the members of the former being alſo members of the French Academy, and perceiving that Academy now to decline exceedingly, they deſired Monſieur Colbert to ſhew the ſame favour to it, as he did to the new one, and repreſented, that there was no occaſion for different ſocieties for the ſame purpoſes, eſpecially ſince the ſame perſons did in a manner compoſe both Academies. This advice not being diſliked by Monſieur Colbert, he granted their requeſt, and exerted great zeal in reſtoring and maintaining this Academy, and became one of the members of it, and honoured it with his preſence. The Society of Polite Literature being thus ſeparated from its own body, and incorporated with the French Academy, the Academy of Natural Philoſophy and Mathematics only ſtood, and never loſt any part of its firſt ſplendor. In June 1666 about ſix or ſeven Mathematicians only began to meet, viz. Monſieur Carcavi, Huygens, Roberval, Frenicle, Auzout, Picart, and Buet; but it being propoſed at firſt, that this Academy ſhould likewiſe apply themſelves to the cultivation of Natural Philoſophy, Monſieur Colbert took care to chooſe men well ſkilled in Philoſophy, and who were not devoted to any particular ſcheme of it, but took pleaſure in all the ſeveral Sciences. Beſides the Mathematicians abovementioned there were added to the Academy Monſieur de la Chambre, Phyſician in ordinary to the King, Monſieur Perrault, a man of general learning, Monſieur du Clos, and Bourdelin, excellent Chemiſts, Monſieur Pecquet and Gayen, ſkilful Anatomiſts, and Monſieur Marchant, an eminent Botaniſt; and Monſieur du Hamel was ſome months before appointed Secretary. On the 22d of December 1666 theſe two Societies met in the hall of the King's Library, where they debated, whether it was beſt, that the Natural Philoſophers and Mathematicians ſhould meet together, and form one Society; or whether they ſhould meet apart. But becauſe of the ſtrict alliance between Natural Philoſophy and Mathematics they unanimouſly agreed, that they ſhould not be ſeparated, being encouraged by the examples of ſeveral great men, who by their ſkill in the Mathematics, contributed much more to the improvement of Natural Philoſophy, than thoſe other Philoſophers, who were not ſkilled in the Mathematics. They determined therefore, that both the Mathematicians and Natural Philoſophers ſhould meet twice every week, upon the Mathematics on Wedneſdays, and Natural Philoſophy on Saturdays; and that the acts of the Academy ſhould not be publiſhed without their own order. The King erected an Obſervatory for their uſe in the ſuburb of St. James at Paris; this Obſervatory is eighty foot high, and the foundations are dug as deep, becauſe almoſt the whole ſuburb, and the field adjoining to it, are made hollow underneath, ſtones being daily dug from thoſe caves either to build or repair houſes; by which means the deſcent of the Obſervatory into the ſubterranean cave is equal to the height. There is a large well, which reaches from the bottom of this Obſervatory to the top. It is built of ſuch hewn ſtones, that there was no need of mortar to faſten them. This Obſervatory began to be inhabited by Monſieur Caſſini, and to be furniſhed with all ſorts of inſtruments in September 1671.

[H] His Inſtitutiones Biblicæ, &c.] This work is divided into four diſſertations; in the firſt of which he treats of the Scriptures themſelves, their inſpiration, and authors. In the ſecond, of the authority and antiquity of the Hebrew Text, and the Greek and Latin Verſions. In the third, of the ſtyle and manner of writing of the Scriptures. In the fourth he explains briefly the Chronology and Geography of them.

T.

☞HAMMOND (HENRY), one of the moſt learned Engliſh Divines in the ſeventeenth Century, was youngeſt ſon of Dr. John Hammond, Phyſician to Prince Henry, and by the mother's ſide deſcended from Dr. Alexander Nowell Dean of St. Paul's in the reign of Queen Elizabeth (a). He was born at Chertſey in Surrey Auguſt the 18th, according to Dr. Fell (b), or the 26th, according to Mr. Wood (c), in the year 1605. From Eton-ſchool, where he was educated in Grammar-learning, and greatly improved in the Greek tongue by Mr. Thomas Allen, Fellow of that College (d), he was removed to Magdalen College in Oxford [A], where on the 30th of July 1622 he was made a Demy (e), and took the degree of Bachelor of Arts on the 11th of December following (f). June the 30th 1625 he took the degree of Maſter of Arts (g), and on the 26th of July the ſame year was elected Fellow of his College (h), having been before choſen Reader of the Natural Philoſophy Lecture in the College (i). After he had taken his degree he applied himſelf to the ſtudy of Divinity [B]; and in 1629 entered into holy Orders,

(a) The Life of the moſt learned, reverend and pious Dr. H. Hammond. Written by John Fell, D. D. Dean of Chriſt Church in Oxford, pag. 2. 2d edit. London 1662.

(b) Ibid. pag. 1.

(c) Hiſtoria & Antiquit. Univerſ. Oxon. lib. 2. pag. 202. and Athen. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 245. 2d edit. London 1721.

(d) Fell, pag. 4.

(e) Wood, Ath. Oxon. ubi ſupra.

(f) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 222.

(g) Idem, ibid. col. 231.

(h) Idem, Ath. Oxon. ubi ſupra.

(i) Dr. Fell, pag. 6.

[A] Removed to Magdalen College in Oxford.] Dr. John Fell tells us (1), that "at thirteen years old he "was thought, and (what is much more rare) was in"deed ripe for the univerſity, and accordingly ſent "to Magdalen-College, where not long after he was "choſen Demie." In this paſſage there is a miſtake; for Mr. Wood aſſures us (2), that he was made Demy of that College on the 30th of Auguſt 1622, that is not till he was ſeventeen years of age; whereas Dr. Fell, who obſerves that he was ſent thither at thirteen years of age, affirms in the words above-cited, that not long after he was choſen Demy.

(1) Life of the moſt learned, reverend, and pious Dr. H. Hammond, pag. 5, 6.

(2) Athen. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 245.

[B] Applied himſelf to the ſtudy of Divinity.] At firſt he bought a ſyſtem of Divinity, with a deſign to

(k) Wood, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 257.

Orders, and on the 28th of Jan. 1633 took the degree of Bachelor of Divinity (k) [C]. Auguſt the 22d following he was inducted into the Rectory of Penſhurſt in Kent, conferred on him by the Earl of Leiceſter, who a little before had been deeply affected with a ſermon of his at Court, which he preached there in the room of Dr. Frewen, then Preſident of his College, and afterwards Archbiſhop of York, who gave him the honour of ſupplying one of his Courſes at Court (l). Upon this he retired from the Univerſity, and applied himſelf to the diſcharge of his miniſterial functions with great vigour and ſucceſs [D]. March the 7th 1638 he proceeded Doctor of Divinity (m); and in 1640 became a Member of the Convocation called with the ſhort Parliament in April 1640 (n). In 1643 he had the Archdeaconry of Chicheſter conferred upon him by Dr. Brian Duppa, Biſhop of that See (o); and the ſame year was nominated one of the Aſſembly of Divines; but he did not ſit among them (p). In July that year he was obliged to quit his Living, and retired to Oxford [E], where he publiſhed his Practical Catechiſm in 1644, (l) Fell, pag. 9.

(m) Wood, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 276.

(n) Dr. Fell, pag. 25.

(o) Idem, pag. 23. and Wood, Athen. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 245.

(p) Wood, ibid. and Dr. Fell, pag. 25.

apply himſelf immediately to that ſtudy; but upon ſecond thoughts he returned to human Learning, and afterwards, when he reſumed his purpoſe for Theology, took a quite different courſe of reading from the other too much uſual, beginning that Science at the upper end, as conceiving it moſt reaſonable to ſearch for truth in the primitive writers, and not to ſuffer his underſtanding to be prepoſſeſſed by contrived and intereſted Schemes of modern, and withal obnoxious Writers (3). During the whole time of his abode in the univerſity, he generally ſpent thirteen hours of the day in ſtudy; by which aſſiduity, beſides an exact Diſpatch of the whole courſe of Philoſophy, he read over in a manner all claſſic Authors that are extant; and upon the more conſiderable wrote, as he paſſed, Scholia and critical Emendations, and drew up Indexes for his private uſe at the beginning and end of each book (4).

(3) Fell, pag. 7.

(4) Ibid. pag. 8, 9.

[C] On the 28th of January 1633 took the Degree of Batchelor of Divinity.] This we are informed of by Mr. Wood (5); and therefore Dr. Fell, who obſerves (6), that our Author, in 1629, being twenty four years of age, entered into holy orders, muſt be miſtaken in aſſerting, that not long after he took the degree of Batchelor of Divinity.

(5) Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 257.

(6) Ubi ſupra, pag. 7, 8.

[D] Applied himſelf to the diſcharge of his miniſterial Functions with great Vigour and Succeſs.] He ſatisfied not himſelf in diligent and conſtant preaching only, but much more conceived himſelf obliged, ſays Dr. Fell (7), to the offering up the ſolemn daily ſacrifices of Prayer for his people, adminiſtring the Sacraments, relieving the poor, keeping hoſpitality, reconciling of differences amongſt Neighbours, viſiting the ſick, catechiſing the youth. With regard to his preaching, it was not at the ordinary rate of the times, an unpremeditated indigeſted effuſion of ſhallow and crude conceptions, but a rational and juſt diſcourſe, that was to teach the Prieſt as well as the Lay hearer. His Method was, (which he likewiſe recommended to his Friends) after every Sermon, to reſolve upon the enſuing Subject; that being done, to purſue the courſe of ſtudy, which he was then in hand with, reſerving the cloſe of the Week for the proviſion for the next Lord's Day; whereby not only a conſtant progreſs was made in Science, but materials unawares were gained unto the immediate future work; for he ſaid, be the ſubjects never ſo diſtant, ſomewhat will infallibly fall in conducible unto the preſent purpoſe. As to the Adminiſtration of the ſacrament, he reduced it to an Imitation, though a diſtant one, of primitive frequency to once a month, and therewith its antient inſeparable Appendant, the offertory; wherein his inſtruction and happily inſinuating example ſo far prevailed, that there was thenceforth little need of ever making any tax for the poor. Nay, in a ſhort time a ſtock was raiſed to be always ready for the putting out apprentices young Children, whoſe Parents condition made the Proviſion for them an equal charity to both the Child and Parent. And after this there remained yet a ſurpluſage for the aſſiſtance of the neighbouring Pariſhes. For the relief of the poor, beſides the forementioned expedient, wherein others were ſharers with him, unto his private Charity, the dedicating the tenth of all Receipts, and the daily alms given at the Door, he conſtantly ſet apart over and above every Week a certain Rate in Money; and however rarely his own rent-days occurred, the indigent had two and fifty quarter days returning in his year. Yet further, another art of charity he had, the ſelling corn to his poor neighbours at a rate below the Market-price; which though, as he ſaid, he had reaſon to do, gaining thereby the charge of Portage, was a great benefit to them, who beſides the abatement of price, and poſſibly Forbearance, ſaved thereby a day's work. He farther obliged his Pariſhioners likewiſe in the ſetting of their Tithes and Dues belonging to him. For tho' he very well underſtood how prone Men are to give complaints in payment, and how little Obligation there is on him, that lets a Bargain, to conſider the caſual loſs, who is ſure never to ſhare in a like ſurpluſage of gain; yet herein he frequently departed from his right, ſo that having ſet the Tithe of a large Meadow, and upon agreement received part of the Money at the beginning of the Year, it happening that the Profits were afterwards ſpoiled and carried away by a Flood, he, when the Tenant came to make the laſt payment, not only refuſed it, but returned the former Sum, ſaying to the poor man, God forbid I ſhould take the Tenth, where you have not the nine parts. He made peace among his Neighbours; and not only attained his purpoſe of uniting diſtant Parties unto each other, but, contrary to the uſual Fate of Reconcilers, gained them to himſelf; there having been no perſon of his function any where better beloved than he when preſent, or lamented more when abſent, by his Flock. Of this tender and very filial affection, we may take two Inſtances; the one, that he being driven away, and his Books plundered, one of his neighbours bought them in his behalf, and preſerved them for him till the end of the war: the other that during his abode at Penſhurſt, he never had any law-diſpute about his dues, but had his tithes fully paid, and not of the moſt refuſe parts, but generally the very beſt (8).

(7) Pag. 10, & ſeqq.

(8) Idem, pag. 10-19.

[E] In July that year he was obliged to quit his living, and retired to Oxford.] At that time there was in his neighbourhood about Tunbridge an attempt in behalf of the King, "and his doctrine and example, "ſays Dr. Fell (9), having had that good influence, as "it was ſuppoſed, to have made many more ready "to the diſcharge of their duty;" but it being defeated, the Doctor (the malice of one, who deſigned to ſucceed in his Living, being withal aſſiſtant) was forced to ſecure himſelf by retirement; which he did, withdrawing himſelf to his old tutor Dr. Buckner, to whom he came about the 25th of July, early in the morning, in ſuch an habit as that exigence made neceſſary for him; and whither, not many days before, his old friend and fellow-pupil Dr. Oliver came upon the ſame errand. Which accident, and the neceſſity to leave his flock, as the Doctor afterwards frequently acknowledged, was that which did moſt affect him of any, that he felt in his whole life; amidſt which, though he was no valuer of trifles, he had ſo extraordinary a dream, that he could not then deſpiſe, nor ever after forget it. It was thus: He thought himſelf and a multitude of others to have been abroad in a bright and chearful day; when on a ſudden there ſeemed a ſeparation to be made, and he with the far leſs number to be placed at a diſtance from the reſt; and then the clouds gathering, a moſt tempeſtuous ſtorm aroſe, with thunder and lightnings, with impetuous rain and wind, and whatever elſe might add to a ſcene of horror, particularly balls of fire, which ſhot themſelves amongſt the ranks of thoſe, who ſtood in the leſſer party: When a gentle whiſper ſeemed to interrupt thoſe other louder noiſes, ſaying, Be ſtill, and

(9) Pag. 27, & ſeqq.

1644 [F], and ſeveral other tracts [G]. The ſame year he went with the Duke of Richmond and the Earl of Southampton, as Chaplain, to London, whither thoſe Noblemen were ſent to compoſe the unhappy differences in Church and State (q); and when the treaty of Uxbridge was appointed, he attended the King's Commiſſioners thither, and managed the diſpute with Richard Vines the Preſbyterian Miniſter [H]. In the beginning of 1645, he was made one of the Canons of Chriſt Church in Oxford, and Chaplain in ordinary and ye ſhall receive no harm. Amidſt theſe terrors the Doctor falling to his prayers, ſoon after the tempeſt ceaſed, and that known cathedral-anthem began, Come, Lord Jeſus, come away; with which he awoke. The correſpondent event of all which he found verified ſignally in the preſervation both of himſelf and his friends, in doing their duties; which with much content he was uſed to mention. Beſides, continues Dr. Fell (10), being himſelf taken to the quires of angels at the cloſe of that land-hurrican of ours, whereof that diſmal apparition was only a faint emblem, he gave thereby too literal a completion to his dream, and the unhappy credit of bordering upon prophecy. In this retirement the two Doctors remained about three weeks, till an alarm was brought, that a ſtrict enquiry was made for Dr Hammond, and 100 l. promiſed as a reward for him, who ſhould produce him. This ſuggeſtion though they eaſily apprehended to have a poſſibility of being falſe, yet they concluded a neceſſary ground for their removal. Upon this they reſolved to be gone; and Dr. Oliver having an intereſt in Winchester, which was then in the King's quarters, they choſe that as the next place of their retreat. But being on the way thither, Dr. Oliver, who had ſent his ſervant before to make proviſion for them, was met and ſaluted with the news, that Dr. Frewen, Preſident of Magdalen College, was made Biſhop of Lichfield, and that the College had pitched upon him as ſucceſſor. Upon this Dr. Oliver determined to go to Oxford, to which Dr. Hammond made much difficulty to aſſent, thinking that too public a place, and, what he more conſider'd, too far from his living, whither he had hopes, when the preſent fury was allayed, to return again; and to that purpoſe had written to ſuch friends of his as were in power, to uſe their intereſt for the procuring his ſecurity. But his Letters meeting a cold reception, and the company of his friend on one hand, and the appearance of deſerting him on the other hand, engaging him to it, he was at laſt perſuaded, and encompaſſing Hampſhire with ſome difficulty came to Oxford, where procuring an apartment in his old College, he ſought that peace in his retirement and ſtudy, which was no where elſe to be met withal; taking no other diverſion than what the giving encouragement and inſtruction to ingenious young Students yielded him, (a thing wherein he peculiarly delighted) and the ſatisfaction, which he received from the converſation of learned men; who, beſides the uſual ſtore, in great number at that time reſorted thither for their ſecurity (11).

(q) Dr. Fell, pag. 37.

(10) Pag. 30.

(11) Idem, pag. 30, 31, 32, 33.

[F] Publiſhed his Practical Catechiſm in 1644.] It was printed there and at London 1646 in 4to; and there is an edition at Oxford 1645 in 12mo. Having drawn this up at firſt for his private uſe, he communicated it to Dr. Potter, Provoſt of Queen's College at Oxford, who importuned him to make it public, alledging in that lawleſs age the great uſe of ſupplanting the empty form of godlineſs, which ſo prevailed, by ſubſtituting of its real power and ſober duties; of ſilencing profaneneſs, which then uſurped the names of wit and gallantry, by enforcing the more eligible acts of the Chriſtian's reaſonable ſervice, which was not any any other way ſo happily to be done, as by beginning at the foundation by ſound, and yet not trivial, catechetic inſtitution. Dr. Hammond would not conſent that the Book ſhould be publiſhed, unleſs his name were concealed; and this Dr. Potter undertook, as well as the whole care and charge of the edition. Upon theſe terms, only with this difference, that Dr. Hammond would not ſuffer the Provoſt to be at the entire charge, but went an equal ſhare with him, the Practical Catechiſm ſaw the light, and likewiſe the author remained in his deſired obſcurity (12). This book was attacked in 1646 by Mr. Francis Cheynell, B. D. in a Sermon at St. Mary's in Oxford, which occaſioned ſeveral letters between him and Dr. Hammond, who publiſhed them under the title of A Copy of ſome Papers paſt at Oxford between the author of the Practical Catechiſm and Mr. Ch. London 1647 and 1650 in 4to. He wrote alſo in defence of this Treatiſe A View of ſome Exceptions to the Practical Catechiſm from the Cenſures affixt on them by the Miniſters of London in a Book entitled, A Teſtimony to the truth of Jeſus Chriſt, &c. London 1648 in 4to; and A Vindication of three paſſages in the Practical Catechiſm. London 1648 in 4to.

(12) Idem, pag. 33, 34, 35, 36.

[G] And ſeveral other Tracts.] Particularly Of Scandal, Oxford 1644 in 4to; Of Conſcience, Oxford 1644 in 4to; Of reſiſting the lawful Magiſtrate under colour of religion, Oxford 1644, London 1647 in 4to; Of Will Worſhip, Oxford 1644 in 4to; Conſiderations of preſent uſe concerning the danger reſulting from the change of our Church Government, Oxford 1644 and 1646 in 4to; Of Superſtition, Oxford 1645, London 1650 in 4to; Of Sins of Weakneſs and Wilfulneſs, Oxford 1645 and 1650 in 4to; Explication of two difficult Texts Heb. vi. and Heb. x. printed with the preceding Tract; Of a late Death-bed Repentance, Oxford 1645 in 4to; A View of the Directory, and Vindication of the Liturgy, Oxford 1645, &c. in 4to; Of Idolatry, Oxford 1646, London 1650 in 4to; A View of the Exceptions, which have been made by a Romaniſt to the Lord Viſcount Falkland's Diſcourſe of the Infallibility of the Church of Rome, Oxford 1646 in 4to; The Power of the Keys: or of binding and looſing, London 1647, and 1651 in 4to; Of the word KPIMA; Of the Zealots among the Jews, and the Liberty taken by them; Of the taking up the Croſs; Vindication of Chriſt's repreſenting S. Peter from the exceptions of Mr. Stephen Marſhall, London 1647 in 4to, joined with the ſecond Edition of our Author's Book Of reſiſting the lawful Magiſtrate; Of fraternal Admonition and Correption, London 1647 and 1650 in 4to.

[H] Managed the diſpute with Mr. Richard Vines, the Preſbyterian Miniſter.] Dr. Fell tells us (13), that Mr. Vines, inſtead of tendering a ſcholaſtic diſputation, read from a paper a long Divinity-Lecture, wherein were interwoven ſeveral little cavils and exceptions, which were meant for arguments. Dr. Hammond perceiving this drew forth his pen and ink, and as the other was reading, took notes of what was ſaid, and then immediately returned in order an anſwer to the ſeveral ſuggeſtions, which were about forty in number; " which he did with that readineſs and ſufficiency, as " at once gave teſtimony to his ability, and to the e- " vidence of the truth he aſſerted; which amidſt the " diſadvantage of ex tempore againſt premeditation, diſ- " pelled with eaſe and perfect clearneſs all the ſo- " phiſms that had been brought againſt him (14)." It was afterwards reported indeed, that Mr. Vines utterly ſilenced the Doctor, ſo that he was obliged to uſe this unheard of ſtratagem to avoid his adverſary's demonſtration, to ſwear by God and the holy Angels, that tho' at preſent a ſolution did not occur to him, he could anſwer it. Concerning this we have the Doctor's own account in a letter dated Jan. 22d 1655, directed to a friend, who had acquainted him with this report. " I have " formerly been told, ſays he (15), within theſe few " years that there went about a ſtory much to my diſ- " paragement concerning the diſpute at Uxbridge, (for " there it was, not at Holdenby) with Mr. Vines; but " what it was I could never hear before. Now I do, " I can, I think, truly affirm, that no one part of it " hath any degree of truth, ſave only that Mr. Vines " did diſpute againſt, and I defend, Epiſcopacy. For " as to the argument mentioned, I did neither then, " nor at any time of my life, (that I can remember) " ever hear it urged by any. And for my pretended " anſwer, I am both ſure that I never called God and " his holy Angels to witneſs any thing in my life, " nor ever ſwore one voluntary oath that I know of, " (and ſure there was then none impoſed on me) and " that I was not at that meeting conſcious to myſelf " of wanting ability to expreſs my thoughts, or preſt " with ordinary to his Majeſty, who was then in that City, and choſen public Orator of the Univerſity (r). But theſe new employments did not divert him from publiſhing ſeveral new tracts (s). In 1647 he attended the King in his confinement of Wooburn, Caveſham, Hampton-Court, and the Iſle of Wight, where he continued till Chriſtmas that year, at which time his Majeſty's attendants were again put from him, and Dr. Hammond among the reſt. Upon this he returned to Oxford, where being choſen Sub-Dean (t), he continued there till the Parliamentary Viſitors ejected him, and then impriſoned him for ſeveral weeks in a private houſe in Oxford (u). During this confinement he began his Annotations on the New Teſtament [I]. At laſt by the interpoſition of his brother-in-law, Sir John Temple, he had licence granted to be removed to his friend Sir Philip Warwick's houſe at Clapham in Bedfordſhire (w). The trial of his Majeſty now drawing on, he wrote an Addreſs to the General and Council of War, and tranſmitted it to them [K]. His exceſſive grief for the King's death did not however interrupt his ſtudies; for beſides his fitting his Annotations for the preſs, and his Appendix or Anſwer to what was returned by the Apologiſt, London 1650 in 4to, and his little tract of the Reaſonableneſs of the Chriſtian Religion, printed at London 1650 in 12mo, he compoſed a Latin one againſt Blondel in defence of Epiſcopacy [L]. After ſeveral months confinement at Clapham, (r) Idem, pag. 44.

(13) Pag. 39.

(14) Idem, pag. 39, 40.

(15) Idem, pag. 42, 43, 44.

(s) See note [G].

(t) Idem, pag. 47, 48.

(u) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 246. Dr. Fell ſays, pag. 55. that he continued ten weeks in his reſtraint.

(w) Dr. Fell, pag. 55, 56.

" with any conſiderable difficulty, or forced by any " conſideration to wave the anſwer of any thing ob- " jected. A ſtory of that whole affair I am yet able " to tell you; but I cannot think it neceſſary. Only " this I may add, that after it I went to Mr. Marſhall " in my own and brethren's names to demand three " things; 1. Whether any argument propoſed by them " remained unanſwered, to which we might yield far- " ther anſwer: 2. Whether they intended to make " any report of the paſt diſputation, offering, if they " would, to join with them in it, and to perfect a con- " ference by mutual conſent, after the manner of that " between Dr. Reynolds and Mr. Hart; both which " being rejected, the 3d was, to promiſe each other, " that nothing ſhould be afterwards publiſh'd by either, " without the conſent or knowledge of the other party. " And that laſt he promiſed for himſelf and his bre- " thren, and ſo we parted."

[I] During this confinement he began his Annotations on the New Teſtament.] This we are informed of by Dr. Fell (16), who likewiſe obſerves (17), that our Author having written in Latin two large volumes in 4to of the way of interpreting the New Teſtament, with reference to the cuſtoms of the Jews and of the firſt hereticks of the Chriſtian Church, and of the Heathens, eſpecially in the Grecian Games, and above all the importance of the Helleniſtical Dialect, into which he had made the exacteſt ſearch, (by which means in a manner he happened to take in all the difficulties of that ſacred Book,) he began to conſider that it might be uſeful to the Engliſh Reader, who was to be his immediate care, to write in our vulgar language, and ſet every obſervation in its natural order, according to the guidance of the text. And having ſome years before collated ſeveral Greek copies of the New Teſtament, he obſerved the variation of our Engliſh from the original, and made an entire tranſlation of the whole for his private uſe; being thus furniſhed, he caſt his work into that form in which it now appears. The reaſons of it are ſet down by his own pen in the preface to his Annotations. This work was printed at London 1653 and 1659 in fol. A Review of it with ſome Additions and Alterations was printed in 1656 in 8vo. The reputation which our Author had gained by it in England, and the Fragments of his Annotations in Poole's Synopſis Criticorum, raiſed a great deſire in many learned foreigners, that the whole might be tranſlated into Latin. At laſt Monſr. le Clerc executed that taſk, and publiſhed his Tranſlation at Amſterdam 1698 in two volumes in fol. under this title: Novum Teſtamentum Domini noſtri Jeſu Chriſti, ex editione Vulgatâ, cum Paraphraſi & Adnotationibus Henrici Hammondi. Ex Anglica Lingua in Latinam tranſtulit, ſuiſque animadverſionibus illuſtravit, caſtigavit, auxit J. Clericus. Monſr. le Clerc's Animadverſions were afterwards printed by themſelves in Engliſh at Lond. in 4°. He complains in his preface of the Doctor's rough ſtyle, uſeleſs ſynonyma's and unneceſſary repetitions; on which account he thought fit to ſoften his harſh expreſſions, and retrench his ſuperfluities, comparing his work to a thick and dark foreſt, where abundance of buſhes and ſhrubs muſt be cut up to clear a paſſage. At the ſame time he declares, that he hath no where offered any violence to his author's meaning, but rather blames himſelf for not making uſe of a greater liberty. He intermixes a great many of his own animadverſions, explaining thoſe points, upon which Dr. Hammond had but ſlightly touched: and corrects many of his miſtakes. And whereas ſome might object, that it was ſcarcely worth the pains to tranſlate a Writer, who in ſo many things agrees with Grotius; he anſwers, that there are a variety of obſervations in Hammond, which neither Grotius nor any other Writer has mentioned; and that the Doctor has frequently enlarged what Grotius had ſaid, and confirmed it by new arguments. He obſerves, that with reſpect to points in Divinity, Dr. Hammond follows the Remonſtrants, eſpecially as to the doctrine of Predeſtination and Grace; but for particular paſſages, moſtly agrees with Grotius, tho' he recedes too much ſometimes from his original. However Monſr. le Clerc allows him the ſecond rank to Grotius, tho' he adds at the ſame time, that he falls very much ſhort of him. He frequently criticizes upon the Doctor's ſentiments, and examines his quotations by the originals; by which he hath diſcovered a great many typographical errors, eſpecially in numbers, and not a few of the Doctor's miſtakes in quoting upon the credit of others. He ſometimes reprehends him for giving a particular ſenſe to certain Greek words, contrary to the common uſe of thoſe words in Greek Authors, wherein he thinks the Doctor was not very converſant, and that he learned his Greek rather in ſtudying the Fathers to know their ſentiments, than to obtain an exact ſkill in the language. Hence it is, ſays he, that the Doctor frequently miſtakes in his grammatical diſcuſſions, in which he often engages; for his notes are generally rather critical than theological; and inſtead of conſulting the meaning of thoſe words, which cannot be well underſtood, except by a long and attentive reading of good Authors, he often conſulted his own reaſon, and ſome ancient gloſſaries, which he did not underſtand well, and therefore ſometimes corrupted them in attempting to correct them. Monſr. le Clerc remarks, that the Doctor was peculiarly fond of the hypotheſis, that the writings of the Apoſtles every where allude to the doctrine of the Gnoſtics; to ſupport which hypotheſis he wreſts many paſſages of Scripture.

(16) Pag. 55.

(17) Pag. 58.

[K] The Tryal of his Majeſty now drawing on, he wrote an Addreſs to the General and Council of War, and tranſmitted it to them.] It was intitled, An humble Addreſs to the Lord Fairfax and Council of War, 15th January 1648. London 1649 in 4to. It was anſwered afterwards by a perſon who ſtiled himſelf Eutactus Philodemius; whereupon he publiſhed, A Vindication of Dr. Hammond's Addreſs &c. from the Exceptions of Eutactus Philodemius in two particulars &c. together with a brief Reply to Mr. John Goodwin's Obſtructors of Juſtice, as far as it concerns Dr. Hammond. London 1649 in 4to. Mr. Goodwin in his book intitled, The Obſtructors of Juſtice: or a Defence of the honourable ſentence paſſed upon the late King by the High Court of Juſtice, London 1649 in 4to, anſwers, 1. The ſerious and faithful Repreſentation and Vindication of ſome of the Miniſters of London: 2. The humble Addreſs of Dr. Hammond: 3. Mr. John Geree's Might overcoming Right.

[L] His Latin Treatiſe againſt Blondel in defence of Epiſcopacy.]

Clapham, he was ſet at liberty, and went to Sir John Packington's ſeat at Weſtwood in Worceſterſhire, where he proſecuted his ſtudies, and finiſhed ſeveral of his writings, which have been printed [M]. When King Charles II came to Worceſter, he waited upon his Majeſty, whoſe defeat gave him the moſt exquiſite ſorrow (x), as did the Interdict of January 1655, which diſabled the Loyal Clergy from performing any miniſterial

(x) Idem, pag. 65.

Epiſcopacy.] It is intitled, Diſſertationes quatuor, quibus Epiſcopatûs jura ex S. Scripturis & primæva antiquitate adſtruuntur, contra ſententiam D. Blondelli, &c. London 1651 in 4to. To which is prefixed Diſſertatio de Antichriſto, de Myſterio Iniquitatis, de Diotrephe, & de Gnoſticis ſub Apoſtolorum ævo ſe prodentibus. Dr. Fell (18) informs us of the occaſion of our Author's writing this Treatiſe againſt David Blondel, which was as follows. Archbiſhop Uſher having received from Blondel a Letter of Exception againſt his Edition of Ignatius, he communicated it to Dr. Hammond, deſiring his ſenſe of ſeveral paſſages in it relating to the Valentinian Hereſy, Epiſcopal and Chorepiſcopal Power, and ſome emergent difficulties concerning them, from the Canons of ſeveral antient Eaſtern Councils. To all this the Doctor wrote a particular Anſwer, promiſing a fuller account, if it would be uſeful. Upon the receipt of which the Archbiſhop being highly ſatisfied, returned his thanks, and laid hold of the promiſe; which being accordingly diſcharged, became the proviſion, and gave the materials to a great part of the Diſſertations. The Primate's Letter was in theſe words. "I have read with great delight and "content your accurate anſwer to the objections "made againſt the credit of Ignatius his Epiſtles, for "which I do moſt heartily thank you, and am mov-"ed thereby farther to intreat you to publiſh to the "world in Latin what you have already written in "Engliſh againſt this objector, and that other *, who "for your pains hath rudely requited you with the "baſe appellation of Nebulo for the aſſertion of E-"piſcopacy; to the end it may no longer be credited "abroad, that theſe two have beaten down this cal-"ling, that the defence thereof is now deſerted by "all men, as by Lud. Capellus is intimated in his "theſis of Church Government, at Sedan lately pub-"liſhed, which I leave unto your ſerious conſideration, "and all your godly labours to the bleſſing of our good "God, in whom I evermore reſt.

Your very loving Friend
"Rygate in Surry, and Brother,
"July 21, 1649. Ja. Armachanus.

(18) Pag. 60, 61.

* Salmaſius.

The Archbiſhop was ſo concerned in this requeſt, that he reinforced it by another letter of Auguſt 30, and congratulated the performance by a third of January 14; "both which, ſays Dr. Fell (19), though very worthy "to ſee the public light, are yet forborn, as ſeveral of "the like kind from the reverend Fathers the Biſhops "of this and our ſiſter-churches, as alſo from the moſt "eminent for piety and learning of our own and the "neighbouring nations; which courſe is taken not "only in accordance to the deſires and ſentiments "of the excellent Doctor, who hated every thing, "that looked like oſtentation; but likewiſe to avoid "the very unpleaſing choice, either to take the "trouble of recounting all the Doctor's correſpon-"dencies, or bear the envy of omitting ſome."

(19) Pag. 63.

[M] Finiſhed ſeveral of his writings, which have been printed.] I. A Letter of Reſolution to ſix Queries of preſent uſe in the Church of England, London 1653, in 8vo. The 1ſt. Of the way of reſolving Controverſies, which are not clearly ſtated and reſolved in the Scriptures. The 2d Of marrying the Wife's Siſter. The 3d Of Polygamy and Divorces. The 4th Of the Baptiſm of Infants. The 5th Of Impoſition of Hands for Ordination. The 6th Of the Obſervation of Chriſtmas-day, and other Feſtivals of the Church. II. Of Schiſm: or, a Defence of the Church of England againſt the Exceptions of the Romaniſts, London 165$\frac{3}{4}$, in 12mo. It was anſwered by Mr. Jo. Serjeant, in a book intitled, Schiſm Diſarmed, &c. to which is an Appendix in anſwer to Dr. John Bramhall's Juſt Vindication of the Church of England, London, 1653, in ſmall 8vo. III. Reply to a Catholic Gentleman's Anſwer to the moſt material parts of the Book of Schiſm, London, 165$\frac{4}{5}$, in 4to. IV. Account of H. T. his Appendix to his Manual of Controverſies concerning the Abbot of Bangor's Anſwer to Auguſtine, printed with the preceding Tract. V. Vindication of the Diſſertations concerning Epiſcopacy, from the Exceptions of the London Miniſters in their Jus Divinum Miniſterii Evangelici, London, 1654, in 4to. VI. Of Fundamentals, in a Notion referring to Practice, London, 1654, in 8vo. VII. Anſwer to the Animadverſions on the Diſſertations touching Ignatius's Epiſtles, and the Epiſcopacy in them aſſerted, London, 1654, in 4to. VIII. Account of Mr. Dan. Cawdrey's Triplex Diatriba, concerning Superſtition, Will-Worſhip, and Chriſtmas Feſtival. London 1655, in 4to. This Account was anſwered by Mr. Cawdrey, Miniſter of Billing Magna in Northamptonſhire, in a book intitled, The Account audited and diſcounted, &c. London, 1658. IX. The Baptizing of Infants reviewed and defended againſt the Exceptions of Mr. Tombes in his three laſt Chapters of his Book intitled, Antipædobaptiſm. London 1655, in 4to. X. Defence of the learned Hugo Grotius, &c. London 1655, in 4to. XI. Second Defence of Hugo Grotius: or, a Vindication of the Digreſſion concerning him. London 1656, in 4to. XII. The Diſarmer's Dexterity examined; in a ſecond Defence of the Treatiſe of Schiſm. London 1657, in 4°. Soon after this Mr. Serjeant publiſhed his Schiſm diſpatch'd, &c. with an Appendix, London 1656, in a large 8vo, being a reply not only to Dr. Hammond, but alſo to Dr. John Bramhall. XIII. The Degrees of ardency in Chriſt's Prayer reconciled with his fulneſs of habitual Grace, in reply to [Mr. Henry Jeanes] the Author of a book intitled, A Mixture of Scholaſtical Divinity, &c. XIV. Paræneſis, &c. A Diſcourſe of Hereſy in Defence of our Church againſt the Romaniſts. London 1656, in 8vo. XV. Continuation of the Defence of H. Grotius, in an anſwer to the Review of his Annotations. London 1657, in 4to. XVI. Reply to ſome Paſſages of the Reviewer, in his late Book of Schiſm concerning his Charge of Corruptions in the Primitive Church, and ſome other Particulars. Printed with the preceding Tract. XVII. The Grounds of Uniformity, from 1 Cor. xiv. 40. vindicated from Mr. Henry Jeanes's Exceptions in one Paſſage in the View of the Directory. London 1657, in 4to. XVIII. Paraphraſe and Annotations on the Book of Pſalms. London 1659, in Folio. Theſe Annotations were remitted by Matthew Poole into the ſecond Volume of his Synopſis Criticorum, London 1671, in Folio, with this Character, Doctiſſimus Hammondus, in quibus multa reperiet Lector acumine perquam pluſquam vulgari, parique eruditione conſcripta, nonnulla etiam ſingularia. Dr. James Duport likewiſe in the Preface to his Metaphraſis Pſa[illegible]m, highly commends this work of our Author. [illegible]e Diſpatcher diſpatch'd: or, an Examination of [illegible]maniſt's Rejoynder to Dr. Hammond's Replies, wherein is inſerted a View of their Profeſſion and oral Tradition, in the way of Mr. White. London, 1659, in 4to. By this Mr. White is meant the famous Thomas de Alhus. XX. Brief Account of a Suggeſtion againſt the Diſpatcher diſpatch'd. London 1660, in 4to. XXI. ΧΑΡΙΣ ΚΑΙ ΕΙΡΗΝΗ: Or, a Pacific Diſcourſe of God's Grace and Decrees; in a Letter of full Accordance written to the Reverend and moſt Learned Dr. Robert Sanderſon. By Henry Hammond, D. D. To which are annexed the Extracts of three Letters concerning God's Preſcience reconciled with Liberty and Contingency. London, 1660, in 8vo. XXII. Two Prayers. London, 1660, in 8vo. XXIII. The daily Practice of Piety: alſo Devotions and Prayers in time of Captivity. London, 1660, in 8vo. XXIV. Spiritual Sacrifice: or, Devotions and Prayers fitted to the main uſes, &c. XXV. His Laſt Words, printed in a looſe ſheet. XXVI. Solemn Petition and Advice to the Convocation, with his Directions to the Laity how to prolong their happineſs. Cambridge, 1661, in 8vo. Publiſhed by Mr. Thomas Smith of Chriſt College in Cambridge, Author of The Riſe and Growth of Quakeriſm. XXVII. De Confirmatione, ſive Benedictione, poſt baptiſmum, ſolenni per impoſitionem manuum Epiſcopi celebrata, Commentarius ex ſententiâ Eccleſiæ Anglicanæ.

(y) Idem, pag. 73.

(z) Idem, pag. 83.

(aa) Idem, pag. 209.

(bb) Idem, pag. 211.

(cc) Idem, pag. 213.

(dd) Idem, pag. 231.

(ee) Idem, pag. 236.

(ff) Wood, Ath. Oxon. col. 249.

(gg) Ibid. col. 246.

(hh) Fell, pag. 85-89.

fterial act (y). He had undertaken a Commentary on the Old Teſtament, and had begun on the Book of Proverbs, and finiſhed a third part of it (z); when the execution of his other excellent deſigns was prevented by his ill ſtate of health, which at laſt put an end to his days. At the opening of the year 1660, when every thing viſibly tended to the Reſtoration of the Royal Family, the Doctor was deſired by the Biſhops to repair to London, to aſſiſt there in the compoſure of the breaches of the Church (aa), his ſtation in which was deſigned to be the Biſhopric of Worceſter (bb); but on the 4th of April he was ſeized by a fit of the ſtone (cc), of which he died on the 25th of that month (dd), in the fifty fifth year of his age (ee); and the next day was interred in the Chancel of Hampton-Church near Weſtwood (ff), where a monument is erected to his memory. Dr. Fell has drawn his character to great advantage [N]; and Mr. Wood tells us (gg), that "great were his natural abilities, greater his acquired; and in the whole circle "of arts he was moſt accurate. He was alſo eloquent in the tongues, exact in antient "and modern writers, was well verſed in Philoſophy, and better in Philology, moſt "learned in School-Divinity, and a great maſter in Church-Antiquity." His ſtature was of juſt height and all proportionate dimenſions; his face carried dignity and attractives in it, ſcarce ever clouded with a frown, or ſo much as darkened by reſervedneſs. His complexion was clear and florid, ſo that, eſpecially in his youth, he had the eſteem of a very beauteous perſon, which was leſſened only by the colour of his hair. His eye was briſk and ſprightly; and his conſtitution firm and patient of ſevereſt toil and hardſhip. His ſight was quick to an unuſual degree, that if by chance he ſaw a company of men, a flock of ſheep, or herd of cattle, being engaged in diſcourſe, and not at all thinking of it, he would involuntarily caſt up their number, which others after long delays could hardly reckon. His ear was accurate, ſo that having never learned to ſing by book or ſtudy, he would exactly perform his part of many things to a Harpſicon or Theorbo; and frequently did ſo in his more vigorous years, after the toil and labour of the day, and before the remaining ſtudies of the night. His elocution was free and graceful, prepared at once to charm and to command his audience; and when with preaching at his country charge he had in ſome degree loſt the due management of his voice, King Charles I, by taking notice of the change, became his maſter of Muſic, and reduced him to his antient decent modulation (hh). He had a great eſteem for the writings of Grotius [O], of XXVIII. Several Sermons, London, 1664, in Folio. They are in number thirty one, and ſome of them never before publiſhed. XXIX. Of Hell Torments, Oxford, 1664, in 12mo. Or, An Aſſertion of the Exiſtence and Duration of Hell Torments, &c. Oxford, 1665, in 8vo. XXX. An Accordance of St. Paul with St. James in the great point of Faith and Works. Oxford, 1665, in 8vo. XXXI. Anſwer to Mr. Richard Smith's Letter concerning the Senſe of that Article in the Creed, He deſcended into Hell; dated the 28th of April 1659. London, 1684, in 8vo. Mr. Smith's Letter was dated from Little Moor-fields near London, in the ſaid Month 1659. XXXII. Paraphraſe and Annotations upon the ten firſt Chapters of the Proverbs. London, 1683, in Folio. Beſides theſe he publiſhed The Chriſtian's Obligation to Peace and Charity, delivered in an Advent Sermon at Cariſbrook-Caſtle, Ann. 1647, and now publiſhed with nine Sermons more. London, 1652, in 4to. The Second Edition. His works were publiſhed by Mr. William Fulman of Corpus Chriſti College in Oxford, in four Volumes in Folio, at London 1684, and to the latter end of the fourth Volume was annexed an Appendix to the ſecond Volume.

[N] Dr. Fell has drawn his character to great advantage.] He tells us (20), that his invention was an unexhauſted treaſure, whoſe flowings were with that full torrent, that for ſeveral years, after his choice of ſubjects, which generally he had in proſpect beforehand, a little meditation on the Saturday night made up his Sermon; but in the laſt twelve of his life, finding the recollection of his thoughts diſturb his ſleep, he remitted the particular care of the compoſition and method of his future diſcourſe to the Sunday morning, wherein an hour's conſideration fitted him to the office of that day. With the like ſwiftneſs he diſpatched his writings, uſually compoſing faſter than his Amanuenſis, though a very dextrous perſon, could tranſcribe after him. His Conſiderations of preſent Neceſſity concerning Epiſcopacy, were drawn up after ten a clock at night in a friend's chamber, who profeſſed, that ſitting by all the while, he remembred not that he took off his pen from the paper till he had done; and the very next morning, it being fully approved by Dr. Duppa, Biſhop of Saliſbury, he ſent it to the preſs; to which work he could have no premeditation or ſecond thoughts, he being that very night after ſupper employed by the Biſhop on that taſk. So likewiſe he began his tract of Scandal at eleven at night, and finiſhed it before he went to bed. Nor was this a peculiar or extraordinary thing with him, but moſt cuſtomary; five ſheets having amidſt his other diverſions been ſeveral times his one day's work, adding to it ſo much of the night as he frequently borrowed from ſleep and ſupper. His memory was ſerviceable, but not officious, faithful to things and buſineſs, but unwillingly retaining the contexture and punctualities of words; which defect he frequently lamented, it being harder with him to get one Sermon by heart, than to pen twenty. His way of ſpeech and faculty of communicating notions was ſufficiently happy, having only this beſt kind of defect, exuberance and ſurpluſage of plenty, the tide and torrent of his matter being not eaſily confined by periods; whereby his ſtile, though round and comprehenſive, was incumbered ſometimes by parentheſes, and became difficult to vulgar underſtandings. But by the uſe of writing, and his deſire to accommodate himſelf to all capacities, he, in his latter years, had maſtered that defect, which was ſo ſlight, that, notwithſtanding it, King Charles I gave him the character of the moſt natural Orator he ever heard. His judgment was the moſt eminent among his natural endowments; it was clear and diſcerning, and that not only in ſcholaſtical affairs, and points of learning, but in the concerns and nature both of church and ſtate; wherein his gueſs was uſually as near to prophecy as any man's. His learning was univerſal. But the Scholar was leſs eminent in him than the Chriſtian. He was chaſte, temperate, devout, firm in his friendſhips, humane, diſpaſſionate; an enemy to flattery, declaring always, that he delighted to be loved, not reverenced; charitable and patient under all afflictions, ſo that when he laboured under the Gout, he would give thanks that it was not the Stone or Cramp; when it was the Stone, that it was not ſo ſharp as others felt.

(20) Pag. 90, & ſeqq.

[O] He had a great eſteem for the writings of Grotius.] He appears to have been very ſollicitous for the defence of that great man from the charge of Socinianiſm, and to have employed his friends to collect every thing neceſſary for that purpoſe. The very learned Dr. Walter Jones, Chaplain in Ordinary to his Majeſty, of which he made a great uſe in his own.

jeſty, has communicated to us two original Letters, the former from Mr. Samſ. Johnſon to Dr. Hammond, and the other from Grotius to Mr. Johnſon, which is imperfect, ſeveral words and lines being unfortunately defaced, ſo as not to be legible.

" Worthy Friend,

" I ſend you by Mr. Thruſcroſs a fragment of a " Letter from Grotius to me, long after that Crellius " had putt forth his book againſt his De Satisfactione, " and when Ruarus was with him at Paris, upon " whom he did gaine by conference, and brought him " to an expreſſion of his opinion about a kind of ſa- " tisfaction, which he does now acknowledge, and " which I could have ſent you, if the Mice had not " been malicious, when I brought over my books, " for they conſumed about twenty of his to me. If " I find any thing els to ſerve you, you ſhall have " it from, Sir,

" Your true Friend and Servant,
" both for your worth and
" old acquaintance,
" Samſ. Johnſon.

" Weſtm. 4
" Junii 1655.

" For the Socinian opinion, I know he was free; " and it was the malice of Rivett to bring him in " queſtion, as he did many others, out of pride and " ſupercilium unfitting ſuch a Profeſſor."

Grotius's Letter is as follows.

" Reverende Domine,

" Si quid unquam pietati tuæ boni per me contigit, " id certe non tibi quam mihi eſt: cum voluptate re- " cordor tempus illud, cum mihi ſermonibus tuis doc- " tiſſimis ſan * * * * quales ego, in magna quamvis " hic ſalutatorum copia, non parvo mihi emptos ve- " lim mihi eſſe, cum non datur, qnod proximum eſt " iſti felicitati, per literas commercium. Quos mihi " commendare, aut quovis modo notos facere volueris, " oſtendam, * * * pietatis amor apud me maneat, " quantique faciam ſummas tuas virtutes * * *. Ac- " cepit Gallia damni nonnihil ad S. Audomari urbem " & ad * * * capta Rentiacum & Caſteletum, tantum " eſt de virili ſtirpe regi nata dolores facile extrudit. " Veſtri illi vicini ſpiritu aguntur tui gregis; at niſi " * * * illegitimum fœdus, magno metuo vulnus, non " jam Epiſcopali, ſed reg * * * quantum me pro ſum- " mo erga gentem veſtram ſtudio hæc res ſollicitum * * " vim habet ad furiandos homines rerum imperitos illud " Knoxii, Bucha * * * præſertim cum in oculis ſint " felicium defectionum exempla. D. Seldeni * * ex " Hebræorum ſcriptis deprompta: quare in animo " illi eſſe noris, nos * * * * gaudeo. De Synedrio " pauca pro materiæ ubertate dedit nobis Cochii * * * * " Seldenus pro iſta ſua multijugi Lectione plurima ſcitu " utilia * * * * addere. Nec minus placet altera re- " condita eruditi * * * * quale Hebræi coluere. * * * * " Poteris autem, vir optime, omnibus, qui nos norunt, " affirmare, me de iis quæ contra Socini admiratores " defendi, non modo nihil diſcedere, & ſed & illorum " aliquos mea opera adductos ad meliorem ſententi- " am: quo magis gratias tibi habeo pro edito noſtro " libello de SatisfactioneChriſti, in quo argumento illos " a proprietate verborum tam multorum in ſacris li- " teris, & a manifeſtiſſimo antiquitatis conſenſu poſi- " tionibus quibuſdam inanibus abſtractos non dubito. " Patricium Junium amavi ſemper, amo nunc etiam " quod poſt Catenam in Jobum & Theophylacti quæ- " dam, etiam Euthymium, boni judicii in ſera ætate " ſcriptorem, publici juris facit. Decarteſii & Ga- " lilæi, eminentium Philoſophorum opera, tibi viſa " gaudeo. Neſcio an Mechanica Galilæi & de Motu " * * * videris. Franciſci Junii Librum de Picturâ " Veterum non minus delectavit, quam ipſæ picturæ " talium ſtudioſos ſolent. In Salmaſii libro de Uſuris " ſunt multa minime protrita. Nunc ne quis eum " putet nimium laxare habenas avaritiæ, addit alte- " rum de modo uſurarum. Inter ipſum & D. Heinſium " tentatæ conciliaturæ ſucceſſum non habuerunt. Ita- " que brevi ἀγῶνα aliquem habebimus. Bene com- " poſitum par. Ego ubi Heinſiana, & ut credo, Sal- " maſiana ad Novum Teſtamentum videro, quid mihi " de meis faciendum ſit, conſtituam. Teſtardus & A- " mirautius nihil aliud quam mala dogmata pulchris " verbis incruſtant, & quicquid dare videntur una ma- " nu, coacti ſcilicet ſcripturarum luce, id eripiunt al- " tera. Maxima me voluptate perfundit Literarum " tuarum pars poſtrema, quæ brevi te Hagam iturum " et * * *." T.

HANNO General of the Carthaginians was commanded to ſail round Africa (a). He entered into the ocean by the Strait which we call of Gibraltar, and diſcovered ſeveral countries (b). He would have continued his navigation, had it not been for want of proviſions. Some aſſert that he finiſhed it [A]; I mean that he ſailed to the very extremity of Arabia. He wrote an account of his voyage, which was often quoted; but it was not much credited [B]. There is ſomething of it extant [C]. The learned are not agreed

(a) See the remark [B].

(b) Pliny, and Pomponius Mela quoted in the remark [A].

[A] He would have continued his navigation had it not been for want of proviſions. Some aſſert that he finiſhed it.] Two paſſages, one from Pomponius Mela, and the other from Pliny, will ſerve us here for a Commentary. Hanno Carthaginienſis exploratum miſſus a ſuis, cum per Oceani oſtium exiſſet, magnam partem ejus circumvectus, non ſe mare ſed commeatum defeciſſe memorata retulerat (1). i. e. " Hanno the " Carthaginian being ſent by his countrymen to ob- " ſerve the coaſt of Africa, paſſed through the ſtrait of " Gibraltar, and did not finiſh his navigation, not " becauſe the ſea, but becauſe his proviſions failed " him, as he relates himſelf." Let us ſee Pliny's words (2). Et Hanno, Carthaginis potentia florente, circumvectus à Gadibus ad finem Arabiæ, navigationem eam prodidit ſcripto. i. e. " When the affairs of Car- " thage were in a flouriſhing condition, Hanno ſailed " from Cadix to the extremity of Arabia, and left " an account of his navigation in writing." Salma- ſius (3) ſuppoſes, that Pliny was miſtaken, and that Hanno did not carry on his obſervations as far as the Red-ſea, but only to the iſlands called Gorgades. Iſaac Voſſius is pretty near of the ſame opinion; he imagines that the iſland, which is now called St. Ann's, was the end of this Carthaginian General's naviga- tion (4).

(1) Pomponius Mela, lib. 3. cap. 9. pag. 63. editio Iſaaci Voſſii.

(2) Plinius, lib. 2. cap. 67. pag. m. 220, 221.

(3) Salmaſius, Exercit. Plin. pag. 1242, 1244.

(4) Iſaac Voſſius in Melam, lib. 3. cap. 20. pag. 305.

[B] He wrote an account . . . which was not much credited.] Pliny, who otherwiſe treats his authors with great indulgence, as all the world knows, yet could not forbear obſerving, that this writer related a great many fabulous ſtories. Fuere, ſays he (5), & Hannonis Carthaginienſium ducis commentarii, Punicis rebus florentiſſimis explorare ambitum Africæ juſſi: quem ſecuti plerique è Græcis noſtriſque, & alia quædam fabuloſa, & urbes multas ab eo conditas ibi prodidere, quarum nec memoria ulla nec veſtigium exſtat. i. e. " There was alſo an account written by Hanno a " General of the Carthaginians, who was ſent by " them to obſerve the coaſt of Africa, at a time " when their affairs were in the moſt flouriſhing con- " dition. Several, both Greek and Latin authors, who " followed his account, have related ſome fabulous " ſtories, and aſſerted that he built a great many ci- " ties, of which there is not the leaſt memory nor ſign " left." See alſo Athenæus (6).

(5) Plinius, lib. 5. cap. 1. pag. m. 523, 524.

(6) Athen. lib. 3. pag. 83. on whoſe words ſee Voſſius, de Hiſt. Græcis, pag. 514.

[C] . . . There is ſomething of it extant.] Sigiſmund Gelenius publiſhed it in Greek at Baſil by Frobenius in the year 1533. There was a ſecond Edition of it printed in the year 1559, with a Latin Tranſlation, and ſome Notes of Conrad Geſner. And yet Salma- ſius obſerves, that it ſeems the Greeks were never acquainted with this work. Scriptum illud non videtur innotuiſſe. Etenim ſi veniſſet in notitiam ac manus Græcorum, totam eam meridiani Oceani oram minime reliquiſſent intactam (7). i. e. " It ſeems, that this " Book was not known; for if it had come to the agreed about the time when he lived [D], and there is not the leaſt proof that the Carthaginians cauſed him to be put to death. He hung up in the temple of Juno the ſkins of " knowledge, and into the hands of the Greeks, they " would not have left all that Southern Coaſt of " the Ocean, without taking notice of it." He was not therefore acquainted with Pliny's words, which I have tranſcribed in the foregoing Remark, nor with a paſſage in the Book intituled, περὶ θαυμασίων ἀκουσμάτων, of wonderful hearſays, in which Hanno is quoted. This General's work is alſo mentioned in the Epitome of Artemidorus of Epheſus. Theſe are inſtances which ſhew, that there are ſome things very eaſy to know and which yet eſcape the knowledge of men of the deepeſt learning, and moſt extenſive memory. Iſaac Voſſius did not forgive Salmaſius this miſtake (8); nor did Father Hardouin paſs it unobſerved (9). Take notice, that what Geſner had publiſhed at Baſil in the year 1559, was again publiſhed at London in the year 1674, I mean Hanno's Periplus (or Circum-Navigation) with Geſner's Latin Tranſlation and Notes, and with John de Leon's Africa. But Berkelius added to all this ſome Obſervations extracted from the ſecond part of Bochart's Geographia Sacra. That ſame little work (19) of Hanno has been printed at Oxford in the year 1698, by Dr. Hudſon's care, with ſeveral other pieces of the ſame kind in the firſt Volume of the Geographiæ veteris Scriptores Græci minores, i. e. " The leſſer Greek Authors upon antient Geo- " graphy." The diſſertations, which Mr. Dodwell prefixed to this Volume, and which give us a full account of theſe ancient Greek Authors, abound with learning. That which relates to Hanno is not the leaſt important of them all. Mr. Dodwell does not think that this Carthaginian General wrote the Periplus, which we have under his Name. He aſcribes it to ſome Greek Author of Sicily, who was a ſtrenuous aſſerter of the Glory of Carthage. He imagines alſo, that the Periplus, which is now extant under the name of Hanno, differs very much from that which the antients had. See the Margin (11).

(7) Salmaſ. Exercitat. Plinianæ, pag. 1242.

him, becauſe they had ſeen that he had taught a Lyon to carry his baggage, which made them ſuſpect that he aimed at kingly power (18). Neither Pliny nor Plutarch ſay any thing that can make us gueſs at what time this happened, and it is not an eaſy matter to know for what reaſon Voſſius imagined they ſpeak of an Hanno different from ours. Father Hardouin is of another opinion; for he thinks that the Traveller is the ſame with him, who was condemned for taming a Lyon; but he cannot alledge the leaſt proof for it: one may eaſily conjecture that he is miſtaken; for it is ſomewhat probable, that if the ſame Hanno who ſailed round the Coaſt of Africa, was the perſon who tamed a Lyon, Pliny would have mentioned this particular. It is beſt not to determine any thing; let us not deny what Voſſius denies; but let us not affirm what Father Hardouin affirms. Obſerve that he ſuppoſes that Pliny aſſerts, that Hanno was put to death (19); but it is better to give a more general ſenſe to the word damnatus (condemned), ſince Plutarch aſſerts that Hanno was baniſhed. One may make the following objection againſt Voſſius. Ariſtotle in his Book de admirandis auditionibus (of wonderful hearings) quotes Hanno, whence it follows that this Carthaginian General lived before Agathocles. But Voſſius anſwers (20), that Ariſtotle is not the Author of that Book. Solinus's Authority is of no weight, who aſſerts that Xenophon of Lampſacus has quoted Hanno; for beſides that we do not know where this Xenophon lived, there are reaſons to think that Solinus impoſes upon us. Here follow his words (21). Has (Gorgades inſulas) incoluerunt Gorgones monſtra, & ſanè uſque adhuc monſtroſa gens habitat. Diſtant à continente bidui navigatione. Prodidit denique Xenophon Lampſacenus Hannonem Pœnorum regem in eas permeaviſſe, repertaſque ibi fœminas aliti pernicitate, atque ex omnibus quæ apparuerant, duas captas tam hirto atque aſpero corpore, ut ad argumentum ſpectandæ rei duarum cutes miraculi gratia inter donaria Junonis ſuſpenderit; quæ duravere uſque in tempora excidii Carthaginienſis. i. e. " Some Mon- " ſters called Gorgons inhabited thoſe Iſlands; and in- " deed a monſtrous Nation does ſtill live there. Theſe " Iſlands are two days ſailing diſtant from the Conti- " nent. Laſtly, Xenophon of Lampſacus relates that " Hanno, the King of the Carthaginians came to theſe " Iſlands, where he met with ſome women as ſwift as " Eagles; and having taken two of them that appear- " ed before him, whoſe body was ſo rough and hairy, " that it was worthy to be ſeen, he cauſed their ſkins to " be pulled off, which he hung up in the Temple of " Juno amongſt the other Gifts as wonderful ſights; " where they were to be ſeen till the Deſtruction of " Carthage". It is plain that this paſſage is only an imitation of the following words. Contra hoc quoque promontorium Gorgades inſulæ narrantur, Gorgonum quondam domus, bidui navigatione diſtantes à continente, ut tradit Xenophon Lampſacenus. Penetravit in eas Hanno Pœnorum Imperator, prodiditque hirta fœminarum corpora, viros pernicitate evaſiſſe; duarumque Gorgonum cutes argumenti & miraculi gratia in Junonis templo poſuit, ſpectatas uſque ad Carthaginem captam (22). i. e. " It " is reported, that over-againſt that Promontory are " ſituated the Iſlands called Gorgades, formerly inha- " bited by the Gorgons, two days ſailing diſtant from " the continent, as Xenophon of Lamſacus relates. " Hanno the General of the Carthaginians penetrated " to theſe Iſlands, and reports that the women, whoſe " body is very hairy, excell the men in ſwift- " neſs: he hung up the ſkins of two Gorgons as a " wonderful ſight in the Temple of Juno, where they " were to be ſeen, till the taking of Carthage." The Copy differs from the orignal in this, namely, that Pliny does not aſſert, as Solinus does, that Xenophon related that Hanno came as far as the Iſland called Gorgades, &c. Salmaſius ſuppoſes that Solinus aſſerted this, in order to prove that Xenophon of Lampſacus lived after Hanno. Hoc obtinere vult Solinus, ut finis illi reſpondeat principiis, & toto in curſu ſibi conſtet. Hanno vetuſtior Xenophonte Lampſaceno. Quomodo igitur hic de illo prodere potuit (22)? i. e. " Solinus aims at this, " that the end may anſwer the beginning, and his ac- " count

(8) Iſaac Voſſius, in Melam, pag. 302.

(9) Hardouin, in Indice Autor. Plinii, pag. 113.

(10) It may very well be ſtiled thus, for it does not contain ſix half pages in the Oxford edition in 8vo, 1698.

(11) Obſerve, that it is not ſaid in the preface to the Oxford edition, that Bosclerus publiſhed Hanno with notes in the year 1661.

(12) Voſſius, de Hiſt. Græcis, pag. 513.

(13) Neque iſtum factionis Barchinæ, de quo Livius libro de bello Punico ſecundo. Idem, ibid. i. e. " Nor him of " Hannibal's " faction, whom " Livy mentions " in the book of " the Punic " war." There is great obſcurity in theſe words; after Barchinæ he ſhould have added inimicum (enemy to Hannibal's faction) and after Libro, he ſhould have put 21. dum de (where he treats of) or ſomething like this.

(14) Juſtin, lib. 20. cap. ult.

(15) Idem, lib. 21. cap. 4.

(16) Idem, lib. 22. cap. 6.

(17) Plinius, lib. 8. cap. 16. pag. 161.

[D] The learned are not agreed about the time when he lived.] It was according to Pliny, when the affairs of the Carthaginians were in the moſt flouriſhing condition. This is a very indeterminate expreſſion; and yet Voſſius (12) finds in it ſufficient ground to aſſert, that our Hanno is neither the perſon of whom Juſtin ſpeaks in the xxth Book, nor he mentioned by Pliny in the ſixteenth Chapter of his eighth Book, nor yet he who was the head of a party at Carthage during the ſecond Punic-war (13); but he, who was ſent againſt Agathocles, as Juſtin tells us in his xxiid Book. The Hanno mentioned in Juſtin's xxth Book was ſent into Sicily againſt the Tyrant Dionyſius: The Gauls had then already taken the City of Rome (14), and they took it in the year 366 after its building. This Hanno was killed ſome time after with his whole Family, becauſe he attempted to make himſelf maſter of Carthage. I do not know whether that City was not then in as flouriſhing a condition, as when another Hanno was ſent againſt Agathocles (16): He loſt his Life in a battle in the year 443 after the building of Rome. I cannot think therefore that there is any certainty in Voſſius's Opinion. Obſerve that the paſſage which he quotes from Pliny relates to an Hanno, who was condemned becauſe he had had the art to tame a lion. It was thought that the Liberty of the Country would not be ſecure in the hands of a man, who had found means to ſubdue the cruel temper of the moſt ſavage animals. Primus hominum leonem manu tractare auſus, & oſtendere manſuefactum, Hanno e clariſſimis Pœnorum traditur; damnatuſque illo argumento, quoniam nihil non perſuaſurus homo tam artificis ingenii videbatur; & male credi libertas ei, cui in tantum ceſſiſſet etiam feritas (17). i. e. " It is reported that Hanno, one of the moſt fa- " mous men at Carthage, is the firſt who ventured to " handle a Lyon, and to tame it: for which reaſon " he was condemned; becauſe it was imagined that a " man of ſo artful a genius was capable to perſuade any " thing, and that it was not ſafe to truſt him with " the liberty of the People, to whom even the moſt " ſavage and cruel animals had ſubmitted." Voſſius obſerves, that Plutarch mentions the ſame Hanno. And he aſſerts indeed, that the Carthaginians baniſhed

(18) Plut. in Præcept. de gerend. Republ. towards the beginning, pag. 799.

(19) De eo multa paſſim Plinius: de ejus præſertim obitu lib. 1. ſect. 21. i. e. " Pliny " mentions ſeve- " ral things of " him in a great " many places, " and ſpeaks par- " ticularly of his " death, in the " 8th book, ſec- " tion the 21ſt." Hardouin. in Indice Autorum Plinii, pag. 113.

(20) Voſſius, de Hiſt. Græcis, pag. 514.

(21) Solinus, cap. ultimo.

(22) Plin. lib. 6. cap. 51. pag. 746.

(23) Salmaſ. Exercitat. Plinianæ, pag. 1297.

of ſome ſavage women, who had been flayed by his command. See the laſt remark (c).

(c) Quotation (22).

" count be coherent through the whole. Hanno is " more antient than Xenophon of Lampſacus; but " then how could the latter mention the former"? I confeſs that this is to me an inexplicable riddle: For I cannot imagine that it was in the leaſt Solinus's intereſt to ſhew that Hanno lived before Xenophon, much leſs can I underſtand, that if Xenophon flouriſhed after this Carthaginian, it was impoſſible for the former to quote the latter, as Salmaſius ſuppoſes it in his Interrogation. I think it is very likely that Solinus through his wonted inaccuracy, reduced Pliny's two Quotations to one; but I would not aſſert that Xenophon of Lampſacus did not relate all that he aſcribes to him. But if he had, you will ſay, Pliny would not have quoted two writers; he would have confined himſelf to Xenophon's Authority. I anſwer, you are miſtaken; for with regard to thoſe things, which one knows that Hanno related himſelf, it is proper to quote him, rather than thoſe, who declare that he related them.

Iſaac Voſſius has been very far from his father's opinion; for inſtead of aſſerting that our Hanno lived in the time of Agathocles (24), he makes him more ancient than Homer and Heſiod. He is not content with placing him at the head of the expedition which the Phœnicians made ſoon after the deſtruction of Troy (25): he found afterwards that this was not making him ancient enough. He ſuppoſed therefore in another work (26), that Hanno and Perſeus were contemporaries. Mr. Dodwell has very learnedly and ſolidly refuted that opinion, and all the arguments by which Voſſius endeavoured to prove it. He lays a great ſtreſs on a paſſage in Pliny's ſecond Book, in which it is obſerved, that Himilco and Hanno undertook long voyages. Et Hanno, Carthaginis potentia florente, circumvectus a Gadibus ad finem Arabiæ, navigationem eam prodidit ſcripto; ſicut ad extera Europæ noſcenda miſſus eodem tempore Himilco (27). i. e. " When Carthage was in a flou- (27) Plin. lib. 2. " riſhing condition, Hanno ſailed from Cadiz to the cap. 67. " extremity of Arabia, and has left an account of his " voyage; as Himilco did, who at the ſame time was " ſent to view the extremity of Europe." We find that during the war between Agathocles and the Carthaginians, the latter had two Generals, the one called Hanno, and the other Himilco (28). It may beſides be ſuppoſed with great probability, that this flouriſhing condition of the Carthaginians, mentioned by Pliny, preceded the firſt war in which they were engaged againſt the Romans; for it is not at all probable, that during that war they would have thought of diſcovering new countries; and it is well known that they did not end this war but by a great loſs on their ſide. So that theſe two chronological characters, mentioned by Pliny, lead us to ſuppoſe that he ſpeaks of an Hanno, who flouriſhed in the time of Agathocles. You will find in Mr. Dodwell (29) a great many curious obſervations, which perhaps will perſuade you that our Hanno muſt be placed between the 92d and the 129th Olympiads.

(28) See Diod. Sicul. ad Olymp. 118.

(29) Dodwell. Diſſertat. de Peripli Hannonis ætate, in limine Geographiæ veteris Scriptorum Græcorum minorum, tom. 1. edit. Oxon. 1698.

(24) Iſaac Voſſius. in Melam, pag. 302, 303.

(25) Strabo mentions it in his 1ſt book.

(26) De Magnitudine Carthaginis, pag. 52.

HARCHIUS (JODOCUS) (a) a native of Mons in the Province of Hainault lived in the ſixteenth Century. He practiſed Phyſic in his native city, and publiſhed ſome works that ſuited his profeſſion (b) [A]. He went afterwards beyond his reach, pretending to meddle with Divinity, in which he had very ill ſucceſs. He endeavoured to find out a medium in the doctrine of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper between the Roman Catholics and the Proteſtants, but he made himſelf ridiculous to both. The book he publiſhed upon that ſubject was refuted by Beza, who aſſerts, that it is a work ſo confuſed, ſo dark, ſo deſtitute of all order and method, that it is a very difficult taſk to gueſs what the author meant [B]. We ſhall

(a) And not Lodocus, as Konig calls him.

(b) Val. Andreas, Biblioth. Belgic. pag. 593.

[A] He publiſhed ſome works that ſuited his profeſſion.] He publiſhed at Liege in the year 1563 a Book in 8vo, de Cauſſis contemptæ Medicinæ; i. e. " The Reaſons " why Phyſick is deſpiſed." His Enchiridion Pharmacorum ſimplicium quæ in uſu ſunt; i. e. " A Manual " of the ſimple Medicines that are in uſe" is written in verſe, and was printed at Baſil in the year 1573 in 8vo (1). This Author might therefore have been placed in the Catalogue of the Phyſicians who were alſo Poets. He is not the only Author wanting in that liſt.

(1) Val. And. Biblioth. Belgic. pag. 593.

[B] Beza . . . . . afferts that Harchius's work is ſo confuſed . . . that it is a very difficult taſk to gueſs what the Author meant.] What he wrote againſt this Author is intitled de Cœna Domini adverſus Jodoci Harchii Montenſis (2) dogmata; i. e. " Of the Lord's Supper " againſt the opinions of Jodocus Harchius of Mons;" and is inſerted in the IIId volume of his Tractationes Theologicæ (Theological Tracts) from page 148 to page 186 of the Geneva Edition 1582 in folio. Hoſpinianus (3) aſſerts that this work of Beza was printed in the year 1580, and that Jodocus Harchius's Book had been printed at Baſil in the year 1573 with this title: De Euchariſtiæ Myſterio ad ſedandas controverſias in Cœna Domini libri tres; i. e. " Three Books " of the Myſtery of the Euchariſt, deſigned to ſup- " preſs the diſputes concerning the Lord's Supper." Beza declares that this Book of Jodocus Harchius had been printed ſeven years, when he began to read it. He adds that he did not know whether the place where it was printed was well ſet down; but that he judged it was not neceſſary to refute it, becauſe no man would approve ſuch ſtrange opinions; but that finding however the contrary of what he expected, he followed the advice of his friends, who would have him write againſt that Author. Licet urgentibus nonnullis, ut falſiſſimo ſane ipſius dogmati, utpote quo novæ potiùs controverſiæ excitarentur, quam veteres tollerentur, refutationem opponerem, ſilentio potiùs ejuſmodi ſcripta eſſe obruenda reſpondi. Nullam enim fore arbitrabar, qui tam abſurdis ſententiis aſſentiretur: quæ ſpes cum me fefellerit, cogor amicorum precibus, quam hæc vana ſint demonſtrare, id eſt, penè cum ratione inſanire. Adſcribam autem primo loco ipſius Jodoci verba ex variis ejus libri paginis optima fide deſcripta, ut quæ ſparſim & prorſus perturbate ſcripſit, adeo denique ἀμεθόδως & obſcure, ut de induſtria texiſſe potius, quàm apertè ſuum dogma ſpectandum propoſuiſſe videatur, melius appareant: & ne quam etiam, homini præſertim, ut audio, jam mortuo, injuriam in ipſius erratis annotandis, & refutandis, feciſſe me quiſquam ſuſpicetur (4). i. e. " Tho' " ſome perſons preſſed me to refute his falſe doctrine, " which ſerved rather to raiſe new controverſies, than " to ſuppreſs the old diſputes, yet I thought that ſuch " writings ought to be buried in oblivion: for I did " not imagine that any perſon could admit ſuch abſurd opinions: but being diſappointed in this my " expectation, I am forced, at my friends requeſts, to " demonſtrate how falſe and vain theſe things are, " which is almoſt to be mad in ſober ſadneſs. I ſhall " in the firſt place tranſcribe Jodocus's own words put " together from ſeveral pages with the utmoſt faithfulneſs, that the Reader may the better underſtand, " what is diſperſed through his work, and wrote with " the utmoſt confuſion, ſo immethodically, and ſo " obſcurely, that one would think, he choſe rather to " conceal his opinion on purpoſe, than to declare it " openly. This I ſhall alſo do, that I may not be " ſuſpected to have done the man any injury by obſerving and refuting his errors, eſpecially ſince, as I " hear, he is now dead." Obſerve by the by that Harchius was dead when Beza refuted him. The extracts which Beza gives of his work render it more intelligible, than it would be by reading the work itſelf. Here follows what Beza obſerves after he has given thoſe extracts. Et hæc quidem Harchius non minus ob-

(4) Theod. Beza, Opera tom. 3. pag. 148.

(2) He is erroneouſly called Modenſis in the Epitome of Geſner's Bibliotheca, pag. m. 515.

(3) Hoſpin. Hiſt. Sacrament. Parte altera.

ſhall give a general notion of his opinion below [C].

ſcurè quam perturbatè, ut qui ab una quæſtione ad alteram deſiliat, & plurimis ambiguis vocibus ac formulis utatur, adeo ut mihi ſæpiſſime hæc omnia relegenda, conſideranda, perſcrutanda fuerint, priuſquam quid homo iſte ſibi vellet, intelligere, & in ſuos locos diſtinctè ſingula referre potuerim (5). That is to ſay, "This is "what Harchius writes with no leſs obſcurity than "confuſion: for he paſſes abruptly from one queſtion "to another, and makes uſe of a great many equivo- "cal words and expreſſions; ſo that I was obliged to "read the ſame things over and over, to meditate "upon them, to examine them with the utmoſt care, "before I could gueſs what this man meant: and to "make ſenſe of his words I was forced to place every "thing in its proper place."

(5) Idem, ibid.

Two other theological Books of Harchius are mentioned in the Epitome of Geſner's Bibliotheque (6). De Cauſis Hæreſis, proque ejus exilio & concordia Controverſiarum in Religione, Hæreticorum, Pontificiorum, & pœnitentium Oratio ad Deum Patrem. i. e. "Of the "Cauſes of Hereſy, and a Prayer of the Hereticks, "Roman Catholicks and Penitents to God the Father "for its extirpation, and for an union and concord in "religious controverſies." at Baſil, 1573, in 4to. Orthodoxorum Patrum Irenæi, Cyrilli, Hilarii, Auguſtini & reliquorum, de Euchariſtia & Sacrificio univerſalis Eccleſiæ fides. i. e. "That the faith of the orthodox "Fathers, Irenæus, Cyrillus, Hilarius, Auguſtin, and "the reſt, concerning the Euchariſt, and Sacrifice is "the faith of the Catholick Church," in 8vo. This laſt book was printed in the year 1577, according to Hoſpinian (7).

(6) In pag. 515. of the Zurich edition 1583.

(7) Hoſpin. Hiſt. Sacrament. Parte altera.

[C] We ſhall give a general notion of his opinion below.] I take it from a Letter which Andrew Rivet wrote to la Milletiere July the 29th 1642. "Your "diſtinction of Matter and Myſtery, of αἰσθητὸν and "νοητὸν, ſenſible and intelligible overthrows all that you "pretend to eſtabliſh, without ſhewing how one can "eat with the mouth of the body a myſtery which is "deſtitute of matter, and how the matter of a body "exiſting no more, the ſubſtance of it continues, yet "to be; which I do not find to be explained in your "treaſure of rich conceptions. It is above thirty "years ſince I read ſomething like this in the work "of a certain Phyſician of the country of Juliers, "named Tſarchius (8), with whoſe heifer you ſeem to "have ploughed. He pretended, that the Body, "which the Church gives in the bread is the Body of "the eternal Word, which coming in an admirable "manner into the bread, turns it into the ſubſtance of "that fleſh, which had been raiſed up into heaven, "that it was a fleſh of the ſame nature with that, with "which the ſubſtance of our fleſh is nouriſhed. He "called it, as you do, a ſpiritual and intelligible "fleſh. He aſſerted that the fleſh, which was daily "created out of the bread and wine, and taken from "the altar by the faithful, was as to its nature like "Chriſt's fleſh, vivifying in heaven, becauſe of the "Deity's mixing itſelf with the bread in a manner "that cannot be expreſſed. He would have the Cal- "viniſts acknowledge on St. Auguſtin's authority, that "the Sacraments have really the true fleſh of Chriſt, "which though it be ſpiritual, is yet after its own par- "ticular manner taken in the mouth with the bread, "and ſome way digeſted in the heart. That is my- "ſteriouſly called Chriſt's fleſh, though it be neither "nervous, nor muſculous, nor animated. Upon the "ſame foundation he pretended to eſtabliſh, like you, "a real and propitiatory ſacrifice of the Body and "Blood of Chriſt, and the adoration of the Sacra- "ment. And though he imagined that by this me- "thod he could reconcile the contending parties, yet "he was not approved either by the Papiſt, or by "the Lutheran, or by thoſe of our Religion, none "being diſpoſed to take his idle fancies for ſound "doctrine; and his ſpeculations vaniſhed away, as "yours will do (9)." La Milletiere anſwering that he did not know that Author, Rivet made him the following reply. "That Harchius I mentioned to him, "and in whoſe work I found ſuch fooliſh fancies as his "are, ſhould not have been more unknown to him "than the Dialecticon (10), recommended by Grotius, "and placed in the ſame rank with the Sieur de la "Milletiere's Books. They are two pieces printed to- "gether in the year 1576, without the Printer's name, "or that of the place where it was publiſhed; tho' "in the title-page of the firſt edition of Harchius's "book it be ſaid, that it was printed at Worms (11)."

(8) This is an error of the preſs, inſtead of Harchius. I do not know why he is here made to be of the country of Juliers, for he was of Mons in Hainault. He did perhaps practiſe Phyſic in the country of Juliers; or Rivet imagined perhaps that Montenſis ſignified the Duchy of Berg, which he miſtook for that of Juliers, becauſe of their proximity, and being under the ſame Prince.

(9) Rivet, Reſponſes à trois Lettres du Sieur de la Milletiere, pag. 62, &c.

(10) Concerning that book ſee below the article POINET.

(11) Rivet, Reſponſes à trois Lettres de la Milletiere, pag. 143, 144.

HARDENBERG (ALBERT) a Proteſtant Miniſter at Bremen in the ſixteenth Century, was of the Augſburg Confeſſion for eighteen years, after which he declared for Calviniſm, and with ſuch ſucceſs, that he introduced it in the city, notwithſtanding the ſtrenuous oppoſition of his collegues and of the Magiſtrates. He had inſinuated himſelf ſo deeply into the favour of the inhabitants [A], that he made them declare for him againſt Lutheraniſm; ſo that the Magiſtrates, who refuſed to forſake the Confeſſion of Augſburg, were deprived and baniſhed. They all died in their baniſhment (a). The author who acquaints me with theſe particulars, refers his readers to a work which Dithmar Renchelius, Burgomaſter of Breme, compoſed ſince his baniſhment, and which is intitled, Brevis, dilucida, ac vera Narratio, de initiis & progreſſu Controverſiæ, Bremæ à Doctore Alberto Hardenbergio motæ, oppoſita recenti Scripto ejuſdem Hardenbergii de Obiquitate & Cœna Domini. i. e. "A ſhort, clear and true account of the beginning and pro- "greſs of the Controverſy, ſtarted at Bremen by Dr. Albert Hardenberg, being an an- "ſwer to the late work of the ſaid Hardenberg upon Ubiquity, and the Lord's Supper." Hardenberg did not enjoy his triumph long; for the Lutheran party becoming uppermoſt again, drove him out of the city as a ſeditious Sacramentarian (b). He wrote a Life of Weſſelus, which has been printed.

(a) Taken from George Braun, in Catholicorum Tremonenſium Defenſione, pag. 46, 49.

(b) Ex eodem, ibid. pag. 164.

☞HARDOUIN

[A] He had inſinuated himſelf ſo deeply into the favour of the inhabitants.] This is a proper method to change the ſituation of affairs: a Preacher ſupported by the people is capable to cauſe any revolution whatſoever. It is pretended that this Preacher made himſelf ſo popular, that he did not neglect to gain the affection even of the footmen, and maid-ſervants: after which he did not ſcruple to cenſure the Senators and Burgomaſters, naming them expreſly in his ſermons, and to weaken their authority with the people. Calvini hereſim, Senatu, & reliquis ſuis Lutheranis Collegis invitis, Bremam introduxit. Quod ut commodius..... in the printed copy, to the word veneretur (1) inclusive [α]. i. e. "He introduced Calvin's Hereſy into "Breme, againſt the conſent of the Senate, and of "all his Lutheran Collegues. And to compaſs his "deſign the eaſier, &c."

(1) Georg. Braunius, in Catholicor. Tremonenſium Defenſione, pag. 46, 47.

[α] In the printed copy, to the word venereter inclusive.] I imagine that Mr. Bayle deſigned to quote the whole paſſage, of which he tranſcribes but a few words: and that to ſave himſelf the trouble of writing it down, he referred the Printer to the printed copy, from which the paſſage was to be taken; but the Printer miſtaking Mr. Bayle's meaning, printed the references, inſtead of the paſſage to which it referred. As we could not meet with that work of Braunius, quoted by Mr. Bayle, it was impoſſible for us to ſupply his omiſſion in this place. ADD. REM.]

☞HARDOUIN (JOHN) a very learned French Jeſuit in the latter end of the ſeventeenth and beginning of the eighteenth Century, was born at Kimper in Bretagne (a); and entering into the Society of Jeſus, ſoon diſtinguiſhed himſelf by his learned writings [A], in which he has advanced ſeveral very remarkable paradoxes, and particularly that all the works of the antient profane and eccleſiaſtical writers, except Cicero's works, Virgil's Georgics, Horace's Satyrs and Epiſtles, and Pliny's Natural Hiſtory, are mere forgeries. Monſieur Francis de la Pillonniere obſerves (b), that ſome "learned men both Proteſtants and Papiſts have falſly imagined, that Father Hardouin's poſſeſſion for medals, or his deſign to ſerve ſome political end of the ſociety, had given this ſtrange turn to his thoughts. But it was not ſo. His blind ſubmiſſion to the Church of Rome, and after that his religious infatuation for the tenets of the ſchools, (which he takes to be, as the whole ſociety does, the ſtandards of Orthodoxy) are the two true ſprings of his exorbitances. For having found in the antient books hardly any thing like the orthodox doctrines of the Church and of the Schools, or rather having found the reverſe; he infers very conſiſtently, that theſe books never came from the pen of pious men ſainted by the Church, and who were, no doubt, orthodox. As for my part, whatever other people may think of his ſeeming crazineſs, this is my notion of him, that F. Hardouin muſt be allowed a more competent judge

(a) Du Pin, Nouvelle Biblioth. des Auteurs Eccleſiaſtiques, tom. 19. p. 109. edit. Amſterdam 1715 in 4to.

(b) An Anſwer to the Reverend Dr. Snape's Accuſation. By Francis de la Pillonniere, formerly a Jeſuit, now living with the Biſhop of Bangor, 2d edit. London 1717 in 8vo, pag. 10, & ſeqq. See likewiſe, Bibliotheque Raiſonnée, tom. 1. Part 1.

[A] Diſtinguiſhed himſelf by his learned writings.] In 1684 he publiſhed at Paris in 4to. Nummi Antiqui Populorum & Urbium illuſtrati: and Themiſtii Orationes XXXIII. cum Notis Dionyſii Petavii & Johannis Harduini Jeſuitarum, &c. Paris 1684, in Folio. The year following he publiſhed Caii Plinii Secundi Naturalis Hiſtoriæ Libri XXXVII. Interpretatione & Notis illuſtravit Joannes Harduinus Soc. Jeſ. juſſu Regis Chriſtianiſſimi Ludovici Magni in uſum Sereniſſimi Delphini. Paris, in 4to. It was reprinted at Paris 1723, in 3 vol. in folio. In 1687 his Book intitled, De Baptiſmo Quæſtio triplex, was printed at Paris in 4to. In 1689 he publiſhed Antirrheticus de Nummis antiquis Coloniarum & Municipiorum, ad Joann. Foy-Vaillant Medicum. Paris, in 4to, and S. Joannis Chryſoſtomi Epiſtola ad Cæſarium Monachum. Joann. Harduinus Soc. Jeſu Preſbyter Notis illuſtravit ac Diſſertatione de Sacramento Altaris. Paris, in 4to. Monſieur Le Clerc having made ſome reflections upon St. Chryſoſtom's Letter to Cæſarius in the Bibliotheque Univerſelle, Tom. XV. Father Hardouin replied in a piece, printed in 1690 in 4to, and intitled Defence de la Lettre de S. Jean Chryſoſtome, addreſſée a l'Auteur de la Bibliotheque Univerſelle, to which Mr. Le Clerc returned an anſwer in the XIXth Tome of that Bibliotheque. In this Letter Father Hardouin, writing in the character of a third perſon, gives an abſtract of his Latin work. It is in this treatiſe, that he advances the paradoxes, which have aſtoniſhed the world; viz. that he was convinced, "that Facundus, Liberatus, Marius Mercator, Victor "Turonenſis, Caſſiodorus, to whom ſo many works "are aſcribed, (except the Formulæ, the treatiſe on "the Soul, and the Commentary on the Pſalms,) Iſi"dorus, who is ſuppoſed to be the Author of the book "concerning the Eccleſiaſtical Writers; that all theſe "pretended African, Italian, and Spaniſh Writers, with "ſeveral others, were born in France, and are not "near ſo antient as they are believed to be." This is a bold aſſertion; but nothing in compariſon of what he affirms afterwards, viz. that of all the writings, which bear the name of Juſtin Martyr, there is only the Dialogue againſt Trypho, which is genuine, all the reſt being ſuppoſititious. That is, that the two Apologies of Juſtin cited with approbation by Euſebius, St. Jerom, and all the ancients, are ſpurious. To ſupport this, it muſt be maintained, that the works, in which thoſe apologies are mentioned, are likewiſe ſuppoſititious. This is a neceſſary conſequence, which Father Hardouin readily agrees to; but unfortunately for him, the Apology of Juſtin is mentioned in the Dialogue againſt Trypho, which he owns to be genuine; for with reſpect to the books of Tatian and Methodius, Euſebius's Hiſtory, and St. Jerom's Treatiſe concerning the Eccleſiaſtical Writers, he makes no ſcruple to reject their authority as ſpurious. But he carried this notion much farther in a book of his printed at Paris in 1693, and intitled, Chronologiæ ex Nummis antiquis reſtitutæ Proluſio, de Nummis Herodiadum, in which he aſſerted, that "there was ſome ages ſince a ſet of "men, who took upon them to draw up the Hiſtory "as we find it now, there being none at that time. "That he knew the time when they lived, and the "place where they executed their deſign. That "they made uſe of Cicero and Pliny, Virgil's Geor"gics, and Horace's Sermones and Epiſtles, which are "the only genuine monuments of antiquity remaining, "except ſome few inſcriptions and Faſti. That thoſe, "who by the uſe of theſe remains of antiquity labour"ed to draw up a body of Hiſtory from all theſe dif"ferent pieces, ſeemed to him to compoſe a new fable "out of ſeveral other fables. He adds, that theſe "Architects of Annals had for their whole aſſiſtance "a great number of ancient medals, which they had "collected with conſiderable labour, and were in "the hands of the firſt projector and chief manager "of this deſign." Upon this foot, not only Joſephus's and Euſebius's Hiſtories are ranked among theſe forgeries, but likewiſe all the profane Hiſtorians, Poets, and Orators, except thoſe abovementioned; ſo that he abſolutely rejects Cicero's Orations, Terence's Plays, Virgil's Æneid, Livy's Hiſtory, and in ſhort almoſt all the other ancient writings. This is one of the moſt amazing paradoxes, that ever entered into the head of any man of learning. However he appears to have ſeriouſly believed it himſelf, and was perſuaded, that his reaſons for it were clear and evident; though he would not publiſh them to the world, nor explain his ſyſtem, notwithſtanding he was frequently called upon to do it. This work was ſuppreſſed at Paris (1). He afterwards publiſhed A Letter upon three Samaritan Medals, which engaged him in a conteſt with Monſieur Toinard; an Eſſay towards the reſtoring Chronology by medals of Conſtantine's age; and a Chronology of the Old Teſtament conformable to the vulgar tranſlation, illuſtrated by ancient medals. Theſe books were likewiſe ſuppreſſed, on account of the paradoxes contained in them. However Father Hardouin continued ſtill in his opinion; for in his Letters written to Monſieur Ballonfaux, and printed at Luxembourg in 1700, he ſpeaks of an impious faction, which began a long time ago, which ſtill ſubſiſts, and appears with the greateſt inſolence, and which by forging of an infinite number of writings, that ſeem to breath nothing but piety, ſeems to have no other deſign than to remove God out of the world, that is, out of the hearts of mankind, and to overturn all religion. Beſides theſe treatiſes he publiſhed a Diſcourſe concerning the laſt Supper of Chriſt, printed at Paris, 1693, in 4to. Mr. la Croze refuted his notion concerning the forgery of the ancient writings, in his Diſſertations Hiſtoriques ſur divers Sujets, Rotterdam, 1707; and in his Vindiciæ Veterum Scriptorum contra Joannem Harduinum S. J. P. Additæ ſunt Viri Eruditi [Alphon. des Vignoles] Obſervationes Chronologicæ in Proluſionem & Hiſtoriam Veteris Teſtamenti. Rotterdam, 1708, in 8vo. Mr. la Croze imagined, that Father Hardouin advanced his notions in concert with the Society of the Jeſuits, or at leaſt with his Superiors, in order to ſet aſide all the ancient Greek and Latin, ſacred and profane writers. But Monſieur le Clerc (2) was of opinion, that there was no ground for this ſuppoſition of Monſieur la Croze. In 1709 there was publiſhed at Amſterdam a Volume in Folio intitled, Joannis Harduini è Societate Jeſu Preſbyteri Opera ſelecta, tum quæ jam pridem Pariſiis edita

(1) Lettres de Monſ. Bayle, tom. 1. pag. 488. edit. Amſterdam 1729.

(2) Biblioth. Choiſie, tom. 16. pag. 412, 413, 414.

" judge of the meaning of theſe books, than all the Jeſuits beſides, as being of greater " ſagacity, and incomparably more converſant with them, and more impartial too, as " well as conſiſtent with himſelf, in giving up ſuch books, which are the great torment " of his brethren, and which they compliment only out of decency; and in clearing his " infallible Church of the great blunder of having fainted the genuine authors of ſuch " writings, as not only are not a ſhelter for it, but are weapons againſt it. But his un- " paralleled and unſpeakable irregularities of opinion have made me ſince throughly " ſenſible of the terrible havock, which may be occaſioned even in a ſagacious and in- " quiſitive mind by an awful regard to doctrines, merely becauſe they are ſettled, and by " a determined attachment to the jargon of School-divinity. Error will lead you into " ſtill more and greater errors. It will do ſo the more, the more diligent and the more " able you are. He is as great an inſtance as any the world ever was witneſs to, that " when a man has been inured from his youth to a religious love of darkneſs and to the " hatred of light, as an unqueſtionable firſt principle, nothing can be expected from " him, but all the bad effects of the moſt extravagant fanaticiſm." Monſ. de la Pillonniere afterwards tells us (c), that upon his conſulting Father Hardouin, the latter returned this anſwer: The Rogues mean only that the ſenſes do not judge with certainty of the exiſtence of matter, becauſe elſe they would be judges of Truth (which is beyond their reach) it being a Truth that edita nunc emendatiora & multo auctiora prodeunt, tum quæ nunc primum edita. This Volume made a great deal of noiſe, before it was publiſhed. The Author had corrected in thoſe works of his, which had been before printed, what he thought proper; when they fell into the hands of a Bookſeller, who undertook to print them faithfully from the copy which he had received. He began the impreſſion with the Author's conſent, and was conſiderably advanced in it, when the clamour raiſed againſt the paradoxes in thoſe works, obliged Father Hardouin to write to the Bookſeller to retrench thoſe paſſages, which had been excepted to. But the Bookſeller refuſed to do ſo; upon which Father Hardouin proteſted againſt his conduct; and the Bookſeller wrote an anſwer to him, giving the reaſons of his refuſal. An extract of the papers of both are publiſhed in the Journal des Savans of Paris in 1708. Father Hardouin's Proteſtation is preceded by a Declaration of his Superiors in the Society of Jeſus; and thoſe pieces being curious, we ſhall preſent them to the reader.

(c) Ibid. pag. 15, 16.

" The Declaration of the Father Provincial of the " Jeſuits, and of the Superiors of their Houſes at " Paris, concerning a new edition of ſome works of Fa- " ther John Hardouin of the ſame Society, which has " been actually made contrary to their will by the Sieur " de Lorm, Bookſeller at Amſterdam.

" Among the works contained in this new edition, " there are ſome, which we could have wiſhed had " never ſeen the light, or had continued in oblivion. " That which is intitled, De Nummis Herodiadum, " and which ſerves as a foundation to others, was " ſuppreſſed, as all the world knows, by the Superiors " of the Society; and they deſtroyed all the copies of " it, which they could find. With reſpect to the " Chronology of the Old Teſtament, and the Medals of " the age of Conſtantine, theſe Books were never ſold, " and would never have been printed, if the reviſers, " appointed to examine them, had perceived and in- " formed their Superiors, that there were things in " theſe works tending to eſtabliſh the Syſtem, on ac- " count of which the other work had been ſuppreſſed. " There have been printed in foreign countries ſome " tracts of the ſame Author, which tend likewiſe to " the ſame ſcheme; but they never paſſed through " the examination of the Society, any more than the " others; which the Sieur de Lorme has declared to " be firſt publiſhed in his edition. The Superiors " here have written to him in as ſtrong a manner " as they could, to diſſuade him from inſerting theſe " works; but all their efforts have been in vain, the " preſent ſituation of affairs in Europe not permitting " them to take any meaſures with the powers, whoſe " ſubject that Bookſeller is. The principal heads " of the accuſation urged againſt theſe works, and " which we judge to be well grounded, are, 1. That " the Author there advances facts, and eſtabliſhes " principles, from which one may conclude, that al- " moſt all the ancient monuments of the Church, and " a great number of profane writings, have been " forged. 2. That he even aſſerts there poſitively, " that he doubts of the antiquity of many of the ſaid " writings, as well profane as eccleſiaſtical. 3. That " he abſolutely determines concerning the ſpuriouſneſs " of ſome of them. 4. That he ſeems not to be per- " ſuaded of the antiquity of the Greek text of the " Scriptures. 5. That he has likewiſe advanced ſome " other novelties, from which dangerous conſequences " may be drawn. This has given us occaſion to pub- " liſh the following declaration. 1. We reject as per- " nicious the paradox with regard to the ſpuriouſneſs " of the Greek text of the Scripture, the writings both " of the Greek and Latin Fathers, and the other " monuments of the Church, commonly' receiv- " ed in the Church as true. 2. We conſider like- " wiſe as an indefenſible chimera, the notion of the " forgery of the profane Authors, whoſe works, " according to the common opinion of the ableſt Cri- " tics, were written in the ſeveral ages, in which " thoſe Authors are uſually placed. 3. We con- " demn ſtill more this pretended forgery with re- " gard to thoſe among the profane Authors, whoſe " works have been cited by the antient Doctors of the " Church, becauſe this Opinion would infer the Forge- " ry even of the writings of thoſe holy Doctors. " 4. We declare all the Facts and Principles to be " falſe, which ſhall be found in Father Hardouin's " Books, whence any of the Paradoxes above mention- " ed can be juſtly drawn. 5. We diſavow all other " Notions to be found in thoſe Books, which ſhall not " agree with the common Doctrine of the Catholick " Divines. 6. Laſtly, we diſown, for the reaſons a- " bove mentioned, every edition made or to be made " of thoſe works; and that the Publick may not " doubt, but that our Declaration contains the ſenti- " ments of our whole Society, we add, that there is " nothing in what we have ſaid, but what is autho- " rized by our Reverend Father General. The Public " will not any more doubt, but that theſe have been all " along our ſentiments, after they have ſeen in our Me- " moirs of Trevoux the Syſtem concerning the Spuriouſ- " neſs of the antient Authors not only rejected as falſe " and dangerous, but refuted by poſitive Proofs, long " before a Proteſtant thought proper to repreſent it as " a deſign concerted amongſt the Superiors of the So- " ciety; which is a Paradox ſo contrary to good ſenſe, " that the perſon, who was not aſhamed to affirm it " ſeriouſly, found himſelf contradicted by thoſe even " of his own party, who have been leaſt accuſtomed to " ſpare the Jeſuits.

" Michael le Tellier, Provincial.
" Gabriel Daniel, ſuperior of the Maiſon Pro- " feſſe.
" Henry Charles Forcet, Rector of the Col- " lege.
" Paul Bodin, Rector of the Noviciat.

" I ſubſcribe ſincerely to every thing contained in the " preceding Declaration; I heartily condemn in my " writings what it condemns in them, and particularly " what I have ſaid concerning an impious faction, " which had forged ſome ages ago the greateſt part " of that matter exiſts. Now Truth being God, according to the Rogues, and the Senſes being not able to know God, it follows that the Senſes cannot know Truth. In oppoſition to that, the good Peripatetics, [that is in Father Hardouin's ſtile, the Orthodox] ſay, that the five Senſes judge of Truth by the Senſorium Commune. After that he compared the modern Philoſophers to the Quakers, who, ſaid he, call in queſtion every thing, even the exiſtence of their bodies. He aſſerted, that the Rogues acknowledging no true God, could not poſſibly admit any creation properly called, and that they held matter eternal. "Read, ſaid "he, on that ſubject the 12th and 13th book of St. Auguſtin's Confeſſions, and underſtand "them if you can." He died at Paris September the 3d 1729, in the eighty third year of his age.

" of the eccleſiaſtical or profane writings, which have " hitherto been conſidered as antient. I am extream- " ly ſorry that I did not open my Eyes before in this " point. I think myſelf greatly obliged to my ſupe- " riors in the ſociety, who have aſſiſted me in diveſting " myſelf of my prejudices. I promiſe never to ad- " vance in word or writing any thing di- " rectly or indirectly contrary to my preſent Re- " tractation. And if hereafter I ſhall call in queſtion " the antiquity of any writing either eccleſiaſtical or " profane, which no perſon before ſhall have " charged as ſuppoſititious, I will only do it by propo- " ſing my reaſons in a writing publiſhed under my " name, with the permiſſion of my ſuperiors, and the " approbation of the publick cenſors. In teſtimony of " which I have ſigned, this 27th of December 1708.

" J. HARDOUIN, of the Society of Jeſus."

His Opera Selecta contain his Nummi antiqui Populorum & urbium illuſtrati; his Three Queſtions concerning Baptiſm; his Edition of St. Chryſoſtom's Letter to Cæſarius, with a Diſſertation de Sacramento Altaris; his Treatiſe de Nummis Herodiadum; his Diſcourſe on the laſt Paſſover, celebrated by our Saviour; and two little Tracts in French, one by way of Dialogue, and the other by way of Letter in Defence of the firſt; a Treatiſe in which he explains the Medals of the age of Conſtantine; his Chronology of the Old Teſtament adjuſted by the Vulgate Tranſlation, and illuſtrated by medals; ſeveral letters to Monſ. de Baillonfeaux and ſome other pieces. He publiſhed likewiſe an Edition of the Councils at Paris in fol. and wrote a piece againſt Father Courayer's Defence of the Engliſh Ordinations. T

☞HARIOT or HARRIOT (THOMAS), an eminent Engliſh Mathematician in the beginning of the ſeventeenth Century, was born at Oxford in the year 1560, and having been inſtructed in Grammar-learning in that city, became a Batler or Commoner of St. Mary's Hall in that Univerſity (a), where he took the degree of Bachelor of Arts February 12, 1579 (b), and in the latter end of that year compleated it by determination in Schoolſtreet (c). Soon after he came to the knowledge of Sir Walter Ralegh on account of his admirable ſkill in the Mathematics, and was entertained by that Gentleman in his family (d), with the allowance of an annual penſion (e) for inſtructing him in the Mathematics (f). In 1585 he was ſent over by Sir Walter [with his firſt colony to Virginia [A], where being ſettled, he was employed in the diſcovery and ſurveying of that country, and obſerving what commodities it produced, and the manners and cuſtoms of its inhabitants; and wrote an account of it [B]. Upon his return to England he was introduced by Sir Walter into the acquaintance of Henry Earl of Northumberland, who "finding him to be a Gentleman of an affable and peaceable nature, and well read in "the obſcure parts of learning (g)," allowed him a yearly penſion of an hundred and twenty pounds, as he did likewiſe ſmaller penſions to Mr. Robert Hues, and Mr. Walter Warner, two other Mathematicians, who with our author were the Earl's conſtant companions [C], when he was committed to the Tower for life in 1606, and were uſually called the Earl of Northumberland's three Magi (h). Mr. Wood accuſes him of very looſe notions with regard to Religion [D]. A manuſcript of his intitled, Ephemeris Chyrometrica

(a) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 459. 2d edit. London 1721.

(b) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 218.

(c) Idem, Athen. Oxon. col. 459, 460.

(d) Idem, ibid. col. 460.

(e) Prefat. R. Hakluyt ad Orbem Novum, ſcriptum per Petr. Martyr. Anglericum, edit. Paris 1587, in 8vo.

(f) Wood, Ath. Oxon. col. 460.

(g) Idem, ibid.

(b) Idem, ibid.

[A] In 1585 he was ſent over by Sir Walter with his firſt Colony to Virginia.] Mr. Wood tells us (1). that in 1584 he went with the ſaid Knight and firſt Colony into Virginia. But this is a Miſtake; for Mr. Hariot did not accompany Sir Walter, but went over with the firſt Colony ſent to Virginia in 1585, under the conduct of Sir Richard Grenville and other Officers.

(1) Ath. Oxon. col. 1. col. 460.

[B] Wrote an account of it.] It is publiſhed under this Title, A brief and true Report of the New Found Land of Virginia, &c. written by Thomas Hariot, ſervant to Sir Walter Ralegh, and there employed in diſcovering a full twelve Month, in Hackluyt's Voyages (2). Mr. Wood tells us (3), that it was printed at London 1588 in 4to under the following Title, A brief and true Report of the Newfoundland of Virginia, the Commodities there found to be raiſed, &c. It was tranſlated into Latin by C. C. A, and publiſhed and adorned with many Cuts by Theodore de Bry of Liege, Francof. ad Mœnum, 1590 in fol.

(2) Vol. 3. fol. 266, & ſeqq.

(3) Ubi ſupra.

[C] Who with our Author were the Earl's conſtant Companions.] They had a Table at the Earl's charge, and the Earl conſtantly converſed with them, either ſingly, or all together, as Sir Walter Ralegh then in the Tower likewiſe did (4).

(4) Wood, ubi ſupra.

[D] Mr. Wood accuſes him of very looſe Notions with regard to religion.] He tells us (5), "that "notwithſtanding his great skill in Mathematicks, "he had ſtrange thoughts of the Scripture, and always "undervalued the old ſtory of the Creation of the "World, and could never believe that trite poſition, "Ex nihilo nihil fit. He made a Philoſophical Theology, wherein he caſt off the Old Teſtament, ſo that "conſequently the New would have no Foundation. "He was a Deiſt, and his Doctrine he did impart to "the ſaid Count (6), and to Sir Walter Raleigh (7), "when he was compiling the Hiſtory of the World, "and would controvert the matter with eminent Di- "vines of thoſe times; who therefore having no good "Opinion of him, did look on the matter of his "Death (8), as a Judgment upon him for thoſe mat- "ters, and for nullifying the Scripture." Mr. Wood mentions no Authority for this aſſertion; and we may obſerve that Mr. Hariot aſſures us himſelf (9), that when he was with the firſt Colony ſettled in Virginia, in every Town where he came, he explained to them the Contents of the Bible; declaring, ſays he, that therein was ſet forth the true and only God, and his mighty works; that therein was contained the true Doctrine of Salvation through Chriſt; with many particulars of Miracles and chief points of Religion, as I was able then to utter and thought fit for the time. And though I told them the Book, materially and of itſelf, was not of ſuch Virtue as I thought they did conceive, but only the Doctrine therein contained; yet would

(6) The Earl of Northumberland.

(7) We ſhall examine the imputation of Scepticiſm caſt upon that Gentleman in his article.

(8) See note [E].

(9) Brief and true Report of the new-found Land of Virginia, &c. in Hakluyt, vol. 3. pag. 277, 278.

Chyrometrica is preſerved in the Library of Sion-College at London, and his Artis Analyticæ Praxis was printed after his death at London 1631 [E] in a thin folio, and dedicated to Henry Earl of Northumberland. Mr. Hariot lived for ſome time in Sion-College, and died at London July the 2d 1621 (i). Dr. Alexander Rhead tells us (k), that his death was occaſioned by a cancerous ulcer in the lip [F]. His body was interred in St. Chriſtopher's Church in London, where a monument was erected for him by his noble Executors Sir Thomas Ayleſbury, and Robert Sidney Viſcount Liſle (l). He was univerſally eſteemed on account of his learning [G]. Beſides his works abovementioned, he wrote A Chronicle of Virginia, the particulars of which he mentions in his Brief and true Report of the new-found Land of Virginia (m).

(i) Idem, col. 461. Camden places his death in July that year. See his Annales Regis Jacobi I. ſubjoined to G. Camdeni illuſtrium Viror. Epiſt. pag. 72. London 1601, in 4to.

(k) In his Works, printed at London 1650, Treat. 1. Lect. 26.

(l) Wood, col. 460, 461.

(m) See Hakluyt's Voyages, vol. 3. fol. 280.

would many be glad to touch it, to embrace it, to kiſs it, to hold it to their Breaſts and Heads, and ſtroke over all their bodies with it, to ſhew their hungry deſires of that knowledge which was ſpoken of. However notwithſtanding his Sentiments were ſuch at that time, it is not impoſſible that he might afterwards change them; but whether he actually did ſo, is a queſtion. Mr. Wood is undoubtedly miſtaken in ſaying that he infuſed his ſceptical Notions into Sir Walter Ralegh, when he was compiling his Hiſtory of the World, ſince that great man in many places of that Hiſtory has given us the ſtrongeſt Evidences of his Belief of the Chriſtian Religion. To this we may add, that it is by no means probable, that Dr. Richard Corbet, an orthodox Divine, and ſucceſſively Biſhop of Oxford, and Norwich, ſending a Poem to Sir Thomas Aylesbury, when the Comet appeared, dated December the 9th 1618, ſhould ſpeak of ——— deep Hariot's Mine,

In which there is no Droſs (10),

(10) Corbet's Poems, pag. 56. edit. London 1672, in 8vo.

if it had ſuch Allay (11). Mr. George Chapman likewiſe (12) ſtiles him his worthy and moſt learned friend, whoſe Judgment and Knowledge in all kinds, ſays he, I know to be incomparable and bottomleſs; yea to be admired as much as his moſt blameleſs Life, and the right ſacred Expence of his time, is to be honoured and reverenced. Mr. Oldys obſerves (13), that it is not probable, that the Earl of Northumberland would have made ſuch a man as our Author is repreſented by Mr. Wood, a domeſtic, and allowed him ſo handſome a ſalary, to have infected his Sons with Atheiſtical Principles; nor would Hariot's noble Executors, Sir Thomas Aylesbury, and Robert Sidney, Viſcount Liſle, have beſtowed on him a Monument in St. Chriſtopher's Church in London, with an Inſcription, which might have been contradicted by all the Town, if it had been falſe, beginning as follows: Omnes ſcientias calluit, & in annitur excelluit; Mathematicis, Philoſophicis, Theologicis, Veritatis Indigator, ſtudioſiſſimus; Dei Triniunius cultor piiſſimus, &c.

(11) See the Life of Sir Walter Ralegh, by Will. Oldys Gent. pag. 71. note (e).

(12) Preface to his Tranſlation of Homer's Iliad.

(13) Ubi ſupra.

[E] His Artis Analyticæ was printed after his Death at London 1631.] The title of it is, Artis Analyticæ Praxis ad æquationes Algebraicas nova, expeditâ, & generali methodo reſolvendas, Tractatus poſthumus, &c. The ſubſtance of this Book falling into the hands of Sir Thomas Aylesbury, Mr. Walter Warner (14) undertook to compleat and publiſh it, on condition that Algernon, eldeſt ſon of Henry Earl of Northumberland, would after his Father's deceaſe, continue his Penſion to him during his Life. This being obtained by the Intereſt of Sir Thomas Aylesbury, Mr. Warner took a great deal of pains in it, and at length publiſhed it (15). Monſieur Des Cartes is ſaid to have been obliged to this Book of Mr. Hariot for a great many of his Improvements in Algebra (16).

(14) He was born in Leiceſterſhire and died at London in the latter end of the year 1640.

(15) Wood, col. 461.

(16) See the article of DES CARTES, note [DD] vol 4. pag. 148, 149.

[F] Dr. Alexander Rhead tells us, that his Death was occaſioned by a cancerous Ulcer in the Lip.] The Doctor's Words are as follow: Cancerous Ulcers alſo ſeize on this part [the Lip]. This Grief haſtened the end of that famous Mathematician Mr. Hariot, with whom I was acquainted but ſhort time before his Death, whom at one time, together with Mr. Hues, who wrote of Globes, Mr. Warner, and Mr. Torperley, the noble Earl of Northumberland, the favourer of all good Learning, and Mecænas of learned Men, maintained whilſt he was in the Tower, for their Worth and various Literature. Mr. Wood in the paſſage cited in Note [D] obſerves, that the manner of his death was looked upon by ſome Divines as a Judgment upon him for his ſuppoſed Scepticiſm; but Mr. Oldys (17) remarks, that Dr. Rhead adds none of thoſe ſcandalous Reflections, and ſeems not to have known whether the Cancer began in Mr. Hariot's Lip; "though poſſibly, continues Mr. "Oldys, the braſs Inſtruments, which Mathematicians "are ſo familiar with, and for readineſs often hold in "their Mouths, might occaſion ſuch a Diſeaſe."

(17) Ubi ſupra.

[G] He was univerſally eſteemed on account of his Learning.] When he was but a young man, he was ſtiled by Mr. R. Hakluyt (18), Juvenis in illis Diſciplinis [mathematicis] excellens; by Mr. Nath. Torperley (19) Homo natus ad Artes illuſtrandas; and by Camden (20) Mathematicus inſignis.

(18) In Præfat. ad Orbem Novum Pet. Martyr. Angler.

(19) In Præfatione ad Diclides Cœlometricas, &c. ann. 1602.

(20) Annalium Regni Regis Jacobi Apparatus, ſubjoined to G. Camdeni & illuſtrium Virorum Epiſtolæ, pag. 72. edit. London 1691, in 4to.

HARPALYCE the moſt beautiful Maid at Argos. Her father Clymenus fell ſo deeply in love with her, that finding by experience that all his endeavours to conquer his paſſion ſerved only to encreaſe it, he thought only how to find means to gratify it. He practiſed therefore upon his daughter's nurſe, and by her aſſiſtance he enjoyed ſecretly the object of his love. Some little time after the perſon, to whom Harpalyce was betrothed, arrived. Magnificent preparations were immediately made for the nuptials; the marriage was conſummated, and the bridegroom ſet out with his bride to return home. It was then that Clymenus repented he ever gave his conſent to this match. His love tranſported him with ſuch a rage, that he went after the new married couple, overtook them, and made away with his ſon-in-law before they were at their journey's end. He returned with his daughter to Argos, where he acted publicly as her huſband. She conſidered at laſt what unworthy treatment ſhe had received from her father, and to be revenged of him ſhe killed her younger brother [A], and gave him to her father to eat; after which having prayed to the Gods that ſhe might be taken out of this world, ſhe was transformed into a bird [B]. Clymenus was ſo overwhelmed with grief at all theſe misfortunes,

(1) Hygin. cap. 206.

[A] She kills her younger brother.] Hyginus (1) relates that ſhe killed the very ſon ſhe had had by Clymenus, and he adds, that ſhe gave him to his father to eat, and that Clymenus coming to know this killed her. You muſt correct the word filiam and read filium in that Author's CCVIth chapter, agreeably to what we read in the CCXXXVIIIth, CCXXXIXth, and CCXLVIth chapters. Beſides this difference I obſerve another between him and Parthenius. The latter aſſerts, that Harpalyce's father was the ſon of Teleus, and that he dwelt at Argos; the former makes him the ſon of Schœneus, and King of Arcadia (2); but as he makes him the ſon of Oeneus in chapter the CCXXXVIIIth, we ought to be very certain, that we muſt read Oeneus inſtead of Schœneus in all the other paſſages: for Apollodorus (3) and Antoninus Liberalis (4) tell us that Oeneus had a ſon called Clymenus.

(2) Idem, ibid. and cap. 246. In chap. 142. there is Cœneus, and not Schœneus.

(3) Lib. 1.

(4) Cap. 2.

[B] She was transformed into a bird.] There are fortunes, that he killed himſelf (a). We ſhall mention another Harpalice in the article HARPALICUS.

(a) Taken from Euphorion, quoted by Parthenius, in the 13th chap. of his Erotica, or Love-Tales.

FAULTS of the Mythologiſts.

two conſiderable defects in the fabulous ſtories of ancient Greek Mythologiſts: the one is, that there is not a ſufficient variety in the capital circumſtances of their fables; the other is, that there is not the leaſt uniformity in their accounts of particulars. You will hardly meet with two Authors, who mentioning the ſame ſtory agree together with regard to the qualities and names of the perſons, and to the times and places. If by this method they pretended to ſhew that they had a fruitful imagination, they were miſtaken; for a barrenneſs in the capital point of the ſtories is not eaſily ſupplied by a variety of circumſtances that are only acceſſory. It ſeems at firſt that Parthenius's Euphorion preſents us with ſomething new; but if you conſider it well, you will find that it is only the ſtory Tereus acted upon another ſtage, with ſome alteration in the characters of the Actors.

(a) Hygin. cap. 193. Servius in Æn. lib. 1. ver. 317. calls them Amymonii.

HARPALICUS, King of the Amymneans (a) in Thrace, had a daughter named HARPALICE, who was nouriſhed with the milk of a cow and of a mare [A], and whom he trained up very young in the uſe of arms. Thus he made a very warlike woman of her, which proved of great advantage to him; for had not his daughter come to his aſſiſtance, when Neoptolemus Achilles's ſon attacked [B] and wounded him, he would have been loſt without retrieve; but Harpalice charged the enemy ſo ſeaſonably that ſhe routed him. Her father, whom ſhe had ſo happily delivered in this war againſt ſtrangers (b), periſhed ſoon after in a civil war. His ſubjects firſt dethroned, and at laſt killed him (c). Harpalice retired into the woods, and ſet about plundering the neighbouring countries; ſhe run like lightning, and when men purſued her on horſeback to take from her the cattle ſhe had ſtolen, they could not overtake her. She could not be taken but in ſuch nets as were ſpread as though it had been to catch ſtags. She was killed; but they who committed that fact, paid very dear for it; for there aroſe immediately a diſpute in the neighbourhood, to know who was the proprietor of the cattle ſhe had ſtolen; on which a battle enſued, in which ſeveral were killed on the ſpot on both ſides. Since that time a cuſtom was eſtabliſhed, that they ſhould meet now and then at this maiden's tomb, and celebrate tournaments there to atone for her death. There was one HARPALICE who was paſſionately in love with Iphiclus (d), and who died with grief to ſee that he deſpiſed her. It is after her name that a certain hymn was called Harpalyce.

(b) Hygin. ibid.

(c) Servius, ibid.

(d) Turneb. Adverſar. lib. 10. cap. 11.

[A] His daughter . . . was nouriſhed with the milk of a cow and of a mare.] Servius (1) applies to her theſe words of the firſt Book of the Æneids.

(1) Servius, in Æneid. lib. 1. ver. 317.

Qualis equos Threïſſa fatigat
Harpalice, volucremque fuga pervertitur Hebrum.

That is,

" With ſuch array Harpalice beſtrode
" Her Thracian courſer, and outſtrip'd the rapid " flood. Dryden.

Servius adds, that ſhe was nouriſhed after the ſame manner as Virgil ſuppoſes Camilla was nouriſhed by her father Metabus.

Hic natam in dumis interque horrentia luſtra
Armentalis equæ mammis, & lacte ferino
Nutribat, teneris immulgens ubera labris (2).

(2) Virgil. Æn. lib. 11. ver. 570.

That is,

" His daughter with the milk of mares he fed;
" The dugs of bears, and ev'ry ſalvage beaſt,
" He drew, and thro' her lips the liquor preſs'd.
Dryden.

[B] When Neoptolemus . . . . attacked him.] This maiden's father was already a priſoner then, according to Servius. Others aſſert that Harpalice delivered him out of the hands of the Getes. Quidam hujus patrem a Getis, ut alii volunt a Mirmidonibus captum, collecta multitudine aſſerunt liberaſſe celerius quam de fœminis credi poteſt (3). i. e. " Some aſſert that her father was " taken by the Getes, others by the Myrmidons, and " that ſhe having gathered together a multitude of " perſons delivered him quicker than can be believed " of women." I do not know where Charles Stephens, whom Lloyd and Hofman follow, read that our Harpalice's father was called Lycurgus, and that he was old when he was made a priſoner by the Getes.

(3) Servius, in Virgil. Æneid. lib. 1. ver. 317.

HARPALUS, a Greek Aſtronomer, corrected Cleoſtratus's Cycle by another Cycle which alſo wanted to be corrected [A]. It was Meton who corrected Harpalus's new Cycle, the fourth year of the eighty ſixth Olympiad (a). Cleoſtratus diſcovered the ſigns of the Zodiack, after Anaximander had diſcovered in the fifty eighth Olympiad the obliquity of that Circle (b). Judge by this at what time Harpalus lived. It is not true as Moreri aſſerts, that Diodorus Siculus mentions Harpalus. Voſſius

(a) Diod. Sicul. lib. 12. num. 36.

(b) Pliny, lib. 2. cap. 8. pag. m. 148.

[A] He corrected Cleoſtratus's Cycle by another Cycle, which alſo wanted to be corrected.] Cleoſtratus's Cycle was called Octaëteris, becauſe it conſiſted of a revolution of eight years, after which he pretended that the Sun and the Moon returned to the ſame point. Harpalus obſerving, that this did not happen, invented the Cycle of nine years.

Nam quæ ſolem hiberna novem putat æthera volvi
Ut lunæ ſpatium redeat, velut Harpalus, ipſam
Ocius in ſedem momentaque priſca reducit.
Illius ad numeros prolixa decennia rurſum
Adjeciſſe Meton Cecropia dicitur arte.
Inſeditque animis: tenuit rem Græcia ſolers
Protinus, & longos inventum miſit in annos (1).

(1) Feſtus Avienus, in Arateis Prognoſticis, pag. m. 65.

i. e. " He, who like Harpalus imagines that after a re" volution of nine years the ſun and the moon return to " the ſame point, brings them too ſoon to their former " ſituation. To that number, Meton, who was ſkil-
" led in the arts that flouriſhed at Athens, is ſaid to " have added ten full years. And this Cycle (of nine" teen years) has been conſtantly admitted ſince; the " learned Greeks have kept it, and tranſmitted this
" invention to poſterity through a long ſeries of years."

Meton finding that the Cycle of nine years did not anſwer the purpoſe better than the others, invented the Cycle of nineteen years. Men kept to this, as Feſtus Avienus obſerves in the verſes I have quoted. This Cycle is ſtill in uſe, and is called the Golden Number.

Voſſius's account of all this abounds with inaccuracies and miſtakes [B].

[B] Voſſius's account of all this abounds with inaccuracies and miſtakes.] I. Having ſaid (2) in his Theſis that Meton publiſhed his Enneadeacetris (or Cycle of nineteen years) the firſt year of the 87th Olympiad, he aſſerts in the Commentary on his Theſis that Diodorus Siculus mentions this under the third year of the 86th Olympiad. Is not this quoting a celebrated witneſs againſt his own calculation? Is this a prudent conduct? However it is dealing fairly, will ſome ſay: I own it, provided Diodorus Siculus did really follow this chronological account; but it is certain that he mentions the Cycle of nineteen years under the laſt year of the 86th Olympiad. II. He quotes Pliny, Book the IId, Chapter the XIIth, concerning Cleoſtratus: he ſhould have quoted the eighth chapter. III. He aſſerts, that Cleoſtratus's Octaëteris contained 2090 years and 22. It is plain that the Printer has committed a blunder in the figures of the number; but the word annorum (of years) is certainly a miſtake of the Author. We muſt therefore alter and correct the following words, Introduxit Octaëterida, quæ erat annorum CIↃ CIↃ XC XXII, and write them thus, introduxit Octaëterida, quæ erat dierum CIↃ CIↃ CMXXII. i.e. "He introduced the Octaëteris which contained 2922 days;" for that Cycle did really contain 2922 days. IV. He quotes the XIIth Book of Diodorus Siculus concerning the Octaëteris; but I could not find that word there. V. This phraſe, in hac Octaëteride deprehenſum eſt vitium ab Harpalo commiſſum, is bad; it ſignifies quite the contrary of what it ſhould ſignify; for there is no reader but will think, that Harpalus committed an error in the invention of that Cycle of eight years, and yet Voſſius's deſign is to let us know that Harpalus diſcovered the error which the inventor of that Cycle had committed. VI. He ought not to have ſaid that inſtead of Cleoſtratus's Octaëteris Harpalus's Octaëteris was made uſe of; for Avienus's verſes, which Voſſius quotes immediately after, ſhew very plainly, that Harpalus invented a Cycle of nine years.

(2) De Scient. Mathem. Pag. 150, 151.

HARPALUS, a Macedonian Lord, and one of Alexander's Generals, ruined himſelf by his extravagant expences (a). He followed Alexander's party in the diſputes which aroſe between that Prince and King Philip, whoſe favour he loſt for that reaſon (b). But as ſoon as Philip was dead, Alexander called Harpalus to Court again, and ſhewed him a very particular friendſhip. I believe that he gave him the government of Cilicia [A]. As for that of Babylon, it is very certain that he gave it him, together with the poſt of High-Treaſurer (c). Harpalus, who imagined that the King his maſter would never return from his Indian expeditions, oppreſſed the people a thouſand different ways, that he might have wherewithal to ſupport the exceſſive expences of his bed and table. He indulged himſelf in all kinds of voluptuouſneſs, and refuſed nothing to ſatisfy his miſtreſſes [B]. Several other Governors, who, like him, were perſuaded that it would

(a) Athenæus, lib. 13. pag. 594. Pauſanias, lib. 1. pag. 35.

(b) Plutarch. in Alexand. pag. 669, E.

(c) Diod. Sicul. lib. 17. cap. 108.

[A] I believe that Alexander gave him the government of Cilicia.] I ground this conjecture on the account which Athenæus (1) gives us. He relates that Harpalus having loſt his miſtreſs, ſent for another from Athens, and lodged her in the royal palace of Tarſus. She was adored there by all the people, and ſtiled a Queen; aud all thoſe who crowned Harpalus, had orders to crown her alſo. This ſuppoſes that Harpalus lived at Tarſus, with a ſovereign authority. Now Tarſus was the capital city of Cilicia (2). I do not mind a paſſage of Athenæus (3), in which we read that Harpalus ſet up a braſs ſtatue to his miſtreſs Glycera at Tarſus a city of Syria, [ἐν Ταρσῷ] τῆς Συρίας. I do not doubt but this paſſage is corrupted; for beſides that there was no royal nor conſiderable city called Tarſus in Syria, we ſee in Athenæus, page 586, that this ſtatue of Glycera was ſet up at Roſſus, ἐν Ρωσσῷ. And we ſee in the margin of the page 595, over againſt the text, where ἐν Ταρσῷ is printed, that there is ἐν Ρωσσῷ in other manuſcripts. Athenæus quotes the ſame Author, namely Theopompus, in both theſe paſſages. The tranſcribers therefore muſt have miſſpelt the name of the city, in which this ſtatue was ſet up.

(1) Lib. 13. pag. 586.

(2) Τὸν τῆς μητροπόλεως ἐπέχουσα λόγον, i. e. "Was conſidered "as the metropo-"lis, or capital "city." Strabo, lib. 14. pag. 463.

(3) Lib. 13. pag. 595.

[B] He refuſed nothing to ſatisfy his miſtreſſes.] If any thing could overthrow the conjecture I have advanced in the preceding remark, it would be Diodorus Siculus's deſcription of the luxury, in which Harpalus indulged himſelf, whilſt Alexander was in India: for Diodorus tells us, that Harpalus gave himſelf over to a debauched life with women, and to a lewdneſs, that was ſtill more abominable; that he cauſed a large quantity of fiſhes to be brought from the Red Sea; that his daily expences were exorbitant; and that beſides this he ſent for a famous courtezan from Athens, whoſe name was Pythionice; that he made her preſents of an immenſe price; and that when ſhe died, he raiſed a ſtately monument to her; and ſent at the ſame time for another celebrated courtezan named Glycera, with whom he lived in ſuch an extravagant luxury as cannot be well deſcribed. All this happened, according to Diodorus Siculus, whilſt Harpalus was Governor of Babylon, and High-Treaſurer, and after Alexander was engaged in his Indian expedition. I was therefore in the wrong to mention the Government of Cilicia, will ſome ſay. This objection would be very ſtrong, if we had not reaſons to think, that Diodorus Siculus, after the example of thoſe who write a general hiſtory, had not too much heaped up together particular events, and neglected too much to be accurate with regard to the time when they happened. The Authors quoted by Athenæus deſerve more to be credited than Diodorus; for they deſigned purpoſely to deſcribe Harpalus's luxurioufneſs: it is therefore probable, that they have given a more exact and particular account of them, than Diodorus could do, who mentioned Harpalus only in general, and only glanced upon the particular circumſtances of his life. This is the method which is followed in a general hiſtory. Now, what do the Authors quoted by Athenæus relate? Here follows their account. After the death of Pythionice, with whom Harpalus had been paſſionately in love, he ſent for Glycera, made her live in the royal palace, which was at Tarſus, and cauſed her to be adored by the people, and ſtiled a Queen. Ἦν ϗ ἐλθοῦσαν οἰκεῖν ἐν τοῖς βασιλείοις τοῖς ἐν Ταρσῷ, ϗ προσκυνεῖσθ ἀπὸ τοῦ πλήθους βασιλίσσαν προσαγορευομένην. Ac illo profectam in Regia, quæ Tarſis fuit collocaſſe, ut adorarent omnes ac Reginam ſalutarent, juſſiſſe (4). If he had been Governor of Babylon when he ſent for Glycera, he would have introduced her into the Palace of Babylon, it is at Babylon that he would have cauſed her to receive the honours of adoration, and to be ſtiled a Queen. But he did all this at Tarſus; he was therefore Governor of Cilicia when Pythionice died, and when Glycera ſucceeded her; whence it follows that Diodorus Siculus was miſtaken as to the circumſtance of the time, ſince he ſuppoſes that Harpalus's amours with Pythionice, and afterwards with Glycera, were poſterior to the time, when Harpalus was made Governor of Babylon, and when Alexander ſet out for India. Let it not be objected, that Harpalus raiſed a monument to Pythionice at Babylon (5). For it does not follow from thence, that this woman died after he was made Governor of Babylon. I do not know whether one might place amongſt the effects of this Governor's luxury, the care he took to ſend for all ſorts of plants from Greece, to adorn the gardens and walks of Babylon: Ἅρπαλος δὲ τῆς χώρας ἀπολειφθεὶς ἐπιμελητὴς, ϗ φιλοκαλῶν Ἑλληνικαῖς φυτείαις διακοσμῆσαι τὰ βασίλεια ϗ τοὺς περιπάτους, τῶν μὲν ἄλλων ἐκράτησεν, τὸν δὲ κιττὸν οὐκ ἔσχεν ἡ γῆ μόνον, ἀλλ' αἰεὶ διέφθειρεν, ὁ φόρτος τὴν κρᾶσιν. i. e. "Harpalus

(4) Theopompus & Cleitarchus, apud Athen. lib. 13. pag. 586.

(5) Theopompus, apud Athen. lib. 13. pag. 595.

would never be in Alexander's power to make them give an account of their extortions, had committed an infinite number of unjuſt actions. The firſt thing Alexander did on his return from India, was to puniſh ſome of theſe Governors very ſeverely. This made Harpalus dread the ſame treatment, ſo that in order to eſcape it, he fled into Greece, with immenſe ſums of money, which he took out of the King's treaſure, with which he had been truſted. He alſo raiſed ſix thouſand men, whom he landed at Tenarus in the territories of the Lacedemonians, and he went to Athens with a deſign to perſuade the Citizens to make war againſt Alexander (d). He bribed ſome Orators with large ſums of money (e); for he knew very well that the tongue of thoſe men is the moſt powerful inſtrument to diſturb the public tranquillity, and to engage the people to riſe up in arms. But if he knew the great influence they have on the people's mind, he was not ignorant alſo that a large ſum of money has a great power with them. Finding himſelf therefore poſſeſſed of an immenſe treaſure, he hoped to draw the city of Athens to his ſide. But he was diſappointed: Phocion was not to be bribed [C]; and beſides this, the letters of Antipater, Governor of Macedonia, and thoſe of Olympias, Alexander's mother, kept the Athenians in awe (f). So that Harpalus was obliged to look for another ſanctuary [D]. He returned to Tenarus where he had left his ſoldiers, and went from

(d) Idem, ibid.

(e) Plutarch. in Phocione, p. 750. in Demoſthene, pag. 857.

(f) Diodorus Siculus, lib. 17. cap. 108.

" Harpalus being left Governor of the country, and " deſiring to adorn the palace and walks of Babylon " with plants from Greece, ſucceeded with regard to " ſeveral; but the ſoil would not bear the Ivy, which " always periſhed there, the climate not being proper " for it." For if we may depend upon Theophraſtus (7), he did it only by Alexander's command. If Scaliger had inferred from thence, that Harpalus had the direction of the royal gardens and orchards at Babylon, he would have deſerved to be cenſured for one miſtake only: but he aſſerts that Plutarch aſcribes that employment to Harpalus (8). He is guilty therefore of a double miſtake. I. He did not remember that Harpalus was Governor of Babylon, and that therefore the direction of the gardens was not his chief employment, but only a very little dependency of it. II. It is falſe that Plutarch aſſerts, what he aſcribes to him.

(7) Apud Plutarch. Sympoſiac. lib. 3. cap. 2. p. 648.

(8) Plutarchus in Sympoſiacis, qui inter alia ſcribit eum hortis regiis & viridariis Babyloniacis præpoſitum fuiſſe. Scalig. Animadv. in Euſebium, num. 1692, pag. 127.

[C] Phocion was not to be bribed.] Harpalus endeavoured chiefly to gain him: he ſaw the other declaimers come to him, and he gave them but ſmall ſums of money; but he offered 700 talents to Phocion, and would leave the determination of his affairs entirely to him. Τῶν ἰώθοτων ἀπὸ τῦ βήματο χρηματιζέσθαι ἐξόμο ἦν ϗ ἄμιλλα φθειρομένων πρὸς αὐτὸν, τύτοις μὲν ἀπὸ πολλῶν μικρὰ διελάζων, προήκαλο ϗ διέῤῥιψε, τῷ δὲ Φωκίωνι προσέπεμψε δισὶς ἑπλακόσια τάλαντα. i. e. " Thoſe who uſed to get money by their " declarations, crouded to him, boaſting what " they could do; but he gave them very little ſums " of his great treaſure, and only as a bait to catch " them; but he ſent perſons to Phocion to offer him " 700 talents (9)." Phocion refuſed his offers, and let him know, that he would make him repent of his undertaking, if he continued to bribe the inhabitants: this obliged Harpalus to act with more caution; he found by experience, that all thoſe baſe and mercinary perſons, whom he had bribed, ſpoke publickly againſt him, in order to remove the ſuſpicions that were entertained againſt them, and that Phocion, who refuſed his money, was the perſon who oppoſed him leaſt; this made him attempt again to bribe him, but he found him proof againſt all poſſible temptations. Charicles, Phocion's ſon-in-law, did not inherit this integrity; he made himſelf ſo much ſuſpected, that his father-in-law would not aſſiſt him, when he was proſecuted according to law, for correſponding with Harpalus (10). As for Demoſthenes he acted moſt unfairly; for he received large ſums of money in order to ſpeak for Harpalus; but the time being come when he was to harangue, he appeared in the court with his neck wrapped up in rags, and complained of a ſore throat, that made him uncapable to plead (11); this gave occaſion to a jeſt, which alluded to the ſquinancy. Οἱ δὲ εὐφυεῖς χλευάζονλες ἐχ ὑπὸ συνάγχης ἔφραζον ἀλλ' ἀπ' ἀργυράγχης ἐιλῆφθαι νύκλωρ τὸν ῥήμαγωγόν. i. e. " The " men of wit ſaid in jeſt, that the Orator had been " taken in the night time, not with a natural ſqui- " nancy, but with a ſilver ſquinancy (12)." He did not come off with being only rallied; for his correſpondence with Harpalus was the cauſe of his baniſhment (13). Obſerve that Pauſanias thinks he was not guilty (14). Harpalus, and Glycera his concubine, cauſed a great quantity of corn to be diſtributed amongſt the people at Athens. This was one of the particulars for which he was ridiculed in a comedy which was acted on the banks of the Hydaſpes, and of which ſome ſay that Alexander himſelf was the Author (15). It is very remarkable that after Harpalus's death, a girl he had had by Pythionice was received into Phocion's houſe, and educated with all poſſible care both by him, and by his ſon-in-law Charicles (16).

(9) Plut. in Phocione, pag. 751, B.

(10) Idem, ibid.

(11) Idem, in Demoſthene, pag. 857.

(12) Idem, ibid.

(13) Juſtin. lib. 12. cap. 5.

(14) See the remark [D] towards the end.

(15) Athen. lib. 13. pag. 586, 595.

(16) Plutarch. in Phoc. pag. 751.

[D] Harpalus was obliged to look for another ſanctuary.] He was commanded to retire from Athens, as Plutarch (17) and Curtius (18) tell us. I imagine that his cauſe was pleaded with ſome ſolemnity; for Pollux quotes an Oration of Hyperides ὑπὲρ Ἁρπάλε, for Harpalus. I do not mention Dinarchus's Oration, which is intitled ὑπὲρ τῦ μὴ ἐκδῶναι Ἁρπαλον Ἀλεξάνδρῳ. i. e. " That Harpalus ought not to be given up " to Alexander." This Oration is thought to be ſpurious. Yet it is true that this Orator did really plead in that cauſe; there were five of his Orations extant περὶ Ἁρπαλείων (19). i. e. " Concerning the caſe of " Harpalus." This cauſe was attended with very great conſequences; for after it had been reſolved at Athens to baniſh Harpalus, informations were made againſt thoſe, who ſuffered themſelves to be bribed by his preſents. He would have been given up to Alexander, if all the Athenians had been proof againſt bribery (20). One of Alexander's friends (21) endeavoured moſt powerfully to perſuade the Athenians to deliver Harpalus to him; and as he could not perſuade them to it, he declared to them ſome time after who they were to whom Harpalus had given money, and how much he gave to each of them. He found this among the papers of Harpalus's Steward (22).

(17) In Demoſth. pag. 875, E.

(18) Lib. 10. cap. 2.

(19) See Scaliger. Animadverſ. in Euſebium, num. 1691, pag. m. 127.

(20) Pauſanias, lib. 1. pag. 35.

(21) Philoxenus a Macedonian. Pauſan. lib. 2. pag. 76.

(22) Idem, ibid.

Let us obſerve in this place the errors that are to be met with in Moreri's Philoxenus. The Author who wrote that article (23) aſſerts, that Philoxenus, a Macedonian General, took Harpalus in Candy, who had carried off Alexander's treaſure . . . . . that he found out all thoſe whom Harpalus had truſted with this treaſure at Athens; that he ſent a liſt of them to the Magiſtrates, in order to get the money back, and to have them puniſhed; but that he would not name Demoſthenes, though he had had ſome diſpute with him, chooſing to act on this occaſion according to the great eſteem he had for that Orator's eloquence, rather than to gratify his own reſentment. Pauſanias is quoted for this. I find five blunders in this account. I. It is falſe that Philoxenus took Harpalus either in Crete or in any other place; he took only his Steward, who had made his eſcape into the Iſland of Rhodes (24). The Author whom I cenſure does not mention it: This Omiſſion will be his II. fault. III. Harpalus did not truſt any perſon with his Treaſure at Athens; he diſtributed money there to bribe ſome perſons, that they might be favourable to him. IV. The Liſt which Philoxenus ſent to the Magiſtrates did not contain the names of thoſe pretended Depoſitaries, but the names of thoſe, to whom Harpalus gave money to bribe them. V. Pauſanias (25), does not ſay, that Philoxenus deſigned to get that money back. VI. And he is ſo far from aſſerting that this Macedonian ſmothered his reſentment, BLUNDERS in the ſupplement to Moreri's Dictionary.

(23) It is in the ſupplement to Moreri's Dictionary.

(24) Pauſanias, lib. 2. pag. 70.

(25) Idem, ibid.

from thence into Crete. But he was not long ſecure in that iſland; one of his friends killed him perfidiouſly (g) [E]. The Supplement to Moreri is erroneous with regard to this particular, as I ſhall ſhew below (b). Alexander was ſo well perſuaded that Harpalus was an honeſt man, that he ordered thoſe to be put in irons as falſe accuſers, who brought him the firſt news of that man's flight (i). The news he received of that traitor's being driven from Athens and killed, made him alter the reſolution he had taken of returning into Europe to bring the Athenians back to their duty [F]. When he found that no books were to be met with in the Provinces diſtant from Greece, he employed Harpalus to procure him ſome [G]. The tomb which Harpalus erected to one of his miſtreſſes was very magnificent [H]. I imagine that a certain complaint againſt Providence, which ſentment, becauſe of the great eſteem he had for Demoſthenes's Eloquence, that on the contrary he ſuppoſes very plainly that this Orator would have been in Philoxenus's Liſt, if his name had been found in the Papers of Harpalus's Steward. Pauſanias reaſons thus. If Harpalus had given money to Demoſthenes, it would have been diſcovered by his Steward's Papers; and if it had been diſcovered, Philoxenus would have ſet his name down in the Liſt he ſent to the Athenians, for he had been engaged in a private Quarrel with Demoſthenes, and he knew that Alexander was terribly exaſperated againſt that famous Orator. Now he did not in the leaſt mention Demoſthenes, when he acquainted the Athenians with the names of thoſe to whom Harpalus had given money, and let them know how much money he gave to every one of them. Whence we ought to infer, that Demoſthenes did not receive any money from him. See now how much ſuch compilers of Dictionaries ought to be depended upon. Or rather deplore the fate of an infinite number of Readers, who imagined innocently, that Pauſanias gives us here an inſtance of very great generoſity in the Character of a Man who was ſuch an admirer of Demoſthenes, though his Enemy, that he ſmothered his reſentment againſt him, when he had a very good opportunity to be revenged of him. Such is the power of Eloquence, will young Orators cry out, who ſhall have looked for materials in this new Polyanthea (26).

(g) Idem, ibid.

(b) In the remark [D].

(i) Τοὺς δὲ πρώτους τοὺς τὴν Ἁρπάλου φυγὴν καὶ ἀπόδρασιν ἀπαγγείλαντας ἔδησεν Ἐφιάλτην καὶ Κίσσιον ὡς καταψευδομένους τοῦ ἀνδρός. i. e. "He put "Ephialtes and "Ciſſus in irons, "who brought "him the firſt "news of Har-"palus's eſcape "and flight, as "falſe accuſers." Plut. in Alexand. pag. 689. B.

(26) That is to ſay in Moreri's Dictionary.

[E] One of his Friends killed him perfidiouſly.] Diodorus Siculus tells us, that his name was Thimbron, and he was of Lacedemon, according to Arrian: He ſeized upon all Harpalus's effects. Others ſay that a Traveller committed that murther (27); others again charge Harpalus's Servants with it (28); and laſtly ſome aſſert, that a certain Macedonian named Pauſanias was guilty of it (29). Such different accounts tire the Readers patience, and are a diſgrace to the Hiſtorians.

(27) Quint. Curtius, lib. 10. cap. 2.

(28) Pauſanias, lib. 2. pag. 76.

(29) Idem, ibid.

[F] The news . . . that this Traitor had been driven from Athens . . . . made Alexander alter his reſolution . . . . to bring the Athenians back to their duty.] Quintus Curtius acquaints us with this. His cognitis, ſays he, Rex Harpalo Athenienſibuſque juxta infeſtus, claſſem parari jubet, Athenas protinus petiturus. Quod conſilium dum agitat, clam litteræ ei redduntur, Harpalum intraſſe quidem Athenas, pecunia conciliaſſe ſibi principum animos, mox concilio plebis habito, juſſum urbe excedere, ad Græcos milites perveniſſe, à quibus interruptum & trucidatum a quodam viatore per inſidias. His lætus in Europam trajiciendi conſilium omiſit (30). i. e. "The "King hearing this, was equally exaſperated both "againſt Harpalus and againſt the Athenians, and or-"dered his Fleet to be fitted out, being determined "to ſail immediately to Athens. But as he was ma-"king preparations to perform that deſign, he received "ſecretly a Letter, which acquainted him, that Harpa-"lus was indeed come to Athens, and had bribed the "chief Citizens in his favour; but that the people "meeting ſoon after in Council, he was ordered to de-"part from the City; and that being retired to his "Greek Soldiers, he was taken by them, and treache-"rouſly killed by a certain Traveller. Alexander re-"joicing at this, altered his Reſolution of ſailing "into Europe."

(30) Quint. Curtius, lib. 10. cap. 2.

A man muſt be quite ſtupid, who does not obſerve that there muſt be a pretty large paſſage wanting between the firſt and ſecond Chapter of Curtius's tenth Book. For is there any Hiſtorian ſo deſtitute of common ſenſe as to ſpeak of Harpalus in the manner as Curtius does in the paſſage we have tranſcribed, without telling his Readers firſt, who that Harpalus was, and in what undertaking he had been engaged. I need not to inſiſt upon this. If any reader be not ſenſible of what I have juſt now obſerved, he would not be capable of underſtanding the reaſons I might alledge.

[G] Alexander had employed Harpalus to procure him ſome Books.] Plutarch acquaints us with this particular: Read the following paſſage, you will find in it, that men did not think this Prince would be diſpleaſed, if they ſent him Poems. Τῶν δὲ ἄλλων βιβλίων ἐκ ἐυπορῶν ἐν τοῖς ἄνω τόποις, Ἅρπαλον ἐκέλευσε πέμψαι. καὶ κεῖνος ἔπεμψεν αὐτῷ πάς τε Φιλίστου βίβλους, καὶ τῶν Εὐριπίδου καὶ Σοφοκλέους καὶ Αἰσχύλου τραγῳδιῶν συχνὰς, καὶ Τελέστου καὶ Φιλοξένου διθυράμβους (31). i. e. "As other "Books could not eaſily be had in thoſe remote Coun-"tries, he (Alexander) commanded Harpalus to ſend "him ſome. Harpalus ſent him the Books of Phi-"liſtus, and a great number of Tragedies written by "Euripides, Sophocles, and Æſchylus; as alſo Teleſ-"tus's Phyloxenus's Dithyrambicks *." (31) Plut. in Alexandro, pag. 668, D.

* Songs in honour of Bacchus.

[H] The Tomb which Harpalus erected to one of his Miſtreſſes was very magnificent.] He had ſpent incredible Sums with Pythionice during her life, nor did he ſpend leſs for her burial. The funeral was attended with the moſt agreeable Symphony. All that could be performed in Muſick both with Voices and Inſtruments was made uſe of (32). He raiſed two ſtately Monuments to her, the one at Babylon, the other near Athens; they coſt him above two hundred Talents. He conſecrated a Temple and a grove to that woman under the name of Venus Pythionice, Ταύτης ἐτόλμησεν ὁ φίλος εἶναι σῶ φάσκων ἱερὸν καὶ τέμενος ἱδρύσασθαι, καὶ προσαγορεύσαι τὸν ναὸν καὶ τὸν βωμὸν Πυθιονίκης Ἀφροδίτης. i. e. "He who glories that he is your friend, dared to con-"ſecrate a Temple and a Grove to her, which he called "a Temple and a Grove of Venus Pythionice." (33). The Tomb he built to her in Attica on the road to Eleuſis ſurpaſſed all thoſe that were in the Neighbourhood. One would have taken it for the Tomb of one of the moſt eminent men that Athens ever produced. With what an aſtoniſhment muſt foreigners have been ſtruck, when they were told that it was only the Tomb of a Courteſan? This is Dicearchus's Reflexion (34). An Author, who was very well skilled in theſe matters, aſſerts, that the Tomb which was in the road to Eleuſis, was the moſt beautiful of all the antient Monuments that were to be ſeen in all Greece. Ὡς καὶ μνῆμα ἀποθανούσης ποιῆσαι πάντων ὁπόσα Ἑλλησίν ἐσιν ἀρχαῖα, θέας μάλιστα ἄξιον. i. e. "He raiſed a "Tomb to her after her Death, which is the beſt "worth ſeeing of all the antient Monuments of "Greece (35)." It is even certain, that Harpalus's deſign was not faithfully executed; they did not ſpend the whole Sum which he intended for that Monument. Chericles, Phocion's Son-in-law, took upon him, at Harpalus's requeſt, the direction of that work, and did not ſpend in it the thirty Talents with which he had been truſted for that purpoſe. He diſgraced himſelf two ways; 1. by taking upon him the Direction of a Monument that was deſigned for a Proſtitute; 2. by keeping for himſelf part of the money with which he had been truſted. Μνημεῖον ἀπὸ χρημάτων πολλῶν ἐπιτελέσαι θελήσας προσέταξε τῷ Χαρικλεῖ τὴν ἐπιμέλειαν. ὅσαν δὲ τὴν ὑπουργίαν ταύτην, ἀγεννὴ προσκατήσχυνεν ὁ τάφος συντελεσθείς. διαμένει γὰρ ἔτι νῦν ἐν Ἑρμείῳ, ᾗ βαδίζομεν ἐξ ἄστεος εἰς Ἐλευσῖνα, μηδὲν ἔχων τῶν τριάκοντα ταλάντων ἄξιον, ὅσα τῷ Ἁρπάλῳ λογισθῆναι φασὶν εἰς τὸ ἔργον ὑπὸ τοῦ Χαρικλέους. i. e. "Har-"palus deſigning to raiſe a moſt ſtately and rich Mo-"nument, committed the care of it to Charicles. This "Task, which was diſgraceful in itſelf, appeared ſtill "more ſo when the Tomb was finiſhed, which is ſtill "to be ſeen near the Temple of Mercury in the road "from Athens to Eleuſis; it does not appear that this "Monument

(32) Poſidonius, lib. 22. Hiſtoriar. apud Athen. lib. 13. pag. 594.

(33) Theonomus, in Epiſt. ad Alexandrum, apud Athen. pag. 594.

(34) In Libris de Deſcenſu in antrum Trophonium, apud Athenæum, pag. 594.

(35) Pauſanias, lib. 1. pag. 36.

which Tully has preſerved, does not relate to our Harpalus [I]. If I am in the right father Leſcalopier's moral reflections are miſapplied. There is a blunder in Euſebius, which I ſhall take notice of [K].

" Monument coſt thirty Talents, which Sum Chari-
" cles is ſaid to have reckoned to Harpalus." Pauſanias owns that he knew nothing of Pythionice's Country, nor of her family, but only that ſhe followed the trade of a Courteſan at Athens and Corinth. Athenæus was a little better acquainted with her. He tells us, that ſhe had been a Servant to Bacchis, who uſed to play on the Flute, and that ſhe entered afterwards into the Service of a Thracian Bawd, who lived at Egina, and followed her to Athens, whither that Bawd removed with her Brother; ſo that Pythionice was a threefold Slave, and a threefold Proſtitute; ὥστε γίνεσθαι μὴ μόνον τρίδουλον, ἀλλὰ καὶ τρίπορνον αὐτήν; Ut non ſolum ter mancipium, ſed etiam ter ſcortum fuerit (37).

(37) Athen. lib. 13. pag. 595. ex Theopompo in Epiſt. ad Alexandrum.

[I] I imagine that a certain complaint againſt Providence does not relate to our Harpalus.] Here follow Tully's words (38): Diogenes quidem Cynicus dicere ſolebat, Harpalum, qui temporibus illis prædo felix habebatur, contra Deos teſtimonium dicere, quòd in illa fortuna tam diu viveret. i. e. " Diogenes the Cynick uſed to " ſay, that Harpalus, who paſſed at that time for a
" ſucceſsful Pirate, bore witneſs againſt the Gods by " continuing ſo long happy." I am of Monſieur Menage's opinion; the Harpalus of Cicero, the Hirpalus of Diogenes Laertius (39), and the Hirpalus of Suidas (40) ſeem to me to be but one and the ſame perſon. Now the Scirpalus of Diogenes Laertius, and the Scirtalus of Suidas was a notorious Pirate, who took Diogenes priſoner, and ſold him. I believe therefore that Tully's Harpalus was a noted Pirate, and not one of Alexander the Great's Generals. The Character which Cicero gives of Harpalus cannot in the leaſt be applied to Alexander's General. Cicero's Harpalus was a noted Robber, as famous for the Happineſs that attended him in his plunders, as for the Robberies themſelves. His continued proſperity was well known, as appears by the conſequence, which Diogenes inferred from it; for a man would expoſe himſelf to ridicule, if he ſhould argue, as Diogenes did, in a City, where a Pirate had but for three or four Years become famous by the conſiderable prizes he made. Add to this, that a man is never more inclined to reflect upon Providence for the Proſperity of the wicked, than when he ſuffers himſelf by that Proſperity, (41). If therefore there was any Robber, whoſe long continued Impunity could draw from Diogenes's Mouth the complaint related by Cicero, it was no doubt the Man, whoſe Slave Diogenes became; and as he became the Slave of a Pirate, and not of the Governor of Babylon, we ought to infer from thence, that the witneſs, he thought could be produced againſt the being of the Gods, was the very Pirate who took him.

(38) De Natura Deorum, lib. 3. cap. 34.

(39) Lib. 6. in Diogen. num. 74.

(40) In Διογένης.

(41) See above, the remark [C] of the article DIAGORAS the Atheiſt.

It is therefore to no purpoſe, that Father Leſcalopier (42) repreſents to his Readers, that Harpalus the Governor of Babylon did not continue long unpuniſhed, after he had robbed the Treaſure of the King his Maſter. It is to no purpoſe that he obſerves, this Robber ſuffered misfortunes upon misfortunes, and was miſerably murthered at a year's end; he only argues againſt himſelf; the nearer he comes to his ſcope, the farther he recedes from the Subject he had in hand: for the Queſtion is about a Robber who had been a long time happy; this is the objection; and you mention to us a Robber who was puniſhed ſoon after he committed the fact; this is not anſwering; it is rather labouring, without being aware of it, to make of a trifling Difficulty a ſtumbling-block for weak men; it gives them offence to ſee, that you anſwer a free-thinker by altering quite the ſtate of the queſtion. And then, is not this concluſion of the Father Jeſuit very edifying? Omitte Harpalum, ſume Diogenem: ne querere quod regiæ pecuniæ prædo unum annum vivat in ſua fortuna: querere quod prædo divinæ providentiæ in ſua impietate longam vitam vivat: ſed neque id certe conquerendum eſt, nam longa vita miſerrimi canis omnibus infeſti, omnibus exoſi, longum ſupplicium fuit, longioris tamen ſupplicii breve præludium (43). i. e. " Do not men" tion Harpalus; ſpeak of Diogenes; do not complain,
" that the Robber of the King's Treaſure ſhould en" joy his happineſs for one year only; but complain
" that he who robbed God of his providence, ſhould
" live a long while in his impiety, or rather do not " complain even of this; for the long life of a moſt
" wretched Dog, hating all, and hated by all, was a " long puniſhment, and yet but a ſhort beginning of
" an eternal ſuffering."

(42) Leſcalopier, Commentar. in Ciceron. de Natura Deorum, lib. 3. pag. 683.

(43) Leſcalopier, in Cicer. de Nat. Deor. lib. 3. pag. 682.

[K] There is a blunder in Euſebius, which I ſhall take notice of.] He obſerves under the third year of the 113th Olympiad, that Harpalus fled into Aſia. Harpalus fugit in Aſiam. Scaliger approves this Chronology; but he corrects Aſiam into Atticam. And it is certain, that if Euſebius did not ſay Atticam, he ought to have ſaid it. Bongars (44) had corrected it thus, fugit ex Aſia, he fled out of Aſia.

(44) In Juſtin. lib. 12. cap. 5.

HARAVAD (ISAAC BEN), a famous Rabbi towards the end of the twelfth Century. He wrote ſomething, but it is not exactly known what it is. They aſcribe two wonderful properties to him; for they aſſert, that he could know by people's faces, whether they had a ſoul that came from another body, or whether it began only to exiſt the moment it was united to theirs; and though he were blind, yet he could diſcover with certainty by his ſmell only, whether a perſon was alive or dead (a). Father Bartolocci's cenſure is ſomewhat unpolite on this occaſion [A].

(a) Taken from Bartolocci's Bibliotheca Rabbinica, tom. 5. pag. 888, 889.

☞HARRINGTON

[A] Father Bartolocci's cenſure is ſomewhat unpolite on this occaſion.] Having quoted the following words from the Rabbi Rekanati, & licet fuiſſet cæcus, ſenſibiliter percipiebat ex aere an iſte fuiſſet vivus an verò mortuus, i. e. " and though he were blind, yet he " could ſenſibly perceive by the air whether the man
" were dead or alive; he adds (1)," cognoſcere cadaver ex olfactu mira res apud Judæos; quia cum Judæi male olentes inter ſe continuo verſentur, illorum olfaciendi ſenſus videtur depravatus, ut inter cadaveris & latrinarum malum odorem diſtinguere neſciant, niſi prodigium fiat. i. e. " To diſcover a dead corps by the ſmell is a
" wonder amongſt the Jews; for as all the Jews
" ſtink, it ſeems that by converſing together their
" ſenſe of ſmelling is ſo depraved, that they cannot,
" without a miracle, diſtinguiſh the ſmell of a corps,
" from that of a houſe of office." This is a very ſilly joke, and if we will diveſt ourſelves of all cavilling humour, we ſhall confeſs, that there was ſomething very remarkable in the ſmell of that Rabbi, in caſe he did really make the diſtinction that is aſcribed to him: for we ought not to imagine, that it is aſſerted he could ſmell whether a man, who had been dead for ſome days, was not alive; there is no blind perſon but could do this, the meaning is, that the alteration he perceived in the air as ſoon as a man was expired, made him know with certainty that the man was dead. Will it not be confeſſed that this alteration in the air is imperceptible? Father Bartolocci has found fault with another thing; he aſks how this blind Rabbi could diſcover the age of the ſoul by looking a perſon in the face. But this cenſure falls to the ground, unleſs the ſame perſons, who mentioned this quality of our Rabbi, had alſo expreſly aſſerted that he was actually blind, when he look'd ſome men in the face. Now it does not appear that they made any ſuch aſſertion. Pius ille Harravad connoſcebat ex vultu, utrum animâ creatâ in ipſo actu infuſionis informaretur homo, an vero aliunde ex tranſmigratione animam haberet adventitiam (2). i. e. " That pious man Harra-
" vad could know by a perſon's face, whether the ſoul
" that animated him was created the moment it was u" nited with the body, or whether it came from ano" ther place by tranſmigration." The words of the Rabbi Rekanati (3) indeed prove, that the other Rabbi knew by people's faces, whether their ſoul was entirely

(1) Bartoloccius, Bibliotheca Rabbinica, tom. 3. pag. 889.

(2) R. Rekanati, apud Bartolocc. Biblioth. Rabbinica, tom. 3. pag. 888.

(3) Gruter has inſerted them into the 2d vol. of his Theſaurus Criticus.

☞HARRINGTON (JAMES), an eminent Engliſh writer in the ſeventeenth Century, was deſcended of an antient family in Rutlandſhire [A], and was eldeſt ſon of Sir Sapcote Harrington by Jane the daughter of Sir William Samuel of Upton in Northamptonſhire (a). He was born at Upton the firſt Friday in January 1611 (b). In his very childhood he gave ſure hopes of his future abilities, as well by his inclination and capacity to learn whatever was propoſed to him, as by a kind of natural gravity; whence his parents and maſters uſed to ſay, that he rather kept them in awe, than needed their correction. Yet when grown to a man, none could eaſily ſurpaſs him in quickneſs of wit, and a moſt facetious temper (c). He was entered a Gentleman Commoner of Trinity College in Oxford in the year 1629 (d) under the tuition of Mr. (e) William Chillingworth. He left the Univerſity before he took a degree, and travelled into Holland, France, Italy, Denmark and Germany [B], and learned the languages of thoſe countries. Upon his return to England, he was admitted one of the Privy Chamber extraordinary to the King, whom he attended in that quality in his Majeſty's firſt expedition againſt the Scots; and took care of the affairs of the Elector Palatine (f). In the beginning of the civil wars in 1642 he adhered to the intereſts of the Parliament, and endeavoured to get a ſeat in it, but in vain (g). In January 164$\frac{6}{7}$, attending out of curioſity on the Commiſſioners appointed by the Parliament to bring the King from Newcaſtle nearer London, he was by ſome of them named to wait on his Majeſty, as a perſon known to him before, and engaged to no party or faction. The King approved the propoſal; yet Mr. Harrington would never preſume to come into his preſence except in public, till he was particularly commanded by the King, and that he and Mr. Thomas Herbert (created a Baronet after the Reſtoration) were made Grooms of the Bed-Chamber at Holmby, together with Mr. James Maxwell and Mr. Patrick Maule (afterwards Earl of Penmure in Scotland), which two only remained of his old ſervants in that ſtation (h). His Majeſty loved his company, "and choſe rather, ſays Mr. Wood, (find-"ing him to be an ingenious man) to diſcourſe with him than with others of this Cham-"ber. They had often diſcourſes concerning government; but when they happened to "talk of a Commonwealth, the King ſeemed not to endure it." It is aſſerted from his ſiſter's papers, cited by Mr. Toland, that at the King's command he tranſlated into Engliſh Dr. Sanderſon's book concerning the obligation of oaths. But Mr. Wood tells us (i), that this Tranſlation was made by his Majeſty himſelf, and that he ſhewed it at different times to Mr. Harrington, Mr. Herbert, Biſhop Juxon, Dr. Hammond, and Dr. Sheldon. He ſerved the King with great fidelity [C], and made uſe of his intereſt with his friends in Parliament to procure matters to be accommodated with all parties (k). After the King was removed out of the Iſle of Wight to Hurſt-Caſtle in Hampſhire, our author

(a) Life of James Harrington, pag. 13. prefixed to his Oceana and other Works, printed at London 1700, in fol.

(b) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 588. 2d edit. London 1588.

(c) Life of James Harrington, pag. 14.

(d) Wood, ubi ſupra.

(e) Not Dr. as Mr. John Toland in his Life of James Harrington, pag. 14. ſtiles him.

(f) Life of Harrington, pag. 14, 15.

(g) Wood, ubi ſupra.

(h) Life of Harrington, pag. 16.

(i) Vol. 1. col. 321.

(k) Life of Harrington, pag. 164.

entirely new or not; but not, whether he knew it by looking into their face or by touching it. Now theſe two methods are equally wonderful; nay, the latter ſeems to be more difficult than the former. It will be objected in Bartolocci's behalf, that Rekanati ſpeaking of the other propriety, obſerves that the Rabbi Harravad was blind. But I ſhall ſtill aſk, does he ſuppoſe, that when Harravad was blind, he was at the ſame time that wonderful Phyſiognomiſt, who could diſcover whether the ſoul was in its native place? For if he only meant that Harravad could diſcover this before he was blind, what will become of Bartolocci's railleries, exclamations and invectives? He was in the right to turn all thoſe ſilly tales into ridicule, but he ſhould have made uſe of other arguments to expoſe them. We ought to be accurate and exact, whomſoever we pretend to refute.

[A] Deſcended of an antient Family in Rutlandſhire.] He was great grandſon of Sir James Harrington; of whom it is obſerved by the Hiſtorian of that County (1), that there were ſprung in his time eight Dukes, three Marquiſſes, ſeventy Earls, twenty ſeven Viſcounts, and thirty ſix Barons; of which number ſixteen were Knights of the Garter. Our Author's father Sir Sapcote Harrington was younger brother to Sir Edward Harrington of Ridlington in Rutlandſhire Bart. and ſon of Sir James Harrington Bart. younger brother to John Lord Harrington. Sir Sapcote by his firſt wife Jane the daughter of Sir William Samuel had children beſides our Author; viz. William, a Merchant in London, Elizabeth married to Sir Ralph Aſhton of Lancaſhire Bart; Anne, married to Arthur Evelyn Eſq;. By a ſecond wife he had John, killed at ſea; Edward, a Captain in the Army; Frances, married to John Bagſhaw at Culworth in Northamptonſhire Eſq;, and Dorothy, married to Allan Bellingham of Levens in Weſtmorland Eſq; (2).

(1) Wright in his Antiquities of the County of Rutland, pag. 52.

(2) Toland's Life of James Harrington, pag. 13.

[B] Travelled into Holland, France, Italy, Denmark and Germany.] He firſt went to Holland, then the principal ſchool of martial diſcipline, and (what touched him more ſenſibly) a country wonderfully flouriſhing under the influence of liberty, which they had ſo lately aſſerted by breaking the yoke of the King of Spain. And here no doubt it was, that he began to make government the ſubject of his meditations; for he was often heard to ſay, that before he left England, he knew no more of Monarchy, Anarchy, Ariſtocracy, Democracy, Oligarchy, and the like, than as hard words, whereof he learned the ſignification in his Dictionary. For ſome months he liſted himſelf in the Lord Craven's Regiment and Sir Robert Stone's; during which time being much at the Hague, he had the opportunity of further accompliſhing himſelf in two Courts, that of the Prince of Orange, and that of the Queen of Bohemia, daughter of King James I. She entertained him with great civility and favour on account of his great uncle (3) John Lord Harrington, who had been her Governor; but particularly for his own merit. The Prince Elector likewiſe courted him into his ſervice, and engaged him to attend him in a journey to the Court of Denmark. Thro' Flanders he paſſed into France, and thence into Italy.

(3) Not Uncle, as Mr. Toland ſays, ubi ſupra, pag. 14.

[C] He ſerved the King with great fidelity.] Mr. Wood tells us (4), that he "finding his Majeſty quite "another perſon as to his parts, religion, morals, &c. "than what were repreſented by the faction, who "gained their ends by lies and ſcandals, he be-"came paſſionately affected with him, and took all "occaſions to vindicate him in what company ſoever "he happened to be." And Mr. Toland obſerves (5), that during the Treaty of the Iſle of Weight he frequently warned the Divines of his acquaintance to take heed how far they preſſed the King to inſiſt upon any thing, which, however it concerned their dignity, was no eſſential point of Religion: and that ſuch matters driven too far would infallibly ruin all the endeavours uſed for a peace; which prophecy was proved too true by the event.

(4) Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 588.

(5) Life of James Harrington, pag. 16.

author was forcibly turned out of the ſervice, becauſe he vindicated ſome of his Majeſty's arguments againſt the Parliament-Commiſſioners of Newport, and thought his conceſſions not ſo unſatisfactory as ſome others did [D]. As they were taking the King to Windſor, he begged admittance to the boot of the coach, that he might bid his maſter farewell; which being granted, and he preparing to kneel, the King took him by the hand, and pulled him in to him. He was for three or four days permitted to ſtay; but becauſe he would not take an oath againſt aſſiſting or concealing the King's eſcape, he was not only diſcharged from his office, but alſo for ſome time detained in cuſtody till Major General Ireton obtained his liberty. He afterwards found means to ſee the King at St. James's, and attended him on the ſcaffold, where, or a little before, he received a token of his Majeſty's affection (l). After his Majeſty's death he was obſerved to keep much in his Library, and to be more retired than uſual; which was by his friends for a long time aſcribed to melancholy or diſcontent. But he at laſt ſhewed them the manuſcript of his Oceana, printed in 1656 [E], which he had been privately writing all that while.

(l) Ibid. pag. 17.

[D] Was forcibly turned out of the ſervice, becauſe he vindicated ſome of his Majeſty's arguments againſt the Parliament-Commiſſioners at Newport, and thought his conceſſions not ſo unſatisfactory as ſome others did.] This is the account of Mr. Toland (6). Mr. Wood relates the affair as follows (7). His Majeſty being hurried away from Holmby to the Iſle of Wight, and thence to Hurſt-Caſtle in Hampſhire on the 30th of November 1648, it happened, that Mr. Harrington one morning fell into diſcourſe with the Governor of the Caſtle and ſome others of the Parliament-Officers there concerning the late Treaty of Newport, "wherein he "magnified the King's wiſdom in his arguments with "the Commiſſioners upon the propoſitions for peace, "and ſatisfaction the Parliament had in his conceſſi-"ons, and probability in a happy event, if this force "in removing him to Hurſt-Caſtle had not intervened "and made an unhappy fracture, which created par-"ties; enlarging alſo upon his Majeſty's learned diſ-"putes with Mr. Richard Vines and other Preſbyterian "Divines with ſuch moderation, as gained applauſe "from all thoſe that heard him argue. Which diſ-"courſe, how inoffenſive ſoever, and without excep-"tion at any other time or place, truth is not at all "times ſeaſonable or ſafe to be ſpoken, as by our Au-"thor's example was evidenced. For thoſe captious "perſons, with whom he held diſcourſe, being full "of jealouſy, and apt to wreſt his words to the worſt "ſenſe, they withdrew a little, and at their return "they told him plainly they were diſſatisfied with "what he had ſaid. He deſired them to inſtance "wherein: they replied in all particulars; which "when he began to repeat for his own ſatisfaction "and their better underſtanding, they interrupted "him, and told him in plain terms, they could not "ſuffer his attendance any longer about the King. "Which proceeding and diſmiſs, without acquaint-"ing him with the occaſion, was ill reſented by the "King, who had Harrington in good eſteem, look-"ing upon him as a Gentleman qualified with ſpecial "parts; and having found him truſty, his ſervice "was the more acceptable, yet blamed him neverthe-"leſs for not being more wary amongſt men, that "were at ſuch a time full of jealouſies, and very little "obliging to his Majeſty."

(6) Ubi ſupra, pag. 16, 17.

(7) Col. 588, 589.

[E] His Oceana printed in 1656.] It was publiſhed in a thin folio under the title of The Commonwealth or Oceana: to his Highneſs the Lord Protector of the Commonwealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland. When he ſhewed the manuſcript of this work to his friends before the publication of it, he told them, that ever ſince he had begun to examine things ſeriouſly, he had principally applied himſelf to the ſtudy of Civil Government, as being of the higheſt importance to the peace and felicity of mankind; and that he ſucceeded, at leaſt to his own ſatisfaction, being now convinced, that no Government is of ſo accidental and arbitrary an inſtitution as people are wont to imagine, there being in ſocieties natural cauſes producing their neceſſary effects as well as in the earth or the air. Hence he frequently argued, that the troubles of his time were not to be wholly attributed to wilfulneſs or faction, neither to the miſgovernment of the Prince, nor the ſtubbornneſs of the people; but to a change in the balance of property, which ever ſince Henry VIIth's time was daily falling into the ſcale of the Commons from that of the King and Lords, as he ſhews in his Book. Not that hereby he approved either the breaches, which the King had made on the laws, or excuſed the ſeverity, which ſome of the ſubjects exerciſed on the King; but to ſhew, that as long as the cauſes of theſe diſorders remained, ſo long would the like effects unavoidably follow; while on the one hand a King would be always endeavouring to govern according to the example of his predeceſſors, when the beſt part of the national property was in their own hands, and conſequently the greateſt command of money and men; as one of a thouſand pounds a year can entertain more ſervants, or influence more tenants, than another, that has but one hundred; out of which he cannot allow one valet. And on the other hand he ſaid, that the people would be ſure to ſtruggle for preſerving the property, whereof they were in poſſeſſion, never failing to obtain more privileges, and to enlarge the baſis of their liberty, as often as they met with any ſucceſs (which they generally did) in quarrels of this kind. His chief aim therefore was to find out a method of preventing ſuch diſtempers, or to apply the beſt remedies, when they happened to break out. But as long as the balance remained in this unequal ſtate, he affirmed, that no King whatſoever could keep himſelf eaſy, let him never ſo much endeavour to pleaſe his people; and that though a good King might manage affairs tolerably well during his life, yet this did not prove the government to be good, ſince under a leſs prudent Prince it would fall to pieces again, while the orders of a well conſtituted State make wicked men virtuous, and fools to act wiſely. He was the firſt who diſcovered, that Empire follows the balance of property, whether lodged in one, in a few, or in many hands; and he no ſooner diſcourſed publickly of this new doctrine, being a man of univerſal acquaintance, but it engaged all ſorts of people to buſy themſelves about it as they were variouſly affected. Some, becauſe they underſtood him, deſpiſed it, alledging, that it was plain to every man's capacity; as if his higheſt merit did not conſiſt in making it ſo. Others, and thoſe in number the feweſt, diſputed with him about it, merely to be better informed. But a third ſort out of pure envy ſtrove to leſſen or defame him; and one of them (ſince they could not find any precedent writer, out of whoſe works they might make him a plagiary) endeavoured, after a very ſingular manner, to rob him of the glory of this diſcovery; for our author having freely lent him a part of his papers, the latter publiſhed a ſmall piece to the ſame purpoſe intitled, A Letter from an Officer of the Army in Ireland, &c. Major Wildman was then reputed the author by ſome, and Henry Nevil Eſq; by others; which latter, by reaſon of this thing, and his great intimacy with Mr. Harrington, was by his detractors reported to be the author of his works, or that at leaſt he had a principal hand in compoſing them. Notwithſtanding theſe provocations, ſo true was Mr. Harrington to the friendſhip, which he profeſſed to Mr. Nevil and Major Wildman, that he avoided all harſh expreſſions or public cenſures on this occaſion, contenting himſelf with the juſtice, which the world was ſoon obliged to yield to him by reaſon of his other writings, wherein no ſuch aſſiſtances could reaſonably be expected. But the publication of his book met with greater difficulties from the oppoſition of the ſeveral parties then ſet againſt one another, and all againſt him; but from none more than ſome of thoſe, who pretended to be for a while. This work of his was attacked by ſeveral writers, againſt whom he defended it.

Commonwealth, which was the ſpecious name under which they covered the rankeſt tyranny in Cromwell. Our Author by ſhewing, that a Commonwealth was a government of Laws, and not of the ſword, could not but detect the violent adminiſtration of the Protector by his Major Generals, which created him no ſmall danger; while the Cavaliers on the other hand taxed him with ingratitude to the memory of the late King, and preferred the Monarchy even of an Uſurper to the beſt ordered Commonwealth. To theſe he anſwered, that it was enough for him to forbear publiſhing his ſentiments, during that King's life; but the Monarchy being now quite diſſolved, and the Nation in a ſtate of anarchy, or, what was worſe, groaning under an horrid uſurpation, he was not only at liberty, but even obliged as a good citizen to offer his aſſiſtance to his countrymen, and to ſhew them ſuch a model of government, as he thought moſt conducing to their tranquillity, wealth, and power. That the cavaliers ought of all people to be beſt pleaſed with him, ſince if his model ſucceeded, they were ſure to enjoy equal privileges with others, and ſo be delivered from their preſent oppreſſion; for in a well conſtituted Commonwealth there can be no diſtinction of parties; the paſſage to preferment is open to merit in all perſons, and no honeſt man can be uneaſy. But that if the Prince ſhould happen to be reſtored, his doctrine of the balance would be a light to ſhew him what and with whom he had to do, and ſo either to mend or avoid the miſcarriages of his father; ſince all that is ſaid of this doctrine may as well be accommodated to a Monarchy regulated by law, as to a Democracy or more popular form of Government. He uſed to add on ſuch occaſions another reaſon of writing this model, which was, that if it ſhould ever be the fate of this nation to be like Italy of old, over-run by any barbarous people, or to have its Government and Records deſtroyed by the rage of ſome mercileſs conqueror, they might not be then left to their own invention in framing a new Government; for few people can be expected to ſucceed ſo happily as the Venetians have done in ſuch a cauſe. In the mean time it was known to ſome of the Courtiers, that the book was printing; whereupon, after hunting it from one preſs to another, they ſeized it at laſt, and conveyed it to Whitehall. All the ſollicitations Mr. Harrington could make were not able to retrieve his papers, till he remembered that Oliver's favourite daughter, the Lady Claypole, acted the part of a Princeſs very naturally, obliging all perſons with her civility, and frequently interceding for the unhappy. To this Lady, though an abſolute ſtranger to him, he thought fit to make his application; and being led into her antichamber, he ſent in his Name, with his requeſt, that ſhe would admit him to her preſence. While he attended, ſome of her women coming into the room, were followed by her little daughter about three years old, who ſtayed behind them. He entertained the child ſo divertingly, that ſhe ſuffered him to take her up in his arms till her mother came; whereupon he ſtepping towards her, and ſetting the child down at her feet, ſaid, Madam, it is well you are come at this nick of time, or I had certainly ſtole this pretty little Lady. Stoln her! replied the mother, pray what to do with her? for ſhe is too young to become your miſtreſs. "Madam, ſaid he, "though her charms aſſure her of a more conſiderable conqueſt, yet I muſt confeſs, it is not love, "but revenge that prompted me to commit this theft." Lord, anſwered the Lady again, what injury have I done you, that you ſhould ſteal my child? "None at all, "replied he, but that you might be induced to prevail with your father to do me juſtice, by reſtoring "my child, that he has ſtollen." But ſhe urging, that it was impoſſible, becauſe her father had children enough of his own; he told her at laſt, that it was the iſſue of his brain, which was miſrepreſented to the Protector, and taken out of the preſs by his order. She immediately promiſed to procure it for him, if it contained nothing prejudicial to her father's government; and he aſſured her, that it was only a kind of Political Romance, ſo far from any treaſon againſt her father, that he hoped ſhe would acquaint him, that he deſigned to dedicate it to him, and promiſed, that ſhe herſelf ſhould be preſented with one of the firſt copies. The Lady was ſo well pleaſed with his manner of addreſs, that he had his book ſpeedily reſtored to him; and he accordingly inſcribed it to Oliver Cromwell, who after the peruſal of it, ſaid, that "the Gentleman had like to trapan him out of his "power; but that what he got by the ſword, he "would not quit for a little paper-ſhot; adding, that "he approved the government of a ſingle perſon as "little as any of them, but that he was forced to take "upon him the office of an High-Conſtable, to preſerve the peace among the ſeveral parties in the "nation, ſince he ſaw that being left to themſelves, "they would never agree to any certain form of "Government, and would only ſpend their whole "power in defeating the deſigns, or deſtroying the "perſon of one another." We ſhall now proceed to give an account of the Book, which is written after the manner of a Romance, in imitation of Plato's Atlantic Story. By Oceana he means England; by Adoxus, King John; by Convallium, Hampton-Court; by Coraunus, Henry VIII; by Dicoitome, K. Richard II; by Emporium, London; by Halcionia, the Thames; by Halo, Whitehall; by Hiera, Weſtminſter; by Leviathan, Hobbes; by Marpeſia, Scotland; by Morpheus, King James I; by Mount Celia, Windſor; by Neuſtrians, Normans; by Olphaus Megaletor, Oliver Cromwell; by Panopæa, Ireland; by Pantheon, Weſtminſter-Hall; by Panurgus, Henry VII; by Parthenia, Queen Elizabeth; by Scandians, Danes; by Teutons, Saxons; by Turbo, William the Conqueror; by Verulamius, Lord Bacon. The book conſiſts of preliminaries divided into two parts, and a third ſection called the Council of Legiſlators. Then follows the model of the Commonwealth, or the body of the book; and laſtly the corollary or concluſion. The Preliminary Diſcourſes contain the principles, generation, and effects of all Governments, whether Monarchical, Ariſtocratical, or Popular, and their ſeveral corruptions, as tyranny, oligarchy, and anarchy, with all the good or bad mixtures, which naturally reſult from them. But the firſt part treats in a more particular manner of antient prudence, or that genius of Government, which moſt prevailed in the world ſince the time of Julius Cæſar. The ſecond part of the Preliminaries treats of modern prudence, or that genius of Government which has moſt obtained in the world ſince the expiration of the Roman liberty, particularly the Gothic conſtitution, beginning with the inundation of the barbarous nations over the Roman empire. He gives a clear account of the Engliſh Government under the Romans, Saxons, Danes, and Normans, till the diſſolution of it under Charles I. Next follows the Council of Legiſlators; for our author being about to give the moſt perfect model of Government, made himſelf maſter of all the antient and modern Politicians, that he might as well imitate whatever was excellent or practicable in them, as avoid all things, which were impracticable or inconvenient. To this end he introduces under feigned names nine Legiſlators, who perfectly underſtood the ſeveral Governments, which they were appointed to repreſent. The province of the firſt was the Commonwealth of Iſrael; that of the ſecond, Athens; of the third, Sparta; of the fourth, Carthage; of the fifth, the Achæans, Æolians, and Lycians; of the ſixth, Rome; of the ſeventh, Venice; of the eighth, Swiſſerland; and of the ninth, Holland; Out of the excellencies of all theſe, ſupplied with the fruits of his own invention, he formed the model of his Oceana. In the Model, he obſerves this method, to lay down his orders or laws in ſo many poſitive propoſitions, to each of which he ſubjoins an explanatory diſcourſe; and, if there be occaſion, adds a ſpeech ſuppoſed to be delivered by the Lord Archon, or ſome of the Legiſlators. The Epitome of this model is as follows. The center or fundamental laws are, firſt, the Agrarian, proportioned at two thouſand pounds a year in land, lying and being within the proper territory of Oceana, and ſtating property in land at ſuch a balance, that the power can never ſwerve out of the hands of the many.

Secondly, The ballot conveying this equal ſap from the root, by an unequal election or rotation, into the branches branches of magiſtracy or ſovereign power.

The orbs of this Commonwealth being civil, military, or provincial, are, as it were, caſt upon this mold or center by the diviſions of the people: Firſt, into citizens and ſervants: Secondly, into youth and elders: Thirdly, into ſuch as have one hundred pounds a year in lands, goods, or monies, who are of the horſe; and ſuch as have under, who are of the foot: Fourthly, they are divided by their uſual reſidence into pariſhes, hundreds, and tribes.

The civil orbs conſiſt of the elders, and are thus created. Every Monday next enſuing the laſt of December, the elders in every pariſh elect the fifth man to be a Deputy; which is but half a day's work. Every Monday next enſuing the laſt of January, the Deputies meet at their reſpective hundred, and elect out of their number one Juſtice of the Peace, one Juryman, one Coroner, and one High Conſtable of the foot; one day's work.

Every Monday next enſuing the laſt of February, the hundreds meet at their reſpective tribe, and there elect the Lord's High-Sheriff, Lieutenant, Cuſtos Rotulorum, the Conductor, the two Cenſors out of the Horſe, the Magiſtrates of the Tribe, and of the Hundreds, with the Jurymen conſtituting the Phylarch, and who aſſiſt in their reſpective offices at the Aſſizes, hold the Quarter-ſeſſions, &c. The day following the Tribe elects the annual Galaxy, conſiſting of two Knights, and three Deputies out of the Horſe, with four Deputies out of the Foot, thereby indued with power, as Magiſtrates of the whole nation, for the term of three years. An officer choſen at the Hundred may not be elected a Magiſtrate of the Tribe; but a Magiſtrate or Officer either of the Hundred or of the Tribe, being elected into the Galaxy, may ſubſtitute any one of his own order to his Magiſtracy or Office in the Hundred or in the Tribe. This of the Muſter is two days work. So the body of the people is annually at the charge of three days work and an half, in their own Tribes, for the perpetuation of their power, receiving over and above the Magiſtracies ſo divided among them.

Every Monday next enſuing the laſt of March, the Knights, being an hundred in all the Tribes, take their places in the Senate, and make the third region of the ſame, and the Houſe proceeds to the Senatorian Elections. Senatorian Elections are annual, biennial, or emergent.

The annual is performed by the tropic.

The tropic is a ſchedule, conſiſting of two parts; the firſt, by which the Senatorian Magiſtrates are elected; and the ſecond, by which the Senatorian Counſellors are perpetuated.

The firſt part is of this tenor. The Lord Strategus, the Lord Orator, the firſt Cenſor, and the ſecond Cenſor, annual Magiſtrates, and therefore ſuch as may be elected out of any region; the term of every region having at the tropic one year at leaſt unexpired. The third Commiſſioner of the Seal, and the third Commiſſioner of the Treaſury, triennial Magiſtrates, and therefore ſuch as can be choſen out of the third region only, as that alone, which has the term of three years unexpired.

The Strategus and the Orator ſitting are Conſuls or Preſidents of the Senate.

The Strategus marching is General of the Army, in which caſe a new Strategus is elected to ſit in his room.

The Strategus ſitting with the ſix Commiſſioners, being Counſellors of the nation, are the ſignory of the Commonwealth.

The Cenſors are Magiſtrates of the Ballot, Preſidents of the Council for Religion, and Chancellors of the Univerſity.

The ſecond part of the tropic perpetuates the Council of State by the election of five Knights out of the firſt region of the Senate, to be the firſt region of that Council, conſiſting of fifteen Knights, five in every region.

The like is done by the Election of four into the Council of Religion, and four into the Council of Trade, out of the ſame Region in the Senate; each of theſe Councils conſiſting of twelve Knights, four in in every Region.

But the Council of War conſiſting of nine Knights, three in every Region, is elected by and out of the Council of State, as the other Councils are elected by and out of the Senate. And if the Senate add a Juncto of nine Knights more, elected out of their own number, for the term of three Months, the Council of War, by Vertue of that addition, is dictator of Oceana for the ſaid Term.

For the Signory jointly or ſeverally has a right of Seſſion, and ſuffrage of every Senatorian Council, and to propoſe either to the Senate, or any of them. And every Region in a Council electing one weekly Provoſt, any two of thoſe Provoſts have power alſo to propoſe to their reſpective Council, as the proper and peculiar Propoſers of the ſame; for which cauſe they hold an Academy, where any man, either by word of Mouth, or writing, may propoſe the Propoſers.

Next to the Elections of the Tropic is the biennial Election of one Embaſſador in Ordinary, by the ballot of the Houſe, to the Reſidence of France; at which time the Reſident of France removes to Spain, he of Spain to Venice, he of Venice to Conſtantinople, and he of Conſtantinople returns. So the orb of Reſidents is wheeled about in eight years by the Election of one Embaſſador in Ordinary.

The laſt kind of Election is emergent. Emergent Elections are made by the ſcrutiny. Election by ſcrutiny is when a competitor being made by a Council, and brought into the Senate, the Senate chooſes four more competitors to him; and putting all five to the ballot, he who has moſt above half the Suffrages, is the Magiſtrate. The Polemarchs or Field-Officers are choſen by the ſcrutiny of the Council of War; an Embaſſador Extraordinary by the ſcrutiny of the Council of State; the Judges and Serjeants at Law by the ſcrutiny of the Seal; and the Barons and prime Officers of the Exchequer by the ſcrutiny of the Treaſury.

The opinion or opinions, that are legitimately propoſed to any Council, muſt be debated by the ſame; and ſo many as are reſolved upon the debate, are introduced into the Senate, where they are debated and reſolved, or rejected by the whole Houſe. That which is reſolved by the Senate is a decree, which is good in matters of State, but no Law, except it be propoſed to, and reſolved by the Prerogative.

The Deputies of the Galaxy, being three Horſe and four Foot in a Tribe, amount in all the Tribes to one hundred and fifty Horſe, and two hundred Foot; which having entered the Prerogative, and choſen their Captains, Cornets, and Enſign (triennial Officers) make the third Claſs, conſiſting of one Troop and one Company; and ſo joining with the whole Prerogative, elect four annual Magiſtrates, called Tribunes, whereof two are of the Horſe, and two of the Foot. Theſe have the command of the Prerogative Seſſions, and ſuffrage in the Council of War, and Seſſions without Suffrage in the Senate.

The Senate having paſſed a decree, which they would propoſe to the people, cauſe it to be printed and publiſhed, or promulgated for the ſpace of ſix Weeks; which being ordered, they chooſe their Propoſers. The Propoſers muſt be Magiſtrates, that is, the Commiſſioners of the Seal, thoſe of the Treaſury, or the Cenſors. Theſe being choſen, deſire the Muſters of the Tribunes, and appoint the Day. The people being aſſembled at the Day appointed, and the decree propoſed, that which is propoſed by authority of the Senate, and commanded by the people, is the Law of Oceana, or an act of Parliament. So the Parliament of Oceana conſiſts of the Senate propoſing, and the people reſolving.

The People or Prerogative are alſo the ſupreme Judicatory of this Nation, having power of hearing and determining all cauſes of Appeal from all Magiſtrates, or Courts provincial, or domeſtick; as alſo to queſtion any Magiſtrate, the term of his Magiſtracy being expired, if the caſe be introduced by the Tribunes or any of them.

The military Orbs conſiſt of the Youth, that is, ſuch as are from eighteen to thirty Years of Age; and are created in the following manner.

Every Wedneſday next enſuing the laſt of December, the Youth of every Pariſh aſſembling, elect the fifth of their number to be their Deputies. The Deputies of the Youth are called Stratiots; and this is the firſt Eſſay.

it [F]. In 1659 he publiſhed an Abridgment of his Oceana under the title of The Art of Lawgiving [G]. Beſides his endeavours to propagate his Republican notions by his writings, Every Wedneſday next inſuing the laſt of January, the Stratiots aſſembling at the Hundred, elect their Captain and their Enſign, and fall to their Games and Sports.

Every Wedneſday next enſuing the laſt of February, the Stratiots are received by the Lord Lieutenant their Commander in chief, with the Conductors and the Cenſors; and having been diſciplined and entertained with other Games, are called to the Urns, where they elect the ſecond Eſſay, conſiſting of two hundred Horſe and ſix hundred Foot in a Tribe; that is, of ten thouſand Horſe, and thirty thouſand Foot in all the Tribes, which is the ſtanding Army of this Nation, to march at any warning. They alſo elect at the ſame time a part of the third Eſſay, by the mixture of Balls marked with the Letter M, and the Letter P. for Marpeſia (6), and Panopea (7); they of either mark being ten Horſe, and fifty Foot in a Tribe, that is, five hundred Horſe, and two thouſand five hundred Foot in all the Tribes, which are forthwith to march to their reſpective Provinces.

(6) Scotland.

(7) Ireland.

But the third Eſſay of this nation, more properly ſo called, is when the Strategus with the Polemarchs, (the Senate and the People, or the Dictator having decreed a War) receive in return of his Warrants the ſecond Eſſay from the Conductors at the Rendezvous of Oceana; which army marching with all accommodations provided by the Council of War, the Senate elects a new Strategus, and the Lords Lieutenants a ſecond Eſſay.

A Youth, except he be an only ſon, refuſing any one of his three Eſſays, without ſufficient cauſe ſhewn to the Phylarch or the Cenſors, is incapable of Magiſtracy, and is fined a fifth part of his yearly Rent, or of his Eſtate, for protection. In caſe of Invaſion the Elders are obliged to like duty with the Youth, and upon their own charge.

The Provincial Orb conſiſting in part of the Elders, and in part of the Youth, is thus created.

Four Knights out of the firſt Region falling, are elected in the Senate to be the firſt Region of the Provincial Orb of Marpeſia. Theſe being triennial Magiſtrates, take their Places in the Provincial Council, conſiſting of twelve Knights, four in every Region, each Region chooſing their weekly Provoſts of their Council thus conſtituted. One Knight more choſen out of the ſame Region in the Senate, being an annual Magiſtrate, is Preſident, with power to propoſe; and the Opinions propoſed by the Preſident, or any two of the Provoſts, are debated by the Council; and if there be occaſion of farther power or inſtruction than they yet have, tranſmitted to the Council of State, with which the Provincial is to hold Intelligence.

The Preſident of this Council is alſo Strategus or General of the Provincial Army. Wherefore the Conductors, upon Notice of his election and appointment of his rendezvous, deliver to him the Stratiots of his Letter, which he takes with him into his Province; and the Provincial Army having received the new Strategus with the third Claſſis, the Council diſmiſſes the old Strategus with the firſt Claſſis. The like is done for Panopea, or any other Province.

But whereas the Term of every other Magiſtracy or Election in this Commonwealth, whether annual or triennial, requires an equal Vacation, the Term of a Provincial Counſeller or Magiſtrate requires no Vacation at all. The Quorum of a Provincial, as alſo that of every other Council and Aſſembly, requires two thirds in a time of Health, and one third in a time of Sickneſs. [In the Corollary, which is the concluſion of the whole work, he ſhews how the laſt hand was to put his Commonwealth; and beſides the Form of the Senate and Aſſemblies of the People, and the manner of waging war, and governing in peace, he treats of the diſcipline of a national religion, and the ſecurity of liberty of Conſcience; a form of government for Scotland, Ireland, and the other Provinces of the Commonwealth; Governments for London and Weſtminſter, proportionably to which the other Corporations of the Nation are to be modelled; Directions for the encouraging of Trade; Laws for regulating of Academies; Rules for the Education of the Youth, as well to the wars and to the Sea, to Manufactures or Husbandry, as to Law, Phyſick, or Divinity, and chiefly to the breeding and true figure of accompliſhed Gentlemen. He gives orders for reforming the Stage; the number, choice, and buſineſs of the Officers of State, and the revenue, with all ſorts of Officers; and an exact account both of their ſalaries, and the ordinary yearly charge of the whole Commonwealth. Mr. Toland obſerves (8), that

(8) Life of Harrington, pag. 23, 24.

"this Model gives a full anſwer to thoſe, who imagine, "that there can be no diſtinctions or degrees, neither "Nobility nor Gentry, in a Democracy; being led in- "to this miſtake, becauſe they ignorantly think all "Commonwealths to be conſtituted alike; when, if "they were but never ſo little vers'd in Hiſtory, they "might know, that no order of men now in the world "can come near the figure that was made by the No- "blemen and Gentlemen of the Roman State: nor in "this reſpect, does the Commonwealth of Oceana "come any thing behind them; for, as Harrington "ſays very truly, an Army may as well conſiſt of Soldiers "without Officers, or of Officers without Soldiers, as a "Commonwealth (eſpecially ſuch a one as is capable of "greatneſs) conſiſt of a people without a gentry, or of a "gentry without a people."

[F] This work of his was attacked by ſeveral Writers, againſt whom he defended it.] The firſt, who made exceptions to it, was Dr. Henry Ferne, afterwards Biſhop of Cheſter. The Lady Aſhton, Mr. Harrington's ſiſter, preſented him with one of the Books, and deſired his opinion of it, which he quickly ſent in ſuch a manner as ſhewed, that he did not approve of the doctrine, tho' he treated the perſon and his learning with due reſpect. To this Letter a reply was made, and ſome queries ſent along with it by Mr. Harrington; to every one of which a diſtinct anſwer was returned by the Doctor; which being again confuted by Mr. Harrington, he publiſhed the whole in 1656 under the title of Pian Piano, or an Intercourſe between H. Ferne, Doctor in Divinity, and James Harrington Eſq; upon occaſion of the Doctor's cenſure of the Commonwealth of Oceana. The next, who wrote againſt Oceana, was Matthew Wren, ſon of Dr. Matthew Wren Biſhop of Ely. His Book was intitled, Conſiderations on Mr. Harrington's Commonwealth of Oceana, reſtrained to the firſt part of the Preliminaries. London 1657 in 8vo. To this is prefixed a Letter to Dr. John Wilkins, Warden of Wadham College, who had deſired Mr. Wren to give his judgment concerning Mr. Harrington's Book; who wrote an Anſwer to Mr. Wren in the firſt Book of his Prerogative of Popular Government: A political Diſcourſe, in two Books, the former containing the firſt Preliminary of Oceana, enlarged, interpreted, and vindicated from all ſuch miſtakes or ſlanders, as have been alledged againſt it under the notion of objections. The ſecond concerning Ordination, againſt Dr. Hammond, Dr. Lazarus Seaman, and the Authors they follow. In which two Books are contained the whole Commonwealth of the Hebrews or of Iſrael, Senate, People, and Magiſtracy, both as it ſtood in the Inſtitution by Moſes, and as it came to be formed after the Captivity. As alſo the different policies introduced into the Church of Chriſt during the time of the Apoſtles. London 1658 in 4to. As Mr. Wren was one of the Virtuoſi, who met at Dr. Wilkins's lodgings at Oxford, (the Seminary of the Royal Society) Mr. Harrington obſerves, that the Univerſity Wits or good Company were good at two things, diminiſhing of a Commonwealth and the multiplying of a louſe. Mr. Wren publiſhed a Rejoinder under the title of, Monarchy aſſerted: or the State of Monarchical and Popular Government in vindication of the Conſiderations on Mr. Harrington's Oceana. London 1659 in 8vo. In anſwer to which Mr. Harrington wrote his Politicaſter, or a comical Diſcourſe in anſwer to Mr. Wren's Book intitled, Monarchy aſſerted againſt Mr. Harrington's Oceana. London 1659. Mr. Baxter wrote againſt our Author his Holy Commonwealth: or Political Aphoriſms opening the true Principles of Government. London 1659 in 8vo.

[G] In 1659 he publiſhed an Abridgment of his Oceana under the title of The Art of Law-giving.] It was writings, he inſtituted likewiſe for the ſame purpoſe a nightly meeting of ſeveral ingenious Gentlemen in the New-Palace Yard at Weſtminſter; which club was called the Rota [H], and continued till about the 21ſt of February 1659, at which time the ſecluded Members of Parliament being reſtored by General Monk, all their models vaniſhed (m). After the Reſtoration he lived in a retired manner. But December the 28th 1661 he, by order of the King, was committed to the Tower of London for treaſonable deſigns and practices [I]; and, Chancellor Hyde, at a conference of the Lords and Commons, charged him with being concerned in a plot. But a committee of Lords and Commons, after ſeveral ſittings, could make nothing of that pretended plot, and did not ever name our author in all their reports (n). At laſt he was conveyed to St. Nicholas Iſland oppoſite to Plymouth; from whence he was removed to Plymouth, where he fell into an uncommon diſorder of imagination [K]. Having obtained his liberty by means of the Earl of Bath, he was printed at London in 8vo, and divided into three Books; the firſt ſhewing the foundations and ſuperſtructures of all the kinds of Governments; the ſecond ſhewing the frames of the Commonwealths of Iſrael and the Jews; the third ſhewing a model fitted to the preſent ſtate or balance of this Nation. To this Treatiſe is added a ſmall Diſſertation, intitled, A Word concerning a Houſe of Peers.

(m) Wood, col. 591.

(n) Life, pag. 35.

[H] He inſtituted . . . a nightly meeting of ſeveral ingenious Gentlemen in the New Palace Yard at Weſtminſter, which Club was called the Rota.] They met at the Turk's Head, called Miles's Coffee-Houſe, next to the ſtairs where the people take water. "Their "diſcourſes, ſays Mr. Wood (9), about Government "and of ordering of a Commonwealth were the moſt "ingenious and ſmart that ever were heard; for the "arguments in the Parliament-Houſe were but flat to "thoſe. This gang had a balloting-box, and balloted how things ſhould be carried by way of Tentamens; which being not uſed or known in England before upon this account, the room every evening was very full. Beſides our Author and H. Nevil, who were the prime men of the Club, were Cyriack Skinner, a merchant's ſon in London, an ingenious young Gentleman, and ſcholar to Jo. Milton, which Skinner ſometimes held the Chair; Major John Wildman; Charles Wolſeley of Staffordſhire; Roger Coke; William Poultney, afterwards a Knight, who ſometimes held the Chair; John Hoſkyns; John Aubrey; Maximilian Pettie of Tetteſworth in Oxfordſhire, a very able man in theſe matters, and who had more than once turned the Council-Board of Oliver Cromwell; Mich. Mallet; Ph. Carteret of the Iſle of Guernſey; Francis Cradock, a Merchant; Henry Ford; Major Venner, Nephew to Dr. Tob. Venner, the Phyſician; Tho. Marriett of Warwickſhire; Henry Croone, a Phyſician; Edward Bagſhaw of Chriſt-Church; and ſometimes Rob. Wood of Lincoln College; and James Ardern, then or ſoon after a Divine; with many others, beſides antagoniſts and auditors of note. Dr. William Petty was a Rotaman, and would ſometimes trouble Jo. Harrington in his Club; and one Stafford a Gentleman of Northamptonſhire, who uſed to be an auditor, did with his gang come among them one evening very mellow from the tavern, and did much affront the Junto and tore in pieces their orders and minutes. The ſoldiers, who commonly were there, as auditors and ſpectators, would have kick'd them down ſtairs; but Harrington's moderation and perſuaſion hindered them. The doctrine was very taking, and the more, becauſe as to human foreſight there was no poſſibility of the King's return. The greateſt of the Parliament-Men hated this deſign of Rotation and Balloting, as being againſt their power. Eight or ten were for it, of which number Henry Nevil was one, who propoſed it to the Houſe, and made it out to the Members thereof, that except they embraced that way of government, they would be ruined. The model of it was, that the third part of the Senate or Houſe ſhould rote out by ballot every year, ſo that every ninth year the ſaid Senate would be wholly altered. No Magiſtrate was to continue above three years, and all to be choſen by ballot; than which choice nothing could be invented more fair and impartial, as it was then thought, though oppoſed by many for ſeveral reaſons. This Club of Commonwealth's-Men laſted till about the 21ſt of February 1659; at which time the ſecluded Members being reſtored by General George Monke, all their models vaniſhed."

(9) Col. 591.

[I] By order of the King committed to the Tower of London for treaſonable deſigns and practices.] When he was ſeized, he was engaged in reducing his politics into ſhort and eaſy Aphoriſms, and had the written ſheets of that piece lying looſe upon the table before him. Finding that he was to be carried before the Council, he beg'd the favour, that he might ſtitch the ſheets together, which was granted. He had no time given him to take leave of any body, but was immediately conveyed to the Tower, where none were allowed to come to his ſight and ſpeech. He was examined by the Earl of Lauderdale, Sir George Carteret, and Sir Edward Walker; and notwithſtanding his apparent innocence, was ſtill detained a cloſe priſoner (10).

(10) Life of Harrington, page 30-34.

[K] Fell into an uncommon diſorder of imagination.] Among the acquaintance he made at Plymouth, one was Dr. Dunſtan, who adviſed him to take a preparation of Guaiacum in coffee, as a certain cure for the ſcurvy, with which he was then troubled. He drank of this liquor in great quantities every morning and evening. But after uſing it for ſome time, his ſiſters, to their no ſmall amazement, received no more anſwers to their letters. At length advice was brought them from his Landlady, that his fancy was much diſordered: Immediately one of them addreſs'd herſelf to the Earl of Bath, then chief Governor of Plymouth, and informed him of his priſoner's ſad condition. That Nobleman having procured a Warrant from the King for his releaſe, the Lady Aſhton and another of his ſiſters took their journey towards Plymouth, where they found their brother ſo changed in body and mind, that they ſcarce could perſuade themſelves, that it was the ſame perſon. He was reduced to a ſkeleton, not able to walk alone, ſlept very little, his imagination diſturbed, often fainted when he took his drink, and yet ſo fond of it, that he would by no means be adviſed to forbear it. Dr. Prujean, and other eminent Phyſicians greatly blamed Dr. Dunſtan's preſcriptions, giving their opinions under their hands, that Guaiacum and the other drying things, which he had adminiſtred to his patient in coffee, were enough of themſelves to beget melancholy or phrenzy, where there was no previous diſpoſition to it. A rumour at Plymouth, that Mr. Harrington had taken ſome drink, which would make any man mad in a month, the ſurlineſs of his Phyſician, and ſomething blab'd by a maid, who was put againſt his will to attend him, made his ſiſter ſuſpect, that he had foul play, leſt he ſhould write any more Oecanas. It is certain, that tho' his recovery was never perfect, he mended greatly as ſoon as he was perſuaded to abſtain from this liquor, and in leſs than a month he was able to bear the journey to London in a coach, where he was no ſooner arrived, but Sir John Skelton, Deputy Governor of Plymouth, who was then in town, paid him a viſit. The Lady Aſhton complaining to him, that ſhe had not timely notice of her brother's diſtemper, he proteſted, that he would have ſent her word of it, had not Dr. Dunſtan aſſured him, that he only counterfeited; and yet at the ſame time made him take ſtrong doſes of hellebore and other things. Mr. Harrington paſſed ſome time at Aſhted in Surrey to drink the Epſom-waters, by which he found no benefit. At London he was put wholly under the care of Dr. Prujean, who with all his art could afford little help to the weakneſs of his body, and none at all to the diſorder of his mind, to his dying day. He was allowed to diſcourſe of moſt things as rationally as any man, except his own diſtemper, fancying ſtrange things in the operation of his animal ſpirits, which he thought to tranſpire from him in the ſhape he was carried to London, where he married the daughter of Sir Marmaduke Dorrel of Buckinghamſhire. Towards the latter end of his life he was ſubject to the gout, and enjoyed little eaſe, but languiſhing for a good while, at laſt fell into a palſy, and died at Weſtminſter September the 7th 1677, and was interred in St. Margaret's Church on the ſouth-ſide of the altar, next to the grave of Sir Walter Ralegh, with an inſcription over him. Beſides the works already mentioned, he wrote ſeveral others [L]. A new edition of all his political works is now in the preſs.

ſhape of birds, of flies, of bees, or the like. And thoſe about him reported, that he talked much of good and evil ſpirits, and that he ſometimes argued ſo ſtrenuouſly, that this was no depraved imagination, that his Phyſician was often at a loſs for an anſwer. He would on ſuch occaſions compare himſelf to Democritus, who for his admirable diſcoveries in Anatomy was reckoned diſtracted by his fellow-citizens, till Hippocrates removed their miſtake. Mr. Toland found among his papers the beginning of a little Treatiſe written by himſelf, wherein he endeavours to prove thoſe perſons to be mad, who thought him ſo with reſpect to what he diſcourſed of nature, which he maintained to work mechanically or mathematically. It appears there, that his pretended viſions of Angels and Devils were nothing elſe but good and bad animal ſpirits; and that his flies and bees were only ſimilitudes, whereby he uſed to expreſs the various figures and forms of thoſe particles. I own, ſays Mr. Toland (11), that he might probably enough be much decayed in his underſtanding by reaſon of his great and long weakneſs of body; but I ſhall never be convinced, that he was delirious in that only inſtance, which they alledge; and to ſatisfy the learned in this point (which, in my opinion, is a memorable ſtory, that concerns them all) I ſhall ſubjoin his own diſcourſe to this Hiſtory.

(11) Life of Harrington, pag. 38.

[L] Beſides the works already mentioned, he wrote ſeveral others.] The Uſe and manner of Ballots: printed on one ſide of a ſheet of paper; in the middle of which is a cut repreſenting the ſeſſion of Magiſtrates belonging to a Commonwealth. Aphoriſms Political; London 1659, in 4to. in one ſheet and an half. They are in number ſeventy ſix. But the ſecond edition is in two ſheets and an half, and the Aphoriſms are in number one hundred and twenty. Brief Directions ſhewing how a fit and perfect model of popular Government may be made, found, or underſtood: London 1659, in two parts. The firſt contains ſeven models, the ſecond propoſeth a model of a Commonwealth fitted to the preſent ſtate of the nation, under five propoſitions or heads. Pour enclouer le Canon: or, the nailing of the Enemy's Artillery: London 1659, in one ſheet in 8vo. A Diſcourſe upon this Saying; The Spirit of the Nation is not yet to be truſted with Liberty, leſt it introduce Monarchy, or invade the Liberty of Conſcience. London, 1659, in two ſheets in 4to. A Propoſition in order to the propoſing of a Commonwealth or Democracy: printed on one ſide of a ſheet of paper. A Diſcourſe ſhewing, that the Spirit of Parliaments, with a Council in the Intervals, is not to be truſted for a Settlement, leſt it introduce Monarchy and Perſecution for Conſcience. London, 1659, in one ſheet and an half. To this are ſubjoined Certain Maxims calculated unto the preſent State of England, written by our Author. A Parallel of the Spirit of the People with the Spirit of Mr. Rogers: And an Appeal thereupon unto the Reader, whether the Spirit of the People, or the Spirit of Men, like Mr. Rogers, be fitted to be truſted with the Government. London, 1659, in one ſheet in 4to. This Mr. John Rogers was an Anabaptiſt, a ſeditious Enthuſiaſt, and a Fifth-Monarchy-Man. There was an anſwer publiſhed to Mr. Harrington's Parallel, without a date, intitled, Mr. Harrington's Parallel unparallel'd, or a Demonſtration upon it, and the Parable opened: in one ſheet in 4to. Valerius and Publicola: or the true Form of a Popular Commonwealth extracted ex puris Naturalibus. London, 1659, in five ſheets in 4to. Dated October 22, 1659. To this is added A ſufficient Anſwer to Mr. Stubbe his Letter to an Officer concerning a ſelect Senate, mentioned by them in their Propoſals to the late Parliament. This Letter of Mr. Stubbe was printed at London, 1659, in 4to. Theſe ſeven laſt pieces of Mr. Harrington, with his Aphoriſms Political, have been bound up together and publiſhed under the general title of Political Diſcourſes tending to the Introduction of a free and equal Commonwealth in England: London, 1660, in 4°, with the Author's picture before it. etch'd by Hollar. The Stumbling-block of Diſobedience and Rebellion cunningly imputed by P. H. unto Calvin, removed in a Letter to the ſaid P. H. from J. H. This was reprinted and anſwered by Dr. Peter Heylin in the third Part of his Certamen Epiſtolare, printed at London 1659, in 8°; which third Part is intitled, A Decertation about Forms of Government, the Power of the Spartan Ephori, and the Jewiſh Sanhedrim; managed Letter-wiſe between Peter Heylin D. D. and J. H. of the City of Weſtminſter, Eſq; Dr. Heylin's letter is dated from Lacy's Court in Abingdon, Decemb. 24. 1658. The Dr. ſtiles our author a generous and ingenious adverſary, of whoſe ſociety and friendſhip, ſays he, I ſhould count it no crime to be ambitious. Mr. Harrington likewiſe wrote The Rota; or Model of a free State or equal Commonwealth, once propoſed and debated in brief, and to be again more at large propoſed to, and debated by a free and open Society of Gentlemen. London, 1660, in four ſheets in 4to. It was publiſhed in the beginning of February $16\frac{59}{60}$. In anſwer to this came out a ludicrous cenſure, pretended to be made by the Rota, printed in two ſheets in the latter end of March 1660. And a little before there was a ſheet printed in 4to intitled, Decrees and Orders of the Committee of Safety of the Commonwealth of Oceana. He publiſhed alſo, The Ways and Means, whereby an equal and laſting Commonwealth may be ſuddenly introduced and perfectly founded, with the free Conſent and actual Confirmation of the whole People of England. London, 1660, in one ſheet in 4to. To this was added, The humble Petition of divers well affected Perſons, delivered the ſixth day of July, 1659. It was delivered by Mr. Henry Nevil. He tranſlated from Latin into Engliſh two of Virgil's Eclogues, and two books of his Æneis, which he thus intitled, An Eſſay upon two of Virgil's Eclogues and two of his Æneis, towards the Tranſlation of the whole. London, 1658, in 8vo; and in 1659 was printed his tranſlation of the third, fourth, fifth, and ſixth books of the Æneis. T.

(a) A city of Germany on the river Mein.

HARTUNGUS (JOHN) born at Miltemberg (a) in the year 1505, ſtudied firſt in his native place, and afterwards in the Univerſity of Heidelberg. He entered afterwards into the army, and ſerved in Hungary againſt the Turks; but ſome time after he entered again into the agreeable ſervice of the Muſes, and was made Profeſſor of the Greek Tongue in the Univerſity of Heidelberg. He acquitted himſelf with glory of that function during fifteen years; nor would he have left his poſt had not the Proteſtant Religion been eſtabliſhed in the Palatinate in the year 1546. This alteration obliged him to look for another poſt: he obtained one at Friburg in the Briſgaw, and was ſo well ſatisfied with it, that he reſigned it only with his laſt breath. He was honourably diſtinguiſhed amongſt the Profeſſors of Friburg, and had a great many pupils. He read Lectures on Homer, and on ſome other Poets, and wrote pretty good books [A]. He

[A] He wrote pretty good books.] Prolegomena's and notes on the three firſt books of the Odyſſea. Chiliades locorum Homericorum: Decuriæ locorum quorundam memorabilium (1). He tranſlated Apollonius's Poem on the

(1) Mel. Adam, in Vitis Philoſ. pag. 301.

(b) Taken from Melchior Adam, in Vitis Philoſoph. Germanor. pag. 300, 301.

He died in the ſame city June the 16th 1579, after he had taught polite Literature there during thirty three years. It appears by the epitaph he compoſed for himſelf, that in teaching the youth he ſuffered a great deal, and learnt much (b) [B].

the Argonauts into Latin. This tranſlation is not much eſteemed: Here follows the judgment, which a good Critic (2) paſſed upon it. Miratus ſum hominem eruditum, & in Græca præſertim lingua cum laude verſatum ita tranſtuliſſe [Apollonium] ut non paulò facilius ſit Apollonium ſua, hoc eſt Græca, lingua aſſequi, quam ea qua eum Hartungus loquentem fecit, Latina. i. e. "I wonder that a learned man, who had gained "ſome reputation, eſpecially by his ſkill in the Greek "tongue, ſhould have ſo tranſlated Apollonius, "that it is much eaſier to underſtand him in his "own tongue, that is to ſay, in Greek, than in that, "which Hartungus made him ſpeak, that is to ſay, "in Latin." Immediately after this he takes notice of ſome errors that are in this tranſlation, and hints that he could point out a great many more. Infinitum eſſet ea perſequi, in quibus longiſſimè à ſententia Apollonii aberrarit (3). i. e. "It would be endleſs to point "out all the paſſages, in which he has entirely miſ-"taken Apollonius's ſenſe."

(2) Janus Rutgerſius, Variarum Lection. lib. 6. cap. 6. p. 562.

(3) Idem, ibid. pag. 566.

[B] The Epitaph he compoſed for himſelf ſhews that . . . . he ſuffered . . . . and learnt much.] It deſerves to be tranſcribed.

Πολλὰ παθὼν, κ᾽ πολλὰ μαθὼν ἐν παιδοδιδάκλῳ,
Ἔνθα δὲ νῦν σὺν Θεῷ ἡσύχιος.

The Latin tranſlation of it, which we meet with in Melchior Adam (4), is very indifferent; it does not in the leaſt anſwer the Author's deſign, which was to declare that his Profeſſorſhip was a very heavy burthen to him. I do not tranſcribe the other Greek Epitaph, which Hartungus made for himſelf; you may find it in Melchior Adam. I am perſuaded that Lorenzo Craſſo would have put him in his Catalogue of Greek Poets, if he had known what has been juſt now obſerved. This Italian's omiſſion makes me remember, that Mr. Baillet has not given Hartungus a place amongſt the Critics.

(4) It is as follows. Multa tuli, didici, docui dum fata ſinebant, Mortuus in ſumma nunc requieſco Deo. i. e. "I have "ſuffered, learnt, "and taught a "great deal, as "long as fate "would permit "me; and now I "reſt with the "ſupreme God." It ſhould be, I have ſuffered and learnt a great deal, whilſt I was teaching the youth, &c.

☞HARVEY (WILLIAM), an Engliſh Phyſician in the ſeventeenth Century, famous for the diſcovery of the circulation of the blood, was eldeſt ſon of Thomas Harvey (a) Gent. by Joan Halke his wife, and was born at Folkſton in Kent April the 2d 1578. At ten years of age he was ſent to a grammar ſchool at Canterbury, from whence at fourteen he was removed to Gonvil and Caius College in Cambridge. At nineteen he travelled into France and Italy; and at twenty three he ſtudied Phyſic at Padua under Euſtac. Radius, John Tho. Minadous, and Hieron. Fabr. ab Aquapendente. At twenty four he became Doctor of Phyſic and Chirurgery in that Univerſity; and ſoon after returning into England (b), was incorporated Doctor of Phyſic in Cambridge, practiſed Phyſic in London, and married (c). In 1604 he was admitted Candidate of the College of Phyſicians in London; and three years after elected Fellow (d). Upon the death of Dr. Davies he was appointed Lecturer of Anatomy and Chirurgery in that College (e), and on the 16th, 17th, and 18th of April 1616 he read a courſe of Lectures in Anatomy there [A], in which he opened his diſcovery relating to the circulation of the blood; which after a variety of experiments publicly exhibited, he communicated to the world in his Exercitatio Anatomica de Motu Cordis & Sanguinis, printed at Francfort 1628 in 4to [B]. December the 3d 1627 he was choſen one of the Elects of the

(a) Dr. Charles Goodal's Epiſtle Dedicatory to his Hiſtorical Account of the College of Phyſicians Proceedings againſt Empyricks, &c. London 1684 in 4to.

(b) Wood, Faſti Oxon. vol. 2. col. 6. 2d edit. London 1721.

(c) Ibid.

(d) Goodall, ubi ſupra.

(e) Idem, ibid.

[A] On the 16th, 17th, and 18th of April 1616, he read a courſe of Lectures in Anatomy there.] The original manuſcript of thoſe Lectures is extant in the valuable Muſæum of Sir Hans Sloan, Bart. and Preſident of the Royal Society, who favoured us with a ſight of it. It is intitled, Prælectiones Anatom. univerſal. per me Gulielmum Harveium, Medicum Londinenſem, Anato. & Chirurg. Profeſſorem. An. Dom. 1616. Anno ætatis 37. Prælect. Apr. 16, 17, 18.

[B] His Exercitatio Anatomica de Motu Cordis & Sanguinis, printed at Frankfort 1628 in 4*to.*] It was dedicated to King Charles I, and there follows another Dedication to Dr. Argent, Preſident, and to the reſt of the College of Phyſicians London, in which he obſerves, that he had frequently before in his Anatomical Lectures declared his new opinion concerning the motion and uſe of the Heart, and the circulation of the Blood; and for above nine years had confirmed it before the College by ocular demonſtration, and illuſtrated it by reaſons and arguments, and defended it from the objections of the moſt ſkillful Anatomiſts; and now thought proper to publiſh it to the world in a profeſſed treatiſe upon that ſubject. Meam de motu & uſu Cordis & Circuitu Sanguinis ſententiam antea ſæpius in Prælectionibus meis Anatomicis aperui novam; ſed jam per novem & amplius annos multis ocularibus demonſtrationibus in conſpectu veſtro confirmatam, rationibus & argumentis illuſtratam, & ab objectionibus doctiſſimorum & peritiſſimorum Anatomicorum liberatam, toties ab omnibus deſideratam, à quibuſdam efflagitatam, in lucem & conſpectum omnium hoc libello produximus. He obſerves afterwards, that this book had been finiſhed ſome years before: Libellum hunc per aliquot ab hinc retro annos perfectum. It was attacked by James Primeroſe in his Exercitationes & Animadverſiones in Librum de Motu Cordis & Circulatione Sanguinis, contra Harveium, printed at London, 1639, in 4to; and by Æmilius Pariſanus in his Refutatio Harvæi de Motu Cordis & Sanguinis in Animali, printed at Leyden, 1639, in 4to. In anſwer to this laſt book, Dr. George Ent publiſhed at London, 1641, in 4to, Apologia pro Circulatione ſanguinis contra Æmilium Pariſanum. It has been aſſerted by ſome, that Father Paul the Venetian was the firſt diſcoverer of the circulation; and Honoratus Faber profeſſed himſelf to be the author of that invention. But the pretences in favour of the firſt of theſe have been refuted by Dr. Walter Charlton, in his Anatomical Lectures read in the Theatre of the College of Phyſicians in 168$\frac{3}{4}$, and publiſhed in 1683. And Honoratus Faber has been confuted by Jo. Alph. Borelli, in his Hiſtoria & Metereologia Incendii Ætnæi, wherein he gives this ſhort account about Faber's pretenſions: Cum verò ſit omnino incredibile & impoſſibile hominem nobilem, religioſum, & pium, ea quæ vera non ſunt, aſſerere voluiſſe, nil aliud in ejus excuſationem dicendum reſtat, niſi quod cum ingenio velociſſimo præditus ſit, a celeritate ipſâ, quâ aliena legit, & propria ſcribit, multoties decipiatur. Quod alias ei contigiſſe non erit ſupervacaneum oſtendere, ut inde pateat ſolenne ei eſſe Autores alicujus nominis furti inſimulare, hâc ſolummodo de cauſa, quia curſim & oſcitanter eorum opera legit. Si enim patienter & debitâ attentione dignatus fuiſſet legere ea, quæ ſpatio 38 annorum edita fuerant, & vulgatiſſima per univerſam Europam erant, proculdubio non ſcripſiſſet anno 1666 Lib. primo de Homine Prop. 2. ſe Circulationem ſanguinis inveniſſe & docuiſſe ab anno 1638, antequam Gul. Harveii Exercitatio Anatomica de Motu Cordis prodiret; quem pariter multa Fabri inventa in ſuis Exercitationibus inſeruiſſe affirmat: omnes enim ſciunt Harveium an. Dom. 1628 Francofurti typis Gual. Fitzeri ſuam Exercitationem primum edidiſſe; ſcilicet decem annos antequam Cl. Fabri ſanguinis circulationem docuiſſet. Mr. Wood tells us (*), that Dr. George Morley, Biſhop

(*) Athen. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 461.

the College of Physicians; and December the 30th 1629 he resigned the place of Treasurer of the College (f). In 1632 (g) he was made Physician to King Charles I, as he had been before to King James I (h); and adhering to the Royal Cause upon the breaking out of the civil wars, attended his Majesty at the battle of Edge-Hill, and thence to Oxford, where he was incorporated Doctor of Physic December the 7th 1642 (i). In 1645 he was elected Warden of Merton College in that University (k) by vertue of the King's letters sent to the society of that house for that purpose; but the year following, when the garrison of Oxford surrendered to the Parliament, he left that office, and retired to London (l). In 1651 his book intitled, Exercitationes de Generatione Animalium; quibus

(f) From the Register of the College.

(g) Wood, ubi supra.

(h) Goodal, ubi supra.

(i) Wood, Fasti Oxon. vol. 2. col. 6.

(k) Idem, Hist. & Antiquitat. Universitat. Oxonienf. lib. 2. pag. 86.

(l) Idem, Fasti Oxon. ubi supra.

of Winchester, and Dr. John Pell used to say, that Mr. Walter Warner, an eminent Mathematician, born in Leicestershire, who died in the latter end of the year 1640, "made it appear in a manuscript of his "composition, that the blood in a body circulates, "which he communicating to the immortal Harvey, "he took his first hint thence concerning that matter, "which he afterwards published as the first inventor." Dr. Freind (1) observes, that as the discovery of the circulation was entirely owing to our Author, "so he "has explained it with all the clearness imaginable; "and though much has been since written upon that "subject, I may venture to say his own book is the "shortest, the plainest, and the most convincing of "any; as we may be satisfied, if we look into the "many Apologies written in defence of the circulation, or have the patience to read the tedious uninstructive treatise of Raymond Vieussens de Sanguine & Corde. This new doctrine of the circulation, however proved beyond all doubt in a demonstrative way, met with great opposition; and "the inventor of it was obliged to bear the attack of "numberless adversaries, who generally in their answers shewed more a spirit of contradiction, than "any force of reasoning." Dr. Wotton tells us (2), that "this discovery, first made perfectly intelligible "by Dr. Harvey, is of so very great importance to "shew the communication of all the humours of the "body, each with other, that as soon as men were "perfectly satisfied, that it was not to be contested, "which they were in a few years, a great many put "in for the prize, unwilling that Dr. Harvey should "go away with all the glory. Vander Linden, "who published a most exact edition of Hippocrates in "Holland about thirty years ago, has taken a great "deal of pains to prove, that Hippocrates knew the "circulation of the blood, and that Dr. Harvey only "revived it." Dr. Wotton then remarks (3), that the first step towards the discovery was the finding that the whole mass of blood passes through the lungs by the pulmonary artery and vein. The first, who appears to have had a distinct idea of this matter was Michael Servetus, a Spanish Physician, who was burnt for Arianism at Geneva. In his book intitled, Christianismi Restitutio, printed in 1553, he clearly asserts, that the blood passes through the lungs from the left to the right ventricle of the heart, and not through the partition, which divides the two ventricles, as was at that time commonly believed. Servetus's words are as follow: Vitalis Spiritus in sinistro Cordis ventriculo suam Originem habet, juvantibus maximè pulmonibus ad ipsius generationem. Est spiritus tenuis, caloris vi elaboratus, flavo colore, igneâ potentiâ, ut sit quasi ex puriore sanguine lucidus, vapor. Generatur ex factâ in pulmone mixtione inspirati aeris cum elaborato subtili sanguine, quem dexter ventriculus sinistro communicat. Fit autem communicatio hæc non per parietem cordis medium, ut vulgo creditur, sed magno artificio a dextro cordis ventriculo, longo per pulmones ductu, agitatur sanguis subtilis; a pulmonibus præparatur; flavus ejecitur, & à venâ arteriosâ in arteriam venosam transfunditur; deinde in ipsâ arteriâ venosâ inspirato aeri miscetur, & exspiratione à fuligine repurgatur; atque ita tandem à sinistro Cordis ventriculo totum mixtum per diastolen attrahitur, apta supellex ut fiat spiritus vitalis. Realdus Columbus of Cremona was the next, who said any thing of it in his Anatomy printed at Venice 1559 in Folio, and at Paris 1572 in 8vo, and afterwards elsewhere. There (4) he asserts the same circulation through the lungs, that Servetus had done before; but says, that no man had ever taken notice of it before himself, or had written any thing about it; which shews, that he did not copy from Servetus; unless one should say, that he stole the notion without mentioning Servetus's name; which is injurious, since in these matters the same thing may be, and very often is observed by several persons, who never acquainted each other with their discoveries. But Columbus is much more particular; for he says (5), that the veins lodge the whole mass of blood in the vena cava, which carries it into the heart, whence it cannot return the same way that it went. From the right ventricle it is thrown into the lungs by the pulmonary artery, where the valves are so placed as to hinder its return that way into the heart; and so it is thrown into the left ventricle, and by the aorta again, when enlivened by the air, diffused through the whole body. Some years after appeared Andreas Cæsalpinus, who printed his Peripatetical Questions at Venice in 4to in 1571, and afterwards with his Medical Questions at the same place in 1593. He is rather more particular than Columbus, especially in examining how arteries and veins join at their extremities; which he supposes to be by opening their mouths into each other; and he uses the word circulation in his Peripatetical Questions, which had never been used in that sense before. He also takes notice, that the blood swells below the ligature in veins, and urges that in confirmation of his opinion. At last Dr. Harvey published his discourse De Motu Sanguinis. "This notion, "says Dr. Wotton (6), had only been occasionally and "slightly treated of by Columbus and Cæsalpinus, "who themselves, in all probability, did not know "the consequence of what they asserted; and therefore it was never applied to other purposes, either "to shew the uses of the other viscera, or to explain "the natures of diseases. Neither, for any thing that "appears at this day, had they made any numbers of "experiments, which were necessary to explain their "doctrine, and to clear it from opposition. All this "Dr. Harvey undertook to do, and with indefatigable pains traced the visible veins and arteries "throughout the body in their whole journey from "and to the heart, so as to demonstrate, even to the "most incredulous, not only that the blood circulates "through the lungs and heart, but the very manner "how, and the time in which that great work is performed. When he had once proved, that the motion of the blood was so rapid as we now find it is, "then he drew such consequences from it, as shewed "that he throughly understood his arguments, and "would leave little at least, as little as he could, to "future industry to discover in that particular part "of Anatomy. This gave him a just title to the "honour of so noble a discovery, since what his predecessors had said before him was not enough "understood to form just notions from their words." Dr. Wotton then remarks (7), that one may observe how gradually this discovery, as all abstruse truths of human disquisition, was explained to the world. Hippocrates first talked of the usual motion of the blood. Plato said, that the heart was the original of the veins and of the blood, that was carried about every member of the body. Aristotle also somewhere speaks of a recurrent motion of the blood. Still all this was only opinion and belief. It was rational, and became men of their genius's; but not having as yet been made evident by experiments, it might as easily be denied as affirmed. Servetus first saw, that the blood passes through the lungs. Columbus went further, and shewed the uses of the valves and trap-doors of the heart, which let the blood in and out of their respective vessels, but not the self same road. Thus the way was just open, when Dr. Harvey came, who built upon the first foundations.

(1) History of Physick, Part. 1. pag. 235. edit. London 1725.

(2) Reflections upon ancient and modern Learning, cap. 18. pag. 207. edit. London 1694 in 8vo.

(3) Ibid. pag. 211.

(4) Anat. lib. 7. pag. 325. edit. Paris.

(5) Ibid. p. 330. and lib. 11. pag. 411.

(6) Ubi supra, pag. 214.

(7) Pag. 215.

T

quibus accedunt quædam de Partu, de Membranis ac Humoribus Uteri, & de Conceptione, was printed at London in 4to [C]. In 1654 he, though abſent, was choſen Preſident of the College of Phyſicians, but refuſed that poſt on the 30th of September that year. July the 28th 1655 he ſettled his eſtate in Kent on that College (m), and died June the 3d 1657, in the eightieth year of his age. He was interred in the Church of Hempſted in Eſſex, where a monument is erected to his memory [D]. He deſigned to have publiſhed ſeveral treatiſes, particularly, I. " A Practice of Phyſick conformable to his " Theſis of the Circulation of the Blood." II. Tractatus de Pulmonum uſu & motu ; de eventilatione omni, aeriſque neceſſitate & uſu ; de variis & differentibus organis hujus cauſâ in Animalibus factis. III. Tractatus de quantitate ſanguinis in unoquoque aut ſingulis pulſationibus protruſâ, & quando plus & quando minus, & quâ de cauſâ ; itidem de Circuitûs cauſis, utilitatibns, & ſanguinis Arcanis. IV. Obſervationes de uſu Lienis. V. Exercitationes de Reſpirationis cauſis, organis, & uſu. VI. Obſervationes de motivis Organis Animalium & de Muſculorum Fabricâ. VII. Tractatus de Animalium amore, libidine, & coitu. VIII. Obſervationes Medicinales de Herniæ carnoſæ curatione, aliiſque curationibus præter vulgi ſententiam & methodum fæliciter peractis. IX. De Nutritionis modo. X. Hiſtoria multorum Animalium, præſertim Inſectorum, ab inconſpicuis præ exiguitate principiis & ſeminibus (quaſi atomis in aere volitantibus) à ventis huc illuc ſparſis ac diſſeminatis, ortorum. XI. Anatomia Medica ad Medicinæ uſum maximè accommodata, ubi ex multis Diſſectionibus corporum ægrotorum graviſſimis & miris affectionibus confectorum ; quomodo & qualiter partes interiores in ſitu, magnitudine, conſtitutione, figurâ, ſubſtantiâ, & reliquis accidentibus ſenſibilibus a naturali formâ & apparentiâ permutentur, & quam variis modis & miris afficiantur, enarrare ſuſciperet. In a letter to Walter Moyle Eſq; (n) we are informed the Phyſician, who, has a part

(m) From the Regiſter of the College.

(n) Printed in the Account of Mr. Moyle and his Writings, pag. 26, 27. prefixed to The whole Works of Walter Moyle Eſq; that were publiſhed by himſelf, edit. London 1727.

To make this work yet the eaſier, the valves of the veins, which were diſcovered by Father Paul the Venetian, had not long before been explained by Fabricius ab Aquapendente ; whence the circulation was yet more clearly demonſtrated. The very learned and ingenious Dr. Thomas Pellet, now Preſident of the College of Phyſicians, London, in his Anniverſary Oration before that College (8) obſerves, that by this diſcovery the moſt important ſervice was done to the practice of Phyſic ; and pays a compliment to our Author in very elegant verſe, telling us, that he was the firſt, who taught,

(8) Oratio Anniverſaria habita in Amphitheatro Collegii Regalis Medicorum Lond. in laudem Benemeritorum & benemerentium de Medicina, die xix Octobris anno 1719. edit. London in 4to.

Quâ ratione cibi concocti lacteus humor
Declivis fertur, donec per cæca viarum
Labatur tacitis in ſtagna argentea vivis.
Inde per anguſtum tendens iter, oſtia lævi
Pectoris evadit, venamque irrumpit apertam,
Sanguine miſcendus, motuque rubeſcere diſcit.
Tum volvendo ruens per dextri limina Cordis
Pectoris irrigui gelidas adlabitur auras,
Floridus inde redit lento per devia paſſu
Exultatque fores cordis pulſare ſiniſtras.
Nec mora, per totum trepidat ſe didere corpus
Extremoſque artus, unde impete fertur in Orbem,
Purpureos volvens ſua per veſtigia fluctus.
Quoque modo vitæ molecula prima capeſſit
Paulatim vires, hominiſque adipiſcitur auctus.

[C] In 1651 his book, intitled, Exercitationes de Generatione Animalium &c. was printed at London in 4*to.*] It was dedicated by Dr. George Ent to the Preſident and College of Phyſicians in London. There have been ſeveral editions of it ; and it has been tranſlated into Engliſh. In this work, after our author has given the anatomy of the parts ſerving for generation in the hen, he acquaints us with the formation and growth of the egg, and afterwards with the ſeveral parts whereof it conſiſts. He then proceeds to give an account how the chick is formed, which he obſerved by a daily inſpection of the eggs during the time of incubation ; and was the firſt, who diſcovered, that the original of the chick was from the Cicatricula. He then gives an account in what order the ſeveral parts appear, and confutes a multitude of errors delivered by former writers, proving that the punctum ſaliens is the heart; that the blood is not formed by the liver, becauſe its Parenchyma is formed after, and of the blood, and grows to the blood-veſſels ; nor yet by the heart, becauſe that is not in being till ſome time after the blood. He proves that all the Viſcera at their firſt formation appear white ; that the veins are the firſt conſpicuous foundation, as it were, of the whole body ; that the diviſion of the parts into ſpermatical and ſanguineous is ridiculous, ſince all come from the ſame original. He delivers an account of the parts ſerving for generation in deer, and how the Fœtus is formed. He acquaints us, that nothing is to be found in utero for a conſiderable time after coition ; and how analagous conception is to an egg, and that it is ſome time in utero, before it is affixed to it. He takes notice of ſeveral memorable things concerning the generation of other animals, both oviparous and viviparous. In ſpeaking of the formation of the human Fœtus, he delivers ſeveral curious obſervations made on abortions of ſeveral ages ; as alſo inſtances of Superfœtation, Hermaphrodites, of a Fœtus found in Tuba Uteri, &c. When he treats de partu, he gives very memorable inſtances, to ſhew how much the Fœtus conduces to its own birth. Beſides theſe, there are ſeveral remarkable obſervations ſcattered through the whole book ; as de partu difficili, de gravidatione falſâ, de ulcere uteri, de uteri procidentiâ, &c. as alſo de uteri membranis, humoribus, placentâ, de conceptione, de calido innato, de humido primigenio, &c. and of his cure of a Sarcocele of that bigneſs, that none durſt undertake the cure either by cutting or otherwiſe ; which he happily performed by tying the artery, and thereby depriving it of nouriſhment ; by which means it was afterwards eaſily extirpated.

[D] Where a monument was erected to his memory.] Upon it is the following inſcription.

" GULIELMUS HARVEIUS,
" Cui tam colendo Nomini aſſurgunt omnes Academiæ ;
" Qui diuturnum ſanguinis motum poſt tot annorum
" Millia primus invenit ;
" Orbi ſalutem, ſibi immortalitatem
" Conſequutus.
" Qui ortum & generationem Animalium ſolus omnium
" A Pſeudophiloſophiâ liberavit.
" Cui debet
" Quod ſibi innotuit humanum Genus, ſeipſam Medicina.
" Sereniſſ. Majeſtat. Jacobo & Carolo Britanniarum
" Monarchis Archiatrus & chariſſimus.
" Collegii Med. Lond. Anatomes & Chirurgiæ Profeſſor
" Aſſiduus & feliciſſimus :
" Quibus illuſtrem conſtruxit Bibliothecam,
" Suoque dotavit & ditavit Patrimonio.
" Tandem
" Poſt triumphales
" Contemplando, ſanando, inveniendo
" Sudores
" Varias domi foriſque ſtatuas,
" Quum totum circuit Microcoſmum,
" Medicinæ Doctor & Medicorum,
" Improles obdormivit
" III Junii anno ſalutis CIↃIↃCLVII, Ætat. LXXX.
" Annorum & Famæ ſatur. T.

part in the Dialogue in Mr. Henry Nevil's Plato Redivivus, was deſigned to repreſent Dr. Harvey, who relieved his abſtruſer ſtudies by converſations in politics. Mr. John Greaves (o) relates a converſation between himſelf and our author, upon the ſubject of Mr. Greaves and his company's having continued three hours in the greateſt of the Egyptian Pyramids; which Dr. Harvey was extremely ſurprized at, imagining there would be a difficulty of Reſpiration there.

(o) Pyramidographia: or a Deſcription of the Pyramids in Ægypt. pag. 101, 102. edit. London 1646, in 8vo.

HAY, a Scots family, which owes the firſt origin of its Nobility to a very illuſtrious action. It is reported that the Danes having invaded Scotland under the reign of Kenneth III, about the year 990, there was a battle fought between them and the Scots (a), in which the latter having been immediately routed, retired towards Perth. They were obliged to paſs through a very narrow way between the mountains and the river Tay. A countryman, who happened to be there with his two ſons, made himſelf maſter of that narrow paſſage, encouraged them that ran away to return again to the enemy, and ſtopt thoſe that would continue their flight. He did more, for he armed himſelf with the firſt weapon he met, and accompanied by his two ſons, both armed with a piece of their plough, he fell with ſo much fury upon the Danes, and by his example did ſo much raiſe the courage of thoſe that were running away, that the Scots gained the victory. The enemy was routed in his turn, and Scotland prevented from the ſlavery to which the Danes deſigned to reduce it. This countryman, who was afterwards known under the name of Hay, is the founder of the family I ſpeak of. He and his ſons ſignalized themſelves in the moſt extraordinary manner during the fight; they put the enemy under the moſt terrible conſternation, and made a very great havock wherever they fought. This glorious action, by which they ſaved their country, was rewarded as it deſerved [A], and ſince that time this family has been one of the moſt illuſtrious in the Kingdom. It has produced ſeveral branches [B], and ſeveral perſons of very great merit [C]. The Earl of Errol is at preſent the head of it; he is married to Anne Drummond, the Earl of Perth's ſiſter (b).

(a) The place where this battle was fought is called Licurtia.

(b) Taken from ſome Memoirs communicated to the bookſeller.

[A] This glorious action was rewarded as it deſerved.] Hay was conducted by the whole army to the King's palace, and in the aſſembly of the Parliament he was raiſed to the higheſt degree of Nobility; the King gave him a conſiderable part of the enemy's ſpoil, and granted him in land the whole flight of a falcon; that is to ſay, they let a falcon fly out, and obſerved the place where it reſted; and all the lands where the falcon began his flight to the place where it reſted, were given to Hay. That laſt place is ſtill called Falcon's Stone (*). By this means Hay was poſſeſſed of all the fruitful lands in all Scotland, ſituated on the ſpot where the battle was fought, along the banks of the River Tay. King Kenneth gave him a coat of arms, which was Argent with three ſcutcheons gules; to intimate that the courage of three men had ſaved the Kingdom (1).

(*) Leſley obſerves, that in his time a ſtone called the Falcon was ſtill to be ſeen near Dundee in Angusſhire. Leſlæus, De Morib. & Reb. geſt. Scotor. lib. 5. pag. m. 197.

(1) Taken from the ſame Memoirs.

[B] This family . . . has produced ſeveral branches.] Which have ſpread not only through England and Scotland, but alſo in France, and particularly in Normandy (2). I mention only the branches of the Earls of Tweedale and Kinnoul, which do ſtill ſubſiſt (3).

(2) Mr. Peliſſon, Hiſtoire de l'Academie Françoiſe, pag. m. 246. ſays: Paul Hay, Sieur du Chatelet, was of the ancient family of the Hay's in Britany, which boaſts to be deſcended ſix hundred years ago from that of the Earls of Carliſle, one of the moſt illuſtrious families in Scotland.

(3) Taken from the ſame Memoirs.

[C] . . . . Several perſons of very great merit.] We can ſay nothing of the condition in which that family was from the reign of Kenneth III, to that of Robert Bruce: for Edward I King of England making an advantage of the diviſions of Scotland, when Robert Bruce and John Baliol diſputed with each other the Crown, invaded the Kingdom, and carried away not only all public Records, but alſo all the papers of private families. Thoſe of the family of the Hay's were taken away as well as thoſe of a great many others. During that civil war Robert Hay followed Robert Bruce's party with a perfect fidelity, and did him ſuch great ſervices, that he conferred upon him, as a reward, the office of hereditary High-Conſtable of Scotland in the year 1310: and that he might ſupport his dignity with a ſuitable ſplendor the ſame Prince gave him ſeveral lands in the Shire of Aberdeen. This office has continued ever ſince in that family, and is now enjoyed by the Earl of Errol, who is reckoned the nineteenth of his family, who poſſeſſed that office. NICHOLAS Lord HAY was killed in the year 1332 with two hundred and eighty Gentlemen of his family, in the battle of Duplin, in King David Bruce's party againſt Edward Baliol. DAVID Lord HAY his ſucceſſor accompanied King David Bruce in the war againſt the Engliſh, and was killed in the battle of Durham in the year 1344. THOMAS Lord HAY married King Robert IId's daughter, with whom he had the Barony of Inchtuhill in the Shire of Perth, about the year 1376. WILLIAM Lord HAY was choſen in the year 1423 with ſome other Noblemen, to conſult how to reſtore King James I to his liberty, who was kept a priſoner in England. He ſucceeded in this affair, and was ſoon after created Earl of Errol. WILLIAM HAY Earl of Errol, Lord High-Conſtable of Scotland, and Sheriff of the Shire of Aberdeen, attended King James IV in the battle of Floudown in the year 1513, and was killed there with his Prince, and twenty ſeven Gentlemen of his name. FRANCIS HAY Earl of Errol having conſtantly followed Queen Mary's party, and continued in the Roman Catholick Religion, ſuffered great misfortunes. His houſes were demoliſhed, his eſtate plundered, and himſelf impriſoned. But he was in favour under King James VIth, Queen Mary's ſon. He was one of the Scots Lords who were ſent into England in the year 1604, to ſettle the union of the two Crowns. His ſon aſſiſted at Charles I's Coronation in Scotland in the year 1633. GILBERT HAY Earl of Errol had a great ſhare in Charles I'ſts favour, and made a great figure in the Parliament at Edinburgh at the Reſtoration of Charles II. JOHN HAY, Earl of Errol, now Lord High-Conſtable of Scotland, is his ſon (4).

(4) Taken from the ſame Memoirs.

HAY (JOHN) a Scots Jeſuit, entered into the Society of the Jeſuits in the year 1566 (a), and paſſed his Noviciate at Rome, where he alſo made the fourth vow. The place where he appeared chiefly was the College of Tournon, in which he taught Divinity, Mathematics, and the Hebrew tongue. He died May the 21ſt 1607 at Pontamouſſon, where he was Chancellor of the Univerſity. He applied himſelf very much to controverſies, and wrote ſeveral books againſt the Proteſtants [A]. He had alſo a diſpute

(a) According to Southwell, Bibliotheca Script. Societ. Jeſu, pag. 459. for Father Alegambe ſays it was in the year 1562, and not in 1566.

[A] He wrote ſeveral Books againſt the Proteſtants.] A Collection of Queſtions to the Miniſters. He compoſed this in the Scots language, according to Father Alegambe, who adds that it was tranſlated into French by Michael Coyſſard. A Vindication of theſe Queſtions. He compoſed it in French according to Father Alegambe: but it is a miſtake, for John Hay aſſerts in his Preface, that he wrote it in Latin, and that it was diſpute by word of mouth at Straſburg with Pappus, and with John Sturmius (b). Father Alegambe deſerves to be a little cenſured (c). We ought not to take this John Hay for the Jeſuit of that name who was baniſhed by a decree of the Parliament of Paris [B]. They both pretended to be deſcended from the family of the HAYS (d), which I have mentioned in the foregoing article.

(b) Taken from Alegambe, Biblioth. Script. Societ. Jesu, p. 248.

(c) See the remark [A].

(d) See the Defenſe des Demandes de Jean Hay.

tranſlated into French by ſome of the Jeſuits pupils. This Vindication was written againſt a Libel of James Pineton of Chambrun, a Preacher at Niſmes, and printed at Lyons in the year 1586. It appears from the Dedication, dated July 2d 1585, that it was five years ſince the Author had begun to read public Lectures of Divinity at Tournon. Antimonium ad Reſponſa Bezæ. " A vomit againſt Beza's Anſwer." Diſputatio contra Miniſtrum anonymum Nemauſenſem. " A Diſputation " againſt an anonymous Miniſter of Niſmes." His Helleborum Joanni Serrano " A Purge for John de Ser- " res," which was found among his papers, is kept at Rome with the Records belonging to the Society (1). This is all that the Bibliographers of the Jeſuits tell us: they did not know that John Hay had actually publiſhed a Book againſt de Serres, namely an Anſwer to the ſecond Anti-Jeſuit of that Miniſter (2). John Hay's other works are Scholia brevia in Bibliothecam ſanctam Sixti Senenſis: i. e. " Short Obſerva- " tions on Sixtus Senenſis's ſacred Library;" and a Latin Tranſlation of ſome Letters of the Jeſuits written from Japan and Peru. It was printed at Antwerp in the year 1605, in 8vo. See Father Alegambe.

(1) Southwell, Biblioth. Script. Societ. Jesu, pag. 459.

(2) See the Defenſe des Demandes, at the end of the anſwer to the Preface.

[B] The Jeſuit of that name who was baniſhed by a Decree of the Parliament of Paris.] His name was ALEXANDER HAY. " He was found guilty of ſpeak- " ing ſeditiouſly againſt the King, ſince the City of " Paris had been forced to ſubmit to his Majeſty; he " went ſo far as to declare that if the King ever paſſed " before their College (of the Jeſuits) he would throw " himſelf headlong out of the window upon him to " break his neck by the fall." This is what we read in Mezerai's large Hiſtory (3). The Author of the Anticoton will tell us the date of the Parliament's Decree. Informations were made againſt Alexander Hayes a Scots Jeſuit, who had taught publickly, that men muſt diſſemble, and obey the King for a time artfully, ſaying often theſe words, Jeſuita eſt omnis homo: (a Jeſuit is a man of all parties). This Jeſuit was alſo charged with ſaying, that if the King happened to paſs by their College, he wiſhed he might fall out of the window to break the King's neck. For which reaſon a Decree was pronounced by the Court (of Parliament) January the 10th 1595, by which the ſaid Hayes was baniſhed for ever, and commanded to keep his baniſhment upon pain of being hanged and ſtrangled, without any further tryal (4). The Author of the Butter-women's Thanks ſays the ſame, and then adds (5), that this Jeſuit, having ſince repeated and confirmed the ſame words at Prague, the greateſt men in the Kingdom petitioned to have him ſent into France; but it was anſwered, that he had ſwallowed a meſs of water-gruel, which was not thoroughly boiled, and he was found dead as ſuddenly as the Provoſt of the Marſhals of Pluviers . . . who was ſtrangled in the Chatelet with the ſtring of his drawers, that was not ſtrong enough to bridle a fly. If we may believe Paſquier (6), Alexander Hayes taught the firſt form in the College of the Jeſuits at Paris, during the civil war.

(3) Tom. 3. pag. 1135, 1136.

(4) Anti-Coton, pag. m. 38.

(5) Pag. 19. This Remercieſment des Beurrieres was printed in the year 1610.

(6) Catechiſme des Jeſuites, liv. 2. chap. 20. pag. m. 472.

☞ HAYWARD (Sir (JOHN), an eminent Engliſh Hiſtorian in the beginning of the ſeventeenth Century, was educated in the Univerſity of Cambridge, where he took the degree of Doctor of Laws. In 1599 he publiſhed at London in 4to, The firſt Part of the Life and Raigne of King Henrie the IIII. extending to the End of the firſt Yeare of his Raigne. Written by J. H. [A], dedicated to Robert Earl of Eſſex. Upon the account of

[A] In 1599 he publiſhed at London in 4*to*, The firſt part of the Life and Raigne of King Henrie the IIII. extending to the end of the firſt yeare of his raigne. Written by J. H.] In the preface he obſerves that " among all ſortes of humane writers there is none " that have done more profit, or deſerved greater " prayſe, then they who have committed to faithfull " records of Hiſtories eyther the government of migh- " ty States, or the lives and actes of famous men. For " by deſcribing the order and paſſages of theſe two, " and what events had followed what counſailes, they " have ſet foorth unto us not onely precepts, but lively " patterns both for private directions and for affayres " of State, whereby in ſhorte time younge men may " be inſtructed, and ould men more fullie furniſhed " with experience, then the longeſt age of man can af- " foorde." He afterwards remarks that Cicero rightly calls Hiſtory the Witneſs of Times, the Light of Truth, the Life of Memory, and the Meſſenger of Antiquity. Heereby, ſays our Author, wee are armed againſt all the rage and harſhneſſe of fortune; and heereby we may ſeeme (in regarde of the knowledge of thinges) to have travelled in all countries, and to have lived in all ages, and to have been converſant in all affayres. Neyther is that the leaſt benefit of Hiſtory, that it preſerves eternally both the glory of good men, and ſhame of evill. He concludes his preface with obſerving, that it might not ſeem impertinent to write of the ſtile of an Hiſtory, what beginning, what continuance, and what mean is to be uſed in all matter, what things to be ſuppreſſed, what lightly touched, and what to be treated at large, how credit may be won, and ſuſpicion avoided; what is to be obſerved in the order of times and deſcription of places and other ſuch circumſtances of weight, what liberty a Writer may uſe in framing ſpeeches, and in declaring the cauſes, counſels, and events of things done; how far he muſt bend himſelf to profit, and when and how he may play upon pleaſure; " but this, ſays he, were too large a fielde to " enter into: therefore leſt I ſhould run into the fault " of the Mindians, who made their gates wider then " their towne, I will here cloſe up, only wiſhing that " all our Engliſh Hiſtories were drawne out of the " droſſe of rude and barbarous Engliſh, that by plea- " ſure in reading them, the profit in knowing them " myght more eaſily be attayned." In this Hiſtory (1) our Author introduces a ſpeech of Dr. Thomas Merks, Biſhop of Carliſle, a man, ſays he, learned and wiſe, and one that alwayes uſed both libertie and conſtancie in a good cauſe; in which the Biſhop is repreſented as declaring in Parliament againſt the ſettlement of the Crown on King Henry IV. The ſpeech begins thus: " This queſtion, Right honourable Lordes, concerneth " a matter of great conſequence and weight; the de- " termining whereof will aſſuredly procure eyther " ſafe quiet or daungerous diſturbance, both to our " particular conſciences; and alſo to the common State. " Therefore before you reſolve uppon it, I pray you, " call to your conſideration theſe two things: firſt, " whether King Richard bee ſufficiently depoſed or " no: ſecondly, whether King Henrie be with good " judgement or juſtice choſen in his place. For the " firſt point wee are firſt to examine whether a King " being lawfully and fully inſtituted by any juſt title, " may, upon imputation eyther of negligence or of ty- " rannie, be depoſed by his ſubjects. Secondly, what " King Richard hath omitted in the one, or committed " in the other, for which he ſhould deſerve ſo heavie " judgement." I will not ſpeake what may be done in a popular State, or in a conſular; in which, although one beareth the name and honour of a Prince, yet he hath not ſupreme power of Majeſtie; but in the one, the people have the higheſt Empire, in the other the Nobilitie and chiefe men of eſtate, in neyther the Prince (2). . . . . In theſe and ſuch like governments the Prince hath not regall rightes, but is himſelfe ſubject to that power, which is greater than his, whether it be in the Nobility or in the common people. But if the Sovereigne Majeſty be in the Prince, as it was in the three firſt Empires, and in the Kingdomes of Judea and Iſraell, and is now in the Kingdomes of England, Fraunce, Spaine, Scotland, Muſcovia, Turky, Tartaria, Perſia, Æthiopia, and almoſt

(1) Pag. 100, & ſeqq.

(2) Ibid. pag. 101.

all of this book he ſuffered a tedious impriſonment (a) [B]. In 1603 he publiſhed at London in 4to, An Anſwer to the firſt Part of a certaine Conference concerning Succeſſion, publiſhed not long ſince under the name of R. Doleman [C]. In 1610 he was appointed one of all the Kingdomes of Aſia and Africke; although for his vices he be unprofitable to the ſubjectes, yea hurtfull, yea intollerable; yet can they lawfully neither harme his perſon, nor hazard his power, whether by judgement or els by force; for neyther one nor all Magiſtrates have any authority over the Prince, from whome all authority is derived, and whoſe onely preſence doeth ſilence and ſuſpend all inferiour juriſdiction and power. As for force, what ſubject can attempt, or aſſiſt, or counſaile, or conceale violence againſt his Prince, and not incurre the high and heynous crime of treaſon (3)? .... Not only our actions, but our ſpeeches alſo, and our very thoughtes are ſtrictly charged with duty and obedience unto Princes, whether they be good or evill (4). . . . God ſtirreth up the ſpirit even of wicked Princes to doe his will; and (as Jehoſhaphat ſaid to his rulers) they execute not the judgement of man, but of the Lord; in regard whereof David calleth them Gods, becauſe they have rule and authority immediately from God, which if they abuſe, they are not to bee adjudged by their ſubjects, for no power within their Dominions is ſuperiour to theirs: but God reſerveth them to the ſoreſt tryall. Horribly and ſodainly (ſaith the wiſe man) will the Lord appeare unto them, and a harde judgement ſhall they have. The Law of God commandeth, that the childe ſhould be put to death for any contumely done unto the parents. But what if the father be a robber? if a murtherer? if for all exceſſe of villanyes, odious and execrable both to God and man? Surely he deſerveth the higheſt degree of puniſhment; and yet muſt not the ſonne lift up his hand againſt him, for no offence is ſo great as to be puniſhed by parricide. But our country is deerer unto us then our parentes; and the Prince is Pater Patriæ, the Father of our Country, and therefore more ſacred and deere unto us then our parentes by nature, and muſt not be violated, how imperious, how impious ſo ever he bee (5). . . " Neyther " have we any cuſtome, that the people at pleaſure " ſhould elect their King; but they are always bound " unto him, who by right of blood is right ſucceſſour; much leſs can they confirme and make good " that title, which is before by violence uſurped; for " nothing can there be freely doone, when liberty is " once reſtrained by feare (6)." Dr. White Kennet, Dean of Peterborough, obſerves (7), that the firſt notice given to the world of any ſuch ſpeech by Biſhop Merks, came from Mr. Edward Hall, who died about 150 years after the ſpeaking, and yet pretends no manuſcript copy; and that it was immediately caught up by Mr. Grafton, who cites Mr. Hall for it. Mr. John Stow in his Annals publiſhed in his own life-time takes no notice of any ſpeech or oppoſition of this Biſhop in this Parliament; nor has Mr. Edmund Howes inſerted it. But Mr. Hollingſhed and his friends, who were to be general collectors, took hold of it, but refer to Mr. Hall, and let it reſt again ſingly upon his teſtimony. " But ſoon after, ſays Dr. Kennet (8), " comes a bolder man, Sir John Hayward, L.L. D. to " give an Eſſay upon Henry IV, and he not only ſuppoſes a ſpeech to have been really delivered, but he " gives a new and larger copy of it, i. e. he made a " new ſpeech, and dreſſed it up in arguments and " language as unlike to Biſhop Merks, as his own " military ſword was to that Prelate's mitre. And " yet he introduces it with great ceremony. The inheritance of the Kingdom, ſays he, being in this ſort ſettled in King Henry and his line, it was moved in the Parliament, what ſhould be done with King Richard. The Biſhop of Caerliel, who was a man learned and wiſe, and one that always uſed both liberty and conſtancy in a good cauſe, in his ſecret judgment did never give allowance to theſe proceedings, yet diſſembled his diſlike untill he might to ſome purpoſe declare it. Therefore now being in a place to be heard of all, and by order of the Houſe to be interrupted by none, hee roſe up and with a bold and preſent uttered his mind as followeth &c. " All " which, continues Dr. Kennet, is an imaginary en" trance into an enchanted caſtle, or a mere fiction " pleaſant enough to any who love to be deceived. " The Author, like other diverting Writers, would " not bind himſelf up to relate what another ſaid, " but would make an exerciſe upon what might be " now ſaid upon that ſubject. This ſpeech for Biſhop " Merks was not his firſt Eſſay of that kind in this " Life and Reign of Henry IV. He made a fine ſpeech " for Archbiſhop Arundel to Duke Henry in France, " which he calls a ſolemn Oration; and a pretty " ſpeech of the Duke in anſwer to it, with reply and " rejoinder very agreeable. He makes a moſt be" moaning ſpeech for King Richard, when his bitterneſs did in this manner break from him; and ano" ther Farewell-ſpeech in the Tower, when he deli" vered up his crown and ſceptre. In ſhort he is a " profeſt Speech-maker thro' all his little Hiſtory. . . " The true occaſion of his making that elaborate " ſpeech for Biſhop Merks, ſeems to have been this. " He was employed by the Earl of Eſſex to anſwer " the Book of Titles, called Doleman, written by Fa" ther Parſons, and cautiouſly to recommend the He" reditary Right of the King of Scots; and upon " that view he took a ſtep out of the way, and put " his own thoughts into the form of a ſpeech for Bi" ſhop Merks in defence of Hereditary Right. For " which he ſuffered in the jealous times of Queen " Elizabeth, and was honourably rewarded by King " James I, who knighted him, and made him Hiſto" riographer of Chelſea-College."

(a) Camden's Annals of Elizabeth, ad ann. 1601.

(3) Ibid. pag. 102.

(4) Ibid. pag. 104.

Sap. 6.

(5) Ibid. pag. 104, 105.

(6) Ibid. pag. 107.

(7) Third Letter to the Lord Biſhop of Carliſle, Lord Almoner to his Majeſty, upon the ſubject of Biſhop Merks, pag. 46, & ſeqq. edit. London 1717, in 8vo.

(8) Ibid. p. 49.

[B] Upon the account of this Book he ſuffered a tedious impriſonment.] We are informed in the Lord Bacon's Apothegms (9), that Queen Elizabeth being highly incenſed at this Book, ſhe aſked Mr. Bacon, who was then one of her Council learned in the Law, Whether there was any treaſon contained in it? Mr. Bacon anſwered, " No, Madam; for treaſon, I cannot deli" ver opinion, that there is any, but very much fe" lony." The Queen apprehending it gladly aſked, How, and wherein? Mr. Bacon anſwered, " Becauſe " he had ſtollen many of his ſentences and conceits " out of Cornelius Tacitus." Camden tells us (10), that this Book being dedicated to the Earl of Eſſex, when that Nobleman and his friends were tried, the lawyers urged, that " it was written on purpoſe as a copy and an en" couragement for depoſing the Queen;" and they particularly inſiſted upon thoſe words in the Dedication, in which our Author ſtiles the Earl, Magnus & præſenti judicio, & futuri temporis expectatione.

(9) Works of Lord Bacon, edit. London 4 vol. in fol.

(10) Annals of Queen Elizabeth, ad ann. 1601.

[C] In 1603 he publiſhed at London in 4*to* An Anſwer to the firſt part of a certaine Conference concerning Succeſſion, publiſhed not long ſince under the name of R. Doleman.] The Conference was written by Father Robert Parſons, the Jeſuit, and printed in 1593, 1594 in 8vo, under the name of R. Doleman, and was known by the name of the Book of Titles. The firſt part was reprinted at London 1648 in ten ſheets in 4to, by Robert Ibbotſon in Smithfield, under this title, Several Speeches delivered at a Conference concerning the Power of Parliaments to proceed againſt their King for miſgovernment. This pamphlet was licenſed January 31ſt 1647, by Gilbert Mabbot. Dr. Thomas Barlow, afterwards Biſhop of Lincoln, wrote the following note in a blank leaf before the title of it. " This baſe " and traiterous pamphlet is verbatim the firſt part of " Francis Doleman (Parſons was the man under that " name) touching Succeſſion to the Crown. Theſe nine " Speeches (as here they call them) are the nine chapters " in Doleman. And this was printed at the charge of " the Parliament, which coſt 30 pounds, being paid " by them to the Printer in perpetuam eorum infamiam. " See the Collection of his Majeſty's moſt gracious " Meſſages for peace, p. 125, 126. The ſaid Meſ" ſages were collected and printed with obſervations " upon them by Mr. Symons. The ſaid traiterous " pamphlet [Several Speeches] was put out by — " Walker an Ironmonger, ſometime a Cow-herd, who " when the King came into London about the five " Members, threw into his coach a traiterous pam" phlet, To thy tents, O Iſrael. Vide Lambert Wood's " Hiſtory. He the ſaid Walker wrote the Perfect Oc" currences, and now (1649) is made a Miniſter by " the Preſbyterians. Mr. Darby a Yorkſhire and Par" liament Man bought Doleman of Cornelius Bee at " the of the Hiſtoriographers of Chelſea College near London [D]. In 1613 he publiſhed at London in 4to, The Lives of the Three Normans, Kings of England; William he Firſt, William

" the King's Arms in little Britain, and gave it to " Walker. Doleman beforementioned was an honeſt " ſecular Prieſt, who hated traiterous doctrines; and " Father Parſons hated him, and, to make him odious, " did uſe his name, as if Doleman had been the author, " when Parſons indeed made the Book." The titles of the chapters of the firſt part of the Conference are as follow: I. That ſucceſſion to Governement by neereneſs of bloude is not by lawe of nature or divine, but only by humane and poſitive lawes of every particular Commonwealth; and conſequently, that it may upon juſt cauſes be altered by the ſame. II. Of the particular Forme of Monarchies and Kingdomes, and the different Lawes whereby they are to bee obtained, holden, and governed in divers countries, aecording as each Commonwealth hath choſen and eſtabliſhed. III. Of the great reverence and reſpect due to Kings, and yet how divers of them have been lawfully chaſtiſed by their Commonwealthes for their miſgovernment; and of the good and proſperous ſucceſſe that God commonly hath given to the ſame, and much more to the putting back of an unworthie pretender. IV. Wherein conſiſteth principally the lawfulneſſe of proceeding againſt Princes, which in the former chapter is mencioned: What intereſt Princes have in their ſubjects goods or lives: How oathes doe binde or may be broken of ſubjects towards Princes; and finally the difference betweene a good King and a Tyrant. V. Of the Coronation of Princes and Maner of admitting to their authoritye, and the Oathes which they do make in the ſame unto the Commonwealth for their good government. VI. " What is " due to onely ſucceſſion by birth; and what intereſt " or right an heire apparent hath to the Crowne, be- " fore he is crowned or admitted by the Common- " wealth; and how juſtly he may be put backe, if " he hath not the partes requiſite. VII. How the " next in ſucceſſion by propinquity of bloud have of- " tentimes bin put backe by the Commonwealth, " and others further off admitted in their places even " in thoſe Kingdoms where ſucceſſion prevaileth; with " many examples of the kingdome of Iſrael and Spain, " VIII. Of divers other examples out of the State of " France and England for proof, that the next in " bloud are ſometimes put backe from Succeſſion, and " how God hath approved the ſame with good ſuc- " ceſſe. IX. What are the principall points, which a " Commonwealth ought to reſpect, in admitting or " excluding any Prince; wherein is handled largely " alſo of the diverſitie of Religions and other ſuch " Caſes." The ſecond part of this Conference was deſigned to prove, that the Infanta of Spain was the legal heir to the Crown of England. As ſoon as this Book was publiſhed, the Parliament enacted in the 35th of Q. Elizabeth, that whoever ſhould be found to have it in his houſe, ſhould be guilty of high treaſon. This Conference was reprinted at London 1681 in 8vo, which occaſioned the publication of a piece intitled, The apoſtate Proteſtant, in a Letter to a Friend, occaſioned by the late reprinting of Doleman. London 1682 in eight ſheets in 4to, ſaid to be written by Edward Pelling, Rector of St. Martin's Ludgate in London. Our Author Hayward's Anſwer to the firſt part of the Conference, which was likewiſe reprinted at London 1683 in 8vo, is dedicated to King James I, and in the Dedication he ſtiles it a Defence both of the preſent Authoritie of Princes, and of Succeſſion according to proximitie of blood; wherein, ſays he, is maintained, that the people have no lawfull power to remove the one, or repell the other. In which two points I have heretofore alſo declared my opinion, by publiſhing the tragicall events, which enſued the depoſition of King Richard, and uſurpation of King Henrie the fourth. Both theſe labours were undertaken with particular reſpect to your Majeſtie's juſt title of Succeſſion in this Realme. In the Epiſtle to R. Doleman our Author obſerves, that the reaſon of his not anſwering the Conference ſooner was, partly from contempt, and partly from fear. " The fear, ſays he, " was occaſioned by the nimble ear, which lately was " borne to the touche of this ſtring: for which cauſe " our Engliſh fugitives did ſtand in ſome advantage, " in that they had free ſcope to publiſh whatſoever " was agreeable to their pleaſure, knowing right well, " that their bookes could not be ſuppreſſed, and might " not be anſwered. It may be you will queſtion, " wherefore I have not anſwered your ſecond part. It " is ready for you, but I have not now thought fit " to divulge the ſame; partly becauſe it hath been " dealt in by ſome others; but principally becauſe I " know not how convenient it may ſeeme to diſcuſſe " ſuch particulars, as with generall both liking and " applauſe are now determined. I forbeare to ex- " preſſe your true name; I have reſerved that to my " anſwere to ſome caſt pamphlet, which I expect you " will caſt forth againſt mee."

[D] In 1610 he was appointed one of the Hiſtoriographers of Chelſea College near London] This College was " intended, ſays Fuller (11), for a ſpiritual garriſon, " with a magazine of all books for that purpoſe, where " learned Divines ſhould ſtudy and write in mainte- " nance of all controverſies againſt the Papiſts. Indeed " the Romaniſts herein may riſe up, and condemn thoſe " of the Proteſtant Confeſſion. For as Solomon uſed (a) " not his military men for any ſervile work, in build- " ing the Temple, whereof the text aſſigneth this rea- " ſon, for they were men of war; ſo the Romiſh " Church doth not burden their Profeſſors with preach- " ing or any parochial incumbrances, but reſerves " them only for Polemical ſtudies. Whereas in Eng- " land the ſame man reads, preacheth, catechiſeth, " diſputes, delivers ſacraments, &c. So that were it " not for God's marvellous bleſſing in our ſtudies, and " the infinite odds of truth on our ſide, it were im- " poſſible in human probability, that we ſhould hold " up the bucklers againſt them." Beſides the divines, at leaſt two able Hiſtorians were to be maintained in the College, to record and publiſh to poſterity all memorable paſſages in the Church and State. In purſuance of this deſign King James I incorporated the ſaid foundation by the name of King James's College in Chelſey, and by Letters Patents beſtowed on it the reverſion of lands in Chelſea, then in poſſeſſion of Charles Earl of Nottingham; and made it capable of receiving any lands of his ſubjects not exceeding in the whole the yearly value of three thouſand pounds. Dr. Matthew Sutcliffe, Dean of Exeter, beſtowed likewiſe on this College ſeveral farms in Devonſhire worth about three hundred pounds per Ann. and by his will, dated November 1. 1628, bequeathed to Dr. John Prideaux, and Dr. Clifford, as Feoffees, in truſt to ſettle the ſame on the College, the benefit of the extent on a ſtatue of four thouſand pounds, acknowledged by Sir Lewis Steuklie. In the Parliament which met at Weſtminſter, February 19, 1609, there was an act paſt to enable the Provoſt and Fellows of Chelſea College to dig a trench out of the river Lee, to erect engines, waterworks, &c. to convey and carry water in cloſe pipes under ground unto the city of London and the ſuburbs thereof, for the perpetual maintenance and ſuſtentation of the Provoſt and Fellows of that College, and their ſucceſſors by the rent to be made of the ſaid waters ſo conveyed. The fabric of this College was begun on a piece of ground called Thameſhot, containing about ſix acres, and then in poſſeſſon of Charles Earl of Nottingham, who granted a leaſe of his term therein to the ſaid Provoſt at the yearly rent of ſeven pounds ten ſhillings. King James laid the firſt ſtone of it, and gave all the tember neceſſary to it out of Windſor Foreſt. " And " yet, ſays Fuller (12), that long range of building, " which alone is extant, ſcarce finiſhed at this day, " thus made, though not of free-ſtone, of free timber, " as I am informed, coſt full three thouſand pound. " But alas! what is this piece (not an eighth part) to " a double quadrant, beſides wings on each ſide, which " was intended?" The names of the firſt Provoſt and Fellows ſettled by the King, May 8, 1610, are as follow. Dr. Matthew Sutcliffe, Dean of Exeter, Provoſt: Dr. John Overal, Dean of St. Paul's; Dr. Thomas Morton, Dean of Wincheſter; Dr. Richard Field, Dean of Glouceſter; Dr. Robert Abbot; Dr. John Spenſer; Dr. Miles Smith; Dr. William Covitt; Dr. John Howſon; Dr. John Layfield; Dr. Benjamin Charrier; Dr. Martin Fotherbie; Dr. John Boys; Dr. Richard Brett; Dr. Peter Lilie; Dr. Francis Burley; William Hillier, Arch-deacon of Barſtable; and John White, Fellow of Mancheſter College. The

(11) Church Hiſtory of Britain, B. 10. pag. 51.

(a) 2 Chron. viii. 9.

(12) Ubi ſupra, pag. 52.

William the Second, Henrie the Firſt. Written by J. H. [E], and dedicated to Charles Prince of Wales. In 1619 he received the honour of Knighthood from his Majeſty at Whitehall (b). In 1624 he publiſhed a diſcourſe intitled, Of Supremacie in Affaires of Religion. By Sir John Hayward, Knt. Doctor of Lawe [F], London in 4to, dedicated to two Hiſtorians were William Camden, Clarenceaux, and John Hayward, L. L. D. None, who were actually Biſhops, were capable of places in this College; and when ſome were afterwards advanced to Biſhoprics, or died, the King by his Letters Patents November 14, 1622, ſubſtituted others in their room; among whom Antonio de Dominis, Archbiſhop of Spalato, though only Dean of Windſor in England, was moſt remarkable. In 1616 his Majeſty ſent his letters to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury to excite the clergy of his province to contribute to ſo pious a work; yet for all theſe endeavours and collections in all the pariſhes of England, the ſums of money brought in were ſlow and ſmall. Many of them, ſays Fuller (13), were ſcattered out in the gathering them up, the charges of the collectors conſuming the profit thereof. And the ſame writer obſerves, that it was vehemently ſuſpected, that ſome part of theſe collections had been detained by private perſons. Various were the conjectures concerning what obſtructed the proceedings with regard to the College. Some aſcribed it to the untimely death of Prince Henry; but Mr. Fuller, upon a ſtrict peruſal of the records of the College, could not find ſo much as mention of the name of the Prince as in any degree viſibly contributing to it. Others aſcribed it "to the large, looſe, and "lax nature thereof, no one prime perſon (Sutcliffe "excepted, whoſe ſhoulders ſunk under the weight "thereof) zealouſly engaging therein; King James's "maintenance amounting to little more than counte- "nance of the work (14)." Others imputed it to the failure of the project for making a new river; others to the remiſſneſs of the greateſt prelates, who though ſeemingly forward to the utmoſt, were ſuſpicious, that theſe controverſal Divines would be conſidered as the principal champions for religion, and more ſerviceable in the church than themſelves, and perhaps might acquire principles prejudicial to their epiſcopal juriſdictions. Others imagined, that it was obſtructed by the jealouſy of the Univerſities; or by the ſuſpicion of ſome patriots and commoners in Parliament, "that this "College would be, ſays Fuller (15), too much cour- "tier; and that the Divinity, but eſpecially the "Hiſtory thereof, would Ἰακωβίζειν, propend too much "in favour of King James, and report all things to "the diſadvantage of the ſubject. Wherefore though "the ſaid patriots in Parliament countenanced the "Act, as counting it no policy publickly to croſs the "project of King James, eſpecially as it was made po- "pular with ſo pious a plauſibility; yet when returned "home, by their ſuſpicious items and private inſtructi- "ons they beat off and retarded people's charities there- "unto. The ſame conceived this foundation ſuper- "fluous, to keep men to confute Popiſh opinions by "writings, whilſt the maintainers of them were every "where connived at, and countenanced, and the pe- "nal laws not put in any effectual execution againſt "them." Others remarked, that this deſign was begun in a bad time, when the world ſwarmed with projectors, and neceſſitous courtiers, contriving all ways to get money; and it was the misfortune of it to appear in a time, when ſo many monopolies were on foot. Some great Churchmen were more backward, becauſe the deſign was conducted by Dr. Sutcliffe, who was known to be a rigid Anti-Remonſtrant, and when old, very ſevere in his writings againſt the Remonſtrants.

(b) Wood, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 203. 2d edit. London 1721.

(13) Pag. 53.

(14) Idem, ibid. pag. 53, 54.

(15) Pag. 34.

[E] In 1613 he publiſhed at London in 4*to*, The Lives of the three Normans, Kings of England.] In the Epiſtle Dedicatory to Prince Charles he obſerves, that he publiſhed this work at the deſire of Prince Henry, who had ſent for him a few months before his Highneſs's death, and complained much of the Hiſtories of England, and that the Engliſh, who were inferior to none in honourable actions, ſhould be ſurpaſſed by all in leaving the memory of them to poſterity. Our Author anſwered, that he conceived theſe to be the cauſes hereof; One, that men of ſufficiencie were otherwiſe employed, either in publike affaires, or in wreſtling with the world, for maintenance or encreaſe of their private eſtates. Another is, for that men might ſafely write of others in maner of a tale, but in maner of a Hiſtory ſafely they could not, becauſe, albeit they ſhould write of men long ſince dead, and whoſe poſteritie is cleane worne out, yet ſome alive finding themſelves foule in thoſe vices, which they ſee obſerved, reproved, condemned in others; their guiltineſſe maketh them apt to conceite, that whatſoever the words are, the finger pointeth only at them. The laſt is, for that the argument of our Engliſh Hiſtorye hath bene ſo foiled heretofore by ſome unworthie writers, that men of qualitie may eſteeme themſelves diſcredited by dealing in it. The Prince aſked our author, whether he had written any part of our Engliſh Hiſtory beſides what had been publiſhed, which at that time he had in his hands. "I anſwered, ſays he, "that I had wrote of certaine of our Engliſh Kings "by way of a brieſe deſcription of their lives: but "for Hiſtorie, I did principally bend and binde my "ſelfe to the times, wherein I ſhould live, in which "my owne obſervations might ſomewhat direct me. "But as well in the one as in the other, I had at that "time perfected nothing." The Prince replied, that in regard of the honour of the time, he liked well of the laſt, but for his own inſtruction he more deſired the firſt; and directed our author, that againſt his Highneſs's return from his progreſs then at hand, he would perfect ſomewhat of both ſorts for him, which he promiſed amply to requite. This engaged Dr. Hayward to finiſh the Lives of the three Kings of the Norman Race, and certain years of Queen Elizabeth's reign. At the Prince's return from the progreſs to his houſe at St. James's theſe pieces were delivered unto him; but becauſe the Lives of the Three Normans, Kings of England ſeemed perfect, he expreſſed a deſire, that they ſhould be publiſhed; but he ſoon after died.

[F] In 1624 he publiſhed a diſcourſe intitled, Of Supremacie in affaires of Religion. By Sir John Hayward Knight and Doctor of Law.] It contains eighty eight pages in 4to. It is written in the manner of a converſation held at the table of Dr. Toby Matthews, Biſhop of Durham, in the time of the Parliament in the year 1605. The propoſition of it is, that ſupreme power in eccleſiaſtical affairs is a right of ſovereignty. In the diſcuſſion of this, it is ſhewn, that ſovereign or majeſtical power muſt be perpetual and abſolute. That affairs of the greateſt importance are annexed to the ſovereign Majeſty. That nothing in a State is of ſo great importance as Religion. That affairs of Religion are to be managed by thoſe, who bear the Sovereignty. That it is dangerous for others to be depended upon in regard of Religion. That two policies were antiently obſerved for avoiding theſe dangers, to exclude external ceremonies, and to commit the ordering of matters in Religion to the ſovereign authority within the State. With regard to the firſt, it is obſerved (16), "that the Jews would not "converſe or accompany a man, who was not of "their owne Religion. Among the Grecians, So- "crates and Protagoras were condemned, Anaxagoras "and Ariſtotle were accuſed, for holding opinions con- "trary to their received Religion. Joſephus writ- "eth (p), that the Athenians had a ſevere Law a- "gainſt any man, who ſhould ſpeake a word in Re- "ligion againſt that which was eſtabliſhed by Law. "The Scythians put Anacharſis to death for perform- "ing the rites of Bacchus after the manner of the "Grecians. Livie writeth, that among the Ro- "manes the Ædiles received in part of their charge (q), "that no externall Religion or Ceremony ſhould bee "brought in. And to the ſame purpoſe M. Æmilius re- "cited a decree (r), that no man ſhould ſacrifice in a pub- "like or ſacred place after a newe or externall rite. How "often, ſaith the ſame Livie (s), have our Fathers and "Anceſtors given charge to the Magiſtrates, that ex- "ternall ceremonies ſhould be forbidden? Mecænas in "Dio (t) gave this exhortation and advice to "Auguſtus (u). Obſerve Religion after the faſhion "of your country, and compell others to doe the like; "but thoſe, who bring in ſtrange and forraine rites, "hate and correct, becauſe they perſwade many to "worke alterations, from whence conſpiracies and ſe- "ditions

(16) Sect. 10. pag. 20, 21. Doctrinis variis & peregrinis nolite abduci. Heb. i. 13. 19.

(p) Joſeph. Lib. 2. contra Appion, ὥστε καὶ τοὺς ῥημα μόνον παρὰ τοὺς ἐκείνων νόμους ὀφθὲν μένους περὶ θεῶν ἀπειρατήτους κολάζειν.

(q) Ne qui niſi Romani dii neve alio more quam patrio colerentur.

(r) Liv. lib. 15. Ne quis in publico ſacrove loco novo aut externo ritu ſacrificaret.

(s) Lib. 39. Quoties patrum avorumque ætate negotium magiſtratibus datum eſt, ut ſacra externa fieri vetarant?

(t) Dio, lib. 52.

(u) Τὸ μὲν θεῖον πάντη πάντως αὐτούς τε σέβου, &c.

to Prince Charles. He died at his houſe in the pariſh of Great St. Bartholomew London on Wedneſday June the 27th 1627, and was interred in the Church belonging to that pariſh. He wrote likewiſe The Life and Reign of King Edward VI [G], and ſeveral theological works, particularly The ſtrong Helper, or how in all our Troubles to caſt our Burden upon God. London 1614 in 8vo. The Sanctuary of a troubled Soul. London 1616 in 8vo. Chriſt's Prayer on the Croſs for his Enemies. London 1623 in 8vo. David's Tears; or an Expoſition of the Penitential Pſalms. London 1623 in 4to. Mr. Wood tells us (c), "that he was accounted a learned and godly man, and one better read in theological authors than in thoſe belonging to his own profeſſion;" and that with regard to his Hiſtories, "the phraſe and words in them were in their time eſteemed very good; "only ſome have wiſhed, that in his Hiſtory of Henry IV he had not called Sir Hugh "Lynne by ſo light a word as Mad-Cap, though he were ſuch; and that he had not "changed his Hiſtorical Style into a Dramatical, where he induceth a mother uttering a "woman's paſſion in the caſe of her ſon." Archdeacon Nicholſon (d) obſerves, that he had the repute in his time of a good clean pen and ſmooth ſtyle. Mr. John Strype (e) ſays, that our author "muſt be read with caution; that his ſtyle and language is good, "and ſo is his fancy; but that he makes too much uſe of it for an Hiſtorian, which puts "him on ſometimes to make ſpeeches for others, which they never ſpake, and to relate "matters, which perhaps they never thought on."

(c) Faſti Oxon, ubi ſupra.

(d) Engliſh Hiſtorical Library, Part 1. pag. 216. edit. London 1696, in 8vo.

(e) Preface to Sir John Hayward's Life and Reign of King Edward VI, printed in the 2d volume of the Complete Hiſtory of England.

"ditions are oftentimes occaſioned." With reſpect to the ſecond point, viz. to commit the ordering of matters in Religion to the ſovereign authority within the State, this is ſhewn to have been practiſed by the Jews, Ægyptians, and divers other people, in the Empires of Aſſyria and Perſia, in the States of Greece, in the Empire of Rome under the Government of Kings, in the popular State, and under the Heathen and firſt Chriſtian Emperors. It is ſhewn likewiſe, that matters of external or accidental form in the Church depended altogether upon the firſt Chriſtian Emperors, by whoſe direction and authority matters of faith and eſſential form were alſo ordered. That the eight General Councils were called and confirmed by Emperors. That there was a conteſt between the Biſhops of Rome and Conſtantinople for ſuperiority, the latter being favoured by divers Emperors. That by giving this prerogative to the Biſhops of Rome the Eaſtern Empire was diſmember'd. That the abſolute power of the Biſhops of Rome in Eccleſiaſtical affairs reduced the Weſtern Empire, not only to a feeble State, but to be held in a vaſſalage to the See of Rome. That by the ſame power the Biſhops of Rome claimed Sovereignty alſo over divers principal Kingdoms in Europe, and generally over all States in the world; by which means divers diſtreſſes were occaſioned.

[G] He wrote likewiſe, The Life and Reign of King Edward VI.] It was printed at London 1630 in 4to, and there was another edition of it in 1636 in 24mo, under this title; The Life and Raigne of King Edward the Sixt. With the beginning of the Raigne of Queene Elizabeth. Both written by Sir John Hayward, Knight, Doctor of Lawe. To this is prefixed the author's picture. T

☞ HEARNE (THOMAS), eminent for his Writings and Editions of Books and Manuſcripts [A], was ſon of George Hearne, Pariſh-Clerk of White Waltham in Berkſhire, by Edith his wife, daughter of Thomas Wiſe of Shotteſbrooke in the ſaid county. He was born at Littlefield Green in the pariſh of White Waltham in the year 1680, and received no other inſtruction than from his father, (who kept a writing-ſchool in

[A] Eminent for his Writings and Editions of Books and Manuſcripts.] They are as follow. I. Reliquiæ Bodleianæ: or ſome genuine remains of Sir Thomas Bodley. Containing his life, the firſt draught of the Statutes of the publick Library at Oxford, (in Engliſh) and a collection of letters to Dr. James, &c. Publiſhed from the originals in the ſaid Library. London 1703 in 8vo. II. C. Plinii Cæcilii ſecundi Epiſtolæ & Panegyricus, cum variis lectionibus & annotationibus. Accedit Vita Plinii ordine chronologico digeſta. Oxford 1703 in 8vo. III. Eutropii Breviarium Hiſtoriæ Romanæ, cum Pæanii Metaphraſi Græcâ. Meſſala Corvinus de Auguſti Progenie. Julius Obſequens de Prodigiis. Anonymi Oratio funebris Gr. Lat. in Imp. Fl. Conſtantinum Conſtantini M. fil. Cum variis lectionibus & annotationibus. Oxford 1703 in 8vo. IV. Ductor Hiſtoricus: Or a ſhort Syſtem of univerſal Hiſtory, or an Introduction to the ſtudy of it. Volume the firſt, in three Books, containing, 1, A Chronology of all the moſt celebrated perſons and actions from the Creation to this time. To which is premiſed an Explication of Terms and other Præcognita. 2. An Introduction to Hiſtory. Wherein an account is given of the writings of the ancient Hiſtorians Greek and Roman, with the judgment of the beſt Criticks upon them. Together with an ample collection of Engliſh Hiſtorians. 3. A compendious Hiſtory of all the ancient Monarchies and States from the Creation to the Birth of Chriſt. London 1705 in 8vo, ſecond Edition. It was printed again in 1714 and 1724 without our Author's knowledge. With regard to the firſt Edition, it is to be aſcribed to another perſon; and the two firſt books in the ſecond, third, and fourth Edition are by another hand, who wrote likewiſe the Preface. But Mr. Hearne wrote the third Book himſelf. V. Ductor Hiſtoricus: Or a ſhort Syſtem of univerſal Hiſtory. Volume the ſecond. Containing a compendious account of the moſt conſiderable tranſactions in the world, from the Birth of Chriſt to the final Decay of the Roman Monarchy, and the Eſtabliſhment of the German Empire by Charles the Great. In three Books, viz. 1. A Series of the Succeſſion, and a Hiſtory of the Reigns of all the Emperors, from the Birth of Chriſt to the removal of the Imperial Seat to Conſtantinople. 2. The Succeſſion of the Emperors, continued from the Tranſlation of the Empire to the reign of Charlemagne. 3. The Hiſtory of Perſia under Parthian Kings, and the Perſian Race reſtored, to the Deſtruction of that Monarchy by the Saracens. The ſeveral Kingdoms erected in Europe by the Franks, Saxons, Goths, Vandals, &c. and their reſpective ſucceſſions. The Life of Mahomet, and the Succeſſion of the Saracen Caliphs. Together with an account of the Foundation of the moſt conſiderable Cities, &c. for 800 years after Chriſt, with other miſcellaneous things not mentioned in the courſe of the Hiſtory. Oxford 1704 in 8vo. It was printed three times at London without our Author's knowledge, who declared in the Preface his deſign to publiſh a third volume, for which he had made great collections out of the beſt Authors. But he laid aſide this deſign upon the publication of the Engliſh Tranſlation of Puffendorf's Introduction, which begins where the ſecond volume of the Ductor Hiſtoricus ends, and continues the Hiſtory to the preſent times. VI. M. Juniani Juſtini Hiſtoriarum ex Trogo Pompeio Libri XLIV. MSS. Codicum collatione recogniti, annotationibuſque illuſtrati. Oxford 1705 in 8vo. VII. T. Livii Patavini Hiſtoriarum ab Urbe conditâ Libri qui ſuperſunt, MSS. Codicum collatione recogniti, annotationibuſque illuſtrati. Oxford 1708 in ſix volumes in 8vo. VIII. A Letter containing an account of ſome Antiquities between Windſor and Oxford, with a Liſt of in the Vicarage Houſe of White Waltham, being permitted to live there by the Miniſter on condition that he taught ten boys yearly,) till the year 1693; when the learned and pious Francis Cherry of Shotteſbrooke Eſq; put him to the Free-ſchool of Bray in Berks on purpoſe to learn the Latin tongue. In this ſchool he preſently became remarkable for his induſtry and application, and ſoon made a very ſurpriſing progreſs; of which Mr. Cherry being fully ſatisfied, reſolved, by the advice of Mr. Dodwel, who then lived at Shotteſbrooke, the ſeveral Pictures in the School-Gallery adjoyning to the Bodleian Library. Printed in 1708 in The monthly Miſcellany, or Memoirs for the Curious. This Letter is reprinted at the end of the fifth volume of our Author's Edition of Leland's Itinerary, with additions and corrections, but without the Liſt of Pictures. But this Catalogue being greatly ſought for by men of learning, he reprinted an hundred copies of the whole Tract reviſed (for the London was very incorrect) in 1725 in 8vo. IX. The Life of Ælfred the Great by Sir John Spelman, Knt. Publiſhed from the original MS. in the Bodleian Library. To which are added many hiſtorical Remarks, and a Diſcourſe upon an old Roman Inſcription lately found near Bathe. Oxford 1710 in 8vo. X. The Itinerary of John Leland the Antiquary, in IX volumes 8vo. Publiſhed from the original MSS. and other authentic copies. Oxford 1710, 1711, 1712. This work, which is very ſcarce, there having been only an hundred and twenty copies printed, viz. 12 in fine, and 108 in ordinary paper, is adorned with divers curious diſcourſes and obſervations, partly written by the editor, and partly by others. XI. Henrici Dodwelli de Parmâ Equeſtri Woodwardianâ Diſſertatio. Accedit Thomæ Neli Dialogus inter Reginam Elizabetham & Robertum Dudleium, Comitem Leyceſtriæ & Academiæ Oxonienſis Cancellarium, in quo de Academiæ Ædificiis præclarè agitur. Oxford 1713 in 8vo. XII. Johannis Lelandi Antiquarii de Rebus Britannicis Collectanea. Oxford 1715 in ſix volumes in 8vo. There were but an hundred and fifty ſix copies printed. XIII. Acta Apoſtolorum Græco-Latine, literis majuſculis. E Codice Laudiano, characteribus uncialibus exarato, & in Bibliothecâ Bodleianâ adſervato, deſcripſit ediditque Tho. Hearnius. Qui Symbolum etiam Apoſtolorum ex eodem Codice ſubjunxit. Oxford 1715 in 8vo. There were but an hundred and twenty copies printed. XIV. Joannis Roſſi Antiquarii Warwicenſis Hiſtoria Regum Angliæ. E Codice MS. in Bibliothecâ Bodlejanâ deſcripſit, notiſque & indice adornavit Tho. Hearnius. Accedit Joannis Lelandi Antiquarii Nænia in mortem Henrici Duddelegi Equitis; cui præfigitur Teſtimonium de Lelando amplum & præclarum, hactenus ineditum. Oxford 1716 in 8vo. There were only ſixty copies printed. XV. Titi Livii Foro-Julienſis Vita Henrici quinti, Regis Angliæ. Accedit Sylloge Epiſtolarum à variis Angliæ Principibus ſcriptarum. E codicibus calamo exaratis deſcripſit ediditque Tho. Hearnius: Qui Appendicem etiam Notaſque ſubjecit. Oxford 1716 in 8vo. XVI. Aluredi Beverlacenſis Annales, ſive Hiſtoria de Geſtis Regum Britanniæ, Libris IX. E codice pervetuſto, calamo exarato, in Bibliotheca Viri clariſſimi Thomæ Rawlinſoni, Armigeri, deſcripſit ediditque Tho. Hearnius. Qui & Præfatione, Notis, atque Indice illuſtravit. Oxford 1716 in 8vo. There were but one hundred and forty eight copies printed. XVII. Gulielmi Roperi Vita D. Thomæ Mori Equitis aurati, Linguâ Anglicanâ contexta. Accedunt Mori Epiſtola de ſcholaſticis quibuſdam Trojanos ſeſe appellantibus; Academiæ Oxonienſis Epiſtolæ & Orationes aliquammultæ; Anonymi Chronicon Godſtovianum, & feneſtrarum depictarum Eccleſiæ Parochialis de Fairford in Agro Gloceſtrienſi Explicatio. E Codicibus vetuſtis deſcripſit ediditque, Notiſque etiam adornavit Tho. Hearnius. Oxford 1716 in 8vo. There were but an hundred and forty eight copies printed. XVIII. Gulielmi Camdeni Annales Rerum Anglicarum & Hibernicarum regnante Elizabetha. Tribus Voluminibus comprehenſi. E Codice præclaro Smithiano, propria Auctoris manu correcto, multiſque magni momenti Additionibus locupletato, eruit ediditque Tho. Hearnius, aliumque inſuper Codicem è Bibliotheca Rawlinſoniana adhibuit. Oxford 1717 in 8vo. XIX. Gulielmi Neubrigenſis Hiſtoria ſive Chronica Rerum Anglicarum, libris quinque. E Codice manuſcripto pervetuſto in Bibliotheca prænobilis Domini Domini Thomæ Sebright Baronetti, uberrimis additionibus locupletata, longèque emendatiùs quam antehac edita. Studio & opera Tho. Hearnii, qui & præter Joannis Picardi Annotationes, ſuas etiam Notas qualeſcunque & Spicilegium ſubjecit. Accedunt Homiliæ tres eidem Gulielmo à Viris eruditis adſcriptæ, partim è Codice præclaro antedicto, partim è Codice antiquo Lambethano nunc primum editæ. Oxford, 1719, in 8vo. XX. Thomæ Sprotti Chronica è Codice antiquo MSto in Bibliothecâ prænobilis Adoleſcentis Dni Edvardi Dering de Surrenden Dering in Agro Cantiano Baronetti, deſcripſit ediditque Tho. Hearnius: qui & alia quædam Opuſcula e Codicibus MSStis authenticis a ſeipſo itidem deſcripta ſubjecit. Oxford, 1719, in 8vo. XXI. A Collection of curious Diſcourſes, written by eminent Antiquaries upon ſeveral Heads in our Engliſh Antiquities, and now firſt publiſhed chiefly for the Uſe and Service of the young Nobility and Gentry of England. Oxford, 1720, in 8vo. XX. Textus Roſſenſis, Accedunt Profeſſionum antiquorum Angliæ Epiſcoporum Formulæ de canonicâ obedientiâ Archiepiſcopis Cantuarienſibus præſtandâ, & Leonardi Hutteni Diſſertatio Anglicè conſcripta de Antiquitatibus Oxonienſibus. E Codicibus MSS. deſcripſit ediditque Tho. Hearnius. Oxford, 1720, in 8vo. XXIII. Roberti de Aveſbury Hiſtoria de Mirabilibus Geſtis Edvardi tertii. Accedunt, 1. Libri Saxonici, qui ad manus Joannis Joſcelini venerunt. 2. Nomina eorum, qui ſcripſerunt hiſtoriam gentis Anglorum, & ubi exſtant, per Joannem Joſcelinum. E Codicibus MSS. deſcripſit ediditque Tho. Hearnius. Appendicem etiam ſubnexuit, in quâ, inter alia, continentur, Letters of King Henry VIII to Anne Bolen. Oxford, 1720, in 8vo. XXIV. Johannes de Fordun Scotichronicon genuinum, una cum ejuſdem Supplemento ac Continuatione. E Codicibus MSS. eruit ediditque, Appendicem etiam ſubjunxit, totumque Opus (in quinque Volumina diſtinctum) Præfatione atque Indicibus adornavit Tho. Hearnius. Oxford, 1722, in 8vo. XXV. The Hiſtory and Antiquities of Glaſtonbury. To which are added, 1. The Endowment and Orders of Sherington's Chantry founded in St. Paul's Church, London. 2. Dr. Plot's Letter to the Earl of Arlington concerning Thetford. To all which pieces (never before printed) a Preface is prefixed, and an Appendix ſubjoined. Oxford, 1722, in 8vo. XXVI. Hemingi Chartularium Eccleſiæ Wigornienſis. E Codice MSS. penes Richardum Graves de Mickleton in Agro Glouceſtrienſi Armigerum, deſcripſit ediditque Tho. Hearnius; qui & eam partem Libri de Domeſday, quæ ad Eccleſiam pertinet Wigornienſem, aliaque ad Operis (duobus Voluminibus comprehenſi) nitorem facientia ſubnexuit. Oxford, 1723, in 8vo. XXVII. Robert of Glouceſter's Chronicle. Tranſcribed, and now firſt publiſhed from a MS. in the Harleyan Library. To which is added, beſides a Gloſſary and other Improvements, a Continuation (by the Author himſelf) of this Chronicle from a MS. in the Cottonian Library. In two Volumes. Oxford, 1724, in 8vo. XXVIII. Peter Langtoft's Chronicle, (as illuſtrated and improved by Robert of Brunne) from the Death of Cadwalader to the end of King Edward the Firſt's reign. Tranſcribed, and now firſt publiſhed from a MS. in the Inner-Temple Library. To which are added, beſides a Gloſſary, and other curious Papers, 1. A Roll concerning Glaſtonbury Abby, being a Survey of all the Eſtates belonging to that Houſe at the Diſſolution, taken by King Henry the Eighth's order, and for his uſe. 2. An Account of the Hoſpital of St. Mary Magdalen near Scroby in Nottinghamſhire, by John Slacke, Maſter of that Hoſpital. 3. Two Tracts by an anonymous Author; the firſt relating to Conqueſt in Somerſetſhire; the ſecond concerning Stone-henge. Oxford, 1725, in two Volumes in 8vo. XXIX. Johannes, Confratris & Monachi Glaſtonienſis, Chronica, ſive Hiſtoria de Rebus Glaſtonienſibus. E Codice MS. membraneo antiquo deſcripſit ediditque Tho. Hearnius. E quo Codice & Hiſtoriolam de antiquitate & augmentatione vetuſtæ Eccleſiæ S. Mariæ Glaſtonienſis præmiſit, multaque excerpta e Richardi Beere (Abbatis Glaſtonienſis) Terrario hujus cœnobii ſubjecit. Accedunt quædam eodem ſpectantia, ex egregio

Snotteſbrooke, to take him into his own houſe, which accordingly he did about Eaſter 1695, and provided for him as if he had been his own ſon, and inſtructed him in Religion and Claſſical Learning every day, when at home hearing him read himſelf, and when abſent taking care that he ſhould read to Mr. Dodwel, when both the one and the other explained to him the difficult places, and always illuſtrated them with curious and uſeful obſervations. December the 4th 1695 Mr. Cherry had him entered a Batler of Edmund Hall in Oxford, where he was matriculated the day following, and then returned to Mr. Cherry's, by whoſe order he went again daily to ſchool at Bray four miles diſtant from Mr. Cherry's, till Eaſter Term 1696, when Mr. Cherry went himſelf with him to Oxford, provided a chamber and all neceſſaries for him, and ſaw him fully ſettled before he returned. Here Mr. Hearne followed his ſtudies ſo cloſely as to be ſoon taken conſiderable notice of by Dr. Mill, Principal of Edmund Hall, who being then buſy about the Appendix to his edition of the New Teſtament, and finding this young man to be verſed in manuſcripts, got him to compare for him ſome manuſcripts, which are uſed in the ſaid Appendix. At three years ſtanding he went at Dr. Mills's requeſt to Eton, to compare a manuſcript of Tatian and Athenagoras (for both authors are comprehended in the ſame manuſcript) in that Library. The variations were afterwards made uſe of by Mr. Worth in his edition of Tatian, and by Mr. De Chaire in his edition of Athenagoras, but without any mention made by either Editor of him, who collated the manuſcripts. The book, in which Mr. Hearne wrote the Variations, is now in the Bodleian Library. He was likewiſe very aſſiſtant to Dr. Grabe, at that time Reſident in egregio MS. communicato ab amicis eruditis Cantabrigienſibus, ut & Appendix, in quâ, inter alia, de S. Ignatii Epiſtolarum Codice Mediceo, & de Johannis Dee, Mathematici celeberrimi, vitâ atque ſcriptis agitur. Oxford, 1726, in 8vo. XXX. Adami de Domerham Hiſtoriæ de Rebus geſtis Glaſtonienſibus. E Codice MS. perantiquo, in Bibliothecâ Collegii S. Trinitatis Cantabrigiæ, deſcripſit primuſque in lucem protulit Tho. Hearnius, qui & (præter alia, in quibus Diſſertatio de Inſcriptione perveteri Romanâ Ciceſtriæ nuper repertâ) Gulielmi Malmeſburienſis Librum de Antiquitate Eccleſiæ Glaſtonienſis, & Edmundi Accheri Excerpta aliquammulta ſatis egregia è Regiſtris Wellenſibus, præmiſit. Oxford, 1727, in 2 Volumes in 8vo. XXXI. Thomæ de Elmham Vita & Geſta Henrici quinti, Anglorum Regis. E Codicibus MSS. Vetuſtis deſcripſit, & primus luci publicæ dedit Tho. Hearnius. Oxford, 1727, in 8°. XXXII. Liber Niger Scaccarii. E Codice, calamo exarato & a Richardo Graveſio Mickletonienſi donato, deſcripſit & nunc primus edidit Tho. Hearnius; qui & cum duobus aliis codicibus MSS. Contulit, Wilhelmique etiam Worceſtrii Annales rerum Anglicarum (antehac itidem ineditos) ſubjecit. Oxford, 1728. In Two Volumes in 8vo. XXXIII. Hiſtoria Vitæ & Regni Richardi II. Angliæ Regis, a Monacho quodam de Eveſham conſignata. Acceſſerunt, præter alia Joannis Roſſi Hiſtoriola de Comitibus Warwicenſibus; Joannis Berebloci Commentarii de rebus geſtis Oxoniæ, ibidem commorante Elizabethâ Reginâ; & D. Ricardi Wynne Baronetti Narratio hiſtorica de Caroli, Walliæ Principis, Famulorum in Hiſpaniam Itinere A. D. MDCXXIII. E Codicibus MSS. nunc primus edidit Tho. Hearnius. Oxford, 1729, in 8vo. XXXIV. Joannis de Trokelowe Annales Edvardi II. Henrici de Blaneforde Chronica, & Edvardi II. Vita a Monacho quodam Malmeſburienſi fusè enarrata. E Codicibus MSS. nunc primus divulgavit Tho. Hearnius. Qui &, præter Appendicem (in quâ, inter alia, Ordinationes Collegii Orielenſis) monumenta quædam vetera, ab Edmundo Archero communicata, ſubjunxit. Oxford, 1729, in 8vo. XXXV. Thomæ Caii (Collegii Univerſitatis regnante Elizabethâ Magiſtri) Vindiciæ antiquitatis Academiæ Oxonienſis contra Joannem Caium, Cantabrigienſem. In lucem ex Autographo emiſit Th. Hearnius: Qui porrò non tantum Antonii Woodi Vitam à ſe ipſo conſcriptam, & Humphredi Humphreys (Epiſcopi nuper Herefordienſis) de viris claris Cambro-Britannicis Obſervationes, ſed & reliquias quaſdam ad Familiam religioſiſſimam Ferrariorum de Gidding Parva in agro Huntingdonienſi pertinentes ſubnexuit. Oxford, 1730, in two Volumes in 8vo. XXXVI. Walteri Hemingforde, Canonici de Giſſeburne, Hiſtoria de rebus geſtis Edvardi I. Edvardi II. & Edvardi III. Accedunt, inter alia, Edvardi III. Hiſtoria per anonymum; Narratio de Proceſſu contra Reginaldum Peacockium, auctore Joanne Whethamſtedio; Excerpta hiſtorica è Thomæ Gaſcoignii Dictionario Theologico; Libellus de Caroli I. ab urbe Oxonienſi fugâ ſive diſceſſu, Notitiaque Domorum Religioſarum in Diœceſi Batho-Wellenſi. E Codicibus MSS. nunc primum publicavit Tho. Hearnius, Oxford, 1731, in two Volumes in 8vo. XXXVII. Duo rerum Anglicarum Scriptores veteres, viz. Thomas Otterbourne & Johannes Whethamſtede, ab origine gentis Britannicæ uſque ad Edvardum IV. E Codicibus MSS. antiquis nunc primus eruit Tho. Hearnius. Accedunt, inter alia, Liber de Vitâ & Miraculis Henrici VI. per Johannem Blackmannum; Statuta Hoſpitalis de Ewelme in Agro Oxonienſi; Literæ perplures de rebus geſtis in partibus noſtris Septentrionalibus A. D. M. D. XXIII. & M. D. XXIV. in quibus Epiſtolæ autographæ perpaucæ Margarettæ, Scotorum Reginæ, Henrici noſtri VII. filiæ natu majoris; Franciſci Godwyni Catalogus, hactenus ineditus, Epiſcoporum Bathonienſium & Wellenſium, Humphredique Humphreys Commentariolus de Decanis Bangorienſibus & Aſaphenſibus. Oxford, 1733, in two Volumes in 8vo. XXXVIII. Chronicon ſive Annales Prioratûs de Dunſtable, una cum Excerptis è Chartulario ejuſdem Prioratûs. E Codicibus MSS. in Bibliothecâ Harleianâ deſcripſit primuſque vulgavit Tho. Hearnius. Oxford, 1733, in 8vo. XXXIX. Benedictus, Abbas Petroburgenſis, de Vitâ & Geſtis Henrici II. & Ricardi I. E Codice MS. in Bibliothecâ Harleianâ deſcripſit, & nunc primus edidit Tho. Hearnius. Acceſſerunt alia. Oxford, 1735, in two vol. in 8vo. At the end of this work he publiſhed propoſals for printing from an antient MS. in the Harleyan Library, Joannis Beveri, Monachi Weſtmonaſterienſis, Chronicon a Bruti primi Regis introitu in hanc Inſulam uſque ad annum Domini 1306. To which was to be added from an old MS. in the ſame Library, Joannis Merylinch, Monachi Glaſtonienſis, Rerum (in Angliâ ſpeciatim ac Hiberniâ) ſub novem primis annis Joannis XXII^di, Pontificis Romani, geſtarum, Deſcriptio. This work was to have been printed in two Volumes in 8vo; but our Author did not live to finiſh the edition. He wrote likewiſe a piece printed in 1731 in 8vo, under the title of, A Vindication of thoſe who take the Oath of Allegiance to his preſent Majeſtie from Prejudice, Injuſtice, and Diſloyaltie, charged upon them by ſuch as are againſt it. Wherein is evidently ſhewed, that the common good of a Nation is what is primarily and principally reſpected in an Oath, and therefore when the Oath is inconſiſtent with that, the Perſons who have taken it, are abſolved from it. In proving of which the Caſe of Maud and King Stephen is particularly conſidered. In a Letter to a Nonjuror. It is addreſſed to Mr. Cherry, from whom it came, with many other MSS, expreſly by will to the Bodleian Library. It is dated from Edmund Hall in Oxford, June 11, 1700. It was publiſhed without Mr. Hearne's knowledge or conſent. In the Preface there is ſome account of him and his writings. Our Author made the Index to Sir Roger L'Eſtrange's Tranſlation of Joſephus into Engliſh, London, 1702, in Folio. Three Indexes to Cyrilli Hieroſolymitani Opera, Oxford, 1703, in Folio; the Index to the four parts of Dr. Edwards's Preſervative againſt Sociniani/m, Oxford, 1704, in 4to; and that to the Lord Clarendon's Hiſtory of the Rebellion, Oxford, 1704, in Folio.

in Edmund Hall, for whom he collated many manuſcripts, and made conſiderable collections. In Act Term 1699 he took the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and determined in the ſchools the Lent following. Soon after this he was offered very advantageous terms to go a miſſionary to Mary-Land, and was wrote to for that purpoſe by Dr. White Kennet, at the inſtance of Dr. Bray Commiſſary to the Biſhop of London for the care of the Weſtern Plantations. But being unwilling to leave Oxford and the valuable acquaintance, which he had contracted there, he choſe to decline the offer. Having taken his degree he became a conſtant Student in the Bodleian Library, and was ſo remarkable on this account, that Dr. Hudſon, ſoon after he was elected Library-Keeper, took him in for his Aſſiſtant, having firſt obtained leave of the Curators for that purpoſe. In this place he did very conſiderable ſervice to the Library. At the public Act in Act Term 1703 he took the degree of Maſter of Arts. Upon the death of Mr. Emanuel Pritchard, Janitor of the public Library, that place was conferred on Mr. Hearne, to whom afterwards were offered two Chaplainſhips ſucceſſively of Corpus Chriſti and All Souls Colleges by the reſpective Heads of thoſe houſes, both of which he was obliged to decline, as he could not hold either of them with the office of Janitor, which he choſe not to give up. In 1712 he became ſecond Library-Keeper of the Bodleian Library on the death of Mr. Jo. Crabb. January the 19th 171$\frac{4}{5}$ he was elected Superior or Eſquire Beadle in the Civil Law of the Univerſity of Oxford, which he held till the 8th of November following with his place of Under-Librarian; but then finding that they were not tenable together, he gave up the Beadleſhip, and very ſoon after relinquiſhed the other place alſo, upon the account of the oaths, with which he could not comply. In this opinion he continued to the laſt, having ſeveral times refuſed the offer of ſuch preferments, as would have been of great advantage and very agreeable to him (a). He died [B] June 10, 1735, aged fifty five years, and lies interred in the ſouth-ſide of the Church-yard of St. Peter's in the Eaſt at Oxford, where there is a tomb erected for him with an inſcription written by himſelf [C].

(a) Theſe particulars were extracted from a life of our author written by himſelf, and communicated to us by the learned and ingenious Dr. William Bedford, to whom Mr. Hearne left his manuſcripts.

[B] He died.] Some particulars of his death are contained in the following Letter dated at Oxford June 13th 1735. "Laſt night at my return home I "found Mr. Hearne dead. He died on Tueſday in "the evening. This morning I made it my buſineſs "to gain the beſt account of his affairs, and found "his will in the hands of the Apothecary, who attended him in his illneſs, which was of his own "hand-writing, and in it are the following paragraphs. Imprimis, I give and bequeath to Mr. "William Bedford of London, ſon of my late Friend "Helkiah Bedford, all the MSS. and other Books, "that Dr. Thomas Smith left me. Item, I give and "bequeath to the ſaid Mr. William Bedford all the "MSS. of my own collection and writing, and all "printed Books by me collated with MSS. or that have "MS. Notes upon them, and all MSS. whatſoever now "in my poſſeſſion. Item, I give and bequeath to the aforeſaid Mr. William Bedford my box or cabinet of coins, "medals, and other things contained therein. And my "deſire is, that whatſoever hands they may hereafter "fall into, they may be kept together, and never be expoſed but to perſons, that underſtand them. This is "the ſenſe, and pretty near the words of that part "of the Will, Upon a paper found with his Will is "his Epitaph of his own hand-writing, In the beginning of his illneſs he was obſtinate; but as it "increaſed, and he grew weaker, he was the more "willing to comply with the directions given him. "But this, I believe, will not be much talked of, "nor known to the world. He refuſed to have any "of his relations ſent for, and ſuffered but few people to ſee him; nor any to ſit up with him all "night, till the night before he died, though he "had ſuffered for want of help in the night by "tumbling out of bed, &c. His poor relations "have already found eight or nine hundred pounds "in caſh among the books and papers in his chambers; and when the whole comes to be turned over, "expect to find more (*)."

(*) They found in all about thirteen hundred pounds.

[C] An Inſcription written by himſelf.] It is as follows: Here lyeth the body of Thomas Hearne, M. A. who ſtudied and preſerved Antiquities. He dyed June 10. 1735. aged 55 years. Deut. xxxii. 7. Remember the days of old; conſider the years of many generations, aſk thy father, and he will ſhew thee, thy Elders, and they will tell thee. Job viii. 8, 9, 10. Enquire, I pray thee. H.

HEBEDJESU, Patriarch of the Neſtorians who were reconciled to the Church of Rome under Pius IV, in the year 1562. I have mentioned him already under another name (a), by which ſeveral authors have called him; but I thought that what I have ſtill to ſay of him deſerved to be related in this place. Since the article of ABDISSI was printed, I have read in a very curious work (b), that after the death of Simon Julacha [A], a Monk of St. Pachomius's Order, whom Pope Julius III had made Patriarch of the Neſtorians, "Abdjeſu, or Hebedjeſu, if you will pronounce his name "after the manner of the Chaldeans, was choſen Patriarch in his ſtead. Abraham "Ecchellenſis,

(a) Under the name of Abdiſſi; ſee that article.

(b) The title of it is, Hiſtoire Critique de la Creance & des Cortumes des Nations du Levant, Publiſhed by the Sieur de Moni, at Frankfort, for Frederic Arnaud, (or rather at Rotterdam for Reiner Leers) 1684. It is thought that Father Simon is the author of that Hiſtory.

[A] Simon Julacha.] He ſhould have ſaid Sulacha; as Aubertus Miræus has done (1). We ought not to wonder that the Criticks are able to collect an infinite number of various readings from manuſcripts, ſince even printed Books are not without them. The Sieur de Moni names Caremit that city in Meſopotamia, which Aubertus Miræus calls Charemet. The latter calls that perſon Donha Simon, whom the former calls Denha Simon. They both wrote after the ſame Author, namely Peter Strozza in his book de Chaldæorum Dogmatibus (of the opinions of the Chaldæans); why then did they not ſpell the ſame words after the ſame manner? Is it eaſier to write Sulacha than Julacha, Donha than Denha? Monſieur Arnauld, who follows the ſame Author, aſſerts (2), that Simon Sulacha ſettled his reſidence at Caramit. Monſieur Claude (3) makes uſe of the name of Sulak. Father Paul in the beginning of his Vth Book (4) ſays one Simon Sultakam; and Monſieur Amelot does not correct this in his French Tranſlation. Theſe are mere trifles, I own it; but ſuch trifles have often occaſioned very real and very conſiderable controverſies. Hæ nugæ ſeria ducunt in mala, i. e. "Theſe trifles lead to real evils." It would be better for the Republick of Letters, if writers would make it their duty to avoid even the moſt inſignificant errors.

(1) Polit. Eccleſiaſt. pag. 216.

(2) Perpet. Défendue, liv. 5. chap. 10.

(3) Reponſe à la Perpet. Défendue, liv. 4. chap. 5.

(4) Of the Hiſtory of the Council of Trent.

" Ecchellenſis, who has publiſhed a ſmall treatiſe of Abdjeſu in the Syriac tongue [B], " ſtiles him Metropolitan of Soba, in the preface which he has prefixed to that work. " He obſerves that this Hebedjeſu compoſed ſeveral works in defence of Neſtorius's " Religion, but that being come to Rome under Pope Julius III, he abjured Neſtori- " aniſm. It is he that is mentioned in the Life of Pius IV, under whoſe Pontificate he " took a ſecond journey to Rome [C], with a deſign to be confirmed in his Patriarchate, " and he was preſent at the Council of Trent [D]. As he was a man of parts, he had " the art to perſuade a great number of Neſtorians to enter into the pale of the Church " of Rome. But his ſucceſſors, who wanted his ſkill and ability, could not keep them " in that obeiſſance. Ahathalla, who was alſo a Monk of St. Pachomius's Order, ſuc- " ceeded Hebedjeſu; but dying ſoon after, he was ſucceeded by Denha Simon, who " had been before Archbiſhop of Gelu. This laſt was obliged to leave Caremit [E], " and to retire into the Province of Zeinalbech ſituated at the extremity of Perſia, " having been forced to yield to the power of the Patriarch of Babylon. His ſucceſſor, " who was alſo called Simon, reſided in the ſame place, which leſſened very much the " authority of this ſecond Patriarch." This is what I read in that book (c). When I drew up the article of Abdiſſi, I imagined that we might depend on Father Paul's account; but I muſt not omit what I have ſince obſerved in Father Palavicini; namely, that it is not true that this Patriarch wrote letters to the Council. You will find in the notes below what has been cenſured in Father Paul's account [F].

(c) Page 85.

[B] Abr. Ecchellenſis has publiſhed a ſmall Treatiſe of Abdjeſu in the Syriac Tongue.] I imagine it to be the ſame Treatiſe, which Monſieur Arnaud mentions, when he quotes (5) the Notes of Abraham Ecchellenſis the Maronite upon a Catalogue of Chaldean Books written by Abdjeſu or Hebedjeſu, a Neſtorian Biſhop, who was reconciled to the Church of Rome. Some pages lower (6) he mentions ſome circumſtances relating to Hebedjeſu, which deſerve to have a place here; for they ſerve to let us know what ſort of a man our Hebedjeſu was. " He had been formerly one of the moſt " paſſionate Neſtorians, ſays Monſieur Arnaud, and " wrote ſeveral Books, whilſt he laboured himſelf un- " der their errors, and he gives us a liſt of thoſe Books " in the Catalogue he has made of the Chaldean Books " compoſed by him, which Catalogue has been tranſ- " lated into Latin by Ecchellenſis. It appears from " that Catalogue, that the Book intitled Margarita- " rum (of Pearls) was written by him, whilſt he was " ſtill a Neſtorian." It is obſerved in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary (7), that the Catalogue of Syrian Writers (it is no doubt that of which Hebedjeſu is the Author) was printed at Rome in the Syriac Language in the year 1653, with Abraham Ecchellenſis's Latin Tranſlation and Notes; that this Catalogue mentions ſeveral works compoſed in Syriac by Hebedjeſu; that there are lodged in the Library of the Vatican two Poems compoſed in the Syriac tongue, and written with his own hand, in which he gives an account of his re-union, &c. Aubertus Miræus (8), that this Patriarch's picture was placed in the Palace of the Vatican amongſt thoſe of Cardinals and Prelates, who attended Pope Alexander III, when he received the Emperor Frederic's ſubmiſſions at Venice.

(5) Perpetuité de la Foy Défendue, liv. 5. chap. 5.

(6) In chap. 10.

(7) In the article EBED-JESU.

(8) Polit. Eccleſiaſt. pag. 217.

[C] He took a ſecond journey to Rome.] I wonder that neither Father Paul, nor his Cenſurer Cardinal Pallavicini, nor any of the ſeveral Authors I have conſulted concerning Hebedjeſu, ſhould mention his journey to Rome under Pope Julius III. This particular would have been neither ſuperfluous nor uſeleſs; and I am perſuaded that they would not have omitted it, had they known it.

[D] He was preſent at the Council of Trent.] I have confuted this falſity in another place. It will be ſufficient to obſerve here, that there is never ſuch a pitiful Writer but may ſometimes miſlead the moſt eminent Authors. Peter Strozza, Secretary to Pope Paul V, was probably impoſed upon by ſome ſorry Chronicler, and it is no doubt upon that Secretary's credit, that the Sieur de Moni and Mr. Arnaud (9) before him have aſſerted, that Hebedjeſu was preſent at that Council.

(9) Perpetuité défendue, liv. 5. chap. 10.

[E] Denha Simon . . . was obliged to leave Caremit.] This happened at the time when Leonard Abel Biſhop of Sidon went into the Levant in the character of Apoſtolick Nuncio (10). He was a native of Malta, and underſtood perfectly well the Arabick Tongue, which is in a manner the mother-tongue in that Iſland. He died at Rome in the year 1605, or 1606. He wrote a work concerning the Condition of the Chriſtians in the Eaſt, out of which work Aubertus Miræus, from whom I borrow this whole remark, confeſſes, that he extracted a great many things, which are to be read in his Notitia Epiſcopatuum (Account of Biſhopricks.) He adds that this work of Leonard Abel is in manuſcript in the Library of the late Cardinal Aſcanio Colonna, Protector of the Churches in the Eaſt, and that this Library has been wonderfully improved by the addition of Cardinal William Sirlet's books.

(10) See Aubertus Miræus, pag. 218, &c. of his Status Politiæ Eccleſiaſticæ, printed at Lyons in the year 1620.

[F] You will find in the Notes below what has been cenſured in Father Paul's account.] This Author relates, that they read the Letters of Cardinal Amulius, " who being Protector in the Churches of the Eaſt " acquainted the Council with the news of Abdiſſi's " arrival. . . . He aſſerted, that the Nations ſubject to " this Prelate had been inſtructed in the Faith by the " Apoſtles St. Thomas and St. Thaddæus, &c (11). The Hiſtorian adds, that they read afterwards this Patriarch's Confeſſion of Faith, and laſtly the Letters, which he wrote to the Council, deſiring to be excuſed from going thither, which was impoſſible for him, &c (12). Cardinal Pallavicini (13) relates this more fully and more accurately, not blending together what Amulius ſaid by the Pope's Command, with the conſequences he drew himſelf from the Neſtorian Prelate's account. It does not appear that Father Paul made this diſtinction, But his chief blunder is his aſſerting that they read the Letter, which Abdiſſi had written to the Council. Pallavicini maintains that ſuch a Letter never exiſted but in Father Paul's imagination (14).

(11) Fra-Paolo, Hiſt. du Concile de Trente, liv. 6. pag. 557. of Amelot's Tranſlation.

(12) See the article of ABDISSI.

(13) Hiſt. Concil. Trident. lib. 18. cap. 9. num. 5.

(14) Sed hæc Epiſtola non in alia pagina, niſi in Suaviana imaginatione fuit exarata. Idem, ibid. num. 8.

HEGESILOCHUS was one of thoſe who committed a thouſand outrages in the iſland of Rhodes, when the Democratical Government was changed there into an Ariſtocracy, by the credit of Mauſolus King of Caria (a). Athenæus has tranſmitted to us ſome inſtances of the exceſſes of which theſe new maſters were guilty (b). They committed adultery with the wives of the moſt eminent Citizens, and raviſhed ſeveral boys. At laſt they carried their licentiouſneſs ſo far, that they even ſtaked at dice the honour of the women [A], and it was a rule eſtabliſhed amongſt them, that the loſer ſhould be obliged obliged to procure to the winner the Lady who had been played for, and ſhould employ all poſſible means and artifices to bring her into his arms. They ſuffered no foul play; perſuaſions and violence were to ſucceed each other, and either to precede or to follow each other according as it was found neceſſary, till the full and actual payment of what had been ſtaked. Hegeſilochus was the perſon who played at this new game moſt often and moſt ſhamefully (c). His drunkenneſs and other exceſſes rendered him ſo uncapable of managing public affairs, that he loſt his dignity, and his very friends looked upon him as an infamous wretch. He ought not to be miſtaken for another HEGESILOCHUS who was ſent Embaſſador to Rome by the Rhodians [B], after he had been raiſed to the higheſt office in the State [C]. The latter lived in the time of Perſeus King of Macedon, and the former in the time of Philip Alexander the Great's father.

(a) See Libanius, in Argum. Orat. Demoſth. pro Rhod. Libertate.

(b) Athen. lib. 10. cap. 12. pag. m. 444. ex Theopompo.

[A] He was one of thoſe Rhodians . . . . that ſtaked at dice the honour of the women.] The Abbot Lancelot of Peruſia had here a very good opportunity to put the Hoggidiani to a non-plus; for I do not think that there has been in this age in any Country of Europe ſuch a licentiouſneſs as that of the Rhodians was.

(c) Ταύτην τὴν κυβείαν ἔπαιζον καὶ τῶν ἄλλων Ῥοδίων τινές. ἐπιφανέστατα δὲ καὶ πλειστάκις αὐτὸς ὁ Ἡγησίλοχος: Athen. lib. 10. cap. 12. ex Theopompo, pag. 445. (inſteadof*ſæpiſſime* i. e. oftner) there is ſæviſſime, moſt cruelly, in the edition of Lyons, 1657.

I have been told, indeed, that the footmen of a certain great Miniſter of State, who has not been long dead, uſed to play for Captains Commiſſions at dice or at cards; but, beſides that this ſtory is very uncertain, it was nothing very material; namely, that every one of theſe footmen was promiſed, for a Chriſtmas-box, at the year's end, that a certain number of companies would be given to the perſons recommended by him: after which they played this fund between them; and when any of them loſt a company, it was not at his recommendation, but at the winner's, that the company was given. Notwithſtanding this diſorder, it was an eaſy matter to prevent Commiſſions from being given unleſs to perſons proper to ſerve in the armies; and therefore this was by no means to be compared with the diſſoluteneſs of thoſe little tyrants of Rhodes, who played for maidenheads, and for horns to be planted on the heads of the moſt eminent men, and who would not give the loſer any reſt, till he had delivered them their prey. It was not enough for them to venture the honour of the moſt beautiful women (inſeparable from that of their huſbands, ſince men would have it ſo) but they expoſed alſo their own reputation; for the loſer was to do the office of a pimp. This was enough to make a man cry out, ô tempora! ô mores! Oh the wicked age and corrupt morals.

[B] Another HEGESILOCHUS was ſent Embaſſador to Rome by the Rhodians.] Polybius acquaints us with this (1). There was Geſilochus in the manuſcripts: but Fulvius Urſinus (2) having obſerved in Livy (3), that this ſame Rhodian was called Hegeſilus, corrected theſe two Authors by each other, and wrote Hegeſilochus in both.

(1) Excerpt. ex Legat. cap. 64.
(2) Notis in ea Excerpta.

[C] He was raiſed to the higheſt office in the State.] It was called πρυτανεία (4), and the functions of it were expreſſed by the verb πρυτανεύειν. The Latins have called them who enjoyed that dignity Prytanes. Quadraginta navibus, auctore Hegeſilocho, comparatis, ſays Livy (5), qui cum in ſummo Magiſtratu eſſet (Prytanim ipſi vocant). i. e. "They fitted out forty ſhips by Hegeſilochus's command, who being then in the higheſt office, which they call Prytanis, &c."

(3) Titus Livius, lib. 42.
(4) See Meurſius, de Rhodo, pag. 65.
(5) Tit. Livius, lib. 42.

HEIDANUS (ABRAHAM) Profeſſor of Divinity at Leyden, was born at Frankenthal in the Palatinate Auguſt the 10th 1597. He went through his courſe of polite Literature at Amſterdam, where his father Jaſper Heidanus had been choſen a Miniſter in the year 1608. An Engliſhman called Matthew Sladus (or Slade) who was then Rector (or Principal) of the College at Amſterdam took a particular care of Abraham Heidanus, whom he found to be a very hopeful youth. Daniel Colonius did not apply himſelf with leſs zeal to improve his pupil, when he was committed to his care in the Walloon College at Leyden. Colonius being none of thoſe hot-brained Divines, who would have things carried to extremes, when the Arminian controverſies broke out, was ſuſpected to incline that way [A]; ſo that ſeveral perſons took it very ill, that Jaſper Heidanus ſhould ſuffer his ſon to ſtudy under ſuch a maſter. But theſe raſh ſlanders produced a quite contrary effect to what thoſe zealots intended. The Miniſter of Amſterdam left his ſon under the tutorſhip of Colonius, his ancient friend, with whoſe Orthodoxy he was perfectly well acquainted. He left, I ſay, his ſon with him, to give his friend

[A] Colonius being none of thoſe hot-brained Divines . . . was ſuſpected of Arminianiſm.] This is one of the moſt diſagreeable inconveniencies that attend religious controverſies. They who by their natural diſpoſition or from an exact knowledge of the true intereſt of the Church, endeavour to reconcile the minds of the people, and do not ſpeak of cutting off the unſound members, become ſuſpected of heterodoxy. The hot-tempered, angry, and paſſionate zealots, who are always crying out principiis obſta, and are continually repeating this maxim, the evil muſt be nipped in the bud, expoſe thoſe that are moderate, and draw the people's hatred upon them. Hence it happens, that ſome perſons, who otherwiſe are not of a paſſionate temper, do yet give up the outward appearance of moderation; and chooſe rather to act againſt their own inclination, and even againſt their conſcience, than to be look'd upon as perſons who baſely betray the good cauſe. The zealots know perfectly well, that this will be the effect of their ſlanders, and therefore they ſpread them to the utmoſt of their power, and without the leaſt ſcruple, privately from houſe to houſe, and publickly from the pulpit. This happened in the beginning of the Arminian Controverſy, if we may believe Wittichius. Vigebat illo tempore ob diſcrepantes de prædeſtinatione ſententias, non tantum inter diſſentientes magna contentio, quæ animos a ſe invicem alienabat & disjungebat, ſed etiam inter ὁμοψήφους & idem de controverſia illa ſentientes obſcura quædam diffidentia, qua locus dabatur ſuſpicionibus, quibus alii alios tanquam bonæ cauſæ minus addictos differebant. Qui enim ferventioris erant ingenii, & omnia ſumma tentanda in initiis putabant, ut in herba opprimeretur malum, quoſcunque videbant moderatius & lentius agere, ac de reconciliatione animorum potius laborare, ſi vulnus forte poſſet conſolidari, ac ſchiſma, quod ad opera carnis pertinet, evitari, eos tanquam prævaricatores bonæ cauſæ apud plebem criminabantur (1). i. e. "The different opinions about Predeſtination occaſioned at that time not only a great diſpute "between thoſe who differed in their opinions, which "alienated and divided them from each other; but it "created even amongſt thoſe, who had the ſame "thought and opinion of that controverſy, a ſecret "and hidden miſtruſt, which gave riſe to ſuſpicions, "by which ſome repreſented the others as perſons little affected to the good cauſe. For they that were "of a hot temper, and imagined that the ſevereſt courſe "was to be taken in the beginning, to nip the evil "in the bud, traduced thoſe as traytors, who acted "with more moderation and meekneſs, and were of "opinion that it was proper to endeavour a reconciliation between the two parties, if it were poſſible "to heal the wound by that means, and to prevent a "ſchiſm, which belongs to the works of the fleſh." This is a very natural deſcription. Such diſputes occaſion a violent war without; and produce within bad

(1) Wittich. in Oratione funebri Heidani.

ſeeds

friend by that means an authentic teſtimony that they both agreed in their opinions. The pupil made a great progreſs under Colonius, and did not follow the example of moſt of the other ſtudents, who only filled their heads with the controverſy concerning the five articles of the Remonſtrants (a). He learnt this, and alſo all that was proper for him to know. He was admitted a Proponent by the Synod of the Walloon Churches in the year 1618, and preached in ſeveral French Churches with great applauſe of the audience; he preached alſo in ſome Dutch Churches with the ſame ſucceſs. He travelled during two years, and viſited part of Germany, Switzerland, France, and England. Soon after his return into Holland he was promoted to the office of a Miniſter of the Goſpel, and exerciſed the functions of it at Naerden till the year 1627, when he accepted the offers of the Conſiſtory of Leyden. He was betrothed to the daughter of one of the moſt eminent Merchants of Amſterdam, when he took poſſeſſion of that new living, and ſoon after he celebrated his nuptials. He was a very good preacher, and this together with ſeveral good qualities of his heart and mind gained him a very great reputation. He was fifty years old when the Province of Guelderland being determined to found an Univerſity at Harderwyk offered him the Profeſſorſhip of Divinity upon very advantageous terms. The Church of Leyden being willing to keep him, offered him either the like advantages, or in general wherewithall to make him amends abundantly for what he refuſed. The Governors of the Univerſity found out a better method ſtill to prevent his going into Guelderland; they conferred upon him the Profeſſorſhip of Divinity, which happened to be vacant by the death of Conſtantine L'Empereur. He was ſo well pleaſed with his ſituation at Leyden, that he would not accept the offers which the Elector Palatine made him, though that Prince endeavoured moſt earneſtly to perſuade him to it. Notwithſtanding his refuſal the Elector gave him a very honourable and kind reception [B], when he paſſed through Heidelberg in the year 1656, in the journey he took to Straſburg with his family. Profeſſor Smidius, who invited him to a public diſputation, and deſired him to propoſe his objections, did not get off with honour [C]. But Heidanus's victory on this occaſion was not ſo viſible as that which he gained in the College of the Jeſuits at Cologne [D]. This learned man died at Leyden, with ſeeds of ſuſpicions, which are wonderfully fruitful. It produced, amongſt other things, as I obſerved juſt now, a great alteration in thoſe, whom right reaſon inſpired with a ſpirit of moderation. They are rendered odious like hidden traytors (2), and there happen to be ſome, who do not chooſe to be reaſonable at that rate, and imagine that juſtice and equity would coſt them too dear, if it made them loſe their reputation; they do therefore ſet up for perſecutors, in order to refute the ſlanderers;

(a) Studioſi juvenes in partes diſtracti, & quæſtionibus illis quotidianis agitati, ſæpe quo ſe verterent neſcirent, & neglecto pietatis ſtudio ille doctiſſimus haberetur, qui de quinque iſtis articulis argutè diſſerere, & adverſarium argumentis irretire poſſet, ſecuri de reliquis fidei articulis cognoſcendis, quaſi in hoc ſolo omnis eruditionis culmen poſitum eſſet. Wittichius, in Orat. Fun. Heidani.

(2) See the article FERRIER, (Jeremy) remark [D] towards the end, and remark [L].

Tanto major famæ ſitis eſt quam virtutis (3).
That is,
" So much the thirſt of honour fires the blood,
" So many would be great, ſo few be good."
Dryden.

(3) Juvenal, Sat. 10. ver. 140.

This is what was done in France by ſeveral Roman Catholicks, who had not approved the ſeverity that was uſed againſt the Proteſtants, under Francis I and Henry II.

[B] The Elector gave him a very honourable and kind reception.] They who may find it ſtrange that I ſhould give an account of this, will thereby cenſure Mr. Wittichius rather than me: For it is more reaſonable to tranſcribe ſuch particulars in a Dictionary that contains two volumes (*) in folio, when one meets with them in a funeral Oration, than to expatiate upon them in funeral Orations, when one only tranſcribes them from a manuſcript. However it be, Wittichius tells us, that a meſſenger was ſent every day to Abraham Heidanus to invite him to dinner, nor does he forget to mention the preſents which Heidanus received. Dum Heidelbergam appulit, nihil omiſit ſereniſſimus Elector quod non ferventiſſimum erga ipſum ſpiraret affectum. Ad menſam quotidie, novis ſemper miſſis nunciis, invitabat, in colloquiis benevole complectebatur, donabat medio cervo, & aliquot leporibus, nunciato hanc omnem eſſe prædam, quam illo die cepiſſet; quæcumque in diverſorio cum familia conſumpſerat, liberaliſſime ſolvit, & cum Bacheracum rediiſſet, ad ſuos Leidenſes reverſurus, magno dolio optimi & generoſiſſimi vini Bacheracenſis voluit donatum. i. e. " When he was " arrived at Heidelberg, the moſt ſerene Elector omit- " ted nothing that was capable of teſtifying the great " affection he had for Heidanus; he ſent every day new " meſſengers to invite him to dinner; and when in his " company he treated him moſt kindly, he made him " a preſent of half a buck, and ſome hares, telling " him it was all they had taken in hunting that day; " the Elector alſo paid all that Heidanus had ſpent " with his family at his inn. And when he was come " again to Bacrach (†) on his return to Leiden, the " Prince would give him a large caſk of the beſt wine " of Bacrach."

(*) Mr. Bayle's Dictionary contained but two volumes in the firſt edition.

(†) A town of the Lower Palatinate of the Rhine, famous for its excellent wine.

[C] Profeſſor Smidius, who . . . . deſired him to propoſe his objections in a public diſputation, did not get off with honour.] Heidanus having ſeveral times deſired to be excuſed from entering the liſt, was at laſt prevailed upon by Smidius's repeated civilities; he propoſed his objections againſt univerſal Grace, which the Lutherans maintain; the whole audience heard him with a very great attention, and the ſucceſs was very glorious for Heidanus. Smidius ipſum palam non ſemel, ſed quia declinabat noſter, iteratis vicibus ad opponendum invitavit, quod, cum non videretur ſibi ſalvo honore ſuo poſſe detrectare, ea ſoliditate, ea efficacia Gratiam, quam Lutherani urgent, Univerſalem ita oppugnavit, ut omnium oculos in ſe converterit, & apud omnes præſentes magnam admirationem ſuæ conſummatæ eruditionis excitaverit, diſputationis vero præſes multorum judicio parum honorificè ex illa diſputatione diſceſſerit (4). i. e. " Smi- " dius invited him more than once to propoſe his ob- " jections in a public diſputation; and as he declined " it, he entreated him ſo earneſtly to it, that he thought " at laſt, he could not refuſe it without expoſing his " reputation; he made ſuch ſolid and ſtrong objecti- " ons againſt univerſal Grace, which the Lutherans " maintain, that he drew the attention of the whole au- " dience upon himſelf, and filled them with admiration " of his conſummate learning; and in the opinion of " ſeveral, the Moderator at this diſputation (‡) did " not come off very honourably."

(4) Wittichius, in Oratione funebri Heidani.

(‡) It was Smidius himſelf.

[D] Heidanus's victory . . . . was not ſo viſible, as that which he gained in the College of the Jeſuits at Cologne.] If this laſt victory could more eaſily be obſerved than the former, yet it was leſs glorious, for it conſiſted only in the making of a joke, to which the Jeſuit, who had ſhewed him all that was worth to be ſeen, in the College of the Jeſuits, and who was perhaps but a lay-brother, had not one word to anſwer. Heidanus aſked that Jeſuit, whether Jeſus Chriſt had done and ſuffered all that was neceſſary for our ſalvation: Yes, anſwered the Jeſuit; to which Heidanns replied, you Jeſuits are not then his aſſociates. The Jeſuit loaded with ſhame and aſtoniſhment had nothing to anſwer. Malincrot, Dean of Munſter, who heard that diſcourſe, and who was become acquainted with Heidanus, with a great ſenſe of devotion, October the 15th 1678, having finiſhed his eighty firſt year, which is reckoned to be the moſt dangerous of all the climacteric years, and not without reaſon. He left four children, two ſons and two daughters, thirteen grandſons, and three great grandſons. He had a great ſhare in Des Cartes friendſhip, and compleated by that means the deſign he had begun under Jachæus Profeſſor of Philoſophy at Leyden, and one of the moſt ſubtle Peripatetics who were then living. This Jachæus rendered the controverſy about ſubſtantial forms famous [E] in the Univerſity. Young Heidanus, being ſtirred up by the noiſe it made, examined the objections thoroughly, and compared them with Jachæus's anſwers. He found, that as long as men would argue upon ſuch principles, they would only loſe their time; and he hoped that a ſafer road would one day or other be diſcovered (b). He pretended to have found it in the writings and converſations of Des Cartes. But if this road were more proper to lead him to the knowledge of truth, it was not the ſafeſt with regard to his temporal intereſt; for it expoſed him to a thouſand vexations, and to a thouſand proſecutions [F], of which his

(5) Dum Coloniæ initio itineris aliquot dies ſubſiſteret, in diverſorio inciderit in familiaritatem Malincrotii. . . viri elegantiſſimi ingenii, qui inter literatos primatum jure merebatur, hominis Pontificiæ quidem religioni addicti, ſed moderati, qui etiam nunquam cum Heidano de religione ſermonem voluit cædere. Idem, ibid.

Heidanus (5), wiſhed him joy for this victory, which you gained, ſaid he, over my enemies. Wittichius, who did alſo hear this converſation, relates it thus. Accidit ut poſtquam Collegium luſtraveramus Jeſuitarum, & jam in area eramus conſtituti ut patribus valere diceremus, converſus Heidanus ad Jeſuitam qui nos ducebat, ex ipſo rogaverit, annon Jeſus omnia illa quæ ad ſalutem eſſent neceſſaria egiſſet & paſſus fuiſſet? Ac Jeſuita nihil ſiniſtri metuens, reſpondiſſet, Omnino: Heidanus regeſſerit: Ergo vos non eſtis Socii Jeſu; atque ſic illo in ruborem dato & attonito ut ne verbum quidem reſpondere poſſet, diſceſſit noſter & nos cum ipſo, atque patribus valere dixit. Quod Malincrotium tanto affecit gaudio, ut hoc nomine gratias ſolennes illi egerit, quod ſic ſuos hoſtes (ita vocabat Jeſuitas) ad incitas ex improviſo redegiſſet. i. e. "It happened that after we had "viewed the College of the Jeſuits, and when we "were already in the court to take our leave of the "Fathers, Heidanus turning himſelf to the Jeſuit, "who had conducted us, aſked him whether Jeſus "had not done and ſuffered all that was neceſſary for "our Salvation? Upon which the Jeſuit, who ap"prehended no trap in that queſtion, anſwered inno"cently, By all means; upon which Heidanus re"plied, you Jeſuits are not then his aſſociates; at "which the Jeſuit bluſhed with ſhame, and was ſo "ſurprized, that he could not anſwer one ſingle word; "ſo that Heidanus, and we with him, retired, having "bid the Fathers farewell. Malincrot was ſo well "pleaſed with this, that he returned Heidanus thanks, "for reducing his enemies (thus he called the Jeſuits) "ſo unawares to a non-plus." I confeſs that I have hitherto vainly endeavoured to find where the jeſt lies in the conſequence which Heidanus drew (α); I cannot gueſs what he hinted at, nor by what Logical rules he argued.

§ (α) To ſtile one's ſelf a perſon's aſſociate, is, ſtrictly ſpeaking, to pretend to be in all reſpects like him; now the Jeſuit confeſſed, that the members of his Society were not Chriſt's aſſociates in the work of our redemption; whence it follows, that it is without reaſon they call themſelves the aſſociates or companions of Jeſus Chriſt. Such was Heidanus's argument, to which the Jeſuit having nothing to reply, Malincort looked upon it a victory gained by his friend Heidanus. CRIT. REM.]

[E] Jachæus rendered the controverſy about ſubſtantial forms famous.] There is no queſtion in Natural Philoſophy that ſhews more evidently than this, how great the power of prejudice is. It darkens men's minds with regard to the plaineſt notions; for there are a great many perſons that think a ſubſtance cannot be drawn from matter, unleſs it be there beforehand, or unleſs it be produced by a true creation. The Peripatetics tell you faintly, or rather they aſſert in a paſſionate manner, that the forms do not exiſt in their ſubject, and yet that they are produced out of it by an action, which muſt not be called a creation, but an eduction (6). This doctrine would be the greateſt of monſters, were it not a more monſtrous prodigy to ſee, that ſome very learned and ingenious men do ſtill maintain at this time the doctrine of ſubſtantial forms. Wittichius could not better prepare his audience to meet with a diſciple of Des Cartes in the perſon of Heidanus, than by obſerving to them, that this ſame Heidanus, when he was ſtill but a ſtudent, conceived an ill opinion of the Schoolmen's doctrine, by the unexplicable difficulties in which Jachæus intangled himſelf. Fervebat in Academia quæſtio de formis ſubſtantialibus, earumque ex potentia materiæ productione, quæ mirificè non tantum Auditores, ſed & ipſum defenſorem earum acerrimum Jachæum vexabat & torquebat. Quam cum univerſa diſtinctionum ſuarum panopliâ expedire non poſſet, & ad liquidum oſtendere quænam illæ formæ ſubſtantiales eſſent, à materia realiter diſtinctæ & tamen materiales, quænam illa potentia materiæ, an pars ejus quædam converſa in formam, an vero ejus cùm producitur tantum ſuſtentaculum, an autem, ut ex aſſere figura ſcammi educitur, ita eodem modo præexiſteret in materia forma; cumque aliæ plurimæ ſupereſſent difficultates, nec ullum ſuppeditaretur filum ex hoc labyrintho emergendi, factum eſt ut auditores & perſpicaciores diſcipuli, inter quos Heidanus primas obtinebat, de tota hac philoſophandi ratione quam intelligendo aſſequi ſe non poſſe videbant, plane deſperarent (7). i. e. "The "queſtion concerning ſubſtantial forms, and their pro"duction from the power of matter, was at that time "very much debated in the Univerſity; and did won"derfully puzzle, and perplex not only the audience, "but even the moſt ſtrenuous aſſertor of theſe forms, "I mean Jachæus, who notwithſtanding his great "ſtore of diſtinctions was not able to extricate him"ſelf, or to explain in a clear manner, what theſe "ſubſtantial forms are, how they are really diſtinct "from matter, and yet material; what that power of "matter is; whether ſome part of matter be changed "into a form, or whether matter be only the form's "ſupport when it is produced: whether the form "pre-exiſted in matter after the ſame manner as the "figure of a bench in a piece of wood, out of which "it is carved. As there were a great many more "difficulties beſides theſe, and no thread could be "found to get out of that labyrinth, it happened "that the audience, and the moſt ingenious ſcholars, "amongſt whom Heidanus was the moſt eminent, "gave that Philoſophy entirely over, finding it was "abſolutely impoſſible to make ſenſe of it."

(7) See the article GORLÆUS (David), remark [A].

[F] Des Cartes's method expoſed him to a thouſand vexations, and to a thouſand perſecutions.] I do not know the particulars of this, but I remember a paſſage in his Conſiderations, in which he relates, that he raiſed a great many enemies againſt himſelf, and was expoſed to horrid ſlanders, becauſe he was always averſe from too ſevere maxims. He had not declared war againſt Proteſtant Canons; he had not thundred from the pulpit againſt Periwigs; it had not been his opinion, that the Remonſtrants who returned into the boſom of their antient mother, ought to be rigorouſly examined. Hereupon he was traduced as an enemy of the new Reformation, which ſome would eſtabliſh; all his other opinions were ſtrictly examined; he was charged with being addicted to Des Cartes's ſentiments, and with deſpiſing the ſabbath-day. Ætatem illam meam ancipitem duxi, modo tempeſtates, hinc expertus halcyonia, intra & extra nos paſſus adverſarios, hinc hoſtes, inde fratres, nec nunquam mordacis linguæ exceptus flagellis. Fuit, cum ſciſſam in partes chariſſimam hanc noſtram Eccleſiam metu prævidimus: tum nobis ſed eam ſapientiam ſimul largitus eſt Deus, ut quidvis pati totius, quam idipſum permittere, maluerimus. Hinc jam Moderatores, per contemptum (ac ſi probroſum hoc nomen foret) audivimus; jam ut Carteſii plus ſatis addicti Philoſophiæ; hinc Sabbathi contemptores; inde novæ quam urgebant quidam Reformationis hoſtes traducti his Panegyriſt Wittichius, from whom I borrow this article, thought it proper to ſay nothing. Heidanus was of a good family [G]. I ſhall mention his works below.

(6) A Jeſuit called John Guilleminot, Doctor of Divinity in the Univerſity of Pont-a-Mouſſon, publiſhed at Paris in the year 1679 two Diſſertations De Principiis intrinſecis rerum corporearum, i. e. "Of the inter"nal Principles "of corporeal "things," in which he racks his brains to prove againſt F. Maignan, that the production of the forms is not a real creation. Vain endeavours!

traducti ſumus: quod fœneratoribus trapeziticis pluſculum illis concedere viſi, nec Canonicis bellum indicere, neque de ſuggeſtis in comas detonare, neque Eccleſiæ diſciplinam ſtrictiùs, nec Remonſtrantes ad nos tranſeuntes rigidiùs examinare, & quæ ſunt id genus alia (8). i. e. "My life has been a ſcene of various accidents; ſometimes I was in a ſtorm, and then enjoyed happy days again: I met with ſeveral adverſaries both at home and abroad, ſome amongſt the enemies, and ſome amongſt my brethren; nor was I ever free from the ſlanders of an evil tongue. It was when our dear Church being divided into parties, I foreſaw, out of fear, the evils that might befall her; but then, God vouchſafed that prudence to me, rather to undergo any thing, than to ſuffer thoſe evils to happen by my fault. Hence I was called, by way of contempt, a Moderator, as though ſuch a man was a reproach. I was traduced as a man too much addicted to Des Cartes's opinions; and as a deſpiſer of the ſabbath-day; hence as I was calumniated as an enemy to the new Reformation, which ſome would introduce, becauſe I was a little more indulgent than others, to thoſe that lend money upon intereſt; becauſe I did not declare war againſt the Canons; becauſe I did not thunder from the pulpit againſt periwigs; becauſe I would not have the Eccleſiaſtical diſcipline exerciſed with too much rigour, nor thoſe Remonſtrants examined too ſeverely who returned to us; and for other reaſons of the ſame nature." Things were carried to ſuch a length, that he was depoſed from his Profeſſorſhip for the following reaſon. The Governors of the Univerſity of Leyden made a decree January the 16th 1676, by which the Profeſſors were prohibited to treat, in what manner ſoever it might be, of ſome propoſitions (9), which of late were very much controverted, and of Des Cartes's Metaphyſics. Heidanus acted againſt this decree almoſt in the ſame manner as the Janſeniſts did againſt the Archbiſhop of Paris's charge, by which he prohibited the reading of the French Tranſlation of the New Teſtament printed at Mons. Heidanus criticiſed upon that decree; he pretended to find irregularities or errors in it which rendered it void; he aſſerted that the twenty propoſitions which had been condemned, had not been controverted in the Univerſity of Leyden, as the Governors declared; he complained that theſe Gentlemen ſuffered themſelves to be impoſed upon by unfair extracts. He made an odious parallel between thoſe that furniſhed thoſe extracts, and the Jeſuits, who cauſed ſome propoſitions to be condemned at Rome as if they were maintained by Janſenius, though they were no where to be met with in Janſenius's works. He made uſe alſo of another compariſon; for he quoted a Lutheran writer, named Giles Hunnius, who pretended to convict John Calvin of Judaiſm by ſome extracts artfully tranſcribed from his works. Laſtly, he explained the propoſitions that were condemned, and endeavoured to ſhew that they were orthodox in the ſenſe of the authors, from whoſe works they were extracted. This work of Heidanus was firſt printed in Dutch, and afterwards in Latin (10). The Governors of the Univerſity were ſo exaſperated at it, that they depoſed this Profeſſor. Heidanus's friends pretend, that this was the happieſt event that could befal him, becauſe his old age could not ſuffer him to acquire a new reputation by his Lectures, nor even to keep that fame up, which he had already gained; they added alſo, that his deprivation endeared him more and more to his party, and rendered him more venerable to them (11), and was proper to make the other party more odious.

(8) Heidanus, Conſiderationes ad res quaſdam nuper geſtas in Academia Batava, pag. 40. i. e. "Reflections upon ſome late tranſactions in the Univerſity of Leyden."

(9) They mentioned twenty propoſitions, ſome of which were Theological, and the others philoſophical.

(10) I make uſe of the Latin tranſlation printed at Hamburg, 8vo, 1678.

(11) Florus, lib. 4. cap. 4. expreſſes this by theſe words, injuria favorabilis, i. e. "a favourable injuſtice; and Tacitus, Annal. lib. 3. cap. 75. by Commendatio ex injuria; i. e. "an injury which becomes a recommendation.

[G] Heidanus was of a good family.] Gerard Vander Heyden, his great grandfather was of Mechlin) (12), and of an antient and honourable family. His grandfather Jaſper Vander Heyden was of the ſame city; but he was expelled his father's houſe, becauſe he had embraced the reformed Religion. He was choſen a Miniſter at Antwerp, whence the perſecution obliged him to retire to Francfort, where he met with ſeveral Refugees, whom the ſtrict Lutherans would not ſuffer to live in that city; which obliged them to petition Frederic II Elector Palatine for a place where they might live ſecure. Peter Dathenus was at their head. The Elector granted them the Monaſtery of Frankenthal, whence the Monks were commanded to retire. Theſe Refugees performed their religious exerciſes there in the Dutch tongue, and converted that monaſtery by degrees into a town. Dathenus being called to Heidelberg, our Jaſper Vander Heyden was choſen Paſtor of that church in his ſtead. He was deſired to be preſent at the National Synod held at Embden in the year 1571, and was choſen Preſident or Moderator of that Aſſembly, in which the Canons of the Church-diſcipline were drawn up. Soon after his return into the Palatinate, the Elector commanded him to attend his ſon, whom he ſent with an army to ſuccour the reformed in the Low-Countries: theſe troops being routed, Vander Heyden retired into Holland, and was Preſident in the National Synod which met at Dort in the year 1574. He was for ſome time Miniſter of the church at Middleburg, and thinking himſelf afterwards ſecure by the pacification concluded at Ghent, he returned to his former flock at Antwerp. This city being taken by the Spaniards, he returned into the Palatinate, and was made Superintendant of the Churches about Bacrach. He was upon the point to reſign this employment in order to ſatisfy the deſire of the Church of Frankenthal, who deſired his miniſtry again, when he died, leaving only one ſon, named Jaſper, like him who was born in the year 1566. This ſon was firſt Miniſter at Volmerſheim, then at Frankenthal, and laſtly at Amſterdam, where he died in the year 1626. He married Clara Vander Borne, daughter of the High Bailiff of Frankenthal, and had ſix ſons and eight daughters by her. Our Abraham Heidanus was one of his ſons (13).

(12) Proavus illi fuit Gerhardus Vander Heyden, antiqua & honeſta familia natus Mechliniæ. Wittichius, in Orat. funebri Heidani.

(13) Taken from Wittichius's Funeral Oration on Heidanus.

[I] I ſhall mention his works below.] He publiſhed Orations upon ſeveral ſubjects; an Examination of the Catechiſm of the Remonſtrants; a book in 4to, De Origine Erroris (Of the Origin of Error) and a book in Dutch in which he aſſerts the cauſe of God againſt the Pelagians, and Semi-Pelagians, with ſo much ſtrength, that no body could anſwer him, Evolve ſolidiſſimum & nunquam ſatis laudandum Commentarium de Cauſa Dei Belgice ante plures annos conſcriptum (qui digniſſimus videtur ut in Latinam linguam transferatur, ut ab exteris legi poſſit) in quo adeo nervoſe, adeo eloquenter partes Dei defendit contra hominem, ut Pelagiani nihil in hunc uſque diem potuerint reperire, quo vires ſuas plane attritas & fractas queant reſtaurare (14). i. e. "Read his ſolid Commentary concerning the cauſe of God, which work can never be ſufficiently commended; it was written in Dutch ſeveral years ago, and deſerves to be tranſlated into Latin, that foreigners may read it. The author aſſerts in that book the cauſe of God againſt man with ſo much ſtrength and eloquence, that the Pelagians could not till this day find any thing to re-eſtabliſh their ſyſtem, which he has entirely ruined and overthrown." As to his Corpus Theologiæ Chriſtianæ in quindecim locos digeſtum; i. e. "Body of Chriſtian Divinity reduced to fifteen topics" it was printed after his death in two volumes in 4to in the year 1686, by the care of Mr. Crucius his grandſon. See the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres (15).

(14) Wittichius, ibid.

(15) For June 1686, in the Catalogue of New Books, num. 7. pag. 729.

HELENA, daughter of Tyndarus King of Lacedemon, was the moſt beautiful woman of her age [A]; but otherwiſe without the leaſt honour or virtue, and her whole life

[A] She was the moſt beautiful woman of her age.] There are ſome authors (1), who have given a particular deſcription of the beauty of Helena. The Writer, who is moſt ample on the ſubject, is Conſtantine Manaſſes: he has introduced into eleven Greek verſes a conſiderable number of epithets, which repreſent the life was full of unhappy adventures. There are ſome authors who have given ſo particular an account of the perfections of her body [B], that they cannot be excuſed, even when they ſay in expreſs terms, that they only did it by way of amuſement. She was ſought natural perfections of this Lady. He has not forgot to mention, that her beauty owed nothing to artifice, and that her complexion, without having occaſion for waſhes, had a noble luſtre (2). They have aſcribed to her legs well made, a little mouth (3), a long neck and very white (4), large eyes, and fine breaſts (5). Brantome furniſhes me with a paſſage relating to this laſt particular. "Helena, ſays he (6), being deſirous one day to preſent to the Temple of Diana "an handſome cup in conſequence of a vow, and employing a Goldſmith to make it, ordered him "to take the model from one of her handſome breaſts, "and he made the cup of white gold, in ſuch a manner, that one could not tell whether to admire moſt, "the cup, or the reſemblance of the breaſt, which he "had taken for his model, and which appeared ſo "pretty, and ſo like, that the artificial one could not "but create a deſire for the natural. Pliny relates "this with great admiration, and is very particular, "where he aſſerts that there is white gold, which is "very ſtrange, and that this cup was made of white "gold. . . . Whoever ſhould make gold cups from the "large dugs of ſome women, muſt furniſh the Goldſmith with a great deal of gold, and would not eſcape afterwards the laughter of the world when it "ſhould be ſaid, See, there are cups modelled after the "breaſts of ſuch and ſuch Ladies. Theſe cups would "not reſemble cups, but round wooden pails, which "the hogs are ſerved with, and the nipple would reſemble a rotten cherry." Brantome is miſtaken in two points; for Helena did not dedicate this cup in the Temple of Diana; and it is not true, that Pliny aſſerts it to have been made of white gold. Minervæ templum habet Lindos inſula Rhodiorum in quo Helena ſacravit calicem ex electro. Adjicit hiſtoria mammæ ſuæ menſura. i. e. "There is a temple of Minerva "at Lindos an Iſland of the Rhodians, in which "Helena dedicated a cup of Electrum. Hiſtory adds, "that it was of the ſame proportion of her breaſt." Here is what Pliny ſays in the IVth chapter of the XXXIIId Book.

(1) Dares Phrygius, Cedrenus.

To return to Helena, I obſerve, that the deſcriptions, which have been made of her beauty, do not give us an idea of it equal to what we form from reading a paſſage in the Iliad, which have nothing of a deſcription in them. Homer only introduces the Counſellors of Priam, who ſaw Helena coming while they were deliberating upon the affairs of State with their Prince, ſaying, that neither the Greeks nor Trojans were to be blamed for ſuffering ſo many evils for ſo divine a beauty.

Οὐ νέμεσις Τρῶας καὶ εὐκνήμιδας Ἀχαιοὺς
Τοιῇδ' ἀμφὶ γυναικὶ πολὺν χρόνον ἄλγεα πάσχειν·
Αἰνῶς ἀθανάτοισι θεῇς εἰς ὦπα ἔοικεν.

"They cried, no wonder ſuch celeſtial charms
"For nine long years have ſet the world in arms;
"What winning graces! what celeſtial mien;
"She moves a Goddeſs, and ſhe walks a Queen!"
Pope.

(2) Καλὸς ἀνυπονόητον, ἀβλαβῆ τὸν, αὐτόχρουν. Conſtantin. Manaſſes, cited by Meziriac upon Ovid, pag. 917.

(3) Cruribus optimis, ore puſillo. Dares Phrygius.

(4) Δειρὴ μακρὰ καταλεύκος. Conſtantin Manaſſes. He adds, that on this account the Poets feigned, that ſhe was born of a ſwan. Meziriac knew not that this notion came from Lucian. See the remark [Q].

(5) Ὀφθαλμοὺς ἔχουσα μεγάλους, εὐμάσους. Cedrenus.

(6) Mémoires des Dames Galantes, tom. 1. pag. m. 275.

(7) Homer. Iliad. lib. 3. ver. 156. See Athenæus, lib. 5. pag. 188. and Quintil. lib. 1. cap. 4. pag. m. 378.

[B] There are ſome Authors, who have given ſo particular an account of the perfections of her body] A Spaniſh Monk remarks, that the beauty of this woman was a prodigy of nature, and for a great many ages it was uſual to ſay, when a perſon deſigned to pay the higheſt compliment to a beauty, ſhe is an Helena. He adds, that John Nevizan ſaid, that of thirty things, which are neceſſary to make a woman perfectly handſome (α), there was not one, which ſhe wanted. Nacio eſta tan aventajada, y enrequecida de hermoſura, que fue un portento, un prodigio, y milagro de naturaleza, quedando deſde aquel tiempo à eſte, y aun para muchos ſiglos, en proverbio, ſu belleza, y gallardia: de tal ſuerte, que quando queremos ponderar, y encarecer la hermoſura de una muger, dezimos que es una Helena: y en tal lugar la pone, el Nivernienſe (8), Natal Comite, Bartolomo Caſaneo, Juan Nemizano (9); el qual pone las treynta coſas, que ſe requieren para que una muger ſea perfectiſſima en ſu hermoſura: y dize que las tenia todas ſin faltar ninguna, la hermoſa Helena (10). I believe, that he had not ſeen the work of John Nevizan, and that he ſpoke merely upon the authority of Chaſſaneuve, who not only cites it, but alſo quotes the Latin Verſes, which contain the thirty things, which are ſaid to comprehend the perfection of beauty, and were all centered in the perſon of Helena. Difficile eſt cuſtodire quam plurimi amant, it is Caſſaneuve who ſpeaks (11), ut ſatis colligitur ex dictis Jo. Nevizani Aſtenſis in ſua Sylva nuptiali, in ampliatione 7. in verb. quæro juxta prædicta, ſi ſint duo, ubi ponit, quid operetur pulchritudo mulieris. Et ibi dicit, quod debet habere triginta quatuor, ad hoc, ut ſit pulchra, quæ his verſibus ibi poſitis continentur: i. e. "It is difficult to ſecure a woman, who is the object "of many perſons love, as ſufficiently appears from "a paſſage in John Nevizanus Aſtenſis's Sylva nuptialis, where he lays down the effects of a woman's "beauty; and ſays, that ſhe ought to have thirty "four things, in order to be handſome, which things "are contained in the following verſes introduced "there:

Triginta hæc habeat, quæ vult formoſa vocari
Fœmina, ſic Helenam fama fuiſſe refert.
Alba tria, & totidem nigra, & tria rubra puella:
Tres habeat longas res, totidemque breves.
Tres craſſas, totidem graciles: tria ſtricta, tot ampla
Sint itidem huic formæ: ſint quoque parva tria.
Alba cutis, nivei dentes, albique capilli,
Nigri oculi &c.

That is,

"Let her, who would be accounted beautiful, have "theſe thirty things, for which Helena is reported "to have been eminent; three things white, three "black, and three red; three long, and three ſhort; "three thick, three ſlender; three narrow, three "wide, and three ſmall. A white ſkin, white teeth, "and white hair, black eyes, &c."

I ſuppreſs the reſt of this little Latin Poem (12), tho' Caſſaneuve, who was firſt Preſident of the Parliament of Aix, made no ſcruple to inſert it intire in his Book. He makes this addition: Non aliter hic inſiſto circa talia, cum ſatis, & ultra quam decens ſit, ponatur in dicta Sylva nuptiali. i. e. "I ſhall not inſiſt farther "upon theſe points, ſince enough and more than is "decent is laid down in the ſaid Sylva nuptialis." I may maintain with reaſon, that thoſe, who thus quote John Nevizan, are not exact, ſince he himſelf copies from other writers, and cites them by their names. The ſource, to which he had recourſe, is a French writer, whoſe Book is intitled De la Louange & Beauté des Dames. The eighteen Latin verſes, which he cites, and which Chaſſaneuve has quoted after him, were a Tranſlation from the French by Francis Corniger. He ſays that it was not then printed, but that there was an Italian Verſion in a Book publiſhed by Vincent Calmeta. Et triginta requiſita, ſays he (13), enumerantur per Gallicum in libr. de la loüange & beauté des dames circa fin, quas Latinas fecit Franciſc. Corniger, quem nunc refero, quia non eſt impreſſus: ſed bene Vincentius Calmeta idem ponens in carm. vulgari. incip. dolce Flaminia, & ecloga proxima ſeq. incip. per dare riſpoſta Lege ergo verſus Cornigeri. i. e. "And thirty qualifi- "cations are reckoned up by a French Author in his "Book de la Loüange & Beauté des Dames towards "the end, which are tranſlated into Latin by Francis "Corniger, whoſe tranſlation I quote, becauſe it is "not printed. But Vincent Calmeta has properly in- "troduced theſe verſes in an Italian Poem beginning "Dolce Flaminea, and the following Eclogue begin- "ning per dare Riſpoſta. Read Corniger's Verſes:"

Triginta hæc habeat &c.

If you conſult the Book intitled Les neuf Matinées du Seigneur de Cholieres, you will find there a Sonnet (14), which begins thus,

(8) That is to ſay, Raviſius Textor.

(9) He ought to ſay, Nevizano.

(10) Baltaſar de Victoria, Predicador de San Franceſco de Salamanca, Theatro de los Dioſes de la Gentilidad, lib. 2. cap. 9. pag. 181. edit. de Salamanca, 1620.

(11) Bartholomæus Chaſſanæus, in Catalogo Gloriæ Mundi, Part. 2. Con. 22. pag. m. 168.

(12) It contains 18 verſes.

(13) Joann. Nevizanus, in Sylva Nuptiali, Art. 93. pag. 182. edit. Lugd. 1572, in 8vo.

(14) Pag. 167. of the Paris edition, printed by John Richer, 1585 in 8vo.

(α) See Brant. tom. 2. pag. 330. of his Dames Galantes. CRIT. REM.

sought for in marriage by a great number of Princes; and as her father knew not how to act, being fearful of exasperating those to whom he should refuse her, he learned an excellent expedient of Ulysses (a). It was to engage all the rivals to swear, that they would approve the choice he should make of a son-in-law, and be ready to assist him against those, who should endeavour to disturb Helena's marriage. Upon this Tyndarus married her to Menelaus [C]. She had before been stollen away by Theseus; but she was believed upon her word, that she escaped with her virginity [D]. However there was nothing less true. Theseus had not sent her back without having a child by her, of which she was brought to bed at her sister's (b). The affair continued a secret, because her sister made the child (c) pass for her own (d). The usual fate of young women when they are carried away, is to change their condition, whether they own it or not. The more beautiful they are, the more probable it is, that they have submitted to this Law. Our romance writers have not attended to this [E]; or they have preferred a scene

(a) Apollodorus, lib. 3. See also Pausanias, lib. 3. pag. 103. who remarks, that they swore upon the entrails (according to Amasæus's translation, the testicles) of an horse, who was sacrificed and afterwards buried there. See likewise Socrates in Encomio Helenæ.

(b) Clytemnestra, Wife of Agamemnon.

(c) The child whom Helena brought forth was the famous Iphigenia.

(d) See remark [D].

Celle qui veut paroir des belles la plus belle Ces dix fois trois beautez, trois longs, trois courts, trois blancs,
Trois rouges, & trois noirs, trois petits, & trois grands,
Trois estroits & trois gros, trois menus soient en elle.

and ends with these words, levres, doigts & cheveux menus, tell' fut Helene. The conclusion is no less impertinent than all the preceding verses; for to know that Helena was so made, it would not have been sufficient to have seen her, while she was performing her exercises at Lacedemon (15); it was necessary to have been Paris or Menelaus, or some other of those men, who had been her husbands, or gallants.

(15) Inter quos Helene nudis capere arma papillis Fertur, nec fratres erubuisse deos. Propert. Eleg. 13. lib. 3. See the article LYCURGUS, remark [B].

[C] Tyndarus married her to Menelaus.] Some say (16), that he did not himself choose Menelaus for his son-in-law, but that he permitted Helena to choose among her lovers, whom she pleased, and that she preferred Menelaus to the rest. Apollodorus (17) asserts, that Tyndarus resigned his Kingdom to his son-in-law; but others tell us (18), that he only appointed him his successor. Helena therefore was a noble fortune, since with so accomplished a person she brought a crown to the man, whom she married.

(16) Hygin. cap. 78.

(17) Biblioth. lib. 3.

(18) Hygin. cap. 78.

[D] She had before been stolen away by Theseus; but she was believed upon her word, that she escaped with her maidenhead.] According to Plutarch, she was not of a marriageable age, when Theseus stole her from the Temple of Diana, where she was dancing (19). He put her under the care of his mother (20), and placed them both under the protection of one of his good friends at Aphidnæ, and went upon another adventure to seize a Lady (21) with his friend Perithous. Castor and Pollux, Helena's brothers, lost no time; they entered Attica with an armed force to demand their sister. The Athenians protested, that they knew not where she was. This answer was not satisfactory; hostilities were ready to begin, when one Academus informing Helena's brothers that she was at Aphidnæ (22), they went to attack that city, and carried it by assault. The gates of Athens were opened; they entered the city without committing the least disorder; they demanded only to be initiated in the mysteries. They carried Helena back to Lacedemon: it is said likewise that they carried away Theseus's mother, and this Lady attended Helena (23) to Troy (24).

(19) Plutarch. in Theseo, pag. 15.

(20) Her name was Æthra.

(21) Proserpina, daughter of Aidoneus, King of the Molossians.

(22) Herodotus, lib. 9. cap. 77. ascribes this to the Decelians, a Tribe of Athens, or at least to Decelus himself.

Hellanicus makes Theseus fifty years old (25), and Helena seven (26), at the time she was carried away, and does not scruple to say, that Theseus lay with her. Duris the Samian affirms (27), that Helena was with child of Iphigenia, when she was rescued from the hands of her ravisher. Pausanias says the same thing, and adds, that she was brought to bed at Argos at the house of her sister Clytemnestra, wife of Agamemnon, and that she committed the care of her daughter's Education to her (28). He says, that Euphorion, Alexander Pleuronius, and Stesichorus had asserted in their Poems, that Iphigenia was the daughter of Theseus and Helena. The Argians were so much persuaded of this, that they believed, that Helena, after her child-birth, built the Temple of Lucina, which was to be seen in their city (29). A great many persons were deceived on this occasion. Agamemnon thought that Iphigenia was his daughter; for his wife assured him so. Castor and Pollux were persuaded, that their sister returned a virgin; for when they asked her upon this tender point, she answered that she had never

(23) See the article ACAMAS, remark [A].

(24) Plutarch. in Theseo, pag. 15.

(25) Apud Plutarch. ibid. pag. 14.

(26) Apud Tzetzen in Lycophron.

(27) Cited by Meziriac sur les Epitres d'Ovide, pag. 482.

(28) Pausan. lib. 2. pag. 65.

(29) Idem, ibid.

never been touched. Θησέως δὲ Ἑλένης τῆς Διὸς ἐγένετο θυγάτηρ Ἰφιγένεια, ἣν αὐτὴν ἐξέτρεφεν ἡ πᾶς Ἑλένης ἀδελφὴ Κλυταιμνήστρα πρὸς δὲ τὸν Ἀγαμέμνονα εἶπεν αὐτὴ τεκεῖν Ἑλένη γὰρ πυθανομένη τῶν ἀδελφῶν, ἔφη κόρη παρὰ Θησέως ἀπελθεῖν (30). What shall we say of Menelaus, who married her some time after? He thought, that himself was the first, who had opened the breach, and yet he had married one, who had been a mother.

(30) Nicander, lib. 4. Alterator. apud Antonin. Liberalem, Narrat. 27.

When I said that Helena was questioned by her brothers, I followed the learned Monsr. Meziriac (31), who thus understands the Greek passage, which I quote: but others, with more reason perhaps, tell us, that Castor and Pollux advised their sister to boast that she had her virginity still. It was a very prudent piece of advice, and which might well have been spared to Helena, young as she was; she would have boasted of this advantage without the suggestion of any person. She affirms in Ovid, that Theseus only forced some kisses from her, and that she came off clear, abating only her fear.

(31) Sur les Epitres d'Ovide, pag. 483.

Non tamen è facto fructum tulit ille petitum,
Excepto redii passa timore nihil:
Oscula luctanti tantummodo pauca protervus
Abstulit: ulterius nil habet ille mei (32).

(32) Ovidius, Epist. Helenæ ad Paris. ver. 25, & seqq.

She owns however, that Theseus was very young (33): Ovid has observed decorum in representing her as speaking in this manner, but he does not observe it less, when he introduces another woman, who believes Helena to assert a falshood:

(33) Et juvenem facti pœnituisse patet. Ibid. ver. 32.

Illam de patria Theseus, (nisi nomine fallor)
Nescio quis Theseus, abstulit ante suâ.
A juvene & cupido credatur reddita virgo.
Unde hoc compererim tam bene, quæris? amo.
Vim licet appelles, & culpam nomine veles,
Quæ toties rapta est, præbuit ipsa rapi (34).

(34) Ovid. in Epist. Oenones ad Paris. ver. 127, & seqq.

The following remark will serve as a supplement to this.

A REFLECTION upon the rapes of Heroines in romance.

[E] Our Romance-writers have not attended to this.] It is certain, that Monsr. or Mademoiselle de Scudery, and other Romance-writers their contemporaries, have greatly shocked probability, when they have represented their Heroines to be stolen away, without allowing us to suppose that they granted, voluntarily or by force, any favour to their lovers. I know, that they would be infinitely more inexcusable, if they did not suppose, as they do, that the Ladies were carried away without consenting in any measure. There are some countries, where those are not punished who steal young women, who consent to it. This impunity is the reason why such thefts are very frequent; and no body imagines that the ravishers use the least delay to enjoy them. The first lodging they come to is the utmost; and most people even suppose that enjoyment preceded the escape. However that be, this kind of rape is almost always followed by marriage, since if the parents should not consent to the marriage, they would find themselves burthened with a daughter, disgraced, according to the opinion of the world, and who would not meet with an husband, except any one should be content to take up with the leavings of another. We must confess therefore, that the Romance-writers secure themselves from the greatest part of the ridicule, by the care which they take in supposing, that the Heroine opposes, as much as possible, her being carried ſcene of adventures to probability. All the world knows that Helena was ſtollen away by Paris the ſon of Priam, and that all the Greeks intereſted themſelves in the injury done to Menelaus. Hence ſprung the Trojan war ſo much ſpoken of by all the Poets. Paris having loſt his life the laſt year of that war, his brother Deiphobus ſupplied his place with Helena. The Greeks killed him in a cruel manner the night in which Troy was taken: they were favoured in this by Helena as much as they could wiſh [F]. Menelaus ried off: however they cannot extricate themſelves out of the affair; they overthrow the common notions, and form a ſyſtem diametrically oppoſite to the judgment of the public, and to good ſenſe. What is the motive of their Heroes, when they ſteal a miſtreſs? Would they declare to her, that they die for love of her, and that her rigours reduce them to deſpair? They have told her this I know not how often, and they have not recourſe to this violent method till they find her determin'd to make ſome other man happy, and to be for ever indifferent to them. Do they hope, that their ſighs, which have been ſo ineffectual before they provok'd her, will move her amidſt the reſentments, with which ſhe is fir'd againſt her raviſher? Probability contradicts this: they muſt therefore propoſe to take advantage of the State, which reduces her to their mercy, and to put her upon ſuch terms as ſhall oblige her to ſpeak of matrimony firſt. This is really one of the views of thoſe, who ſteal away a young Lady without her conſent: They perſuade themſelves, that after ſhe has been ſome months in their power, her reputation at leaſt will ſuffer greatly, and cannot be reſtored but by the nuptial benediction. Beſides we ſee, that if others marry ſuch women, they are vehemently ſuſpected of poſſeſſing only the leavings of a raviſher: they are extremely raillied, and are conſidered as men of no delicacy. This is a new ſtroke againſt our Romance-writers, whoſe Heroes are ambitious of marrying miſtreſſes, who have been more than once ſtollen away by their rivals. You will find a critique upon all this in the Parnaſſe reformé. Cyrus complains there, that he has not a miſtreſs given him, "who is of an "irreproachable character. You judge well enough "without doubt from this diſcourſe, ſays he (35), that "I am not ſatisfied with Mandana; and indeed what "would you have me think of her, after ſhe has been "ſtollen away ſo often? Ought I to believe, that ſhe "eſcaped untouched from the hands of four raviſhers? "And can thoſe who are the leaſt clear-ſighted in theſe "myſteries doubt, but that you have beſtowed on me "the leavings of others? I think, you ſhould have "put her modeſty to other ſort of proofs. Theſe are "a little too ſtrong for ſo brittle a thing, and Mandana was not a fort capable of reſiſting ſo many aſſaults. Perhaps ſhe might have eſcaped well enough "from the firſt attack: I am willing to believe, that "ſhe had virtue enough not to ſubmit at once, and "her honour might be preſerved without a miracle "from this exigence. But relapſes are mortal in theſe "affairs: a ſecond carrying off overthrows every "thing, and an Heroine, who has only the remains "of a ſhaken reſolution, or perhaps not ſo much, "makes but a very uſeleſs effort in her defence." Apollo had regard to this complaint, and pronounced this decree. "We declare, that we do not acknow-"ledge for Heroes all thoſe, who are Cuckolds, nor "for Heroines all thoſe Ladies, who ſhall have been "ſtollen away above once (36)." The Ballad of Saraſin upon the carrying off of Mademoiſelle de Bouteville by Monſieur de Coligny (37), is another ſentence of condemnation; for here is the judgment of that man of wit:

(35) Parnaſſe, Reformé, pag. 165. Dutch edition.

(36) Ibid. pag. 187.

(37) Not he, who fought with the Duke of Guiſe, as the author of the Galanteries des Rois de France aſſerts, tom. 2. pag. 223. but his younger brother.

Ce gentil joli jeu d'amours
Chacun le pratique à ſa guiſe,
Qui par Rondeaux & beaux Diſcours,
Chapeau de fleurs, gente cointiſe,
Tournoy, bal, feſtin, ou deviſe
Penſe les belles captiver;
Mais je penſe, quoy qu'on en diſe,
Qu'il n'eſt rien tel que d'enlever.
C'eſt bien des plus merveilleux tours
La paſſeroute & la maiſtriſe:
Au mal d'aimer, c'eſt bien toujours
Une prompte & ſouëfve criſe,
C'eſt au gaſteau de friandiſe
De Venus la fève trouver.
L'Amant eſt fol qui ne s'aviſe
Qu'il n'eſt rien tel que d'enlever.
Je ſçay bien que les premiers jours
Que Becaſſe eſt bridée & priſe,
Elle invoque Dieu au ſecours
Et ſes parens à barbe griſe:
Mais ſi l'Amant qui l'a conquiſe
Sçait bien la Roſe cultiver,
Elle chante en face d'Egliſe
Qu'il n'eſt rien tel que d'enlever (38).

That is,

"Let every one practiſe this elegant ſcheme of gallantry, in his own manner, who by Rondeaux, "and polite diſcourſes, chaplets of flowers, neatneſs "of dreſs, tournaments, balls, feaſts, or deviſes, thinks "to captivate fair Ladies. But I am of opinion, "whatever is ſaid to the contrary, that there is nothing like ſtealing them away. This is the right "way for the lover to gain his point, the beſt remedy "for the pains of love. That lover is a very ſilly one, "who does not conſider, that there is nothing like "ſtealing her away. I know well enough that the "firſt day a miſtreſs is carried away, ſhe calls upon "God to aſſiſt her, and upon her aged parents. But "if the lover, who has gained her, knows how to "manage his point, ſhe ſings before the whole church, "that there is nothing like ſtealing a Lady away."

(38) Sarraſin, Poeſies, pag. 59, 60.

[F] The Greeks maſſacred .... Deiphobus .... being favoured by Helena as much as they could have wiſhed.] See in Virgil the ſhocking treatment of Deiphobus's body, and in what manner his wife betrayed him.

Atque hic Priamiden laniatum corpore toto
Deiphobum vidit, lacerum crudeliter ora:
Ora manuſque ambas, populataque tempora raptis
Auribus, & truncas inhoneſto vulnere nares (39).

(39) Virg. Æn. lib. 6. ver. 495.

"Here Priam's ſon, Deiphobus, he found,
"Whoſe face and limbs were one continu'd wound;
"Diſhoneſt, with lopp'd arms, the youth appears,
"Spoil'd of his noſe, and ſhorten'd of his ears."

Sed me fata mea, & ſcelus exitiale Lacænæ,
His merſêre malis: illa hæc monumenta reliquit (40).

(40) Ibid. ver. 511.

"Theſe are the monuments of Helen's love,
"The ſhame I bear below, the marks I bore above."

Flammam media ipſa tenebat
Ingentem, & ſummâ Danaos ex arce vocabat.
Tum me confectum curis, ſomnoque gravatum
Infelix habuit thalamus; preſſitque jacentem,
Dulcis & alta quies, placidæque ſimillima morti.
Egregia interea conjux arma omnia tectis
Emovet; & fidum capiti ſubduxerat enſem:
Intra tecta vocat Menelaum, & limina pandit.
Scilicet id magnum ſperans fore munus amanti,
Et famam exſtingui veterum ſic poſſe malorum (41).

(41) Ibid. ver. 518.

"Then waving high her torch the ſignal made
"Which rais'd the Grecians from their ambuſcade.
"With watching overworn, with cares oppreſs'd,
"Unhappy I had lain me down to reſt,
"And heavy ſleep my weary limbs poſſeſs'd.
"Mean time my worthy wife our arms miſlaid,
"And from beneath my head my ſword convey'd,
"The door unlatch'd, and with repeated calls,
"Invites her former Lord within my walls.
"Thus in her crime her confidence ſhe plac'd,
"And with new treaſons would redeem the paſt."

DRYDEN.

She thought that this barbarous ſacrifice was neceſſary to appeaſe the reſentment of Menelaus: ſhe would have judged better of things, if ſhe had attended leſs to the enormity of her crime, than to the good nature of the Greek Prince.

Menelaus acted like a good-natured man; he was reconciled without much difficulty to his wife, and took her home to him very generouſly [G]. After his death ſhe was obliged to retire into the Iſle of Rhodes, where ſhe died unfortunately [H]; for ſhe was hanged on a tree. The ſcandalous irregularities of her life [I] did not prevent her from having divine

[G] Menelaus ..... was reconciled without much difficulty to his wife, and took her home to him very generouſly.] This poor cuckold was ſo ſimple, that he imagined, that his wife conſumed herſelf with grief in Priam's houſe; and this was the chief motive, that urged him to the conqueſt of Troy.

Μάλιϛα δὲ ἴελο θυμῷ τίσασθαι
Ἑλένης ὀρμήμαΐα τε ϛοναχάς τε (42).

(42) Homer. Il. l. 2. v. 26. See the Penſees ſur les Cometes, num. 237. pag. 717.

There were very good grounds to reproach him, that his conjugal flame, which was almoſt extinct, was revived when Helena abandoned him for another man:

Acrius Hermionen ideò dilexit Oreſtes,
Eſſe quod alterius cœperat illa viri.
Quid Menelae doles? ibas ſine conjuge Creten,
Et poteras nupta lætus abeſſe tua:
Ut Paris hanc rapuit, tum demum uxore carere
Non potes, alterius crevit amore tuus.

" Oreſtes loved Hermione the more, becauſe ſhe be" gan to be poſſeſſed by another man. Why, Me-
" nelaus, do you grieve? You went to Crete without " your wife, and was able to bear chearfully her ab-
" ſence. But when Paris carried he away, then at
" laſt you begin to be uncapable of ſupporting the
" loſs of her; your love was increaſed by that of ano" ther man."

Antiquity muſt have been very ſtrongly convinced of the good humour of cuckolds, ſince it repreſents the God Vulcan ſo eaſy towards his wife. " The Deity
" of our Poet, when he ſurprizes with his wife one of " her galants, is content with expoſing them .....
" and ſuffers himſelf to be worked upon by the ſoft
" careſſes, which ſhe offers him, complaining that
" ſhe entertained a diſtruſt of his love.

(*) Virgil. Æn. lib. 8. ver. 395.

" (*) Quid cauſas petis ex alto? fiducia ceſſit
" Quo tibi, Diva, mei?

" Why ſeek you reaſons for a cauſe ſo juſt,
" Or your own beauty, or my love diſtruſt?
DRYDEN.

" She makes a requeſt to him for a baſtard of her's:
(†) Ibid. ver. 383. " (†) Arma rogo genetrix nato, which is readily grant" ed him; and Vulcan ſpeaks of Æneas with re-(‡) Ibid. ver. 441. " ſpect: (‡) Arma acri facienda viro, with a gene" roſity indeed more than human. This exceſs of (‡) Cat. ad Mal. " goodneſs I conſent to be left to the Gods: (‡) Nec
" divis homines componier æquum eſt (43)." Theſe
(43) Montagne, Eſſais, lib. 3. cap. 5. pag. m. 138. words of Montagne are too ingenious to diſpleaſe men of taſte here. But not to diſſemble any thing, I muſt obſerve, that there are ſome perſons officious enough to do Menelaus the honour of arming him with reſentment againſt the infidelity of Helena. In the Troades of Euripides he threatens to kill her; and ſhe is obliged to make uſe of all kinds of excuſes to obtain her pardon. She ſays among other things, that after the death of Paris, ſhe had ſeveral times endeavoured to leave Troy, and retire into the camp of the Greeks, and that centinels ſurprized her, when ſhe was attempting to deſcend from the walls by a rope. She adds, that Deiphobus married her by force. Pauſanias mentions a ſtatue of Menelaus purſuing Helena ſword in hand, to
(44) Pauſan. lib. 5. pag. 166. kill her when Troy was taken (44). But others ſuppoſe, that he threw away his ſword, when he ſaw the throat of Helena, and ſuffered himſelf to be killed by this traiterous bitch, and careſſed her:

Ἑλὼν δὲ Τροίαν, εἶμι γὰρ καὶ ταῦθά σοι,
Οὐκ ἔκλανες γυναῖκα χειρίαν λάϐρων·
Ἀλλ' ὡς ἐσεῖδες μαϛὸν, ἐκϐαλὼν ξίφος
Φίλην ἐδέξω, ϖροδότιν αἰκαίλλων κύνα (45).

(45) Eurip. in Androm. ver. 627. pag. m. 520.

[H] She died unfortunately.] Nicoſtratus and Megapenthus, Menelaus's natural ſons, had driven her from Lacedemon. She retired to Polyxo her relation, the widow of Tlepolemus King of Rhodes, and Regent of the Kingdom during her ſon's minority. Polyxo remembring that her huſband died at the ſiege of Troy, and that ſhe could not but conſider Helena as the cauſe of her being a widow, ſhe reſolved upon revenge; for which purpoſe while Helena was in the bath, ſhe ſent women thither dreſſed like Furies, who hanged her upon a tree. The Rhodians being deſirous to perpetuate this accident, built a Temple, which they called the Temple of Helena Dendritis. It is Pauſanias, who informs me of this (46). The Author of ancient and modern Athens is in the right to ſay (47), that a thouſand people ſpeak of the beautiful Helena, who do not know, that ſhe was hanged. It is an error in Moreri's Dictionary to ſay, that one of the companions of Helena occaſioned her death. You will find in Photius, that ſhe ſtrangled herſelf, and that near the oak, where ſhe hung herſelf, there grew an herb named Heleneion, which rendered thoſe, who eat it, quarrelſome (48). Pliny aſcribes quite different qualities to this herb: it made women beautiful, and thoſe gay, who put it in their wine (49). He remarks (50), that it was ſaid to have ſprung from the tears of Helena. You will find in the ſame Photius (51), that Thetis deſtroyed Helena during the return of the Greeks; and according to others, that ſhe went with Menelaus into Cherſoneſus Tauricus to ſeek Oreſtes, and that they were both ſacrificed there by Iphigenia. I have read in Vigenere (52), that Herodotus relates that Nicoſtratus and Megapenthus baniſhed Helena, and that ſhe retired to Rhodes to Polypo the widow of King Tlepolemus, and that the maids of Polypo hating Helena, becauſe ſhe had been the occaſion of the death of their late Lord, one day as ſhe was gone to divert herſelf in an orchard without their miſtreſs, hang'd her upon one of the trees. I have not found any particular of this account in Herodotus.

(46) Pauſan. lib. 3. pag. 102.
(47) Pag. m. 63.
(48) Photius, pag. 479. ex Ptolem. Hephæſtione.
(49) Plin. lib. 21. cap. 21.
(50) Ibid. cap. 10.
(51) Photius, pag. 479.
(52) Sur le Proteſilas de Philoſtrate, folio 235 verſo, edit. in 4to.

The Spaniſh Monk, whom I have quoted above, has been groſly miſtaken with regard to the cauſes of Helena's death. He ſays (53), that ſhe retiring to Rhodes to Polyxena wife of Ptetolemo, King of that Iſland, behaved ill, as ſhe had always done from her earlieſt youth, and fell in love with her hoſt, and abandoned herſelf to him. Polyxena being enraged with jealouſy, cauſed her to be hanged on a tree. Pauſanias, continues he, aſſures us, that becauſe ſhe had committed adultery with Ptetolemo during the ſiege of Troy, Polyxena put her to death. Judge by this whether this Spaniſh Author is faithful or judicious in his quotations.

(53) Baltaſar de Victoria, Theatro de los Dioſes de la Gentilidad, lib. 2. cap. 19. pag. 189.

[I] The ſcandalous irregularities of her life.] Several Authors (54) have blamed her for laſciviouſneſs; but eſpecially Lycophron in his Caſſandra, where he calls her πενταλέκτρον, that is, the woman of five huſbands (55). ... Euripides in his Tragedy of Andromache repreſents Hermione daughter of Helena thus reproached with her mother's fault:

(54) Meziriac, ſur les Epitres d'Ovide, pag. 485 & ſeq.
(55) Namely, Theſeus, Menelaus, Paris, Deiphobus, and Achilles.

Μὴ τὴν τεκοῦσαν τῇ φιλανδρίᾳ γύναι
Ζήτει παρελθεῖν·

That is,

" Do not endeavour to ſurpaſs your mother in this luſt
" after men.

.... Ptolemy Hephæſtion in Photius relates a very remarkable ſtory, which gives credit to the wantonneſs of Helena. The fact is, that a certain Arcadian named Peritanus, meeting with Paris Alexander in the country of Arcadia, had an affair with her. But Paris by way of puniſhment for this adultery cut off his parts of Generation. Hence it came that in Arcadia thoſe, who are thus puniſhed, are called Peritanes. Lycophron has done worſe than calling her the woman with five huſbands: it is ſaid, that he has ſtiled her a dove on account of her laſciviouſneſs, and a bitch on account of her impudence, or becauſe ſhe lay promiſcuouſly with a great many men (56). I do not find, that thoſe, who endeavour to excuſe Helena alledge any other reaſon divine honours paid her after her death, nor from having miracles aſcribed to her [K]. It is not at all probable that Paris waited to enjoy her till they landed in an Iſle [L]. However it is ſaid, that he ordered a monument of his firſt enjoyment to be built in that Iſle. It is added that Menelaus did not deſtroy this monument [M], and that he only ſignified, there, ſon than this, that it was (57) the Gods who forced her to go away with Paris (58). There is no crime, which ſuch an apology is not capable of juſtifying; but I own, that by giving the affair the turn, which the Scholiaſt of Homer has done, we may make a good apology for her. See here what he ſays (59). "Alexander the ſon of Priam went from Aſia to Lacedemon, where he formed a deſign to carry away Helena, who had entertained him in her palace. But ſhe, who had been well educated, and was extremely fond of her huſband, would not conſent to it, declaring that ſhe preferred a lawful marriage to a ſhameful adultery, and that ſhe choſe much rather to live with Menelaus. Paris not being able therefore to gain his point, it is ſaid that Venus made uſe of a ſtratagem, which was to change the perſon of Alexander into the reſemblance of Menelaus, and deceived Helena by this means; for ſhe imagining that he was the true Menelaus, made no ſcruple to follow him to the ſhips, where Paris obliging her to go aboard immediately ſet ſail. Euſtathius likewiſe upon the ſame Book of Homer, touches upon this ſtory, and remarks, that Penelope acted much more prudently; for tho' ſhe thought ſhe knew Ulyſſes again, yet ſhe did not careſs him at all, and would not lie with him, till he had acquainted her with a great many particulars, and given her ſeveral ſigns to aſſure her, that he was really her huſband, and that ſhe could not be deceived (60)."

(56) See Canterus and Meurſius upon the 87th verſe of Lycophron.

(57) See Homer in the 23d book of the Odyſſey, and Euripides in the Troades, and in the Andromache, cited by Meziriac upon Ovid's Epiſtles, pag. 486, 487.

(58) See the remark [X].

(59) In XXIII Libr. Odyſſ. quoted by Meziriac upon Ovid's Epiſtles, pag. 487.

(60) See the Reflexions of the Critick upon Maimbourg with regard to the Alcmena, Nouv. Lettres, pag. 284. See alſo pag. 277, 278.

[K] . . . . Did not prevent her from having divine honours paid her after her death, nor from having miracles aſcribed to her.] I have already ſpoken of the Temple, which the Rhodians dedicated to her. Pauſanias mentions that erected in the country of Lacedemon (61). With regard to her miracles, it is ſufficient to remark, that ſhe deprived Steſichorus of his ſight, who had ventured to treat her memory ill in his Poems (62), and reſtored it to him, when he had made a palinody or recantation (63). She gave an extraordinary ſhare of beauty to a very ugly young woman, who was brought into her Temple every day (64). See the article ACHILLEA, where we have obſerved, that ſhe was the wife of Achilles in the other world, and that ſhe knew how to make herſelf conſiderable there. See likewiſe Iſocrates in his Panegyric upon Helena: you will find there, that ſhe gained not only immortality, but alſo a divine power, which ſhe made uſe of to raiſe her brothers and huſband to the number of the Gods; ſo that if Caſtor and Pollux were capable of aſſiſting thoſe, who prayed to them in ſtorms, it was becauſe their ſiſter inveſted them with this power, in order to ſhew the whole world the metamorphoſis, which ſhe had made in them. They were in the grave, when ſhe conferred Divinity upon them. What is moſt commendable is, that having granted the ſame favour to Menelaus, ſhe was deſirous of living eternally with him. Τὼς ἀδελφὼς ἤδη κατεχομένους ὑπὸ τῆς πεπρωμένης, εἰς θεὼς ἀνήγαγε· βουλομένη ϑ πιθὴν ποιῆσαι τὴν μεταβολὴν, ὕτως αὐτοῖς τὰς τιμὰς ἐναργεῖς ἔδωκεν, ὥσθ' ὁρωμένους ὑπὸ τῶν ἐν τῇ θαλάττῃ κινδυνευόντων σώζειν, οἵ τινες ἂν ἐυσεβῶς αὐτὼς ἐπικαλέσωνται. μετὰ δὲ ταῦτα Μενελάῳ τοσαύτην χάριν ἀπέδοκεν . . . ὥςε . . . ϑ μόνον . . . . ἀλλὰ κ) θεὸν ἀντὶ θνητῦ ποιήσασα σύνοικον αὐτῇ κ) πάρεδρον εἰς ἅπαντα τὸν αἰῶνα κατεςήσατο (65). Iſocrates alledges in proof of this the practice of the Lacedemonians, who offered ſacrifices to Menelaus and Helena, not as to Heroes, but as Gods. It was at Therapnæ that they paid them divine honours, as the ſame Author obſerves. But Pauſanias ſays not, that there was a Temple of Helena in that city; he only ſays, that Menelaus's Temple was there, and that it was believed that Menelaus and Helena were interred there (66).

(61) Pauſan. lib. 3. pag. 96.

(62) Idem, ibid. pag. 102.

(63) Suidas in Στησίχορος, & ante ipſum Iſocrates in Helenæ Encomio.

(64) Herod. lib. 6. cap. 61.

(65) Iſocrat. in Helenæ Encomio, pag. m. 320.

(66) Pauſan. lib. 3. pag. 102.

I ſhould have been glad that Theodoret had depended upon the authority of Iſocrates, and not of Euripides, in reproaching the Pagans, becauſe Helena ſo famous for her adulteries was ranked among the Deities; for tho' Euripides has feigned, that ſhe never died, but was raiſed to heaven by the favour of the Gods, and inveſted with immortality, it does not follow, that this was the opinion of the Pagans. The Epiſodes of a Tragedy were ſo far in the Poet's hands, that unleſs we otherwiſe know them to be real, they are taken merely for the particular fiction of the Author of the Tragedy. I ſhall quote Theodoret's own words. Καὶ τὴν Ἑλένην δὲ, μετὰ τὴν πολυθρύλλητον κ) παμπόλλην μαχείαν, τῷ Μενέλεω χωρίσαντες, εἰς τὸν ὠκεανὸν, ϕησὶν Εὐριπίδης, ἀνήγαγον (67).

(67) Theodor. Therapeut. Serm. 3.

[L] It is not at all probable, that Paris waited to enjoy her till they landed in an Iſle.] Homer, who repreſents him as maſter of this patience, did not do him any honour, according to the principles of men of gallantry (68). See now upon what occaſion he relates this circumſtance of the place. Paris being overcome by Menelaus ſuffered a thouſand reproaches from Helena. He deſired her not to inſult him, but go to bed to him, pretending that he had never found himſelf poſſeſſed with ſo ſtrong a flame of love, not even when he had firſt enjoyed her in the Iſle of Cranae. Upon this he roſe from his ſeat to go to bed, and was followed by Helena without the leaſt reluctance.

(68) See Nouv. de la Republiq. des Lettres, Jan. 1687, pag. 68.

Οὐ γὰρ πὼ ποτέ μ' ὧδε ἔρως ϕρένας ἀμϕεκάλυψεν,
Οὐδ' ὅτε σε πρότερον Λακεδαίμονϑ ἐξ ἐρατεινῆς
Ἔπλεον ἁρπάξας σὺ πολυπόροισι νέεσσι,
Νήσῳ δ' ἐν Κραναῇ ἐμίγην φιλότητι κ) εὐνῇ.
Ὡς σέο νῦν ἔραμαι, καί με γλυκὺς ἵμερϑ αἱρεῖ.
Ἦ ῥα, κ) ἀρχὸς λέχϑ δὲ κιὼν, ἅμα δ' εἵπετ' ἄκοιτις.

(69) Homer. Iliad. lib. 3. ver. 442. See above the quotation (45) of the article of the 3d Duke of GUISE.

"Not thus I lov'd thee, when from Sparta's ſhore
"My forc'd, my willing heav'nly prize I bore;
"When firſt intranc'd in Cranae's Iſle I lay,
"Mix'd with thy ſoul, and all diſſolv'd away!
"Thus having ſpoke, th' enamour'd Phrygian boy
"Ruſh'd to the bed, impatient for the joy.
"Him Helen follow'd ſlow with baſhful charms,
"And claſp'd the blooming Hero in her arms."
Pope.

Jaſon had a more extraordinary degree of patience aſcribed to him than Paris; and this makes it difficult to conceive where the judgment of Romance-Writers was employed. Ought not they above all things to have confined themſelves to probability? And did not they violate it, when they ſuppoſe on the one hand, that Medea was ſo fond of Jaſon, that by her love for him ſhe was led to commit the greateſt crimes; and on the other, that ſhe ſpent ſeveral months with him without conſummating the marriage? We may obſerve likewiſe, that it would not have been conſummated ſo ſoon, if ſome advice had not been given to Jaſon. Quem cum interrogaret Arete, quidnam eſſet judicaturus, reſpondit Alcinous, Si virgo fuerit Medea, parenti redditurum: ſin autem mulier, conjugi. Hoc cum audivit Arete à conjuge, mittit nuntium ad Jaſonem; & is Medeam noctu in antro devirginavit. i. e. "When Arete aſked him, what he determined to do; Alcinous anſwered, that if Medea was a virgin, he would reſtore her to her father; but if a woman, to her huſband. Arete hearing her huſband declare this, ſends a meſſage to Jaſon, who in the night lay with Helena in a cave."

(70) Hygin. cap. 23. pag. m. 60.

[M] Menelaus did not deſtroy this monument.] Here is a thing, which would juſtify Homer, if it were true. It is pretended, that upon the bank of the continent oppoſite to the Iſle of Cranae there was a Temple of Venus, which Paris had built after this agreeable conqueſt . . . to ſhew his exceeding joy and gratitude. He gave to this Venus the epithet of Migonitis, and called this territory Migonion, from a word, which ſignified the amorous myſtery, which had been performed there. Menelaus, the unhappy huſband of this Princeſs, eighteen years after ſhe had been ſtolen away from him, came to viſit this Temple, the territory of which had been witneſs to his misfortune, and the infidelity of his wife. He did not deſtroy it; he only placed on each ſide of the ſtatue of Venus, the ſtatues of two other Goddeſſes, that of Thetis, and that of Praxidice, which ſignifies the Goddeſs of Puniſhments, to ſhew that he would not ſuffer the injury to paſs there, that he had had ſatisfaction given him for the injury. A modern author does not ſeem to have well comprehended the meaning of Menelaus (e). Some authors ſay, that Paris did not long preſerve his prize [N]. A great many fables have been related concerning the birth of Helena [O]; I mean, concerning the egg, whence it is pretended ſhe was hatched.

(e) See the remark [M] citation (71).

paſs with impunity. But he had not the good fortune to ſee himſelf revenged upon Helena; for ſhe ſurvived him (71). The Author of the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, having cited this paſſage, adds the following reflection (72): Theſe laſt words would furniſh an occaſion for criticiſm to any perſon, who ſhould deſire it; for it is undoubted, that eighteen years after Helena was ſtolen away, Menelaus had revenged himſelf as fully as he deſired by the deſtruction of the Kingdom of Priam, the father of the raviſher. It is very probable therefore, that this ſtatue of the Goddeſs Praxidice had no relation to a future vengeance, but to one already taken; and it is not likely, that it related to any deſign of puniſhing Helena: for if Menelaus had not been really reconciled to his wife, he would not have waited ſo long to puniſh her. The hiſtory of that age intimates, that this artful woman made her peace with her huſband the ſame night that the Greeks took the city; and this is very probable conſidering the character, which is given Menelaus in the Iliad. However that be, I would not maintain on the one hand, that there was not near the Iſle of Cranae a temple of Venus Migonitis, nor acknowledge on the other, that Paris built it for the reaſon, which is alledged. I adhere to probability, which leads one ſtrongly to imagine, that Paris enjoyed Helena before he left Lacedemon. Who could have hindered him? Menelaus was in the Iſle of Crete (73): his preſence would not have prevented Helena from favouring the handſome Gueſt, who made love to her; his abſence was ſtill more incapable of laying any reſtraint upon her. See a little how Paris took the advantage, and diverted himſelf with this abſence.

(71) Guillet, Athenes ancienne & nouvelle, pag. 63. Obſerve that we make uſe of his words, both becauſe he writes well, and becauſe they furniſh an occaſion for criticiſm. The facts, which he relates, are taken from Pauſanias, lib. 3. pag. 105.

(72) Nouv. de la Republique des Lettres, Janv. 1687, pag. 67.

(73) Ovid. Epiſt. Helenæ ad Paridem. Coluthus, de Raptu Helenæ.

(74) Ovid. Epiſt. Parid. ad Helen. ver. 297.

Sed tibi (74) & hoc ſuadet rebus, non voce, maritus:
Neve ſui furtis hoſpitis obſtet, abeſt.
Non habuit tempus, quo Creſſia regna videret,
Aptius: ô mirâ calliditate virum! &c.

He did not want courage among the Ladies. Helena owns, that he was not ſo reſerv'd as her Theſeus, who only kiſs'd her.

Quæ tua nequitia eſt, non his contenta fuiſſet.
Di melius! ſimilis non fuit ille tui,
Reddidit intactam (75).

(75) Idem, in Epiſt. Helenæ ad Parid. ver. 29.

Paris preſs'd her ſo one day, that ſhe betook her ſelf to flight; ſhe loſt one of her ſhoes then. The place where ſhe loſt it, was at Sparta, and was named Sandalion, on account of this ſhoe (76).

(76) Ptolemæus Hephæſt. apud Photium, pag. 480.

(N) Some authors ſay, Paris did not long preſerve his prey] It is ſaid, that he ſailed towards Egypt, and landed at the mouth of the Nile call'd Canopus, where there was a Temple of Hercules, which ſerv'd for an aſylum to fugitive ſlaves. Some of Paris's ſlaves having fled thither, inform'd the Prieſts of what their Maſter had done; upon which, Proteus the King ordered him to be ſeized, and reproach'd him in a very ſevere manner, and afterwards commanded him to retire immediately; but he kept Helena, with all the other things, which had been ſtollen from Menelaus (77). It is added, that Paris did not enjoy that Lady till after his arrival in Egypt (78). This is a ſtory already confuted. I cannot tell how Proteus behaved, or whether before he reſtor'd Helena to the Perſon, to whom ſhe belong'd, he did not obtain the laſt favour from her (79). I only know that Herodotus thinks it very probable, that ſhe was not carried to Troy, for he cannot perſuade himſelf that Priam would have been ſo infatuated as to chooſe to retain her, rather than to avoid the fatal conſequences of a refuſal (80). He believes therefore that the Trojans anſwered ſincerely to the Embaſſadors of the Greeks, that Helena was not at Troy, and that they muſt look for her in Egypt, where King Proteus kept her (81). The Greeks taking this anſwer for a ſevere piece of raillery, applied themſelves to the war againſt the Trojans; but when they had taken the city without finding Helena any where, they imagined that ſhe was at the court of King Proteus; upon which Menelaus ſailed thither, and recovered his wife (82). There is ſuch an enormous variety of accounts among the Mythological writers, that I am not ſurprized, that Servius ſhould relate (83), I. That Theſeus having ſtoln Helena, gave her to Proteus, King of Egypt, and that Menelaus recovered her from Proteus after the Trojan war; ſo that this war was not occaſioned by Helena's being ſtolen away by Paris, but by the injury, which the Trojans did to Hercules, in refuſing to receive him when he was ſeeking for Hylas. II. That Helena was recovered from Proteus, to whom Theſeus had intruſted the care of her, and was reſtored to Menelaus, from whom Paris ſtole her.

(77) See Natalis Comes, Mythol. lib. 6. cap. 23. pag. m. 658. He ſhould have quoted Herodotus, and have obſerved, that a ſtorm obliged Paris to put into Egypt.

(78) Quam deportavit in Ægyptum, atque ibi primum cum illa congreſſus ſit. Idem, ibid.

(79) Helena denies it in the Prologue to Euripides's Tragedy, intitled, Helena; but her teſtimony is of no weight in this point.

(80) Herod. lib. 2. cap. 120.

(81) Idem, ibid. cap. 118.

(82) Idem, ibid. and cap. 119.

(83) Servius in hæc verba Virgilii Æneid. lib. 11. ver. 262. Atrides Protei Menelaus ad uſque columnas.

I forgot to obſerve, that Proteus did not ſend away Paris without leaving him ſome kind of conſolation; for he reſtored to him the picture of Helena (84). One of the Commentators upon Lycophron very erroneouſly applies to this what Helena ſays in Euripides, that Juno, to puniſh Paris for not giving her the triumph of beauty, procured, that inſtead of Helena he had only the living image of that beautiful Lady, which image was formed in the air

Ἥρα δὲ μεμφθείσ', ὅτεκ' ἐ νικᾷ Θέας, Ἐξηνέμωσε τἄμ' Ἀλεξάνδρῳ λέχη.
Δίδωσι δ' ἐκ ἔμ', ἀλλ' ὁμοιώσασ' ἐμοὶ
Εἴδωλον ἔμπνουν, αἰθέρωθεν ξυνθεῖσ' ὑπὸ.
Πριάμου τυράννου παιδί. κ᾽ δοκεῖ μ' ἔχειν
Κενὴν δόκησιν ἐκ ἔχων (85).

(84) See Canterus & Meurſius upon Lycophron, ver. 113.

(85) Eurip. in Prologo Helenæ, ver. 31. pag. m. 308.

Every one ſees, that the difference between theſe two things does not conſiſt, as Canterus would have it, in this, that Proteus is the agent in one caſe, and Juno in the other. We ſee likewiſe, that Juno forgot the ſpirit of revenge upon this occaſion. Paris was as happy with a living image of Helena, as he would have been with Helena herſelf. I remember to have read, that Steſichorus ſaid, that the Trojans not knowing the true Helena, diſputed among themſelves about her picture. Ὥσπερ τοῦ τῆς Ἑλένης εἴδωλον ὑπὸ τῶν ἐν Τροίᾳ Στησίχορος φησὶ γενέσθαι πεπιμάχηλον ἀγνοίᾳ τοῦ ἀληθοῦς (86). This, according to the opinion of ſome Free-thinkers, is a repreſentation of the diſputes about religion.

(86) Plato, de Republica, lib. 9. pag. m. 738.

[O] A great many fables have been related concerning the birth of Helena.] They are not contented to ſay, that ſhe was born of an egg, but they add that this egg fell from heaven out of the moon, and that the women of that country bring forth eggs, whence ſpring men fifteen times larger than thoſe, who inhabit the earth. We learn this from Athenæus (87), who tells us, upon the authority of Herodorus of Heraclea, that Neocles of Crotona had publiſhed this in one of his works. Here follow ſome falſe quotations concerning this Chimera. Cœlius Rhodiginus (88), inſtead of Herodorus, writes Herodotus. This error has been copied by Salmuth (89). Who can forbear laughing, when he conſiders theſe words of a Spaniſh Phyſician? Nonne admirabilius adhuc in tota naturæ majeſtate rariſſimum, quod mulieres quaſdam produxerit, quæ non more aliarum fœtus, ſed ova edant ac incubent, ex quibus homines naſcantur, qui ad giganteam proceritatem excreſcant? Et tamen hoc in Selenitidis mulieribus accidere referunt ex Lycoſthene Raviſius Textor, & ex Herodoto Heracleotes, ut quoque teſtatur Rhodiginus lib. 27. cap. 17. licet pro mera fabula hoc habeat Adrianus Junius, lib. 1. animad. cap. 15, citatus apud Pancirolum part. 2. memorab. titulo 2 hiſtor. tamen cum icone exhibet (90). i. e. "Is not that more wonderful ſtill, which hap" pens very rarely in the whole compaſs of nature,
" that there are ſome women, who do not produce
" living children like the reſt of their ſex, but eggs,
" which they hatch, and from which ariſe men, who " grow to a gigantic height? And yet that this hap" pens in the women of the moon, we are informed by
" Raviſius Textor from Lycoſthenes, and by Heracleo-
" etes from Herodotus, as Rhodiginus likewiſe teſti-
" fies, lib. 27. cap. 17. tho' Hadrian Junius, lib. 1.

(87) Athen. lib. 2. cap. 16. pag. 57.

(88) Antiq. Lect. lib. 27. cap. 17. in fine.

(89) Salmuth. Comment. in Pancirolum de novis repertis, pag. 93.

(90) Caſpar à Reies, in Elyſio jucundarum Quæſt. Campo, Quæſt. 47. num. 14. pag. m. 581.

hatched. The inventions aſcribed to her moſt faithful maid-ſervant are a brand of infamy [P]. If the authors who have ſpoken ſo much of her had been good Chronologers, her beauty

" Animadverſ. cap. 15. quoted by Pancirollus, part 2. " memorab. titulo 2 Hiſt. treats this as a mere fable, " yet he gives us the hiſtory with a picture." Is not this a good manner of beginning his quotations to produce firſt Lycoſthenes, who lived in the XVIth Century? Is it not a ſtrange miſtake to place Raviſius Textor after Lycoſthenes, the latter being poſterior to the former, and an abridger of him? What a leap is it to riſe all at once to Herodotus? What confuſion to take Herodorus for Herodotus? What fiction to give us one Heracleotes, who quotes Herodotus? Is not this finding two authors, where the writer, whom he quotes, gives us but one? for Cœlius Rhodiginus ſays expreſly Herodotus Heracleotes. What kind of reaſoning is this: though Hadrian Junius treats it as a mere fable, Lycoſthenes, Raviſius Textor, Herodotus, Heracleotes, Rhodiginus, have not ſcrupled to relate it? How could this Junius's authority have laid any reſtraint upon the reſt, when he lived after all of them except Lycoſthenes? But let us return to Helena.

Some antient Poets have ſaid, that ſhe was the daughter of Jupiter and Nemeſis, and that Nemeſis, in order to ſecure herſelf from the warm addreſſes of Jupiter, fled by ſea and land, and diſguiſed herſelf in all ſhapes; but at laſt Jupiter by a ſuperior force got her with child, firſt of Caſtor and Pollux, and afterwards of Helena:

Τὴν ποτε καλλίκομος Νέμεσις Φολόητι μιγεῖσα
Ζηνὶ θεῶν βασιλῆι, τέκεν κρατερῆς ὑπ' ἀνάγκης (91).

" The fair-hair'd Nemeſis o'erpower'd by Jove
" Brought Helen forth."

(91) Tarſinus ſive Staſinus, in Carmine de Rebus Cypriacis, apud Hadrianum Junium, Animadv. lib. 1. cap. 15.

We read in Pauſanias (92), that according to the common opinion Helena was the daughter of Jupiter and Nemeſis, and that Leda was only her nurſe. Phidias conforming himſelf to this tradition, repreſented Leda in ſuch an attitude upon the Baſe of the ſtatue of Nemeſis, that ſhe ſeemed to bring Helena to that Goddeſs. Some ſay (93), that Nemeſis being impregnated by Jupiter, laid an egg, and that Leda finding this egg ſat on it, and hatched Caſtor and Pollux, and Helena. Others ſay (94), that Jupiter not being able to ſucceed with Nemeſis, made Venus aſſume the form of an eagle, and changed himſelf into a ſwan, which fled before that eagle. He reſted himſelf in the lap of Nemeſis, and was received very kindly: the fair Lady embraced him, and fell aſleep. The counterfeit ſwan taking advantage of this ſleep, enjoyed her; and becauſe he did ſo in the ſhape of a bird, order required that Nemeſis ſhould lay an egg. Mercury took this egg, and carried it to Lacedemon, where he threw it into the lap of Leda. Thus ſprung the beauteous Helena; and this was the reaſon why Leda took her for her daughter. Nemeſis autem, ut quæ avium generi eſſet juncta, menſibus actis ovum procreavit, quod Mercurius auferens detulit Spartam, & Ledæ ſedenti in gremium projecit, ex quo naſcitur Helena, cæteras corporis ſpecie præſtans, quam Leda ſuam filiam nominavit (95). Auſonius (96) has followed the diſtinction, which has been made between Nemeſis and Leda.

(92) Pauſanias, lib. 1. pag. 32.

(93) Interpres Callimachi apud Hadrian. Junium, Animadv. lib. 1. cap. 15.

(94) Hygin. Aſtronom. lib. 2. cap. 8.

(95) Hygin. ibid.

(96) Auſon. Epigram. 56.

Iſtos tergemino (97) naſci quos cernis ab ovo
Patribus ambiguis & matribus aſſere natos.
Hos genuit Nemeſis: ſed Leda puerpera fovit:
Tyndareus pater his, & Jupiter. Hic putat hic ſcit.

That is,

" Theſe whom you ſee ſpring from the tripple egg,
" were born of doubtful fathers and mothers. Nemeſis
" was their mother, but Leda was their nurſe: Tyn-
" dareus and Jupiter were their fathers: the one of " them thinks ſo, the other knows it."

(97) This word ſhews that Auſonius ſpeaks alſo of Helena, and that we ought not to ſay as Hadrian Junius has done, Anim. lib. 1. cap. 15. Conſentit & Auſonius Poeta de Caſtore & Polluce loquens.

Here is a good number of authors for this opinion; but there are as many, who affirm, that Leda was the true mother of Helena. The ſame Hyginus, whom I have quoted, having ſaid, that there was alſo a tradition, that Jupiter, being turned into a ſwan, lay with Leda, adds, that he had nothing to determine in that point; de quo in medio relinquimus (98). This was becauſe he ſaw as many reaſons on one ſide as the other. Theon of Alexandria remarks, that Jupiter in the ſhape of a ſwan lay with Nemeſis, according to ſome, and with Leda, according to others; and that Helena, Caſtor, and Pollux were born of the egg, which Leda laid (99). Pauſanias, who, as we have ſeen, reports the tradition concerning Nemeſis, relates in another place (100) that concerning Leda, and obſerves alſo, that a monument was to be ſeen in the temple at Lacedemon (101); for there hung from the roof of it an egg by a ribbon, which paſſed for that of Leda. He acknowledges the two metamorphoſes of Jupiter into a ſwan, the one with regard to Nemeſis, the other with regard to Leda. Κύκνος γενόμενος εἰς τὰς Νεμέσεως κόλπας καταφυγεῖν· τῷ δὲ πάλιν ὁμοιωθεὶς Λήδᾳ ἐνύμφευσεν (102). This being the caſe, there is no doubt but that he ſuppoſed, that Helena proceeded from this ſecond metamorphoſis. Euripides, in the tragedy of Oreſtes, expreſly aſſerts, that Leda was the mother of Helena, and he gives the latter the epithets of ὀρνιθόγονος and κυκνόπλερος, which declare the metamorphoſis of Jupiter into a ſwan. I do not make uſe of the authority of Plutarch; for by the egg of Tyndarus he might underſtand that which Mercury caſt into Leda's lap. In reality he obſerves, that this egg fell down from heaven (103). So that Hadrian Junius ought not to have alledged Plutarch in defence of this ſecond opinion. Ovid has been cited, ſince he introduces Leda lying under the wings of a ſwan. Ovidius quoque Ledam recubantem facit ſub olorinis alis (104). Lucian (105), and the Scholiaſt on Homer (106), might have been cited. This Scholiaſt mentions a thing omitted by many others; which is, that the egg, which Leda laid, and which ſhe put in a cheſt, produced there, Caſtor, Pollux, and Helena, without being hatched.

(98) Hygin. Aſtronom. lib. 2. cap. 8.

(99) Theon, Alexandrin. in Arateis commentariis, apud Hadr. Junium, Animadv. lib. 1. cap. 15.

(100) Lib. 3. pag. 97.

(101) Hadrian Junius thinks, without grounds, that Pauſanias places this temple in the city of Amyclæ.

(102) Socrat. in Helenæ Encomio.

(103) Τὸ Τυνδάρειον οἱ ποιηταὶ λέγουσιν οὐρανοπετὲς ἀναχθῆναι. Plutarch. Symp. lib. 2. cap. 3. pag. 637.

(104) Hadr. Junius, Animadv. lib. 1. cap. 15. Here are Ovid's words: Fecit olorinis Ledam recubare ſub alis Metam. lib. 6. ver. 109.

(105) In Dearum Judicio, pag. m. 170. tom. 1.

(106) In Odyſſ. lib. 7.

To reconcile theſe two opinions Junius ſuppoſes, that Nemeſis and Leda are the ſame perſon, and he quotes for this purpoſe Lactantius (107) and the Scholiaſt of Euripides, and Germanicus. The words of the laſt mentioned writers are very expreſs. Cygnum dicunt inter aſtra conſtitutum eo quod Jupiter in Cygnum transfiguratus evolaverit in Rhamnuntem Atticæ regionis, ibique compreſſerit Nemeſin quæ & Leda dicitur, ut refert Crates tragœdiarum ſcriptor, quæ enixa eſt ovum, unde nata eſt Helena (108). i. e. " They ſay that the " ſwan was ranked among the ſtars, becauſe Jupiter " being changed into a ſwan, flew into Rhamnus " in Attica, and there compreſſed Nemeſis, who is " alſo called Leda, according to Crates the Tragic " Writer; and this Lady laid an egg, whence ſprung " Helena."

(107) Inſtit. lib. 1. cap. 21.

(108) German. Cæſar, in Arateis Phænomenis, pag. m. 116.

I ſhall not conclude this remark without obſerving, that Jupiter, who owned for his ſons a great many boys, who were born from his commerce with women, acknowledged only Helena for his daughter. I mean the daughters which ſprung from his amours with women. It is Iſocrates who tells us this (109). I paſs over thoſe, who pretend that Helena was the daughter of Venus, or of the Sun and Leda (110).

(109) In Encomio Helenæ.

[P] The inventions aſcribed to her moſt faithful maid-ſervant are a brand of infamy on her.] It is ſaid, that ſhe invented I know not what poſtures, and that ſhe even wrote upon this ſubject. I ſhall expreſs my ſelf more clearly in Latin in the words of Leonicus Thomæus. Aſtyaniſſa quædam nomine, ſays he (111), inter Helenæ miniſtras & famulas fuiſſe commemoratur, quæ dominam à Theſeo primum, poſtea à Paride raptam ſemper proſequuta eſt: hanc in Venerea palæſtra primam complures reperiſſe figurarum modos omnis perhibet antiquitas. Voluminibus quinetiam quibuſdam editis de variis concubitus generibus perſcripſiſſe narratur, quam poſtmodum Philenis & Elephantis pervulgatiſſimæ mulieres ſunt inſequutæ, quæ hujuſmodi de rebus non minus accurate, quàm turpiter conſcripta commentaria reliquere. If this be true, it reflects a great deal of ignominy upon the memory of Helena; for it is probable, that if the ſervant gave lectures to her miſtreſs, the latter informed her of their effect, and that by this means Helena and Aſtyanaſſa united their endeavours to perfect theſe ſhocking inventions. I have read in Photius (112), that Aſtyanaſſa ſtole an embroidered girdle,

(110) Ptol. Hephæſt. apud Photium, pag. 480.

(111) Nicolaus Leonicus Thomæus, de Novaria Hiſtoria, lib. 3. cap. 31. He likewiſe cites Suidas.

(112) Photius, ex Ptolem. Hephæſt. pag. 480.

beauty must have lasted a prodigious time [Q]; and it must be said, that the Greeks and Trojans fought with each other ten years for the possession of an old woman. This would make them very ridiculous; but they would not fail to be so, though we suppose her dle, which Juno had obtained of Venus to give it to Helena; but that Venus took it away from that servant.

[Q] If the authors .... had been good Chronologers, her beauty must have lasted a prodigious time.] It is said, that Helena and Castor sprung from the same egg. We may therefore reasonably suppose, that Helena was a woman grown when the Argonauts went to Colchos; for her two brothers Castor and Pollux distinguished themselves in this famous expedition. Let us suppose her twenty years old at least; that is not too much. Let us not take advantage of the mistake of Eusebius; I shall speak of it below. Let us take the most exact Chronology. There are reckoned about thirty years between this expedition and that of Troy: Helena was therefore fifty years old, more or less, when Paris stole her away. The siege of Troy continued ten years, and it was in the last year of that siege that Agamemnon and Achilles quarrelled. We must fix in the time succeeding this quarrel, the admiration with which the Counsellors of Priam (113) were struck at her divine beauty. Here is Helena therefore at sixty years of age forcing by her extraordinary lustre of beauty a whole Senate to confess, that she deserved, that two powerful Nations should ravage each other for ten years out of regard to her. Is not this very wonderful? Paris being killed some time after, there arose a very warm contest between his brothers, who should marry his widow. Priam ordered them to try the issue by a combat, and promised her to him who should gain the victory. Deiphobus fought the best of all, and had Helena given him. Ἀλεξάνδρῳ τοξευθέντι ὑπὸ Φιλοκτήτου, Πριάμου τὸν Ἑλένης γάμον ἔπαθλον ἔθηκε τῷ ἀριστεύσαντι κατὰ τὴν μάχην. Δηΐφοβος δὲ γενναίως ἀγωνισάμενον ἔθηκεν αὐτήν. ἡ ἱστορία παρὰ Λυκόφρονι (114). One of his brothers (115) was so enraged at being excluded, that he left Troy, and contributed his utmost efforts to the ruin of his country. Does not this prove, that at the age of sixty Helena was still a prodigy of beauty? Lucian proves that at the time of the siege of Troy she was an old woman, and almost as old as Hecuba. Εἶδον γὰρ λευκὴν μέν τινα καὶ ἐπιμήκη τὸν τράχηλον ὡς εἰκάζειν κύκνου θυγατέρα εἶναι. τἄλλα δὲ πάνυ πρεσβύτιν ἡλικιῶτιν σχεδὸν τῆς Ἑκάβης (116). i. e. "For I saw a woman with a white and long "neck, so that one might have conjectured her to "be born of a swan; but she was an old woman, "and almost as aged as Hecuba." She would have been much older than Hecuba, if it were true, as is said (117), that Hercules was the last child of Jupiter. Our astonishment at so aged a beauty would cease, if we could believe what is related, that Helena by a peculiar prerogative was exempt from the severe necessity of growing old (118): but this is not generally allowed. "It is said, that Helena, to-"wards the end of her life, as often as she saw her "self in her glass, sought for herself there with a-"mazement, and complained of time, which had "been her third ravisher, and had stolen Helena "even from Helena herself." I have read this in the book of a Jesuit, whose style is very affected (119). Another modern author relates this almost in the same manner (120). "She, whom you speak of, deserves "to be regarded with such an eye as yours. You "will soon see there another change very opposite to "that (121), which has given you so much admira-"tion. A few years will make you remark this; "the same that made Helena weep at her glass, and "obliged her to call Time her third or fourth ra-"visher, for the number is not certain. A strange "kind of rape, in which we see Helena stolen from "Helena herself; and her, whom three parts of the "world, which were the whole at that time, ac-"knowledged for the most beautiful woman of the "age, seeking her face in a glass, which represented "to her nothing but what was frightful." This thought is very like that in two verses of Ovid,

Flet quoque ut in speculo rugas conspexit aniles
Tyndaris, & secum cur sit bis rapta, requirit (122).

(113) I have already mentioned what they said, remark [A] citation (7).

(114) Scholiastes Homeri in Iliad. lib. 2. ult. ver. 251.

(115) His name was Helenus. See Photius's Bibliotheca in the Extracts of Conon, pag. 441.

(116) Lucian. in Gallo, Oper. tom. 2. pag. m. 251.

(117) Diodor. Siculus, lib. 4. cap. 14.

(118) Τὴν μὲν φάσις ἔμμεν ἀγήρω. Quintus Calaber, lib. 10. ver. 312.

(119) In Father le Moine's Peintures Morales.

(120) La Mothe le Vayer, Letter 114. pag. 14 tom. 12.

(121) He speaks of an ugly old woman, who was become beautiful.

(122) Ovid. Met. lib. 15. ver. 232.

I ought to remark, that if we follow the Chronology of Eusebius, we shall find that Helena had lived above a Century, when Paris stole her away; for, according to Eusebius, the expedition of the Argonauts was eighty nine years before the taking of Troy. He saw plainly the miscomputation of the Greek writers; upon which he proposes this objection to them: Si inter Argonautas fuerunt Castor & Pollux, quomodo potest eorum soror Helena credi, quæ post multos annos virgo rapitur à Theseo (123)? i. e. "If Castor "and Pollux were among the Argonauts, how can "Helena be thought to be their sister, who many "years after being a virgin was stolen away by "Theseus?" Consider well the remark of Scaliger upon this Latin passage. In Græcis, says he (124), ἢ μήπω μιτὰ πολλὰ ἔτη παρθένος ἁρπάζεται. Sive culpa librariorum, sive quod verosimilius, Hieronymi properantia accidit, ut negatio in latina interpretatione expressa non sit, omnino ridicula sententia efficitur. Nam quo remotior fuerit raptus Helenæ eo credibilior erit. Contra quo propior his temporibus eo remotior à Trojæ excidio, ideoque minus credibile Helenæ tempus in hujus sæculi tractum incidisse. i. e. "In the Greek it is "thus: who not many years after being a virgin was "taken away. By the error of the Transcribers, or "more probably by the hurry of St. Jerom it has "happened, that the negative is not expressed in the "Latin Translation, and the sentence is rendered ab-"solutely ridiculous. For the more remote the rape "of Helena was, the more credible. On the other "hand the nearer it was to those times, so much the "more remote from the siege of Troy; and there-"fore it is less credible, that the age of Helena fell "into this period of time." This criticism appears to me to be very erroneous; and the more I examine it, the more I am surprized. I do not deny, but that the negative particle, the suppression of which is an error of St. Jerom, according to Scaliger, may make good sense; but I cannot comprehend, that the sense would be ridiculous by suppressing the negative; on the contrary Eusebius's objection seems more intelligible to all sorts of readers without the negative particle, than with it. Eusebius's design is to prove, that those who have asserted that Castor and Pollux, the brothers of Helena, were in the Argonautic expedition, and that Theseus stole away Helena when she was young, have been inconsistent in their Chronology. If Castor and Pollux, says he, were of the number of the Argonauts, how is it possible to suppose, that they were brothers of Helena, who was stolen away young by Theseus many years after? The most stupid readers perceive the force of this objection without having occasion to reason much, and without being obliged to have recourse to any thing but the words of Eusebius. But if we suppose with Scaliger, that Eusebius expresses himself in this manner; If Castor and Pollux were of the number of the Argonauts, how can we persuade our selves, that they were the brothers of Helena, who was stolen away young by Theseus a few years after? Every one sees, that in order to discover it to be an objection, we ought to remove from before our eyes the words, which contain it, and to have recourse to the reasonings and calculations which we find in the subsequent pages; for if we consider only Eusebius's expressions, we should imagine that he reasoned ill, and what he urges for proof, infers the contrary to his design.

(123) Euseb. in Chronic. num. 756.

(124) Animadv. in Eusebium, num. 756. pag. m. 47.

FAULTS of Scaliger.

Here are some other words of Scaliger, which do not appear to me just. Ab hoc tempore (125), says he, (126), ad excidium Ilii, anni sunt LXXIX. ut Helenam admodum anum fuisse oportuerit, si Argonautica hoc tempore contigerunt. Nam adultis Castoribus, Helenam quoque maturam viro fuisse necesse est. Quod si Argonautica hic collocentur, tempore excidii Iliaci Helena fuerit major annorum CXX. Hoc est quod objicit Eusebius & merito. i. e. "From this time to the destruction "of Troy there are seventy nine years, so that He-"lena must have been a very old woman, if the Ar-"gonautic expedition happened at this time. For if "Castor and Pollux were of adult age, Helena must "have been fit for marriage. If the Argonautic ex-"pedition be fixed here, at the destruction of Troy, (125) That is, from the number 756. of Eusebius; but I am surprized, that Scaliger did not observe that Eusebius had before spoken of the Argonautic expedition under the number 746.

(126) Animadv. in Eusebium, pag. 46.

her miſtreſs of all the beauty aſcribed to her by the Poets. See in Herodotus the value which ought to be ſet upon a woman who ſuffered herſelf to be run away with [R]. There are very different opinions concerning the children of Helena. Some ſay, that ſhe had only daughters (f); others affirm, that Menelaus had four ſons by her (g). They ſpeak likewiſe of a ſon whom ſhe had by Achilles (h). She had by Menelaus the fair Hermione, and by Paris a daughter, who was named Helena, and whom Hecuba put to death. The father would have had her named Alexandra; but upon the mother's oppoſing it, they were obliged to caſt lots, who ſhould give her the name. Helena won, and gave her daughter her own name (k). Helena's necklace has been much talked of [S], as

(f) Stephanus, Voce Ἄργος.

(g) Scholiaſt. Homeri, & Euſtathius in Iliad. lib. 3.

(h) See the article of ACHILLEA, citation (e).

(i) Ptol. Hephæſt. apud Photium, pag. 480.

(k) Idem, ibid.

" Helena muſt have been above a hundred and twenty " years old. This is what Euſebius objects, and that " juſtly." If there were ſeventy nine years, ſays Scaliger, between the Argonautic expedition and the deſtruction of Troy, Helena muſt have been above a hundred and twenty years old at the taking of that city. What conſequence is this! Is it worthy of the great Scaliger? Is it neceſſary, that a woman ſhould be above forty years old, that we may ſay with propriety, ſhe is fit for marriage, matura viro? This is the expreſſion of the author, whom I am confuting.

He has ſucceeded much better in his Criticiſm upon Euſebius's Calculations; for it is not true, that the Argonautic expedition and that of Troy were ſo diſtant from each other as Euſebius imagines. But it is certain, that Euſebius has followed very eminent writers; and conſequently I might maintain, that if the antient authors, who ſpeak of Helena, had been good Chronologers, her beauty muſt have laſted a prodigious while, even beyond a Century. Let us conſider a little the computation which Clemens Alexandrinus borrowed from Apollodorus and ſome other celebrated Hiſtorians. In one place (127) he tells us, that there were thirty eight years from the time when Hercules began to reign at Argos, after the expedition of the Argonauts, to his deification; and that Caſtor and Pollux were deified fifty three years after Hercules, about the time of the taking of Troy. This is reckoning ninety one years between the Argonautic expedition and the deſtruction of Troy, and making Helena an hundred years old, more or leſs, at the time when Paris ſtole her away as a perfect beauty. In another place (128) the ſame father makes a computation, by which there are ſixty eight years between the rape of Helena by Paris and the Argonautic expedition.

(127) Clemens Alexandr. lib. 1. Stromat. pag. 322, ex Apollodoro.

(128) Ibid. pag. 356.

[R] See in Herodotus the value which ought to be ſet on a woman, who ſuffered herſelf to be carried away.] Herodotus in tracing up the firſt origin of the wars, which had continued ſo long between Europe and Aſia, acknowledges the Aſiatics to have been the aggreſſors, becauſe they had carried away Io the daughter of Inachus King of Argos (129). The Europeans (130), who ſtole the daughter of the King of Tyre, did it only by way of repriſals. They did not ſtop there; they undertook another rape, that of Medea the daughter of the King of Colchos. This Prince demanded ſatisfaction for the injury; but he was anſwered, that they would not give him any, ſince they had never received any on account of Io. The rape of Helena was undertaken by way of repriſals; and when the Greeks demanded her to be returned, they were anſwered that they were treated in the ſame way as they had uſed the Aſiatics, when they had demanded Medea. They were not ſatisfied with this anſwer; they raiſed a great army, and went to deſtroy the Kingdom of Priam. This is what the Perſians urged to juſtify their wars; they pretended, that the expedition againſt Troy gave them a right to conſider the Europeans as enemies, and treat them as ſuch. They diſapproved the violence of thoſe, who ſtole a woman; but they reckoned thoſe as fools, who gave themſelves the trouble of recovering her, and as wiſe men thoſe, who deſpiſed her, on condition that no women were taken away but thoſe who were willing. As for us, ſaid they, we never troubled ourſelves about thoſe Women, who were ſtolen out of Aſia; the Greeks began the war on the account of a Woman of Lacedemon. Τὸ μὲν νῦν ἁρπάζειν γυναῖκας, ἀνδρῶν ἀδίκων ἔργον νομίζειν εἶναι, τὸ δ' ἁρπαθεισέων σπουδὴν ποιήσασθαι τιμωρέειν, ἀνοητων, τὸ δ' μηδεμίην ἄρην ἔχειν ἁρπασθεισέων, σωφρόνων. δῆλα γὰρ δὴ ὅτι εἰ μὴ αὐταὶ ἐβουλέατο, οὐκ ἂν ἡρπάζοντο. σφέας μὲν δὴ τὰς ἐκ τῆς Ἀσίης λέγουσι Πέρσαι ἁρπαζομένων τῶν γυναικῶν λόγων οὐδένα ποιήσασθαι (131). It will be proper to place here the following obſervation of Iſocrates; the Trojan War, ſays he, was of prodigious uſe to Greece; a great many things were invented in it; they began to render Europe ſuperior to Aſia. Before this war the Barbarians made conqueſts upon the Greeks. Helena was the cauſe, that things took another turn; for after that war the Greeks took cities and provinces from the Barbarians (132).

(129) Herodot. lib. 1. init.

(130) They were Cretans.

(131) Herod. lib. 1. cap. 4.

(132) Iſocrat. in Encomio Helenæ, ſub fin.

We muſt not omit the Paſſage of Euripides, where Peleus ſpeaks ſo many Truths to Menelaus. He reproaches him chiefly with two groſs faults; the firſt, in having treated his wife, as if ſhe had been honeſt; the ſecond, in having raiſed troops to recover her. You left her, ſays he, to her own conduct, and without giving orders to have your doors ſhut, and leaving ſervants to look after her, and went away juſt as if Helena, who was the moſt vicious of her ſex, had been the moſt chaſte.

Ἄκλης' ἄδεμνα δώματ' εἰσίας λιπὼν,
Ὡς δὴ γυναῖκα σώφρον' ἐν δόμοις ἔχων,
Πασῶν κακίστω (133).

(133) Eurip. in Andromacha, ver. 593. pag. m. 518.

She went away with a young ſtranger, and you, for love of her, cauſe all Greece to take arms: you ought on the contrary, after having experienced the infidelity of your wife, to have left her where ſhe was, and even to have paid a tribute to prevent her ever ſetting her foot within your houſe.

Ἦν χρῆν σ' ἀποκτύσαντα, μὴ κινεῖν δόρυ,
Κακὴν ἐφευρόντ', ἀλλ' ἐᾶν αὐτῇ μένειν,
Μισθόν τε δόντα, μή ποτ' εἰς οἴκους λαβεῖν (134).

(134) Idem, ibid. ver. 607.

Menelaus anſwers very mildly, that his wife's adventures had been involuntary, and the work of Heaven (135), and that from thence had ariſen great advantage to the Greeks (136), who had begun to learn the art of war at the ſiege of Troy. He confirms the obſervation of Iſocrates.

(135) See the beginning of the remark [T].

(136) Eurip. in Andromacha, ver. 681. pag. 522.

[S] Helena's Necklace has been much talk'd of.] Menelaus preparing for the Expedition againſt Troy, was at Delphi with Ulyſſes to conſult the Oracle, and dedicated Helena's necklace there. Τότε δὴ Μενέλαος μὲν τῇ προνοίᾳ (137) Ἀθηνᾷ, τὸν τῆς Ἑλένης ὅρμον ἀνέθηκεν ἐν Δέλφοις (138). The Oracle commanded him to do ſo, and promiſed by this means revenge upon the raviſher. Athenæus (139) has preſerved the Oracle's anſwer: it conſiſts but of three verſes, and informs us, that this necklace was of maſſy Gold, and that Venus gave it to Helena. When the Phoceans plundered the Temple of Delphi in the 106 Olympiad, this necklace was part of their booty; but it produc'd a ſtrange effect; the Lady, who got it, became an infamous proſtitute (140). She left her houſe to run over the World with a young Epirot, whom ſhe was fond of (141). It was a very active contagion, or a manner of puniſhment very unworthy of the Goddeſs, to whom Menelaus had dedicated it. It would have been proper to have puniſhed with a natural, and not with a moral Evil, the preſumption of that Woman, in ſeizing the ſpoils of ſo ſacred a Place. See the Remark [C] of the Article ÆGIALEA.

(137) Meurſius inſtead of προνοίᾳ would have it read προναίᾳ protemplari. See his treatiſe de Regno Laconico, pag. 22. where he refers to his Lectiones Atticæ, lib. 2. cap. 17. concerning the true Epithets of Minerva προνοία & προναία.

(138) Euſtathius ad Odyſſ. lib. 3.

(139) Athen. lib. 6. pag. 232.

(140) Diod. Sic. lib. 16. cap. 65.

Obſerve, that ſome ſay, that the Lady, who had this necklace, was already a Woman of looſe Character. It is ſaid, that the wives of thoſe, who plunder'd the Temple, diſputed who ſhould have the necklace of Helena, and that of Eriphyle, and that they were obliged to decide the Conteſt by Lot. Eriphyle's necklace fell to a woman of cruel diſpoſition, who afterwards kill'd her Huſband: the other fell to a Woman of great beauty, but very laſcivious (142).

(141) Athen. lib. 6. pag. 233.

(142) Idem, ibid

as likewiſe her Crater, and the Nepenthes, which ſhe gave Telemachus, the ſon of Ulyſſes, to drink [T]. It is ſaid alſo, that being upon the point of being ſacrificed, [T] .... as likewiſe her Crater, and the Nepenthes which ſhe gave Telemachus the Son of Ulyſſes to drink.] The Crater was a work of Vulcan: it was a Marriage-preſent, for when Pelops was married, Vulcan gave him it. Menelaus being deſcended from Pelops received this as part of his inheritance, and loſt it when Paris ſtole away Helena together with the jewels and moveables of his hoſt. But it is ſaid, that Helena threw this beautiful preſent into the ſea near the Iſle of Cos, and that it being taken up in the net of ſome Fiſhermen, there aroſe a diſpute, which was at laſt determined by dedicating it to Apollo. According to the Author, who informs me of this, it was a Tripos (143); however the Commentators (144) pretend that Lycophron, Diogenes Laertius, Apuleius (145) and Philoſtratus have meant the ſame thing. Now Lycophron calls it ταμάσιον κρατῆρα; and here are the words of Apuleius (146): Nunquam apud eum (Homerum) marino aliquo & piſculento medicavit nec Proteus faciem, nec Ulyſſes ſcrobem, nec Æolus follem, nec Helena CRATEREM, nec Circe poculum, nec Venus cingulum. i. e. "In Homer we never find, that Proteus uſed any "thing from the ſea or of fiſhes to enchant his face, "or Ulyſſes the ditch, or Æolus the bellows, or Hele-"na the Crater, or Circe the cup, or Venus the girdle." As for Philoſtratus, here is what he ſays in the Epiſtle dedicatory to his Lives of the Sophiſts. Τόδε φρόντισμα τῆτο ἄριςε ὑπάτων, ἡ τὰ ἄφθη σοὶ κυφισῖ τῆς γνάμης, ὥσπερ ὁ κρατὴρ τῆς Ἑλένης τοῖς Αἰγυπτίοις φαρμάκοις. It does not appear to me, that either he or Apuleius ſpeak of a particular Veſſel, which belong'd to Helena as an exquiſite piece of workmanſhip. It is plain, that they allude to what Homer relates in the IVth Book of the Odyſſey, concerning the Nepenthes; it is, that Helena, in order to make Telemachus the Son of Ulyſſes, and the other Gueſts merry, and to prevent them from thinking of their misfortunes, mixed with their wine a little Nepenthes, which was I know not what, endowed with an excellent vertue.

Ἐνθ' αὖθ' ἄλλ' ἐνόησ' Ἑλένη Διὸς ἐκγεγαυῖα.
Αὐτίκ' ἄρ' εἰς οἶνον βάλε φάρμακον, ἔνθεν ἔπινον,
Νηπενθές τ' ἄχολον τε, κακῶν ἐπίληθον ἁπάντων.
Ὃς τὸ καταβρόξειεν ἐπὴν κρητῆρι μιγείη (147).

Helena had brought this wonderful remedy from Egypt. Polydamna the wife of Theon had taught it her. Homer ſays nothing about the veſſel, which contained this mixt wine; and therefore Apuleius and Philoſtratus conſider only the vertue of Nepenthes, and conſequently do not ſpeak of the beautiful veſſel mentioned by Diogenes Laertius, I mean the marriage-preſent, which Pelops received of Vulcan, &c. You may recollect here what I ſaid in the firſt remark, where I mention a cup, which Helena offered to Minerva; and if you would know why I made uſe of the barbarous term Crater, I ſhall tell you, that it was becauſe the words glaſs, cup, bowl, goblet, do not expreſs what was meant by Crater in Homer's time. Crater was a large veſſel not to drink out of, but only to mix water with wine in it . . . and from this veſſel the wine thus mixed was poured into pots, and then into drinking-cups (148). Obſerve, that the veſſel mentioned by Diogenes Laertius was thrown into the ſea before the Siege of Troy; and that mentioned by the other Writers was in Menelaus's poſſeſſion during that war.

I ought not to omit, that ſome learned men have choſen the Nepenthes of the Odyſſey for the ſubject of their lucubrations and meditations. They have made a great many conjectures, and raiſed a great many hypotheſes. See Peter Petit's Diſſertation intitled Homeri Nepenthes, printed at Utrecht 1689 in 8vo. We find in it both genius and learning. The Author mentions a Civilian of Naples, who has treated of the ſame ſubject, and abandoned himſelf to all the exceſſes of a ſpirit of digreſſion. I ſhall cite this deſcription, becauſe it repreſents very clearly the affectation of amaſſing together all that a man has read, and becauſe we may ſee in it a great many crude imaginations relating to Nepenthes. Non morabor hic ſtudioſos variis quæſtionibus, ut Petrus la Sena, an Nepenthes ex eorum numero eſſet medicamentorum quæ chimica arte parantur, an ſimplex quid & ſolius naturæ proprietate efficax. Ut ſcilicet habeat occaſionem, quæ de artis ejus origine & antiquitate legerat, effundendi: qua in diſputatione plures onerat paginas, abutiturque patientia lectorum. Nec minus inanis & ſuperfluæ operæ arguendus, cum tam ſollicite de gemmarum viribus diſſerit, ceu non ſatis ex Homeri deſcriptione conſtaret Nepenthes plantis eſſe annumerandum, quod ipſe poſtea fatetur. Cum etiam profeſſus non eſſe hominis frugi, tempus terere inveſtigando, an forte hæc Helenæ potio (verba ejus refero) μαγικῶς, hujuſmodi curationis efficaciam retinuerit, multa nihilo ſecius ſubjungit de Magia Ægyptiorum, veterumque Medicorum incantationibus, locaque Homeri profert ex Odyſſea, quæ ad magiam pertinere exiſtimantur, eorum ſcilicet teſtimonio, qui, ut Plinius lib. 30. cap. 50 refert, Proteæ & Sirenum cantus apud Homerum non aliter intelligi voluerunt. Tum multa interponit de cratere Helenæ, captata occaſione ſermonis ex quodam Cælii Rhodigini loco. Et quid magis ἀπροσδιόνυσον, quam de Clematide Ægyptia dicere, quo ſcommate Zenonem Cittiæum ſolitum peti, quod procero gracilique & fuſco corpore eſſet, tradit Laertius? His igitur (inquam) quæ nihil ad rem attinent, prætermiſſis, aio Nepenthes fuiſſe unum e terra naſcentibus; quoddam ſcilicet herbæ aut virgulti genus (149).

(143) Diog. Laertius, in Thalete, lib. 1. num. 32.

(144) Menag. in Laert. ibid. Meurſius in Lycophr. pag. 272.

(145) In Caſſandra, ver. 854.

(146) Apolog. pag. m. 294.

(147) Homer. Odyſſ. lib. 4. ver. 219.

(148) Mezíriac ſur Ovide, pag. 286. where he proves this, and cenſures Amiot and Vigenere, who have tranſlated Crater by taſſe or coupe.

(149) Petrus Petitus in Homeri Nepenthe, cap. 3. init. pag. 6.

i. e. "I ſhall not amuſe the ſtudious here with vari-"ous queſtions, as Peter la Sena has done, whether "Nepenthes be one of thoſe medicines, which are "prepared by Chemiſtry, or whether it is a ſimple "medicine, and operates merely by the property of "its own nature. This he has done merely that he "might have an occaſion of throwing out what he had "read concerning that art and the antiquity of it, in "which diſputation he loads a great many pages, and "abuſes the patience of his readers. Nor is he guilty "of a leſs impertinent and ſuperfluous labour, when "he examines ſo careſully into the virtues of gems, "as if it were not ſufficiently clear from Homer's "deſcription, that Nepenthes is to be ranked among "the plants, as he afterwards owns. Beſides after he "has declared, that it is wrong to ſpend one's time "in enquiring, whether perhaps this potion of Helena "retained its efficacy by magic, he notwithſtanding "treats of the magic of the Egyptians, and the in-"cantations of the old Phyſicians, and produces paſ-"ſages out of Homer's Odyſſey, which are ſuppoſed "to relate to magic, that is, in the opinion of thoſe, "who, as Pliny obſerves B. XXX. C. 50. would "have the ſtory of Proteus and the Syrens Songs in Ho-"mer underſtood in that manner. He introduces like-"wiſe a great many things concerning Helena's Cra-"ter, upon occaſion of a paſſage in Cælius Rhodigi-"nus. And what is more impertinent than to ſpeak "of the Egyptian Clematis, which was a jeſt, that, "according to Laertius, was commonly caſt upon Ze-"no Cittiæus, becauſe he was a tall thin man of a "brown complexion? To paſs by theſe obſervations, "I ſay, which are nothing to the purpoſe, I aſſert "that Nepenthes was a production of the earth, ei-"ther a kind of herb or ſprig." The Chevalier de Meré imagines, that Nepenthes is nothing elſe but the charms of Helena's converſation. Here is the manner in which he expreſſes himſelf in a diſcourſe addreſſed to a Lady. "Tho' Homer does not expa-"tiate upon Helena's eloquence, notwithſtanding he "ſpeaks ſo largely of that of Ulyſſes and Neſtor; "yet he gives us to underſtand by a myſtery of Poe-"try, that it was a pleaſure to hear her ſpeak; and "here is in a few words what led me to think in that "way. Ulyſſes was a long time after the taking of "Troy unable to return to his Iſland of Ithaca. His "ſon Telemachus was in great anxiety; and in order "to know whether he was living or not, he went to "viſit Neſtor, who could not inform him what was "become of his father. Upon this the youth went "from thence to Menelaus, where he ſaw Helena, "and ſupped with her. He being very melancholy, "that Princeſs pitied him, and made uſe of a charm "to make him forget all his uneaſineſs. This charm, "ſays Homer, was a liquor, which ſhe poured into "the wine before it was brought to the table, and this "mixture was ſo potent, that after having taſted it, ficed, a miracle ſaved her [U]; and they have endeavoured to excuſe her adulteries, by alledging, that the Gods forced her to them [X]. The Pagans have employed ſuch ſuppoſitions upon ſo many occaſions, that it will not be impertinent to enquire what might ſerve them as a motive to reaſon in that manner. This is what I deſign a remark for [Y]. Some ſay, that when ſhe cut off her hair upon an occaſion of mourning,

An inſtance of the effects of the ſpirit of digreſſion.

" it was impoſſible for a perſon to ſhed a tear all that " day. She had likewiſe an admirable ſecret, which " ſhe received from the graces. You know, Madam, that " there is no Lady, that can imitate the ſound of your " words; but if ſhe had obſerved you, ſhe would " have aſſumed ſo perfectly your voice and manner, " that ſhe would have been taken for you (150)."

(150) Cheval. de Meré, Diſcours des Agremens, pag. 140. edit. de Hollande.

[U] A miracle ſaved her.] It was this. A ſevere peſtilence ravaged the city of Lacedemon. The Gods declared, that health ſhould be reſtored, provided that a young Lady of quality was ſacrificed every year. The lot fell upon the beautiful Helena; but as ſhe was led to the altar, an eagle came, and took away the knife, and laid it upon an heifer. This was the occaſion of Helena's life being ſpared (151).

(151) Plutarch. in Parallelis, pag. 314.

[X] They have endeavoured to excuſe her adulteries, by alledging, that the Gods urged her to them.] I have already touched this point (152); but there is ſomething wanting. If ſome ſay, that Venus managed the affair of ſtealing her away, to ſhew her gratitude to the judge, who had given her the prize in the conteſt about beauty; others affirm, that ſhe did it to revenge an affront. Menelaus had promiſed her an hecatomb in caſe ſhe ſhould obtain Helena; but having gained his wiſh, he did fulfill his vow. Venus was provoked; and to puniſh him, procured his wife to be carried away (153). Others carry the affair much higher: they pretend (154), that Tyndarus forgot Venus in a ſacrifice, which he offered to all the Gods, and that as a puniſhment for this contempt, Venus procured that the daughters of this Prince ſhould be twice or thrice married, and leave their huſbands. What is pleaſant is, that the ſame Goddeſs, who had precipitated Tyndarus's daughters into theſe diſorders, reproached him with their adulteries. It is ſaid, that theſe reproaches affected him ſo much, that in revenge he ordered fetters to be put upon her feet. Pauſanias cannot be induced to believe, that Tyndarus would be ſo ridiculous, to imagine, that he could revenge himſelf upon Venus by ordering a ſtatue to be made, which he called by her name, and binding the feet of it with chains. But in this point the Hiſtorian did not underſtand his own religion. He did not know that upon many occaſions the Pagans diſcharged their reſentments upon the temples and ſtatues of the Gods, whom they thought to be the authors of their ill ſucceſs (155). And in reality is it not an affront to a Prince, to abuſe his pictures and ſtatues? Remember Theodoſius's indignation againſt the city of Antioch; nothing was more provoking to him than the outrage done to the ſtatue of the Empreſs during the ſedition. See the hiſtory of him written by Monſr. Flechier (156). For the reſt, I ſhall remark, that when I ſpake of the reproaches caſt upon Tyndarus by Venus, I only related the ſentiments of ſome Moderns, who have been miſled by the tranſlation of Pauſanias: it is certain that the Greek text does not intimate that this Goddeſs reproached Tyndarus in that manner. Thoſe, who underſtand Greek, will ſee that I am not miſtaken. Τὸν γὰρ δὴ ἕτερον λόγον, ὡς τὴν Θεὸν πεῖθαις ἐτιμωρεῖτο ὁ Τυνδάρεως γενέσθαι ταῖς Θυγατράσιν ἐξ Ἀφροδίτης ἡγεμόνα τὰ ὀνείδη, τοῦτον δὲ οὐδὲ τὴν ἀρχὴν πιστεύομαι· ἢ γὰρ δὴ παντάπασιν ἔνηθες, κέδρῳ ποιησάμενον ζώδιον καὶ ὄνομα Ἀφροδίτην θέμενον, ἐλπίζειν ἀμυνέσθαι τὴν Θεόν. That is, according to Amaſæus's tranſlation, Nam Deam ulciſci voluiſſe compedibus (ſunt enim qui hoc etiam memoriæ prodiderint) exprobrantem (157) illi filiarum adulteria, ut credam, adduci non poſſum. Quam enim ridiculum, ſi putaſſet ab effigie, quam è cedro feciſſet Veneris nomine, injectis compedibus pœnas expeti poſſe (158).

(152) In the remark [I].

(153) Ptol. Hephæſt. apud Photium, pag. 480.

(154) See the article ÆGIALEA, quotation (10).

(155) See Penſees ſur les Cometes, num. 132.

(156) Pag. 341, 342. ad ann. 387. Dutch edit.

(157) Theſe equivocal words, but which ſignify more evidently the reproaches made by Venus, than thoſe made to Venus, have miſled ſome authors.

(158) Here is the manner in which it ought to be tranſlated, according to Sylburgius, Nam profecto ſolidum omnino foret, facto è cedro ſimulacro, & Veneris nomine ei indito, putare ſe hac ratione ulciſci.

[Y] This is what I deſign a remark for.] Menelaus anſwering the ſevere reproaches of Peleus, declared, that Helena's will was not the cauſe of the adventures which ſhe had undergone, but that we ought to have recourſe to the will of the Gods.

Ἑλένη δ' ἰμόχθησ' οὐχ ἑκοῦσ' ἀλλ' ἐκ Θεῶν (159).

(159) Euripid. in Androm. ver. 680. pag. 522.

This was a language very common among the Pagans. They aſcribed to Fortune, that is to the Deity, not only their ill ſucceſs, but even their faults. This excuſe, or this wretched conſolation, ſeemed always ready; they had immediate recourſe to it. Plutarch informs us of this, when he cites ſome verſes, which contain a thing, ſaid by a father to a ſon, and the ſon's anſwer:

Souvent mon fils les habitans des cieux
Font trebucher les hommes ſoucieux.
That is,
" The inhabitants of heaven, my ſon, frequently make " anxious men fall."

The anſwer was:

Il n'y a rien pour ſa faute excuſer
Si à la main que les Dieux accuſer.
That is,
" He has nothing to do in order to excuſe his faults; " but to accuſe the Gods."

I make uſe of Amiot's verſion, and ſhall remark by the by, that the epithet ſoucieux, which he has inſerted in the ſecond verſe is a word, which the neceſſity of the rhime extorted from him, and which has no foundation in the original. Compare a little the Greek with the French tranſlation; you will ſee that I am in the right.

Πολλ' ὦ τέκνον σφάλλουσιν ἀνθρώπους Θεοί.
Τὸ ῥᾴδιον εἶπας, αἰτιάσασθαι Θεούς (160).

(160) Plutarch. de audiendis Poetis, pag. 20, D.

You will imagine, perhaps, that the great facility, with which complaints were formed againſt the Gods, led men to make uſe of this ſubterfuge without examination and reflection, and that it was one of theſe firſt motions, which riſe in our minds before we have had time to prepare ourſelves for judging of things. But it is certain, that upon many occaſions we ſpeak thus after mature deliberation. Thoſe who do not examine to the bottom what paſſes within themſelves, are eaſily perſuaded, that they are free, and that if their will is inclined to evil, it is their own fault, it is thro' a choice, of which they are maſters. Thoſe who form another judgment are perſons, who have carefully ſtudied the ſprings and circumſtances of their actions, and have well reflected upon the progreſs of the motions of their mind. Theſe perſons generally doubt of their free-will, and come even to perſuade themſelves, that their reaſon and mind are ſlaves, which cannot reſiſt the force that hurries them whither they are unwilling to go. Now it was principally this ſort of people, who aſcribed to the Gods the cauſe of their ill actions. They remembered, that they had well conſidered, that they were in a way pernicious to their fortune, and ſcandalous to their character, and that they had made many efforts to ſubdue the paſſion, which led them into it; but they were ſtill more ſenſible, that all theſe efforts were ineffectual, and that reaſon, though a thouſand times called upon, and vows and prayers had been a very weak aſſiſtance. They concluded therefore, that a ſecret cauſe and a ſuperior force puſhed them on, and hurried them away; that the Gods in ſhort, were the cauſe, both of the paſſions, which they felt, and of the pernicious and criminal conſequences of theſe paſſions. Here is the unravelling of the knot; there is ſomething divine here, ſaid they, juſt as there is in the diſeaſes of the body, which baffle the ſkill and experience of the moſt able Phyſicians. We know what ought to be done, what would be of moſt advantage to us, moſt convenient, and moſt honourable; and yet we follow the contrary courſe. This comes from the Gods. It is to Jupiter, that Perſius the Poet addreſſes himſelf to deſire his aſſiſtance, that tyrants may own the power of virtue, and feel the ſhocking remorſe of not having followed it.

Magne

Magne pater divum, ſævos punire tyrannos
Haud alia ratione velis, cum dira libido
Moverit ingenium ferventi tincta veneno :
Virtutem videant, intabeſcantque relicta (161).

(161) Perſ. Sat. 3. ver. 35.

Plutarch mentions a poetical ſentence, which ſhews that they reaſoned in this manner : thoſe who know what is right, do not perform it; the Gods therefore are the cauſe of it. I ſhall give the Greek in the margin (162), and here follows Amiot's tranſlation.

(162) Αἳ αἱ τόδ' ἦδη Θεῖον ἀνθρώποις κακὸν, Ὅταν τις εἰδῇ τἀγαθὸν, χρῄτας δὲ μή. Plutarch. de audiend. Poetis, pag. 33, E.

Là! c'eſt un mal envoyé des hauts Dieux,
Quand l'homme ſait & void devant ſes yeux
Le bien, & fait néantmoins le contraire.

Medea reaſoned in this manner, when ſhe found, that ſhe could not reſiſt the paſſion, which ſhe had conceived for Jaſon; that ſhe could not, I ſay, reſiſt it, tho' ſhe ſaw plainly the ſhameful and criminal conſequences of her conduct, and though her reaſon condemned them.

Concipit interea validos Æetias ignes,
Et luctata diu, poſtquam ratione furorem
Vincere non poterat ; Fruſtra Medea repugnas,
Neſcio quis deus obſtat, ait (163).
\- - - - - - - -
\- - - - - - - -
Excute virgineo conceptas pectore flammas,
Si potes, infelix. Si poſſem, ſanior eſſem ;
Sed trahit invitam nova vis : aliudque Cupido,
Mens aliud ſuadet. Video meliora, proboque
Deteriora ſequor (164).

(163) Ovid. Metam. lib. 7. ver. 9.

(164) Idem, ibid. ver. 17.

" Mean while Æetias fries in ſecret fires,
" Who ſtruggling long with over-ſtrong deſires,
" When reaſon could not ſuch a rage reſtrain,
" She ſaid, Medea, thou reſiſt'ſt in vain :
" Some God, unknown, withſtands.
\- - - - - - - -
\- - - - - - - -
" Theſe furies from thy virgin breaſt repel,
" Wretch, if thou canſt. Could I, I ſhould be " well.
" A new-felt force my ſtriving pow'rs invades ;
" Affection this, diſcretion that perſuades.
" I ſee the better, I approve it too ;
" The worſe I follow."

SANDYS.

She ſays to herſelf all that could cure her of this paſſion : ſhe repreſents to herſelf the enormity of the crime, which ſhe ſhould commit ; and there were ſome moments, in which theſe ideas of her duty were ready to gain the ſuperiority ; but the ſight of Jaſon eaſily ſuppreſſed all that they had done.

Conjugiumne putas? Specioſaque nomina culpæ
Imponis, Medea, tuæ? Quin aſpice quantum
Aggrediare nefas ; &, dum licet, effuge crimen.
Dixit, & ante oculos rectum pietaſque pudorque
Conſtiterant, & victa aebat jam terga Cupido.
Ibat ad antiquas Hecates Perſeïdos aras,
Quas nemus umbroſum, ſecretaque ſylva tegebat :
Et jam fractus erat, pulſuſque reſederat ador,
Cùm videt Æſoniden, extinctaque flamma reluxit (165).
\- - - - - - - - -
\- - - - - - - - -
Sic jam lentus amor, quem jam languere putares,
Ut videt juvenem, ſpecie præſentis inarſit (166).

(165) Idem, ibid. ver. 69.

(166) Idem, ibid. ver. 82.

" Call'ſt thou him huſband ? wilt thou then thy " blame,
" Medea, varniſh with an honeſt name ?
" Conſider well what thou intend'ſt to do ;
" And while thou maiſt, ſo foul a crime eſchew.
" Thus ſhe ; when honour, piety, and right
" Before her ſtood, and Cupid put to flight.
" Then goes where Hecate's old altar ſtood,
" O'erſhadow'd by a dark and ſecret wood.
" Her broken ardor ſhe had now reclaim'd ;
" Which Jaſon's preſence forthwith reinflam'd.
\- - - - - - - -
\- - - - - - - -
" So ſickly love, which late appear'd to die,
" New life aſſum'd from his inflaming eye."

SANDYS.

An infinite number of perſons of both ſexes, who are not mentioned in Hiſtory, have been in the ſame caſe. Love has made them commit a thouſand diſorders, of which they ſo evidently ſaw the ſcandal and inconvenience, that they endeavoured to prevent them, by calling in reaſon to their aid, and putting up a thouſand wiſhes to be freed from love. It was natural that they ſhould conclude, that they were not the cauſe of their ill conduct, ſince they had a reaſonable mind, a ſoul that was free and miſtreſs of its will. This firſt concluſion led them to another, that an external cauſe ſuperiour to all their powers urged them on : the ſecond concluſion led them on to a third, that a deity was the external and neceſſitating cauſe. Here is the original of the pretending divinity of Venus and Cupid; and becauſe men find that jealouſy, envy, avarice, drunkenneſs, deſire of revenge, and many other paſſions make them commit a thouſand things, which reaſon condemns, and which are even contrary to the true intereſts of ſelf-love, and which one would not wiſh, it was believed, that the Gods were the inſtigators of theſe things. The blame was not therefore caſt upon them for want of reflection, but becauſe men reflected very carefully upon what paſſes in the mind. If the Pagans had had the juſt notions of God, which we have, and which repreſent him to us as a being perfectly holy, they would have been preſerved from this raſh judgment ; but as they aſcribed to the Gods the ſame faults, to which mankind are obnoxious, there was nothing to hinder them from thinking, that the Gods forced men into evil, and render'd ineffectual all the lights of their reaſon, ſometimes by a previous flattering view of pleaſure which neceſſitated the will, at other times by importunate pain, which was attended with the ſame conſequence. Paris pleaſed Helena : Jaſon pleaſed Medea. They did not think of an union with thoſe objects without feeling beforehand an incredible ſatisfaction ; they could not conſider themſelves as ſeparated from them without feeling before hand an exquiſite diſſatisfaction. Theſe impreſſions did not depend upon their liberty, and were no more ſubject to them than the agreeable or diſagreeable ſenſation, which we have in taſting honey or gall. All that theſe two women could do was to oppoſe to theſe two fore-taſtes reaſon and duty, weak arms, if Paris and Jaſon continued to excite the ſame ideas and impreſſions ; ſince in that caſe they would ſooner or later captivate the will, and force its conſent, however deſirous it might be not to ſubmit, and to paſs from love to indifference. Uſeleſs are the wiſhes, weak the velleities, in the preſence of thoſe fore-taſts, which I have ſpoke of, and the cauſe of which ariſes not from ourſelves. Whence comes it then ? The Pagans in vain ſought for it on the right hand and on the left ; they could not find it on earth, and for that reaſon aſcribed it to the Gods. They might do this two ways, either by ſuppoſing a Cupid, who wounded the heart, or that the author of the human body had adjuſted the parts of it with ſuch art, that the body of Jaſon, for inſtance, would excite in Medea's heart and head thoſe motions of the ſpirits, upon which love mechanically and inevitably depends. According to this latter principle, if Helena or Medea became amorous, it was to be aſcribed to him, who formed and arranged the parts of their bodies, juſt as if a chamber ſmokes, when the wind blows, it muſt be imputed, not to the wind, but to the Maſon, who built the chimney.

How involuntary moſt of the paſſions and their conſequences are.

This was an abyſs, which the Pagans could not extricate themſelves out of, and they unavoidably fell into it, as often as they endeavoured to account for the contrariety to be met with between what we do, and what we know ; and conſequently they muſt fall into it very frequently ; for human life is ſcarce any thing but a continual conteſt between the paſſions and the conſcience, in which the latter is almoſt always overcome. What is moſt ſtrange and odd in this conteſt is, that Victory declares very often for the ſide, which ſhocks at once the ideas, which men have of right, and their knowledge of their temporal intereſt. I am willing to think, that there are ſome people of ſuch a brutal ſtupidity, that they do not ſee, that their life would be more happy, if they did not nouriſh in their mourning [Z], this did not leſſen her beauty. A French author pretends, that ſhe had a great deal of wit and eloquence, and was as much beloved for theſe qualifications as for her beauty (l) [AA].

(l) See citation (150).

HELIODORUS

breaſts the paſſions, which they indulge there; but I cannot comprehend, but that moſt of the jealous and envious muſt be well convinced, that an exemption from jealouſy and envy would be an incomparable advantage to them in this world, and worthy to be purchaſed with its weight in gold. A woman jealous of her huſband or her gallant, a man jealous of his wife or miſtreſs, are extremely ſenſible of their misfortune, and paſſionately wiſh to be delivered from that torment. They do all they can to expel their fury, which perſecutes them: they employ, in order to undeceive or to deceive themſelves, all the reaſons which their mind is able to ſuggeſt; but in ſpite of all theſe efforts jealouſy ſubſiſts. They find themſelves, to their great regret, more ingenious to invent what foments it, than what would weaken it. We may ſay almoſt the very ſame of the envious. They know well enough, that their ſelf-love would find its account incomparably better in being content with their condition, and ſeeing with pleaſure the proſperity of another, than in afflicting themſelves at the ſucceſs of a neighbour, who grows richer than themſelves; and yet in ſpite of this conviction they chagrin themſelves, and pine away, when they ſee the good fortune of others (167); and inſtead of rejoicing, as they ought to do for their own ſake, are reduced to ſeek ſome remedy in the meaneſt treachery. They impede by calumny and perfidy the affairs of their neighbour: by theſe methods they endeavour to abate the malignant fever, which preys upon them. What could a Pagan Philoſopher ſay upon this point? Would not he be obliged to acknowledge a ſuperior cauſe within, and to rank all theſe perſons among the fanatics, energumeni, enthuſiaſts, and thoſe in general, who were thought to be agitated by a divine fury (168)? Obſerve, that Ovid ſuppoſes, that the jealouſy, which Aglaura, the daughter of Cecrops, King of Athens, conceived againſt his ſiſter, was infuſed into her by a deity (169). The Chriſtian ſyſtem is the only one, which can reſolve theſe difficulties. It informs us, that ſince the firſt man fell from the ſtate of innocence, all his deſcendants have been ſubject to ſuch a corruption, that without ſupernatural grace they are neceſſarily ſlaves to ſin, inclined to do evil, uſeleſs with reſpect to every thing that is good (170). Reaſon, Philoſophy, the ideas of right, the knowledge of the true intereſts of ſelf-love, all theſe are incapable of reſiſting the paſſions. The government which was given to the ſuperior part of the ſoul over the inferior, has been taken away from mankind, ſince the fall of Adam. It is in this manner that divines explain the change produced by ſin: but as moſt metaphors ought not to be ſtretched beyond a certain point, we muſt not abuſe this; for it would not be reaſonable to ſay, that in the ſtate of innocence the inferior part was in the ſame condition, as it is at preſent, but that no diſorder could ariſe, ſince the ſuperior part could always reſtrain it in time. This would be ſuppoſing, that the human machine, when it came out of the hands of its Creator, would have been actually determined towards ſenſuality and criminal paſſions; and this would be doing injuſtice to the perfections of the ſupreme being.

(167) Videt ingratos, intabeſcitque videndo Succeſſus hominum; carpitque & carpitur una; Suppliciumque ſuum eſt. Ovid. Metam. lib. 2. ver. 2. 782. He ſpeaks of envy.

(168) Eſt Deus in nobis; agitante calescimus illo. Impetus hic ſacræ ſemina mentis habet. Ovid. Faſtor. lib. 6. circa init. He ſpeaks of Poets.

(169) Ovid. Met. lib. 2. Fab. 12.

(170) See the Prayers of the Liturgy of Geneva.

[Z] She cut off her hair upon an occaſion of mourning.] What I have to ſay upon this text was communicated to me by a Profeſſor of Geneva (171). I ſhall make uſe of his words. "The ſubject of the firſt letter "in the collection of John Michael Brutus is diverting. Victorius, who writes to John della Caſa, "pretends that Helena, in order to ſhew her ſorrow "for the death of Clytemneſtra her ſiſter, cut off her "hair to the roots, but that this did not prevent her "continuing very beautiful ſtill. And Monſignor del- "la Caſa is of opinion, that ſhe cut off only the ends, "as is done ſometimes to hinder them from branching; "and there are produced upon this ſubject ſome verſes "of an ingenious poem of that Archbiſhop, addreſſed "to Count Galeazzo de Florimont, in which that "prelate frankly owns, that he had not quitted the "world but very ſuperficially; and that he had thus "imitated Helena, who ſacrificed to the ſorrow of "her ſiſter's death only the extremities of her locks. "The Poetry is noble.

(171) Mr Minutoli, whom I have already mentioned in the remarks [L] and [M] of the article of EPICURUS.

" Ut captâ rediens Helena cum conjuge Troiâ
" Lento homine, atque animi lenis, nimiumque remiſſi,
" Incidit in cædem ipſam, & funus prope ſororis,
" Quam præceps miſeri virtus jugularat Oreſtis,
" Succiſam de more comam miſſura ſepulto
" Germanæ cineri, fertur dempſiſſe capillo
" Vix tandem è ſummo paulum, ne forte placeret
" Tonſa minus metuens Spartanis improba mœchis.
" Haud aliter, Galatæe. malis erroribus actus
" Nuper ego, & Phrygios nautas Paridemque ſecutus
" Aufugi longè, atque idem, rediit tamen ut mens
" Ad ſeſe, peregrè nimium remorata proterviæ
" Ornamenta fugæ ſenſim lenteque repono, &c.

" When Helena from ruin'd Troy return'd
" With Menelaus to their native home,
" Hearing the fate of poor Electra, ſlain
" By mad Oreſtes, and by cuſtom forc'd
" Her hair to offer at her ſiſter's grave,
" She clipt the ends alone, leſt ſhorn too cloſe,
" The Spartan debauchees ſhould like her leſs:
" So I, O Galeazzo, lately loſt
" In mazy errors, following Paris' crew,
" When reaſon reaſſum'd her power, repent at laſt,
" By ſlow degrees correcting what's amiſs."

The faſhions of head-dreſſes might be diverſified in ſuch a manner, that the charms of the face might not ſuffer any diminution by the loſs of the hair. But in general it is certain, that this loſs is reckoned an accident very formidable to Beauty. See the Remark [G] of the Article of ANACREON.

[AA] A French Author pretends, that ſhe had a great deal of wit and eloquence, and was as much beloved for theſe Qualifications as for her beauty.] This French Author is the Chevalier de Meré. He proves by two eminent inſtances, that women ought not to depend too much on their beauty, or men on their good mien; and that it is the addreſs and turn of wit, which do almoſt every thing, provided that the perſon have nothing ſhocking (172). Cleopatra furniſhes him with the firſt inſtance. She had no great ſhare of beauty, ſays he (173), "and as the world ſpoke of her, ſhe was "not ſo beautiful as to ſurprize one at firſt; but when "one came to conſider her, there was a charm in "her; and it was by her delicate behaviour that "ſhe held Ceſar three or four years inchanted. . . . . "As a certain proof that it was on the account of her "wit, that this Princeſs was ſo much admired, we "may obſerve that Anthony, who knew how to "chooſe as well as Ceſar, never ſaw her till ſhe was of "an age, when few women continue beautiful, and "became ſo deeply in love with her, that he choſe "rather to renounce the Empire of the world, than "to loſe the ſight of her." Here is his ſecond inſtance.

(172) Chevalier de Meré, Diſcours des Agrémens, pag. 138. Dutch edition.

(173) Ibid. See above remark [A] of the article DELLIUS.

" Helene par même voye
" Aux rares beautez de ſon corps
" Ajouſtant de l'eſprit les aimables threſors,
" Cauſa l'embraſement de Troye.
" Si ſon eſprit n'euſt eu des charmes
" Ce peuple n'euſt jamais voulu,
" Contre le droit des gens d'un pouvoir abſolu,
" Pour la garder prendre les armes.
" La Grece auſſi l'eſt oubliée
" Entre les bras de ſon amant,
" Mais elle ſe ſouvint de ſon eſprit charmant,
" Et la guerre fut publiée.

" Helen, whoſe charms of mind improv'd her beauty,
" To Troy prov'd fatal. Had her wit been leſs,
" The Trojans ne'er had fought to keep her with them,
" And Greece had left her in her lover's arms.
" But as her mind was beauteous as her body,
" Her country thought her worth a ten years war."

" There

HELIODORUS a native of Emeſſa in Phœnicia (a), is better known by the Romance he compoſed in his youth [A], than by the Biſhopric of Trica (b), to which he was afterwards promoted. There are but few perſons that believe he was depoſed by a Synod, becauſe he would not conſent to the ſuppreſſing of that Romance [B]. Nicephorus is the only author who aſſerts it. Socrates (c) relates that Heliodorus introduced the

(a) Heliod. Æthiop. lib. 10, ſub fin.

(b) In Theſſaly.

(c) Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. 5. cap. 22.

" There is great probability, Madam, that her beauty " was not alone, ſince all the Gods intereſted themſelves to give her to thoſe who were their favourites; " and if ſhe had only had a good face, and a fine " ſhape, ſhe would have been but a very indifferent " preſent for them. I imagine, that what they valued in her was of more importance; it was her " art of pleaſing, and gaining the affections by her " converſation (174)." Add to this the words of the ſame author, which I have cited in ſpeaking of Nepenthes (175).

(174) Chevalier de Meré, Diſcours des Agrémens, pag. 139.

I do not examine whether he is in the right in the particular fact relating to Helena; but it ſeems to me in general, that his maxim is true (176). Beauty without the charms of wit and converſation is of no great force; and if it make conqueſts, it does ſo in the manner of thoſe brave Generals, who immediately ſubdue a Province, but know not how to keep it. The Empire of the Fair is maintained at leaſt as much by the charms of wit as by thoſe of the face. Theſe are two kinds of graces, which ſtand in need of each other, and render one another mutual good offices. Abſurd and ridiculous diſcourſes would diſguſt extremely, if the beauty of the perſon did not lend them I know not what charms. Certain beauties of the body would make no impreſſion, if the charms of wit were not ſpread over them. Here are mutual aſſiſtances given. But as wit is almoſt always the principal inſtrument in maintaining the conqueſt, and frequently in making it, it may be affirmed to be that which contributes moſt to eſtabliſh the power of beauty. The Poet, who aſſures us that there wants no leſs ſtrength to keep than to gain, (175) In the remark [T] at the end.

(176) See upon this point the remark [A] of the article DELLIUS, and the Nouvelles Lettres contre l'Hiſtoire du Calviniſme de Maimbourg, pag. 591, & 774.

Non minor eſt virtus, quam quærere, parta tueri:
Caſus ineſt illis; hic erit artis opus (177),

(177) Ovid. de Arte amandi, lib. 2. ver. 13.

is one of the great Legiſlators in the Empire of Love; and he applies this ſentence to the affair treated of in this place. He goes ſtill further; he lets us know, that the acquiſition is leſs difficult than the conſecration:

(178) Idem, ibid. ver. 15.

Nunc mihi, ſi quando, Puer & Cytherëa, favete:
Nunc Erato: nam tu nomen amoris habes.
Magna paro: quas poſſit Amor remanere per artes
Dicere, tam vaſto pervagus orbe puer (178).

(179) Plus eſt Provinciam retinere, quam facere. Flor. lib. 2. cap. 17. Facilius eſt quædam vincere quam tueri. Q. Curtius, lib. 4. cap. 11. See Freinſhemius's Commentaries upon theſe two paſſages.

This is likewiſe the opinion of ſeveral Hiſtorians with regard to the progreſs of arms (179).

[A] By the Romance he compoſed in his youth.] It is intitled Αἰθιοπικὰ Æthiopicks, and relates the amours of Theogenes and Chariclea. There is an extract of it in Photius (1). Monſieur Huet is of opinion that Heliodorus was with regard to the Romance-writers, what Homer was with regard to the Poets; that is to ſay, that this Biſhop's work has been the ſpring and the model of an infinite number of romances. Eum ſibi ſequentium temporum fabulatores Romanenſes tanquam exemplum propoſuerant ad imitandum, & tam verè omnes dici poſſunt ex hoc fonte, quam Poetæ ex Homerico ſuas, ſic ut dicam, aquas hauſiſſe (2). The firſt edition of this Romance is, I think, that of Baſil, printed in the year 1534 (α). Opſopæus, who dedicated it to the Senate of Nuremberg, aſſerts that a ſoldier preſerved the manuſcript of it, when the Library of Buda was plundered (3). Staniſlaus Warſzewicki a Poliſh Knight is the author of the Latin Tranſlation which was printed with the Greek at Baſil in the year 1551. Amiot began his French Tranſlation with that of this work. Melin de St. Gelais Biſhop of Angouleſme (β) has turned a great part of it in French Verſe (4). John Bourdelot's Notes upon this Romance are very learned; they were printed at Paris in the year 1619, with Heliodorus's Greek original, and with the Poliſh Knight's Tranſlation.

(1) Num. 73. pag. 157, & ſeq.

(2) Huet, de Origin. Fabul. Roman. pag. 38.

(3) See Geſner's Biblioth. fol. 301.

(4) Sorel, Remarques ſur le XIII Livre du Berger extravagant, pag. 685.

[α] The firſt Edition . . was printed in 1534.] Mr. Bayle is miſtaken; it was printed in 1533. He is alſo in the wrong when he aſſerts, that Amiot began his French Tranſlations with that of this Romance. For he began with tranſlating ſome of Euripides's Tragedies into French verſe (*). ADD. REM..]

(*) From the Critical Remarks printed at the end of the Paris edition of Mr. Bayle's Dictionary.

[β] If Sorel aſſerted, what Mr. Bayle ſeems to make him ſay here, namely, that Melin de St. Gelais was Biſhop of Angouleſme, he had conſulted neither Sammarthanus's Elogies, nor the Gallia Chriſtiana; for it was Octavianus de St. Gelais, Melin's natural father, who was Biſhop of that city. He flouriſhed under the Kings Charles VIII and Lewis XII; ſeveral of this Biſhop's Poems are inſerted in the Collection printed in a black letter in 4to, with this title, Verger d'honneur, i. e. " The Orchard of Honour."

It is ſurprizing that Mr. Bayle did not obſerve this blunder: it could happen only by ſuch an abſence of mind, to which the moſt learned men are ſometimes ſubject. When he tranſcribed Sorel (†), from whom he borrowed this particular, he did not take notice that this Author was miſtaken; otherwiſe he would have given notice of it, as it is his cuſtom. This was perhaps alſo only an overſight of Sorel; but it is nevertheleſs a great fault; for it miſled not only Mr. Bayle, and the Author of the Eſſais de Literature §, but alſo the celebrated Mr. Fabricius †. Inſtead of Melin de St. Gelais, Sorel ought to have ſaid, Octavianus de St. Gelais, Melin's father, who had really been Biſhop of Angouleſme , and who is the perſon meant here. Neither du Verdier ††, nor la Croix du Maine §§, nor any other Author that I know of, mention this Tranſlation in verſe, of part of the Romance of Theagenes and Chariclea, and Sorel is perhaps the only Author who ſpoke of it.

(†) Remarques ſur le Berger Extravagant, liv. 13. pag. 477.

§ Tom. 2. pag. 304, 305. of the Dutch edition.

† Biblioth. Græca, tom 6. pag. 787.

 Sammarth. Elogior. pag. 39.

†† Biblioth. Françoiſe, p. 927.

I ſhall obſerve by the by, that in Beughem's Incunabula Typographiæ (the Infancy of the Art of Printing) p. 176, they have changed this Octavianus de St. Gelas into Octavianus de St. Gervais, which is a ſtrange corruption of names. CRIT. REM.]

§§ Biblioth. Françoiſe, pag. 364.

[B] There are but few perſons who believe he was depoſed by a Synod, becauſe he would not conſent to the ſuppreſſing of that Romance.] Nicephorus relates, that a Synod having obliged Heliodorus to chooſe, either to burn his Romance, or to reſign his Biſhoprick, the Author choſe rather not to be a Biſhop any longer, than to commit his work to the flames (5). This ſeems to be entirely fabulous; ſuch a ſtrange particular would have been related by ſeveral Hiſtorians; and would not have been tranſmitted down to us only by Nicephorus, a very credulous and injudicious Writer. Quæ omnia eò me facile reducunt, ut diffidam iis maxime quæ addit Nicephorus, ſcriptor credulus, ſapientiæ & fidei non ſatis ſpectatæ, Synodum ſcilicet provincialem cognito periculo, in quod lectio fabulæ hujus, cui autoris ſui dignitas tantum ponderis & auctoritatis dabat, juvenes ſuapte natura ad id propenſos & quaſi natantes impelleret, eam ſibi conditionem obtuliſſe, ut aut opus ſuum flammis aboleret, aut ſua dignitate cederet; eumque quod ultimum erat, prætuliſſe (6). i. e. " All this inclines " me to queſtion chiefly what Nicephorus adds, a credulous Writer, whoſe judgment and veracity are " not much to be depended on: he aſſerts, that a " provincial Synod, being ſenſible how dangerous the " reading of Heliodorus's Romance was, to which " the Author's Rank added a great weight, which " was proper to draw in the youth already ſo much " inclined and naturally diſpoſed to the peruſing of " love-tales, required of the Biſhop, either to burn his " book, or to reſign his dignity; which laſt he choſe." Could Socrates have omitted ſuch a circumſtance in the paſſage, where he obſerves, that Heliodorus wrote a love-tale in his youth, which he intitled Æthiopicks. Οὗ λέγεται πονήματα ἐρωτικὰ βιβλία, ἃ νέος ὢν ἔταξε τῇ Αἰθιοπικῇ προσηγορίᾳ: Cujus nomine circumferuntur amatorii libri, quos ille dum juvenis eſſet compoſuit, & Æthiopicos inſcripſit (7). Valeſius does not only explode Nicephorus's account as a mere ſtory, but he does not even believe that this Romance was written by the Biſhop

(5) Nicephor. Hiſt. lib. 12. cap. 34.

(6) Huetius, de Orig. Fabul. Roman. pag. 36.

(7) Socrat. Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. 5. cap. 22.

the cuſtom of depoſing thoſe Miniſters who lay with their wives after their ordination; which is a probable argument in favour of this Prelate's chaſtity. It even appears from his Romance that he loved this virtue; for the hero of his ſtory is ſo modeſt, that it gave occaſion to ſome very ſmart jeſts [C]. Photius's Tranſlator has not well expreſſed the praiſes that are beſtowed on the amours of Theagenes and Chariclea; for the Tranſlation gives us to underſtand that Heliodorus wrote a Romance of the amours of an huſband and his wife [D], which would be very abſurd. There is an author who has aſſerted Biſhop Heliodorus. See his notes on that paſſage of Socrates. Let us ſee what the Sieur Sorel ſaid. I cannot believe, that Heliodorus was a Biſhop, nor that he was ſo ſilly as to chooſe rather to loſe his Biſhoprick than to burn his Book, according to the choice that was propoſed to him. This is only a mere ſtory; for if his Book were ſo ſcandalous, that they would not give him leave to publiſh it, they would entirely have prohibited it nevertheleſs, though he had reſigned his dignity: ſo that he would have been diſappointed in his expectation (8). Sorel had done better to give his opinion without ſupporting it with any argument; for that which he alledges has not the leaſt ſtrength. A Book is not read the leſs for being condemned by a Synod; it becomes publick notwithſtanding ſuch a condemnation, and is commended as it deſerves; ſo that Heliodorus would not have been diſappointed in his expectation, though the Biſhops, who put the choice to him, had condemned his Book. Father Vavaſſeur reaſoned better, when he obſerved, that it was no longer in Heliodorus's power to ſuppreſs his work, whence it muſt be inferred, that the Biſhops did not propoſe to him the conditions we have mentioned. For of what conſequence could it be with regard to people's morals? Neutrum, quantum opinio mea eſt, vere dicitur. Neque lata Epiſcopo conditio tam præpoſtera tamque gravis; neque ab illo accepta, aut repudiata quoquo modo; quod ipſe, qui narrat, abunde narratione ſua refellit. An vero fuit in poteſtate Heliodori, ut aboleret igni, ac perderet opus ſuum, aut omnino ſuppreſſum teneret, quod jam exiſſet in vulgus, & manibus omnium evolveretur, quodque juventus periculo aliquo, damnoque morum, ut vult Nicephorus, legendo contriviſſet (9)? i. e. "In my opinion neither of "theſe two particulars are true: I cannot believe, "that ſuch a prepoſterous and difficult condition was "propoſed to him, nor that he accepted it; as Nicephorus relates, though his very account refutes "itſelf. Was it then in Heliodorus's power to burn "his Book, or to deſtroy it ſo, as to ſuppreſs it entirely, when it was already publick, and in all the "world's hands, and the youth had already undergone the danger of reading it to the corruption of "their morals, as Nicephorus pretends?" He adds that Father Petavius did not think this account of Nicephorus deſerved any credit.

(8) Sorel, Remarques ſur le Berger Extravagant, liv. 13. pag. 685.

(9) Vavaſſor, de Ludicra Dictione, pag. 150.

[C] The Hero of his ſtory is ſo modeſt, that it gave occaſion to ſome very ſmart jeſts.] Read the following paſſage from the Parnaſſe Reformé; it is Theagenes that ſpeaks. "If things had been related faithfully, "and as they happened, I ſhould have no reaſon to "complain, and would let my Romancer alone. But "he gives me the character of an inſenſible man; he "aſcribes to me that kind of modeſty, which takes "offence at the leaſt freedom, and he will have me "give my miſtreſs a ſlap on the face, rather than ſuffer her to kiſs me. I, ſaid Chariclea, have reaſons "to complain of that ſlap on the face you mention; "if it were a ſhame to give it, it was a greater ſhame "ſtill to receive it; and the ſatisfaction you might "claim from the Hiſtorian, relates to me alone." Here follows Heliodorus's anſwer: The ſlap on the face, at which you are ſo much vexed, is a proof of your modeſty, ſays he, looking on Theagenes; it is the effect of ſuch a modeſty as is honourable to you; and by this I have preſerved that decency, which the dignity of my character required of me. It is true, replied Theagenes, that as a Biſhop (10) you have acted your part very well in that paſſage; but you would have kept up your character much better, if you had burnt your Romance, or if you had never had the thought of writing it. Lovers have nothing to do with the epiſcopal virtues, and a Biſhop's gravity does not well agree with the freedom of lovers. A Veſtal's chaſtity does not become Heroes, and their love ought to be free from thoſe ſcrupulous formalities, which put a damp upon their agreeable raptures and extaſies. It muſt be obſerved, that it is ſuppoſed the Author had nothing to anſwer againſt Chariclea's complaint. And indeed, what could he ſay againſt ſo well-grounded an objection? Is not a romantick Heroine, who deſigning to kiſs her lover, receives a ſlap on the face from him, a very ridiculous character?

(10) It is not true that Heliodorus was a Biſhop, when he compoſed this Romance; he wrote it in his youth, as Socrates aſſerts.

Thus I finiſhed this remark in the firſt edition of this Dictionary: I ſuppoſed that Monſieur Gueret having ſhewn a great deal of wit and taſte in his Parnaſſe Reformé, would not have taken a downright falſity of his own invention for the ground of his jokes; nothing being more inconſiſtent than this with the rules of criticiſm and ſatire (11). Thinking therefore that he could not be guilty of ſuch a fault, I did not in the leaſt doubt but the fact was really as he related it; for which reaſon I did not take the pains to examine the original. But as ſoon as Monſieur Du Rondel had read the remark [C] of this Article, he wrote to me, that the thing did not happen as Monſieur Geuret relates; he acquainted me with the circumſtances of this action, and ſhewed me, that Theagenes did not deſerve the leaſt cenſure. I have juſt now read the paſſage in which Heliodorus relates this ſtory, and have convinced myſelf with my own eyes, that Monſieur Du Rondel is in the right, and that the Author of the Parnaſſe Reformé impoſed upon the publick, and took the liberty to caſt ſuch jeſts, as deſerve rather to be called impoſtures. Theagenes and Chariclea being ſeparated from each other by ſuch odd ſtrokes of fortune, as are often to be met with in Romances, came about the ſame time near Memphis. They had not communicated their deſign to each other; they did not come the ſame way; it happened by chance that Chariclea arrived near the city, when Theagenes was walking about the walls, on a ſolemn occaſion, which afforded the inhabitants a very grand ſpectacle. She knew him again at a great diſtance; for as Heliodorus obſerves, lovers have a very ſharp ſight. Ὀξὺ γάρ τι πρὸς ἐπίγνωσιν ἐρωτικῶν ὄψις καὶ κίνημα πολλάκις καὶ σχῆμα μόνον, κἂν πόρρωθεν ᾖ καὶ ἐκ νάπης τῆς ὁμοιότητος τὴν φαντασίαν παρίσησιν (12). i. e. "Lovers have a very ſtrong ſharp "ſight, the very motion and very air makes "them know each other, even at a diſtance, or when "they ſee one another only behind." She was ſo moved with ſeeing that object, that, as though ſhe had been ſtung by a waſp, ſhe ran in tranſport to Theagenes, and embraced him round the neck without ſpeaking a word. She was very indifferently dreſſed, and her face was all dawbed; ſo that Theagenes took her for a proſtitute, and thruſt her back, and as he could not get rid of her, he gave her at laſt a ſlap on the face. Χαρικλέα . . . πόρρωθεν ἀναγνωρίσασα τὸν Θεαγένην . . . ὥσπερ ὑπὸ τῆς ὄψεως ἐμμανὴς ἐπ' αὐτὸν ἴσται· καὶ περιφῦσα τῷ αὐχένι ἀπροὶξ εἶχετο καὶ ἐξῆπτετο, καὶ γοεροῖς τισι κατασπάζετο θρήνοις· ὁ δέ, οἷον εἰκός, ὄψιν τε ῥυπόσαν καὶ πρὸς τὸ αἰσχρότερον ἐπιτεδευμένην [ἰδὼν] καὶ ἐοθῆτα τετυχρωμένην καὶ κατερρωγυῖαν, ὥσπερ τινα τῶν ἀγυιαιῶν, καὶ ἀληθῶς ἀλήτιν, διωθεῖτο καὶ παρηγκωνίζετο· καὶ τέλως ἐπειδὴ δ' μεθίει ὡς ἐνοχλοῦσαν καὶ τῇ θέᾳ τῶν ἀμφὶ Καλάσιριν ἐμποδὼν ἰσαμένην, καὶ διερράπιζεν (13). But as ſoon as he found it was his dear Chariclea, he embraced her tenderly (14). It is plain from all this, the Reformer of Parnaſſus had altered the very ſubſtance of the fact, by which all his jeſts and raillaries became inſipid and abſurd. Chariclea received indeed a ſlap on the face, but it cannot in juſtice be aſſerted that Theagenes gave Chariclea a ſlap on the face; he imagined he was only ſlapping one of thoſe women, whom we ſtile Gipſies. You may apply to all this what the Civilians and Caſuiſts obſerve concerning that ſort of ignorance or error, which is innocent.

(11) Compare this with what is obſerved above, in the remark [C] of the article COLOMIES.

(12) Heliodor. lib. 7. pag. 311. edit. Pariſ. 1699.

(13) Heliodor. lib. 7. pag. 311. edit. Pariſ. 1619.

(14) Idem, ibid. pag. 312.

[D] The Tranſlation gives us to underſtand, that Heliodorus wrote a Romance of the Amours of an Huſband and his wife.] Here follow the Tranſlator's words. Dramatis hujus argumentum Auctori præbuere Theagenes & Chariclea caſte inter ſe ac pudice amantes, cum ultro citroque jactati errarunt, & capti etiam identidem, fi- asſerted that Heliodorus was not a Chriſtian; but his aſſertion ſeems to be grounded on very weak arguments [E]. Monſieur Huet (d) does not in the leaſt doubt but the author of this Romance was the Biſhop of Trica who lived under the Emperor Theodoſius; but he thinks it cannot be proved that the Biſhop Heliodorus, to whom St. Jerom wrote ſome letters, was this Biſhop of Trica; yet he thinks alſo, that it would not be an eaſy matter to refute thoſe who ſhould aſſert it. If it were true that Heliodorus was deprived, we ſhould have here a remarkable inſtance of an author's affection for his works. There is a modern writer who is acquainted with ſome perſons, that would have done, what the Biſhop of Trica is ſaid to have done [F].

(d) De Origine fabularum Romanenſium.

dem tamen CONJUGALEM conſtanter ſervarunt. i. e. "The ſubject of the ſtory is taken from Theagenes "and Chariclea, who loved each other chaſtly and "modeſtly, and who wandering up and down the "world, and being ſometimes taken priſoners, yet "kept the CONJUGAL faith conſtantly to each other." There is in theſe words a tamen, yet, which is wrong, and an addition of the Tranſlator. Photius did not argue ſo ill as to ſay, that though Theagenes's and Chariclea's misfortunes made them wander through ſeveral Countries, and cauſed them ſometimes to be taken priſoners, yet they did not engage in new amours. It is eaſy to underſtand that ſuch an unſettled life, with the unhappineſs of being ſometimes in priſon, is rather a reaſon why the Hero ſhould not forſake his miſtreſs, nor the Heroine her lover, than a reaſon why they ſhould fall in love with ſome other object. Infidelity in love is much leſs ſurprizing in perſons that lead an eaſy and quiet and happy life. But the greateſt blunder of the Tranſlator is his ſaying, that they kept conſtantly the conjugal faith to each other. How can that be, ſince they were not married? It is not the cuſtom for lovers in Romances to marry but at the end of the Book; and thus Heliodorus's Romance ends. See in the margin a true Tranſlation of Photius's words (15). It was a great while ſince Opſopæus had made the blunder I have mentioned. CONJUGALIS amoris ac fidei & conſtantiæ pulcherrimum exemplar in Theagene & Chariclea adumbravit (16). i. e. "He "has given us a noble inſtance of conjugal love and "fidelity, and of conſtancy, in the characters of "Theagenes and Chariclea."

(15) Ἐστι αὐτῷ ἡ τοῦ δράματος ὑπόθεσις Χαρίκλεια καὶ Θεαγένης, σώφρονες ἀλλήλων ἐρασταὶ, καὶ πλάνη τούτων, καὶ αἰχμαλωσίαι παντοδαπὴ καὶ φυλακὴ τῆς σωφροσύνης. Sum ipſi argumentum dramatis Theagenes & Chariclea pudice inter ſe amantes, & eorum errores, ac captivitas omnimoda, & cuſtodia caſtitatis. Photius, num. 73. pag. 157.

(16) Opſopæus, Epiſt. Dedicat. apud Geſner, Biblioth. folio 301.

[E] There is an Author, who has aſſerted that Heliodorus was not a Chriſtian, but his aſſertion ſeems to be grounded on very weak arguments.] The firſt is, that Amiot obſerves that Philoſtratus mentions a Sophiſt named Heliodorus, and that it was thought he meant him we are ſpeaking of. The ſecond, that this Author telling us at the end of his Book, that he is a Phenician born in the city of Emeſſa, and of the race of the Sun, we cannot believe him a Chriſtian; for it would certainly be a great madneſs in a Chriſtian and much more in a Biſhop to declare he was deſcended from that celeſtial body, which diſperſes light through the world (17). I need not obſerve that the firſt argument proves nothing: the ſecond has a little more ſtrength, yet not enough to come up to a full proof. It is certain that ſeveral Chriſtians in the fourth Century mentioned the ancientneſs of their Nobility (18); why then ſhould we not believe that Heliodorus mentioned his? He did not believe that his family was really deſcended from the Sun, but he might imagine, that he muſt diſtinguiſh it by that mark. This was a title by which his family had been known a long time, and which was honourable to him. And though the principle was falſe, yet one might infer from it ſome conſequences favourable to his family with regard to its antiquity. Such a motive might engage a Chriſtian thus to diſtinguiſh the nobility of his extraction. Add to this that Heliodorus was not yet a Biſhop when he wrote his Romance. He was ſtill in all the mettle of youth; and as he did not put his name to his work, he might with more liberty make his deſcent known by the ancient tradition of his family.

(17) Sorel, Remarques ſur le Livre XIII du Berger Extravagant, pag. 685.

(18) See a Diſſertation of Balzac at the end of his Socrate Chrétien. You will ſee there amongſt other things, that St. Jerom makes St. Paul to be deſcended from Agamemnon, and that Syneſius boaſted he was deſcended from Hercules.

[F] A modern writer was acquainted with ſome perſons, who would have done what the Biſhop of Trica is ſaid to have done.] The modern writer I mean is Father Vavaſſeur. He does not believe what Nicephorus relates; it appears childiſh to him, either with regard to thoſe who put ſuch a choice to Heliodorus, or with regard to the choice itſelf, which that prelate is ſaid to have made. Lepida vero optio data præſuli, utrum ſalvum vellet, jocularemne librum, quem ſcripſiſſet olim, an ampliſſimum ſacerdotium, cui tum præeſſet. Lepidius etiam judicium & electio epiſcopi, ſacræ dignitatis jactura commune & pervagatum ſcriptoris nomen redimentis (19). Yet he aſſerts that he knows ſome perſons, who are ſo much in love with their own works, that they would chooſe rather to loſe the beſt livings in the kingdom, than to renounce the reputation which they imagine they deſerve by their works. Cujus tamen factum ne magnopere vituperetur, aut ne reprehendatur ex toto, nonnulli obſtant, quos ego ſcio, ſi iſto loco eſſent, fieretque poteſtas eligendi; hoc idem & amplius facturos; taleſque partus ingenii, qualia Heliodori Æthiopica ſunt, non Thraciæ modo, ſed opimis Galliæ ſacerdotiis omnibus antepoſituros, & loco graduque, & quavis dignitate ceſſuros potius, quam laboris, & induſtriæ, & bonæ exiſtimationis fructum hunc qualemcumque amitterent (20). i. e. "Yet this action of his ought not to be too "much deſpiſed, nor abſolutely condemned; for I "knew ſome perſons, who would do the ſame, and "even more ſtill, if it was thus in their power to "chooſe; they would prefer ſuch an ingenious work, "as Heliodorus's Æthiopicks are, I do not ſay, be"fore any benefices of Thrace, but before all the beſt "livings in France; they would reſign their places, "poſts, and dignities, rather than loſe this fruit, "whatever it be of their labour, and ſtudy, I mean "their reputation."

(19) Vavaſſor, de Ludicra dictione, pag. 149.

(20) Ibid. pag. 150.

HELOISE, the concubine, and afterwards wife of Peter Abelard; a Nun, and afterwards Prioreſs of Argenteuil; and laſtly, Abbeſs of the Paraclete, has made ſo much noiſe, that ſhe deſerves an article of ſome length in this Dictionary. She had an uncle, by the mother's ſide, named Fulbert [A], who was a Canon of Paris, and had a tender affection

[A] She had an uncle, by the mother's ſide, called Fulbert.] This is the only very certain particular I have found, with regard to the genealogy of Heloiſe; I therefore did not ſay, that ſhe was related, in a legitimate way, to the antient family of Montmorenci. I have indeed read this in the apologetical Preface of Francis d'Amboiſe (1); but as he does not cite any author on this occaſion, and as Andrew du Cheſne (2) makes no mention of it, I look upon the truth of it to be very doubtful; particularly as Heloiſe owns, in her Letters, that her family had been greatly honoured by her marriage with Abelard, and that this laſt had married very much beneath himſelf. Quanto amplius te pro me humiliando ſatisfeceras, & me pariter & totum genus meum ſublimaveras, tanto te minus tam apud Deum, quam apud illos proditores obnoxium pœnæ reddideras (3). Papyrius Maſſo (4) aſſerts, that Heloiſe was the natural daughter of one John, Canon of Paris. Andrew du Cheſne has reaſon not to lay any ſtreſs on this, ſince the author does ſay whence he borrowed that curious circumſtance; but then he has no reaſon to oppoſe to this Annaliſt, the Calendar of the Paraclet, in which the following words are found: VII Cal. Januar. obiit Hubertus (5) Canonicus Dominæ Heloïſæ avunculus. i. e. "Hubert, uncle to Heloiſe, died the "twenty ſixth of December:" for what can be eaſier than to reconcile Papyrius Maſſo and this Calendar? May not a young woman be baſtard to one Canon, and niece to another Canon? But once again, he who ſays that Heloiſe was the natural daughter of one Canon,

(1) Ad Oper. Abælardi.

(2) Notis, ad Hiſtor. Calamitat. Abælardi.

(3) Pag. 51.

(4) Annal. lib. 3.

(5) This muſt be Fulbertus.

affection for her. He took the utmoſt care of her education; and as ſhe had a very fine genius, ſhe ſoon made ſo great a progreſs, that her reputation flew to all parts of the Kingdom [B]. She alſo was pretty handſome [C]. There was at that time in Paris a famous Doctor, who read public Lectures with prodigious reputation. This was Peter Abelard, the moſt ſubtle Logician of his age, and who began to bring Philoſophy and ſcholaſtic Divinity in vogue. He enjoyed all the fame and ſplendor which a perſon of his profeſſion could wiſh for or deſire; he had a vaſt number of pupils; he was thought to be a very great maſter; he got a great deal of money; but did not make love to any woman, which he thought was a great flaw in his fortune. In order therefore to complete his felicity, he thought that he ſhould entertain a fond paſſion, and he made choice of Heloiſe for his miſtreſs. We gave elſewhere (a), the reaſons which prompted him to make this choice; and in what manner he got into the Canon's houſe, as tutor to Heloiſe. Honeſt Fulbert had flattered himſelf with the hopes that his niece, under ſo great a maſter, would make a wonderful progreſs in the Sciences; but ſhe learnt nothing non, John, without quoting any author for it, will not deſerve credit. If there is reaſon to ſuſpect any Canon on this occaſion, it ſhould be Fulbert rather than any other; for the fondneſs which Abelard declares he had for Heloiſe, is ſo little found in uncles (6), and reſembles ſo very exactly the affection of the fondeſt fathers; that there is ſome room to imagine, that Fulbert acted like a multitude of others, who cannot be fathers according to the Canons; they conceal that nearer relation under the title of uncle, and accordingly bring up their own children under the name of nephews. This is what one might ſuſpect; but yet it ought not to regulate the ſtile, nor hinder us from giving perſons the names and titles under which they were known to the public. Fulbert, in a book, ought never to be mentioned under any character but that of uncle. It is to be obſerved, that, according to Papyrius Maſſo, the Canon who brought up Heloiſe, and cauſed Abelard to be caſtrated, was named John. This Hiſtorian therefore does not pretend, that Heloiſe was niece to a Canon, and natural daughter of another Canon. He pretends that the Canon, whom all other authors call Fulbert, and whom they conſider as Heloiſe's uncle, was her father, and named John. Joannes Canonicus Pariſinus Heloyſam naturalem filiam habebat præſtanti ingenio formaque (7).

(a) In the article ABELARD.

(6) See the teſtimonies cited by Lambinus on theſe words of Ode 12. of Book 3. of Horace, Metuentes patruæverbera linguæ.

(7) Papyr. Maſſo, Annal. lib. 3. pag. m. 256.

[B] She made ſo great a progreſs, that her reputation flew to all parts of the Kingdom.] Let us hear Abelard. Qui (Fulbertus) eam quanto amplius diligebat, tanto diligentius in omnem quam poterat ſcientiam literarum promoveri ſtuduerat. Quæ cum per faciem non eſſet infima, per abundantiam literarum erat ſuprema. Nam quo bonum hoc, literatoriæ ſcilicet ſcientiæ, in mulieribus eſt rarius, eò amplius puellam commendabat, & in toto regno nominatiſſimam facerat (8). i. e. "As Fulbert lov" ed her moſt affectionately, he took care to have " her inſtructed in all kinds of literature: And as ſhe
" was not the loweſt among her ſex with regard to " beauty, ſhe was the higheſt with reſpect to learning.
" For as erudition is very rarely found among wo" men, it added to the glory of Heloiſe, and made
" her very famous all over the Kingdom." In that age, a young maiden, with a very ſmall ſhare of erudition, might paſs for a miracle. This the reader muſt obſerve, in order not to amplify the idea that is formed of our Heloiſe; and yet it muſt be looked upon as certain, that ſhe deſerves a glorious place among the very learned women. She was ſkilled, not only in the Latin tongue, but alſo in Greek and Hebrew. Abelard declares this alſo, in the Letter which he wrote to the Nuns of the Paraclet. Magiſterium habetis in matre, quod ad omnia vobis ſufficere tam ad exemplum ſcilicet virtutum, quam ad doctrinam literarum poteſt, quæ non ſolum Latinæ, verum etiam tam Hebraicæ quam Græcæ non expers literaturæ, ſola hoc tempore illam trium linguarum adepta peritiam videtur, quæ ab omnibus in beato Hieronymo tanquam ſingularis gratia prædicatur (9). Francis d'Amboiſe relates (10), that Heloiſe ſatisfied in a very ſubtle manner St. Bernard, who aſked her, why the Nuns of the monaſtry of the Paraclet, in their repeating the Lord's Prayer, did not ſay, panem noſtrum quotidianum, but panem noſtrum ſuperſubſtantialem. Heloiſe gave him a reaſon for this, taken from the originals, and obſerved to him, that they muſt follow the Greek verſion of the Goſpel, which St. Matthew had wrote in Hebrew. I know not whether ſuch an anſwer would have pleaſed St. Bernard; however I do not doubt but it might have puzzled him, and obliged him to quit the diſpute. I could wiſh with all my heart, that this incident were true; for it would be an inſtance of a woman's puzzling a great author, on a controverſial point, by quoting the Greek text. I therefore was very ſorry, I confeſs, when, on conſulting the Letter (11) cited by Francis d'Amboiſe, I found that Heloiſe had no hand in it; and that the whole remark is Abelard's, who wrote on that account to St. Bernard, after Heloiſe had informed him of the exceptions, which were made to the panem ſuperſubſtantialem. However, be this ſaid without prejudice to the learning of that Abbeſs. If any one ſhould imagine, that ſhe did not acquire learning till after ſhe had confined herſelf to a cloyſter, I would refer them to a Letter of Peter the Venerable, Abbot of Clugni, which declares that ſhe had made a very great progreſs in literature before ſhe embraced a monaſtic life. Necdum, ſays he to her (12), metas adoleſcentiæ exceſſeram, necdum in juveniles annos evaſeram, quando nomen non quidem adhuc religionis tuæ, ſed honeſtorum tamen & laudabilium ſtudiorum mihi fama innotuit. Audiebam tunc temporis mulierem, licet necdum ſæculi nexibus expeditam, literatoriæ ſcientiæ & ſtudio ſæcularis ſapientiæ ſummam operam dare, quo efferendo ſtudio tuo & mulieres omnes eviciſti, & pene viros univerſos ſuperaſti. i. e. "When I was but a lad, the fame, not indeed as yet
" of your ſanctity, but of your polite and laudable
" ſtudies, reached me. I was informed that a wo" man, although not withdrawn from the avocations
" of the world, did nevertheleſs apply herſelf in the " moſt intenſe manner to Letters, and to the ſtudy of " human literature; by which vigorous purſuit you
" not only ſurpaſſed all your own ſex, but almoſt all
" ours." The Monk of Auxerre affirms, that ſhe was well ſkilled in Latin and Hebrew; and the Calendar of the Paraclet ſays as follows of her: Heloïſe mere & premiere Abbeſſe de ceans, de doctrine & religion très-reſplendiſſante (13). i. e. "Heloiſe, mother
" and Abbeſs of this Monaſtry, moſt illuſtrious for her
" erudition and piety."

(8) Abæl. Oper. pag. 10.

(9) Ibid. pag. 200.

(10) Præfat. Apologet.

(11) It is the 5th of lib. 2.

(12) Vide Oper. Abælardi, pag. 337.

(13) See Andrew du Cheſne's Notes, on Abelard's Letter de Hiſt. Calamitat. pag. 1187.

[C] She was pretty handſome.] I find that a great number of authors declare Heloiſe to have been a miracle in beauty; but ought they to be credited rather than Abelard, who, having more reaſon to amplify rather than leſſen the perfections of Heloiſe, contents himſelf with ſaying, that ſhe was not the laſt of her ſex in beauty, but was the firſt in erudition; cum per faciem non eſſet infima, per abundantiam literarum erat ſuprema? Would a perſon expreſs himſelf in this manner, when he was ſpeaking of a finiſhed beauty? Could a lover, whoſe buſineſs it is to juſtify his choice, and the violence of his paſſion, employ ſuch a rhetorical figure? Some (14) obſerve, that Heloiſe was eighteen years of age when Abelard debauched her; but I have not found this circumſtance in any antient author. It is true indeed that the word adoleſcentula, which Abelard employs (15), may very well ſuit the age of eighteen. That of juvencula which Heloiſe made uſe of (16), agrees alſo with the ſame age; but nothing can be concluded from ſuch a proof. It is a chimæra to aſſert, that Abelard, in his romance of the roſe, drew Heloiſe's picture under the name of Beauty (17); that romance not being writ till after his death.

(14) Hiſtoire abregée d'Eloïſe & d'Abelard, Hague 1693.

(15) Operum, pag. 10.

(16) Ibid. p. 47.

(17) The author of the Hiſtoire Abregée, above cited, ſays this.

thing but love. Her docility, with reſpect to this paſſion, was wonderful. She made ſuch ſwift advances in a ſhort time, that her maſter was ſoon indulged the laſt favour; and that without her inſiſting, in any manner, upon a promiſe of marriage. Abelard immerſed himſelf ſo much in thoſe pleaſures, which Cupid diſpenſes [D], that he grew negligent with regard to his Lectures. He himſelf confeſſes, that he was inſatiable on theſe occaſions, and that he rioted in thoſe pleaſures without diſtinction of times and places [E]; without making the leaſt difference between feſtival and ordinary days; between ſacred and profane places; that he no longer ſtruck out any thing new in Philoſophy; and wrote nothing but verſes in an amorous ſtrain [F]. His pupils ſoon found out the cauſe, upon their enquiring into the reaſon of his remiſſneſs with reſpect to his Lectures.

[D] Abelard immerſed himſelf ſo much in thoſe pleaſures, which Cupid diſpenſes.] We muſt hear Abelard himſelf, in order not to loſe any thing of the ſtrength of his expreſſions. Nullus à cupidis intermiſſus eſt gradus amoris, & ſi quid inſolitum amor excogitare potuit, eſt additum. Et quo minus illa fueramus experti gaudia ardentius illis inſiſtebamus, & minus in faſtidium vertebantur (18). i. e. "So great was the exceſs of our "paſſion, that not one degree of love was left unattempted; and if love could invent any thing new "and unuſual, it was added. And the leſs we had "experienced thoſe joys, the more greedily we rioted "in them, and were the leſs cloyed." He compares himſelf to thoſe who have ſuffered hunger a long time, and who afterwards meet wherewithal to ſatiate their cravings in an ample manner. A man who has lived chaſtly is more apt to commit exceſs with his wife, than one who has been a rake.

(18) Pag. 11.

[E] . . . . . without diſtinction of times and places.] We muſt again hear Abelard himſelf, in a Letter which he wrote to Heloiſe, a long time after they had devoted themſelves to a monaſtic life. He glances at their paſt conduct, and in what manner he dallied with her in the corner of the refectory of the Nuns of Argenteuil; there being no other place convenient for that purpoſe, and having no veneration or regard for the bleſſed Virgin, to whom that place was dedicated. Noſti poſt noſtri confœderationem conjugii, cum Argenteoli cum Sanctimonialibus in clauſtro converſabaris, me die quadam privatim ad te viſitandum veniſſe, & quid ibi tecum meæ libidinis egerit intemperantia in quadam etiam parte ipſius refectorii, cum quò alias diverteremus, non haberemus. Noſti, inquam, id impudentiſſime tunc actum eſſe, in tam reverendo loco & ſummæ Virgini conſecrato. . . . . Quid priſtinas fornicationes & impudentiſſimas referam pollutiones, quæ conjugium præceſſerunt (19)? i. e. "You know, when after our marriage, you lived "with the Nuns at Argenteuil, that I one day came "to ſee you privately, and what my immoderate luſt "made me act with you, in a corner even of the re"fectory, having no opportunity to retire elſewhere. "You know, I ſay, that we acted moſt impudently, "in ſo awful a place, dedicated to the bleſſed Virgin. "." . . . . Why ſhould I relate the leudneſſes and moſt "impudent pollutions, which preceded our marriage?" He tells her a little after, that ſhe cannot but remember, that neither the moſt ſolemn feſtivals, nor even Good-Friday, could deter him from plunging into this ſlough, and that whenever ſhe made any ſcruples on that account, he would employ menaces, and even ſcourgings, to make her conſent to his wiſhes. Noſti quantis turpitudinibus immoderata mea libido corpora noſtra addixerat, ut nulla honeſtatis vel Dei reverentia in ipſis etiam diebus Dominicæ paſſionis, vel quantarumcunque ſolemnitatum, ab hujus luti volutabro me revocaret. Sed & te nolentem & prout poteras reluctantem & diſſuadentem quæ natura infirmior eras, ſæpius minis ac flagellis ad conſenſum trahebam (20). Here we have a man, who is perfectly free from the ſuperſtitions of thoſe, who obſerved days and feaſts, new moons and ſabbaths (21).

(19) Pag. 69.

(20) Ibid.

(21) See the Epiſtle of St. Paul to the Coloſſ. chap. ii. ver. 16.

[F] Abelard now wrote nothing but verſes in an amorous ſtrain.] He himſelf informs us of this particular: Ita negligentem & tepidum lectio tunc habebat, ut jam nihil ex ingenio, ſed ex uſu cuncta proferrem, nec jam niſi recitator priſtinorum eſſem inventorum, & ſi qua invenire liceret, carmina eſſent amatoria, non philoſophiæ ſecreta (22). i. e. "I at that time was ſo negligent "and remiſs in my lectures, that whatever I ſaid was "from rote and not from genius: I repeated nothing "but what I had formerly invented; and if I hap"pened to ſtrike out any thing new, it was amorous "verſes, and not the ſecrets of philoſophy." He adds, that theſe verſes were ſtill ſung in ſeveral provinces, and chiefly by perſons who made love. Quorum etiam carminum pleraque adhuc in multis, ſicut & ipſa noſti, frequentantur & decantantur regionibus, ab his maxime quos vita ſimilis oblectat. Heloiſe herſelf informs us of ſtill more particulars. She ſays, that her Abelard poſſeſſed two talents, which were not found in other Philoſophers, and by which he could quickly engage the heart of any woman; and this was, his being a fine writer, and having a charming voice. He made ſuch pretty love verſes, and ſuch agreeable ſongs, both with regard to the words and tunes, that they charmed univerſally, ſo that the author's name was in every one's mouth. The women were not ſatisfied at being charmed with Abelard's ſongs and verſes; but were likewiſe ſmit with his perſon, and at laſt fell diſtractedly in love with him. And as the ſubject of moſt of his Poems related only to his paſſion for Heloiſe, the name of this much loved miſtreſs ſoon flew into the Provinces, and made a numberleſs multitude of women envy her happineſs. I enervate very much Heloiſe's expreſſions, and do not think that they are to be taken literally. As ſhe loved Abelard even to madneſs ſhe fancied that no woman could ſee him, without falling paſſionately in love with him, and this made her ſay, that there was no wife nor maid, who, in Abelard's abſence, did not wiſh for him; and, in his preſence, was not quite fired with love; and that even Queens and Ladies of high diſtinction envied the pleaſures ſhe enjoyed with ſo charming a man. Here follows the Latin, which is much more ſignificant and expreſſive (23). Quæ conjugata, quæ virgo non concupiſcebat abſentem, & non exardebat in præſentem? Quæ Regina vel præpotens fœmina gaudiis meis non invidebat vel thalamis? Duo autem, fateor, tibi ſpecialiter inerant, quibus feminarum quarumlibet animos ſtatim allicere poteras, dictandi videlicet & cantandi gratia, quæ ceteros minime, philoſophos affecutos eſſe novimus. Quibus quidem quaſi ludo quodam laborem exercitii recreans philoſophici pleraque amatorio metro vel rithmo compoſita reliquiſti carmina, quæ præ nimia ſuavitate tam dictaminis quam cantus ſæpius frequentata tuum in ore omnium nomen inceſſanter tenebant, ut etiam illiteratos melodiæ dulcedo tui non ſineret immemores eſſe. Atque hinc maxime in amorem tui feminæ ſuſpirabant. Et cum horum pars maxima carminum noſtros decantaret amores, multis me regionibus brevi tempore nunciavit (24), & multorum in me feminarum accendit invidiam. i. e. "What wife, what maid &c. "." . . . With theſe (poetry and muſic,) as with ſome "ſport, you uſed to recreate your mind after your phi"loſophical toils; and compoſed many verſes in an "amorous ſtrain, which, both on account of the ex"ceſſive ſweetneſs of the words as well as muſic, were "in every one's mouth; and ſpread your fame ſo uni"verſally, that even ſuch as were unſkilled in harmo"ny reſounded your praiſes. By this means you "chiefly ingratiated yourſelf with the fair: and as "the greateſt part of thoſe Poems celebrated our fond "paſſion, they ſpread my name, in a ſhort time, to "many Nations; and raiſed the envy of many "women againſt me." Had Abelard been author of the Romance of the Roſe, and had he therein drawn the picture of his Heloiſe, under the name of beauty, ſhe would have been far from ſuppreſſing that circumſtance, and this was the proper place for taking notice of it; ſo that, tho' we did not know that this Romance was wrote a hundred years after Abelard, we yet might know, from Heloiſe's ſilence, that there is no reaſon for aſcribing that Romance to him, in the little Book ſo often cited (25); much leſs was there reaſon to make Heloiſe ſay this in the Tranſlation of her Letter. But to reſume

(22) Page 12.

(23) Oper. Abælardi, pag. 46.

(24) She ſays as follows, pag. 48. Cum me ad temporales olim voluptates expeteres, crebris me epiſtolis viſitabas, frequenti carmine tuam in ore omnium Heloiſſam ponebas: me plateæ omnes, me domus ſingulæ reſonabant. i. e. "When you formerly excited "me to worldly "pleaſures, I received many "letters from "you; and your "Heloiſe, by being ſo often celebrated in your "verſes, was in "every one's "mouth; and "my charms "were ſung in "every ſtreet and "houſe."

(25) Hiſtoire d'Eloïſe & d'Abelard, printed at the Hague in 1693.

tures. Slander ſpread her venom ſwiftly through all parts of the city, and at laſt reached the uncle's ear [G]; but made no impreſſion upon him at firſt, ſo ſtrongly was he prejudiced in favour of the prudent conduct of Abelard as well as of Heloiſe; but its repeated clamours at laſt diſpelled his incredulity, upon which the pretended Preceptor left the Canon's houſe. He carried off Heloiſe from it, as ſoon as he knew that ſhe was with child; and diſguiſing her in a Nun's habit (b), he ſent her into Britany to one of his ſiſters, and there ſhe was delivered of a boy. Fulbert was highly exaſperated againſt Abelard, who now kept upon his guard; but hoping at the ſame time that his enemy would not dare to kill him, or lop off any limb, ſo long as he ſhould be afraid of his making repriſals on Heloiſe. In order to ſet his mind at eaſe, he promiſed the uncle that he would marry his niece whom he had debauched, provided the marriage were kept ſecret. However, it was with the utmoſt difficulty that he prevailed with Heloiſe to conſent to this, who employed a multitude of reaſons, to prejudice him againſt the Conjugal State [H]. The paſſion with which ſhe was fired was ſo ſtrong and inordinate, reſume our ſubject: a perſon would not believe unleſs experience had proved it to him, that verſes, letters, and ſongs had the vertue or power to advance ſo greatly the affairs of a lover (26); but here we have a witneſs, on that ſubject, worth a thouſand. The wits of this age complain, that their compoſitions have not the ſame effect, as in the days of our fore-fathers. I confeſs that the times are changed, but yet not entirely. Conſult the new Letters againſt Maimbourg's Hiſtory of Calviniſm (27). By the way, as to what Heloiſe obſerves concerning the weakneſs of her own ſex with regard to Abelard, it is confirmed by a certain Prior named Foulques, whoſe article muſt be conſulted.

(b) Noſti etiam quando te gravidam in meam tranſmiſi patriam, ſacro te habitu indutam Monialem te finxiſſe, & tali ſimulatione tuæ quam nunc habes religioni inreverenter illuſiſſe. Abæl. Epiſt. ad Hel. pag. 70.

(26) See Ovid, de Arte Amandi, lib. 3. pag. 205.

(27) Pag. 590, & ſeq. and pag. 746, & ſeq.

[G] Slander .... at laſt reached the uncle's ear.] This at laſt ſeems a little ſtrange at firſt ſight; but they who are acquainted with mankind know, that, on theſe occaſions, ſuch perſons who are moſt concerned in a piece of news are the laſt who hear it. Abelard cites to this purpoſe a good paſſage from a Letter of St. Jerom to Sabinian (28). Solemus mala domus noſtræ ſcire noviſſimi, ac liberorum ac conjugum vitia vicinis canentibus ignorare. The irregularities of our wives and children are trumpeted all over the neighhourhood, whilſt we ourſelves are as yet ignorant of them; but they at laſt reach our ears; it not being poſſible for one ſingle perſon to be unacquainted with what is known to every one beſide: Sed quod noviſſime ſcitur, utique ſciri (29) quandoque contingit, & quod omnes deprehendunt non eſt facile unum latere. St. Jerom, in another place, has confirmed his maxim by two illuſtrious examples; the firſt being that of Sylla, the ſecond of Pompey. The intrigues of Metella, Sylla's wife, were become the town-talk in Athens, before the huſband knew any thing of her gallantries. The invectives of the Athenians, againſt whom he was making war, firſt thundered it in his ear. The adulterous practices of Mucia, wife to Pompey, were become ſo public, that every one imagined he was acquainted with them; but he yet was an entire ſtranger to thoſe intrigues, till a ſoldier in his army informed him of them. L. Syllæ (felicius ſi non habuiſſet uxorem) Metella conjux palam erat impudica, & (quia noviſſimi mala noſtra diſcimus) id Athenis cantabatur & Sylla ignorabat, ſecretaque domus ſuæ primum hoſtium convicio didicit. Cn. Pompejo Muciam uxorem impudicam quam Pontici Spadones & Mithridaticæ ambiebant catervæ, cum eum putarent cæteri ſcientem pati, indicavit in expeditione commilito, & victorem totius orbis triſti nuncio conſternavit (30). We might add, as a third example, the Emperor Claudius, who was wholly ignorant of the infamous conduct of Meſſalina (31), at the time when the whole world knew that ſhe had proſtituted herſelf in the public brothels; had carried many Ladies thither; and, to complete her impudent conduct, had married another man. The preſent age has furniſhed one of thoſe examples, in Marſhal de la ——— It is affirmed, but I can ſcarce believe it, that he did not know of the intrigue between his wife and Count de .... at the time when the ſon, whom that Count had by her, had been naturalized openly in the Parliament. Perſons in a lower condition of life are not exempt from this irregularity. How many people do we ſee, who are always acquainted with the whole news of the town, thoſe particulars excepted which are injurious to their own family? They are like the man whom Martial ridicules ſo pleaſantly (32); and they profit but little by the old proverb, Ædibus in noſtris quæ prava aut recta gerantur (33). Studious men, thoſe I mean who confine themſelves too much in their cloſets, where they are for ever meditating on ſome new compoſition, are ſometimes in the condition we are now ſpeaking of. Tho' they are perfectly well acquainted with the family misfortune of Sylla and Pompey who died ſo many ages ſince, they don't know that the ſame trick is played them not far from their cloſets. Such is the way of the world.

(28) Ex tom. 1. Epiſt. 48.

(29) Theſe words are cited in the editions of Abelard, as a ſequel of what I have already quoted of St. Jerom's Letter to Sabinian, but they are not in that Letter.

(30) D. Hieronym. adverſ. Jovinian.

(31) Dio Caſſius, lib. 60. Juvenal Satyr 10. ver. 342. ſays on this ſubject, Dedecus ille domus ſciet ultimus.

(32) Epig. 9. lib. 7.

(33) Ὁτοι τοῖ ἐν Μεγάροισι κακῶν τ' ἀγαθῶν τε τέτυκται. Homer. Odyſſ. lib. 4.

A Writer of the ſixteenth Century employs a famous example, to confirm the maxim he had laid down, viz. thoſe whom it moſt concerns to be informed of a domeſtic misfortune, are the laſt who know it; whereas, they are the firſt who hear news of ſuch things as ought to be indifferent to them. Solet uſu venire, ſays he (34), ut domeſtica mala ultimi ſint qui norint, quorum maxime intereſt ea non ignorare, iidem principes norint aliena, & quorum nullus ad eos pertinet ſenſus. After giving ſome reaſons for this odd circumſtance, he relates that, not many years before, a very great King put to death thoſe who had diſhonoured his nuptial bed; and that as their execution was ſo ſudden, that there was not an hour's interval between their impeachment and death, it was a proof that the Monarch in queſtion had not heard long before of that incident, tho' the news of it had been ſpread far and wide into other countries. Accidit hoc quidem, me puero, in magna atque illuſtri Europæ regia, quo minus diu obſcura res eſſe poſſit, ut in regina, læſi pudoris fama prius apud exteras gentes longe lateque evagata emanaret, quàm is, cujus in eo erat læſa majeſtas maculam regio nomini impoſitam, eorum ſanguine, quorum erat ſcelere violata, eluerit. Satis quidem potuit indicio eſſe, poſtremum omnium reſciſſe, ita ſumptum de reis ſupplicium, ut inter id & delatum ſontium nomen, ne horæ quidem momentum intercedere ſit paſſus (35).

(34) J. Michael Brutus, in Præceptis conjugalibus, pag. 798. edit. 1698.

(35) Idem, ibid.

[H] She employed a multitude of reaſons, to prejudice him againſt the Conjugal ſtate.] Theſe reaſons were reduced to two heads, viz. the danger and diſhonour to which marriage would render Abelard obnoxious. I know my uncle, would ſhe ſay to him: Nothing will be able to appeaſe his wrath; and then, what glory ſhall I have in being your wife, ſince I ſhall quite ruin your reputation? What execrations may I not juſtly fear, ſhould I deprive the world of ſo great a luminary as Abelard; and what injury ſhall I not do to the Church? What ſorrow ſhall I not give Philoſophers? What ſhame and injury will you do your ſelf, ſhould you, whom nature has created for the public good, devote your ſelf entirely to a woman? Reflect on the following words of St. Paul; Art thou looſed from a wife, ſeek not a wife. And if neither the counſels of this great Apoſtle, nor the exhortations of the holy Fathers, have the power to diſſuade you from taking up ſuch a burthen, conſider at leaſt what Philoſophers have ſaid of it. Hearken to Theophraſtus, who has proved by a great number of reaſons, that a wiſe man ought not to marry. Hear Cicero, who having divorced Terentia, anſwered Hirtius, who offered to give him his daughter in marriage, that he could not accept of his propoſal, becauſe he could not divide his cares between philoſophy and a wife. Beſides, what conformity is there between maid ſervants and male pupils; between inkhorns and cradles, books and diſtaffs, pens and ſpindles? How will it be poſſible for you to bear, in the midſt of theological and philoſophical meditations, the ſqualing of children, the ſongs of nurſes, and the buſtle of houſe-keeping?

nate, that it extinguiſhed all ſenſations of honour in her mind [I]; it took ſuch deep root, and diſtracted her to ſuch a degree, that ſhe could never eraze it [K]. It was to no

I ſay nothing of the filth and perpetual ill ſmells, which are inſeparable from young children. Quis ſacris vel philoſophicis meditationibus intentus pueriles vagitus, nutricum quæ hos mitigant nænias, tumultuoſam familiæ tam in viris quam in fœminis turbam ſuſtinere poterit? Quis etiam inhoneſtas illas parvulorum ſordes aſſiduas tolerare valebit (36)? Wealthy perſons can ſecure themſelves from theſe ſeveral inconveniencies, by the diverſity of apartments they have in their houſes; the expences and cares of each returning day cannot give them any uneaſineſs; but it is not ſo with Philoſophers; and whoſoever is deſirous of heaping up riches, and employs himſelf in worldly employments, makes himſelf incapable of diſcharging the duties of the Philoſopher and Divine. Obſerve the conduct of the ancient Sages, as well under the Pagan Syſtem, as among the Jews; and if Heathens and laymen have preferred a ſingle life to marriage, would it not be a great ſhame for a Clergyman and Canon as you are, to prefer ſenſual reaſons to divine offices? But tho' you ſhould have no great regard to the prerogative of the eccleſiaſtical character, at leaſt maintain the dignity and character of a Philoſopher. Heloiſe concluded her ſermon with ſaying, that it would reflect greater honour on him, and be more delightful to her, for Abelard to be her gallant rather than her huſband. That ſhe would be united to him, not by the neceſſity of the conjugal tie, but by the ſole affection of her heart; and that their pleaſures would be infinitely more exquiſite, ſhould they ſee one another but now and then. We ſhall expatiate on this laſt reaſon in the remark [U]. In the mean time here follows Paquier's reflection on Heloiſe's words, I will not, ſays he (37), repreſent to you all the arguments ſhe employed to bring him over to her opinion; but this I can affirm, that I never read, in any Orator, ſo many elegant expreſſions and perſuaſive ſentences, in order to gain a point, as were employed by Heloiſe. I muſt inform my readers, that I have very much curtailed the remonſtrance of our fair-one; and was ſurprized that ſhe did not employ ſome reaſon, from her lover's being in Orders (38). Does not this ſeem to prove, that it was not yet believed, that Eccleſiaſtics were bound to lead a ſingle life?

(36) Oper. Abælardi, pag. 14.

(37) Recherch. de la France, liv. 6. cap. 17.

(38) I mean, that ſhe did not alledge, that perſons in orders are forbid marrying.

[I] The paſſion with which ſhe was fired, . . . extinguiſhed all ſenſations of honour in her mind.] The paſſion of love will very often ſtifle or ſurmount the ſenſations of conſcience; but it is very rarely obſerved to ſuppreſs a ſenſe of honour; and, if we except a ſmall number of perſons of low-birth, who, for the moſt part, have not even had a common education beſtowed upon them; all young girls, who yield to Cupid, generally put one of the four ſtrings following to their bow: They hope, either that they ſhall not be got with child; or otherwiſe, to procure a miſcarriage by ſome medicament; to lie in unknown to every one; or to prevail with their ſpark to marry them; and this ſhews, that if love is ſometimes the ſtrongeſt tyrant in their hearts, it is yet ſuch a tyrant as leaves honour in poſſeſſion of its rights. See the famous Sonnet de l'Averton (on the untimely Birth) the author of which has ſo ſtrongly repreſented the power of honour and the power of love, alternately conquerors and conquered. Our Heloiſe's love raged to that exceſs, that ſhe no longer valued honour or reputation; for in the firſt place, ſhe was overjoyed to find herſelf with child; Non multo autem poſt puella ſe concepiſſe comperit, & cum ſumma exultatione mihi ſuper hoc illico ſcripſit, conſulens quid de hoc ipſe faciendum deliberarem (39); and ſecondly, ſhe did all that lay in her power, to prevent the marrying the man who had got her with child; two things, which are not only more rarely found than the moſt dreadful monſters, when they are joined together; but alſo, the firſt of them, ſingly, is never ſeen but in ſuch caſes in which love has little ſhare; and wherein a woman has no other view, but to make ſure of a very advantageous match, which ſhe deſpaired of obtaining, without the noiſe and buſtle of a big belly. How many young women had rather have a huſband forced upon them by an Arret of Parliament, than to live with an everlaſting ſtain of reputation? They are firmly perſuaded that their future huſband will revenge himſelf with a high intereſt; and that they will pay very dearly for the Arret; however they are reſolved not to value this, provided the title of huſband repairs the breach made in their honour. Our Heloiſe was far from entertaining any ſcruples of that kind. See the following remark, and eſpecially the remark [U].

(39) Abælard, pag. 13.

[K] . . . Could never eraze it.] Is it erazing the paſſion of love, or the being cured of it, for a woman to ſay, ſeveral years after ſhe had quitted the world, and embraced a cloyſtered life, That ſhe would rather be Abelard's whore, than lawful wife to the Emperor of the whole earth? Now this our Heloiſe, when ſhe was Abbeſs of the Paraclet, declared; and to this ſhe called God as witneſs. Deum teſtem invoco, ſi me Auguſtus univerſo præſidens mundo matrimonii honore dignaretur, totumque mihi orbem confirmaret in perpetuo præſidendum, charius mihi & dignius mihi videretur TUA DICI MERETRIX, quàm illius Imperatrix (40). How can it be ſaid, that Heloiſe's paſſion had quitted her in the Abbey of Paraclet, ſince ſhe there writes ſuch an ingenuous confeſſion of the ill ſtate of her ſoul, as ſhews that the fire of love pierced to her very bones? I dare not expreſs in French the ſeveral accuſations ſhe brings againſt herſelf. She confeſſes that the pleaſures ſhe had enjoyed in Abelard's arms, had inchanted her to ſuch a degree, that ſhe reflected on them day and night, ſleeping and waking, and even during the ſolemnization of maſs. She regretted the loſs of them perpetually; and, for want of a ſubſtantial way, repeated them in imagination. Thoſe who underſtand Latin, will perceive with what ſtrength of eloquence Heloiſe could expreſs the ſenſations of her ſoul. In tantum verò illæ quas pariter exercuimus amantium voluptates, dulces mihi fuerunt, ut nec diſplicere mihi, nec vix à memoria labi poſſint. Quocunque loco me vertam ſemper ſe oculis meis cum ſuis ingerunt deſideriis. Nec etiam dormienti ſuis illuſionibus parcunt. Inter ipſa miſſarum ſolemnia, ubi purior eſſe debet oratio, obſcœna earum voluptatum fantaſmata ita ſibi penitus miſerrimam captivant animam, ut turpitudinibus illis magis quàm orationi vacem. Quæ cum ingemiſcere debeam de commiſſis, ſuſpiro potius de amiſſis. Nec ſolum quæ egimus, ſed loca pariter & tempora, in quibus hæc egimus, ita tecum noſtro infixa ſunt animo, ut in ipſis omnia tecum agam, nec dormiens etiam ab his quieſcam. Nonnunquam & ipſo motu corporis animi mei cogitationes deprehenduntur, nec à verbis temperant improviſis (41). This forced her to cry out with St. Paul (42). O wretched man that I am, who ſhall deliver me from the body of this death? Would to God, continued ſhe, that I could truly add, the grace of God through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord. That grace, ſays ſhe to her Abelard, has prevented you, my dear, in delivering you from all the incentives of luſt, by that ſingle ſtroke of a knife whereby you were made an eunuch. . . . But my youth, and the experience I have had of paſt pleaſures, light up in the ſtrongeſt manner thoſe fires in my ſoul; and the weaker I am by nature, the more I ſink under thoſe violent attacks. Hæc te gratia, chariſſime, prævenit, & ab his tibi ſtimulis una corporis plaga medendo multas in anima ſanavit. . . . . hos autem in me ſtimulos carnis, hæc incentiva libidinis ipſe juvenilis fervor ætatis & jucundiſſimarum experientia voluptatum plurimum accendunt, & tanto amplius ſua me impugnatione opprimunt, quanto infirmior eſt natura quam oppugnant (43). Laſtly, ſhe recommends herſelf to his prayers, with ſo much the more earneſtneſs, as that is the only remedy which her incontinence can find in him. Time obſecro ſemper de me potius quam confidas, ut tua ſemper ſollicitudine adjuver. Nunc verò præcipuè timendum (44). Thoſe who ſlandered Abelard for going ſo often to the Paraclet (45), were doubtleſs raſh in their judgment, ſince they did not know the internal diſpoſition of Heloiſe; but had they known it, they ought to have endeavoured to get thoſe viſits prohibited; they having reaſon to fear, that it would be impoſſible, but that this woman, humanly ſpeaking, muſt commit impure acts with Abelard. The Fathers of the Church never truſted to mutilations; they comparing an eunuch to an ox whoſe horns are cut off, notwithſtanding which he buts

(40) Pag. 15.

(41) Pag. 59.

(42) Epiſt. to the Romans, chap. 7.

(43) Pag. 60.

(44) Pag. 61.

(45) See the article ABELARD, remark [T].

no purpoſe that they emaſculated poor Abelard [L] ; that ſhe herſelf aſſumed a religious habit ; for ſhe ſtill retained ſome tincture of this frenzy [M] : and the Lettres Portuguaiſes did not firſt ſhew, that it belongs to Nuns only to talk of love-matters ; Heloiſe's Letters having long before proved the truth of this aſſertion. However this be, this fond creature employed, to no purpoſe, all her wit and all her eloquence, to diſſuade Abelard from this marriage. They were ſecretly married ; but Heloiſe always denied in the moſt ſolemn manner that ſhe was his wife (c). For this behaviour ſhe was ill uſed by her uncle, who, to throw a veil over the diſhonour which had been brought on his family, publiſhed the marriage in all places, though he had promiſed Abelard never to mention it. The ill treatment which Heloiſe met with at Fulbert's, made her huſband reſolve to remove her from his houſe, and to ſend her to the Nuns of Argenteuil, where ſhe had been brought up. This ſecond elopement put her relations out of all patience. They harboured a moſt odd kind of vengeance againſt him, and put it in execution by bribing Abelard's valet. This wretch opened the door in the dead of night to the villains, who were to perpetrate the horrid deed. They ſurprized him in his ſleep, and cut off certain parts which muſt be nameleſs (d). This action made a great noiſe [N] ; and the next morning people went, as in proceſſion, to Abelard's apartment. His pupils made ſtill greater moan than any. The women were diſtinguiſhed by the bitterneſs of their complaints [O]. Some very curious letters were wrote to Abelard, to conſole him for his misfortune [P]. The Magiſtrates puniſhed the wretches who had perpetrated this action with great ſeverity [Q] ; notwithſtanding which, Abelard was ſo much aſhamed, and ſeized with ſuch deſpair, that he went and immured himſelf in the convent of St. Denys, after ordering Heloiſe to take the veil in Argenteuil. We have taken notice elſewhere of his tranſaction after he had aſſumed a religious habit ; and of his being ſentenced to throw, with his own hands, a book he had written into the flames, &c. He was more grieved for the loſs of this book than for that of his virility [R] ; and yet, when one loſes a book, another may be recovered, but the loſs in the

(c) Avunculus ipſius atque domeſtici ejus ignominiæ ſuæ ſolatium quærentes, initum matrimonium divulgare & fidem mihi ſuper hoc datam violare cœperunt. Illa autem è contra anathematizare & jurare, quia falſiſſimum eſſet. Abælard. Hiſtor. Calamitatum, pag. 17.

(d) Crudeliſſima & pudentiſſima ultione punierunt, & quam ſumma admiratione mundus excepit, eis videlicet corporis mei partibus amputatis, quibus id quod plangebant commiſeram. Ibid.

buts with them. See a fine paſſage of St. Baſil on this ſubject, in our remarks on the article COMBABUS

(46) Citation (6). (46) But as appearances are ſometimes deceitful, I ſhould not approve that thoſe, who, know the true ſtate of Heloiſe's ſoul, ſhould imagine that ſhe tranſgreſſed the rules, when ſhe and her huſband met together, and that ſhe ſometimes had occaſion to write to him : Si libidinoſa eſſem, quererer decepta ; nunc etiam languori tuo gratias ago : in umbra voluptatis diutius luſi (47).

(47) Circe Polyæno, apud Petronium.

[L] It was to no purpoſe that they emaſculated poor Abelard.] This was a love-remedy, which was very capable of operating, if we may believe certain verſes of Cyrano Bergerac (48). They are addreſſed to a man, to whom he had ſpoke as follows :

(48) See the Play intitled, Le Pedant joué.

J'entens que le diminutif
Qu'on fit de vrai trop exceſſif
Sur vôtre flaſque genitif
Vous prohibe le conjonctif.

After which he adds

O viſage ! ô portrait naïf !
O ſouverain expeditif
Pour guerir tout ſexe laſcif
D'amour naiſſant, ou effectif !
Genre neutre, genre metif,
Qui n'êtes homme qu'abſtractif,
Grace à vôtre copulatif,
Qu'a rendu fort imperfectif
Le cruel tranchant d'un canif.

But as no rule is ſo general, as not to admit of ſome exception, Heloiſe's paſſion was proof againſt this violent remedy. This ſhe had in common with Queen Stratonice already mentioned (49).

(49) In the article COMBABUS.

[M] She ſtill retained ſome tincture of this frenzy.] This is plain from the paſſages I cited in the remark [K]. They prove, not only that poor Heloiſe was governed by a carnal appetite, but alſo that her brain was a little turned ; for a woman in her right ſenſes would never have ſpoke in the manner ſhe did. It is manifeſt that ſtudy had begun to diſtract her, and that love greatly increaſed her diſorder. A vaſt number of marks of a crazy imagination are ſeen in her writings ; ſomething ſo wild, incoherent and inconſiſtent, that Heloiſe is a part of Seneca's maxim, Nullum magnum ingenium ſine mixtura dementiæ (50). i. e. " All mighty wits have ſtill a daſh of madneſs."

(50) See the citation (78) of the article CARDAN.

[N] This action made a great noiſe.] Here follows what Abelard ſays of this matter (51) : Mane autem facto tota ad me civitas congregata quanta ſtuperet admiratione, quanta ſe affligeret lamentatione, quanto me clamore vexarent, quanto planctu perturbarent, difficile imo impoſſibile eſt exprimi. Maximè verò Clerici, ac præcipuè Scholares noſtri, intolerabilius me lamentis & ejulatibus cruciabant. See the article to which I refer in the following remark.

(51) Operum, pag. 17.

[O] The women were diſtinguiſhed by the bitterneſs of their complaints.] Abelard does not take notice of that circumſtance ; but we learn it from one of his friends who wrote a letter of conſolation to him. See the article FOULQUES (52).

(32) Remark [I].

[P] Some very curious letters were wrote to Abelard, to conſole him for his misfortune.] Foulques, Prior of Deuil, wrote one to him, which was inſerted in the edition of Abelard's works. We take notice of it in the article of this Prior ; and we tranſplant thither a great many particulars that belong to Heloiſe and her huſband ; and which would make their articles too long, were they not ſeparated, and tranſferred to another place. Thoſe who declare, that they had rather have all the particulars relating to a perſon in one place, have not duly weighed that matter.

[Q] The Magiſtrates puniſhed the wretches who had perpetrated this action with great ſeverity.] See the article FOULQUES (53), to which I refer for the two preceding remarks.

(53) Remark [M].

[R] He was more grieved for the loſs of this book, than for that of his virility.] Authors have been greatly rallied, on account of the exceſſive tenderneſs they entertain for their own compoſitions ; and, among other examples, that of Heliodorus the Biſhop has been cited ; a man who choſe to reſign his Biſhoprick, rather than condemn his romance of Theagines (54). What Sarraſin makes Voiture ſay has been alledged.

(54) See in the remark [B] of the article HELIODORUS, how far this ought to be credited.

Un autheur, qui dans ſon eſcrit,
Comme moi reçoit une offenſe,
Souffre plus que Job ne ſouffrit,
Bien qu'il eût d'extrêmes ſouffrances (55).

(55) Poeſies, pag. m. 87.

The ſenſe is,

" An author who, in his compoſitions, receives like " me an affront, ſuffers more than Job did, although " his ſufferings were extreme."

But I don't know that Abelard has been cited on this occaſion ; nevertheleſs, there is ſomething ſtill ſtronger in the other caſe is irreparable [S]. With regard to Heloiſe, ſhe became Prioreſs of the Nuns of Argenteuil; but as the Nuns in this monaſtry led very ill lives [T], the Abbot of St. Denys, who pretended to be maſter of it, expelled the Nuns from it, whereby Heloiſe had great occaſion for her huſband. He had built an Oratory or Chapel near Troies, which he called Paraclet (e), and had afterwards accepted of an Abbey in Britany. Hearing that Heloiſe was in want of an habitation ever ſince her being expelled from Argenteuil, he gave her this Oratory with all its dependencies; which donation was confirmed by Pope Innocent II. Behold her therefore firſt Abbeſs of the Paraclet. Here ſhe gained ſuch univerſal eſteem, that numberleſs benefits were heaped upon her in a ſhort time. The Biſhops loved her as though ſhe had been their daughter, the Abbots as their ſiſter, and the Laity as their mother (f). Notwithſtanding this ſhe was greatly diſcontented at Providence (g); and murmured much more than Job. She carried on a correſpondence, by letter, with Abelard [U], and deſired him to ſend her ſome rules for

(e) See the article PARACLET.

(f) All this is extracted from Abelard's Letter intitled, Hiſtoria Calamitatum, a few particulars excepted, the proofs of which I cite ſeparately.

(g) See the article FOULQUES remark [K].

in his example, for Job was reſtored to his former flouriſhing condition, and begat ſons and daughters; and it is certain that Voiture would have choſe to be as Job for ſome time, rather than as Abelard to his grave; and that he would have thrown all his books and his muſes into the fire, had he been reduced to the neceſſity of burning them, or of loſing his virility. Where ſhould we find a Prelate, who would, not be prevailed upon to ſign the reſignation of his Biſhopric, in caſe a man, with an uplifted razor, ſhould threaten to. . . . in caſe he refuſed to ſign? Had Heliodorus been put to that ſad option, he doubtleſs would have conſented to the condemnation of his romance. But here we find a man declaring, that he conſiders the loſs of his pudenda as trifling, in compariſon of the loſs of a book, which he was forced to throw into the flames. But to judge impartially in this caſe, we muſt not aſcribe all Abelard's grief to the paternal affection, which he, as an author, muſt naturally have for his work. Another circumſtance gave him ſtill greater uneaſineſs, and this was, that by his being forced to burn his book, he thereby was branded with the ſtigma of hereſy, a puniſhment which anſwers to that of the hot iron. His murmurs againſt God's providence are another mark of his concern. Here follow his words, which it will be proper for me to cite, to prevent my being ſuſpected of amplifying matters, merely to divert my readers. Deus, qui judicas æquitatem quanto tunc animi felle, quanta mentis amaritudine teipſum infamis arguebam, te furibundus accuſabam, ſæpiùs repetens illam beati Antonii (56) conqueſtionem, Jeſu bone ubi eras? Quanto autem dolore æſtuarem, quanta erubeſcentia confunderer, quanta deſperatione perturbarer ſentire tunc potui, proferre non poſſum. Conferebam cum his quæ in corpore paſſus olim fueram, quanta nunc ſuſtinerem, & omnium me æſtimabam miſerrimum. PARVAM illam ducebam proditionem in COMPARATIONE hujus injuriæ, & longè amplius famæ quam corporis detrimentum plangebam (57). i. e. "O God who judgeſt righteouſly, with what "madneſs and bitterneſs of ſpirit did I, wretch that "I am, accuſe thee; frequently repeating the com- "plaint of St. Anthony, Sweet Jeſus, where waſt "thou? The grief with which I then was agitated, "the ſhame with which I was confounded, and the "deſpair with which I was tortured, I could "then feel, but cannot now deſcribe. I compared "with the evils which I formerly had ſuffered in my "body, thoſe I now ſuffered, and concluded my ſelf "to be the moſt miſerable of all men. I looked "upon that treachery I formerly met with to be tri- "fling in compariſon of this, and bewailed much "more the prejudice done to my fame and reputation, "than that done to my body."

(56) Apud S. Hieronym. in ejus vita.

(57) Abælardi Oper. pag. 25.

[S] But the loſs in the other caſe is irreparable.] Again ſee the article FOULQUES, remark [F].

[T] The Nuns in this Monaſtry led very ill lives.] Sugger, Abbot of St. Denys, took advantage of the diſorderly lives of the Nuns of Argenteuil, in order to re-inſtate himſelf in the poſſeſſion of that Monaſtry. He ſent his titles to Rome, and received a favourable anſwer from thence. Let us hear what he ſays of this matter, in the hiſtory of his own life, written under the year 1127. Nuntios noſtros & chartas antiquas fundationis & donationis, & confirmationum privilegia bonæ memoriæ Papæ Honorio Romam delegavimus, poſtulantes ut juſtitiam noſtram canonico inveſtigaret & reſtitueret ſcrutinio. Qui, ut erat vir concilii & juſtitiæ tutor, tam pro noſtra juſtitia, quàm pro enormitate Monacharum ibidem malè viventium, eundem nobis locum cum appendiciis ſuis, ut reformaretur ibi religionis ordo, reſtituit. i. e. "I ſent, to Rome, meſſengers with the "antient charters of foundation, donation, and con- "firmation of privileges, in order for them to be laid "before Pope Honorius of bleſſed memory; humbly "intreating him to ſearch into the juſtice of my claim, "and to reſtore what rightfully appertained to me. "Accordingly, as this Pope was a wiſe and juſt man, "he reſtored that place to me, with its ſeveral de- "pendencies and privileges; not only in juſtice to "me, but alſo becauſe of the diſorderly lives of the "Nuns who then reſided there, that a religious order "might be again eſtabliſhed in that place." He ſays the ſame in the Life of Lewis the Corpulent (58). Thoſe who are inclined to judge ill of their neighbour, will certainly, on the peruſal of this paſſage, entertain a ſtrong ſuſpicion of Heloiſe's conduct. She confeſſes that ſhe was ſtrongly enflamed by the fire of incontinence (59); and it is often found, that the Abbeſs of a Monaſtry does not conduct herſelf well, when lewdneſs is prevalent in it (60). From theſe two principles, thoſe who are prone to ſcandal, may eaſily draw the following conſequence, that the Prioreſs of Argenteuil was no better than her Nuns; but as I myſelf have not read, that ſhe was expreſly included in the ſcandal which her Monaſtry gave, I ſhall be far from cenſuring her on that account. We ought to imitate our Lord, and make uſe of his maxim (61). Has no man condemned or accuſed thee? Neither do I condemn or accuſe thee. And it is very certain that inferiors imitate the bad, and not the good life of their ſuperiors. The court of France was not more chaſte under Lewis XIII, than under Henry IV.

(58) Papa Honorius vir gravis, & ſeverus, juſtitiam noſtram de Monaſterio Argentoulenſi puellarum miſerrima converſatione infamato, &c.

(59) See above, remark [K], citations (41) and (43).

(60) People have to ſay on this occaſion, Regis ad exemplum totus componitur orbis; & Sequitur leviter filia matris iter. i. e. "People imitate the "example which "their King ſets "them; and "a daughter is "apt to tread in "her mother's "ſteps."

(61) St. John chap. viii. ver. 10.

[U] She carried on a correſpondence, by letter, with Abelard.] This correſpondence began but late; and was occaſioned by a fortuitous circumſtance, which was as follows, Abelard had writ, to a friend, a long relation of his misfortunes, which relation happened to fall into the hands of Heloiſe, who was then Abbeſs of Paraclet. After peruſing it, Heloiſe wrote to him all the reflections ſhe had made on it; and moſt earneſtly beſought him to write to her, in order that ſhe might no longer be deprived of the conſolation, which his Letters could give her in his abſence. She repreſents to him the great diſintereſtedneſs of her love; and that ſhe had not ſought either the honour of marriage, the advantages of a dowry, nor her own pleaſure; but the ſingle ſatisfaction of poſſeſſing her dear Abelard. She tells him, that although the name of wife ſeems more holy and of greater dignity, ſhe yet was always better pleaſed with that of his miſtreſs, his concubine, and even ſtrumpet: Etſi uxoris nomen ſanctius ac validius videtur, dulcius mihi ſemper extitit amicæ vocabulum, aut ſi non indigneris, concubinæ vel ſcorti (62). She adds, that he had given but part of the reaſons ſhe had repreſented to him, in order to divert him from marriage; but that he had ſuppreſſed almoſt all thoſe which were taken from the preference which ſhe gave to love, before the conjugal knot; and to liberty before neceſſity or bonds. Rationes nonnullas quibus te à conjugio noſtro infauſtis thalamis revocare conabar exponere non es dedignatus, ſed pleriſque tacitis quibus amorem conjugio, libertatem vinculo præferebam (63). I know not what idea our Heloiſe formed to herſelf of this matter; but we here have one of the moſt myſterious refinements in love. It has been the notion for theſe many ages, that marriage deſtroys the chief poignancy of this ſpecies of ſalt; and that when a perſon does a thing

THE character of miſtreſs more agreeable to Heloiſe than that of wife.

(62) Abælardi Opera, pag. 45.

(63) Idem, ibid.

for the uſe of her Nuns, and alſo the ſolution of various problems. He anſwered all her demands. I do not find that her hopes of ſeeing him made a Biſhop occaſioned the reluctance ſhe had to be his wife [X]. When he died a Monk of Clugni Heloiſe beſought the Abbot to deliver her Abelard's body; and having obtained it ſhe buried it in the Paraclet, and deſired to be interred in the ſame grave (b). A very ſurprizing miracle is related, when the grave was opened, in order for depoſiting Heloiſe's body in it, viz. that Abelard ſtretched out his arms to receive her, and claſped her in a ſtrict embrace [Y]. He nevertheleſs had been dead above twenty years; but this is no great matter; it is pretended that there are examples of the like incidents [Z]. She died the 17th of May 1163. The Letters which ſhe wrote to her huſband are found in an edition of Abelard's works. But what Moreri aſſerts is not true, viz. that Andrew du Cheſne had wroteRemarks on thoſe Letters, and on Abelard's Anſwers. He made none thing by engagement, by duty and neceſſity, as a taſk and drudgery, he no longer finds the natural charms in it; ſo that, according to ſuch as ſet up for the moſt delicate and greateſt judges, a man takes a wife ad honores, and not ad delicias. "On the ſide "of marriage is profit, juſtice, honour and conſtancy; "an inſipid, but more univerſal pleaſure: But love is "founded wholly on pleaſure, which indeed is more "rapturous, ſprightly, and poignant; a pleaſure height-"ned by difficulty, there muſt be a reliſh and ſmart-"neſs in it: Love is no longer love, if it be with-"out arrows and fire. The fair are too liberal of "their ſweets in marriage, a circumſtance that blunts "the edge of affection and deſire (64)." Patere me, uſed a Roman Emperor (65) to ſay to his wife, per alias exercere cupiditates meas, nam uxor nomen eſt dignitatis, non voluptatis (66). i. e. "Permit me, to ſa-"tiate my warm deſires with others, for wife is a "title of dignity, not of pleaſure." A very ill turn might therefore be given to the reſolution which Heloiſe had formed, viz. never to be the wife of Abelard, but always his dear miſtreſs; ſhe might be ſuſpected of fearing, that marriage would be the grave of love; and prevent her taſting, as deliciouſly as before, the fond careſſes of her gallant. The author who has paraphraſed ſome paſſages in our Hiſtorical Letters (67), aſcribes, in the main, that genius and view, although the expreſſions are touched with delicacy. That author makes her ſay (68), "that ſhe found nothing but "what was vaſtly inſipid in thoſe public engagements, "which form ſuch ties as death can only diſſolve, "and make a ſad neceſſity of life and love; that it "cannot be called love (69) to ſearch for wealth and "dignities in the lukewarm embraces of an indolent "huſband; that ſhe will never believe, that perſons "can taſte in this manner the ſenſible pleaſures of an "agreeable union; nor that they feel thoſe ſecret and "charming emotions of two hearts, which have long "ſought for each other, in order to be united; and "that (70) ſhe is perſuaded, that if there be any ap-"pearance of happineſs here below, it is found only "in the aſſemblage of two perſons, who love with "liberty, whom a ſecret inclination has joined, and "a reciprocal merit has rendred contented." We ſhall now ſee, that another cauſe has been ſuppoſed, with regard to the deſign which Heloiſe had, not to marry Abelard.

(b) See the remark [Y] of the article ABELARD.

(64) Montagne, Eſſais, liv. 3. chap. 5. pag. m. 120.

(65) Ælius Verus apud Spartian. in ejus Vita, pag. m. 235.

(66) See ſeveral remarks of this nature in the 9th Letter of the Critique du Calviniſme de Maimbourg; and in the Letters 21 and 22 of the Sequel of that Critique.

(67) See the book intitled, Hiſtoire d'Eloiſe & d'Abelard, Hague 1693.

(68) Pag. 51.

(69) Pag. 53.

(70) Pag. 54.

[X] I do not find that her hopes of ſeeing him made a Biſhop, occaſioned the reluctance ſhe had to be his wife.] The Sieur d'Amboiſe (71) mentions an antient French Poet, who, having exhorted men not to ſubject themſelves to the ſlavery of marriage, confirms his ſentiment by that of our Heloiſe, who, ſays he, begged and conjured her lover in the moſt ardent manner, never to marry her; ſhe found it more to her advantage to be the miſtreſs of a man, who would one day be poſſeſſed of a rich Biſhop's See. Satis eſſe dictitans ſi illa intimo pectoris amorem mutuum ſervans, illum viderit mitra & infulis Pontificalibus quibus dignus erat ornatum. i. e. "She ſaying often, that it would be "enough for her, whilſt ſhe cheriſhed their recipro-"cal flame in the inmoſt receſſes of her heart, to ſee "him adorned with the mitre and the pontifical veſt-"ments, of which he was ſo worthy." D'Amboiſe obſerves, I. That this poet gives another turn to it, viz. that Heloiſe intimated, that the embraces of married perſons are not heightned with ſo exquiſite and delicious a pleaſure, as thoſe embraces which are unlawful. Sed poëta in alium ſenſum hoc detorquet, quaſi illa innuere voluerit ſuaviores eſſe amantium, quam legibus connubialibus nexorum amplexus (72). II. That we must not think that Heloiſe preferred the licentiouſneſs of concubinage, before the quality or condition of a wife; but that the love and reſpect ſhe owed her gallant, prompted her to take the veil, rather than to prevent, by her marrying Abelard, his being rewarded ſuitably to his genius and erudition, as for inſtance, with a Cardinal's hat. Potius quam obice & interventu ſuarum nuptiarum, impedimento eſſe ne Abelardus factus uxorius fruſtraretur præmio excellentis ingenii admirabiliſquæ doctrinæ, puta purpura & galero (73). But I have not found the leaſt marks of this in Heloiſe's Letters, and for this reaſon made it the ſixth error committed by Moreri in the article of ABELARD. The circumſtance which gives riſe to this kind of falſhood is, the liberty which authors take, of putting into the mouths of people ſuch expreſſions as appear to him ſuitable to their preſent condition. It is frequently more advantageous for a woman, to ſuffer her young gallant to riſe in the church, than to ſtop his career by marrying him. But are we therefore to ſuppoſe, that Heloiſe had any ſuch views? Here follows a well-known tale. A man who enjoyed a prebend, quitted it purely for the ſake of marrying. The day after the wedding he ſpoke thus to his wife: It is plain, my dear, ſays he, that I have the utmoſt affection for you, ſince I left my prebend, merely for the ſake of enjoying you. You acted very fooliſhly, replied his bride, for you might have kept your prebend, and poſſeſſed me too (74).

(71) Præfat. Apologet. ad Oper. Abælardi.

(72) Ibid.

(73) Ibid.

(74) See the book intitled, Le Moyen de Parvenir, wrote by a Canon of Tours, as it is ſaid in the Menagiana, pag. 366. 2d Dutch edit.

[Y] A very ſurprizing miracle is related, . . . viz. that Abelard ſtretched out his arms to receive her, and claſped her in a ſtrict embrace.] This pretty miracle is related in a manuſcript Chronicle of Tours (75). Hæc (Heloiſſa) ſicut dicitur in ægritudine ultima poſita præcepit, ut mortua intra mariti tumulum poneretur, & ſic eadem defuncta ad tumulum apertum deportata, maritus ejus qui multis diebus ante eam defunctus fuerat, elevatis brachiis illam recipit, & ita eam amplexatus brachia ſua ſtrinxit. i. e. "Heloiſe, as it is related, "being upon her death-bed, gave orders for her being "buried in the ſame grave with her huſband; and ac-"cordingly, dying, and being carried to his grave, "her huſband, who died a long time before her, lift-"ing up his arms, received her, and folded her in a "ſtrict embrace." But why then are they not in the ſame ſepulchre? Francis d'Amboiſe who declares that he had ſeen, at the Paraclet, the ſepulchres of the founder and foundreſs ſtanding near one another; contigua fundatoris & fundatricis ſepulchra, ought to have ſolved this ſmall difficulty.

(75) Apud Andream Querceta-num, Notis ad Hiſtor. Calamitat. Abæl. & apud Franc. Amboſ. Præfat. Apologet.

[Z] It is pretended that there are examples of the like incident.] See what Gregory of Tours relates (76) concerning two married perſons, who lived ever in a ſtate of continence, with regard to one another; and were called by the inhabitants of the country (77) the two Lovers. The wife died firſt; and the huſband, as her corps was letting down into the grave, uſed the following prayer: I thank thee, O my Lord and my God, in that I return thee this treaſure as pure and undefiled, as when thou firſt intruſtedſt me with it. The wife ſmiling, cried, Why do you ſpeak of a thing which no one aſks any queſtions about? The huſband died a little after, and was buried over againſt his wife; but the next day both bodies were found together in the ſame grave. This blunt query might make ſome of the profane conclude, that the virgin-wife did not care the world ſhould know her huſband had been ſo cold. She confined herſelf barely to the merits of continence, and did not care to be expoſed to the opinions, which might be entertained to the prejudice of her charms. But the none, except on that Letter in which Abelard communicates the hiſtory of his misfortunes to a friend. John de Meun had tranſlated into French the Letters which Abelard and Heloiſe had wrote to one another (i). There was publiſhed, not long ſince, a little book (k), intitled, The Hiſtory of Eloiſe and Abelard, with the paſſionate letter which ſhe wrote to him, tranſlated from the Latin. This pretended Tranſlation is only a few particulars extracted at pleaſure from Heloiſe's Letters, which the compiler has thrown into ſuch a dreſs as he thought proper, by expreſſing what did not ſuit, and adding ſuch particulars as he judged moſt ſuitable.

(76) Hiſt. des François, liv. 1. chap. 42.

(77) Clermont en Auvergne.

(i) See the Preſident Fauchet, chap. 126. of the Old French Poets.

(k) Printed at the Hague, for John Alberts, 1693.

Count de Buſſi Rabutin tranſlated ſome of Abelard and Heloiſe's Letters into French. This verſion has been inſerted in the ſecond volume of his Letters, publiſhed after his death. I never, ſays he (l), read finer Latin, eſpecially that of the Nun, nor any pieces more amorous and ingenious than her's. Had the Count been as well acquainted with the ſtyle of the Roman tongue as with that of the French, he would not have beſtowed ſuch an elogium on Heloiſe's Latin diction.

(l) Buſſi, Lettres 15. tom. 2. pag. 49. Dutch edit. 1697.

the truſt or depoſitum in queſtion ought not to be kept in this manner; it is not reſtoring it in a proper manner, to return it untouched, and exactly the ſame as when we received it; it is not for this that God inſtituted marriage, non hos quæſitum munus in uſus. A perſon may therefore not deſire that the world ſhould ſurmiſe, that he had not ſufficiently pleaſed the depoſitary. But the Hiſtorian will remedy this inconvenience, if we conſult chapter XXXII of the Glory of Confeſſors, where a ſomething better turn is given to the words of a dead wife. He relates, ten chapters after, that a Senator of Dijon, Hilarius by name (78), who had been buried a year, lifted up his arm in order to claſp his wife round the neck, as her corps was letting down into the ſame grave.

(78) See Abbot de Marolles's Notes on Gregory of Tours, tom. 2. pag. 283.

HELVICUS (CHRISTOPHER) Profeſſor of Divinity, Greek, and the Eaſtern Tongues, in the Univerſity of Gieſſen, was born the 26th of December 1581, at Sprendlingen (a), where his father was a Miniſter [A]. He was not one of thoſe tardy genius's, which do not diſplay themſelves till late; he being capable, before he was twenty years of age, to teach Greek, Hebrew, and even Philoſophy; and he had compoſed a prodigious number of Greek verſes at fifteen or ſixteen years of age. He went through his courſe of ſtudies in Marpurg, where he took his Maſter of Arts degree in 1599. He might have taken it ſooner, had he thought proper, he being received Bachelor at fourteen years of age (b). The Hebrew language became ſo extremely familiar to him, that he ſpoke it as fluently as his native language. He ſtudied thoroughly a numberleſs multitude of Greek authors; and even ſtudied Phyſic for ſome time, though he had devoted himſelf to the Miniſtry. In fine, he gave ſo many proofs of his capacity, that he was choſen, anno 1605, to teach Greek and Hebrew in the College which the Landgrave had lately eſtabliſhed in Gieſſen (c). The next year the Emperor made this College an Univerſity, inveſting it with the privileges belonging to it as ſuch. Helvicus having diſcharged, during five years, the ſeveral duties of his employment with great reputation, was appointed Divinity-Profeſſor in 1610. He married that year. I know not whether Helvicus continued a Bachelor till he was thus raiſed in the world, in order that he might have an opportunity of marrying a woman with a greater fortune; or whether other motives prompted him to lead a ſingle life till the abovementioned date, the author I ſhall quote ſaying nothing of that matter; but he obſerves that Helvicus, after his marriage, continued as aſſiduous as ever in the duties of his profeſſion (d). A church was offered him in Moravia anno 1611, and a Profeſſorſhip at Hamburg, with a conſiderable ſtipend; however, he refuſed both thoſe offers. He took his Doctor's degree of Divinity anno 1613. This the Landgrave obliged him to take, and would make him go to Frankfort, in order to view the Library of the Jews, who had been lately drove away by popular tumults. Helvicus, who was very fond of reading the Rabbins, bought ſeveral of their books on that occaſion. He died in the flower of his age, the 10th of September 1617, he having projected the writing a great number of books [B]; and (a) A little town within half a league of Frankfort.

(b) XIV ætatis anno, perraro exemplo Baccalaureatus gradum conſecutus. Chriſtoph. Scheiblerus in Programmate de funere Helvici. The Baccalaureat in Germany muſt be different from what it is in other countries.

(c) Konig is miſtaken; he makes him Profeſſor at Marpurg.

(d) Neque vero into matrimonio τὰ θεῖα χείρων fuit, & in officio remiſſior. Jo. Wynckelmannus ubi infrà.

[A] Where his father was Miniſter.] His Chriſtian name was, like that of his ſon, CHRISTOPHER. In his younger days he had been, for two years, Director of the College in Geraw; after which he ſtudied Divinity in Tubingen, and was Miniſter of the Church of Griſheim; but Prince George, Landgrave of Heſſe, placed him a little afterwards at Spredlingen. Helvicus was Miniſter of that Church till his death, and met with a great many misfortunes. Multa propter ſinceram confeſſionem perpeſſus, tandem ibidem vitam hanc terreſtrem cum cæleſti commutavit. He was ſon to QUIRINUS HELVICUS, who ſignalized himſelf in the defence of Darmſtat during the war of Schmalcalde. The Reader will find in Sleidan and in Thuanus, the judgment which Count de Buren formed of him. Finding there was no likelihood of his being ſuccoured, he went upon the ramparts in order to capitulate; but being ſhot thro' the right arm, the city was taken by ſtorm. The enemy were for hanging him; and he perhaps would have been hanged, had he not been ſaved by the ranſom which was promiſed for him. He had attended upon the Landgrave Philip in moſt of his expeditions (1).

(1) Ex Oratione funeb. Chriſtoph. Helvici habita à Joanne Wynckelmanno.

[B] He died in the flower of his age, . . . having projected the writing a great number of Books.] He had publiſhed ſeveral Grammars, a Latin, Greek, Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriac (2); but they were only abridgments. His Hebrew Lexicon, and his Latin Lexicon were only by way of eſſay, calculated for youth. He was deſirous of improving all thoſe Grammars, and to compile Lexicons for the uſe of the learned; and he beſought God to indulge him length of years ſufficient for him to complete thoſe works. He likewiſe begged for time enough to rank, in their proper order, the Church Hiſtories; and to criticize the Old and New Teſtament drawn up by Piſcator, and that Author's Commentaries on the Scriptures. He thought it would alſo be requiſite to make a new Edition of Luther's Bible, with a good Apology and the neceſſary Explications. The Edition of that Bible, which Paulus Toſſanus had lately procured, with marginal Notes containing the opinions of Calvin, had inſpired Hel-

(2) He firſt publiſhed a general Grammar: Grammatica univerſalis, continens ea quæ omnibus Linguis ſunt communia. Thoſe who have it by them will do well to compare it with that of Mr. Arnauld.

(e) Extracted from his Funeral Oration preached by John Wynckelmannus, Professor of Divinity in Giessen.

and being reputed to have the most skilful and methodical way of teaching languages (e) [C]. He was not only a good Grammarian, but also an able Chronologer. His chronological Tables [D] have been greatly esteemed, though not quite free from errors [E]. It is plain, by the books extant of his composing [F], that had he lived threescore vicus with that thought; and, at the same time, an ardent desire to execute this project (3). Cum ante biennium Paulus Tossanus, Heidelbergensis Doctor, versionem Biblicam B. Lutheri Germanicam in lucem edidisset, non solum variis notationibus marginalibus (quæ quales hinc inde sint, viri cordati judicabunt) consperſam, sed etiam erroribus, Calvinianorum contra ipsius Lutheri mentem & voluntatem proterva temeritate & impudentia contaminatam, judicabat operæ pretium esse, si opus illud Biblicum Lutheri, cum solida ubi opus esset apologia, necessariis explicationibus, & macularum quas Pontificii & Calviniani illi asperserunt, absterſione in lucem prodiret. Ubi animadverti in ipso singulare hoc ipsum præstandi desiderium, si Domino ita visum esset (4). i. e. "Paul "Tossanus, a Doctor of Heidelberg, having two "years since published the German Translation of the "Bible made by Luther; not only with a great num- "ber of marginal Notes, of the goodness of which "let the sagacious and judicious judge, but also cor- "rupted it in the most rash and impudent manner, "contrary to the doctrine and design of Luther, with "several Calvinistical errors; Helvicus presumed it "would be doing the world a service, to publish that "Bible of Luther, with a solid apology wherever it "might be necessary, together with such explications "as may be requisite; and purged from all those er- "rors which Papists and Calvinists had foisted into it. "I took notice, that he had a strong desire, with God's "leave, to have executed this design."

(3) Wynckelm. in Orat. fun. Helvici.

(4) Ibid.

[C] . . . being reputed to have the most skilful and methodical way of teaching languages.] Helvicus sought after a shorter method than that commonly made use of in Schools, for the educating of youth. He was not disheartened, because of the obstacles which were raised against his new method, firmly persuaded that he should save Scholars a great deal of time and pains; and excited by the love which men have for their own inventions, he exerted himself to the utmost, in order to get his method introduced in Schools. He had put things in a fair way, when endeavours were used to make him an object of ridicule; he was wrangled with, and slander'd; and Helvicus was obliged to defend himself, and repulse those severe attacks (5). I fancy that, as Helvicus died before his inventions prevailed, this gave the partisans of the old method an opportunity to maintain, or re-establish themselves. However this be, it was declared in Helvicus's epitaph, that he had been the inventor of a new art of teaching, novæ Didacticæ auctor & informator felicissimus. It was worthy of being taken notice of on that occasion, titulo res digna sepulchri, and deserved to have been copied more exactly than it was by Freherus, who, instead of Didacticæ has wrote Dialecticæ. One would imagine that Helvicus had some notion of a project, in which we are told that a very learned man is employed, viz. to reduce languages to common principles, in order that they may be acquired, very easily, all together; one would, I say, imagine this, were we to trust to the following title of one of his books: Libri didactici Grammaticæ universalis Latinæ, Græcæ, Hebraicæ, Chaldaicæ (6); but it is plain from his funeral Oration, that a comma must be placed there after Universalis. See the citation above (2).

(5) See Spizelius in Templo Honoris reserato, pag. 50.

(6) Spizelius, ibid. pag. 52. quotes the title in this manner.

[D] His chronological Tables have been greatly esteemed.] I speak of the work entitled by him, Theatrum Historicum, sive Chronologiæ Systema novum. He published it anno 1609. Sethus Calvisius, who had so consummate a knowledge in History and Chronology, approved very much of this work, and look'd upon it as quite new, with regard to the invention and method, since things were found in it at one glance; Utpote in quibus exemplo antehac non viso omnia uno intuitu lectorum oculis subjiciantur. Wynckelman observes, that this approbation is found in the Letter which Sethus Calvisius wrote to Helvicus, the 7th of September 1609. He adds, the work, corrected and improved by the Author, is now reprinting. Jam secundum emendatius & ex ipsius αυτογράφῳ auctius editur. We must therefore say, that the first edition of this work is of 1609, and the second of 1618. John Steuber, Professor at Giessen, had the direction of the latter; and dedicated it to a Danish Nobleman (7), a patron of men of letters, and who had honoured Helvicus with his affection. Twenty years after a new edition was made of this work, under the direction of John Balthazar Schuppius, son-in-law to the Author, and Professor of Eloquence in Marpurg. He observes in his Preface, that he will not take any notice of the edition printed in England. This chronological Theatrum has been reprinted several times since that time. Vossius has not justly expressed the date of the first edition; and declared that to be the second which was not so. Anno CIↃ IↃCXII, says he (8), Christophorus Helvicus edidit Systema Chronologicum, æqualibus denariorum, quinquagenariorum, & centenariorum, intervallis. Id postea continuavit & recensuit Joannes Balthasar Scoppius. . . . . Emisit anno CIↃ IↃC XXXVIII. i. e. "Anno 1612, Christopher "Helvicus published a System of Chronology, with "equal intervals of tens, fifteens, and hundreds. This "work was afterwards continued and revised by John "Balthasar Scoppius, who published it in 1638." It cannot be objected to me in favour of Vossius, that it is very certain that Helvicus composed a book of Chronology in 1612, which was augmented by Scoppius in 1638; for this work is not that, of which Vossius speaks. It is intitled, Chronologia universalis ab origine mundi per quatuor summa imperia, quas Monarchias appellant, ad annum usque MDCXII deducta, cum præcipuis synchronismis virorum illustrium, eventorum, & politiarum cæterarum (9). Every thing is suited there to the prophecy of the 2d and 7th chapter of Daniel. This is a characteristic, that does not agree with the Theatrum Historicum. On the other side, that title and characteristic by which Vossius denotes the book he has spoke of, suits perfectly the Theatrum Historicum, sive Chronologiæ Systema novum, where one sees nothing but divisions of tens, of fifties, and of hundreds, which do not exceed or pass one another. Lastly, John Justus Winckelmannus, son to him who pronounced the funeral Oration, remarks very expressly (10), that Schuppius published, with the Continuations till the year 1639, two works of Helvicus his father-in-law: the one is, Theatrum Historicum, in folio; the other Chronologia universalis, in 4to. I forbear observing, that Helvicus did not himself publish the Chronology which he had continued till anno 1612, it being Steuber, his collegue, who published it anno 1618.

(7) Oliger Rosecrantz. Steuber's Dedication is dated the 18th of March 1618.

(8) De Scient. Mathemat. pag. 404.

(9) See M. Eusebium Bohemum, in Epitome Historiæ Ecclesiasticæ Novi Testamenti, pag. 72, & seq. apud Joh. Justum Wynckelmannum, in Cippo memoriali Christophoro Helvico restaurato, pag. 10.

(10) Wynckelm. ibid.

[E] Tho' not quite free from errors.] According to Tanaquil Faber, of Saumur, he is not exact, with respect to the periods in which the Poets, Philosophers, and other learned personages flourished. Primum hoc mihi . . . . credas velim, Helvicum non satis locupletis esse fidei in hac chronologiæ parte, quæ virorum scriptis illustrium ætatem signat: dein hoc quoque habet Helvicus, quod fere plerumque recentiores scriptores sequatur, eclogarios, bibliothecarios, &c. quale aliquid quoque in Calvisio improbarat Scaliger, quemadmodum ex Epistolis ejus apparet; quamvis Calvisii opus, ex quo totus est Helvicus, mirifice laudaret. Sed quod dico, allatis infra exemplis plenius constabit (11). i. e. "I must beg you, in "the first place, to take notice, that Helvicus is not "quite exact in that part of Chronology, which re- "lates to the several periods in which famous Authors "flourished. Farther, he generally follows modern "authors, as epitomizers, writers of Bibliotheques &c. "Scaliger censures much the same fault in Calvisius "also, as is plain from his Letters, tho' he highly "applauds that work of Calvisius, from which Hel- "vicus took his. But what I now advance, will be "more evident from the examples, which I shall de- "duce below." The examples he promises there, and gives afterwards, relate to errors which Helvicus has committed on Athenæus, Lucian, Justin, and Hermogenes.

(11) T. Faber. Epist. lib. 1. pag. 211.

[F] The books extant of his composing.] I have already threeſcore years, his works might have made ſeveral volumes in folio. Helvicus was irreproachable as to his manners; he loved to live in peace with all men, and had never quarrelled, either with his collegues or any other perſons: Concordiam colebat cum omnibus; nullo enim unquam tempore cum ullo ſive collega ſive extraneo in diſcordia vixit (f). This was a very rare circumſtance: Rara avis in terris. He was greatly reſpected by ſeveral German Princes, who ſent him the kindeſt and moſt polite letters. Anna Dorothea, Ducheſs of Saxony, did Helvicus the honour to write pretty often to him. His loſs was bewailed after a very peculiar manner. All the German Poets of the Augſburg Confeſſion compoſed Elegies, to bewail his immature death. A collection was made of his Poems, which were printed with his funeral Sermon, and ſome other pieces, under the title of Cippus Memorialis, by the care and direction of Wynckelman, collegue to Helvicus. The ſon of this Wynckelman reprinted the Cippus in 1650.

(f) Wynckelm. in Orat. fun. Helvici.

ready taken notice of ſome, and here follow others. He publiſhed chronological Diſſertations on the four Monarchies, on the ſeventy Weeks of Daniel, on Cyrus, on the other Kings of Perſia, &c. He refuted, in ſo ſolid a manner, the opinions of Angelocrator, that no reply could be made to him. Contra abſurdas Danielis Angleocratoris opinationes, ut eas inſignis Chronologus Sethus Calviſius in literis ad Helvicum datis indigitat, quem ita errorem convicit, ut ne contra quidem biſcere potuerit (12). And yet Angleocrator pretended to inſpiration; he declaring, at the beginning of his work, that he had wrote it Deo illuminante (13). This ſubſtracts very much from the glory of thoſe who have refuted him; for it certainly cannot be a matter of difficulty, to point out a thouſand chimæras in the writings of thoſe pretended inſpired. Though they even ſhould not be actually fanaticks, and ſhould have no other view but to ſtir up the paſſions; they would ſhew, by their boaſting of ſuch a thing againſt their conſciences, ſuch a diſtraction of mind, as would not ſuffer them to eſcape the meaneſt Critic. Helvicus compoſed treatiſes de Dialectis Græcis, de ratione Carmina Græca conſcribendi, de Paraphraſi Bibliorum Chaldaica, an Ars Poetica in Latin; Deſiderium Evæ, cum aliorum dictorum Biblicorum à depravationibus Judæorum, Calvinianorum, & Photinianorum erroribus annexa vindicatione; Synopſis Hiſtoriæ Univerſalis. He had put to preſs an Hebrew Poetick, and had wrote the Dedication to it, but afterwards ſuppreſſed it for certain reaſons. Quam tamen poſt certis de cauſis prælo ſubduxit (14). See Witte in his Diarium Biographicum; but ſee eſpecially Paul Freherus's Theatrum (15), and Spigelius's Templum Honoris, where a pretty ample, and I believe exact, catalogue is found of Helvicus's works. The greateſt part are in Latin, and the reſt in German. Correct, in Freherus, at the epitaph XXXVI (16) and IX; and put XXXV and IIX. It is very ſtrange that thoſe who corrected this voluminous work, did not perceive that a man who was born the 26th of December 1581 (17), and died the 10th of September 1617 (18), did not live to the age of thirty ſix years, nine months and a half. It is XXXV years and IIX months in the epitaph produced by Wynckelman (19), who has alſo committed this error, in the funeral Oration, viz. in ſaying that Helvicus died in the thirty ſeventh year of his age, anno ætatis ſuæ trigeſimo ſeptimo; he expreſſing all this in words at length, and not in figures. He writes, after the ſame manner, the day of Helvicus's birth, and that of his death; the former, according to him, is the 26th of December 1581; and the latter, the 10th of September 1617: how then could Helvicus be thirty ſeven years old? As he might ſo eaſily have avoided theſe errors, he conſequently is the more to be blamed for committing them.

(12) Wynckelm. in Orat. funebri.

(13) Apud Voſſium, de Scient. Mathem. p. 402.

(14) Wynckelm. in Orat. funebri.

(15) Pag. 394.

(16) Magir. in Eponymol. puts alſo XXXVI.

(17) This is what P. Freherus aſſerts, pag. 393.

(18) It is ſo dated in the epitaph apud Freherum, pag. eadem & 394.

(19) In Cippo memoriali, pag. m. 16.

HEMELAR (JOHN) a Canon of Antwerp, and born in the Hague (a), was a very learned man. He applied himſelf much more to the ſtudy of polite literature and the ſcience of medals [A], than to Theological diſputes. He was a Poet and Orator. He wrote, in Rome, a Panegyric on Clement VIII, with ſuch great ſucceſs, that he was offered the poſt of Librarian to the Vatican, or a very good benefice (b); but he contented

(a) Valer. Andreas, Bibliotb. Belgic. pag. 514.

(b) Joh. Fridericus Gronov. in Orat. fun. Jacobi Golii, pag. 7.

[A] He applied himſelf . . . . to the ſtudy of polite literature, and the ſcience of medals.] He wrote a book on that ſcience, and gave it to be printed, but on condition that his name ſhould not be put to it. Auctor eſt Expoſitionis Numiſmatum Imperatorum Romanorum à Jul. Cæſare ad Heraclium, quam operi ſuo Jac. Biæus adjecit, tacito, ut ſtipulatus erat, nomine, Antverp. apud Verduſ. 1614. 4 (1). This is what we find in Valerius Andreas: but what follows is more circumſtantial. In Numiſmata Regum & Impp. Romanorum à C. Julio Cæſare uſque ad Fl. Juſtinianum ex Caroli Arſchotani reguli & Nic. Rocoxii conſularis viri armariis deprompta, commentarios edidit bonæ frugis plenos, in quibus quicquid in auro, argento, ære, flato, percuſſo in urbe æterna, exquiſitum, elegans, hiſtoriæ temporum & genio principum conveniens, per notas, figuras, ambages breves & ſirpos verborum ſignificator, acutiſſime paucis & planiſſime explicat, penu quoddam nummariæ antiquitatis: & quo opere aliquis arrogantior ſuperis ſe miſceri poſſet arbitrari, in eo nomen ſuum diſſimulavit (2). i. e. "He publiſhed "extremely uſeful commentaries upon the medals of "the Roman Emperors, from the time of Julius Cæ-"ſar down to Juſtinian, taken from the cabinets of "Charles Arſchot and Nicholas Rocoxius. Wherein "he conciſely and accurately explains, by marks, "figures, &c. whatſoever is exquiſite, elegant, and "ſuitable or agreeable to the hiſtory of thoſe times, "and the genius of Monarchs; whether the medals "in queſtion be of gold, ſilver, or braſs; whether "caſt or ſtruck in that immortal city. It is a kind of "ſtorehouſe of medals; and nevertheleſs in this work, "from which any other perſon would have expected "prodigious reputation, our author has been ſo modeſt "as to conceal his name." The words which precede theſe in Gronovius's oration, are ſo beautiful, that I cannot forbear quoting them. Mater (Golii) omni ſexus laude prædita . . . . vel unica Johannis Hemelarii fratris imagine ſat nobilis eſt, viri & in veterum literarum tractatione cum primis exercitati, & poëtæ diſerti, & probitate ac tranquillitate vitæ fugaque honorum & negotiorum T. aliquem Pomponium Atticum referentis. Panegyricum dixit votis tertiorum quinquennalium Clementis VIII. tam illuſtri gratia exceptum, ut Vaticanæ bibliothecæ præfecturam, aut opimum ſacerdotium (Canonicatum vocant) optare juſſus ſit: ſacerdotio Antwerpiæ contentus fuit. i. e. "His mother "(Golius's) adorned with all the virtues of her ſex . . "ſufficiently illuſtrious by her reſemblance to her ex-"cellent brother John Hemelar, a man perfectly well "ſkilled in ancient literature; a fine Poet; and com-"parable to the Roman Atticus for his probity, tran-"quillity of life, and abſolute diſregard of honours "and public employments. He made a panegyric on "Pope Clement VIII, which met with ſo gracious a "reception, that it being left to his opinion, either to "accept of the office of Librarian to the Vatican, or "a rich benefice (called a canonry) he was ſatisfied "with only a benefice in Antwerp." Colomeſius (3) declares, that Hemelar's work on Medals is not eaſily met with, and that it has borne three impreſſions (4). The other works of this Canon of Antwerp are, Gratulatio in inaugurationem D. Chriſtiani Michaëlii, D. Michaëlis apud Antverpienſes Præmonſtratenſis Cœnobii Abbatis. Poëmata multa ſparſim edita. Oratio in funere Joannis Malderi V. Antverpienſis Epiſcopi habita.

(1) Valer. And. Bibliotb. Belg. ag. 514.

(2) Gronov. in Orat. funeb. Jac. Golii, pag. 7, 8.

(3) Melanges, Hiſt. pag. 78.

(4) The 2d is of ann. 1627 in 4to, and the 3d of ann. 1654, in folio; and both printed in Antwerp. See Father Labbe, Bibliotb. Nummar. p. 262.

tented himſelf with being a Canon in the Cathedral at Antwerp (c). Juſtus Lipſius, his Profeſſor, had a great eſteem and friendſhip for him, as appears from the letters which Lipſius wrote to him (d), and by the teſtimonies he gave him in 1600 (e). Hemelar was then preparing for his journey to Italy. He ſpent ſix years at Rome, in the palace of Cardinal Ceſi (f). He was Grotius's friend, and publiſhed verſes to congratulate him on his delivery from his confinement. Grotio arcam & angelum cuſtodem luculento carmine gratulatus eſt (g). He was brother to the mother of James Golius, that learned Profeſſor at Leyden, who has gained ſo vaſt a reputation, by his profound knowledge in the Oriental Languages. He doubtleſs would willingly have won over this nephew of his to the Romiſh Communion, as he won Peter Golius brother to James; but it would not have been poſſible for him to ſucceed in that deſign. James Golius was a zealous Proteſtant, who entertained all his life-time a great deal of rancour againſt his uncle, becauſe of his brother's changing his Religion. Unum in eo non ſine gemitu ſolebat accuſare noſter, quod fratrem Petrum revocaſſet ad religiones parentibus ejuratas (h). Moreri who in GOLIUS's article, declares that he ſpeaks elſewhere of our John Hemelar, forgot himſelf on that occaſion. I will not imitate him with regard to the promiſe I made in the ſame article, viz. to make ſome mention of PETER GOLIUS [B].

(c) Idem, ibid.

(d) Idem, pag. 8.

(e) It is filled with Elogiums. You will find it in Swertius, Ath. Belgic. pag. 436.

(f) Idem, Swert. ibid.

(g) Gronov. in Orat.

(h) Idem, ibid.

[B] I ſhall make ſome mention of Peter GOLIUS.] He had the ſame inclination as his brother, to travel into the Levant, and to cultivate the oriental tongues. He entered among the bare-footed Carmelites, and aſſumed the name of Celeſtin de St. Leduine. He lived ſeveral years on Mount Libanus, and was Profeſſor of the Oriental Tongues in Rome. He tranſlated Thomas à Kempis into Arabic; and undertook, at the age of ſeventy four years, a voyage on the coaſt of Malabar, there to labour at the converſion of the Infidels. Notwithſtanding the different way of life, as well as of religion, of the two brothers, they yet had a tender affection for each other. Peter told James by writing, that he was obliged to him for the kind treatment he had met with in Aſia. Frater Aſcetes è familia diſcalceatorum cum per veſtigia fratris in Oriente decurreret, ſcripſit ad noſtrum diu jam reducem omnia ſibi evenire præter expectationem: paraſſe ſe ad vincula, carceres, verbera, cruces, invenire amplexus, gratulationes, ſtudia, gratias potentium ob nomen Golium: eam memoriam, id deſiderium ſui reliquerat: ita gratiam abſenti referebant (5). i. e. "When his brother the Friar "was travelling into thoſe countries in the eaſt where "James had been; he informed him by letter, that "all things had happened to him beyond his expecta- "tions; that he had been prepared for chains, im- "priſonment, ſtripes, and croſſes, but inſtead of theſe "had met with embraces, civilities, and favours from "perſons of diſtinction, for the ſake of his name, "Golius: ſo grateful a remembrance had he left of "himſelf in thoſe countries, and ſo much affection "did they diſcover for him, though abſent." Thus we find that the name of Golius was in ſuch eſteem ſince the voyages of James, that a great deal of honour was done it in the perſon of Peter. By the way, we are not to ſuppoſe, that Hemelar had need of much genius and induſtry, in order to win over his nephew to the Romiſh communion, for he made a convert of him when a child; Peter Golius having been brought up at his houſe from eight years of age. I ſhall quote the words of Gronovius, on which the preſent aſſertion is founded; whereby the reader will ſee that this child was extremely forward for his years. Unum in eo (Hemelario) non ſine gemitu ſolebat accuſare noſter, quod fratrem Petrum revocaſſet ad religiones parentibus ejuratas; virum alioquin egregium, & fraterno ſecum animo, nec minus gnarum rerum & linguarum Orientis, diuque in partibus iiſdem verſatum, & Arabicæ linguæ Romæ Profeſſorem: qui quam præcoqui fuerit indole, teſtis eſt Oratio, quam Chriſtiano Michaëlio Abbati Præmonſtratenſi ab Hemelario ſcriptam gratulandi cauſa, puer octo annorum conſtanter, & quaſi feciſſet, memoriter pronuntiavit. i. e. "Our Golius uſed to charge He- "melar, not without ſighing, with one thing, viz. "with drawing his brother Peter over to the Romiſh "religion; a man, in all other reſpects, very extra- "ordinary, and for whom he ever retained a frater- "nal affection, who was no leſs verſed in the affairs "and languages of the eaſt, where he had reſided "for many years, and was profeſſor of the Arabic "language in Rome. That Peter Golius had an "early genius, is manifeſt from a gratulatory oration "written by Hemelar to Chriſtian Michaelius, Abbot "of the Præmonſtrants, which Golius, when but a "boy of eight years old, ſpoke with as much eaſe as "if it had been a compoſition of his own."

(5) Gronov. in Orat. funebri. Golii, pag. 19.

HEMMINGIUS (NICHOLAS) Profeſſor of Divinity in Copenhagen, was born anno 1513, in the iſle of Laland (a). He could not reap great benefit from the firſt part of his education, ſince it was directed by a Blackſmith, his father's brother. He nevertheleſs made ſome progreſs in literature, and afterwards went to Wittemberg, where during five years, he was one of Melanchthon's moſt aſſiduous auditors. As he was obliged to labour for his ſubſiſtence, either by teaching, or by writing for his pupils, it is more ſurpriſing that he ſhould attain ſo much knowledge. He returned to Denmark; and, by Melanchthon's recommendation, was received in a Gentleman's family, to teach his daughters. He afterwards was appointed Miniſter of the Church of the Holy Ghoſt in Copenhagen, and then Hebrew Profeſſor. He took his Doctor's degree of Divinity anno 1557, and immediately obtained a Profeſſorſhip in that Faculty at Copenhagen. He diſcharged the functions of it admirably well, till the year 1579, when he was declared Emeritus, and made Canon in the Church of Roſchild. He enjoyed this benefice very happily till his death, that is, till the 25th of May 1600. He was blind during the latter part of his life (b); a circumſtance that is no ways ſurpriſing, ſince he was always extremely ſtudious, and lived fourſcore and ſeven years. I am to obſerve, that Hemmingius was not only very far from being a very rigid Lutheran [A], but it is probable that had he been let alone, he would have ſhewn himſelf a zealous Calviniſt. His

(a) It belongs to the King of Denmark.

(b) Extracted from Paul. Freher. Theatr. Viror. Illuſtr. pag. 312, 313.

[A] Hemmingius . . . . was not a very rigid Lutheran.] I need but alledge the following proof of this. The formulary of Concord, which the divines of Saxony and their partizans endeavoured to eſtabliſh in every part of the Lutheran world, was rejected in Denmark, with the utmoſt indignation. King Frederick II forbid all his ſubjects to ſign it; and threatned to baniſh all thoſe who ſhould infringe this prohibition, or ſhould bring copies of it into his dominions (1). See the remark [E]. Now Hemmingius was the chief promoter of this affair (2), as Hoſpinian obſerves, who, on that article, has not been contradicted by Hutter.

(1) Extracted from Hoſpinian, de Origin. & progreſſu Libri Concordiæ, cap. 35. pag. 307.

(2) Promoventibus cauſam hanc D. Hemmingio, & aulico concionatore, &c. Idem, ibid.

His inclination for the opinions of Geneva was taken notice of, upon which he was obliged to explain, and even retract his tenets [B]. He wrote a Lutheran Confeſſion of Faith; and nevertheleſs a Divine has lately endeavoured to ſhew, that it agrees with that of the Reformed [C]. Hemmingius publiſhed a great number of books. Simon Goulart was ſo well pleaſed with his Tracts on Divinity, that he reprinted them at Geneva in 1586 [D].

I am

[B] He was obliged . . . . . to retract his tenets.] Hoſpinian (3) relates that Hemmingius, in his Syntagma Inſtitutionum Chriſtianarum, publiſhed anno 1574, explained himſelf, with regard to the real preſence, as a Calviniſt would have done. Maſius does not deny this; but adds that Hemmingius, being admoniſhed of his error, retracted it ſolemnly (4). "Non diſſimulandum eſſe ait (Maiſius) Calvini ſententiæ de S. Cœna aliquandiu indulſiſſe (Hemmingium) "ſed monitum à cæteris Theologis ad meliorem mentem reverſum depoſito errore palinodiam ceciniſſe. "Quam in rem ejus confeſſionem, ipſius manu ſcriptam (5), ſibique à Viro Illuſtri D. Engberg Conciliario Regis & Judice Provinciali Seelandiæ dono datam, ſubjungit." The author from whom I borrow theſe words, ſhews, from ſome paſſages of the Syntagma, that Hemmingius combatted the Principles of the Ubiquarians; and applauded Calvin for impeaching Servetus, and praiſed the magiſtrates of Geneva for putting Servetus to death. Cum his hæreſiarchis damnamus etiam impium nebulonem Michaelem Servetum, qui rabioſè contemptis ſanctorum Patrum Conciliis, Arii & aliorum fanaticorum hominum damnatas hæreſes revocare conatus eſt, quem juſtò accuſatum à D. Johanne Calvino, meritò Genevates affecere ſupplicio (6). i. e. "We alſo condemn, with theſe hereſiarchs, that impious wretch Michael Servetus, who madly deſpiſing "the Councils of the holy Fathers, endeavoured to revive the Hereſies already condemned, of Arius "and other Fanatics; whom John Calvin juſtly impeaching, was juſtly put to death by the Magiſtrates "of Geneva."

(3) Idem, Hiſt. Sacrament. Part. 2. pag. 595.

(4) Samuel Andreas, in Epiſt. ad Antonium Horneck qua Daniæ Orthodoxiæ fidelis & pacificæ Autori reſpondetur, pag. 62. edit. Marpurg. 1690.

(5) Ap. 6, 1576.

(6) Hemmingius, in Syntagm. Inſtitutionum Chriſtianarum, Loco de Deo, num. 38. apud Samuelem Andr. ubi ſupra, pag. 63.

[C] A Divine has lately endeavoured to ſhew, that Hemmingius's Confeſſion agrees with that of the Reformed.] Maſius, Profeſſor of Divinity at Copenhagen, has communicated to the public the confeſſion which was required from Hemmingius. It declares, that he firmly believes, that Chriſt Jeſus, entire God and Man, is ſubſtantially preſent in the Lord's Supper, in all parts where it is ſolemnized according to its inſtitution; and that Chriſt Jeſus brings and delivers to all communicants, as well unworthy as worthy, his real body, and the true blood which he ſhed for us, for the remiſſion of ſins; and that this body and this blood are truly and really taken with the bread and wine by the communicants; ſo that it is a true meat and a true drink, with which man is fed, refreſhed, and vivified to life eternal. Se ſtatuere & firmiter credere totum Chriſtum Deum & hominem ſubſtantialiter adeſſe præſentem in Cœna ſua, ubicunque celebratur juxta ipſius ordinationem, ipſumque adferre & exhibere omnibus communicantibus dignis & indignis ſuum verum corpus & verum ſanguinem, quem effudit pro nobis in remiſſionem peccatorum, & hoc corpus & hunc ſanguinem vere & realiter cum pane & vino à communicantibus ſumi, ita ut verus ſit cibus & potus, quo homo paſcitur, reficitur & vivificatur ad vitam æternam (7). By the way, Hemmingius acknowleges, that his confeſſion agrees with that of Auſburg, with Luther's ſhort Catechiſm, and with the ſyſtem of the doctrine of the Saxon Churches; and he declares, that he retracts all he has ſaid in his Syntagma, which may have offended the churches, and which is conformable to the opinion of Calvin with regard to the laſt ſupper, or does not agree with the preſent confeſſion. Cum jam aliter in Syntagmate ſuo ſcripſerit juxta ſententiam Calvini de re ſacramentaria quo Eccleſiæ offenſæ ſint, & quod cum hac ſua præſenti Confeſſione pugnet, id quicquid ſit in univerſum revocare, & hoc ſuo ſcripto revocatum velle (8). He begs pardon of the King and of all thoſe whom his Syntagma had offended (9). It is manifeſt that there is Lutheraniſm in his confeſſion; and we may be perſuaded that thoſe Doctors, who obliged Hemmingius to retract, dictated to him ſuch expreſſions as they imagined would be beſt adapted to take off all equivocation; and to denote, in the moſt expreſs and exact manner, his orthodoxy and the abjuration of his error. Nevertheleſs, the reader would never imagine what efforts the Divine, quoted by me, made, in order to prove that Hemmingius did not make a recantation. The parentheſes and Nota Benes, with which he divides or interrupts the words of the confeſſion, in order to elude Maſius's conſequences and pretenſions, appear, to him, ſo ſolid, that he is not afraid to aſſert, that Hemmingius retracted but very few things; and that good Calviniſts ought, agreeably to the dictates of their conſciences, to ſign this confeſſion explained and underſtood according to its true ſenſe. Videt itaque rurſum vir clariſſimus, quantillum id ſit quod hac confeſſione ſua Hemmingius revocavit, cui & nos dummodo dextre intelligantur & recte explicentur poſſumus adſtipulari; & quam procul ille adhuc abfuerit tum cum collegis à fide γνησίως Lutherana (10). From hence let us conclude, that it is difficult to draw up ſuch a formulary, as may take away all occaſion for diſputation. A perſon may imagine that he has anticipated or prevented every thing that has the air of equivocation; but he afterwards ſhall find that an adverſary invents a thouſand evaſions; and would perſuade him that his thoughts and ideas were very different from what he knew them to be. In certain caſes this is attempting, what Pericles attempted, and in which he ſucceeded. Whenever he received a fall in wreſtling, he would perſuade the ſpectators that he did not fall (11). The reader will perhaps here call to mind a malicious obſervation he may have read in the Hiſtory of the Variations (12). "Luther-"rans aſſert, in their Book de Concordia, that Luther "was prompted to employ that expreſſion (13) by the "ſubtilties of the Sacramentarians, who found means "to adapt to their preſent moral preſence, what Luther "ſaid ſtrongeſt and cleareſt, in favour of the real and "ſubſtantial preſence; whereby, by the way, we "once again ſee, that we are not to wonder if the de-"fenders of the figurative ſenſe find means to draw "over the fathers to their ſide; ſince Luther himſelf, "living and ſpeaking, he who knew their ſubtilties, "and who attempted to combat them, could ſcarce "find out any terms but they would bring them to "their ſenſe by the manner in which they interpreted "them; tired out with their ſubtleties, he wanted to "ſearch out ſome expreſſion, which it would be im-"poſſible for them to change, and he drew up the "article of Smalcalde in the form we have ſeen." The Biſhop of Meaux might have found a ſtrong example of all this in the Church of Rome. The Bull of Innocent X againſt the tenets of Janſenius, did not hinder the Janſeniſts from finding means to diſpute. They intrenched themſelves within a great number of ſubtilties, and a thouſand diſtinctions. To force them thence, Alexander VII was made to ſpeak in a clearer manner; and every thing was inſerted in this Bull, that appeared adapted to deſtroy the diſtinctions and ſubterfuges of Port-Royal. But all this was to no purpoſe; for the Janſeniſts continued to aſſert, that the doctrine of Janſenius had not been condemned: Arnauld diſplayed an hundred obſervations, borrowed from the moſt ſubtle Logic (14). The Pope would have been greatly aſtoniſhed at the peruſal of ſuch a writing; he would have ſeen the vanity of his precautions; have perceived, that it would have been proved to him, that he did not mean what he knew very well he really meant. I find, he might have ſaid, that you know my own thoughts better than I myſelf do. What a fine thing was the Connotatum of Cardinal Laurea (15)! And when we reflect on the endleſs Diſtinctions that muſt be made, in order to diſtinguiſh clearly, between what the Bulls do, and do not ordain (16); we plainly perceive that the infallibility of St. Peter's Chair is of no uſe, unleſs we ſuppoſe, either that every particular man is thoroughly acquainted with the ſubtleſt rules of Logic, or that every Pariſh Prieſt is infallible.

(7) See Samuel Andreas, pag. 65, 66.

(8) Apud Sam. Andream. ibid. pag. 67.

(9) Ibid.

(10) Sam. And. Epiſt. ad Anton. Horneck, pag. 67.

(11) See the article PERICLES remark [D], before the firſt break.

(12) Mr. de Meaux, Hiſt. des Variations, liv. 4. num. 37. pag. m. 181.

(13) Viz. that the bread was the true body.

(14) See the Writings which have been publiſhed, pag. 240, & ſeq. of tom. 4. of Tradition de l'Egliſe Romaine ſur la Grace, printed at Liege, 1696.

(15) See tom. 4. of Tradition de l'Egliſe Romaine ſur la Grace, pag. 131, & ſeq.

(16) See what is cited of Melchior Canus, in the ſame tom. 4. of Tradition, pag. 120, & ſeq.

[D] Simon Goulart was ſo well pleaſed with his Tracts on Diviniiy, that he reprinted them at Geneva in 1586.] See the epiſtle dedicatory to the edition he procured

I am to add, that when he was ſeventy years old, he wrote a book intitled, Immanuel, which ſeems calculated chiefly to oppoſe James Andreas, the grand fautor of Ubiquitiſm (c). This work, which is greatly applauded (d), was not printed till after the author's death. It was publiſhed at Frankfort anno 1615 (e), with a preface, which will furniſh us with a ſupplement, on what we ſaid concerning the vigour with which the book of Concord was rejected by the King of Denmark [E].

(c) Lud. Gerard. à Reneſſe, Not. in Apoleg. Belg. Eccleſ. pag. 114.

(d) Idem, ibid.

(e) Idem, ibid. pag. 111.

procured of them. By the way, he informs the readers, that he has illuſtrated certain things which Hermingius had not ſufficiently explained, and which offended many perſons.

[E] Here follows .... a ſupplement, on what we ſaid (17) concerning the vigour with which the ..... Liber Concordiæ was rejected by the King of Denmark.] An Engliſhman (18), who drew up the preface to this poſthumous work of Hemmingius, informs us (19), that Queen Elizabeth uſed her utmoſt endeavours, in order to make the King of Denmark reject it. He relates a great many particulars concerning the indignation with which this Prince was fired; and, among others, the following, viz. that the Liber Concordiæ, which had been ſent to him, covered with ſilk and adorned with jewels, was nevertheleſs thrown into the fire; imo, quod memorabile imprimis eſt, à pientiſſimo Danorum Rege Frederico 2. ab aula Electorali Saxoniâ, ut ut miſſus, holoſerice obductus, auro, gemmiſque pretioſis affabre ornatus magno & pio Zelo Vulcano traditus eſt, annexâ graviſſimâ pœnâ & inſpectione ejus rei univerſi Regni Epiſcopis demandata ſub confiſcatione, in regnum ne importaretur, ibidemve diſtraheretur, neve ſub exilio certiſſimo ab ullo poſſideretur, eo quod in illo nova, & in iſtis regionibus antè inaudita, ac (prout habet ipſum diploma Regium in librum Concordiæ vibratum, à doctis viris mihi non ſemel in Dania explicatum) inuſitata comprehenderentur dogmata: recepta verò ibi ex adverſo ſunt cum Lutheri, Philippi quoque ſcripta, inter hæc cum primis CORPUS DOCTRINÆ, tribunitiæque illæ, ac declamatoriæ conciones S. Cathedris pulſæ (20). i. e. "Nay, the moſt remarkable circumſtance is, that it was caſt into the "flames, with a holy zeal, by that moſt pious Monarch, Frederic II King of Denmark, notwithſtanding that it had been ſent him from the Elector of "Saxony's court; it being covered entirely with ſilk, "and very richly and ſkilfully adorned with gold and "precious ſtones. He alſo prohibited, under a very "ſevere penalty, the importing or diſtributing it in "his dominions; and the inſpection of that affair was "committed to all the Biſhops of the Kingdom, upon "the penalty of confiſcation; and that no perſon ſhould "pretend to keep it by them, upon pain of certain "baniſhment: becauſe it contained many new and "ſtrange doctrines, and ſuch as were unheard of in "thoſe parts (theſe are the expreſs words of the royal "edict, enacted againſt the book of Concord, as frequently explained to me by a learned man in Denmark.) On the contrary, the books of Luther and "Philip Melanchthon are received here, and particularly the CORPUS DOCTRINÆ; whilſt moſt ſeditious and declamatory ſermons are drove from the "pulpit." He obſerves that Hutterus has greatly condemned this conduct of his Daniſh Majeſty: Heroicum iſtud Regis Frederici factum vocat (Hutterus in libro quem appellat CONCORDIA CONCORS) durum nimis & Rhadamantheum plane, Regemque & quidem Chriſtianum haud decens, ſed cum enormi, tantoque Rege indignâ prorſus animi impotentiâ, & nimiâ affectuum vehementiâ conjunctum, quod tanti Regis dignitatem, prudentiam, & exiſtimationes haud leviter, omnibus, qui ſaltem aliquid judicare poſſunt, ſuſpectas reddit. i. e. "Hutterus, "in the book entitled by him CONCORDIA CONCORS, "calls this heroic action of King Frederic, too ſevere, "and altogether Rhadamanthean; no ways becoming a Monarch and a Chriſtian; that it was attended with ſuch a weakneſs and heat of paſſion, as "was quite unworthy ſo great a Prince: and that it "gives perſons of any judgment reaſon to call in queſtion his dignity, prudence, and reputation." But that it has been exceedingly applauded by Chriſtopher Knobius, in the Funeral Oration of this Monarch. I ſhall cite the paſſage. It will ſhew the ardent zeal of this Prince, who uſed often to ſay, that this diſpute of the Lutherans had given riſe to more evils, than the Turks had occaſioned by the plunder of the provinces in which it had taken birth. Chriſtophorus Knobius Aulicus illius (Regis) Concionator in Concione funebri in exequiis Regiis habita anno 1588. 5 Junii ſic de illo loquitur: Sollicitus erat ne ſui quoque Doctores in abyſſum hujus periculoſæ & nocentiſſimæ diſputationis abriperentur, ideoque noluit iſti negocio immiſceri: etiam querebatur, damnum quod Chriſtiana Eccleſia ex hac diſputatione ſentiebat, non poſſe tali Concordiæ Bergenſis formula ſanari: & ſciunt complures honeſtiſſimi viri, quanto cum affectu id factum doleret, quinimo illum ſæpius dixiſſe, ſi Turca illas regiones, in quibus hæc certamina nata ſunt, & adoleverunt, depopulatus fuiſſet, non tantum damni potuiſſe inferri, quantum hæc diſputatio intulit, nec finem poſſe videri hujus certaminis (21). Q. Elizabeth employed the ſame compariſon in her letter to that Prince (22), Your country, ſays ſhe, has ſuffered more havock by this pretended concord, than if the Turks had laid all waſte with fire and ſword. The author (23) who relates this particular, obſerves that the Miniſters of Holland prevailed with this Queen, to uſe her endeavours to engage Frederic II, King of Denmark, to reject the Liber Concordiæ. It appears by the preface to Hemmingius's work, that the ſucceſſor to this King of Denmark continued to reject the book in queſtion, for which the author of the preface applauds him greatly. Robinſonus pag. 10. ejuſdem ad Lectorem præfationis ſic concludit. Deus qui nunquam deeſt Eccleſiæ ſuæ, irrequietorum talium hominum conatus, ut olim per pios Magiſtratus, in Daniâ præſertim, mirè impedivit; ita etiam nunc per optimi patris optimum filium, re & nomine verè Chriſtianum, paternis veſtigiis ſeverè inſiſtentem, pietate, & juſtitiâ regna ſua firmantem, Pontificiorum, Ubiquitariorum, & aliorum ſchiſmaticorum ac turbulentorum hominum ſtudia maturè, & prudenter in ipſâ herbâ reprimentem, benignè retardavit (24). i. e. "Robinſon, in page 10 of his preface, concludes as "follows. As God, who never abandons his church, "checked, in a wonderful manner, the attempts of "thoſe reſtleſs ſpirits, as formerly, by pious magiſtrates, particularly in Denmark; ſo likewiſe has "he, in our days, graciouſly curbed them, by the "excellent ſon of a moſt excellent father; a Chriſtian "not leſs in reality than in name; a Prince who "treads exactly in his father's ſteps; eſtabliſhing his "Kingdom in piety and juſtice, and wiſely reſtraining, in their infancy, the deſigns of Papiſts, Ubiquitarians, and other ſchiſmatical and factious perſons."

I will be ſo frank as to own here, that I do not draw from the fountain-head, and that I have no other original but the notes of Lewis Gerard à Reneſſe, on a letter which he cauſed to be reprinted at Breda in 1651 (25); and which had been firſt publiſhed, anno 1579, in Latin, in Flemiſh, and in German. It is entitled Apologetica Reformatarum in Belgio Eccleſiarum Epiſtola, ad, & contra Auctores Libri Bergenſis, dicti, Concordiæ. Gerard à Reneſſe does not know the author of it; but I know that it has been aſcribed to Peter de Villiers (26), a French Miniſter, and preacher to the Prince of Orange. Anno 1579, Petrus Villerius Gallus concionator aulicus Principis Auriaci, Polyprag monicus, ſub miniſtrorum Belgicorum nomine Epiſtolam criminatoriam contra Autores libri Concordiæ publicavit (27). i. e. "In the year 1579, Peter Villiers, a native of "France, Chaplain to the Prince of Orange, and a "very pragmatic man, publiſhed an epiſtle, in the "reproachful ſtrain, under the names of the Dutch "Miniſters, againſt the authors of the book of Con"cord."

(17) In the remark [A].

(18) He is called, at firſt, Robert Alenſon, in the Notes which I ſhall cite below; but he afterwards is called always Robinſon.

(19) Præfatio Libri Hemmingii, cui titulus Immanuel, apud Ludovicum Gerardum à Reneſſe, Not. in Apologeticam Reformatarum in Belgio Eccleſiarum Epiſtolam, ad, & contra Auctores Libri Bergenſis, dicti, Concordiæ, pag. 111.

(20) Præfat. eadem, ex L. G. à Reneſſe, pag. 111.

(21) Lud. Gerardus à Reneſſe, Not. in Epiſt. Apoleg Eccleſ. Reform. in Belgio, pag. 113.

(22) Scribens ad Auguſtum Electorem ſic inter alia, ſi Turca totam tuam ditionem, ferro flammaque vaſtaſſet, tanta non dediſſet damna quanta ex concordiæ diſcordiis negocio accepit. Idem, ibid. pag. 114. ex Joh. Lampadii Epiſt. Dedic. Cenſuræ Ubiquitatis.

(23) Joh. Lampad. ibid.

(24) Lud. Gerard. à Reneſſe, ibid.

(25) He was a Miniſter, and Profeſſor of Divinity.

(26) See in the remark [S] of the article CHARLES V, the paſſage of Grotius's Annals, in which the Apology of the Prince of Orange is aſcribed to this Peter de Villiers.

(27) Schyffelberg, lib. 2. Theol. Calvinianæ, cap. 7. apud Schulting. Biblioth. Cathol. tom. 1. pag. 23.

HENAULT (N.), a French Poet of the ſeventeenth Century, "author of the Son"net

" net on Mademoiſelle de Guerchi [A] ; and Madam des Houliere's maſter, had a con-
" ſiderable reputation at Paris during his life-time, and it ſtill ſubſiſts, though he has
(a) i. e. in 1682. " been dead fourteen years (a). Indeed, as his merit was not printed [B], to ſpeak
" after Menage, his reputation could not be ſpread like that of many others, who never " enjoyed, in Paris, ſo great a reputation as Henault did. He was a man of genius " and erudition ; loving to refine on pleaſures, and to debauch with art and delicacy.
" But he was moſt ſtrangely wrong-headed in one reſpect, he profeſſing Atheiſm,
" and priding himſelf in his opinion with a moſt deteſtable affectation and fury. He " had drawn up three different ſyſtems with regard to the mortality of the ſoul [C], and
" went

[A] Author of the ſonnet on Mademoiſelle de Guerchi.] Before I publiſhed, in the remark [G] of the article SPINOZA, the extract of the letter which contains theſe particulars, I had already obſerved (1), that he was taught that the ſonnet de l'Averton (of the immature child) had been compoſed by Henault, and wrote on occaſion of Mademoiſelle de Guerchi. But the inſtant my Dictionary had reached London, a learned Engliſh Gentleman did me the honour to inform me by letter, I. That he knew from the firſt hand, that this ſonnet had been publiſhed two or three years before Mademoiſelle de Guerchi's death. II. That perſons who pretend to be perfectly well acquainted with this affair, declared that it was wrote by Subligni, author of the Falſe Clelia. I ſhewed this to the learned Gentleman, who had favoured me with the letter, an extract whereof I inſerted in the article of Spinoza. He anſwered, " that Mr. Lucas had declared to him, " that the ſonnet on the immature birth, was wrote " twenty years before the accident which befell Made- " moiſelle de Guerchi ; but that all the other Poets " whom he had conſulted, declared, that it was made " on a miſcarriage of that beautiful Lady, but diffe- " rent from that which coſt her life. Twenty of " my friends, added he, who have lived with Henault, " aſſured me, that this ſonnet was certainly wrote by " him, and that he owned himſelf to be the author " of it. Subligni (*) was but a ſchool-boy when that " piece appeared ; his widow and daughter confirmed " to me, that it was not written by him." We may lay it down as an undoubted fact, viz. that the ſonnet in queſtion was compoſed by our Henault ; for we ſhall find below, that it was inſerted in the collection of that Poet's works : but we have ſtrong reaſon to doubt, whether it was made one Mademoiſelle de Guerchi. It is looked upon, though not written according to the rules (2), to be a maſter-piece, and though there is a barbariſm in it (3).

(1) In the article PATIN, pag. 744. Letter (d). I have ſuppreſſed that in this 2d edition.

(*) He was eſteemed in the Law-Courts. He wrote ſome Plays, and the Critique of Andromaque.

(2) See Amitiez Amours & Amourettes de Mr. le Puys, liv. 3. Letter 4.

[B] His merit was not printed.] This has been found a falſe aſſertion : " Mr. d'Henault himſelf, in " his life-time, printed a ſmall collection of his works " at Paris, which was ſold by Barbin, anno 1670, " in 12mo, and intitled, Oeuvres diverſes . . . par le " Sieur D. H. (Miſcellanies . . . by Mr. D. H.) It " is dedicated to Monſieur Doort without any other " title. It contains proſe and verſe, with Letters in " proſe and verſe a Sapho, which very probably was " Madam des Houlieres. The Sonnet on the imma- " ture birth (l'Averton) is inſerted in it. . . . I muſt " not omit taking notice of the firſt piece in this " work, intitled, De la Conſolation, à Olympe. It " will furniſh me with two critical Obſervati- " ons ; firſt, that the compilers of St. Evremont's " works, miſled perhaps by ſome perſon, or by " a ſuppoſed conformity in the ſtyle ; have in- " ſerted that whole letter, which is a very long " one, among the works of St. Evremont ; and ma- " ny people who look upon themſelves as judges, " ſuppoſed that he was really author of this piece. " This is an example you may add to thoſe you " have collected, concerning the errors, into which " critics are daily led by this conformity of ſtyle. " The ſecond obſervation falls directly on a new Cen- " ſor . . . who has attempted a judgment on Mr. de " St. Evremont's works (†) . . . This writer has, " throughout, fallen into the ſnare laid by the com- " pilers beforementioned. He attacks the conſolatory " letter à Olympe, with regard to the ſtyle, the " thoughts, and ſentiments, and employs a quarter " of his book in this fine ſort of criticiſm." This I have found in a collection of remarks, with which a young Counſellor in the Parliament of Paris was pleaſed to favour me, anno 1698 ; remarks that prove the author of them is a man of incomparable ſenſe, and is thoroughly acquainted with a vaſt number of curious particulars which are perfectly well ſuited to this Dictionary (4) (a).

(3) See Father Bouhours, Maniere de bien penſer, pag. 373. Dutch edit.

(†) Diſſertation ſur les Oeuvrages de St. Evremont, 1698, in 12mo, Paris, by the Sieur Dumonti This is a mask. It is aſcribed to Mr. Cotolendi, author of the Arlequiniana ; ſome imagine that Mr. Erard, a famous Counſellor, had a conſiderable ſhare in it.

(4) See the end of the remark [Q] of the article of the third Duke of GUISE.

§ (a) Mr. Bayle does not mention in this remark the following verſes, which are inſerted in his Oeuvres diverſes &c.

E Senecæ Thieſte, Actus II. Chorus.

Illi mors gravis incubat,
Qui notus nimis omnibus,
Ignotus moritur ſibi.

Imitation of the Latin lines above.

Heureux eſt l'inconnu, qui s'eſt bien sû connoître ;
Il ne voit pas de mal à mourir plus qu'à naître ;
Il s'en va comme il eſt venu :
Mais helas ! que la Mort fait une horreur extrême
A qui meurt de tous trop connu,
Et trop peu connu de ſoy-même !

REM. CRIT.

The ſenſe is,

" Happy is the obſcure man, who has well known " himſelf. To him dying appears no more fatal than " the being born : He leaves the world in the ſame " manner as he came into it. But alas ! how dread- " ful muſt death appear to that man, who dies too " much known to the world, and too little to " himſelf !"

[C] He had drawn up three different ſyſtems with regard to the mortality of the ſoul.] I ſhall give another paſſage from the Collection of Remarks juſt mentioned. " Henault ſays in his dedication, You " know that I am a man wholly internal ; that I do " not place any felicity in the opinion of others ; and that " my maxims and errors differ pretty much from thoſe " of the reſt of the world. He here begins to diſcover " what he was. Several of his verſes are imitations " of Seneca's Chorus's, and among others of Act II " of the Troades, where the mortality of the ſoul is " laid down as a principle ; this was a ſubject that hit " his taſte.

" Comme ſe perd en un moment
" Cette portion d'air dans les corps enfermée,
" Que le plus actif element
" Developpe & pouſſe en fumée ;
" Comme au ſouffle des aquilons
" On voit bien-tôt evanoüie
" Une groſſe nuée ou de grêle ou de pluie,
" Qui d'un deluge afreux menace les valons ;
" Ainſi s' épand cette ame vaine
" Qui meut tous les reſſorts de la machine humaine.
" Tout meurt en nous quand nous mourons ;
" La mort ne laiſſe rien, & n'eſt rien elle-même,
" Du peu de tems que nous durons
" Ce n'eſt que le moment extrême, &c.

The ſenſe is,

" As is loſt, in an inſtant, that portion of air, pent " up in bodies, which the moſt active element cauſes " to evaporate in ſmoak ; as, by the blaſt of furious " winds, we ſee ſoon diſperſed a thick cloud of hail " or rain, which threatned the vallies with a dreadful " deluge : In like manner that vain ſoul, which " moves the ſeveral ſprings of the human machine is " evaporated * * * Death does not leave any thing, " and is nothing itſelf. Of the ſhort ſpace that we " live, it is but the laſt moment &c."

" I am ſurprized that this ſhould be printed with the

" went to Holland, purpoſely to viſit Spinoſa, who nevertheleſs did not much eſteem " his erudition. But things wore a quite different face at his death; he being a convert, " and was then for carrying matters to the other extreme; for his Confeſſor was forced " to prevent his receiving the Viaticum or Sacrament with a halter about his neck, in " the middle of his bed-chamber. D'Henault was not well deſcended, his father being " a baker; and he himſelf had been at firſt Receiver of the Taxes at Forès, but was " not ſucceſsful in that employment. He inſtructed Madam des Houlieres in all he " knew, or imagined to know; and it is pretended that this is evident from the works " of that Lady [D]." Here follows the extract of a letter which a learned man did me the honour to write to me, the 27th of April 1696. He wrote me another letter dated the 19th of July 1697, by which he informed me, that d'Henault drew up a caſe or plea for Mr. de Clodoré, Governor of Martinico, againſt Mr. de la Barre, Governor of the American Iſlands; and a manifeſto of Mr. de Gadagne, with regard to the affair of Gigeri. An elegy (b) and an eclogue (c) of this author are publiſhed in the Furetieriana. To this elegy this encomium is prefixed, Monſieur d'Henault was univerſally eſteemed ... he was a man of the higheſt civility, and of an amorous complexion. He wrote a Sonnet, which gave Mr. Colbert an opportunity to perform a fine action [E]. He was married, and (b) Pag. 77. of the Dutch edit.

(c) Pag. 238.

" King's privilege. Henault's heart was of a tender " caſt, he uſing to ſay to his miſtreſs;

" Sappho fit des vers comme vous,
" Faites l'amour comme elle?

The ſenſe is,

" Sappho, like you, was a Poeteſs: Do you make love " as ſhe did?"

" He will have her renounce all thoughts of fame and " glory.

" Pour moi je ne ſuis point le dupe de la gloire;
" Je vous quitte ma place au Temple de memoire,
" Et je ne conçoi point que la loi du trepas
" Doive épargner mon nom & ne m'épargner pas.
" Je me mets au deſſus de cette erreur commune,
" On meurt, & ſans reſſource & ſans reſerve aucune.
" S'il eſt apres ma mort quelque reſte de moi,
" Ce reſte un peu plus tard ſuivra la méme loi,
" Fera place à ſon tour à de nouvelles choſes,
" Et ſe replongera dans le ſein de ſes cauſes.

(†) Mais les gens de delà les Monts Aurent bientôt pleuré cet homme, Car il deffend les Jannetons, Choſe très-neceſſaire à Rome. i. e. " But " the Italians " will ſoon have " bewailed that " man; for he " will not ſuffer " any whores, " which are ſo " very neceſſary " in Rome."
La Fontaine, Oeuv. Poſth. ſpeaking of Innocent XI.

Quand l'objet en mon cœur a place, Et qu'à mes yeux il eſt joli, Dono nomen quod libet illi (β).
Idem, ibid.

(2) This Latin ought to form a verſe of the ſame meaſure with the two preceding, which conſiſt but of ſix ſyllables. Read therefore Do nomen in La Fontaine's Oeuvres poſthumes. REM. CRIT.

" With regard to my ſelf, I am not the dupe of glory; " I reſign to you my ſeat in the Temple of Fame; " and I cannot conceive that the law of death ſhould " exempt my name and not ſpare me. I ſoar above " that vulgar error  If, after my death, any part " of me ſhould ſurvive, that part will, not long after, " follow the ſame law; will make way, in its turn, " for new things, and plunge again into the abyſs of " its cauſes.

" This is not a tranſlation, but an original; and in " this manner Henault ſcattered the ſeeds of his er- " rors up and down his works. In the two pieces " inſerted in the Furetieriana, are found the ſame " tenets, which he endeavoured to introduce on all " occaſions. His Compoſitions are filled, not only " with impious ideas, but likewiſe with images of " an obſcene kind. Some are found in a piece inti- " tled, Le Bail d'un cœur à Cloris, inſerted in this " collection; and this Cloris might certainly be one " of the Jeannetons mentioned by la Fontaine (†). " Theſe verſes are more obſcene than all the tales, " and deſerve more to be condemned by the civil " Magiſtrate."

[D] It is pretended that this is evident from the works of that Lady.] The reader may have ſeen, in pag. 1088, vol. 2. of the firſt edition of this Dictionary, that the Gentleman to whom the words of this text belong, adds immediately, I have ſeen people among other verſes, remark the following in the Idyllium of the Rivulet (*).

(*) It is in page 164 of tom. 1. of Poeſies de Madame des Houlieres It is inſerted alſo in the Courier Galant for May 1693, pag. 532.

" Courez, ruiſſeau, courez, fuyez & reportez
" Vos ondes dans le ſein des mers dont vous ſortez:
" Tandis que pour remplir la dure deſtinée
" Où nous ſommes aſſujettis
" Nous irons reporter la vie infortunée
" Dans le ſein du neans d'où nous ſommes ſortis."

The ſenſe is,

" Glide on, ſtream, fly, and convey back your wa- " ters into the boſom of the ſea whence you ariſe: " whilſt, to complete the ſevere fate to which we " are ſubjected, we ſhall go and carry back ill-fated " life, into the abyſs of Non-entity whence we ſprung."

It is certain that a perſon who ſhould expreſs himſelf after this manner dogmatically, would deny the immortality of the ſoul; but let us, for the honour of Madam des Houlieres, conclude that ſhe only followed ſome poetical ideas whence no conſequence is to be drawn. Thus, in imitation of the antient Poets, ſhe has ſaid in another place (5), that our ſouls, after death, wander on the ſhores of hell. But this, had Henault inſtilled his impious tenets into her, would not have been her belief. We muſt not form a judgment of her from her poetical phraſes; not but that a Poet may conceal the moſt licentious ideas, by means of the privileges of verſification. The Counſellor already mentioned has made a note on that paſſage. " You quoted, ſays he to me in his letter, ſome verſes " of Madame des Houlieres, which are ſuſpected of " being too licentious; but you have been made to " omit others (‡), that are equally licentious, and " which are publiſhed in her volume of Poems. But " we muſt be impartial and ſpeak the truth: there " are a great number of other moral, and even Chri- " ſtian and holy pieces, ſcattered up and down her " works, which correct this ſingle one. However " endeavours were uſed to make her paſs for a Liber- " tine; ſhe complaining of this in her epiſtle to " Father de la Chaiſe on falſe devotees or hypocrites. " Madam des Houlieres was a woman of wonderful " fine genius, the honour of her ſex, and the ſhame " of ours.

(5) See the article PLOTINUS, remark [A].

(‡) Nous irons reporter la vie infortunée, QUE LE HAZARD NOUS A DONNEE, Dans le ſein du neant d'où nous ſommes ſortis.

I am to obſerve that no one could aſſert that Madam des Houlieres, upon pretence of her advancing that we ſprung from Nothing, believed the creation; for Henault ſhews pretty evidently (6), that by the word neant (nothing or non entity) he does not mean the privation of exiſtence, but a privation (ſimply) of life, in which ſenſe he did not admit of the creation.

(6) See the Sonnet de l'Avorton.

[E] He wrote a Sonnet, which gave Mr. Colbert an opportunity of doing a fine action.] The collection of remarks above cited, furniſhes me with another good Commentary. " To return to d'Henault, it is of him " that Boileau ſpeaks in two places in Satyr 9, Je le declare donc Haynault (*) eſt un Virgile (α).

(*) He ſpelt his name in that manner purpoſely to diſguiſe him.

" I here declare that Haynault is a Virgil."

" But Mr.... (†) himſelf told me, that he thought " him a pretty good Poet; and that his beſt piece, " not with reſpect to the ſubject, but the manner in " which he had treated it, was a Sonnet levelled at " Mr. Colbert, and which began thus, (†) Boileau is here underſtood.

" Miniſtre avare & laſcie, eſclave malheureux.

" Baſe, griping Miniſter, deteſted ſlave."

" Mr. Colbert did a very noble action on this occa- " ſion. Being told of this Sonnet which made a vaſt " noiſe at that time, he aſked whether there were no " ſatyrical and left a daughter who is Boarder in a monaſtery at Paris. The notes on this article include a great number of particulars that have been communicated to me. The reader may have recourſe to them.

" ſatyrical ſtrokes in it againſt the King; being told " that there were none,' he then declared that he would " not mind it, nor ſhew the leaſt reſentment againſt " the author. Is not this ſtill finer than the Sonnet?"

§ (u) In the Amſterdam edit. of 1695 it is Quinault, both in this place, and above, in the ſame Satyr; and Hainault is not mentioned in any part of it. REM. CRIT.

Que vous ont fait Perrin, Bardin, Pradon, Hainaut?

" What ill have you received from Perrin, Bardin, " Pradon and Hainault?"

But with regard to the verſe abovementioned, cited from Boileau, our Hainault is not there named, but only Quinaut, in manner following;

Je le déclare donc; Quinaut eſt un Virgil.

" I here declare, that Quinaut is a Virgil."] Rem. by the Tranſlator.

[In the Amſterdam edition of 1717, with the excellent Notes of Mr. Broſſette, our Hainault (whoſe name is there ſpelt Hainaut) is thus mentioned in verſe 97. of Satyr 9.

. . .

HENICHIUS (JOHN) Profeſſor of Divinity in the Univerſity of Rinthel, in the country of Heſſe, was ſon to a Miniſter of Winhuſen, and was born in January 1616. He went through the School-Claſſics at Zell and Lunenburg, and then was ſent to Helmſtad anno 1634, and after having ſtudied there four years, was received Doctor in Philoſophy in that place. Having afterwards read ſome Lectures, and preſided in public diſputations, he gained the friendſhip in an eſpecial manner of Doctor Calixtus and Doctor Horneius, two famous Divines. He went to Hildeſheim near the cloſe of the year 1639, and lived about three years there, in the houſe of a Gentleman of merit (a). He afterwards went and travelled towards the Rhine, and then reſided ſome time with James Lampadius in Hanover. He was appointed Profeſſor of Metaphyſics and of Hebrew, in the Univerſity of Rinthel, anno 1643; and a year and a half after this, he was invited to Bardewik, to be Superintendant. He diſcharged the duties of that employment during five years, and with ſo much care and diligence, that Duke Auguſtus of Brunſwick would have appointed him ſole inſpector of the dioceſe of Wolfenbuttel, but he did not accept of it. He even quitted his employment, becauſe the fatigues it had brought upon him, had thrown him into a long fit of ſickneſs. He returned to Rinthel in 1651, in order to be Profeſſor of Divinity in that city. He received, in a ſolemn manner, the honours of a Doctor's degree in the ſame Faculty; and it was not long before a ſeat was given him in the Eccleſiaſtical Conſiſtory; and he was alſo made Inſpector of the Churches in the Earldom of Schauemburg (b). He gave a proof of his erudition, by the conſiderable number of books which he publiſhed [A]. He was a man of great candor and moderation, and ardently wiſhed that there might be an union between the Lutherans and Calviniſts [B]; and

(a) Ad nobiliſſ. atque præſtrenuum Virum D. Fredericum Wilhelmum GANSIUM je contulit, apud quem triennium fere ſatis commode exegit. Apud Witte, Memor. Theologor. Decad. 13. pag. 1716.

(b) The city of Rinthel is in that Earldom.

[A] The conſiderable number of books which he publiſhed.] Here follows the catalogue of them as given by de Witte (1). Diſſertatio de Majeſtate civili: Rintel. 1653, in 4to, De Cultu creaturarum & imaginum Diſſert. ibid. 1653, in 4to. De libertate Arbitrii, imprimis de concurſu cauſæ ſecundæ cum primis: ibid. 1645, in 4to. De Officio boni Principis piique Subditi: ibid. 1661, in 12mo. Diſſertatio de Pœnitentia lapſorum: ibid. 1659, in 4to. De Gratia & Prædeſtinatione Diſſertatio: ibid. 1663, in 4to. Compendium S. Theologiæ: ibid. 1657, 1671, in 8vo. De Veritate Religionis Chriſtianæ: ibid. 1667, in 12mo. Inſtitutiones Theologicæ: Brunſvigæ, 1665, in 4to. Hiſtoriæ Eccleſiaſticæ & Civilis Pars I, Rintel. 1669, Pars II, 1670, Pars III, 1674, in 4to. Diſputationes aliquot emiſit publiceque habuit, ex quibus eſt; de Myſterio S. S. Trinitatis: De Confeſſione Auguſtini, de Fide & operibus, &c.

(1) Witte, Memoriar. Theolog. Dec. 13. pag. 1720.

I have ſome little obſervations to make with regard to the work de Veritate Religionis Chriſtianæ, in the catalogue above. It is an excellent ſupplement to that which Grotius has wrote on the ſame ſubject; for Henichius lays open, clears up, and proves in a more ample manner, the reaſons which Grotius had employed. This he obſerves in his title, which is as follows: quo ea, quæ vir illuſtris HUGO GROTIUS de hac materia commentatus eſt aliquanto uberius exponuntur. I am to obſerve by the way, that Grotius has been accuſed of being a plagiary; and I will inſert an addition that was publiſhed at the end of the firſt volume of the firſt edition of this Dictionary, and which the Printer did not put in its proper place in the ſecond edition. The words are as follow. " In my " opinion nothing was ever more falſe, than what " was told Mr. Wheeler and Mr. Spon, viz. that Gro- " tius had ſtole all the chief arguments for his book entitled " Of the Truth of the Chriſtian Religion from an " Arabic author; and particularly from the works of " an excellent man whom the Latins conſidered as an " arch-heretic, but whom the Copts hold for a ſaint; " who has wrote an excellent book againſt the Turks " and againſt the Jews, for the truth of the Chriſtian " Religion (2)."

(2) Wheeler's Voyage into Dalmatia, &c. lib. 2. pag. 163. Dutch edit. of 1689.

Note, that the three Volumes of Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of our John Henichius, extend but to the end of the Vth Century; and that notwithſtanding the title premiſes the civil, as well as church hiſtory, yet the author has the latter chiefly in view. The firſt volume comprehends the three firſt centuries; the ſecond, the fourth century, and the third, the fifth century. Boſius who had ſaid in his Schediaſma de comparanda Notitia Scriptorum Eccleſiaſticorum, that Henichius's work contained the ſix firſt centuries, was anſwered too roughly on that account. He acknowledged his error, and corrected it, with his own hand, in his copy of that work. It is very juſt to point out ſuch errors; but then this ought to be done without bitterneſs or an inſulting air, remembring that ſuch errors may be very eaſily committed. Aberrationem agnovit, ac manu ſua in exemplari privato correxit: ut adeo acrem illam Clariſſimi Sluteri cenſuram (*) non videatur meruiſſe. Et quam facilis in his talibus ſit lapſus, unuſquiſque intelligit (3). The author, who writes thus, obſerves, that Henichius, after giving the ſubſtance of the teſtimonies of antient authors, then ſets down the paſſages from them at full length. It was very juſtly obſerved, that this would be a recommendation of the work. Ceterum Henichianum opus vel eo etiam nomine meretur commendari, quod integra Auctorum veterum teſtimonia adſcribat, quorum ſummam prius attulerat (4).

(*) In Propylæo Hiſtoriæ Chriſtianæ, pag. 26.

(3) Caſpar Sagit. Introduct. in Hiſt. Eccleſ. pag. 340.

(4) Idem, Sagit. ibid.

[B] He . . . . ardently wiſhed that there might be an union between the Lutherans and Calviniſts.] He is applauded for this in his funeral programma (5): Pacis & concordiæ perpetuus ſtudioſus, nihilque magis in votis habebat, quàm ut ſchiſma inter Evangelicos funditùs tolleretur, & togata prælia in ſuggeſtibus & Cathedris cum ſalutiferâ, DEO & hominibus gratâ pace, fauſto and this perhaps was the cauſe of the many invectives that were vented againſt him. He married, in 1645, a very virtuous maiden, who was far from being barren, ſhe bringing him thirteen children. He died at Rinthel the 27th of June 1671 (c). Gerhard Wolter Molan made a very beautiful epitaph in his honour. It is inſerted in page 338 and 339 of a work of Gaſpar Sagittarius (d).

(5) Witte, Mem. Theolog. Dec. 13. pag. 1718.

(c) Extracted from his Funeral Programma inſerted by Mr. Witte in the 13th Decad Memor. Theolog. noſtri ſæculi, pag. 1716, & ſeq.

(d) Intitled, Introductio in Hiſtoriam Eccleſiaſticam, and printed anno 1694.

fauſto omine, commutarentur : qua de cauſa immortalem nominis gloriam apud omnes bonos adeptus eſt. i. e. " For " ever deſirous of peace and concord, there was no- " thing he more earneſtly wiſhed, than to have the " ſchiſms which were found among Proteſtants entire- " ly taken away : and that inſtead of thoſe debates " and quarrels which break out among Divines, in " their pulpits as well as chairs, we might be made " happy in peace, which is ſo grateful both to God " and man ; and for that reaſon his name will be for " ever remembered with honour by all perſons of vir- " tue and goodneſs." The author of the Programma ſays a little after (6) : Equidem invidia & malignitas, ut ſunt virtutis fata, non unum in eum jaculata fuit fulmen ; ſed & illa, quæ viventi gravis fuit, mortui famæ, credo, favebit, ſuamque vel imperitiam vel livorem tandem profitebitur. i. e. " Envy and malice, as " is the fate of virtuous men, throw indeed their " darts at him ; but thoſe, who grieved him while " living, will, I am perſuaded, increaſe his reputa- " tion now he is dead ; and at laſt confeſs their igno- " rance or malice." He does not ſpecify the cauſes of that malicious envy which perſecuted Henichius ; but I am of opinion, that the pacific diſpoſition of this Profeſſor furniſhed people with a pretence for ſlandering him.

(6) Idem, ibid. pag. 1719.

HENRY VI, Emperor of Germany, and ſon of Frederic Barbaroſſa, was crowned by Pope Celeſtin III [A], the 15th of April 1191. He was marching, at the head of a powerful army, to poſſeſs the inheritance of Naples and Sicily, which belonged to the Empreſs Conſtantia his wife, after the death of young William King of Sicily (a). He was ſo much oppoſed in his endeavours to inveſt himſelf with the two Kingdoms abovementioned, that we may almoſt ſay, he obtained them by conqueſt. He was ſo much dreaded, that the Emperor Alexis, ſirnamed the Angel, could not obtain a peace but upon condition of paying him a tribute (b). Had Henry done this only, his valour would be applauded ; but all the encomiums he may have deſerved on that account are overbalanced by the perfidy and cruelty he ſhewed, in his extirpating, on falſe pretences, all ſuch as ſurvived of the poſterity of thoſe brave Normans, who had conquered that part of Italy which the Empreſs his conſort, who was heireſs to their dominions, gave him a right to poſſeſs (c). It is related that this Princeſs, to puniſh him for the guilt abovementioned, made him ſwallow the poiſon of which he died at Meſſina, anno 1198, at thirty two years of age (d). He left a ſon, who was afterwards the Emperor Frederic II. Conſtantia was ſo far advanced in years when ſhe was delivered of this ſon, that, in order to avoid all ſuſpicion of his being ſuppoſititious, ſhe was delivered in public [B] : however, notwithſtanding theſe precautions, it was yet ſaid this was a ſpurious child [C]. Some authors aſſert, that Conſtantia was neither a Nun, nor very far advanced in years, when ſhe married Henry VI [D].

(a) See Maimbourg, Décad. de l'Empire, liv. 5. pag. m. 476.

(b) Maimbourg, ibid.

(c) Ibid. pag. 477.

(d) Maimbourg, Décad. de l'Empir. liv. 5. pag. 477. citing the Abbot of Urſperg.

HENRY

[A] He was . . . . . crowned by Pope Celeſtin III.] The following circumſtance is related of his coronation. As the Emperor " was at his feet, Celeſtin, who ſet " the crown on his head, lifted up his foot, and kick- " ed the crown down, to ſhew that he could beſtow, " and take it away. Baronius applauds this action ; " but things, in my opinion, have changed their aſ- " pect ſince ; and not a ſingle Prince would ſubſcribe " very ſincerely to this Cardinal's opinion (1)." I cite the author who delivers himſelf in this manner.

(1) Chevreau, Hiſt. du Monde, liv. 5. ch. 2. pag. 75. of tom. 3. Dutch edit. of 1687.

[B] To avoid all ſuſpicion of the child's being ſuppoſititious, ſhe was delivered in public.] Here follows a paſſage from Brantome, that deſerves our peruſal. " Conſtantia, Queen of Sicily, who, from her youth, " and during her whole life, had never ſtirred from " a cloyſter, but there led a veſtal life ; quite for- " forſaking the convent at fifty years of age, tho' " not handſome and very decrepit, yet would " taſte the ſweets of the fleſh ; and marrying, had a " child when fifty two years old, of which ſhe re- " ſolved to lie-in publickly in the plains and meads " of Palermo ; ſhe having cauſed a tent and pavilion " to be erected there for that purpoſe, in order that the " world might not ſuſpect that her child was ſuppo- " ſititious ; and this was one of the greateſt miracles " that had been ſeen ſince the time of St. Elizabeth. " It is nevertheleſs ſaid in the Hiſtory of Naples, " that the child was looked upon as ſpurious ; how- " ever, he became a great man ; but moſt baſtards " are valiant, as a great man told me one day (2).

(2) Brantôme, Dames galantes, tom. 2. p. 207.

[C] However, notwithſtanding theſe precautions, it was yet ſaid that this was a ſpurious child.] Brantome has juſt now informed us of this ; but here follows an author who will point out the proofs of it better. " It has been found, ſays he (3), that women " of fifty years old and upwards, had been delivered " of children. Of this we have an example in that " renowned Nun, Conſtantia by name, mother to " Frederic II, who being taken out of a convent, was " the only heireſs and Queen of Sicily. This Princeſs " being with child at fifty two years of age complete, " to remove all ſuſpicion, cauſed a pavilion to be " ſet up, in a public place of a certain city of Sicily, " and, in preſence of the greateſt Ladies of the Coun- " try would lie-in publicly. However, many diſputed " the reality of this incident, and among others the " Marquis of Ancona, Marquardus by name, who " offered to prove, that the child in queſtion was not " the iſſue of Henry and Conſtantia, but was ſuppo- " ſititious, as is aſſerted by Pandolfo Collenuccio (*)." If it can be ſaid, that the moſt ſubtile precautions are of no uſe againſt love, it may be ſaid that they are ſo againſt ambition. Do whatever lies in your power to convince the world, that ſuch and ſuch a delivery was not imaginary and chimerical, but very real, ſtill people will have always anſwers ready to make. The expedient which cured St. Thomas's incredulity, is almoſt the only one that can be proof againſt thoſe cavils ; unleſs I put my finger, &c. will it be objected, as that Apoſtle did, I will not believe (4). Nay, I know not whether, after feeling, ſuch perſons will not ſay, I indeed have ſeen and felt how the child came out, but not how it got in. Had your huſband abilities ſufficient to beget it ?

(3) Camerar. Meditat. Hiſtor. vol. 2. liv. 4. ch. 7. pag. 296.

(*) Liv. 4. de l'Hiſt. de Naples.

(4) St. John chap. xx. ver. 25.

[D] Some authors aſſert that Conſtantia was neither a Nun, nor very far advanced in years when ſhe married Henry VI.] It is generally thought that ſhe was taken out of a convent, and that a diſpenſation was granted her, in order that ſhe might marry the Emperor Henry VI ; and that ſhe was with child at about fifty five years of age. But ſome Hiſtorians deny this. Here follows the ſequel of the abovecited paſſage of Camerarius (5) : " Perhaps John Michael Brutus

(5) Camerar. Meditat. Hiſt. vol. 2. liv. 4. pag. 296.

HENRY II King of France ſucceeded Francis I his father, the laſt day of March 1547. One of the firſt things he did was, to act in direct oppoſition to the order which his father gave him in his expiring moments; I mean that, ſoon after his acceſſion to the throne, he recalled the Conſtable of Mommorenci [A], whom Francis I had baniſhed, for very good reaſons (a). He paid dear for this his diſobedience [B]; for it may be affirmed, that the moſt unhappy events which brought an odium on his reign, are owing to this Conſtable. To the ill conduct of this laſt mentioned, was owing the loſs of the famous battle of St. Quentin (b); after which this Conſtable occaſioned the concluding a treaty of peace (c), that reflected much greater ignominy on the French monarchy [C], than the loſs of the abovementioned battle. He perhaps would not have prevailed

(a) See the remark [B].

(b) The 10th of Aug. 1557.

(c) That of Cateau in Cambreſis, concluded in 1559.

(6) Lib. 2. de Inſtauratione Ital. Thus Camerarius quotes him in the Latin edit. of Frankfort 1658, pag. 276.

" Brutus (6) took occaſion from this ſtory, flatly to " deny that Conſtantia had ever been a Nun or Ab- " beſs; or that Pope Celeſtine had diſpenſed with " her marriage; foraſmuch as, according to his cal- " culation, ſhe muſt then have been threeſcore. On " the contrary, he quotes Hugo Falcandus the Hiſ- " torian, who ſays, that ſhe was then in the flower " of her age; and married to Henry, in the reign " of William ſirnamed the Good, when Frederic " Barbaroſſa was ſtill living; but that this miſtake " was owing to the confuſion of times. I am of " opinion, ſays he, that ſhe was brought from the " royal palace to a convent of Nuns, when that the " people mutinying, impriſoned King William ſir- " named the Bad; and that no place could be found " more convenient to ſecure her, during thoſe ſtorms. " When they were entirely abated, that Princeſs, " who was at liberty, and had neither made the vows " nor taken the veil, continued among the Nuns till " ſuch time as ſhe married Henry."

[A] He recalled the Conſtable of Mommorenci.] " His " father had ſeriouſly adviſed him, to make uſe of " Annebaut as his chief miniſter, he having found " him a perſon of great experience, wiſdom, and " zeal, and free from the leaſt ſtain of avarice or am- " bition; but that he ſhould particularly take care, if " he had the happineſs of his country at heart, not " to recall the Conſtable of Montmorency . . . . . " Nevertheleſs, although he had ſhewn his royal fa- " ther the moſt reſpectful obedience during his life- " time, yet he did not pay the leaſt deference to his " commands after his death. He diveſted Annebaut " and Cardinal de Tournon of the adminiſtration of " all affairs, to put Montmorency at the head of " them (1)." We ſhall now ſee that this moſt reſpectful obedience had ſuch exceptions, as will not permit us to think, that Mezerai had reaſon to give it ſo good a character as he has done. " The precaution of " King Francis was ſo great, that he expreſly forbid " the Dauphin his eldeſt ſon, afterwards Henry II, " to have the leaſt correſpondence with the Conſtable. " . . . . But all he obtained of his ſon was, for him to " conceal, for ſeven years together, the friendſhip he " had for the Conſtable. However, he did not con- " ceal it with ſo much artifice, but that the whole " Court knew, that a day did not paſs without their re- " ceiving letters one from the other. But Francis I " did not take the pains to break off this correſpon- " dence; whether it were that the Dauphin and Con- " ſtable had been equally ſucceſsful in concealing it " from him; or that, having no other ſon but the " Dauphin, he was afraid of diſguſting him (2)." Theſe are Varillas's words, and they may very juſtly be criticized, for I. had the Dauphin concealed his friendſhip ſeven years, he would not have been ſo often urgent with his father to recall the Conſtable; and yet Varillas aſſerts this laſt circumſtance (3). II. How ſhall we reconcile this author's alternative, with what Mezerai relates (4), that the King was greatly diſpleaſed, becauſe the Dauphin, notwithſtanding his orders to the contrary, held a correſpondence with the Conſtable of Montmorency?

(1) Mezerai, in the beginning of the Hiſtory of Henry II, pag. 1057. of vol. 2. of the Hiſtory of France.

(2) Varillas, Hiſt. de Henry II. liv. 1. pag. 6.

(3) Hiſt. de François I, liv. 12. pag. 295.

(4) Abrége Chronol. tom. 4. pag. 635.

[B] He paid dear for his diſobedience.] Varillas will furniſh me with a Commentary on this text. I will not cite him barely with regard to the reign of Henry II, but ſhall take his words ſomething higher. " The diſgraces, ſays he (5), of the Conſtable of " Montmorency, of Admiral Chabot, and of Chan- " cellor Poyet, are told in ſuch a manner in the " ninth book, as will not ſurprize thoſe who ſhall " have read in Bodin's Republic, that Francis I, " grew more peeviſh and ſour-tempered in proportion " as he advanced in years: That he had been con- " vinced, by his own experience, that he could " not have made choice of two men, leſs proper for " the intrigues of the Cabinet, than Montmorency " and Chabot; and that, tho' he would not charge " Poyet with the ſame defect, yet this Chancellor " had one equally great, viz. his carrying things too " far: That to theſe things were owing all the miſ- " fortunes which had befallen his Majeſty; and that, " ſhould he continue to make uſe of the ſame Mi- " niſters, he muſt not expect to be more ſucceſsful. " The event proved, that the three Miniſters who " ſucceeded thoſe that had been diſgraced, were " better qualified; and that if Henry II had not after- " wards reſtored the Conſtable of Montmorency, he " would not have been conſtrained, in order to re- " cover him, to give up one hundred and ninety eight " towns or ſtrong holds; and a country almoſt as " large as the third part of France."

(5) Preface to the Hiſt. of Francis I.

[C] The Conſtable occaſioned the concluding a treaty of peace, that reflected much greater ignominy on the French Monarchy.] Mezerai, though, of all the French Hiſtorians, he moſt openly favours the ſubjects againſt the Court, nevertheleſs blames the people for diſcovering ſo much joy at that peace. " The people, ſays " he (6), who always deſire peace at any rate, rejoiced " greatly at this. . . . . But the party of the Guiſes, " the wiſe politicians, and all the nobility, cenſured " it openly, as a palpable fraud, which loſt France " 198 ſtrong-holds; for three only which were re- " ſtored to her, viz. Ham, Catelet, and St. Quentin." He expreſſes himſelf in ſtill ſtronger terms in his larger Hiſtory (7); for in deducing the articles of that peace, he afterwards inſerts theſe words, that to unite more ſtrongly the hearts of Princes, the following parentheſis (but rather to cover, with ſome honourable pretence, the ſhame and loſs which France ſuſtained by this unfortunate treaty); and towards the cloſe of the ſame page he ſays as follows. " Theſe articles being brought " to the King, and communicated by his Majeſty to " the Princes and greateſt men of his realm, there " were few people but judged them entirely diſadvan- " tageous and ſhameful to France; and indeed all " the French condemned them univerſally by their " murmurs. Briſſac having had advice of this, al- " though the articles had been diſguiſed to him, diſ- " patched Boyvin-Villars, who has left us Me- " moirs concerning the wars of Piedmont, to Court, " with inſtructions to lay before the King his moſt " humble remonſtrances, and divert him from conclud- " ing ſo diſadvantageous a peace. Concluding, that " if his Majeſty was reſolved to give up what he poſ- " ſeſſed in Italy, which was worth the beſt Province " in his Kingdom, and might bring in, clear, a re- " venue of 300000 crowns into his Exchequer, the " only reward he deſired, for all his good ſervices, " was, that his Majeſty would pleaſe to baniſh him, " together with all the forces which were in Italy, " as rebels; and that he would be able to preſerve the " ſtrong-holds which he held at the expence of the " Milaneſe, and the Republic of Genoa; or at leaſt " that he ſhould die glorioufly in a country, where " the forces of all Europe had not been able to make " him loſe an inch of ground, during the ten years " that the defence of it had been committed to him. " . . . . The King declared that he was highly pleaſed " with his zeal; however, as his mind was wholly " bent upon peace, he anſwered, that although he ſhould conclude it upon the conditions which were propoſed to him, he ſhould retain the poſſeſſion of ſtrong-holds, &c. ſufficient, to make himſelf be dreaded (8). " Upon this Guiſe, prompted by his own intereſt, or " by prevailed ſo eaſily with Henry II to conſent to this diſadvantageous peace, had that Prince not been fired with a ſpirit of perſecution [D]. The Conſtable alſo merits great cenſure, for not giving his Sovereign good counſel, with reſpect to the Ducheſs of Valentinois, who, though of an age diſproportionate to that of Henry II, did nevertheleſs keep

(6) Mezerai, Abrége Chronol. tom. 4. pag. 715.

(7) Hiſt. de France, tom. 2. pag. 1132.

(8) This recalls to my memory the following words of Trebellius Pollio; Putet numerare inter hæc tempora quum iſta gererentur, quæ ſæpe Gallienus malo generis humani quaſi per jocum dixerit. Nam quum ei nuntiatum eſſet, Ægyptum deſciviſſe, dixiſſe fertur, Quid? ſine lino Ægyptio eſſe non poſſumus? Quum autem vaſtatam Aſiam & elementorum concurſionibus & Scytharum incurſionibus comperiſſet, Quid, inquit, ſine aphronitris eſſe non poſſumus? Perdita Gallia arriſiſſe ac dixiſſe perhibetur. Non ſine Atreba- ticis ſagis tuta Reſp. eſt? Sic denique de omnibus partibus nuntiabatur, quum eas amitteret, quaſi detrimentis vilium miniſteriorum videretur affici, jocabatur. Trebell. Pollio, in Gallienis duobus, cap. 6. pag. m. 200.

" by the impulſes of honour and conſcience, interrupting him boldly, ſaid, Your Majeſty will pardon me if I tell you, that this is not the right way to effect it; and that though fortune ſhould be as much your enemy, during twenty five years, as ſhe was laſt year, you yet could not loſe as much during that time, as what you are required to give up in one ſingle day. It did not coſt the late King, when overthrown and a priſoner, &c." I omit all the arguments employed by the Duke of Guiſe, but not what follows them in the Hiſtorian. " He ſaid a great many other things in ſo vehement a tone of voice, that he often made the King change colour, but could not alter his reſolution: the dye was caſt, and whoſoever was the cauſe of it, whether his favourites or his natural diſpoſition, his courage was ſo greatly damped, that he was not able to continue the war any longer. He therefore ratified the treaty, and peace was proclaimed the 10th of April. . . . . All the French authors who have written concerning that period, call that peace the unfortunate and accurſed. Briſſac being told that it was concluded, cried out ſeveral times, Wretched France, how many calamities! . . . . He continued Governor of the five cities, and of the eight caſtles which the King retained, with 8000 foot, and 450 horſe, and reſtored the other places; but he firſt demoliſhed the greateſt part of them, and ſold the ammunition according to the King's order; not without much difficulty to procure the money, and the neceſſary orders from the Court; becauſe that the Conſtable, favouring the Duke of Savoy, did all that lay in his power to put the ſtrongholds entire into his hands, and even thoſe which the King had reſerved to himſelf (9)."

(9) Mezerai, Hiſt. de France, tom. 2. pag. 1134.

We ſhall ſee below (10), that the Court of France was ſo weak, as to be prevailed upon to evacuate, under Charles IX and Henry III, the few ſtrong holds it had reſerved; and there is no doubt but that the Conſtable, under Charles IX, had a great ſhare in that miſmanagement. When we reflect on the immenſe poſſeſſions he amaſſed, we muſt not ſay of him, as of ſo many others, that at the ſame time he managed the affairs of his Sovereign well, he managed his own extremely well; but we muſt ſay, that in managing his own affairs extremely well, he managed thoſe of his Sovereign extremely ill. Did not he, under Charles IX, enter into a league with the Guiſes; and was not he the cauſe of the prodigious power they roſe to; a power that was ſo fatal to the monarchy, and which had like to have given to France, a fourth race of Kings? When Francis I diſgraced the Conſtable, he charged him with ignorance in the two principal duties of his employment, viz. war and politics (11). See the character which the adherents of the Guiſes give of him in Mezerai (12).

(10) In the remarks [G] and [H], in which more murmurings will be ſeen againſt the peace of 1559.

(11) Varillas, Hiſt. de François I. liv. 9. p. 397. Dutch edit. of 1690, ad ann. 1540.

Some critics will perhaps ſay, that Mezerai extenuates too much the advantages which were granted Henry II by the treaty of Cateau. Why does he content himſelf with mentioning the three cities which were reſtored to France? Why does he ſuppreſs the conqueſt of Calais, Mets, Toul and Verdun? But this would be a very falſe criticiſm; for theſe four ſtrong holds were not given up to Henry II by the treaty of Cateau. It left the Empire at full liberty to demand back the reſtitution of the three laſt; and bound France, by the moſt ſolemn engagement, to reſtore Calais to England in eight years. This circumſtance was not obſerved by the anonymous Hiſtorian who ſpoke as follows (13). " The King of France reſtored to the Spaniſh Monarch, whatever he had diſpoſſeſſed him of, on both ſides the Alps. Item, to the Prince of Piedmont, la Breſſe, Savoy, Piedmont, four cities excepted: to the Genoeſe, the iſland of Corſica; Sienna to the Duke of Florence; and reſerved nothing but Calais, without gaining even a foot of any other land, during that long and pernicious war, which had laid waſte ſo many Provinces; ſacked, burnt, and ruined ſo many cities, towns, villages, and country ſeats; and had occaſioned the death of ſo many Princes, Lords, Gentlemen, Captains, Soldiers, Citizens and Peaſants; cauſed ſo many rapes of wives and maidens; in a word, which had thrown all Europe topſy turvy. The King reſtored upwards of two hundred, others ſay almoſt twice that number, towns or ſtrong holds, in conquering of which an ocean of his ſubjects blood had been ſpilt, the treaſures of the Kingdom exhauſted, his own demeſnes mortgaged, and himſelf indebted to every one." This Hiſtorian ſuppoſes, that Henry II ſaw his dominions enlarged, at leaſt, by the giving up of Calais; but this is a falſity. All the reſt of his aſſertions are ſolid; and as it is certain that one might have repreſented to the King of Spain, what Hannibal repreſented to the Roman General (14), what thunder muſt not be darted, by the aſſertions above, on the head of Henry II? The King of Spain might have been told, that the countries, of which he diveſted France by that treaty of peace, were not worth the immenſe ſums which the war had coſt him, nor the great number of ſoldiers and officers he had loſt. If this was capable of diminiſhing the joy, which the advantageous peace he had obtained, muſt naturally make him feel, how greatly muſt it afflict the Monarch to whom it was diſadvantageous? To return empty-handed from a long war, is ſhameful and ignominious, ſays Homer (15); but he would have expreſſed himſelf in much ſtronger terms in an affair like that in queſtion.

(12) Hiſt. de France, tom. 2. pag. 1135.

(13) Hiſtoire des choſes mémorables avenues en France depuis l'an 1547 juſques au commencement de l'an 1597, pag. 61.

(14) See Penſées diverſes ſur les Cometes, num. 113. pag. 658.

(15) Αἰσχρὸν τοι δήρον τε μένειν, κενεὸν τε νέεσθαι. Iliad, lib. 2. ver. 298.

[D] That Prince . . . was fired . . . with a ſpirit of perſecution.] Henry II treated the French Proteſtants with very great ſeverity; and put them to death without mercy, notwithſtanding which they increaſed greatly under his reign. If they were not grieved at the extreme conſternation, with which the Court of France, as well as the City of Paris, was ſeized, after the battle of St. Quentin, they therein acted but agreeably to the inſpirations and ſuggeſtions of Nature. Every ſect that meets with ſevere treatment, and which cannot expect any ceſſation from it, except the Court ſhould be perplexed, will rejoice at the progreſs of the enemy, and be very glad to ſee its perſecutors ſo much employed in foreign affairs, as to be ſcarce able to know how to turn themſelves. Among all the ſects of Chriſtians, none is more inclined to behave after that manner, than the Romaniſts. People therefore ſhould not be ſurprized, if what Maimbourg aſſerts (16) ſhould be found true, viz. that the Proteſtants took advantage of the public affliction which had overſpread the Kingdom after the battle of St. Quentin . . . and venture to hold their aſſemblies in open daylight, in the moſt public ſtreets of Paris; and to appear even in public; and meet in the day time in great bodies, in the Pré-aux-Cheres, there to ſing aloud the Pſalms of Clement Marot. This ought to inform Princes, that proclamations enacting perſecution render them obnoxious to great inconveniencies; thence it is, that their bonfires grieve one part of their ſubjects, and the victories of their enemies fill them with conſolation. If they complain, that ſome of their ſubjects are wicked, this anſwer ought to be made them, it is you who make them ſuch (17); for to require that a perſecuted party ſhall grieve for thoſe public calamities to which their tranquillity is owing, and the foundation of a very plauſible hope of proſperity, is to require a return of the primitive ages of Chriſtianity now thoſe times do not return twice. It is to expect men reſembling thoſe of the Millennium, if it ſhould ever come. But to return to Henry II; the inſtant he ſaw that the Proteſtants were meditating how to take advantage of the loſs which had been ſuſtained in the battle of St. Quentin, he publiſhed a new proclamation, forbidding all the Judges to mitigate the ſentence of death, and confiſcation of goods and chattels, againſt all thoſe who ſhould be not only found guilty of hereſy, but likewiſe of having brought into France books printed in Geneva, contrary to the doctrine of the Catholic Church. Thus the Calviniſts were treated more rigorouſly than before (18). But as this did not prevent their increaſing, nor even ſeveral perſons of the firſt quality from engaging

(16) Maimbourg, Hiſt. du Calviniſme, liv. 2. pag. 96.

(17) Apply here the following ſaying of Seneca, againſt thoſe who complain of ungrateful people, Multos experimur ingratos, plures facimus. i. e. " We meet here " with many ingrates, but " make more ſo " our ſelves. Seneca, de Benef. lib. 1. cap. 1.

(18) Maimbourg, Hiſt. du Calviniſme, liv. 2. pag. 100.

keep him in her chains, and make a moſt unjuſt abuſe of the ſlavery in which ſhe held him. But the Conſtable, ſo far from fortifying the mind of this Prince againſt the ſnares of that woman, engaged in intrigues for her, and devoted himſelf to her faction (d). It is pity that the reign of Henry II ſhould have been ſo much ſullied; for, in other reſpects, it was conſpicuous for glorious actions, and moſt ſhining ſucceſſes, which were the greateſt mortification to the Emperor Charles V. It cannot be denied but that Henry II was a courageous Prince; and it is related that Elizabeth Queen of England admired him greatly on that account [E]. But after all, what follows will be an everlaſting proof of his weakneſs, and of the aſcendant which his favourites had over him, viz. his ſigning, in oppoſition to the opinion of the moſt ſage perſons in his Kingdom, the treaty of peace of Cateau in Cambreſis; a peace, no leſs inglorious to France, than that which the Emperor Jovinian concluded with the King of Perſia, againſt which all antiquity has ſo loudly inveighed (e); a peace which, by a ſingle daſh of the pen, loſt, in an inſtant, the toils and conqueſts of many years, and an extent of country equal to a third part of the Kingdom (f). No power reaped ſo much benefit by this ignominy of France, as the Duke of Savoy; for, beſides his being reſtored to his dominions, he married the ſiſter of Henry II, a Princeſs of exalted merit [F], and who impoſed very artfully on the Court of France, in order to promote her huſband's intereſt [G]. That Lady engaging in their party; the King found that, in order to extirpate them, he muſt be forced to conclude a peace with the Houſe of Auſtria; and this doubtleſs was one of the chief motives which prompted him to overlook the happy condition to which he had reſtored his affairs (19). He had checked the career of his enemies, and had even diſpoſſeſſed them of ſeveral very ſtrong towns. But all this was nothing; he choſe rather to acquieſce with all their demands, than not to have his arms at liberty, in order to extirpate the Proteſtants out of his Kingdom. Thus we have ſeen the ſame Court loſe the moſt favourable opportunities of aggrandizing itſelf in 1684, in order to devote itſelf wholly to the ſuppreſſion of the edict of Nantz. Thoſe who ſuffer themſelves to be poſſeſſed with this ſpirit, muſt renounce the title of Conqueror. Had Henry II lived long after the ignominious peace which he accepted, he would have ſpent the remainder of his reign in tournaments and perſecutions; but he died a little after the ſigning of it. Maimbourg is an exceptionable witneſs, with regard to the joy which, he ſays, the heretics felt on that account. Here follow his words (20). "Accordingly he was bewailed "with very ſincere tears, and infinitely regretted by "all his ſubjects, except the Proteſtants alone, who "fancying themſelves delivered, by his death, from "what they uſed to call the perſecution of the Church; "expreſſed, in a moſt ſhameful manner, by their "words, their actions, and ſcandalous writings, the "prodigious joy which it gave them."

(d) See the article POITIERS.

(e) Paſquier's Letters, liv. 15. tom. 2. pag. 221. See alſo liv. 4. tom. 1. pag. 471.

(f) Meluc, Mem. liv. 4. pag. m. 789.

The ſame remark which was made with regard to Francis I (21), may be made with reſpect to Henry II. He attacked the party, weakly, on one ſide, and made it ſtronger on the other. He put to death, in France, ſome private perſons; and at the ſame time concluded an alliance with the Proteſtants of Germany, againſt Charles V, &c. (22); and was pleaſed with the title of Protector of the Germanic Liberties; i. e. at that time, the protector of the Proteſtants (23). The other Romiſh Princes conducted themſelves after the ſame manner (24). The following words of Le Laboureur appear to me remarkable. "To pluck away the "tares from among the wheat, ſays he (25), God "will chooſe ſuch Princes only as are innocent and "of a good life; and will not make uſe of politic "hands, ſuch as were thoſe of the Counſellors of all "the Catholic Crowns of that age, who weeded their "own fields, with no other deſign but to caſt the "darnel into thoſe of their neighbours; and who per"ſecuted Hereſy only as a faction repugnant or con"trary to authority." Charles V, and the Kings of Spain his ſucceſſors, favoured the Proteſtants both of Germany and France on ſeveral occaſions. See the proofs of this in Tom. I. (26) of Mr. Arnauld's Apology for the Roman Catholics. The Spaniſh Embaſſador was ſolliciting ſuccours in England for the Duke of Rohan. What Grotius wrote on this ſubject is remarkable. Validus eſt rumor, Gonthomerum, & qui in aula Anglica Hiſpanicæ ſunt factionis, apertè profiteri, non debere à Rege Britanniarum deſeri religionis conſortes in Gallia, ne ſi quando vetera jura repetere ipſi ſit animus, deſint, qui partes Anglicas ſequantur (27).

(19) See the words of Cardinal de Lorrain, in the remark [M].

(20) Hiſt. du Calviniſme, liv. 2. pag. 114.

(21) See the remark [P] of the article FRANCIS I.

(22) The King reſolved to devote himſelf to the utmoſt of his power, to the great affair of Religion, for which he was extremely zealous, and from which he never departed during the whole courſe of his reign; not even when he formed alliances for intereſts purely political, with the Proteſtant Princes of Germany, againſt the Emperor Charles V. Maimbourg, Hiſt. du Calviniſme, liv. 2. pag. 110.

(23) See the remark [AA].

(24) See the article of Queen ELIZABETH, remarks [G] and [R].

(25) Addit. aux Mem. de Caſtelnau, tom. 2. pag. 577.

(26) Pag. 78, & ſeq.

(27) Grot. Epiſt. 157. Part. 1. pag. 60.

i. e. "There is a ſtrong report, that Gundamor, "and ſuch as are of the Spaniſh faction in the Engliſh "Court, publickly declare, that the Britiſh King "ought not to abandon thoſe of his own religion in "France; in order that, if ever he ſhould think "proper to aſſert his antient claim to that Crown, "he might not fail of their aſſiſtance." See in the Political Teſtament of Marquis de Louvois (28), ſome reflections on the violences exerciſed in Hungary againſt the Proteſtants, by order of that very Court which, a little after, did ſuch great ſervices to the Proteſtants both of Great Britain and Holland, whom Lewis XIV and James II reſolved, as we are told, to oppreſs.

(28) Pag. 367. Cologne edit. of 1695.

[E] It is related that Elizabeth Queen of England admired him greatly for his bravery.] Brantome gives us ſome particulars on this head. "I have heard, "ſays he (29), the preſent Queen of England ſay, that "there was no King ſhe ſo much deſired to ſee, on "account of the great character ſhe had heard of him, "and becauſe of his exalted fame which was ſpread "into all countries. . . . . Sitting at table, and diſ"courſing familiarly with thoſe Noblemen, ſhe ſaid "as follows, after having highly applauded the King, "there was no Prince in the world I ever deſired ſo "much to ſee; and I had already ſent him word "that I would ſoon make him a viſit, for which "purpoſe I had ordered my gallies to be ſplendidly "equipped, (theſe were her very words), to croſs into "France, purpoſely to ſee him." See the ſame relation in the Memoires des Dames Galantes, where it is expreſly declared, that this Queen was deſirous of ſeeing Henry II, becauſe he was brave, valiant, generous, and extremely martial (30).

(29) Brantôme, Diſc. de Henri II, to tom. 2. of his Memoirs, pag. 60, 61.

(30) Dames Galantes, tom. 2. pag. 261.

[F] The Duke of Savoy . . . . married the ſiſter of Henry II, a Princeſs of exalted merit.] Her name, as that of her aunt the Queen of Navarre, was Margaret; and, like that Princeſs, ſhe was very fond of ſtudy, and a great Patroneſs of the learned. She was ſuſpected to have imbibed the new opinions, thoſe of the Proteſtants, and to have inſtilled them, in ſome meaſure, into Catherine de Medicis (31). See her elogium in Brantome (32), and in Le Laboureur, the latter of whom informs us of a particular that deſerves to be known. "Margaret of France, ſays he (33), "was married at forty ſix years old (34); and as ſhe "was thought too old to bear children, it was be"lieved that the report of her pregnancy was merely "an artifice, to oblige the King to reſtore to her, the "more willingly, the ſtrong-holds he detained. It "was on this account that the Sieur Huraut of Bois"Taille, Embaſſador of Venice, wrote a letter dated "the 27th of July, 1561, to Bernardin Bochetel, Bi"ſhop of Rennes, Embaſſador of France in Germany, "in which were the following words; It is ſaid that "the Ducheſs of Savoy is big with child, but I am of "opinion, that this is reported ad aliquid. But that "report was verified by the birth of Charles Emanuel, "grandfather to the preſent Duke of Savoy (55)."

(31) See Le Laboureur, Addit. aux Mem. de Caſtelnau, tom. 1. pag. 750.

(32) Mem. des Dames illuſt.

(33) Le Laboureur, Addit. aux Mem. de Caſtelnau, tom. 1. pag. 752.

(34) He is miſtaken; ſhe was born the 5th of June 1523, and married in 1559.

(35) Le Laboureur publiſhed his book in 1659.

[G] . . . and who impoſed very artfully on the Court of France, in order to promote her huſband's intereſt.] It was ſtipulated by the treaty of Cateau, that the rights

Lady was not young when ſhe married; and thence it was that the murmurs againſt the peace extended even to her [H]. A modern author had no reaſon to attempt a juſtification of the conduct of Henry III [I], who ſo dearly paid for the favour which that Princeſs ſhewed him. There are other monuments of the great weakneſs and ſimplicity of Henry which the King claimed to the territories of the Duke of Savoy, ſhould be examined and ſetled by commiſſions on both ſides (36). King Francis II and the Duke had nominated Deputies for that purpoſe in 1560. The King's Deputies made ſix very conſiderable demands; but, inſtead of being gratified in any of them, the Court of France gave up all the towns it had reſerved. It enacted, by Letters Patents dated the 8th of Auguſt, 1561, that there ſhould be reſtored to the Duke Turin, Chivas, Quiers, and Ville Neuve d'Aſte, the artillery and ammunition excepted, in exchange for Pignerol, Savillan, and Peruſſa, with their dependencies. Imbert de la Platiere Bourdillon, the King's Lieutenant in Italy, raiſed a great many difficulties; ſent ſtrong remonſtrances to the Council, to prevent the execution of this order; and would not obey till orders had been thrice ſent him, and he was diſcharged in the moſt ſolemn manner. The Ducheſs played her part well in this negotiation; her prudence was applauded, in having conquered, by her art, and ſkill, thoſe ſtrong-holds which ſtill remained undelivered; and which the King's Commiſſioners could not defend againſt the ſoft method ſhe had, viz. to win the hearts of men, and force ſuch places as were almoſt impregnable. Theſe are Le Laboureur's words (37). Brantome relates this whole affair very circumſtantially; the various ſentiments of the Miniſters, the oppoſitions raiſed by Bourdillon, and the manner in which he ſuffered himſelf to be wrought upon. This coſt the Duke and Ducheſs of Savoy a great number of preſents (38). The French were ſtill poſſeſſed of three towns in Piedmont, viz. Pignerol, Savillan, and Peruſſa. The Ducheſs ſeconded her huſband admirably well, in the recovering of them, at the time that Henry III paſſed by Turin in his return from Poland. I will employ the words of Varillas. "The "Duke and Ducheſs of Savoy, who propoſed to effect "what Spain had not been able to bring about when "in its moſt flouriſhing condition, that is, to ſend "the French back, over the Alps, into their own "country; employed for this purpoſe a new artifice, "viz. that of diverſions, and feaſtings, which accordingly came ſo faſt one upon the other, that there "was ſcarce time for ſleep. Some very authentic relations ſpeak of a grand collation which coſt an hundred thouſand crowns. The Duke and Ducheſs "had put themſelves to this expence; and to reimburſe themſelves, they were urgent with Henry III "to reſtore to them Pignerol, Savillan, and Peruſſa (39)." Henry III promiſed that they ſhould have ſatisfaction, and was as good as his word; for holding a Council on that affair in Lyons, to evacuate thoſe three towns, it was reſolved, in ſpite of the ſtrong reaſons of the Gentleman who commanded there. This was the Duke of Nevers (a). "He was allowed "the liberty to ſpeak whatever he thought fit; and "this ſatisfaction, viz. that the Memorial which he "preſented, to enforce his ſpeech, though very long, "was nevertheleſs read in preſence of Henry III; "but the giving up of the three towns in queſtion "was yet no leſs reſolved upon; and his Majeſty "gave him orders, by word of mouth, to evacuate "them. The Duke ſhould have ſtopped here, ſince "every one did him the juſtice to believe, that he "had ſatisfied his conſcience and his honour; but he "employed other precautions which made him obnoxious to the Court, and hindered him a long "time from being reſtored to his ſeat in the Council of "State. He obſtinately inſiſted, that the order which "he then received from the King's mouth, ſhould "alſo be wrote with the King's own hand; that "it ſhould be ſigned by the Queen-Mother, and "the Princes of the blood, and the Crown-officers; "that it ſhould be regiſtred in the Parliaments, after "the memorial he had drawn up, in order to get "himſelf diſpenſed from doing it; and that it ſhould "be inſerted in the archives of the chief cities of the "Kingdom. Moſt of theſe things were granted him, "but he at the ſame time was reproached, viz. with "affecting to ſignalize himſelf at his Sovereign's expence; and that he ought to imitate the conduct "of Marſhal de Briſſac, who, on a like occaſion, "was contented to repeat his moſt humble remonſtrances, and to deſire that a ſucceſſor ſhould be "ſent him (40)."

(36) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. tom. 5. pag. 41.

(37) Addit. à Caſtelnau, tom. 1. pag. 751.

(38) See in the Addit. aux Mem. de Caſtelnau, tom. 1. pag. 847, & ſeq; what Brantome ſays on all this matter, in the Elogium of Imbert de la Platiere, Lord of Bourdillon.

(39) Varillas, Hiſt. de Henry III, liv. 1. pag. 74.

(40) Ibid. pag. 84.

§ (a) See the Memoirs, Tom. I. to page 68. REM. CRIT.]

[H] . . . . the murmurs againſt the peace extended even to her.] Brantome, who lived at that time, informs us very bluntly of ſome circumſtances of theſe murmurings. "This marriage . . . . . coſt France "very dear, as being obliged to give up in an "hour, all that had been conquered and perſerved "in Piedmont and Savoy during thirty years: for "King Henry was ſo ardently deſirous of peace, and "had ſo ſtrong an affection for his ſiſter, that he "would not ſpare any thing in the world to marry "her advantageouſly; nevertheleſs, the greateſt part "of France and Piedmont murmured at it, and ſaid "it was a little too much. Others thought it very "odd, and others again altogether incredible, till "ſuch time as they had ſeen it with their own eyes; "and even foreigners laughed at us; and thoſe who "bore the greateſt love to France, and were moſt "ſollicitous for its proſperity, moan'd and wept on "that account, and particularly the people of Piedmont, who would not return to their firſt maſter. "Can the Dukes of Savoy juſtly ſtile themſelves ſovereigns and Lords of Piedmont, ſince the Kings "of France were formerly, and are ſtill, rightful "Lords, titulars and maſters of it, as juſtly appertaining to them? As Soldiers, &c. who had been "ſo long uſed to garriſons; to the eaſe and delicate "ſuſtenance of that country; there will be no need "to aſk what they ſaid of it; in what manner they "inveighed againſt, and lamented on that account; "and what fine ſpeeches they made on this occaſion, "not only Gaſcoons but others. Hey-day, ſaid theſe "people, muſt ſo many fine and ſpacious tracts of land "be given up, for a little bit of fleſh lying between "that woman's thighs? Others cried, ſhe had done "mighty well to keep her fine maidenhead forty five "years (41), to loſe it at laſt for the ruin of France. "Had the people, in that age, been as diſorderly, "rebellious, and ſeditious as we have ſince ſeen them "during our civil wars; be aſſured that every one "would have joined in it, and have ſeized on towns "and ſtrong holds, whence it had been very difficult "to diſlodge them (42)." Is it not very ſtrange that Le Laboureur, who had read thoſe words but a little before, ſhould nevertheleſs obſerve, "That only cer"tain Politicians found fault with her being married "at ſo dear a rate; but that ALL THE REST were "very glad that ſhe carried with herſelf a recompence "ſuitable to her merit; and that ſhe had got for "her dowry, the territories of which her huſband "had been diſpoſſeſſed (43)." This is exactly in the ſtile and language of a Panegyriſt; ſuch a man, without being inveſted with the leaſt authority, undertakes notwithſtanding, in the name of the public, to make all the ſteps neceſſary to a Panegyric; not once enquiring whether the incident be refuted by authors of the greateſt credit. Mezerai who wrote an Hiſtory and not a Panegyric, conforms much better to the teſtimony of Brantome than Le Laboureur (44).

(41) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. tom. 4. pag. 722, ſays, that ſhe was in her 37th year. He is in the right, for ſhe was born the 5th of June 1523. See the citation (34) above.

(42) Brantôme, Mem. des Femmes illuſtres, pag. m. 325.

(43) Addit. aux Mem. de Caſtelnau, tom. 1. pag. 751.

(44) Remark [C] citation (7) above.

I cannot read the following words, "and even "foreigners laugh'd at us (45)," without crying out, what a fine time was this for the writers of the Low-Countries, and, for any others who bore no good will to France? What inſults had they not a fair opportunity of throwing out upon it? and what rhodomontades had they not room to publiſh? I imagine that their humours differed very little from the people of the preſent age.

(45) Brantome, Mem. des Femmes illuſtres, tom. 1. pag. 315.

[I] A modern author had no reaſon to attempt a juſtification of the conduct of Henry III.] This modern is Coſtar's antagoniſt. The latter was offended (46) that Voiture

(46) Suite de la Defenſe de Voiture, pag. 172.

Henry II, beſides the peace of Cateau. Another monument is, his ſuffering his favourites to go unpuniſhed after their having amaſſed prodigious eſtates by the moſt unjuſt methods [K]. He died of the wound he had received in a tournament (g), a ſtrange accident, and ſtill more extraordinary than fatal; for I believe that no other Monarch ever loſt his life on ſuch an occaſion. It would have been infinitely more glorious for him to have loſt it in battle, than in thoſe mock-fights, or peaceful combats, wherein he, beſides, behaved in a manner no ways ſuitable to his dignity; and more like a private young Gentleman, than agreeable to kingly majeſty [L]. His unhappy end occaſioned many reflections [M]. He (g) He was wounded the 30th of June 1559, and died the 10th of July of that year.

Voiture was cenſured for having ſaid ſomewhere, by way of raillery, that he valued a good ſoop, more than Pliny's Panegyric, and the longeſt Oration of Iſocrates. Mr. de Girac, continues he, imagines that Mr. de Voiture is as ſtupid as that wretch, who ſold his birth-right for a meſs of pottage, and that Prince of ours, who gave up Pignerol for a good meal. To what lengths will not people go, when they are heated by a quarrel? The ſlighteſt faults which eſcape an antagoniſt are made crimes. Girac, who, with regard to another man, would very probably have contented himſelf with repreſenting, that the word fool was too ſtrong to be employed to expreſs the fault of a Prince, charges Coſtar, his enemy, as guilty of high treaſon. Let us duly weigh all his words (47). "He has preſumed, by an "attempt that deſerves the ſevereſt puniſhment, to "dart his venom and malice againſt the ſacred perſon "of our Kings. Does not he compare (†) the libe-"rality of Henry III to Eſau's folly, who gave up his "birth-right for a meſs of pottage? Does not he call "that great Prince a fool, for yielding up Pignerol "to the Duke of Savoy, who had the honour to be "his uncle; and from whom he expected great ſuc-"cours, in the urgent neceſſity of his affairs? Was "Lewis XII ever taken for a fool, he who preſented "the King of Navarre with the Principality of Bearn, "and who curtailed his dominions of ſo important "a territory? Did any one accuſe the Romans (‡) of "folly, though they often made donations of whole "Provinces and Kingdoms to various Kings their "friends? And if Alexander, as Plutarch tells us, "would willingly have given up the iſland of Cy-"prus, by way of reward for ſome verſes which had "been wrote in his praiſe; ſhall a King of France "be looked upon as a madman by perſons who have "the leaſt glimmering of ſenſe, for having given up "a town to a relation of his, who had given him a "coſtly and moſt magnificent reception in his domini-"ons?" A little after he aſks, if Coſtar is not afraid of being puniſhed, in the reign of a Prince, ſo nearly related to Henry, who had not been dead ſo great a number of years? and he cites what Guicciardine and Paulus Jovius obſerves, concerning the prodigious veneration which the French have for their Monarch. He often repeats the ſame accuſation (48); but this we muſt aſcribe to the ſymptoms of a kind of fever, which ſeizes writers when they are on replies or rejoynders.

(47) Replique à Coſtar, Sect. 1. pag. 8.

(†) Pag. 173.

(‡) See Valer. Maxim. lib. 4. cap. 8. Livy, lib. 30, &c. Plut. of the Fortune of Alexand. Diſc. 2.

(48) See pag. 91. where he inſinuates that Coſtar deſerved to have been impriſoned in the Baſtile, for calling Henry III fool. See alſo pag. 190.

Though he had given us a catalogue of all the Monarchs, who, from the beginning of the world, have given away Cities, Provinces, or even Kingdoms; he never would have been able to perſuade men of ſenſe and experienced Politicians, that ſuch preſents were ever made, in circumſtances, like to thoſe of Henry III, without the donor's being guilty of folly. The laſt mentioned King gave up Pignerol in favour of a Prince who owed his glorious re-eſtabliſhment to the Spaniards; and who, in his heart, was a Spaniard to all intents and purpoſes (49); that is, was always ready to favour the moſt formidable enemy which France had at that time. It was to ſuch a Duke of Savoy that a town was delivered up, which opened a way into the Kingdom, to the enemy; and which kept the ſaid Duke in awe, and prevented his joining in alliance with Spain. But, will it be ſaid, the Duke had been ſo extremely courteous to Henry III, and ſpent ſuch vaſt ſums in regaling him at Turin; therefore ought he not to have been looked upon as a good and conſtant friend? I anſwer that he ought not. None but ignorant people would rely on the conſtancy of friendſhip between Sovereigns. To ſee the preſents which they beſtow on one another, and their intercourſe of letters in time of peace, one would ſwear that they are moſt ſincere friends, and will love one another as long as they live; but it is very often true, that they are negotiating at the ſame time a treaty in order to a rupture; and intend to ſerve one another no longer, till they ſhall have an opportunity of taking advantage of ſome hoſtility. This was never verified ſo much, as in the time that Henry III was ſo prodigiouſly careſſed at the Duke of Savoy's court. The Duke was entirely diſpoſed to take advantage of the confuſions which he ſaw in France, and to call in the aid of the Spaniard for that purpoſe; and he left a ſon who inherited this paſſion, and who not only poſſeſſed himſelf of the Marquiſate of Saluces; but alſo projected conſpiracies, the deſign of which was to diſmember France, and totally ruin the Monarchy (50). Can we therefore enough blame this blunder of Henry III? See the remark [F] of this article.

(49) So long as ſhe lived, ſhe always perſuaded, and prevailed with the Duke of Savoy her huſband, to continue in peace; and that he, who was a Spaniard, ſhould not engage in any manner againſt France, as he did after her death. Brantôme, Femmes illuſtres, pag. 328.

(50) See the article of GONTAUT (Charles) remark [D].

[K] His favourites . . . amaſſed prodigious eſtates by the moſt unjuſt methods.] For fear leſt I ſhould be accuſed of exaggerating matters, I ſhall employ Mezerai's words. "The expences which thoſe who diſ-"poſed of his favour and affairs put him to, and a "conſiderable part whereof they turned to their own "profit, were ſo prodigious, that he oppreſſed the "Kingdom with grievous taxes, and run above forty "millions of livres in debt. Farther, they alſo ru-"ined a great number of families by their accurſed "avarice. The invention of farmings and monopo-"lies not being at that time ſo common, they made "uſe of another method which was no leſs pernicious, "viz. their impeaching the moſt wealthy perſons up-"on pretence of their being guilty of hereſy and o-"ther crimes; and to ſearch out for, or make de-"linquents, in order to have the fleecing of them, "or to ſearch out for, or obtain their pardon by their "interceſſion (51)," This Hiſtorian had juſt before obſerved, that Henry II is not accuſed of any other fault, than of being too eaſy, and more liable to be governed than to govern himſelf. This is one of the greateſt imperfections a King can have, becauſe generally thoſe who govern him, when he is in the condition in queſtion, do more miſchief than he himſelf would commit, were he to govern them.

(51) Hiſt. de France, tom. 2. pag. 1138.

[L] He behaved in a manner no ways ſuitable to his dignity; and more like a private young Gentleman, than agreeable to kingly majeſty.] This was the judgment of prudent and ſagacious perſons, as we are told by a contemporary author (52). "A tournament was been "ordered to be ſolemnized in St. Anthony's Street "before the Tournelles, with all imaginable pomp "and magnificence; and this becauſe the King was "to be one of the combatants, followed by the Dukes "of Ferrara, Guiſe and Nemours; a circumſtance "which appeared ſtrange to ſeveral perſons of good "ſenſe, ſaying, that it became the majeſty of Kings "to be the judge of combats, and not to enter the "liſts. Even, in old romances, Kings, on ſuch oc-"caſions, never attempted acts of common Knights; "but, either diſguiſed themſelves, in caſe they were "deſirous of entring the liſts; or kept away entirely "from thoſe divertiſements: however, ſuch was the "King's ill fate, that he was determined to have the "honour of running firſt in the tournament; and I "believe the motive which prompted him to this, "was, to ſhew foreigners how dexterous he was in the "handling of arms, and the management of a horſe; "ſo that thoſe who were near him did not dare to "divert him from that enterprize; a circumſtance "which afterwards exhibited a wretched ſpectacle to "the French Nation.

(52) Paſquier, Lettres, liv. 4. tom. 1. pag. 172, 173.

[M] His unhappy end occaſioned many reflections.] I will not produce the teſtimony of Proteſtant writers; it is plain that that of Paſquier will be more efficacious (53). "In this manner our good King Henry "came to his end; and as the common people natu-"rally keep their eyes fixed on the actions of their "King; ſo King Henry's death was not ſuffered to "paſs

(53) Ibid. pag. 174, 175.

He never ſpoke after his wound [N]; ſo that all the ſayings, which have been aſcribed to him, are mere fictions. The ſincerity and frankneſs with which the French Hiſtorians have owned the errors of that Monarch, and the ignominy he brought upon the Nation, in preferring the counſels of the Conſtable, to the remonſtrances of the Duke of Guiſe [O], is not much found in other Hiſtorians. The Proteſtants imagined that his death would be of great advantage to them; but they were treated with ſtill greater ſeverity under Francis II; and, humanly ſpeaking, had Francis II lived two years longer, they would have been extirpated from France [P]. They are accuſed of diſcovering too inſolent a joy, when news was brought of Henry's tragical end [Q]; but

" paſs without the commentaries and interpretations of " ſome people; for to inform you, in an ample man- " ner, of the ſeveral tranſactions which happened in " France; as ſoon as the peace was concluded, the " Cardinal of Lorrain, who had been one of the chief " mediators of it, declared in open Parliament, that " it was the King's opinion it ſhould be made on any " terms, in order that he might from that time be " more at liberty, to attend to the baniſhment and " extirpation of Calvin's hereſy. And indeed, he " came in perſon, the 10th of June, into Parliament, " there to take the opinion of every Counſellor or " Member, with reſpect to the puniſhment of here- " tics. Many gave theirs with pretty great freedom; " ſome thinking that he ſhould ſuſpend the puniſh- " ment of them, till the deciſion ſhould be made in " a general Council, which they ſaid was neceſſary. " Upon this the King, being fired with a great and " juſt paſſion, immediately commanded Montgom- " mery to ſeize ſome of the Aſſembly, who had de- " livered their opinions more freely than was agree- " able to him, and theſe were immediately carried " priſoners to the Baſtile: wherefore, ſaid theſe new " Commentators, this evil befel the King, by a juſt " judgment of God, as a vengeance upon him for " unjuſtly impriſoning the perſons abovementioned: " that opinions ought to be free, and not founded by " a King, in order, after he has heard them, to com- " mit the Counſellors or Members cloſe priſoners: " that God had chaſtiſed him by the hand of that Mi- " niſter, whom he had employed to impriſon the " Counſellors in queſtion. Likewiſe, that in the ſame " manner as, on the 10th of June, he had brought " that ignominy on the Parliament; ſo, on the 10th of " July following, day for day, he loſt his life. Thus " did ſome of the people diſcourſe concerning his " death, accordingly as they were prompted by their ſe- " veral paſſions; not knowing that the myſteries of God " are entirely concealed from us; and ſuch as, by reaſon " of the weakneſs of our ſenſes, we oftner refer to " our own opinions than to truth." Anne du Bourg was one of thoſe whom the King cauſed to be impri- ſoned in the Baſtile, and againſt whom he was moſt exaſperated; " for he declared, among other ex- " preſſions, that both his eyes ſhould ſee him burnt " (54)." " Fra-Paolo obſerves, that the Queen-mother " was furiouſly enraged at the Lutherans, for publiſh- " ing in their manifeſtos, that the wound which the " King her huſband had received in the eye, was a " puniſhment ſent from God, for his threatning Anne " du Bourg, that he would ſee him burnt (55)."

(54) La Place, Comment. de l'eſtat de la Religion & Republique, folio m. 19.

(55) Fra-Paolo, Hiſt. du Concile de Trente, liv. 5.

[N] He never ſpoke after his wound.] Moſt Hiſ- torians ſay, that a ſplinter of Montgommery's lance flew into King Henry's eye, and wounded him mor- tally; but what Mezerai ſays on that ſubject is more probable. " It happened, ſays he (56), that Mont- " gommery having broke his lance in the breaſt-plate, " could not keep back his arm; ſo that he gave him " a thruſt in the right eye, with the ſtump of it which " was left in his hand, with ſo much violence, that a " ſplinter of it forced itſelf quite to the back part of " his head." In this manner Montgommery might appear infinitely more criminal, although he had not, in reality, perpetrated this action voluntarily. The Hiſtorian adds: " It was not certainly known, even " at that time, whether the King ſpoke or not, after " he had received the wound; the truth being diſ- " guiſed by the perſons who were about him, or ren- " dered doubtful by the different reports which were " ſpread concerning it, by thoſe who had different " intereſts. Some relate certain fine remonſtrances he " made to his ſon; others even add, that when he " was carried out of the Liſts, he looked towards the " Baſtile, where the priſoners of Parliament were con- " fined; and ſaid, with a deep ſigh, that he was a- " fraid he had wrongfully puniſhed innocent men; " but that Cardinal de Lorrain correcting him im- " mediately, exhorted him to reject that thought, as " being ſuggeſted by the tempter. Others aſſert, " that he loſt his ſpeech and all his ſenſes the inſtant " he was ſtruck (57), a circumſtance that is confirm- " ed by the arguments of many Phyſicians, who de- " clare, that a man muſt neceſſarily be ſtruck dumb, " when his brain is wounded or very violently ſhaken." After this, what man would credit the ſtories which are ſpread, concerning the laſt words of dying per- ſons (58)?

(56) Mezerai, Hiſt. de France, tom. 2. p. 1138.

(57) Mezerai, in his Abregé Chronol. tom. 4. pag. 721. is fixed in this opinion. The blow, ſays he, was ſo violent, that it threw him on the ground, and deprived him of his ſenſes and ſpeech, which he never recovered after. This proves the falſity of the different ſpeeches which men, ac- cording to their ſeveral intereſts and paſſions, put into his mouth.

[O] He preferred the counſels of the Conſtable, to the remonſtrances of the Duke of Guiſe.] The Conſtable, who had been priſoner ever ſince the battle of St. Quentin, reſolved to recover his liberty at any rate. The Guiſes made too much advantage of his abſence; and thence it was that he negotiated a treaty of peace, in which he granted all the demands required by the Spaniards; and he knew ſo well the foible of the King his maſter, that he eaſily prevailed with him to conſent to this treaty. It was to no purpoſe that the Duke of Guiſe employed a thouſand demonſtrative reaſons (59), to make the King reject a peace which ſacrificed the glory of the French name to the Spani- ards; and more ſtrong-holds in one day, than they could have conquered in one century; for the King was deaf to all this. I muſt introduce a remark of Brantome (60). He pretends that Henry II, wearied out, and diſguſted at the inſolence of the Guiſes, re- ſolved to ſend them home; but that, in order to ef- fect this, he wanted to get back his Conſtable and put an end to the war; he therefore wrote to him, and to Marſhal de St. Andre (61), to negotiate a peace, which they did to our diſadvantage. We muſt not omit the other artifice: theſe two priſoners and the Ducheſs of Valentinois enriched themſelves with the confiſcated eſtates of the heretics; who doubts that, in order to obtain peace, they obliged the King to accept of any conditions, in order to have an opportunity of carrying on, at full eaſe, the affairs of the inquiſition? It is certain (62) that the intrigues and cabals of the Ducheſs in queſtion, ſeconded by the artifices of the Conſtable, dragged the King to that precipice.

(58) See the re- mark [F] of FRANCIS Duke of Guiſe.

(59) Mezerai re- lates them at large. See above, the remark [C] between the cita- tions (8) and (9).

(60) Eloge de Henri II, tom. 2. pag. 52.

(61) He was a priſoner as well as the Conſtable.

(62) See Belcari- us, lib. 28. num. 17. & ſeq.

[P] Had Francis II lived two years longer, the Proteſtants would have been extirpated from France.] This is the opinion of Beza; for having diſplayed all the reaſons which promiſed them more happy times after King Henry's death, he adds (63): " But God " had ordered it quite otherwiſe, being reſolved to " have the honour which belongs to him, of re-eſta- " bliſhing his church by his ſingle arm and ſtrength " alone, which is ſo much the more wonderful, as " the reſiſtance of the greateſt men had been moſt " furious and frantic againſt it. It was therefore un- " der the reign of Francis II, ſucceſſor to Henry, that " Satan's rage roſe to an extreme height; ſo that one " might ſay of this reign, which laſted but ſeventeen " months, what Jeſus Chriſt ſays in St. Matthew, " viz. that unleſs thoſe days had been ſhortened, no " man could be ſaved; but that for the elects ſake " they were ſhortened." A particular account of the meaſures which had been taken to ruin the party en- tirely, is ſeen in a few pages in Maimbourg (64). Take particular notice of the words which he prefixes to this detail (65).

(63) Hiſt. Eccleſ. des Egliſes Ré- formées, liv. 3. pag. 212.

(64) Hiſt. du Calviniſme, liv. 2. pag. 157, 158, 159.

(65) All things were then (i. e. when Francis II died) ſo diſpoſed for the entire ruin of Calviniſm in France, that it ſeemed quite in- evitable. Ibid. pag. 157.

(66) In the re- mark [D].

[Q] They are accuſed of diſcovering too inſolent a joy, when news was brought of Henry's tragical end.] I have already cited (66) Maimbourg upon this; and here follow Mezerai's words (67). " As he was a " very

(67) Hiſt. of France, tom. 2. pag. 1139.

but no one could have expreſſed himſelf with greater modeſty on this ſubject, than Beza (b). I forgot to obſerve that this Prince, when but Dauphin of France, lived in ſuch a miſunderſtanding with the Duke of Orleans his brother, as coſt France dear [R], and would have proved much more fatal to it, had not this Duke died. Who knows whether he would not have diſputed the Crown with him [S]? The Ladies had been ſo bold, as to ſpread about ſuch horoſcopes, as could not but foment the jealouſy of theſe two brothers. They had ſhewn theſe pretended aſtrological predictions to Francis I. They were refuted by Caſtellan [T], but were refuted ſtill better by the event. It is related by ſeveral authors, that an Aſtrologer, famous for calculating nativities, had foretold that Henry II ſhould be killed in a duel [U]. This prediction is told ſo variouſly, that (b) See the remark [Q] towards the cloſe.

" very good Prince, he was bewailed by all his peo" ple, thoſe of the new ſect excepted, who imagined
" that his death would be their liberty and advance" ment. They rejoiced ſo much at this, that they " made ſongs upon it, and thankſgivings to God;
" or rather blaſphemies, they preſuming to ſay, that
" the Almighty had ſtricken him under the walls of " the Baſtile, where he kept the innocent impriſon-
" ed." It muſt not be thought ſtrange, that a few indiſcreet people ſhould be found, among a great number of people; but the Hiſtorian of the reformed Churches deſerves great applauſe, for obſerving the moderation which is ſeen in the following words. There remained nothing, in all probability, but a moſt horrid ſpectacle of extreme deſolation, when the Lord prevented it: for King Henry, in the midſt of his peaceful triumphs, joined with marriage, ... tilting in the Liſts, ... was ſtruck with the counter-ſtroke of a lance ... and died the 10th of July following. Strange things were obſerved in the ſo-much-unexpected death of this Prince, who was naturally gracious and kind, but neither ſaw or heard, but by the eyes and ears of thoſe, who engroſſed and governed him at pleaſure (68).

(68) Theod. de Beze, Hiſt. Eccleſ. des Egliſes reformées, liv. 2. pag. 195.

[R] He lived in ſuch a miſunderſtanding with the Duke of Orleans his brother, as coſt France dear.] The Dauphin's faction was headed by Diana of Poitiers, miſtreſs to that Prince. This was the reaſon why the Ducheſs d'Etampes ſided with the Duke of Orleans. I have ſpoke elſewhere (69) of the prejudice, which the intrigues of that Ducheſs did to the affairs of Francis I.

(69) In the remark [R] of the article FRANCIS I See alſo the remark [E] of the article ETAMPES.

[S] Who knows whether the Duke of Orleans would not have diſputed the Crown with him?] Tavanes, who was in his ſervice, and had an inſatiable deſire to raiſe himſelf in the world, conceived great hopes from the ambition of this Prince, " who hoped to " make himſelf Sovereign in the life-time of the " Dauphin his elder brother. Indeed the Emperor
" Charles V had flattered him with ſuch ſtrong hopes
" of this, as greatly raiſed his courage: and there" fore being near expiring at Farenmonſtier, where " he had raſhly defied death, in a houſe infected with
" the plague, whither he went purpoſely on that ac-
" count; Tavanes, his confident, coming to tell him
" of the exploit he had performed on the garriſon
" of Calais, whereof he had killed eight hundred " men, and taken four hundred priſoners, he ſpoke
" as follows to him, Friend, I am a dead man; all our " deſigns are defeated; my great ſorrow is, that it is " not in my power to reward your deſert (70)."

(70) Le Laboureur, Addit. aux Mem. de Caſtelnau, tom. 2. pag. 572.

[T] The Ladies ... had ſhewn theſe pretended Aſtrological predictions to Francis I. They were refuted by Caſtellan.] About two years before this Prince died, certain ladies, who had a great ſhare in his friendſhip, told him that the ſtars promiſed the Duke of Orleans great conqueſts; and foretold, that the Dauphin would not perform any action worthy a King of France. They talked in this manner, becauſe they knew Francis I had a particular affection for this Duke, and they flattered themſelves with the hopes of enriching themſelves, by the intereſt and credit of this young Prince. They uſed to applaud him; praiſe him to the ſkies, and exclaim againſt the Dauphin as having a dull, heavy genius, and born under the moſt ill-fated planet poſſible. Animo lento & ſopito, infelici quodam ſyderum poſitu natum (71). But Caſtellan could not bear either their flatteries or their calumnies; he turned to thoſe Ladies, when frowning upon them, he told them, that it was difficult to learn Aſtrology, and more ſo, to adapt it to human events. He added, that the vanity and impudence of Aſtrologers rendered them unworthy of all belief; that he himſelf had formerly ſtudied thoſe things under Turreau (72), and had made as much progreſs in them as any other perſon; that by way of amuſement, and to ſatisfy the curious, he had calculated, with the utmoſt accuracy, the nativity of the Dauphin, and that of the Duke of Orleans; and that, according to the rules of that Science of the Stars, he had found that the Duke would have a good, a great, and martial ſoul; would be ſupported by the ſtrength and friendſhip of the Great; and attain to a very exalted pitch of power (73): That the Dauphin would not be inferior to him, either in military virtue, or any other of the virtues worthy of a Prince; that he would enjoy a very happy reign, and triumph over all his enemies (74): but that as all theſe ways of foretelling things were vain and doubtful, the ſureſt way would be to ground one's conjectures, with regard to the future fortune of both thoſe Princes, on their genius and morals. The King gave a favourable attention to all this; but the flatterers of both ſexes were exaſperated at it. The Dauphin being informed what Caſtellan had ſaid, was extremely well pleaſed; not at his having been applauded, but becauſe his innocence had been ſpoke in favour of, before Francis I, to whom he was afraid of being made odious (75), apud quem ne in ſuſpicionem aut odium traheretur metuebat (76). Ye curſed peſts of courts! who can deteſt you ſufficiently! How malicious was it to cheriſh and foment, by ſo many artifices, the jealouſy of two brothers! I muſt not omit, that Caſtellan's Aſtrology proved falſe with regard to the Duke of Orleans. He died a little after; and yet it had preſaged his riſing to very exalted power, which Caſtellan had conſidered as a thing to come; and he could not conſider it otherwiſe at that time; for this Prince died nineteen months or thereabouts before his father, and was not then twenty four years of age.

(71) Gallandius, in Vita Caſtellani, pag. 73.

(72) See the remark [C] of the article CASTELLAN.

(73) Valde potentem futurum. Galland. in Vita Caſtellani, pag. 73.

(74) Suorum boſtium late victorem feliciſſimum regnaturum comperiſſe. Idem, ibid.

(75) Extracted from the Life of Peter Caſtelnau, written by Gallandius, chap. 44. pag. 72, & ſeq.

(76) Idem, ibid. pag. 74.

[U] It is related by ſeveral authors, that an Aſtrologer famous for calculating nativities, had foretold that Henry II ſhould be killed in a duel.] Let us ſee what Brantome ſays of this matter (77). " I have heard,
" and know it from good hands, that ſome years be" fore he died, ſome ſay certain days, a Sooth-
" ſayer calculated his nativity, and preſented him
" with it, and that it informed him, he would die in " a duel and ſingle combat. The Conſtable was there
" preſent, to whom the King ſaid; ſee, friend,
" what death it is propheſied I ſhall come to. Sir!
" replied the Conſtable, can you credit theſe ſcoundrels,
" who are only liars and braggadochios? Throw that " prediction into the fire. Friend, replied the King,
" for what reaſon? they ſometimes tell the truth;
" I do not care whether I die that death or another;
" nay I ſhould rather chooſe it, and to die by the " hand of any man ſoever, provided he be true and " valiant, and glory may thereby accrue to me; and " therefore, without regarding what the Conſtable had
" ſaid, he gave the prediction in queſtion to Mr. de
" l'Aubeſpine, ordering him to lay it by, till ſuch
" time as he ſhould ask for it .... (78). Now the " King was no ſooner wounded, dreſſed and carried
" to his chamber, but the Conſtable calling to mind
" this prophecy, called Mr. de l'Aubeſpine, and or" dered him to fetch it, which he did; and the in" ſtant he ſaw and read it, the tears ſtarted from his " eyes. Alas! ſaid he, this is the duel and ſingle
" combat by which he was to die; it is done, and he " is dead. The Soothſayer could not poſſibly have
" ſpoke better and clearer than he has done; although
" ſuch men, either from their natural diſpoſition, or
" by the inſpiration of their familiar ſpirit, are al" ways ambiguous and dubious; and thus they al-

(77) Brant. Diſc. du Henry II, in tom. 2. of his Memoirs, pag. 50.

(78) Idem, pag. 52.

that this circumſtance alone would make one doubt whether it was made by Aſtrologers [X]. He had ten legitimate, and two natural children. Some pretty remarkable particulars

" ways ſpeak ambiguouſly; but the Soothſayer ſpoke " very plainly in the prophecy. Curſed be the Sooth- " ſayer who propheſied ſo truly and fatally." Thuanus does not, like Brantome, omit the Soothſayer's name: He calls him Luke Gauric; and adds, that the nativity in queſtion was calculated at the requeſt of Catherine of Medicis; and that it was laughed at, till the King had been wounded in the manner above deſcribed. Thuanus mentions this prophecy as a certain truth (79); Genus ac tempus mortis à Luca Gaurico Mathematico Pauli Tertii perfamiliari prædictum CONSTAT, cum Catharina uxor futuri anxia fœmina eum ſuper viri ac filiorum fata conſuleret, fore nimirum ut in duello caderet, vulnere in oculo accepto: quod irriſum à multis ac pro tempore neglectum fuit, quaſi regis conditio ſupra duellum poſita eſſet (79); but thoſe who cite Luke Gauric's own words, taken from the horoſcope of Henry II, deſerve more credit. Now it is certain, by theſe words, that the Soothſayer promiſed this Monarch a long life, and did not threaten him with a fatal duel. Gaſſendi did not fail to cite this great example; and adds, that Cardan was no leſs miſtaken in the horoſcope of the Prince in queſtion, than Gauric (80). Conſtat ex Hiſtoriis Henricum II Galliæ noſtræ Regem obiiſſe anno ætatis quadrageſimo completo, ex oculari vulnere. En autem de eo Gaurici Vaticinium in Prognoſtico anni MDLVI. Quoniam in ſui natalis penè divini ſchemate habuit Solem ſub gradibus ſuæ altitudinis Veneri ferè partiliter alligatum; quin & Lunam atque Venerem ſub Arietis Aſteriſmo, per Horoſcopum progredienteis; vivet fœliciſſimus annos LXX, deductis duobus menſibus; ſi nutu divino ſuperaverit annos inſalubreis LXIII, LXIV, & ſemper vivet in terris pientiſſimus. Paria ſunt quæ idem Gauricus anteà ederat, quæque à Sixto (81) referuntur. En & vaticinium Cardani, cùm de eodem Henrico loquens, Erit certe, inquit, ſenecta tanto felicior quanto etiam plura ſuerit expertus, &c. i. e. " It is manifeſt from Hiſtory, that " Henry II, King of France, died of a wound he " had received in his eye, when he was juſt turned of " forty: Now here follows Gauric's prophecy con- " cerning him, in his prognoſtic for the year 1556. " Becauſe, in the ſcheme of his almoſt divine nativity, " he had the ſun very near in partile aſpect with Venus, " and the Moon and Venus in the conſtellation of Aries, " proceeding through his Horoſcope, he ſhall live ſeventy " years, wanting two months, in a moſt happy manner, " provided that, by the divine favour, he lives beyond " the critical years 63 and 64, and ſhall be conſpicuous " for his ſanctity. Gauric had publiſhed the ſame things " before, as they are related by Sixtus ab Heminga. " Here follows likewiſe a prediction of Cardan, ſpeak- " ing of Henry II in queſtion. His old age, ſays he, " ſhall be ſo much the more happy, as he ſhall have ex- " perienced, &c." This is a matter of ſo much importance, that it deſerves a ſecond teſtimony: The perſon I mean is not one who depends upon hearſay, he relating what he has read in the very writings of Gauric, where he ſaw the moſt happy predictions that could be to Henry II. Et memini in Italia quaſdam Ephemerides annuas Lucæ Gaurici vidiſſe, in quibus cùm pro libertate ſcribendi quæ tunc vigebat, ſingulis Principibus Europæis maximas felicitates, aut graviſſima damna minaretur, nihil poſtea perinde cecidit, ac ipſe futurum prædixerat. Atque utinam Henricus ſecundus, quem ille extrema tantum ſenectute, & morbo placidiſſimo fatis conceſſurum dixerat, non ætate potius florenti, & tam acerbo, præcipitique fato nobis ereptus fuiſſet (82). i. e. " I remember to have ſeen, in Italy, certain annual " Ephemerides of Luke Gauric, wherein, according to " the great liberty which writers took in thoſe times, " he had propheſied, to all the Princes of Europe, " either very great happineſs or grievous calamities, " but nothing came to paſs of what he had foretold. " And would to heavens that Henry II, who, ac- " cording to this Diviner, was to live to an extreme " old age, and to die of a very eaſy and moſt gentle " diſtemper, had not on the contrary been ſnatched " away in the flower of his age, and by ſo ſudden and " cruel a death."

[X] This prediction is told ſo variouſly, that this circumſtance alone would make one doubt whether it was made by Aſtrologers.] Let us ſee Stephen Paſquier's relation; we there do not find ſo much as Gauric's name, the whole relating to other perſons and circumſtances. " And indeed one would imagine that long " before . . . . . this diſaſter had been privately prog- " noſticated, to the King, by Jerom Cardan, who, " in a ſcheme which he erected of his nativity, de- " clared, that all things would be ſmooth and eaſy in " the beginning of his reign; but aſſured him that, " in the decline of his life, he would come to a fatal " end; and ſuch as, for the grandeur of a King, he " thought himſelf obliged to conceal. A report was " likewiſe ſpread at Court, that at the return of " the Cardinal of Lorrain from his laſt journey to Ita- " ly, a letter was preſented him, ſent from a Jew in " Rome, greatly ſkilled and practiſed in thoſe fan- " taſtical predictions and divinations, which ſtrenuouſly " exhorted him to beware of a ſingle combat. The " King having heard theſe letters read, diſregarded " them as fictitious; never imagining that, conſidering " his exalted ſtation, it would be poſſible for him to " be ever engaged in a duel. Theſe letters, as we are " told, were then laid up by Mr. de l'Aubeſpine, who, " after the King's death, ſhewed them to ſeveral " Lords, as it is related. Beſides it is added (but I will " not aſſert it as fact) that the Queen remembring theſe " Letters, and the time which had been prognoſticated, " beſought him ſeveral times, that ſince the two pre- " ceding days had been paſt to his honour and ſa- " tisfaction, he would be pleaſed, the third day, not " to enter the liſts, in order to avoid any inconvenience " that might happen, and appoint ſome other perſon " in his ſtead. The King however would not con- " ſent to this; and on the very day he was " wounded, the Queen having ſent a Gentleman from " her ſeat purpoſely to intreat him, in her name, to " be ſatisfied with what he had already performed; " he ſent word, that he would run but once more, " in which, as ill fortune would have it, he was " wounded (83)." It muſt be particularly obſerved, that Paſquier relates theſe particulars only upon a very random hearſay, of the truth whereof he himſelf was not perſuaded. But obſerve ſtill further, that it is not ſaid that Cardan publiſhed this pretended horoſcope after the death of Henry II. He nevertheleſs was vain enough, and ſufficiently bigotted to Aſtrology (84), to have taken to himſelf the glory of ſo ſurprizing a diſcovery. Nothing could have ennobled his art ſo much as this. He could have called upon the teſtimony of the Conſtable of Mommorenci, Catherine of Medicis, l'Aubeſpine, and ſome other perſons of the higheſt rank. Whence could it be, that he ſhould have neglected the intereſts of his glory and thoſe of his purſe (85) to ſo great a degree? The reader has ſeen in the preceding remark, what Gauric promiſed Henry II in 1556; let us now ſee what he had foretold him for four years before: Inclitiſſimus Gallorum Rex, (this is what he has put at the foot of the ſcheme of that King's nativity, in the Venice edition of 1552, printed by Curtius Trojanus Navo,) Henricus Chriſtianiſſimus, erit Regum quorundam Imperator, ante ſupremos cineres ad rerum culmina perveniet, fœliciſſimamque ac viridem ſenectam, uti colligitur ex Sole, Venere & Luna horoſcopantibus, & potiſſimum Sole in ſuo trono partiliter ſupputato. In civitatibus Arieti ſubjectis maximum ſortietur dominium, ſi forte ſuperaverit ſuæ ætatis annos 56, 63, 64, ad annos 69 Menſes 10 dies 12 facili ac fœlici tramite perducetur (86). i. e. " The moſt renowned King of " France, the moſt Chriſtian King Henry, ſhall be " Monarch over certain Kings; ſhall attain the " higheſt pitch of power; and live to a vigorous old " age, as is manifeſt from the Sun, Venus, and the " Moon ariſing at his nativity, and eſpecially from " the Sun being in his exaltation, in a partile aſ- " pect. He ſhall obtain very great dominion in the " cities ſubject to Aries, if he does but live beyond " the 56th, 63, 64th year, he ſhall attain to the 69th " year, 10 months, and 12 days of his age, and ſhall " enjoy very great happineſs."

(79) Thuan. lib. 22. ſub fin.

(80) Gaſſend. Sect. 2. Phyſicæ, lib. 6. pag. 745. tom. 1. Oper.

(81) He ſpeaks of Sixtus ab Heminga, who has ſhewn, from the example of thirty famous horoſcopes that the event belied them.

(82) Naudæus, in Judicio de Cardano.

(83) Paſquier's Letters, lib. 4. tom. 1. pag. 175.

(84) Confer quæ ſupra, remark [E] of the article CARDAN.

(85) He would have been paid much more largely for his predictions, had it been known that he had found out by Aſtrology, that a King of France ſhould be killed in a duel.

(86) Lucas Gauricus, in Tractatus Aſtrologico in quo agitur de præteritis multorum hominum accidentibus per propriàs eorum genituras ad unguem examinatis, fol. 42 verſo.

particulars are told concerning the mothers of the latter [Y]. Henry II was born at St. Germains en Laie, the 31ſt of March 1519. He was Duke of Orleans when he married, at Marſeilles, Catherine de Medicis, the 28th of October 1533. He was then but fourteen years and a few months old; a circumſtance which made Pope Clement VII, Catherine's uncle, fear that the marriage was not conſummated on the wedding night; and authors pretend, that being curious to enquire into that affair himſelf, he found ſuch proofs as ſet his mind at eaſe in this particular [Z]. This young huſband's elder brother dying, he became Dauphin the 10th of Auguſt 1536. We have related in another place (i), that his conſort was barren many years, and afterwards brought him ſeveral children. He perſecuted ſuch of his ſubjects as were of the Proteſtant Religion with the utmoſt rigour; and nevertheleſs he himſelf forged thoſe weapons, which enabled the Proteſtants moſt eſpecially to maintain their cauſe [AA]; for, by his means, the Proteſtants of Germany

(i) In the article FERNEL, remark [K].

[Y] Some pretty remarkable particulars are told concerning the mothers of the two natural children.] Read what follows, which is copied from Brantome (87). Henry II, "who was of a pretty amorous complexion, "whenever he went to viſit any Lady, went in the "moſt private manner he could, in order to prevent their virtue from being ſuſpected; and if any "of them happened to be diſcovered, it was not his "fault, nor by his conſent, but was rather owing to "the Lady; as I have been told of a Lady of a "good family, Madam Flamin by name, a Scots woman, who being with child by the King, was far "from mincing the matter, but ſaid boldly in her Scots-"French, I have exerted myſelf ſo well, that I at "laſt am ſo happy as to be with child by the King, "which I think a very great honour and felicity. "Methinks there is ſomething ſweeter and more delicate in the royal blood than in any other, ſo well "I find myſelf after what I have done; not to mention the fine preſents that are always got on thoſe "occaſions. The ſon ſhe then had by the King was "the late Grand Prior of France, who was killed "not long ſince in Marſeilles (88), which was a very "great pity, for he was a moſt courteous, brave and "valiant nobleman." What I have to ſay concerning the other miſtreſs is a ſingularity of another kind. "The Dauphin (afterwards King Henry II) being "ſmit with a young Lady of Cony in Piedmont (89), in "the journey he made thither with the Conſtable of "Montmorency, his ſervants ſet fire to her houſe in "the night, and the danger it was in of being burnt "down, giving every one acceſs to it, people flocked "to it in crouds, crying ſalva la Donna (ſave the "Lady) and having ſeized her, carried her to the "Dauphin (90)." He had a Daughter by her named Diana, who was firſt married to Horazio Farneze Duke of Caſtro, and afterwards to Francis Duke of Montmorency, eldeſt ſon to the Conſtable. The ſecond marriage was ſolemnized the 5th of May, 1557 (91), and ended by the death of the firſt huſband the 6th of May 1579 (92). The only ſon which ſprung from it died before his father. The widow lived till the 3d of January 1619, and was then above fourſcore. She brought about a reconciliation between Henry III and Henry IV; and had a tender friendſhip for Charles de Valois her Nephew, natural ſon of Charles IX. She ſaved his life, when Henry IV would have involved him in the affair of the Duke of Biron; ſhe repreſented to that Prince, that it was greatly his intereſt, to render ſacred and inviolable the heads of the illegitimate children of Kings, and carefully to avoid eſtabliſhing a fatal example againſt them. She married this nephew to Charlotte de Montmorenci, her huſband's niece, and left his children heirs of all her poſſeſſions, and of the palace of Engouléme (93) belonging to her in Paris (94).

(87) Mem. des Dames Galantes, tom. 2. pag. 372.

(88) Father Anſelme, Hiſt. Généalog. de la Maiſon de France, pag. 144. ſays, that he was ſon to N... de Leviſton, a Scotch Lady; and was killed at Aix in Provence by Philip Altoviti, Baron of Caſtellanes, the 2d June 1586.

(89) Father Anſelme, ibid. ſays, that her name was Philippa des Ducs; that ſhe was living the 1ſt of July 1572, and did not aſſume a religious habit, as Peter Matthew thought

(90) Le Laboureur, Addit. aux Mém. de Caſtelnau, tom. 2. pag. 447.

(91) Anſelme, Hiſt. Geneal. de la Maiſon de France, pag. 144.

(92) Le Laboureur, Addit. aux Mem. de Caſteln. tom. 2. pag. 418.

(93) Henry III gave her the Dukedoms of Engoulême and of Chatelleraut, the Earldom of Ponthieu, and the Government of Limoſin. Le Laboureur, ibid.

(94) Extracted from the Addit. de Monſ. Le Laboureur, ibid.

[Z] Some authors pretend, that Pope Clement VII being curious to enquire into that affair himſelf, found ſuch proofs as ſet his mind at eaſe in that particular.] I have read this no where but in Varillas. The interview between his Holineſs, ſays he (95), and his Majeſty, was at Marſeilles, and the nuptials of the Duke of Orleans and Catherine were ſolemnized there with great magnificence. As the Bridegroom was but ſixteen years of age, and the bride thirteen, the King, who would not hazard his ſon's health, would have the conſummation of the marriage ſuſpended for two or three years. But this did not ſuit the Pope in any manner, who was afraid, in caſe he ſhould happen to die before the marriage with his niece was conſummated, ſhe ſhould be ſent back into Italy; and indeed, ſays Paul Jovius, he was not ſatisfied till after he had ſeen certain marks that the marriage had been conſummated. If Paul Jovius has mentioned ſuch a circumſtance, it is not in that part of his hiſtory where he ſpeaks of that interview between the Pope and Francis I. This nevertheleſs was the moſt proper place, and the moſt natural occaſion of touching on that particular, eſpecially as the author did not omit to take notice of the tender age of the Duke of Orleans, to make ſeveral other obſervations, and even to ſay that the marriage was conſummated the firſt night. Augebant ſuſpicionem maturatæ nuptiæ, quæ impares regio ſanguini viderentur. Siquidem nobiliſſimus adoleſcens Henricus, quanquam ætate tenerior, Catharinam celebratis inſigni ceremonia nuptiis, ex virgine mulierem prima nocte reddiderat (96). i. e. "A circumſtance that increaſed "the ſuſpicion was, the haſtning of the marriage, "which did not ſeem ſuitable to the royal blood. "For the moſt noble Henry, though of a tender age, "after his nuptials had been ſolemnized with great "magnificence, made Catherine a woman the very "firſt night." I confeſs then, that Varillas might be ſuſpected of falſly citing the teſtimony of Paulus Jovius, His ſaying that the bridegroom was ſixteen years of age, and the bride thirteen, is not juſt; for it is certain that Henry II, was born the 31ſt of March 1519, and married Catherine of Medicis the 28th of October 1533 (97). Father Anſelme, who fixes his birth to the 31ſt of March 1518, adds, that it was before Eaſter; and conſequently that year is 1519, according to the new ſtyle. He alſo ſays that Catherine was born the 13th of April, 1519. Gauric ſets down the ſame day and year in the ſcheme of that nativity. There therefore was but the ſpace of a fortnight between the age of the Bridegroom and Bride. Spondanus is very near as much miſtaken as Varillas, ſince he aſſerts that Catherine was but thirteen, and Henry but fifteen years and ſeven months (98).

(95) Varillas, Preface of tom. 5. de l'Hiſtoire de l'Hereſie, fol.  3, Dutch edit.

(96) Jov. Hiſt. lib. 31. fol. 230, edit. Baſil. 1555.

(97) See the Faſtes of Father du Londel, pag. 23 and 345; and Father Anſelme, Hiſt. Gen. pag. 137 and 139.

(98) Spondan. ad ann. 1533, num. 7.

[AA] He himſelf forged thoſe weapons, which enabled the Proteſtants moſt effectually to maintain their cauſe.] See what I have ſaid on this matter, in the remark [D], and add to it the following paſſage from Stephen Paſquier (99). "We ſaw the Emperor Charles V "make war upon the Germans, his vaſſals, for im-"bibing and profeſſing hereſy .... His affairs went "on ſucceſsfully, which obliged them to implore our "aſſiſtance. Could any thing be more plauſible, in "point of State-affairs, as courtiers judge of them, "than to take their cauſe in hand, in order to prevent a mighty Prince from increaſing his power ſtill "more at our gates, by the ruin of all the Princes of "Germany? But, on the other hand, what would "be more unjuſt than to aſſiſt a ſubject againſt his "lawful Sovereign? and eſpecially to join with a "heretic, againſt a Catholic Emperor, who fought "only for the honour of God and his Church? Our "Prince was a Catholic, as were likewiſe the No-"blemen who had the greateſt ſhare in his favour; "but notwithſtanding this, we take upon our ſelves "to protect the German heretics; and the King, in "open Parliament, cauſed himſelf to be proclaimed "by the moſt pompous title of Protector of the German Liberty, that is to ſay, of the German hereſy; and as ſuch cauſed money to be coined, bearing that inſcription. Under that ſpecious title he "undertook that expedition at the head of a power-

(99) Paſquier, Lettres, liv. 15. pag. 218. of tom. 2.

many put their affairs in ſo happy a poſture, that it was eaſy for them to ſend great ſuccours to the Calviniſts of France. The compariſon which has been made between his reign, and the latter part of that of Francis I, ſhews, that a Monarch who is too much inclined to liberality, does more prejudice to a State than a Monarch who is too niggardly [BB]. Henry the IId's fault was, the ill management of his revenues, whereby he perverted the adminiſtration of them, and got prodigiouſly in debt [CC]. The evil which " ful army. This gave ſuch ſucceſs to our enter-

" prize, that, at the bare news of it, as we were going " to croſs the Rhine, the Emperor was forced to ad-
" juſt matters amicably with his ſubjects, and grant
" them many privileges, againſt the honour of God
" and of his conſcience, which he otherwiſe would " not have tolerated. As to my ſelf, my opinion is,
" that God was reſolved afterwards to chaſtize us
" with the ſame rods, which we had made uſe of " againſt the Emperor, having permitted, after
" Henry's death, his children (minors) to be warred
" upon by their ſubjects, for the ſupport of an opi" nion more violent than that of Luther; and that " they ſhould be aided, by the German Princes,
" againſt them. And when God was determined to
" exerciſe his vengeance upon us, it was impoſſible
" for any human methods to ward it off, ſo that all
" the remedies which we thought to apply to it, turn-
" ed to our deſtruction." Paſquier makes another remark which I don't take to be a good one. At our return, ſays he (100), from that fine expedition into Germany, Calvin began to ſollicite, on all ſides, by letters; and the perſons thus addreſſed were eaſily overreached, thinking, as we may ſuppoſe, that ſince the King and his Council had taken the Lutherans under their protection, they themſelves were, in their hearts, of the ſame Religion. Thus did the ſeeds of the new Religion, by inſenſible degrees, ſpread in France, which reached, at laſt, the noble or vital parts, I mean the Princes and great Lords. The author here commits two errors; he ſuppoſing that Calvin did not begin to ſollicit the French by letters till towards the cloſe of the year 1552. Now this is falſe, for he had never ceaſed to do it ſince the year 1536; and beſides, it is not true, that the French could believe that Henry II and his Council were Lutherans in their hearts. The contrary could not be doubted, ſince this Prince was ſeen to perſecute, with fire and ſword, thoſe who profeſſed the new Religion, throughout all parts of his Kingdom. The protection which he granted, and the good offices he did the Proteſtants of Germany, were of no ſervice to elude this proof of his averſion for their ſect; the only thing hereby ſhewn was, that he ſacrificed the intereſt of his Religion, to the political intereſt of his Government. In this manner Kings generally act: though they ſometimes take another courſe, in order to ſacrifice, to a ſpirit of perſecution, not only the conqueſts they might atchieve, but alſo thoſe they have gained, and the moſt ſolid advantages of their Government. Henry II was an inſtance of this, when he accepted the peace of Cateau.

(100) Paſquier's Letters, liv. 15. pag. 219.

[BB] A Prince, who is too much inclined to liberality, does more prejudice to a State than a Prince who is too niggardly.] A French Civilian (101) has aſſerted that " thoſe are in a great error, who applaud and " adore univerſally the goodneſs of a gentle, gracious, " courteous and ſimple Prince; for ſuch a ſimplicity, " unaccompanied with prudence, is very dangerous " and pernicious in a King; and productive of much " worſe conſequences than the cruelty of a ſevere, " peeviſh, rough, covetous and inacceſſible Prince. And " in my opinion our forefathers have not uſed the fol- " lowing proverb without a cauſe, a bad (102) man " makes a good King; a ſentence that may ſeem " ſtrange to delicate ears, and which have not " been accuſtomed to weigh the reaſons on both " ſides. By the indulgence and ſilly ſimplicity of " too good natured a Prince, it comes to paſs that " flatterers, paraſites, and the moſt wicked men, ob- " tain all offices, employments, benefices and grants, " exhauſting the treaſures of a Kingdom: and by this " means the miſerable people are preyed upon to their " very bones, and cruelly enſlaved by the Great; ſo " that, for one tyrant, there are ten thouſand &c." Deſirous afterwards to confirm this poſition by examples, he goes on as follows (103): this Kingdom " has been ſeen as great, rich and flouriſhing in Arms " as in Laws, towards the cloſe of the reign of Fran- " cis I, when he grew peeviſh and inacceſſible, and " no one dared to approach him, to ſue for the leaſt " favour and honour; and penſions were ſo re- " trenched, that there was found in his treaſury, at " his death, a million of gold, and ſeven hundred " thouſand crowns, and the March-quarter to receive; " and nothing owing, except a very ſmall matter to " the Lords of the Griſons, and to the Bank of Ly- " ons, which it was judged not proper to pay, in or- " der to keep them to their duty: Peace was ſettled " with all the Potentates in the world; the frontiers " extended as far as the gates of Milan; the King- " dom abounding with great captains and the moſt " learned men in the world. It was afterwards ſeen, " during the twelve years reign of Henry II, whoſe " goodneſs was ſo great, as not to be parallel'd by any " Prince of his age, that the Government was very near " changed; for being gentle, gracious and good-na- " tured, he could not deny any perſon; by which " means his father's treaſures, being exhauſted in a " few months, places of truſt are more expoſed to " ſale than ever; benefices beſtowed without the leaſt " regard had to merit; civil offices ſold to the beſt " bidder, and conſequently to the moſt unworthy. " Taxes were higher than ever they had been before; " and yet, when he died, his Exchequer was found " indebted forty two millions, after having loſt Pied- " mont, Savoy, the iſland of Corſica, and the frontiers " of the Netherlands: although theſe loſſes were in- " conſiderable, in compariſon of fame and honour. Had " the gentleneſs of this great King been accompani- " ed with ſeverity, his goodneſs mixed with rigour, " his eaſineſs with auſterity; all things would not have " been ſo eaſily extorted from him." This learned man's opinion ſeems a paradox at firſt ſight; but when it is cloſely examined, we find it to be juſtly grounded.

(101) Bodin of a Republic, lib. 2. cap. 4. towards the end, pag. m. 295. See alſo liv. 6. chap. 2. pag. 895.

(102) It is to be obſerved that he does not take this word in its whole extent; he taking it only in the ſignification of auſtere and rigorous. See the end of that chapter of Bodin's ſecond book.

(103) Ibid. pag. 296.

[CC] He perverted the adminiſtration of his treaſures, and got prodigiouſly in debt.] " There was an " ordinance of Francis I, confirmed by his ſucceſſor, " importing that there ſhould be four keys to the Ex- " chequer cheſt, one of which the King ſhould keep, " and the other three be in the hands of Commiſſioners " appointed by him; and monies were to be diſburſed " by the King's command, in preſence of the Trea- " ſurer and Comptroller of the Exchequer. But King " Henry II, by an (*) Edict granted ſome time after, " indulged the Commiſſioners and Officers of the " Treaſury ſo far, as not to allow any perſon to call " them to account hereafter; nay, one of the Com- " miſſioners had at one time, as a free gift, an hundred " thouſand crowns, a great ſum at that time, if the " report then ſpread of it was true (104)." It is Bodin makes this remark, who adds a little after (105), " that Francis I did not beſtow ſo many benefactions " during a reign of thirty two years, as his ſucceſſor " did in two years. Francis I had ſcarce cloſed his " eyes, but the tilletage, or money given for the renew- " ing of Commiſſions, which at that time was an im- " menſe ſum, was given to a ſingle perſon (106)." Let us ſee how this has been expreſſed in the Latin tranſlation. Nondum juſta parenti fecerat (Henricus ſecundus) cum hirudo quædam Palatina pecuniæ vim infinitam, quam officiarii accepta confirmatione regibus initiatis fiſco dependere ſolent, uno abſorbuit & eodem hauſtu (107). This Prince's profuſeneſs and prodigality doubtleſs made him lay new taxes on his ſubjects; not remembring the promiſes he made, when he gave orders for thoſe taxations. Weigh well the following words of Bodin (108). " When the taillon or tax was laid on the " ſubjects in the year one thouſand five hundred and forty " nine, the King promiſed not to appropriate or em- " ploy the monies to any other uſe but the payment " of his Gendarmerie, without confounding or blend- " ing them with the monies ariſing from the other revenues;

(*) In 1556.

(104) Bodin, Of a Republic, lib. 6. cap. 2. pag. 904.

(105) Ibid. pag. 1055. of the Latin edit. of 1601, in 8vo.

(106) Ibid. pag. 905. of the French edit. of 1608, 8vo.

(107) Ibid. pag. 1055.

(108) Ibid. pag. 898.

which the Poets cauſed (k) has been ranked among the diſorders of his reign. Polygamy, in the preceding reigns, was not a capital crime; it was Henry II who firſt made it ſuch [DD]. The reader will ſee in other parts of this Dictionary, what he enacted againſt clandeſtine marriages (l), and againſt mothers who deſtroy their children (m).

(k) See the remark (l) of the article GARASSE, at the firſt break.

(l) See the remark [H] of the article PIENE.

(m) See the remark [C] of the article PATIN.

I ſhall add a particular which I found in a letter of Bodin. Pope Julius III cited this Prince to appear in the preſence of God, to anſwer for the injury he did him in keeping Mirandula. The King anſwered, that he would appear; but was ſure that the Pope could not (n).

(n) Bodin, in a letter dated from Laon, the 27th of March 1593, and quoted by Menage, Remarques ſur la Vie d'Ayrault, pag. 258.

" revenues; which was likewiſe promiſed, when the " tax for payment of fifty thouſand foot was laid or " impoſed in the time of Francis I, which tax was to " be raiſed only in ſuch walled towns and ſuburbs, " as did not ſuffer by the numerouſneſs of the ſoldiers: " Nevertheleſs it was ſince extended to cities, towns, " villages great or ſmall, in one thouſand five hun- " dred and fifty five, by which the poor peaſants " have been doubly aggrieved, they paying and being " plundred on all ſides." The bad œconomy of the King in queſtion, occaſioned another diſorder, viz. the borrowing many great ſums at a high intereſt. " When King Henry was in want of money, he " would borrow at ten, twelve, or ſixteen per Cent. " as he did in 1554, of the Caponi, the Albici, and " the partners in Germany: and the intereſt was " paid on that occaſion at the four fairs, or added to " the principal. The Emperor did the like; but he " gave indeed but ten or twelve per Cent. at moſt; " and the ſame year the King of England borrowed " of the German Merchants an hundred thouſand " crowns at twelve per Cent. And whereas King " Henry thought, by giving greater intereſt than the " Emperor and the King of England, to command " greater ſums, he began to loſe his credit by it; for " the moſt prudent œconomiſts concluded, that he at " laſt would not be able to pay either intereſt or " principal; inaſmuch as the intereſt of ſixteen per " Cent. amounted, at leaſt, to eighteen per Cent. " by means of his not being able to pay the inte- " reſt (109)." I am to obſerve that he was not the inventor of this practice, it having begun under the King his father. " This was likewiſe a project " brought into France anno 1543 by Cardinal de " Tournon, when he was in favour with King " Francis I, whom he perſuaded, by the advice of " ſome Italians, that there was no other way of " drawing monies into France from all parts, and " making a fund for the time to come, to fruſtrate " the enemies of it, but by ſetting up a Bank at " Lyons, and taking in money from all hands, pay- " ing eight per Cent. intereſt; but the truth was, " the Cardinal wanted to ſecure an hundred thouſand " crowns which he had in his coffers, and get as " high an intereſt as he could for that ſum. The " Letters Patent having paſt the ſeals, and the Bank " opened in the manner above related, every one " ſtrove who ſhould firſt get thither from France, Ger- " many, and Italy; ſo that Francis I, when he died, " was indebted, to the Bank at Lyons, five hundred " thouſand crowns, which he had in his coffers, and " four times that ſum; and he had ſettled a peace " with all the Potentates of the earth (110)." Bodin (111) condemns this invention ſuggeſted to Francis I. He is of opinion that it deſtroys the very foundation of the Finances, and proved the ſource of a thouſand calamities. I ſhall cite him once more (112). And with regard to the Treaſury or Finances, they were ſo ill managed, that in leſs than twelve years that Henry II reigned, he owed (113) more intereſt than all his predeceſſors, during forty years before, had levied for all their expences.

(109) Ibid. pag. 893, 894.

(110) Ibid. pag. 893.

(111) Ibid. pag. 896.

(112) Ibid. pag. 895.

(113) See the preceding remark of citation (103).

I am perſuaded that theſe citations of Bodin, will not be diſpleaſing to thoſe who deſire the æras of impoſts or taxes, and the origin of cuſtoms in general.

[DD] Henry II... firſt made... Polygamy... a capital crime.] This I have read in Bodin. Imperatores, ſays he (114), perpetua lege πολυγαμίαν infamiæ pœna ſubjecta vetuerunt (†): noſtris vero legib. pœna capitalis Henrici II principatu irrogari cœpit. i. e. " The Emperors, by a perpetual Law, forbid Poly- " gamy, upon pain of being rendered infamous; but " it was firſt made a capital crime, by our Laws, " under Henry II." The author of Mêlanges l'Hiſtoire & de Literature was, in all probability, ignorant of this particular, he expreſſing himſelf as follows. " But now we are talking of marriage and the Laws " of the Kingdom, ſome Parliaments in France, ſen- " tence to death all ſuch as are found guilty of Po- " lygamy, becauſe it is ſuppoſed to be a Law of the " Kingdom. It is aſked where that Law is found? " It is the buſineſs of our French Civilians to inform " us of that particular. It is of ſuch conſequence as " well to deſerve the trouble. As to my ſelf, it is " my opinion that thoſe men are not ſent to the gal- " lows for Polygamy, but for the knaviſh artifices " they employ, in order to over-reach ſuch women as " they marry in this deceitful manner (115).

(114) Bodin, de Republic. lib. 5. cap. 1. pag. m. 793.

(†) L. neminem de inceſtis, Cod.

(115) Vigneul Marville, Melang. d'Hiſt. de Literat. pag. 175.

HENRY III, King of France, ſon to Henry II and Catherine of Medicis, had gained ſo much renown before he was raiſed to the throne, and before he was twenty, that the Poles judged him worthy of their Crown, but they ſoon had cauſe to repent their having elected him. The manner of his flight from Cracow was ignominious to the laſt degree. The motive of his ſtealing from Poland was, to ſucceed Charles IX in the throne of France. He accordingly reigned after that Prince, and in ſuch a manner, that the Poles had no reaſon to regret him. The ſame may be ſaid of him as of Galba, viz. that he would have ſeemed worthy of the Crown had he never wore it [A]. His life was ſo much divided between debauchery and devotion, that never was a more ſtrange mixture ſeen. He ſuffered himſelf to be ſo completely governed by his favourites,

[A] The ſame may be ſaid of him, as of Galba, viz. that he would have ſeemed worthy of the Crown had he never worn it.] Every one has taken notice of the following ſaying of Tacitus: Major privato viſus (Galba) dum privatus fuit, & omnium conſenſu capax imperii, niſi imperaſſet (1). i. e. " Galba was thought " to be more than a private man or ſubject whilſt he " was one; and, would have been judged, by uni- " verſal conſent, capable of governing the Empire, " had he never been raiſed to it." Suetonius ſays the ſame thing in other words. Majore adeò & favore & auctoritate adeptus eſt quam geſſit imperium (2). i. e. " He got the Empire with more good will and autho- " rity than he governed it." The like judgment was formed of the Emperor Jovian (3): but the reverſe was ſaid of Marius. Marius in poteſtatibus eo modo agitavit, ut ampliore quam gerebat, dignus haberetur (4). i. e. " Marius behaved ſo well in all em- " ployments, that he was ever judged worthy of an " higher ſtation than that which he poſſeſſed." Henry III verified, to his coſt, the judicious maxim following, Magiſtratus virum prodit (5): he ſhewed by wearing a Crown, that thoſe were miſtaken who judged him worthy of it. The following words of Caſſiodorus cannot be juſtly applied to him. Hic eſt probatæ conſcientiæ gratiſſimus fructus, ut quamvis ſumma potuerit adipiſci, judicetur tamen ab omnibus plus mereri (6). Much leſs could it be ſaid of him; magna eum præceſſerat fama, qua major inventus eſt (7).

(1) Tacit. Hiſt. lib. 1. cap. 49.

(2) Sueton. in Galba, cap. 14.

(3) Deceſſit ſuſcepto clarior apice quam geſto. Jo. Cluverus, Epit. Hiſtor. Mundi, pag. m. 308.

(4) Saluſt. in Bello Jugurth.

(5) See Ariſtot. de Morib. lib. 5. cap. 3. pag. m. 44, [G].

(6) Caſſiodor. Variar. Lect. lib. 1. Epiſt. 4.

(7) Plin. Epiſt. 3. lib. 2.

rites, that the whole Kingdom was offended at it; eſpecially as the prodigious expences which he put himſelf to on their account [B], was burthenſome and grievous to the poor people. He incurred the hatred of the Ladies, a circumſtance that was greatly prejudicial to him [C]. The Ducheſs of Montpenſier took a dreadful revenge, on account of ſome things he had ſpoke to her diſadvantage [D]. The Duke of Guiſe, by this concurrence of circumſtances, and the troubles occaſioned about Religion, growing much bolder than he would otherwiſe have been, to pave his way to the throne, found, by experience, that the weakeſt Princes can at laſt form a vigorous reſolution. He was murthered by the command of Henry III. I have taken notice elſewhere (a) of the conſequences

(a) In the article of GUISE (Henry).

[B] The prodigious expences he put himſelf to on account of his favourites (8).] "As the chief employ" ment, and the greateſt pleaſure this King took
" was to pleaſe two favourites (9), he declared that he
" ſhould not be eaſy and ſatisfied, till he had made
" them as great as himſelf; and raiſed them to ſo
" exalted a pitch of power, that neither envy nor for" tune ſhould be able to deſtroy them. He was de" termined therefore, as he himſelf had no daughters,
" to marry them with, to give them in marriage to
" his wife's ſiſters, viz. Margaret and Chriſtierne,
" though they were already betrothed to two other
" heireſſes.. but in order to honour them with ſome title
" which might qualify them for ſo exalted an alliance
" for his, he reſolved to create them both Duke and
" Peer ... In the mean time the Duke of Lorrain
" brought his nieces with as great a train, and in as " magnificent a manner, as if they had been to be " eſpouſed to Kings. As to Chriſtierne, being as yet
" too young, ſhe was only betrothed to Duke d'E-
" pernon; however, ſhe did not marry him, and " choſe rather to take the veil. As to Margaret, be" ing betrothed at the Louvre, in the Queen's cham" ber, the nuptials were ſolemnized a week after in " the church of St. Germain de l'Auxerrois. It would " be needleſs to deſcribe to you the maſquerades, balls,
" tournaments, feſtivals, concerts, and other pomps,
" which luxury invented for the ſetting off of this wed-
" ding; in a word, it laſted near ſix weeks; and Paris,
" the Theatre of Wonders, had never ſeen any thing
" like it. The King, dreſſed in the ſame manner as " his favourite, led the bride to Church... After the " ſolemnization of the marriage, he ordered ſe-
" venteen entertainments, which were made, accord" ing to rank, by the Princes and Lords who were " related to the bride; the leaſt of them coſt above an " hundred thouſand crowns; at all which the gueſts
" had ſuch rich and ſumptuous changes of dreſſes,
" that gold and ſilver could make no figure there.
" Some ſuits coſt ten thouſand crowns only for the " making. To conclude, the expence was ſo prodi-
" gious, that the King, barely for his part, ſpent no
" leſs than four millions of livres, beſides four hun" dred thouſand crowns which he promiſed to pay to
" the bridegroom in two years, as his wife's portion;
" and when it was remonſtrated to him, that his ex-
" ceſſive profuſions would ruin him, he anſwered, that " he would grow prudent and wiſe after he ſhould
" have married his two children, by whom he meant
" Joyeuſe and d'Epernon." The Swiſs Embaſſadors being come to Paris, to aſk for monies that were owing them; and the Treaſurers having anſwered, that the King had none, and therefore that they muſt be patient and wait; they replied, agreeably to the uſual liberty of their Nation, that it was not probable ſo wiſe and diſcreet a Prince, ſhould have ſpent twelve hundred thouſand crowns, merely for his pleaſure, at a Gentleman's wedding, unleſs he had much more in his coffers, for the neceſſary affairs of his Kingdom (10).

(8) Mezerai, Hiſt. de France, vol. 3. pag. 499.

(9) The Dukes of Joyeuſe and Epernon.

(10) Mezerai, tom. 3. pag. 500.

See in the ſame Hiſtorian (11) the extravagant fondneſs, which this Prince diſcovered for Maugiron and Quelus, when they had fought a duel (12).

(11) Ibid. pag. 451. ad ann. 1578.

(12) Maugiron was killed on the ſpot; and Quelus, who received 19 wounds, lived 33 days after.

[C] He incurred the hatred of the Ladies, a circumſtance that was greatly prejudicial to him.] "The " Ladies, to whom the minions revealed every thing,
" diſcovered to the Duke of Guiſe all the ſecrets of " the cabinet, out of revenge to the King, whom
" they hated for certain reaſons which are not told (13)."
Theſe words are borrowed from Maimbourg; who ſhews manifeſtly enough, that the Ladies greatly prejudiced the King's affairs; however, the motives of their hatred are explained intelligibly enough by ſeveral Hiſtorians. See Mezerai's words in the margin (14).

(13) Maimbourg, Hiſt. de la Ligue.

(14) Henry III, ſince the Princeſs of Conde's death, entertained little affection for women; his adventure at Venice having turned his paſſion another way. Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. tom. 5. pag. 251, ad ann. 1581.

The reflection mentioned by the author of Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres is a mere cavil. "Some
" Cenſors, ſays he (15), have found fault with Maim-
" bourg for ſaying, that the Ladies to whom the Mi-
" nions uſed to reveal every thing &c. They ſay that
" theſe words are highly unpolite with regard to the " fair-ſex, becauſe it is thereby inſinuated, that wo" men contract an averſion to ſuch men, as are deter" mined to diſregard for ever their charms. Now,
" ſay they, in caſe they are chaſte, what do they value
" their being neglected by the men? if it is not indif" ferent to them, it is a manifeſt ſign that they are " reſolved not to live chaſtly. But I think it incum" bent on me to take Mr. Maimbourg's part a-" gainſt ſuch unjuſt Cenſors. I ſay therefore that " he ſpeaks only of thoſe Ladies who ſhared in the " Duke of Guiſe's intrigues (16); and that we are " not to doubt, but that women of that character en" tertain a ſtrong hatred, when they are prompted by " the reaſons which are underſtood here. People
" may infer as much as they pleaſe, that this would " be indifferent to them if they were chaſte: ſuch
" perſons may, if they pleaſe, infer that this infer" ence is unpolite: Maimbourg has guarded, in his " preface, againſt ſuch ſubtilties; he there declaring,
" that he ſearches after truth, and not for ſuch things
" as may pleaſe and oblige people; and that if any " one finds fault with this, they muſt blame thoſe
" that firſt laid down the laws of hiſtory, which re" quire incidents to be related as they are, and not as
" they ought to be."

(15) For April 1684, Art. 3. pag. 135.

(16) It is certain that he means the Ladies in general.

There is too much ſubtilty in this reflection: it is natural for all perſons to wiſh, that ſuch talents as ingratiate them with the world, may not be deſpiſed; this, I ſay, is natural, though they don't intend to make an ill uſe of ſuch qualities. The authors of the Journey of Meſs. de la Chapelle and Bachaumont, have carried the raillery a little too far, with regard to the anger with which the women of Montpellier are there ſaid to be fired againſt the unhappy Daſſoucy.

[D] The Ducheſs of Montpenſier (17) took a dreadful revenge, on account of ſome things he had ſpoke to her diſadvantage.] "It was told the King, that the " League deſigned him no leſs miſchief than the " making him a Monk; and that the Ducheſs of " Montpenſier uſed to ſhew the ſciſſars with which " ſhe intended to clip off his hair. The reaſon of " the indignation of this widow was, he had offended
" her, by holding ſome diſcourſes wherein were diſ-
" covered certain ſecret defects of her's; an inſult
" which women will much leſs excuſe, than an affront
" that is put upon their honour (18)." That affront muſt have made a very deep impreſſion on this Ducheſs's heart, if we judge of it from the great endeavours ſhe employed to ruin Henry III. "She brought " a conſiderable part of the materials, of the inven-
" tion of her happy wit, and of the labour of her " body, to build the ſaid League; ſo that after it
" was ſtrongly built, playing one day at cards at
" Primero, (for ſhe was very fond of play,) and one
" ſaying to her, that ſhe ſhould ſhuffle the cards well,
" ſhe replied before a great number of people; I
" have ſhuffled them ſo well, that it is impoſſible for " them to be better ſhuffled or unſhuffled. This " would have been well, had not her relations been " killed, the death of whom, without being in the " leaſt dejected, ſhe endeavoured to revenge; and as
" ſoon as ſhe heard the news of this in Paris, ſhe,
" without immuring her ſelf in her chamber, and
" bemoaning on that account like other women,
" came out of her palace, leading her brother's chil" dren, when ſhe carries them up and down the city;
" breaks into lamentations before the people; exhorts
" them

(17) She was ſiſter to the Duke of Guiſe, killed at Blois.]

(18) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. pag. 315. ad ann. 1588. See the Critique Générale du Calviniſme de Maimbourg, Letter 3. pag. 44.

conſequences of this affair ; but I did not obſerve that this Monarch, had he not been aſſiſted by the Proteſtants, would have been overpowered at Tours, where he was attacked by thoſe of the League (b), ſome months after he had cauſed the Duke and Cardinal of Guiſe to be killed. Having extricated himſelf there, he marched and beſieged Paris ; and in all probability would have ſoon made himſelf maſter of that ſeditious city, had he not been aſſaſſinated by James Clement a Dominican Friar. He died the 2d of Auguſt 1589, the day after he was wounded (c). I have obſerved in another article (d), that this King is juſtly blamed for giving up ſome cities to the Duke of Savoy, who had accompanied him to Beauvoiſin Bridge, in September 1574 [E]. He had cauſe to repent his yielding thoſe cities ; it encouraging that Duke's ſon to form ſeveral enterprizes againſt France [F].

(b) In May 1589.

(c) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. tom. 5. pag. 355.

(d) In the article HENRY II, remark [G].

Few Princes have been governed by a more capricious ſtar than Henry III. Fortune was ſo fantaſtical to him, that his fate reſembled very much that of thoſe children, who are firſt brought up by a very tender mother, and afterwards by a cruel ſtep-mother. His youth was very glorious, and his fame procured him the Kingdom of Poland in the moſt conſpicuous and honourable manner ; but this ſtrong and ſhining light was ſoon eclipſed. He abdicated, not long after, that crown in a more ignominious manner, than his election had been glorious ; for can any thing be ſtranger or more ſhameful, than for a King to fly in the night, and withdraw with the utmoſt ſpeed out of his dominions, like a criminal, who ſees the officers of juſtice in purſuit of him ? In that manner did Henry III leave Poland (e). If we could excuſe this elopement, on the ſtrong reaſons he had to make the utmoſt diſpatch, in order to poſſeſs himſelf of a crown which was much more valuable than that he wore ; we yet might ſay that he was born under an unhappy planet, and Diis iratis, ſince he was reduced to ſuch extremities, that he could not ſucceed the King his brother on any other condition : it would be always (e) See Thuanus, Book 58, init.

" them all with tears, cries, and moving words, to " take up arms ; to riſe up in a furious manner ; to " fall upon the King's palace and inſult the King's " picture, as has been ſeen, and as I hope to relate " in his life ; to renounce their allegiance, and enter " into rebellion againſt him, which was followed " ſoon after by his murther ; from whence we may " gueſs who are thoſe, of both ſexes, who adviſed, " and perpetrated it (19)." It was ſhe who chiefly excited James Clement to kill the King ; ſhe not ſcrupling any thing, as we are told, not even the laſt favour to effect it (20).

(19) Brantome, Dames Galantes, tom. 2. pag. 316.

(20) See Thuan. cited by the author of the Critique generale, Letter 3. pag. 43.

[E] In September 1574.] The King arrived the fifth of September 1574 at Beauvoiſin Bridge, and not the 21ſt of September 1575, as is aſſerted by two or three Hiſtorians (21), whom John Aymes de Chavigny cenſures in pag. 224. of the firſt face of his French Janus, for thus he entitles his explication of Noſtradamus.

(21) Milles Piguerre, John le Frere, and the author of the appendix to the Annales de France.

[F] To form ſeveral enterprizes againſt France.] The author of the firſt Savoiſienne (22) relates (23), that Henry III returning from Poland, and paſſing Savoy, was aſked, in return for a collation which had been given him, for the cities of Pignerol and Savillan ; and that this Prince, whoſe only defect was an exceſs of good nature, gave them up : that the Duke of Savoy, ſon to him who had received ſo noble a preſent (24), took advantage of the confuſions of France anno 1588 ; for obſerving that Henry III was out of his capital, he invaded the Marquiſate of Saluces : that after having ſent an Embaſſador to the King, with a promiſe to give up all things into his hands, he on a ſudden removed all the officers of his Majeſty, and eſtabliſhed others by his ducal authority . . . and at the ſame time, to diſplay in all places the trophies of his victory, he cauſed a pompous medal to be ſtruck, wherein was the figure of a centaur, trampling upon a crown reverſed, with the following motto, Oportunè, alluding to his having taken a proper opportunity (25). We ſee by the ſecond Savoiſienne, that after Henry the III's murther, the Duke took ſeveral towns in Provence ; and that Henry IV was obliged, before he could bring him to reaſon, to poſſeſs himſelf of Savoy. It is to be obſerved that, in return for the abovementioned medal (26), the King cauſed another to be ſtruck, whereon was a Hercules armed after the antique manner, trampling a centaur under foot, over whom he lifts a club with his right hand, and with his left a crown which he ſeems to have taken up ; and the motto Oportunius ; to ſhew that he knew better than the Duke to take his opportunity, and that in a more honourable way, ſince he (the French King) had employed force of arms inſtead of artifices and ſtratagems, which the Duke had put in practice very ungratefully (27). This compenſated for the evil, which the giving up of Pignerol had occaſioned ; but yet this did not in any manner extenuate the fault of Henry III.

(22) A piece publiſhed at the time that Henry IV obliged the Duke of Savoy to do him juſtice with regard to the Marquiſate of Saluces.

(23) The firſt Savoiſienne, pag. m. 16.

(24) Ibid. pag. 17, & ſeq.

(25) See the ſecond Savoiſienne, pag. 109.

(26) Ibid. pag. 132.

(27) See, with relation to the two inſcriptions, Oportunè, Opportunius, Paſquier's Letters, liv. 19. tom. 2. pag. 450, & ſeq.

The author of a piece that is highly injurious to the preſent (28) Duke of Savoy, has ſpoke of this affair, but not without ſome errors. Henry III, ſays he (29), being engaged in war againſt a powerful League, Charles Emanuel, grandfather (30) to his Royal Highneſs, acted much the ſame part that has been now acted. That Duke flattered himſelf that he ſhould gain prodigiouſly, in caſe he embraced that opportunity of declaring war againſt France, and accordingly he, in 1588, joined his arms to thoſe of Henry the IIId's enemies : and after forming a powerful party of which he declared himſelf the chief, he marched into Provence ; took the cities of Marſeille and Arles by ſtratagem ; and grew ſo haughty by theſe conqueſts, that he cauſed a medal to be ſtruck, which was to ſerve as a medal to immortalize his memory. He had cauſed himſelf to be repreſented, under the figure of a centaur &c. The author adds, that Henry IV having carried the war into Italy in 1600, poſſeſſed himſelf of almoſt all Savoy and Piedmont, and cauſed a medal to be ſtruck in his turn &c. This relation is not accurate. The Duke of Savoy did not join his arms to thoſe of the enemies of Henry III in 1588 : nor was it that year, but in 1590, that he marched into Provence. He did not cauſe the medal of the centaur to be ſtruck, after he had taken Marſeilles, but after he had invaded the Marquiſate of Saluces. Henry IV did not carry his arms into Italy anno 1600, nor make any conqueſts in Piedmont. The author is perhaps more judicious in his political reflections, than accurate in relating facts. Henry IV, ſays he (31), after the conqueſt of Savoy and Piedmont, ſuffered himſelf to be at laſt wrought upon by the intreaties of Pope Clement VIII, who endeavoured to reconcile the poor Duke with the Monarch in queſtion ; although it was the opinion of all the politicians of that age, that Henry IV ought to keep Savoy and Piedmont, to chaſtiſe the raſhneſs of that imprudent Prince ; and by that means preſerve a free paſſage into Italy, whenever he ſhould have a mind to enter it. This was the advice of Cardinal d'Oſſat, one of the greateſt Politicians of his age : but Henry, on this occaſion, diſcovered more generoſity than policy, and reſtored Charles Emanuel to all his poſſeſſions. What would Cardinal d'Oſſat have ſaid of the imprudent conduct of Henry III, in diveſting himſelf of Pignerol, ſince he blames Henry IV for giving back Savoy, at a time when he was an hundred times abler to reſiſt his neighbours, than his predeceſſor was ? France would have been very unhappy, had it not been poſſeſſed of Pignerol, when the Duke of Savoy made a league with the Houſe of Auſtria, England, and Holland in 1690. France was obliged to give it up ſix years after, which is no inconſiderable loſs.

(28) I write this in October 1697.

(29) Memoirs of Mr. D. F. L. with regard to what paſſed in Italy, between Victor Amadeus II Duke of Savoy, and the moſt Chriſtian King, pag. 146. This book was publiſhed anno 1696.

(30) It ſhould be great grandfather.

(31) Memoirs of Mr. D. F. L. &c. pag. 148, 149.

ways a mark, that fortune had led him maliciouſly through toilſome and perplexing roads. After his return to France he was ſought for, as it were, in himſelf, but could not be found; that Duke of Anjou, who had acquired ſo exalted a reputation (f), no longer appeared in the perſon of Henry III. He at firſt diſcovered only the churliſh temper of a man-hater [G]. Here follow ſome other inſtances of the capriciouſneſs of this Monarch's fortune. He had a brother who was a great burthen to him: death freed Henry from him, and he was overjoyed at this deliverance, which very circumſtance ought to be looked upon as a misfortune; for what can be more odd, than for a perſon to be forced to rejoice at the death of an only brother? However, it would be a kind of benefit, if a ſeries of laſting advantages would accrue from it; but it did not prove ſuch to Henry III; he finding very ſoon that the Duke of Alençon's death, how advantageous ſoever it might be to him, was yet more prejudicial than beneficial [H], ſince it furniſhed a handle for caballing; and fomented that dangerous faction, which mortified the King to ſuch a degree, and at laſt cruſhed him. The joy he felt at getting rid of the Duke of Guiſe was of the ſame kind, it being of ſhort duration; he experienced, during the firſt days, that this great party blow, which he had thought abſolutely neceſſary to his repoſe and ſafety, plunged him into new perplexities, and deadly diſquietudes [I]. It muſt be confeſſed that this King ſurpaſſed himſelf, in executing the project

(f) See the article MARIANA remark [O].

[G] He at firſt diſcovered only the churliſh temper of a man-hater.] "At his return from Poland he was "almoſt inacceſſible, except to three or four; and "would always eat in private, contrary to the cuſtom "of our Kings: but this not being approved of, re-"monſtrances were made to him on that ſubject; "wherefore being forced, as it were, by cuſtom, to "eat in public, he cauſed great rails to be fixed "round his table, which are ſtill in the Hall of the "Louvre at Paris; and the following verſes were "written on that occaſion, and fixed up in different "parts of the Louvre.

"Puis qu'Henry Roy des François
"N'en ayme que quatre ou trois,
"Il faut que ces trois ou quatre,
"Allent ſes ennemis combatre.

The ſenſe is,

"Since Henry King of France loves but three or four "of his ſubjects, thoſe three or four muſt advance, "in order to fight his enemies.

"He commanded that no perſon ſhould come into "his bed-chamber without having a cap or bonnet "on (32)." I imagine that the reaſon of his making that order was, becauſe he himſelf wore a certain little bonnet like that of a child, having a roll cut with ſlaſhes acroſs, and upon it a plume of feathers before, with a fine ſtone crotchet, and a large peruke; and he never uncovered himſelf, though he were at Church, becauſe his head was ſhaved (33). There was ſomething fantaſtical in all this. The words above will make the reader underſtand the following paſſage. Even his turbant repreſented ſufficiently his infidelity, he being always covered after the Turkiſh faſhion; and he never took off that turbant to do honour to Jeſus Chriſt (34). In this manner is Henry III reproached, by the author of the book intitled, The Martyrdom of the two brothers.

(32) Du Verdier, Proſopographie, tom. 3. p. 2558.

(33) Ibid. tom. 3. pag. 2560.

(34) Martyre des deux Freres, folio G ij verſo.

[H] The Duke of Alençon's death, how advantageous ſoever it might be to him, was yet more prejudicial than beneficial.] I ſtudy, not only to ſay nothing but what I can bring proofs for, but always to bring, whenever I have an opportunity for it, the teſtimony of contemporary authors; the reader therefore may be perſuaded, that it is with pleaſure I here make uſe of Stephen Paſquier's words (35). "He ſtill had (36) a "thorn in his foot, which in the midſt of that "peace (37), ſeemed to check the career of his ſa-"tisfaction. For although, in outward appearance, "he was not in any miſunderſtanding with the Duke "his brother; he yet was ſecond King, having his "court and his favourites apart, ſometimes in the "city of Tours, or elſe in other cities dependent on "him, or of his appennage. That Duke's way of "thinking and opinions were ſo oppoſite to thoſe of "the King, that he never would ſuffer himſelf, or "any belonging to him, to be honoured with the "Order of the Holy Ghoſt. Beſides, his appennage "was ſo great, that it ſwallowed up a conſiderable "part of France. He had his Chamber of Account "in Tours, and his Exchequer at Alençon, which "judged, without appeal, of the cauſes of that "Dukedom both civil and criminal. Farther, this "Prince preferred to the Biſhopricks and Abbeys of "his Appennage whomſoever he pleaſed, in order "for their being nominated to the Pope by the King, "according to the Concordate: all theſe were gran-"deurs like thoſe of a King, which might inſpire "his ſoul with jealouſy, but he prudently diſſembled "it. Now it happened, in 1583, that the Duke "died; and by his death his Appennage was united to "the Crown. Thoſe who governed the King re-"joiced exceedingly in their hearts; and he himſelf "diſcovered ſufficiently, how much he imagined his "grandeur was thereby increaſed, when he wrote with "his own hand the regulations of it; ordaining that "his Chancellor, ſitting in Council, ſhould be cloathed "in a gown and long robe of crimſon velvet; his "Counſellor of State in purple ſattin; and that his "Gentlemen Uſhers and Valets de Chambre ſhould "have velvet doublets, and upon them a maſſy chain "of gold hanging at their necks; then, a long range "of rooms for people to paſs through before he could "be come at; and a long train of Lords who were "to walk before him, whenever he went to Church. "Indeed the abovemention'd Duke's death, at firſt ſight, "promiſed him a long tranquillity; and nevertheleſs, "it proved the completion of his miſery, and that "of all France; for had the Duke lived, the con-"trivers of the League would not have been favoured "with a ſingle pretence . . . But the inſtant he was "dead, in 1584, the Princes of the League were "not afraid to diſplay the diſguſts they had been "hatching, covered with the cloak of the Catholic, "Apoſtolic and Romiſh Religion." It is to be obſerved, that love intrigues had ſowed the ſeeds of diſcord between theſe two brothers. They happened to be rivals in love: one of their hearts would diſlodge or ſupplant the other; and not being able to bear partners in love, any more than in authority, they changed a fraternal affection, into implacable hatred and ſpite (38). I now leave the reader to judge whether this double jealouſy, the one of love and the other of ambition, between two brothers (39), the one a King and the other preſumptive heir to the Crown, and whoſe turn of mind and inclinations were depraved, would not be apt to inſpire them with a prodigious antipathy (40).

(35) Paſquier's Letters, lib. 14. tom. 2. p. 140, & ſeq.

(36) i. e. Henry III.

(37) That which was concluded anno 1577.

(38) Matthieu, cited by Marcel, Hiſt. of France, tom. 4. pag. 602.

(39) See in the remark [B] of the article DRUSILLA, what is there ſaid concerning the hatred of brothers. See alſo citation (29) of the article DRUSUS, ſon of Germanicus.

[I] He finding . . . . that the death of the Duke of Guiſe, . . . plunged him into new perplexities and deadly diſquietudes.] Paſquier ſhall again be the Commentator on this occaſion. "Immediately, ſays he (41), after "the Duke of Guiſe's death, no King was ever ſo "highly ſatisfied as ours; he crying aloud and plainly "to every one, that he now had got rid of a com-"panion, and conſequently of a maſter; and the "next day, the death of the Cardinal compleated all "his wiſhes. He enjoyed for ſome days this tran-"quillity of mind; diſpatching letters on all ſides, "to ſhew the motives of his conduct, but with little "advantage to himſelf. About eight or ten days "after, as he received no news from Paris, he began "to reflect, and think of his conſcience, which leſſened

(40) It was ſo great, that Henry III one day ordered the King of Navarre to kill the Duke of Alençon. See Perefixe in the Hiſtory of Henry the Great, pag. m. 42, ad ann. 1575.

(41) Paſquier, Lettres, liv. 13. tom. 2. pag. 61, & ſeq.

project relating to the putting to death the Duke of Guiſe [K]. He diſcovered a great deal of prudence, and much more reſolution than on other occaſions, when he had behaved in ſuch a manner as made the Pope deſpiſe him [L]. One of the oddeſt circumſtances of his fate was, that he was equally hated by Papiſts and Proteſtants. Theſe two parties, though quite oppoſites and counterparts in all things, as well ſpiritual as temporal, agreed in entertaining an averſion for this Prince. This was a center for perſons to join or unite, who, on all other occaſions, were divided. Humanly ſpeaking, the Proteſtants in France had great reaſon to hate him; for he perſecuted them with the utmoſt ſeverity and virulence, and was looked upon as one of the great promoters of the maſſacre on St. Bartholomew's day, and even boaſted his having been ſuch (g); this circumſtance, added to his love and attachment to the moſt monaſtic devotions, ſhould naturally have gained him the eſteem of the Popiſh Eccleſiaſtics, and the greateſt bigots among the Roman Catholics; and nevertheleſs he was more hated by them than one would imagine. This was a very ſtrange caprice in his ruling planet, and here follows another; whatever he had been fondeſt of, proved at laſt pernicious to him. Ei fatale erat, ut quicquid ardentius dilexerat, id illi poſtremo perniciem adferret (h). What I obſerved (i), with regard to the irregularities and diſorders which the prodigality of Henry II occaſioned, may be applied with ſtill greater propriety to the reign of Henry III, a Prince infinitely more profuſe than his father. Accordingly, there were ſeen in his reign,

(g) Thuan. lib. 96. pag. 301.

(h) Idem, lib. 90, ſub fin. pag. m. 193.

(i) Remark [BB] of the article HENRY II.

" the exceſs of his joy: and afterwards hearing of " that general revolt, he earneſtly wiſhed, that what " he had done were ſtill to do... The King grew " inſenſibly to be diſpleaſed at every thing, even " with himſelf: this I can affirm and write to you, " as having been an eye-witneſs of it. He now " grew more diſtruſtful than ever, as you ſhall ſoon " hear." Paſquier then gives four or five examples, which plainly ſhew the dreadful perplexity this Prince was in. He wanted to convey, to d'Amboiſe Caſtle, ſome perſons he had cauſed to be ſeized after the death of Meſſieurs de Guiſe, " and found no body he could " truſt but himſelf. I will tell you frankly, adds " Paſquier, that moſt of us who were in Blois, al- " moſt burſt with indignation, to ſee the King's af- " fairs reduced to ſo low an ebb, that he himſelf was " forced to ſuperintend and guard his own priſoners. " Scarce was he gone, but advice was brought us, " that Marſhal d'Aumont having abandoned the ci- " tadel, and raiſed the ſiege of Orleans, upon the march " of the Sieur de Mayenne, was retired with his " forces to Baugency. Many of his ſoldiers came " wounded to Blois. Upon this we all believed, that " the conducting of theſe priſoners was a refined pre- " tence ſtudiouſly ſought for by the King, in order " that he might quit the city with leſs diſhonour. " And this I can aſſure you, that had the Sieur de " Mayenne then fallen upon us, the terror was ſo " great and ſo general, that he would not have met with " the leaſt reſiſtance; and being once maſter of Blois, " all the river Loire had been his; eſpecially as all " the towns were wavering; and the King would " have been prodigiouſly at a loſs, to find a " place whither he might retire. God was pleaſed " to deliver us from that evil (42)." The author adds (43), that Lognac, who " firſt prompted the " King to give orders for the perpetrating of that " murther, which had proved ſo unſucceſsful," quite loſt his favour. Some Hiſtorians relate that this brave Gentleman, not thinking himſelf ſafe at Court, ſued to the King for ſome place whither he might retire to, in order to ſecure himſelf from the reſentment of thoſe of the League (44). This was intimating to the King the bad ſtate to which it was believed his affairs were reduced; and the anſwer which we are told he made to Lognac, is not unworthy of a great King. I mention this elſewhere (45).

(42) Ibid. pag. 64.

(43) Ibid. pag. 65.

(44) See the article LOGNAC, remark [F].

(45) In the ſame article.

[K] This King ſurpaſſed himſelf, in executing the project relating to the putting to death the Duke of Guiſe.] His heart had failed him at the battle of the Barricades; he had given up the day to his rival; had fled from Paris, and there left the Duke of Guiſe all the glory of a triumph: but his courage revived in Blois, and he there humbled that proud enemy. The following words from the Æneid may be applied on this occaſion.

Quondam etiam victis redit in præcordia virtus,
Victoreſque cadunt (46).

That is,

" The vanquiſh'd triumph in their turn, and the " victor's mourn. Dryden.

(46) Virgil. Æn. lib. 2. ver. 367.

Then was verified the truth of a ſentence in Homer, I mean of the remonſtrance which Calchas made to Achilles, viz. that a King who is angry with an inferior, gets the better of him one time or other,

Κρείσσων γὰρ βασιλεὺς ὅτε χώσεται ἀνδρὶ χέρηϊ,
Εἴπερ γάς τε χόλον γε καὶ αὐτῆμαρ κατακρύψῃ,
Ἀλλά γε καὶ μετόπισθεν ἔχει κότον ὄφρα τελέσσῃ,
Ἐν στήθεσσιν ἑοῖσι (47).

(47) Homer, Iliad. lib. 1. ver. 10. See alſo Neſtor's Remonſtrance to Achilles, ibid. ver. 275.

" Bold is the taſk, when ſubjects grown too wiſe,
" Inſtruct a Monarch where his error lies:
" For tho' we deem the ſhort-liv'd fury paſt,
" 'Tis ſure, the mighty will revenge at laſt.

Pope.

I have read the account of this exploit of Henry III in ſeveral authors; but I have not ſeen any relation where the particulars are better connected and proſecuted, than in that which Marcel has inſerted in the 4th tome (48) of his Hiſtory of France. There the reader may ſee all the exactneſs of the meaſures which were taken to give ſucceſs to that mighty blow. The King there diſcovers the greateſt vigilance and reſolution, and a ſoul that is ſo far maſter of itſelf, as carefully to take notice of the moſt inconſiderable things that might be prejudicial (49). Conſider well how greatly he encouraged the Secretary of State, who was to inform the Duke of Guiſe that the King wanted him. " Upon this the King hearing that the Duke " of Guiſe was in the Council, ſaid to Monſieur de " Revol the Secretary of State; Revol, go and tell " the Duke of Guiſe, that he muſt come and ſpeak with " me in my old cloſet. The Sieur de Nambu having " refuſed to admit him, he returned to the cloſet with " a frighted countenance. He was a great, but fear- " ful man. Good God, ſaid the King, Revol, what " ails you? what's the matter? How pale you are? " You'll ſpoil all! rub your cheeks, Revol... There's " no harm, Sir, ſaid he; only Mr. de Nambu will not " open the door, unleſs your Majeſty ſhould command it. " The King orders him from the door of his cloſet, " to let him come in again, and the Duke of Guiſe " alſo (50)." I will take notice, on this occaſion, of a particular which I have read in the Journal des Savans. What happened at Blois with regard to the propoſal made to the States, not to ſuffer any other Religion in France, except the Catholic... ſhews ſufficiently that Henry III was more politic than the generality of the world imagines (51).

(48) Pag. 626, & ſeq.

(49) What the author of the relation ſays of the diſquietudes with which the King was ſeized, does not diſagree with this; for they did not hinder either his application or vigilance.

(50) Marcel, Hiſt. de France, tom. 4. pag. 631.

(51) Journ. des Savans, of the 25th of January 1666, p. 83, 84. In the Extract of Memoires du Duc de Nevers.

[L] He behaved in ſuch a manner, as had made the Pope deſpiſe him.] See the Critique generale of Maimbourg's Calviniſm, and you will there meet with (52) two exclamatious of Sixtus V; the one relating to the raſhneſs which he aſcribed to the Duke of Guiſe, and the other to the ſimplicity, which he aſcribed to Henry III. He ſpoke with great freedom and bluntneſs on that occaſion. Some authors (53) relate of this Pope, that, reflecting on the conduct of that Monarch, he ſaid, I have done all that lies in my power to extricate myſelf from the Monkiſh condition, and he does whatever he can to get into it.

(52) Letter 3. num. 2. pag. 38. of the 3d edit.

(53) See Naudé, chap. 1. of his Coups d'Etat, pag. m. 22.

reign, more taxes; a greater number of edicts were publiſhed for levying of money, and the public treaſure was more profuſely ſquandred, than ever had been known in the Kingdom. The evil would have been ſtill greater, could that Prince have obtained leave to alienate the royal demeſnes; but this the States General of France would never conſent to [M]. It is to be obſerved that Henry III, who with regard to his favourites, was not jealous of authority, and did not aſpire to independence, had a paſſionate deſire to increaſe the regal power [N]. I ſhall take ſome notice of his devotions [O]; will not

[M] The States General of France would never conſent to . . . alienate the royal demeſnes.] Beſides what I have ſaid upon this in the article of BODIN (54), I will here quote a paſſage from Mezerai (55). "With regard to the alienation of the crown-lands... "Emar (56), by order of the aſſembly, anſwered "Bellievre, whom the King had ſent thither; that "ſuch an alienation was abſolutely forbid, by the "common and fundamental Law of the State; that "the King's demeſnes or crown-lands were like a "woman's jointure, which cannot be ſold or appro- "priated to any other uſe by her huſband: that they "were ſtill more ſacred than thoſe of the Church, "becauſe they cannot be alienated for any cauſe what- "ſoever, even with ſolemnity; and indeed it was never "known that recourſe had been had to this expedi- "ent, even when France was in the greateſt neceſ- "ſity, and had been in greater danger than it was "at that time, as in the reign of King John, for "whoſe deliverance the French were obliged to give "ſo much money, ſo many cities and provinces; "that in a word, they were one of the ſtrongeſt pil- "lars of the throne, and on which the portions, "dowries, and appennages were founded; and there- "fore, that the royal demeſnes ought to be ſtrength- "ened rather than weakned, and raiſed higher ra- "ther than lowered: and that, the reaſon why the "third eſtate ſo ſtrongly remonſtrated the conſequences "of that alienation, was, becauſe whatever ſhould "be taken from the crown-lands, muſt be made good "at their expence; and that the whole loſs would "fall on them alone, and not on the other two "eſtates, which, on that very account, conſented "more eaſily to it." If the reader is deſirous of ſee- ing the limitations of the royal authority in that re- ſpect, let him read what follows. "By the edict "enacted anno 1565 at Moulins, where all the "Princes and great Lords were aſſembled, with a "numberleſs multitude of Preſidents and Counſellors "of the ſupreme Courts, it is expreſly decreed, that "all alienations made, or to be made, of the crown- "lands, ſhould be void except in two caſes, viz. for "making a proviſion for the younger children of our "Kings; and for mortgages neceſſary to raiſe ſums "ſufficient for the exigencies of the war; and that "in theſe two caſes, letters patents ſhould be paſſed "and publiſhed in the Courts of Parliament; it be- "ing very expreſly forbid them, to pay any regard "to ſuch letters, for any other cauſe or time what- "ſoever, although it ſhould be but for one "year (57)."

(54) Remark [I].

(55) Mezerai, Hiſt. de France, tom. 3. pag. 433.

(56) Preſident of Bourdeaux, one of the Deputies to the States of Blois, in 1576.

(57) Paſquier, Lettres, liv. 6. tom. 1. pag. 341.

[N] Henry III, who, with regard to his favourites . . . . did not aſpire to independence, had a paſſionate deſire to increaſe the regal power.] Theſe are two points. The firſt I prove by a remark that was made on the great credit and intereſt of Duke d'Epernon; and on a Fortune, made of ſilver gilt, which the city of Roan preſented him with (58). That Goddeſs held him in a ſtrict embrace, and below was the following Italian words; E per non laſciarti. i. e. "Will not abandon "thee." A motto taken from the ambiguous and equivo- cal turn in his name; to ſhow that his grandeur could never be deſtroyed; as indeed the King having an ex- ceſſive favour for him, had before proteſted to him, that he would make him ſo great in the midſt of his friends, that it ſhould not be in his power to leſſen him, though he ſhould afterwards deſire to do it. This is a circumſtance we have ſince learnt from Duke d'Eper- non, by a fine letter which he wrote, during his diſ- grace, to the King (59). Thoſe perſons who ſay that Kings never love any body, and who look upon that as a great fault, are in a double error; for moſt Mo- narchs are apt to give into ſuch an exceſs of friend- ſhip, as occaſions more diſorders than could ariſe from an indifferent and inſenſible heart. See, above, the compariſon which Bodin has made between the laſt years of the reign of Francis I, and Henry IId's reign. See likewiſe the remark [B] of this article. It were perhaps to be wiſhed, that Kings reſembled the wiſe men of the Stoics, viz. were without love or hatred. It is at leaſt very certain, that the too kind, too tender, too beneficent, and too profuſe diſpoſition of our Henry, gave riſe to a multitude of Calamities. I now proceed to the ſecond point.

(58) When he made his entry into Roan, as Governor of Normandy.

(59) Paſquier, Lettres, liv. 13. tom. 2. pag. 72.

The States of the Kingdom in 1576, had reſolved to nominate twelve Deputies to aſſiſt in the King's council, when the papers which the three Eſtates were to preſent to his Majeſty, ſhould be examined there. This reſolution did not pleaſe Henry III, he fear- ing that thoſe State-Deputies would prevent his diſ- poſing of his affairs in ſuch a manner as to increaſe his power; but when he was made ſenſible, that his authority would thereby be very much increaſed, he was greatly pleaſed that the States had taken ſuch meaſures; was angry that they had changed their minds, and was very much diſguſted at Bodin, who had cauſed that change (60). It will be very proper to hear Thuanus. Cum Bodinus tertium ordinem, ſi ulterius pergerent, interceſſurum diceret, ſacer ordo, ac mox nobilitas acquieviſſet, ac commune ſuffragiorum votum fuit, ne ulli delegati, qui cum regiis conſiliariis de poſtu- latis decernerent, ab Ordinib. eligerentur. contrarium cum initio placuiſſet, eaque re non mediocriter Rex a- nimo commotus eſſet, ut ſupra oſtendimus, poſtea muta- verat, à Lugdunenſi Archiepiſcopo, ut putatur, inductus, qui principi POTENTIÆ SUÆ AMPLIFI- CANDÆ SUPRA MODUM CUPIDO, ex quo Majeſtati regiæ decrementum metuebat, ex eo incrementum acceſſurum artificioſe perſuaſerat (61). i. e. "Bodin having declared, that the third Eſtate would "oppoſe that affair, if it ſhould be carried any far- "ther; the Clergy, and preſently after the Nobility, "acquieſced; and it was unanimouſly voted, that no "Deputies ſhould be elected by the Eſtates, to debate "with his Majeſty's Council, with relation to peti- "tions, though the very reverſe had formerly been "reſolved upon by them, whereby they had greatly "diſguſted the King, as was ſhewn above. But his "Majeſty afterwards changed his opinion with regard "to this affair; induced, as it is thought, by the "Archbiſhop of Lyons, who artfully ſuggeſted to this "King, WHO HAD A PRODIGIOUS DESIRE TO IN- "CREASE THE ROYAL POWER, that inſtead of de- "creaſing it, as he imagined, this would increaſe it." The Archbiſhop of Lyons acted the ſubtle Politician on this occaſion.

(60) See above, the remark [I] of the article BODIN.

(61) Thuan. lib. 63. pag. 187.

[O] I ſhall take ſome notice of his devotions.] I ſhall borrow the words of Verdier Vau Privas: "He per- "formed ſeveral extraordinary devotions, going ſome- "times at ten o'clock at night to the Carthuſian Mo- "naſtry, to hear mattins. He inſtituted the brother- "hood of the White Penitents, and the Annunciation "of our Lady at the Auguſtins in Paris; and uſed "to go in proceſſion like others, with his ſackcloth "and whip at his girdle. . . . . He would likewiſe "inſtitute ſeveral other companions or ſocieties, as "that of St. Jerom, called the Blue Penitents in "Marmoutier College; that of the Crucifix and of "Black Penitents, in St. Michael's College; and that "of the Grey Penitents of St. Francis, at St. Eloy. "He brought Feuillants, who are certain reformed "Monks of the order of Ciſtertians, from the Abbey "of Feuillance near Thouloufe, and fixed them in the "ſuburb called Saint Honoré, whither he uſed often "to go and perform his devotions. He had built "a houſe near the Monaſtry of the Capuchins, where "people likewiſe uſed to go on certain days, and "perform ſpiritual exerciſes. Every one was door- "keeper, and performed the other offices in his turn, "and he there went by the name of brother Henry; "and not omit that he was eloquent; had a love for the Sciences; and took a great delight in hearing the converſation of learned men; but he was charged with doing this unſeaſonably, as alſo with regard to the pains he took to ſtudy the Latin tongue [P]. Two very curious Memoirs have been ſent me, the one relating to the propoſal which this King had been prevailed upon to approve, viz. to recognize the Duke of Lorrain's eldeſt ſon for

" and if any perſon wanted to ſpeak with him, he was " obliged to aſk for brother Henry, as when any Cou- " rier arrived there, or any other affair happened, whilſt " he was in that conclave. He founded another fra- " ternity or brotherhood of Hieronymitans in Vincen- " nes, and at St. Mary de vie ſaine. He cauſed a " great and noble houſe to be built in the Horſe- " Market, after a fantaſtical manner, with certain " ſmall cells, in order to go and ſpend ſome days there " in a Monkiſh way. . . . . (62). He uſed to wear " . . . . . at his girdle a pair of beads containing ten " Ave Maria's (63)." This Author had great reaſon to ſay, that many people uſed to look upon all this as grimace (64); for the writers of the League, and others alſo, have ſlandered him very much on that account. I ſhall content myſelf with citing a paſſage which I met with in a libel of the Leaguers. " The cells " built by that hypocrite, were only to ſerve as a " cover to his impurities, and wicked, filthy, and Sodo- " mitical practices: John d'Eſpernon knows ſome- " thing of this, and cannot give me the lie on that oc- " caſion. Men of the greateſt wiſdom have juſtly " obſerved, that this was only to amuſe fools, and " that they were cages deſigned for other ſorts of " birds; and not a religious ſimplicity, which has " ever been the real motive for all Princes and men of " honour to ſequeſter themſelves, who were not, (like " that ſpecious Hermit) ſtruck intimately with a " ſpirit of hypocriſy (65)." Du Verdier obſerves, that the Preachers, and among others Maurice Poncet, cried aloud againſt theſe brotherhoods and proceſſions made by the King. This Poncet ſeems to have been the moſt furious of them all. I here quote what Pierre Matthieu ſays on this ſubject, whereby the reader will find, that all theſe acts of outward devotion were more outward grimace, without any inward amendment. " On Sunday the 24th of March 1583, the " King impriſoned Poncet the Friar, who preached " in Lent at Notre Dame, for having preached " with too much freedom, the foregoing Saturday, " againſt that new brotherhood (66), calling it the " brotherhood of Hypocrites and Atheiſts; and to " prove this (I repeat his very words) I was informed " from very good hands, that yeſterday evening, " which was the Friday of their proceſſion, the ſpit " was turning for the ſupper of thoſe corpulent Peni- " tents; and that, after having devoured the fat ca- " pon, they had, for their night-collations, young " girls, that were got ready for them. . . . . Ye " wretched hypocrites, you there mock God under " a maſk, and carry a whip at your girdle merely " out of ſhew. But heaven knows you ought not to " carry it there; but it ought to be laid on your " backs and ſhoulders, till ſuch times as you have " been very heartily threſhed with it; for there is " not one among you but richly deſerves it. For " theſe words the King, without deſiring otherwiſe " to ſpeak to him, ſaying that he was an old fool, " cauſed him to be conducted in his coach, by the " Captain of the watch, to his Abbey of St. Pere at " Melun, without doing him any other harm, than " the fear he was under had put him in, as he was " going away, viz. that they would throw him into " the river (67)."

[P] He was eloquent, had a love for the ſciences, ... but he was charged with doing this unſeaſonably, as alſo with regard to the pains he took in learning the Latin tongue.] Mezerai gives the ſubſtance of the ſpeech which that Prince made to the States of Blois, in 1576, and adds (68), " This beautiful ſpeech de- " livered by the mouth of a King, with a truly royal " action, and a wonderful grace, was unanimouſly " applauded by the aſſembly. However, the wiſeſt " in it grieved, that that Prince, who was admired " for the great number of outward qualities he " poſſeſſed, ſhould not have had an education ſuitable " to his birth; and they could not forbear, at the " ſame time that they applauded the natural beauty " of his genius, deteſting thoſe who had ſo wickedly " corrupted him." He alſo gives the ſubſtance of the harangue which the Prince in queſtion ſpoke at the opening of the States of Blois in 1576, and he prepares the reader for it by the following words (69): " He made a fine ſpeech to them, wherein he obſerv- " ed ſo much moderation, as to declare, that he was " willing to aſſure them, that he had forgot all paſt " injuries; but it was upon condition that, all facti- " ons being ſuppreſſed, his authority ſhould be re- " ſtored in all its force. He expatiated on this with " ſo much art and politeneſs, that had the only queſ- " tion been, whether he was a good Orator, he would " have gained his point." I ſhall confirm this elogium by a letter, which one of the Deputies (70) wrote to the States of Blois. " It was the moſt beau- " tiful and moſt learned ſpeech ever heard, not only " from a King, but from one of the beſt Orators in the " world. He delivered it with ſuch grace, ſuch aſſur- " ance, ſuch gravity and ſweetneſs, that he drew tears " from many, from which number I cannot exempt " myſelf: for I felt ſuch an emotion in my ſoul, as " that Prince ſpake, that I was forced, in ſpite of my- " ſelf, to diſcover it by my tears. He repreſented in " ſo compaſſionate a light, the miſeries of this King- " dom; ſet forth, in ſuch ſtrong colours, the ſorrow " this filled him with, compared the felicity, &c. (71)." It would be to no purpoſe to object, that his ſpeeches were made for him; for this would not hinder his being conſidered as very eloquent, conſidering the manner in which he ſpoke. Thoſe who fill the firſt ſeats in the Parliaments, merit ſometimes the title of good Orators, tho' they get others to compoſe the ſpeeches which they deliver at the opening of the ſeſſions; and how many excellent Preachers are not Authors of the ſermons which they deliver? I will not ſtop here, but will quote another paſſage from Mezerai, to ſhew that this Monarch ſpoke exceedingly well off-hand (72). " He became ſo eloquent, by the natural diſpoſition " he had for it, that if it were poſſible for there to be " any exceſs in ſo charming an accompliſhment, " we might have reaſon to ſay that he was too " great a maſter of it. And indeed, he was greatly " delighted with numerous aſſemblies, and ſuch things " wherein outward ſplendor was concerned, where it " was found, that his ſpeech was always the fineſt; " and that even the extempore anſwers which he uſed " to make to the Deputies and Embaſſadors, were bet- " ter than the ſpeeches which they had prepared with " great art and pains (73)." I know not whether this great Hiſtorian ever inſinuated, that the ſpeeches of this Monarch had been wrote by another. I know Thuanus relates, that it was thought Morvillier was Author of that which the King ſpoke to the States of Blois in 1576 (74); but I am certain that if this Prince did not compoſe theſe ſpeeches, he at leaſt examined and corrected them. This I am perſuaded of from what I am going to ſay.

He was paſſionately deſirous of acquiring a perfect knowledge of the French tongue, and of ſpeaking it politely and correctly. The pains he took for this purpoſe, was crowned with the utmoſt ſucceſs. Noſter Galliæ Rex Henricus III, elegantiæ ſermonis ſui ſtudioſus (aliquot præſertim ante obitum annis, quo tempore plura regia quam multi credunt, habebat) haud infelici & inutili ſtudio, fuit. In eo enim tandem excelluit: & ita quidem ut non minus caſtigatum quàm ornatum eſſe cuperet (75). i. e. " Our Henry III, King of " France, was vaſtly curious with regard to the ele- " gance of his diction (particularly ſome years before " his death, at which time he poſſeſſed more royal " qualities than is generally imagined) and was no " ways unſucceſsful in that ſtudy; for at laſt he ex- " celled in it, and endeavoured as much to be ac- " curate, as he did to be elegant." He would gueſs the Author of a book by the ſtile in which it was wrote. Hence it was that he ſuppoſed Henry Stephens had wrote a certain anonymous book (76), and he was not miſtaken in his conjectures. He was vaſtly zealous for the improvement of his native tongue; and having

(62) Du Verdier, Proſopogr. tom. 3. pag. 2559.

(63) Ibid. pag. 2560.

(64) Ibid. pag. 2559.

(65) Martyre des deux Freres, fol. 5. edit. of 1589, 8vo.

(66) That of the Penitents.

(67) Pierre Matthieu, Hiſt. des derniers Troubles, pag. m. 15.

(68) Mezerai, Hiſt. de France, tom. 3. pag. 422. See alſo pag. 481.

(69) Idem, ibid. pag. 714.

(70) In 1588.

(71) Marcel, Hiſt. de France, tom. 4. pag. 602.

(72) Mezerai, Hiſt. de France, tom. 3. pag. 799.

(73) See Mezerai, Hiſt. de France, pag. 481.

(74) Thuan. lib. 63. pag. 179.

(75) Henri. Stephan. Epiſt. Dedicat. Tractatus de Lipſii Latinitate, pag. 11.

(76) Idem, ibid.

for his ſucceſſor [Q]; and the other relates to what the Deputy of the League was ordered to repreſent to the Pope, after James Clement the Dominican had aſſaſſinated this King [R]. This execrable murther was perpetrated in the town of St. Clou. Some Proteſtant having commanded Henry Stephens to ſhow the advantages and excellency of it, he was ſo very urgent with him to draw up ſuch a work, that he was forced to bring him a printed copy of it very ſoon. Ita ergo diœtes fuerit, ut intra breve temporis ſpatium non ſolum compoſitum ſed excuſum etiam afferre ad illum oportuerit (77). I have obſerved in another place (78), that he wanted that learned man to make a parallel between the Ciceronians of Italy and thoſe of France. I alſo ſaid (79), that he had an affection for Bodin, becauſe of the learned diſcourſes he heard him pronounce. He was very fond of the converſation of a great many other learned men. I am to obſerve that, in 1579, he gave 3000 livres to Henry Stephens, together with a yearly penſion of 300 livres (80).

(77) Idem, ibid.

(78) Citation (3) above of the article BUNEL (Peter.)

(79) Citat. (27) of the article BODIN.

(80) La Caille, Hiſt. de l'Imprimerie, pag. 135.

It remains for me to prove, that it was thought he ſpent, in thoſe things, a part of his time which he ought to have devoted to more urgent affairs. " If " our Prince had reaſon to fear, it was at that " time (81); nevertheleſs this new King, as though " he had enjoyed a profound peace, inſtead of arming himſelf for the field, applied himſelf to learn, " on one ſide, Grammar and the Latin tongue under " Doron, (who he afterwards created Counſellor of " the great Council) and on the other hand formed a " kind of Academy with Pibrac, Ronſard, and other " wits, on certain days, whereon every one diſcourſed " on ſome ſubject, as had before been agreed upon. " This was a truly noble and laudable exerciſe, but " no ways proper, conſidering the affairs that King " then had upon his hands. The grammatical leſſons he uſed to take in this manner, made me " diſplay my anger in the ſix Latin verſes following:

(81) That is, at the time of the civil war, which the Duke of Alençon and the King of Navarre cauſed in the beginning of his reign.

" Gallia dum paſſim civilibus occidit armis,
" Et cinere obruitur ſemiſepulta ſuo,
" Grammaticam exercet media Rex noſter in aula,
" Dicere jamque poteſt vir generoſus, Amo.
" Declinare cupit, verè declinat & ille,
" Rex bis qui fuerat, fit modo Grammaticus (82).

(82) Paſquier's Lettres, liv. 19. tom. 2. pag. 482.

" Whilſt France is ſtill laid waſte with civil wars,
" And lies half buried deep beneath its aſhes,
" Our Pedant-Monarch ſtudies Grammar rules,
" And now he conjugates, and now declines.
" Decline! yet that he does, who twice a King,
" Is now, a what? a mere Grammaticaſter.

Pibrac having ſaid once to Paſquier (83), that he had heard that Marillac (84) was Author of that epigram, added, that if he was ſure of it, he would make him atone for what he had done; for it does not become a ſubject to ridicule in that manner the manners and behaviour of his King (85). This would be juſt, replied Paſquier (86), " in any perſon's mouth but " yours, who ought to think, that if a King, who " is expoſed to the view of all his ſubjects, does not " put ſome reſtraint upon his actions, it will be extremely difficult for him to prevent the diſcontent " of thoſe who revere him. He added, that ſuch " kind of verſes were wrote, not by one who was " an enemy to his Majeſty, but who rather idoliſed " him; and therefore was ſorry to ſee him, on that " account, become the contempt of all his people; " and that we ought all to wiſh, as the caſe then " ſtood, that this epigram might fall into the King's " hands, to be a leſſon to him, not of Latin Grammar, but of the manner in which he ought to " conduct himſelf."

(83) Idem, ibid. pag. 483.

(84) A young, and very promiſing Counſellor. Paſquier's Letters, tom. 2. pag. 483.

(85) Ibid. pag. 484.

(86) Idem, ibid.

(87) It was communicated to me by Mr. Marais, who was mentioned at the end of the remark [Q] of the 3d Duke of GUISE, Counſellor in the Parliament of Paris; to which he has added the following note: In an inſtruction which Henry III gave the Sieur de la Clyette at his ſetting out for Florence, Mr. de Schomberg is called Counſellor to his Majeſty in his Council of State, and Marſhal of his German Soldiery.

[Q] The propoſal this King had been prevailed upon to approve, viz. to recognize the Duke of Lorrain's eldeſt ſon for his ſucceſſor.] Monſieur de Schomberg prevented this. I am poſſeſſed of the copy (87) of the memorial he drew up on this ſubject, and which I thought very worthy of being inſerted here at length.

" " Memoir of the Sieur du Schomberg.

" Sometime after the death of Meſſieurs de Guiſe, " which happened at Blois, Cardinal de.... propoſed, in his Holineſs's name, that in caſe his " Majeſty would declare the Marquis du Pont, his " nephew, heir to the crown, and get him recognized as ſuch with the uſual ſolemnities; his Holineſs was certain, that the King of Spain would " give the Infanta in marriage to the ſaid Marquis, " which would put an end to all the troubles in " France. The King going to agree to this, at the " ſollicitation of ſome perſons about him, Mr. de " Schomberg diverted this deſign by employing the " following reaſons: that this would be inverting the " order eſtabliſhed in France; aboliſhing the fundamental Laws; and tranſmitting to poſterity a certain monument of its meanneſs and cowardice, for " which his Majeſty would be juſtly blamed by Hiſtorians; and his ſervants and ſubjects branded with " perfidy and diſloyalty, with which vice he himſelf was reſolved not to be infected. That this war " was between Frenchmen againſt Frenchmen, who, " at firſt, diſcover great heat and vigour; but afterwards return, of themſelves, to a rational way of " thinking. That his Majeſty ſhould be ſollicitous " only of living, of gaining time, and ſtanding upon " his guard againſt any reſolute villain, who, in his " firſt fury, might attack his perſon; and that his " Majeſty would give order for a waiſtcoat of mail " to be made, for his uſual wear. This was juſtly " reſolved upon, but not put in execution. The Sieur " Schomberg having prevailed with the King to " change his reſolution, by the remonſtrance above-" mentioned, his Majeſty commanded that Gentleman to tell him, by what methods he thought it " would be poſſible for him to quell thoſe tumults. " The Sieur de Schomberg having immediately com-" plied with the King's command, he requeſted his " Majeſty not to follow the maxims he had hitherto " made uſe of; and not to imagine that this affair " could be terminated by his uſual lenity and forbearance; and therefore, that he muſt reſolve with " himſelf to have recourſe to arms, and appear with " the greateſt number of troops in the field. That " for this purpoſe he ſhould countermand Mr. de Nevers who was then before Garrache; and give a " pledge to the King of Navarre, to march with all " his forces to his aſſiſtance; ſend into Germany, " Italy, England, Denmark, and to all other Potentates, to acquaint them with the juſtice of his cauſe, " and the conſequences of it; and deſire them to enable him to raiſe a great army of foreign forces. " This propoſal was violently conteſted, and chiefly " by Mr. de Nevers, who went ſuch lengths as to ſay " it was heretical; that neither the Pope nor any of " the Catholics would be pleaſed to ſee the ſaid King " of Navarre ſo near his Majeſty's perſon. On the " contrary, Mr. de Schomberg continuing firm in his " opinion, declared that this war did not relate to " Religion, in any manner, but to the State; and " that his Majeſty could not ſo ſafely make uſe of " any perſon as of the ſaid King, as it was his intereſt to endeavour at the preſervation of the King-" dom; which he inforced with a great many other " ſtrong reaſons, and theſe proved ſo effectual, that " from this inſtant the treaty with the ſaid King began at Blois, and was afterwards executed at Tours, " where the two Kings had their firſt interview. " With great reaſon therefore the ſervice, which the " Sieur de Schomberg did then to France, in the two " points in queſtion, eſpecially to the Houſe of Bourbon, was greatly celebrated. The King then adviſed, that the ſaid Sieur de Schomberg ſhould write " to the Preſident Jeannin, to keep the Duke of " Mayenne to his allegiance. But his Majeſty having heard of the departure of the ſaid Sieur de " Mayenne from Lyons, and his coming this way, " the ſaid letter was never ſent, and it is ſtill among " my papers in Germany, full of excellent reaſons " and perſuaſions, which have ſince contributed to the " reduction of the ſaid Duke of Mayenne."

[R] What the Deputy of the League was ordered to repreſent to the Pope, after James Clement, the Dominican, had aſſaſſinated the King.] Thoſe pieces can-

Proteſtant authors have taken notice of this circumſtance, and have found ſome myſteries in it. The incident they alledge will be looked upon as very doubtful till ſuch times not be preſerved with too much care, which are ſo many authentic proofs of the fury which ſeized the greateſt part of the French under Henry III, and ſome years after his death. Many people will endeavour to darken the truth of theſe incidents; but we muſt anticipate their pernicious attempts, for the farther men are from an age in which things have been tranſacted, the greater opportunity they have to wrangle. Henry III had not been dead an hundred years when an anonymous writer dared to publiſh a treatiſe (88), to ſhew that James Clement did not kill that Monarch. This is ſwearing that it is night at noon day. The reader will find ſuch circumſtances as clearly convict that Monk, in a piece, a copy whereof has been ſent to me (89), and which I ſhall inſert here at length.

(88) Intitled, La Fatalité de St. Clou. It was printed in 1672. Maimbourg the Jeſuit ſpeaks of it, and refutes it in a few words, in L'Hiſtoire de la Ligue, liv. 3. pag. m. 353.

(89) The ſame Mr. Marais communicated it to me.

" Extract of what was repreſented to the Pope by the " Commandeur de Diou, Embaſſador for the union " of Catholics at Rome.

" It was then (90), moſt holy Father, that the " evil appeared moſt violent; and that the prayers of " both Clergy and People were continued with greater " fervency than ever; and we ought truly to believe, " that they have forced pity from the divine Majeſty, " who would not ſuffer ſo many good people, and ſo " zealous for the holy cauſe, longer to doubt his " goodneſs and mercy; but rather to free them from " their languiſhing ſtate, by ſo great, ſo wonderful an " effect or event, that the more it is conſidered, the " more it raiſes our thoughts to contemplate and ad- " mire his incomprehenſible judgments. What I " mean is the King's death, which came to paſs in " ſo ſtrange a manner, that the truth of it, and the " impoſſibility which was objected to it, were long " contending for the priority! At laſt the news was " confirmed by ſeveral concurrent advices; and tho' " your Holineſs has had particular advice of it from " other hands, I yet flatter myſelf that you will not " be tired with the relation I ſhall give you of it. " A Friar of the Order of St. Dominic, of the Con- " vent of Paris, named brother James Clement, " twenty three or twenty four years of age, born in " the village of Sorbonne in the dioceſe of Sens, and " the laſt of three or four hundred who are in the " ſaid Convent, yet divinely elected and choſen " for ſo generous an exploit as that which God has " atchieved by his hands, had often boaſted (91) to " his brethren, even after the defeat at Senlis, that " he ſaw the affairs of the enemies proſper; that the " King ſhould never die but by his hands; at which " the reſt of the fraternity uſed to laugh, and call " him, out of ſcorn, Captain Clement. However, " this did not make him relinquiſh this thought, and " the reſolution he had formed; on the contrary, he " confirmed himſelf ſo ſtrongly in the deſire he had " of coming to the execution, as made him conſtant " in his deſign; he now thinking of nothing but " the manner by which he might moſt eaſily accom- " pliſh it. In making this attempt he muſt reſolve " upon death; but what kind of death, he could not " pitch upon: but he was willing to ſuffer the moſt " cruel that could be inflicted on him; a conſtancy " ſo wonderful in a Monk, that the like is not found in " this age. To come to the point: he found means " to procure, very ſecretly, the letters of ſome Poli- " ticians; and concerted with them to give the King " ample advice of what was tranſacting in the city, to " the advantage of his affairs. He got ſome words, " by way of credentials, from them; and obtained " from Count de Brienne, priſoner in the Caſtle of the " Louvre, a paſſport, in order that he might get a more " favourable acceſs to the enemy's army. Being now " furniſhed with all things neceſſary for waiting upon " the King, he ſet out from Paris the laſt day of July " in order to go to St. Cloud, and took leave of the reſt " of the Friars (92), exhorting them to pray for him; " ſaying, that he was going, for the ſervice of God, " to deliver the people from miſery, without any " hopes of returning back; and that he did not value " whether he did or not, provided that God would be " ſo gracious as not to let him fail in his deſign, of " the event which they ſhould hear in twenty four " hours. Arriving the ſaid day at St. Cloud, he " could not get an opportunity of ſpeaking to the " King; ſo paſſed the night there, which might " have given him other counſel. The next day be- " ing the firſt of Auguſt, he waited upon the Sieur " de la Gueſle, the King's Attorney General in the " Parliament of Paris, which he had left; and in- " forming him that he had been intruſted with let- " ters, and ſent by ſome of the King's truſty ſer- " vants, and had ſome credentials relating to matters " of great importance to his Majeſty; he therefore " deſired to be introduced by him, in diſcharge of " his duty. The King being informed of this gave " orders for the Monk to be brought in, when he " withdrew into his cloſet, and there talked above a " quarter of an hour with him; during which he " gave him letters, one by one, till his Majeſty had " received the laſt; and the King aſking him whe- " ther thoſe were all, the Friar replied, I believe " not, Sir, but think there muſt be ſome more. " Upon this, putting his hand farther up into his " ſleeve, he drew forth the knife he had hid there; " ſtabbing, in the ventricle or ſtomach, the King, " who finding himſelf wounded, cried out, and ſeized " the hand of the Jacobin, who ſtill kept the knife " in the wound, whereby he hurt himſelf very much, " and with it ſtabbed the Friar in the face, who, " that inſtant, received numberleſs ſtabs from thoſe " who came running in to the King; and whilſt he " was ſlaughtering in this manner, it is ſaid that he " ſpoke as follows: I thank God that I die ſo eaſy a " death; for I did not think to have quitted life in this " manner, and to come off at ſo cheap a rate; upon " which his dead body was caſt into the ſtreet, and af- " terwards burnt, as was told to Mr. de Mayenne. Thus " the King died at two a clock, the next morning " after he had been ſtabbed. Your Holineſs will " pleaſe to take notice of ſome of the moſt remark- " able circumſtances in this incident; for it happen- " ed, on the day that the Church celebrates the feaſt " of St. Peter in Vinculis, whom God delivered, mi- " raculouſly, by his angel, out of Herod's hand, " and thoſe of the Jews to whom he was to be given " up; and the Catholics may declare, that on the " ſame day God delivered them out of the hands of " the Heretics, and from the yoke of a Prince, who " had a ſtrong deſire, in his heart, to fill all Chriſt- " endom with deſolation. On what day, moſt holy " Father, could the monitory of your Holineſs a- " gainſt an impenitent King, and a contemner of the " holy apoſtolical See, be better authorized by the " power of God? When twenty four hours after the aſ- " ſaſſination of the Duke of Guiſe, the ſaid King " cauſed to be inhumanly butchered, in cold blood, " the late Cardinal his brother; it is obſerved that the " watch-word given to the murtherer was St. Cle- " ment. Whilſt this execrable crime was committing, " he was in his cloſet, making merry with his favou- " rites and the accomplices of the ſaid murther; and " God ſuffered a Friar, named Clement (93), to kill him " in his cloſet, in the midſt of a great army, which " was not able to ſecure his deteſtable life. He was " ſo much poſſeſſed by impiety, ever ſince hypocriſy " had made way for it, that he abhorred thoſe preach- " ers who had publickly inveighed againſt his vices; " and, for that reaſon, he thought of nothing but " their ruin, and to take a cruel revenge on them, " which he uſed often to declare and proteſt in his " moſt private diſcourſes, where every one had liberty " to give his opinion, with reſpect to the puniſhment " that ſhould be inflicted on them; but his barbarous " deſigns have been prevented by a Monk, of the " Order of preaching Friars, who has inflicted on " him the divine puniſhment which others had fore- " told him. Theſe things, moſt holy Father, are in " my opinion of ſo much conſequence, that your Ho- " lineſs will judge them worthy of conſideration. Far- " ther, it is manifeſt that this action is not the work " of men. It is a very great remedy to our evils, " which God has applied to them by the miniſtry of

(90) He had juſt before given an account of the murther of the Guiſes, and the revolutions with which it was attended.

(91) NOTA BENE.

(92) NOTA BENE.

(93) NOTA BENE.

times as they ſhall anſwer the obſervations of Peter Victor Cayet [S].

HENRY

" your Holineſs; and it muſt be hoped that, by your " kind interpoſition, he will add a perfect cure to " it; to effect which I ſhall make my moſt humble " requeſts and ſupplications, as I am commanded to " do both by the Duke de Mayenne, and the ſaid " Lords of the general Council, whom I hope your " Holineſs will honour ſo far as to accept of them."

This inſtrument furniſhes us not only with infallible proofs againſt all thoſe who ſhould deny that James Clement had perpetrated the murther, but likewiſe againſt all ſuch as endeavour to juſtify his brethren the Jacobins of Paris. Varillas has expreſly given the reaſons or arguments of thoſe poor apologiſts (94), but has ſaid nothing to refute them. He firſt lays down what is alledged in vindication of the Jacobins in general, after which he ſpeaks as follows (95): but one of them, named Father Bernard Guyart, printed a book, but did not dare to prefix his name to it. He therein pretends to juſtify the Order of St. Dominic, with regard to the murther of Henry III. The particle but at the beginning of the period, prepares all readers for the particular apology of James Clement; no one can imagine that Bernard Guyet intended any thing elſe, and yet Varillas ſpeaks only of the general juſtification of St. Dominic's Order. Let the Grammarians cenſure the Hiſtorian for ſo ill placing the particles called by them adverſatives; I leave that office to them, and ſhall content myſelf with animadverting on him upon another point. The treatiſe intitled, Fatalité de St. Cloud, is doubtleſs the ſame work which, according to Varillas, was publiſhed by Bernard Guyart; now the chief deſign of this treatiſe is, to ſhew that James Clement did not kill Henry III. Varillas does therefore very wrong, not to conſider this work under that idea, but under that of a general apology for the Dominicans. This fault appears to me more excuſable, than that of omitting to ſay, that the book intitled, Fatalité de St. Clou, ſhould not hinder any perſon from adhering to the general opinion. Maimbourg has writ as he ought to have done, in ſaying, that notwithſtanding the book in queſtion, it yet muſt be owned that James Clement was guilty of the murther; and that it is the beſt way to agree ſincerely with the public voice, of what profeſſion ſoever a man may be (96). What he adds to this is not ſo juſt. Eſpecially, ſays he, as the Dominicans do not ſuffer any manner thereby in their honour. For, in fine, faults are perſonal; and no man of good ſenſe would ever take it into his head to reproach ſo holy an Order as that of St. Dominic, with the crime of a particular perſon. Now there is not the leaſt ſolidity in thoſe words. The crime perpetrated by James Clement is not a perſonal crime; it is that of the monaſtery of the Dominicans or Jacobin Friars in Paris. Theſe knew his deſign (97), did not divert him from, but approved the execution of it. His Prior, after having been duly convicted by ſeveral witneſſes of making the elogium of this aſſaſſin, in the pulpit, was put to death (98); and as the city of Paris, and eſpecially the preachers, beſtowed numberleſs bleſſings and applauſes on the Friar who had killed the King; and as all the other cities of the Kingdom which ſided with the League and the Pope himſelf (99) applauded that infamous action; it may be affirmed that the crime committed by James Clement was that of the whole League and of the Court of Rome; for the authors, the adviſers, and approvers of an action, are all thought to be under the ſame predicament, as I ſhall ſhew in ſome other place (100).

(94) Varillas, Hiſt. de Henri III, liv. 11. p. 252. Dutch edit.

(95) Idem, pag. 253.

(96) Maimbourg, Hiſt. de la Ligue, liv. 3. pag. m. 354.

(97) See, above, the Memoir of the Deputy of the League, to the Court of Rome.

(98) Thuan. lib. 98. pag. 346.

(99) Idem, lib. 95. pag. 302.

(100) In the article PROLUS.

[S] Till ſuch time as they ſhall anſwer the obſervations of Peter Victor Cayet.] Weigh well the following words (101): " Huguenots ſay, Death has carried this " King from our world into the other; but, which is " a remarkable circumſtance, in that very room, where, " it is thought the counſel was taken, relating to " the furious maſſacre on St. Bartholomew's day " in the year 1572. Theſe words are found in " the additions to the Inventaire de l'Hiſtoire de " France, by Montliard. The book intitled, Recueil " des 5 Roys, printed at Geneva, makes the ſame aſ- " ſertion in very near the ſame words; and in the " work called de l'Eſtat de l'Egliſe, wrote by John " Taffin, a Proteſtant Miniſter, are the following " words: It has been obſerved, that, by the providence " of God, this happened in that very room wherein, " anno 1573, the reſolution had been taken, with re- " gard to the furious maſſacre on St. Bartholomew's " day. Here we have remarkable circumſtances, and " obſervations with reſpect to the providence of God, " lightly; and I will preſume to ſay, falſely publiſh- " ed. For at the time that the maſſacre on St. Bar- " tholomew's day was perpetrated, the place where " the King was wounded belonged to one Chapellier, " a citizen of Paris; and he poſſeſſed it two years " after that, and his Majeſty had never entered it " when Duke of Anjou, nor did he come into it till a " long time after his return from Poland. The " Queen his mother did not purchaſe it till after the " death of the late King Charles, with an intention " to build there; but finding there would not be room " enough, ſhe gave it, anno 1557, to the Sieur Jerom " de Gondy's Lady, who pulled down the houſe, and " quite new modelled it; having adorned it with " grottos and fountains, and ſo finely embelliſhed it, " that it has been ſince reſorted to by Princes and No- " blemen of high diſtinction, which it had never " been before. Now the compiler of the aforeſaid " Recueil des cinq Rois, from which the ſaid Montli- " ard and Taffin have extracted what they had inſert- " ed in their ſeveral books, for he wrote before them, " has the following words; It is ſaid that the conſul- " tation for the maſſacres was held in that room &c. " Behold a Hearſay, invented by the author of the " ſaid Recueil or Collection, which hearſay was taken " into the Memoires & petits Diſcours, printed at Ge- " neva in 79, with regard to what happened at the " maſſacre on St. Bartholomew's day, in which it is " ſaid, that the reſolutions of it was formed at St. " Clou and in the Tuilleries. . . . Now, to give " ſome colour to this ſlander, the author of the ſaid " Recueil, from the King's being killed in Gondy " palace, draws the following conjecture; and art- " fully foiſts in the following words . . . It is ſaid " that . . . in the very room &c. Montliard who wrote " after him, goes ſtill farther, and ſays, It is believed " &c; yet this is not a hearſay, ſome perſons, ac- " cording to him, believing it. But Taffin the Pro- " teſtant Miniſter who wrote after them all, is ſtill " more confident, aſſerts this, and ſays that it was " by the providence of God. Now what a falſhood is " this! And indeed the Attorney General having " complained, in court, againſt Montliard on that " account, theſe words, with many others, were e- " razed from his book; and he himſelf was greatly " troubled, ſaying for his excuſe, that it was only a " hearſay; but his book being afterwards reprinted " at Geneva, all this was inſerted again, and is looked " upon as a matter of fact, among perſons of that " party (102)." If the incidents which Cayet relates concerning the houſe where Henry III was aſſaſſinated, are true, we can no longer doubt but that the Proteſtant authors whom he refutes are greatly in the wrong; and that the myſterious circumſtances which they have taken the pains to point out, are meer illuſions, and the vain chimeras of credulous minds. But if they could have proved that Cayet is miſtaken; it had been a commendable thing in them, to reprint in the Geneva edition, thoſe particulars which Montliard had been forced to ſuppreſs. It is certain that, according to the maxims of order and regularity, the public ought to have been told, in the Geneva edition, why that paſſage was reſtored; or in other words it ought to have been proved, in the moſt authentic manner, that the council relating to the maſſacre, had been held at St. Cloud, in the very room where the Jacobin killed Henry III. I have the Roan edition in 1612 (103) of the Inventaire of John de Serres, which contains the paſſage which the Attorney General cauſed to be ſuppreſſed. Mr. Mezerai ſuppoſes that the reflections made by the Huguenots, deſcended to a mere myſterious detail. They wrote, ſays he (104), that the King was wounded at the ſame hour, on the ſame day, in the ſame place, and in the very room, where he had concluded the maſſacre on St. Bartholomew's day.

(101) Cayet, Chronol. Noven. ad ann. 1589, folio 224 verſo.

(102) Cayet, Chronol. Noven. ad ann. 1589, folio 225.

(103) It is in the title, ſe vendent à Rouen chez Eſtienne Vereul, dans la Court du Palais.

(104) Mezerai, Hiſt. de France, tom. 3. pag. m. 799.

HENRY IV, King of France, was one of the greateſt Princes, mentioned by the Hiſtorians of theſe latter ages: and it may be affirmed, that had the love he bore to the fair-ſex ſuffered him to exert all his noble qualities [A] in all their ſtrength and beauty, he would have ſurpaſſed or equalled ſuch heroes as are moſt admired. Had this Monarch, the firſt time he debauched his neighbour's wife or daughter, met with the ſame puniſhment as was inflicted on Abelard, he would have been able to conquer all Europe [B], and would, perhaps, have eclipſed the day. He ſays nothing againſt it, he does not cite any author, and does not imitate Peter Cayet in any reſpect. This myſterious remark is urged ſtill more ſtrongly in a book intitled, Journal des choſes memorables advenues durant tout le Regne de Henry III Roy de France & de Pologne; and which has perhaps been printed above twenty times in Holland, with three or four ſatyrical pieces (105). The laſt edition is of 1699. The Journal is here inſerted more at large than in the edition of 1693: now the words following are found at the end of the additions (106): The more we ſeek for obſervations and particulars in ſo aſtoniſhing an accident (107), the more wonders we find in it; ſo that poſterity will look upon this King's death, as a wonder compoſed of numberleſs wonders, among which this has been obſerved, as very worthy of remark, and yet very true, viz. that in the returning from his affairs, as he did when he was killed, the maſſacre on St. Bartholomew's day was concluded on; the late King, who then was called Monſieur, preſided in the Council, viz. in the town of St. Cloud in Gondy-Houſe, the firſt of Auguſt 1572, in the ſame room, and at the ſame hour, which was eight in the morning; the breakfaſt, conſiſting of three ſpits of partridges, being ready, below, for the contrivers of that execrable action. It is to be obſerved that this addition was ſuperfluous; for every thing conſiderable in it is found, in the very ſame words, in the Journal of Henry III, printed in 1693 (108), and 1699 (109); and I believe it is likewiſe in the preceding editions.

If one could be ſure that the Journal in queſtion as publiſhed by the Dutch Bookſellers, was wrote by a Catholic; it would then be certain, that the reflections made by the Proteſtants on the circumſtances of Henry IIId's death, are weaker than thoſe of a writer of the other party. The three Proteſtant authors whom Victor Cayet refutes have improvidence on the other. The firſt contents himſelf with a 'Tis ſaid: the ſecond was not ſatisfied with ſo faint a word, he ſaying, 'tis believed; whilſt the third expreſſes himſelf in a ſtill more poſitive manner. This is generally the caſe in publiſhing of news; the laſt relation is generally the moſt deciſive, and contains the greateſt number of circumſtances. It ſeems a kind of auction, where people are to bid higher than one another; becauſe the goods are decreed to him who offers moſt. But however this be, the Journaliſt of Henry III outbids the three Proteſtant bidders. He relates the incident, not only as very worthy of remark, but alſo as very true. Father Anſelme (110) aſcribes this Journal to Mr. Servin; which agrees well enough with the initial letters that have been put in the editions of the book (111). But Peliſſon aſſerts (112) that Mr. de l'Eſtoille, a member of the French Academy, was ſon to an Audiencier or Uſher in the Chancery at Paris, who "had collected a great number of "particulars relating to his own times, from which "one of his friends, to whom he had lent them, "drew up the piece intitled, Journal de ce qui s'eſt "paſſé ſous Henry III." The queſtion is to know, whether thoſe who were poſſeſſed of the manuſcript before it was firſt publiſhed, have not added, retrenched, or altered any thing in it. However, it is the buſineſs of thoſe who rely on this part of the Journal, to anſwer the reaſons urged by Peter Cayet.

[A] Had the love he bore to the fair ſex, ſuffered him to exert all his noble qualities.] It cannot be ſaid of this Henry, as of ſome great Commanders, who were very fond of pleaſures (1), that he quitted the purſuit of them, when they interfered with his affairs; for he loſt all the advantages which might have accrued to him by the victory of Coutras, merely to fly to a miſtreſs. Hear Mezerai on that occaſion (2). "The King of Navarre ſignalized himſelf, in that "battle, much more by his valour, than by his conduct in reaping advantages from it; for, ſo far "was he from marching directly towards the Queen's "army, as the Prince of Conde would have done, "promiſing, if troops ſhould be given him, to go "and ſeize on the paſſes of Saumur, that he ſuffered "his victorious army to ſeparate, being contented "with taking an oath from the Captains, for them "to come, on the 20th of November, to the confines "of Angoumois and Perigord, in order to march to-"wards the Reiſtres or German Horſe. He kept but "500 horſe; and taking Count de Soiſſons with him, "made his way into Gaſcony, whither he was drawn, "in a forcible manner, as it were, by the ſtrong paſ-"ſion he had for the beautiful Counteſs of Guiche (3)." One of the moſt troubleſome affairs in which Henry IV was ever involved, was doubtleſs the ſiege of Amiens; and nevertheleſs he took the fair Gabrielle with him thither, and lodged her not far from him; and, could he have followed his own impulſe, he would have kept her there during all that dangerous expedition: "But he was ſoon after forced to remove this "ſcandal from the ſight of his ſoldiers; not only "becauſe of their murmurings which reached his ears, "but alſo by reaſon of the reproaches of Marſhal de "Biron (4)."

The reflection I made at the beginning of this remark, viz. that there have been great Commanders, who were very fond of pleaſures, and yet could quit the purſuit of them upon occaſion, is not unknown to thoſe who are acquainted with the character of Alcibiades and Sylla. See what Saluſt ſays of the latter. Sullæ .... animo ingenti, cupidus voluptatum, ſed gloriæ cupidior: otio luxurioſo eſſe, tamen ab negotiis nunquam voluptas remorata (5). i. e. "Sylla .... poſſeſſed a "mighty ſoul; he was fond of pleaſures, but ſtill "more ſo of glory: he paſſed his leiſure hours luxu-"rioufly, and yet never ſuffered his pleaſures to in-"terrupt buſineſs." Here follows what is ſaid of Alcibiades. Quum tempus poſceret, laborioſus (Alcibiades) patiens, liberalis, ſplendidus non minus in vita, quam victu; affabilis, blandus, temporibus callidiſſime inſerviens. Idem ſimul ac ſe remiſerat, nec cauſa ſuberat, quare animi laborem perferret, luxurioſus, diſſolutus, libidinoſus, intemperans reperiebatur, ut omnes admirarentur in uno homine tantam ineſſe diſſimilitudinem, tamque diverſam naturam (6). i. e. "Alcibiades, upon occa-"ſion, was laborious, patient, generous; no leſs "ſplendid in his equipage than in his table; affable, "kind; and could ſuit himſelf, very artfully, to all "circumſtances. But whenever he had a mind to re-"lax, and had no buſineſs upon his hands, he was "luxurious, diſſolute, lewd, and intemperate; ſo that "every one was ſurprized to find, in the ſame man, "ſuch oppoſite manners and contrary characters." The reader will meet with other examples in the remark [A] of the article SURENA.

[B] Had this Monarch ..... met with the ſame puniſhment as was inflicted on Abelard, he would have been able to conquer all Europe.] On the contrary, will it be ſaid, he would have grown ſluggiſh and cowardly; for the ſame ſpirits which prompted him to the love of women, made him valiant; and moſt great Captains were leud. I anſwer, that though it is certain many great Commanders have been of a very amorous complexion, it yet does not follow that their courage and their luſt reſulted from the ſame principle in their conſtitution. Theſe two qualities had their ſeveral cauſes; and all that can be ſaid is, theſe two cauſes conſpired to form the conſtitution of thoſe perſons: but one may eaſily prove, that there is no manner of affinity or relation between thoſe two qualities. How many cowardly people and more fearful than hares (7), are prodigiouſly vigorous in affairs wherein Venus is concerned? What man was ever more brave, more intrepid, than Marſhal de Gaſſion, who bore a mortal hatred to the fair ſex (8)? Was not

(105) Le Divorce Satirique; les Amours du grand Alcandre; la Confeſſion Catholique de Sanci; Diſcours merveilleux de la Vie de Catherine de Medicis.

(106) Journal de Henri III, pag. 316, 317. edit. of 1699.

(107) i. e. the death of Henry III.

(108) Pag. 129.

(109) Ibid.

(110) Anſelme, Hiſt. des grans Officiers, pag. 375.

(111) On the backſide of the title is the following words. Journal du Regne de Henry III, wrote by M. S. A. G. A. P. D. P. Now theſe initial letters are exactly filled up with the following words, by Mr. Servin, Avocat General au Parlement de Paris.

(112) Peliſſon, Hiſt. de l'Academie Franc. pag. m. 330.

(1) See the end of this remark.

(2) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. tom. 5. pag. 308. ad ann. 1587.

(3) See the notes on Amours du grand Alcandre, num. 3. where book 101. of Thuanus is cited.

(4) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronolog. tom. 6. pag. 170. ad ann. 1595.

(5) Salluſt. in Bello Jugurth. pag. m. 362.

(6) Cornel. Nepos, in Alcibiade.

(7) This compariſon makes me recollect, that no animals are more fearful and more laſcivious than hares.

(8) See his Life, in tom. 4. pag. 329, & ſeq.

the glory of Alexander and Cæſar. It would be to no purpoſe to object, that ſuch a puniſhment would have quite enervated his courage [C]. It was his prodigious

Count Tilli, who never knew woman in all his lifetime (9), one of the greateſt Captains of the XVIIth Century? Did not Viſcount de Turenne, though no debauchee in any manner, equal thoſe thunderbolts of war, thoſe famous Generals who were his contemporaries; and who were almoſt as remarkable for their leudneſs as for their triumphs? And to give ſtill ſtronger proof, was not the brave Sigiſmond Battori, Prince of Tranſilvania, ſirnamed the Invincible (10), becauſe of his mighty exploits, as impotent in the wars of Venus, as he was brave in thoſe of Mars; and having confeſſed his impotence (11), his marriage with Maria Chriſtina, daughter of Charles Archduke of Grets, was declared void? Some Eunuchs have been extremely brave Generals; for not to go ſo far back as the renowned Narſes, who lived under the Emperor Juſtin II, in the VIth Century; is it not known that one of the moſt valiant Generals of Soliman was an Eunuch? Erat Halis Eunuchus, ſed corporis defectum animo penſabat: de cetero ſtatura brevi, ſufflato corpore, colore buxeo, ſubtriſti vultu, torvis oculis, & inter latos & eminenteis humeros depreſſo capite, ac prominentibus ex ore duobus veluti aprugnis dentibus deformis (12). i. e. "Hali was an Eunuch, but the greatneſs of his mind "compenſated for his bodily defect. He was low in "ſtature, corpulent, of an olive complexion, had a "gloomy countenance and a ſtern aſpect; his head "bending between his prominent and broad ſhoulders; "and two teeth projecting out of his mouth like two "wild boars tuſks." I own that he was not ſucceſsful in the expedition into Hungary, in 1556; and he even died with grief, becauſe he had not been able to maintain his reputation, nor anſwer the expectation of the public; but he nevertheleſs had a great ſoul, of which his deadly ſorrow is a proof. Fractus ac inglorius Budam ſe contulit, ubi dux, qui tantam de ſe initio expectationem excitaverat, dolore atque ignominia expeditionis inauſpicatæ inviſam vitam cum morte commutavit (13). See Thuanus, who relates a pleaſant joke of this Eunuch, upon his receiving ſome very bad news, viz. the taking of Strigonia. A mere trifle, replied he to the meſſenger: my great loſs, continued he, is here, ſhewing the lower part of his body. Ejus rei cum trepidus nuncius ad eum veniſſet, ipſa vultus conſternatione magnum aliquod malum profeſſus, purpuratus non ſine circumſtantium riſu conſternationi nuntii illudens, & Strigonii, quod nullo negotio recuperari poſſet, amiſſionem elevans, his verbis eum excepiſſe dicitur. Quam tu mihi cladem ingentem, fatue, quod tantum incommodum narras? ea demum mihi clades deploranda contigit, cum hinc (genitalium ſedem oſtentans) ea membra adempta ſunt, quibus vir eram (14) (a). From all this we may conclude, that if Henry IV had met with the ſame Treatment as Abelard, he would not have been in any manner a loſer, either with reſpect to his courage, his prudence or genius. Origen, Photius and Abelard, are a manifeſt proof, that the loſs of the male organs, do not in any manner prejudice the natural talents of the ſoul.

§ (a) Extracted from Buſbequius, Legatio Turcica. Epiſt, III, pag. 196. Edit. of 1633. REM. CRIT.

[C] It would be to no purpoſe to object, that ſuch a puniſhment would have quite enervated his courage.] The Commentary or Proof which this may require, is found in the preceding remark; nevertheleſs I will add, by way of Appendix, the obſervations following. Was not Hannibal, who was one of the greateſt Commanders of antiquity, chaſte? Conſtat Annibalem, ... pudicitiam tantam inter tot captivas habuiſſe, ut in Africa natum quivis negaret (15). i. e. "It is certain "Hannibal behaved ſo modeſtly with regard to his "great number of female captives, that no one would "have thought him a native of Africa." We do not find that Scipio Africanus was of a very amorous complection; and he gave a noble exemple of his chaſtity, during his expedition in Spain, for which he is greatly applauded by the Hiſtorian (16). Druſus, brother to the Emperor Tiberius, and one of the greateſt Generals among the antients, was extremely reſerved with regard to the fair ſex (17). The Emperor Aurelian was wonderfully brave, and at the ſame time perfectly chaſte. It would be doing him the greateſt injury for any perſon to make the leaſt compariſon between his valour and that of the luſtful Proculus, who turned tyrant; a Latin letter of whom Flavius Vopiſcus has preſerved, which I would not offer to tranſlate. Tacendum non eſt, quod & ipſe gloriatur in quadam ſua Epiſtola, quam ipſam melius eſt ponere quam de ea plurimum dicere. Proculus Metiano affini s. D. Centum ex Sarmatia virgines cepi. Ex his una nocte decem inivi: omnes tamen quod in me erat, mulieres intra dies XV reddidi. Gloriatur (ut vides) rem ineptam, & ſatis libidinoſam: atque inter fortes ſe haberi credit, ſi criminum denſitate coaleſcat. Hic tamen quum etiam poſt honores militares ſe improbe & libidinoſe, tamen fortiter ageret, ... in imperium vocitatus eſt (18). We find that it is ſaid in the paſſage above, that Proculus was a good ſoldier, but ſtill his valour was not to be compared to that of Aurelian. What ſhall we ſay of Alexander the Great, who was fired by ſo extraordinary a courage? His chaſtity has been much more applauded than it deſerved; but yet it muſt be owned, that by his natural diſpoſition or conſtitution he had more indifference, in proportion, than inclination for the fair-ſex; and this is ſufficient to refute thoſe, who ſuppoſe I know not what mechanical connection between luſt and valour. To the modern examples before quoted (19), I ſhall add that of an intrepid Knight who lived in the XVIth Century, and who merited the title of the fearleſs and blameleſs Knight. The reader will find by theſe characteriſtics that I mean Bayard. Love was never his maſter; and he proved, on ſeveral dangerous occaſions, that he was maſter over it. See his life. What a long liſt I ſhould give, were I to ſet down all thoſe who have reſembled Sardanapalus; creatures that were brave in no other place except in bed; but, in every other place, ſluggiſh and cowardly. Were Caligula, Nero, and Heliogabalus, warriors? Did they not plunge, with the moſt infamous exceſs, into leud debaucheries? Was Domitian, who invented a new term (20) for thoſe abominable exerciſes in which he ſignalized his ſtrength, ever looked upon as a good ſoldier or a good Commander? Thoſe ſparks who were formerly called mignons de couchette, would ſometimes make a campaign, in order to get rid of the contempt, to which the ſuſpicion of their being cowards expoſed them among brave men; but they behaved ſo ill on theſe occaſions, that one might juſtly apply to them what Jupiter anſwered Venus, when ſhe complained to him, upon her being wounded in her attempting to ſuccour Æneas in a battle: Do not you concern yourſelf with war: it is not your province, which is that only of making love.

Οὔ τοι τέκνον ἐμὸν δύδοΐ πολεμήϊα ἔργα·
Ἀλλὰ σύγ' ἱμερόεντα μετίεχτο ἔργα γάμοιο (21).

"Not thoſe, O daughter, are thy proper cares,
"Thee milder arts befit, and ſofter wars;
"Sweet ſmiles are thine, and kind endearing
"charms, &c.

POPE.

Helen gave Paris the like advice, as is ſeen in a remark where I refute Mezerai (22). This Hiſtorian imagines, that Ladies love brave men, from a ſuppoſition that they are as active and vigorous in love-exerciſes, as in combats. But he does not form a right judgment of their motives; glory or vanity are the great ſprings of their prepoſſeſſion in favour of brave men. Monluc obſerves that women would chooſe to be widows, rather than to ſee their huſbands return from the field in health, but loaded with ſhame and diſhonour. It is plain that luſt has nothing to do in this; and ſince it furniſhes a firſt proof againſt Mezerai, I will here quote Monluc's own words. He directs himſelf to the Governors of a town, and ſhews the prejudice they will do themſelves in caſe they don't defend it bravely. "Not only your Sovereign, con- "tinues he (23), the Princes and Lords will behold
"you, with an evil eye, but likewiſe women and "children. But to go farther, your own wives,
"though they pretend to love you, will yet hate you,
"and

(9) Veneris vinique expertem tota ætate ſe fuiſſe jactaverat. Puffendorf, Rer. Suecicar. lib. 4. pag. 64. col. 2. See alſo Blanc, Hiſt. de Baviere, tom. 4. pag. 381.

(10) Diſcours Hiſtorique & Politique ſur les cauſes de la Guerre de Hongrie, printed at Colen 1666, pag. 264.

(11) Idem, ibid. pag. 166.

(12) Thuan. lib. 17. pag. 361.

(13) Idem, ibid.

(14) Idem, ibid.

(15) Juſtin. lib. 36, ſub finem.

(16) Livius, lib. 26, ſub fin. Val. Maxim. lib. 4. cap. 3. num. 1.

(17) See remark [B] of the article of the firſt ANTONIA.

(18) Flavius Vopiſcus, in Proculo, pag. m. 735. tom. 2.

(19) In the preceding remark.

(20) Libidinis nimiæ aſſiduitatem concubitus velut exercitationis genus clinopalen vocabat. Suet. in Domit. cap. 22.

(21) Hom. Iliad. lib. 5. ver. 428.

(22) Rem. [O] citation (47) of the article of the 3d Duke of GUISE.

(23) Monluc, Comment. liv. 3. pag. m. 500, 501.

digious incontinence [D], that prevented his riſing to ſo great a height as he otherwiſe might have done; but notwithſtanding that powerful obſtacle, he nevertheleſs deſerves very juſtly the ſirname he bears (a). To prove this, we need but conſider the aſtoniſhing difficulties he ſurmounted, before he was ſettled on the throne; and the flouriſhing ſtate he brought his Kingdom to, which, at his aſcending the throne, was in a moſt calamitous condition. He inherited this crown in a very diſtant degree of conſanguinity [E]. We in all probability ſhould know, and ſhould admire much more, the vaſt extent of his merit, had he lived five or ſix years longer; for he was juſt going to begin the execution of a mighty deſign (b), when he was murthered in his coach the 14th of May 1610, by one Ravaillac. Some Hiſtorians relate, that this had been foretold him the day before [F]; but thoſe who have examined this matter thoroughly, find it

(a) He is called Henry the Great. See citation (47) of the article BARCLAY (John).

(b) See at the year 1610 his Hiſtory written by Hardouin de Perefixe.

" and eſteem you leſs in their hearts. For ſuch is " the nature of all women, that they bear a mortal " hatred to cowards and poltroons, though ever ſo " ſpruce; and love the bold and courageous, though " ever ſo ugly and deformed. They partake in your " grace. And though they are folded in your arms, " in bed, pretending to be overjoyed at your return; " they yet wiſh you had been ſtrangled, or that a " bullet had taken your head off. For in the ſame " manner as we conclude, that the greateſt diſgrace " that can accrue to a man, is to have his wife a " whore; the women think on the other ſide, that " the greateſt ſhame they can meet with, is to have " a cowardly huſband. Thus, Governor, you ſee " what a wretched chance you will ſtand, ſhould " you loſe your town, ſince you will be curſed by your " own wife."

[D] His prodigious incontinence.] I need not ſcruple to give it that name, after the ſtories which Daubigné has publiſhed on that ſubject, eſpecially after the following words of a very grave Hiſtorian. " If it was " the buſineſs of hiſtory to make apologies, it might " clear him from the greateſt part of thoſe re" proaches, but not however from the frantic paſſion " he had for gaming. . . . Much leſs could it excuſe " him, for his abandoning himſelf ſo immoderately " to women, which had been ſo public and general " from his youth to his death, that it cannot even be " called love and gallantry (24)." The following particulars related by Mr. de Perefixe are very ſtrange. " It were to be wiſhed, for the honour of his me" mory, that gaming had been his only fault. But " the perpetual frailty which he had, with regard to " beautiful women, was another fault, much more " blameable in a Chriſtian Prince, in a man of his " years who was married, to whom God had been ſo " gracious, and who revolved ſo many mighty en" terprizes in his mind. He ſometimes was fired with " only tranſient deſires, and which captivated him " but one night; but when he met with beauties who " ſtruck his heart, he loved to diſtraction; and, in " theſe wild tranſports, he no ways ſeemed to be " Henry the Great. It is related, in fabulous anti" quity, that Hercules took up a diſtaff, and ſpun " for love of the beautiful Omphale: now Henry did " ſomething more groveling for his miſtreſſes. He " one day aſſumed a peaſant's diſguiſe, and took a " truſs of ſtraw on his back, to get acceſs to Madam " Gabrielle; and it is ſaid that the Marchioneſs de " Verneuil has ſeen him more than once at her feet, " ſuffering her diſdain and inſults (25)." It muſt be a piercing ſorrow to all good Huguenots, to ſee their chief lead ſo ſcandalous a life, even in Rochelle. He there debauched the daughter of a Gentleman of the long robe, and had a ſon by her. The Church had frequently told him of his crime, which he would confeſs ingenuouſly enough; but he could not be prevailed upon to acknowledge it publickly, till a little before the battle of Coutras (26). The detail of that is found in the Life of du Pleſſis Mornai (27).

(24) Mezerai, Abrégé Chronol. tom. 6. pag. 392.

(25) Perefixe, Hiſt. de Henry le Grand, pag. m. 461, 462, ad ann. 1609.

(26) Vie du Pleſſis Mornai, pag. 108.

(27) Pag. 108.

[E] He inherited the crown in a very diſtant degree of conſanguinity.] " It was doubtleſs by an uncommon " good fortune that the crown of France fell to him, " there never being a more remote ſucceſſion than that, " in any hereditary Government; for there were a" bout ten or eleven degrees of conſanguinity between " him and Henry III; and at his birth there were " nine Princes of the blood before him, viz. Henry II " and his five ſons; Anthony King of Navarre, his " father, and two ſons of that Anthony, elder bro" thers of our Henry. All theſe Princes died, to " make way for him to the crown (28)."

(28) Perefixe, Hiſt. de Henri le Grand, pag. m. 514.

[F] Some Hiſtorians relate, that his death had been foretold him the day before.] We will begin this remark by the words of Peter Matthieu (29). " Upon " this la Broſſe, a learned Phyſician and Mathemati" cian, ſaid to the Duke of Vendoſme, by way of " ſequel to a longer diſcourſe, that provided the King " could but avoid the accident with which he was " menaced, he would live thirty years longer. No " one cares to inform Kings of what may give them " uneaſineſs; and therefore the Duke de Vendoſme, " thinking it more proper that la Broſſe ſhould be the " meſſenger of his own news, beſought the King to " hear him, upon which the King aſked what la " Broſſe wanted. Here the Duke of Vendoſme ſaid " nothing; but his ſilence making the King ſtill more " deſirous of knowing the motive of it, he preſſes " him; the Duke excuſes himſelf; but at laſt as the " King laid his abſolute commands upon him, he in" forms him of what la Broſſe had ſaid to him. You " are quite a ſimpleton, ſays the King to the Duke, " to give credit to this. Sir, anſwered Vendôme, in " theſe things credulity is a fault but not fear; the " ſafety of your Majeſty's perſon obliges every indi" vidual, and me above any other perſon, not to de" ſpiſe the leaſt information that may be given; and " therefore I moſt humbly beſeech your Majeſty to " hear him. However, the King would not conſent " to this, and even forbid his ſpeaking about it. I " can do no leſs, ſays the Duke, than inform the " Queen of it. The King declared twice, that ſhould " he ever break it to her, he would never love him; " and ſo la Broſſe was ſent away. I heard all this, " word for word, from the Duke de Vendôme's own " mouth." This is related in a very poſitive ſtrain; but what follows, is no leſs ſo, though it quite overthrows Peter Matthieu's relation: "So true it is, it is " a Philoſopher who ſpeaks (30), that moſt Hiſtorians " are credulous and liars; and that they thereby al" ways confirm the credulity and falſhood of prog" noſtications, when they relate thoſe ſtories without " refuting them. But without going farther; why " ſhould not the antients have done it, ſince we often " ſee it practiſed in our own time? Has not one of " our Hiſtorians, ſpeaking of the death of our great " Henry IV, affirmed; that having been informed of " it by a Prince ſtill living, whom it is not neceſſary " to name, the evening before the unfortunate ſtroke " was given; his Majeſty deſpiſing this advice, " had anſwered, that la Broſſe was an old fool of an " Aſtrologer &c. I being deſirous of hearing this " from the mouth of the Prince in queſtion (†), above " thirty years ſince, in preſence of a Princeſs (‡), of " great worth, he did her the honour to ſay that it " was all a falſity. And but two days ſince only, " in order to be better informed of it, and that I " might not publiſh any thing in writing of that con" ſequence, without being firſt well aſſured of it; I " had the honour to ſpeak again to him about it be" fore ſeveral perſons of his family, and he confirmed " the ſame thing to me; adding farther, that the " Hiſtorian (‡) had confounded times and things; and " that la Broſſe had indeed told him, after this un" happy accident, that he had foreſeen it by calcu" lating his Majeſty's horoſcope, (as Aſtrologers al" ways do, after things are come to paſs) but not " that he had given him notice of it the evening be" fore, in order that he might inform his Majeſty of " it. Nevertheleſs this is related by a French author, " who lived in that age. Who then, in times to " come, will not give credit to him? Will it be " thought that a man, appointed and paid to write " Hiſtory, durſt ſay a thing of that importance, and

(29) Relation de la Mort de Henri IV, pag. m. 24.

(30) Peter Petit, Surveyor of the Fortifications, Diſſertation ſur les Cometes, pag. 89.

(†) Mr. de Vendoſme.

(‡) Madam de Chevreuſe.

(‡) Matthieu.

it to be falſe. He was of ſo generous a diſpoſition, that it was no way probable he ever adviſed the Duke of Alençon to make away with Catherine de Medicis [G]; nevertheleſs, we find this aſſerted in ſome memoirs. He met with the fate common to great men, I mean that he was unhappy in his family. The two wives he married one after another, in the life time of both, brought a thouſand vexations upon him [H]. But this he deſerved, ſince he diſregarded ſo much the ſacred laws of marriage. His ſecond wife was one of thoſe Princeſſes againſt whom he had raiſed ſome objections, in examining with Roni what kind of wife would ſuit him (c). His notions with regard to marriage are very curious [I]; and few converſations are more ſolid and agreeable, than thoſe this

(c) See the remark [I].

" even cite a living Prince who could witneſs it, in " caſe it were not true? It is nevertheleſs as I ſay; " and if any one doubts of this, he may inform him- " ſelf about it, and I am not ſorry that I have an " opportunity to mention it in this place; as " well to undeceive poſterity, as to ſhew that a great " many particulars are written of this kind, which " do not deſerve the leaſt credit."

It is to be obſerved that Mr. Petit does not relate this altogether as faithfully as he ought to have done. He ſuppoſes that the Hiſtorian ſaid, that the King made the following anſwer, la Broſſe is an old fool of an Aſtrologer; but the Hiſtorian does not ſay this; for, according to him, it was to the Duke of Vendome that the King ſaid, you are a madman.

We will exhibit a ſecond teſtimony, with the refutation of it. " The evening of the ſame coronation, " la Broſſe, an excellent Phyſician and Mathematician, " ſaid to the Duke of Vendoſme, that if the King " could but eſcape a dangerous accident, which " threatned him immediately, he ſhould live thirty " years longer; and begged that he would introduce " him to his Majeſty: But the King being told the " ſubject he intended to ſpeak to him about, would " not hear la Broſſe (31)." Now this is refuted in the following words of Marſhal de Baſſompiere (32); It is falſe to aſſert that la Broſſe deſired to be introduced to the King; but had he deſired it, the anſwer invented by him (33) would have been true, viz. that he (34) would have ſcorned to ſpeak to him, for he looked upon him as a madman. It is related in a diſcourſe on the death of Henry IV, annexed to the Duke de Nevers's Memoirs, that the Duke of Vendome declared to ſeveral perſons, that la Broſſe never ſpoke to him about it.

(31) Du Pleix, Hiſt. Henry IV, pag. 411.

(32) Remarques ſur Du Pleix, pag. 172.

(33) i. e. Du Pleix.

(34) i. e. Henry IV.

[G] It is no way probable he ever adviſed the Duke of Alençon to make away with Catherine de Medicis.] Le Laboureur relates that this Queen, ſeeing Charles IX draw near his end, was afraid " that the Duke of " Alençon would be adviſed to claim the regency, " and even the crown, in prejudice of the King of " Poland his brother. This made her form the deſign " of a conſpiracy, which might give her an oppor- " tunity of ſeizing upon his perſon, and that of the " King of Navarre. She confined them, under a " ſtrong guard in the Bois de Vincennes, till the King's " death, but without declaring them Priſoners. In " the mean time ſhe ſpread a report, in all places, " of this conſpiracy, for which ſhe cauſed the Mar- " ſhals of Montmorency and Coſſé to be arreſted; " and, to remove all occaſion of doubting this, ſhe " ſacrificed la Molle and Coconnaz, two favourites " of that Duke, to this ſtate-intrigue.... The Duke " of Alençon (ſo great was his fear) himſelf betrayed his " cauſe, and his domeſticks; and he who beſt ſuſtained " the character of an oppreſſed Monarch, who was " yet incapable of acting unſuitable to his dignity, " was Henry IV, then King of Navarre. Not but " that he was afraid he was ruined; and it was in " this view that he was accuſed, as ſome memoirs " inform me, of having adviſed Monſieur, the King " of France's brother, to pretend to be ſick, in order " to oblige the Queen to come and viſit him; and " then, upon pretence of deſiring to reveal ſomething " to her in private, to cauſe her retinue to with- " draw, and then ſtrangle her. His motives or pre- " tences for it were, their ſafety, the opportunity of " the King's death who was in his expiring mo- " ments, the credit and authority which time would " give their friends; and that the ſame policy which " made her renounce the laws or ties of blood and " nature, diſpenſed them, out of a ſtronger conſidera- " tion than that of reigning, from abhorring an action " which would ſave to the ſtate, two Princes, who " were neceſſary to it, by the death of a woman who " diſturbed the tranquillity, and cauſed the ruin of " it. He had not the courage to attempt it, nor " the diſcretion to hold his tongue ſome time after; " and this is the cauſe of that deadly and implacable " hatred which Catherine of Medicis bore to the " King of Navarre; and therefore ſhe did not ſcru- " ple to engage in the conſpiracy againſt her own " ſon, Henry III; and to diſturb the government " when ſhe had no children, to prevent Henry IV " from ſucceeding him; and to ſubſtitute, in his " room, Henry Duke of Lorrain, her grandſon by " her daughter (35)." According to theſe memoirs, Henry IV intended to be one of the murtherers of the Queen-Mother.

(35) Le Laboureur, Addit. aux Mem. de Caſtelnau, tom. 2. pag. 381.

[H] His two wives brought a thouſand vexations upon him.] It is not neceſſary to prove this with reſpect to Margaret de Valois; we will therefore alledge that proof which relates to Mary of Medicis. " The high eſteem and affection, which the French " had for him (36), would not ſuffer them to be ſo " much offended at his ſcandalous way of living; but " the Queen his wife was greatly vexed at it; ſo that " it occaſioned perpetual diſputes betwixt them, and " made the Queen diſdainful and ill-tempered. The " diſcontent of theſe domeſtic quarrels, doubtleſs re- " tarded the execution of the mighty deſign he had " projected, for the happineſs and perpetual repoſe of " Chriſtendom; and for the deſtruction, afterwards, " of the Ottoman Power (37)."

(36) i. e. for Henry IV.

(37) Perefixe, Hiſt. de Henry le Grand, pag. m. 463, ad ann. 1609.

[I] His notions with regard to marriage are very curious.] I am going to cite a very long paſſage; nevertheleſs I am certain that it will appear ſhort to curious Readers, it containing a kind of critique on a conſiderable number of Princeſſes; and a very ſolid argumentation of Henry IV, with reſpect to the choice of a wife. Here follows what he ſaid to Mr. de Roni his favourite (38). " So that nothing more ſeems " wanting, for the accompliſhment of this deſign, " but to ſee whether I can get another wife whoſe " qualifications may be ſo excellent, that I may not " plunge into the greateſt misfortune of this life, " which, in my opinion, is to have an ugly ill-na- " tured and worthleſs wife, inſtead of the eaſe, repoſe " and ſatisfaction which I propoſed to find in the " marriage-ſtate: that if wives could be got by wiſh- " ing, in order that I might not repent of ſo ha- " zardous a ſtep, mine ſhould be endowed, among " other good qualities, with the ſeven following prin- " cipal ones, viz. beauty in her perſon, chaſtity in " her life, complaiſance in her temper, ingenuity and " ſkilfulneſs in her mind, fruitful with regard to iſſue, " eminent with reſpect to extraction, and rich as to " her poſſeſſions. But I fancy, my friend, that this " woman is dead, or rather that ſhe perhaps is not yet " born, nor ready to come into the world; and never- " theleſs let us conſider a little, what maidens or wo- " men, whom we have heard of, within or without " the Kingdom, would be a fit wife for me. And " foraſmuch as I have, in my opinion, thought of it " more than you have done; I will tell you briefly, " that the Infanta of Spain, how old and ugly ſoever " ſhe may be, would do well enough for me, provided " I could marry the Low-Countries with her, tho' it " were upon condition of reſtoring to you the Earldom " of Bethune. Neither could I refuſe Princeſs Rei- " belle (39) of England, in caſe, as it is ſaid publicly, " that the Crown is juſtly hers, ſhe had only been " declared preſumptive heireſs of the Kingdom: but " I will not expect either the one or the other, the " King of Spain, and the Queen of Enland being far " from entertaining any ſuch thoughts. I have ſome- " times been ſpoke to about certain Princeſſes of Ger- " many,

(38) Mem. de Sulli, tom. 2. pag. 112. edit. de Hollande, 12mo.

What the King deſired in a wife.

(39) I copy this word as I find it in my edition.

this King had on that ſubject. It was very plainly ſeen, that Religion was nothing but a falſe pretence, both of the League and the King of Spain: it was known, I ſay, by the endeavours that were employed, to prevent the Pope from giving him abſolution. I have taken notice in another place (d) of the facetious remarks made by d'Aubigné, on the ſtrokes of the ſwitch, which the proxies of this Prince received when he was abſolved at Rome. I ſhall take ſome farther notice of it here [K].

(d) In the article BOTERO, remark [C].

Henry IV was born at Pau in Bearn the 13th of December 1553 (e). Anthony of Bourbon his father, and Joan d'Albret his mother, carried him to the Court of France when he was but five years old; but he ſtaid there only a few months, and returned to Bearn (f). Anthony returned to Court, after the death of Henry II, and was appointed Lieutenant General of the Kingdom, after the death of Francis II. He ſent for the Queen his wife, and the Prince his ſon, to him, and died of a wound which he had received at the ſiege of Roan in the year 1562; after which his wife, whom he had treated injuriouſly [L], returned to Bearn, where ſhe openly embraced the principles of Calvin (g). She left her ſon at the Court of France, under the direction of la Gaucherie, a prudent Preceptor.

(e) Perefixe, Hiſt. de Henri le grand, p. m. 15.

(f) Ibid. p. 20.

(g) Ibid. pag. 22.

" many, whoſe names I have forgot, but I don't like " in any manner the women of that country, and " fancy that had I married one of them, I muſt al- " ways have a hogſhead of wine by my bed ſide; " not to mention that it has been told me, that there " was a Queen of France of that country, who al- " moſt ruined the French; which ſeveral conſidera- " ons have given me a diſtaſte to German women. " One of Prince Maurice's ſiſters has alſo been pro- " poſed to me, but beſides their being all Huguenots, " and that ſuch an alliance might make me ſuſpected " at Rome, and among the zealous Catholics, that " their mother was a Nun, and ſomething elſe which " I will tell you another time, make me averſe to it. " The Duke of Florence has likewiſe a niece who " is ſaid to be handſome enough; but he being one " of the moſt inconſiderable families in Chriſtendom " that bears the title of Prince, it not being above " threeſcore or fourſcore years, that his predeceſſors " were only ranked among the moſt illuſtrious citi- " zens of Florence; and of the ſame family with the " Queen-mother, Catherine, who brought ſo many " evils upon France, and particularly to my ſelf, I " am afraid of marrying into that Houſe, leſt it " ſhould prove prejudicial to myſelf, my friends and " my kingdom. Theſe, I believe, are all the fo- " reign Ladies I am to ſpeak of. As to thoſe within " my own realm, my niece of Guiſe is one of thoſe " that would pleaſe me beſt, notwithſtanding the ru- " mour which ſome malicious people have ſpread, " viz. that ſhe is a little wantonly inclined; for with " regard to myſelf, beſides that I believe it very " falſe, I ſhould chooſe rather to have a woman that " was a little amorous, than one who ſhould prove " ill-tempered, which ſhe is no ways ſuſpected to be, " but on the contrary, of a very ſoft, pleaſant humour, " and complaiſant in her converſation; ſhe alſo is of " a good family, handſome, tall, and likely to have " fine children ſoon. The only circumſtance I fear, is, " the too ſtrong affection ſhe diſcovers for her own " family, and eſpecially for her brothers, which might " inſpire her with a deſire to aggrandize them to my " prejudice, and ſtill more to that of my children, in " caſe ſhe ſhould ever enjoy the regency. There like- " wiſe are two daughters of the houſe of Maine, " the eldeſt whereof, though ſo ſwarthy, would not " diſpleaſe me, ſhe being prudent and well educated; " but then they are too young. There are two in " the Houſe of Aumalle, and three in that of Lon- " gueville, whoſe perſons are far from contemptible; " but other reaſons will not ſuffer me to apply " my thoughts that way. So much for Princeſſes. " You, beſides, have one daughter in the houſe of " Luxemburg, one in that of Guimené, my couſin " Catherine of Rohan; but the laſt is a Huguenot, " and I don't like the others: and next, the daughter " of my couſin the Princeſs of Conti, of the houſe " of Luce, who is a very beautiful, well-educated " Princeſs; and indeed ſhe would pleaſe me beſt, " were ſhe older. But though I ſhould like them all, " ſo far as I know them, who can aſſure me that I " ſhall find in them, the three principal qualities united, " which I require in a wife, and without which I " would not marry? viz. that I ſhould have iſſue by " them, that they ſhould be of a ſweet and complai- " ſant humour, and ſufficiently qualified to aſſiſt me " in affairs of a ſedentary kind; and to govern my " kingdom and my children well, in caſe I ſhould die, " before they were of age, ſenſe, and judgment, to " endeavour to imitate me; as very probably will be " the caſe, ſhould I marry in ſo advanced an age. " But pray, Sir, anſwered you, what do you mean " by ſo many affirmatives and negatives, from which " I can infer nothing except this, viz. that you are " very deſirous to be married; but that no woman " upon earth is fit or qualified to be your wife? So " that, at this rate, we ſhould implore the aſſiſtance " of heaven, to reſtore the Queen of England to her " bloom of life; and raiſe from the dead Margaret " of Flanders, Mademoiſelle of Burgundy, Jane la " Loca, Anne of Britany, Mary Stuart, all rich " heireſſes, in order for you to take your choice from " among them; for, according to the temper you " have diſcovered, ſpeaking of Clara Eugenia, you " would like ſome of thoſe Ladies who were poſſeſſed " of ſuch extenſive territories. But omitting all theſe " impoſſibilities and idle notions, let us conſider a " little what is to be done &c.

[K] I ſhall take ſome farther notice on the ſtrokes of the ſwitch.] I ſhall borrow the words of a Walloon Miniſter (40). " The pſalm Miſerere was ſung when " Henry the Great was reconciled to the See of " Rome, on which occaſion du Perron and d'Oſſat, " proſtrate, and their faces turned to the earth, re- " preſenting the King of France, in preſence of the " Roman Pontiff and the Conſiſtory, received, in " that King's name, his penance decreed by the holy " See, which was, to adjuſt to every verſe a ſtroke " of a ſwitch over his head, ſhoulders and back, " down to the feet, from the beginning of that pſalm " to the end. Du Perron in his Letters, folio 172, " gives us the verbal proceſs of that King's abſoluti- " on, by Pope Clement VIII, . . . D'Oſſat, his ſharer " or companion in the royal penance, ſhews how " gentle it was." In the inſtruction of the Inquiſition was the following hyperbolical expreſſion (41). When the choriſters ſung Miſerere mei, the Pope, at every verſe, verberabat & percutiebat humeros Procuratorum cujuſlibet ipſorum virga quam in manibus tenebat. i. e. " He beat the ſhouldiers of each of the proxies with " a rod which he held in his hand." The blows were felt no more on that occaſion, than if a fly had crept on their clothes.

(40) Jeremie de Pours, Divine Melodie du St. Pſalmiſte, pag. 686.

(41) D'Oſſat's Letters, fol. 172.

[L] Joan d'Albret . . . who had been . . . treated injuriouſly . . . by her huſband.] The lure employed to draw him off from the Proteſtant Religion, was, to promiſe him the Kingdom of Sardinia. He was ſo weak as to believe theſe promiſes; " and he began to " withdraw, by inſenſible degrees, from the Prote- " ſtants; and to vex the Queen, his wife, all kinds " of ſnares being ſpread for him, by which a man " addicted, as he was, to women, could be over- " reached; thus forgetting every other thing by in- " ſenſible degrees, he now thought of nothing but the " Kingdom of Sardinia and women, among whom " a certain maid of honour belonging to the Queen " began to have a conſiderable ſhare of his affection. " In the mean time the Queen of Navarre, like a " very prudent and virtuous Princeſs, endeavoured to " reclaim him; enduring all things poſſible, and re- " monſtrating to him what he owed both to God and " his ſubjects. But ſo greatly was he bewitched, that Preceptor. She ſent for him to Pau in 1566; and appointed Florent Chretien to be his Preceptor, in the room of la Gaucherie, who was dead (b). This Preceptor who was a zealous Proteſtant, educated that Prince in his own Religion. Joan d'Albret declared herſelf their protectreſs in 1569, and came for that purpoſe to Rochelle with her ſon, whom ſhe devoted from that time to the defence of this new Religion. In this quality he was declared leader or head of the party; and his uncle the Prince of Conde his Lieutenant, with Admiral de Coligny (i). He was in the army when the battle of Moncontour was fought, and had a moſt ardent deſire to engage in the combat; but this he was not allowed to do, for fear of hazarding his perſon too much (k). From that time he followed the army, till the peace was concluded, viz. the eleventh of Auguſt 1570, and then returned to Bearn. His marriage with Princeſs Margaret, ſiſter to Charles IX, was ſolemnized at Paris in Auguſt 1572. His mother was come to Paris ſome months before, to prepare his nuptials, and died there whilſt her ſon was upon the road. He began to aſſume the quality of King, when news was brought him, in Poictou, of her death (l). It is univerſally known that the maſſacre on St. Bartholomew's day was perpetrated a few days after the marriage of this new King; and that he being reduced to the neceſſity of going to maſs, or loſing his life, choſe the former. The anſwers which certain authors put into his mouth, are mere chimeras of their brain [M], and only ſhew the deſire they had to employ their reading. Henry was obliged, againſt his will, to ſpend ſome years in the Court of France. He there diſſembled very artfully all his uneaſineſſes: he even repulſed, and frequently ſuppreſſed them, by ſome love-intrigue, to which he was ſtrongly prompted by nature, and this was not a little heightened by the depravity and luſtfulneſs of the Ladies. One of his principal miſtreſſes (m) was the Lady de Sauves, wife to a Secretary of State. However, love did not ſo far engroſs all his time,

(b) Ibid. pag. 22.

(i) Ibid. pag. 24.

(k) Ibid. pag. 25.

(l) Ibid. pag. 29.

(m) Pereſixe, Hiſt. de Henri le Grand, pag. 39.

" all this was to no purpoſe, which the Queen ob-
" ſerving, ſhe had recourſe only to tears and entrea-
" ties, which melted every one to compaſſion, ex" cept the ſaid King her huſband. During theſe
" tranſactions the Queen-mother endeavoured to per-
" ſuade her to bear with the King her huſband, to " which ſhe at laſt made the following anſwer, that
" rather than ever go to maſs, if ſhe had the King" dom and her ſon in her hands, ſhe would throw
" them both to the bottom of the ſea, that they " might be no obſtacle to her; for which reaſon they " troubled her no more on that ſubject (42).

(42) Beze, Hiſt. Eccleſ. liv. 4. pag. 688. ad ann. 1561.

[M] The anſwers, which certain authors put into his mouth, are mere chimeras of their brain.] During the maſſacre, Charles IX ſent for, into his cloſet, the King of Navarre, and the Prince of Conde; and declared to them, that if they did not immediately renounce their heretical tenets, they ſhould meet with the ſame fate as the Admiral. The King of Navarre, prodigiouſly ſurprized at theſe words which were uttered with a menacing tone of voice, and at the dreadful ſpectacle he had ſeen before his eyes, anſwered with great humility, and trembling at the ſame time; that he beſought his Majeſty to leave them free and undiſturbed with regard to their lives and conſciences, and that they were ready to pay obedience to him in all other reſpects (43). Though I make uſe of Mezerai's words, the reader may be aſſured that it is the ſame thing as if I employed the very words of a Calviniſt Hiſtorian; for d'Aubigné (44) relates the anſwer made by the King of Navarre, in the very ſame terms; and it is as follows in the Inventaire of John de Serres. " The " King of Navarre beſeeches his Majeſty to call to " mind his promiſe, the conſanguinity he had ſo
" lately contracted, and not to do him any violence
" in the Religion he had imbibed from his infan-
" cy (45)." The author of the Hiſtory des choſes memorables does not ſay more; and the author of the Commentaries de ſtatu Religionis & Reipublicæ in regno Galliæ is not more full with regard to the ſenſe, though he employs more words (46); and it is to be obſerved that he ſays expreſly, that the anſwer was made with a trembling tone of voice (47). Thus we ſee four Proteſtant writers agree with Mezerai, and conſequently we cannot ſuſpect the latter's veracity. This being the caſe, may we not juſtly laugh at the Hiſtorian, who ſpins the anſwer in queſtion to three or four pages? " Our Henry, ſays he (48), made ſuch
" as ſhewed, at that time, what the greatneſs of his " courage, the depth of his ſenſe, and the great gen-
" tleneſs of his clemency, would be. He beſought
" his Majeſty to call to mind the word of honour he " had given him; the near relation they bore to one " another, and the new alliance they had concluded
" together; and not to offer any violence to the Re" ligion which he had ſucked in, from his infancy,
" like his nurſe's milk. He ſaid it was a great miſ-
" fortune that ſo auguſt a King, whoſe ſoul poſſeſſed
" the ſeeds of all the exalted virtues, ſhould have been
" ſo perniciouſly counſelled, to force his ſubjects, by
" murthers and maſſacres, to worſhip and ſerve God
" after his fancy and caprice. That nothing could " ſubdue a couragious people, and eſpecially the " French, but the mildneſs of their Prince, whom " they worſhip almoſt as if he was God. That Fla-
" minius had employed this method, in order to make
" the Romans maſters of all Greece; ſo that, though
" he was poſſeſſed of ſuperior force in the city of " Thebes, he yet employed as much perſuaſion, in " order to gain the people, as an Orator would have " done from the roſtrum; and that he ought to know,
" that he was King over a people who cannot bear a " perfect liberty, nor an entire ſlavery; and that the " regal power was not a government over ſlaves, but " over fellow citizens. That he had often heard, that
" thoſe great Romans had commanded over all Na" tions, and made themſelves maſters of the world, to
" ſhew that they were governed by reaſon, and did " not abandon themſelves to revenge. . . . (49). Your
" Majeſty is ſenſible, that one ſingle example of hu" manity among the Romans, was more efficacious
" towards ſubduing the Faliſci, who were foreigners,
" than all their military power had been; what there" fore might not your Majeſty's mildneſs and cle-
" mency have effected with regard to Proteſtants?
" A mighty King, like to your Majeſty, ſhould not " do all he can, but imitate the Sun who, the higher
" he is in the horizon, the ſlower he moves. . . (50).
" Thoſe who have given you ſuch evil counſel are " more to blame than you, and deſerve to be puniſh-
" ed as much as thoſe, who poiſon the public fountains
" or aqueducts, and conſequently kill all thoſe
" who drink of them." I have omitted moſt of the particulars which this compiler of common places puts into the King of Navarre's mouth; but I ſhall not curtail, in any manner, the reply which he falſely aſcribes to Charles IX. " Theſe are fine maxims, ſaid the " King, which you learnt of Chretien your tutor; but " I know one much finer than any of them, viz. that " God has inveſted the King with the ſupreme com" mand, the ſprings of which it is not lawful for a
" ſubject to touch; it is glory ſufficient for him that " he obeys. Go, and obey what I command, upon
" pain of death; and although I am not obliged to " give you an account of my actions, I yet will in" form you, that every illuſtrious example ſeems to " have ſomething of injuſtice in it, which is compen-
" ſated by the public utility (51)." I am to obſerve, that this author ſuppoſes that the King ſent for the King of Navarre and the Prince of Conde ſeparately; but other Hiſtorians relate, that Charles IX ſent for thoſe two Princes at the ſame time.

(43) Mezerai, Hiſt. de France, tom. 3. pag. 257.

(44) D'Aubigné, tom. 2. liv. 1. chap. 4. pag. m. 547.

(45) Invent. de l'Hiſt. de France, tom. 2. pag. m. 704.

(46) Lib. 10. folio m. 35.

(47) Quæ tamen humiliſſimo animo & conſternato ore ab illo dicebantur. Ibid.

(48) Julian Peleus, Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, Hiſt. des Faits & de la Vie de Henry le Grand, tom. 1. pag. 828.

(49) Idem, ibid. pag. 831.

(50) Ibid. pag. 832.

(51) Ibid. pag. 833.

time, but that he ſometimes intermeddled with State-intrigues; he being concerned in thoſe which were projected to remove the Queen-mother from the Adminiſtration, and drive the Guiſes from the Court (n); but the Queen having diſcovered theſe practices (o), cauſed him and the Duke of Alençon to be put under an arreſt, ſet a guard over them, and ordered them to be examined on ſeveral heinous particulars (p) [N]. Theſe two Princes were ſet at liberty by Henry III, to meet whom they had been conducted by Catherine of Medicis as far as Beauvoiſin Bridge (q). The King of Navarre went, at laſt, ſecretly away, in the year 1576, and withdrew to Alençon (r). He then returned to the Huguenot party, and again profeſſed his firſt Religion (s). The Rochellers opened their gates to him, and after reſiding ſome months in their city, he went and took poſſeſſion of his Government of Guyenne (t). From that period, to the year 1589, his life was divided between battles, negotiations and amours. His wife was a great impediment to him; and nevertheleſs ſhe ſometimes was of advantage to him [O]. There were frequent ruptures and pacifications between him and the Court of France, but at laſt Henry III concluded a ſincere alliance with him, to oppoſe the League, which, ſince the death of the Duke and Cardinal of Guiſe, was grown more furious than ever. The reconciliation and confederacy of theſe two Kings was concluded in April 1589; and their interview was in Tours, the 30th of the ſame month, and the greateſt demonſtrations of a reciprocal ſatisfaction were ſeen on that occaſion. They ſome time after joined their troops together in order to beſiege Paris. This they did in perſon, and were upon the point of taking that great city, and of puniſhing the inhabitants as they deſerved, when the King of France was killed by James Clement, at St. Clou. The King of Navarre ſucceeded him in the throne the 2d of Auguſt 1589; but he did not obtain the crown without the utmoſt difficulties; he not being able to force the chiefs of the League to recognize him as King, till after he had renounced the Proteſtant Religion. The citizens of Paris perſiſted in their rebellion till the 22d of March 1594; I mean that the King did not make his entry into it till that day. The year after he declared war againſt the Spaniards, but had little reaſon to be ſatisfied with it; he loſing much more than he gained by it; however, from a felicity unknown to all his predeceſſors, he concluded a treaty of peace by which he indemnified himſelf for his loſſes [P]. This treaty was concluded at Vervins the 2d of May 1598. From that time till the day of his death, the Kingdom was free

(n) Ibid. pag. 33.

(o) In 1574.

(p) Ibid. pag. 36.

(q) Ibid. pag. 37, 38.

(r) Ibid. p. 46.

(s) Ibid. pag. 47.

(t) Ibid. p. 48.

[N] The Queen-mother . . . ordered him and the Duke of Alençon . . . to be examined on ſeveral heinous particulars.] " (52) " The Chancellor would have examined the King of Navarre, but, although he was " a priſoner and threatened, he yet would not derogate ſo much from his dignity as to anſwer: nevertheleſs, to ſatisfy the Queen-mother, he addreſſed " a long ſpeech to her, wherein he deduced a great " many particulars relating to the preſent ſtate of affairs; but then he did not accuſe any perſon, which " the Duke of Alençon had been ſo weak as to " do (53)."

(52) Perefixe, Hiſt. de Henri le Grand, pag. m. 36, ad an. 1574.

(53) See the remark [G] above.

[O] His wife was a great impediment to him, and nevertheleſs ſhe ſometimes was of advantage to him.] Catherine of Medicis had brought her to him in 1578 (54). He then kept his little court at Nerac. (55) Both the husband and wife were diſpleaſed at ſeeing one another again. " (56) Margaret, who was fond of " the great ſplendor of the Court of France where ſhe " ſwam, if I may employ the expreſſion, in a full " current of intrigues, looked upon her reſiding in " Guyenne as a kind of baniſhment; and Henry, " knowing her temper and conduct, would have had " her at a diſtance from him rather than near. " However, as he found that this was an evil, which " could not be remedied, he reſolved to ſuffer it, and " left her at perfect liberty . . . . (57); and ſuiting " himſelf to the times, and the neceſſity of his affairs, he endeavoured to reap ſome advantage from " her intrigues and intereſt. He gained a benefit, " that was far from being inconſiderable, in the conference which himſelf and the deputies of the Huguenots had at Nerac with the Queen-mother. For " whilſt ſhe fancied that ſhe ſhould inchant them, by " the charms of the beautiful young Ladies ſhe had " with her, and by Pibrac's eloquence; Margaret oppoſed the ſame artifices to her; won over the Gentlemen who were in her mother's retinue by the " charms of her own women; and employed her own " ſo dextrouſly, that ſhe ſtrongly captivated poor Pibrac's mind and heart, inſomuch that he was actuated entirely by her, and did every thing the very " reverſe of what the Queen-mother intended; for " ſhe, not imagining that ſo wiſe a man could have " acted in ſo ſilly a manner, was deceived in many " articles; and inſenſibly prevailed upon to yield much " more to the Huguenots than ſhe had reſolved to " do."

(54) Perefixe, Hiſt. de Henri le Grand, pag. 54.

(55) Ibid. pag. 57.

(56) Ibid.

(57) Ibid. pag. 58.

[P] From a felicity unknown to all his predeceſſors, he concluded a treaty of peace by which he indemnified himſelf for his loſſes.] Bodin (58) obſerves, that the Spaniards had not, for an hundred years, concluded any treaty with France, without having had the advantage in it. That author had reaſon to aſſert this, Henry IV being the firſt King of France who had reaped any benefit by concluding a peace with Spain. He recovered all the towns he had loſt in Picardy, and likewiſe Blavet which the Spaniards were maſters of. This peace did not paſs uncenſured; ſome people blaming the King of Spain, and others the King of France. We will cite Perefixe. " Several of the French, who " did not well know the wretched condition the King " of Spain and his affairs were in, could not conceive " how it had been poſſible for that Prince to purchaſe " the peace at ſo dear a rate, as to give up ſix or ſeven " good towns, and among them Calais and Blavet, which " might be called the Keys of France. On the contrary " the Spaniards, who ſaw that their King was in a " languiſhing condition, his treaſury exhauſted, the " Low-Countries tottering, Portugal and his territories " in Italy upon the point of revolting, and the ſon " that was to ſucceed him, a good Prince indeed, but " who loved eaſe and tranquillity; were ſurprized " that as the French had ſo bravely retaken Amiens, " and joined all their forces together after the treaty " of Mercoeur, they had not made an irruption into the " Low-Countries, becauſe they in all probability would " have been conquered, either wholly or in part. " The King anſwered, that if he had deſired peace, " it was not becauſe he was tired out with the inconveniencies of war, but to give the Chriſtian " world an opportunity of breathing; that he knew " very well, that ſuch was the ſituation of things at " this time, that he might have reaped great advantages; but that the hand of heaven frequently " cruſhed Princes in the height of their proſperity; " and that a wiſe man ought never, from the opinion " he might entertain of ſome favourable event, to be " averſe to the concluding a good peace, nor rely too " much on the appearance of a preſent happineſs, " which a thouſand unforeſeen accidents may change; " it often happening, that a man overthrown and very free from inteſtine as well as foreign wars, the expedition of 1600 excepted. It was undertaken againſt the Duke of Savoy; was of ſhort continuance, and was followed by an advantageous treaty (u), as it had been accompanied by glorious actions. Had not this King diſplayed his courage and high valour on an hundred different occaſions, the prodigious kindneſſes he indulged his moſt inveterate enemies, would doubtleſs have been conſidered as a weakneſs, and an effect of fear; but as he could not be ſuſpected of cowardiſe, the world had juſt reaſon to believe, that his conduct on that occaſion was wholly the reſult of a generous clemency. It is indeed certain, that his acting in that manner was perfectly conſonant to the maxims of a moſt refined policy; he could not convert his enemies by any other method; and he found this method only too ſhort, he being able to convert only part of the Leaguers; and a great number of Prieſts perſiſted obſtinately in omitting his name in their public prayers [Q]. It is obſerved in Moreri's Dictionary, that upwards

(58) Bodin, de la Republique, liv. 5. chap. 1. pag. m. 676.

(u) That in which Breſſe was exchanged for the Marquiſate of Saluſſes.

" much wounded, has killed him who would oblige " him to aſk his life (59)." This anſwer of Henry IV, does not agree with what others declare he ſaid to Duke d'Epernon, who was preſent at the ſigning the treaty of peace: I have atchieved more exploits with this ſingle daſh of my pen, than I could have atchieved, during a long time, with the beſt ſwords of my kingdom (60). It is indeed very probable, that he did not flatter himſelf with the hopes of gaining any advantage, by continuing the war; and I am certain that the moſt impartial people, ſuch as were moſt converſant in things of this nature, were equally convinced of the weakneſs of mind which Philip II ſhewed on that occaſion, as of the wiſdom which Henry IV diſcovered in accepting of ſuch a peace. The Spaniards bluſhed at their King's weakneſs. The Prince his ſon paſſionately deſired to have ſo proſperous a war prolonged; and he occaſioned the diſgrace of Don Chriſtopher de Mora, who had repreſented, in a Council, ſuch arguments as were moſt apt to incline the members to peace (61). However, the King of Spain was not to be moved, he deſiring to conclude a peace " upon any " conditions whatever; he did not find any article in " the treaty of Vervins which ſhould prompt him not to " approve of it, although his council judged that the " giving back cities taken ſo fortunately, and ſo difficult to be retaken, would be ignominious and detrimental. He urged that it might be ſworn to, " and put in execution (62)." It is very probable that he would have entertained a very different way of thinking, had he been in the vigour of his age. But what can be done? It is one of the defects of old age to inſpire fearfulneſs.

(59) Perefixe, Hiſt. de Henry le Grand, pag. 262, 263. It is to be obſerved that Peter Matthieu, Hiſt. de la Paix, liv. 1. Narrat. 3. pag. m. 69. relates that Henry IV ſaid part of theſe particulars to the Spaniſh Embaſſadors, who came to be preſent at his taking the oath.

(60) I believe this is found in Girard's Life of Duke d'Epernon.

(61) Matthieu, Hiſt. de la Paix, Narrat. 1. pag. 13.

(62) Ibid. Narrat. 3. pag. 68.

Multa ſenem circumveniunt incommoda: vel quod
Quærit, & inventis miſer abſtinet, ac timet uti,
Vel quod res omnes TIMIDE GELIDEQUE miniſtrat (63).

(63) Horat. de Arte Poetica, ver. 169, &c.

" Old men are only walking hoſpitals,
" Where all defects and all diſeaſes croud,
" With reſtleſs pain, and more tormenting fear;
" Lazy, moroſe, full of delays and hopes,
" Oppreſt with riches which they dare not uſe, &c."
Roſcommon.

I obſerved elſewhere, that commonwealths boaſt one advantage which kingdoms have not. In commonwealths the Sovereign is neither too young nor too old, and is not ſubject to the infirmities of childhood, nor thoſe of old age. But kingdoms have not that happineſs; for they experience at one time the diſorders of a minority, at another the wild heat of youthful blood, and at another the tardineſs and weight of declining years. A King is often forced to complain more than once, that the number of his years deprive him of his activity, and the reſolution he once poſſeſſed, and which a young Prince, his enemy, poſſeſſes.

Non laudis amor, nec gloria ceſſit
Pulſa metu: ſed enim gelidus tardante ſenectâ
Sanguis hebet, frigentque effœtæ in corpore vires.
Si mihi quæ quondam fuerat, quâque improbus iſte
Exſultat fidens, ſi nunc foret illa juventa (64).

(64) Virgil. Æn. lib. 5. ver. 394.

" My ſoul is ſtill the ſame;
" Unmov'd with fear, and mov'd with martial fame:
" But my chill'd blood is curdled in my veins;
" And ſcarce the ſhadow of a man remains.
" Oh, could I turn to that fair prime again,
" That prime, of which this boaſter is ſo vain,
" The brave, who this decrepid age defies,
" Should feel my force without the promis'd prize."
Dryden.

By the way, we muſt not wonder that the peace of Vervins was cenſured; and that ſome blamed France, others Spain, and others again Spain and France both together. This is the fate of ſuch great negotiations, and ſuch was that of the treaty of peace concluded at Ryſwick, anno 1697. Many perſons blamed the allies for not requiring conditions that were ſtill more advantageous, whilſt others cenſured France for giving up ſo great an extent of country. The French murmured at this; the citizens of Paris would not make bonfires on that account, ſo that they were forced to this by repeated menaces. They would not have the Nation return to the ſtate they were in in paſt ages, when it might be juſtly affirmed, that they knew better how to make war than peace, and underſtood equally well the art of reſtoring and taking. They wiſhed that the diſcourſes of the common people among the Flemings had not been found true. They knew that a numberleſs multitude of ignorant perſons had ſaid, that there was no occaſion for people to be alarmed at the loſs of ſome cities; but that they ought even to rejoice at it, ſince they were recovered fortified after Vauban's method. Scholars uſed to expreſs this in another manner, viz. the towns we loſe are built of brick, but we ſhall recover them built with marble (65).

[Q] A great number of Prieſts perſiſted obſtinately, in omitting his name in their public prayers.] The King's Attorney-General in the Parliament of Toulouſe, having been informed that a very great number of Prieſts, in celebrating maſs, uſed to omit the prayer for the King (66), and that it had been omitted in ſeveral printed Miſſals (67), made complaint thereof to the Parliament. It was enacted there, that all Prieſts ſhould be obliged to obſerve the antient cuſtom of uſing that prayer, in celebrating divine ſervice; forbid the making uſe of thoſe Miſſals in which this prayer was not inſerted; commanded all Printers and Bookſellers to add immediately the leaf that was wanting; and, in caſe of refuſal, to be puniſhed corporally, and their copies confiſcated. This decree was enacted the 7th of June 1606 (68). If the King, twelve years after he had abjured the Proteſtant principles, had given many teſtimonies of his zeal and attachment to Popery, and indulged the Leaguers many kindneſſes; he yet was mortally hated by ſo great a number of eccleſiaſtics; what could he have expected, had he acted in a contrary manner? Bigots and obſtinate people would have ſwelled to infinitely greater fury, had he neglected the outward profeſſion of religion, and behaved like a Prince who was fired by reſentment. One of his Hiſtorians (69) relates what follows as an inſtance of wonderful policy: That very evening (70) he played at cards with the Ducheſs of Montpenſier, who was of the houſe of Guiſe, and the moſt violent leaguer in all the party (71). This muſt certainly diſpleaſe his old ſervants. He would not have been ſo urgent to do a like honour to a Huguenot Lady. This is going beyond the parable in the Goſpel. They very probably might ſay, this Ducheſs has not yet laboured in your vineyard, and has done all that lay in her power to deſtroy it, and nevertheleſs ſhe is better paid than we who

(65) This alludes to a thought of the Emperor Auguſtus, with regard to the ſtate in which he had put the city of Rome.

(66) In Miſſa canone paſſim à Sacerdotibus per cunctas dioceſes celebrantibus orationem pro Rege omitti. Thuan. lib. 136. pag. 123.

(67) At Paris, Bourdeaux and Lyons.

(68) Extracted from Thuan. lib. 136. pag. 1123, 1124.

(69) Perefixe, Hiſt. de Henri le Grand, pag. 225.

(70) i. e. the day he made his entry into Paris.

(71) See the remark [D] of the article HENRY III.

wards of fifty Hiſtorians, and more than five hundred Panegyriſts, either Poets or Orators, had ſpoke of this Monarch with applauſe. It is certain, on the other ſide, that many authors have maliciouſly endeavoured to throw a ſhade over his glory. Mr. de Sulli complains of this, refutes their calumnies, and aſſerts, among other particulars, that this Prince did not ſuffer his miſtreſſes to fleece him at will [R]. However, I am of opinion, that had he not been happy in ſome faithful ſervants, who checked the rapaciouſneſs of thoſe (72) Matthew, chap. xx. ver. 12.

who have borne all the burthen and heat of the day (72). It was thought ſufficient, in the parable, to equal the recompence of thoſe who had laboured the whole day, to the reward of ſuch as had worked but an hour, and had done no prejudice before. There certainly were many ſuch murmurs, which doubtleſs could not have been appeaſed by the following anſwer of the maſter of a family, Is your eye evil, becauſe I am good (73)? This would only have inflamed the wound; Henry IV would have choſe rather to have ſaid for his vindication, that the neceſſity of the times required ſuch a conduct (74).

(73) Ibid. ver. 15.

(74) Compare, with this, the remark [AA] of the article CHARLES V.

Res dura & regni novitas me talia cogunt
Moliri (75).

(75) Virg. Æn. lib. 1. ver. 567.

Du Pleſſis Mornai, in a letter he wrote to Morlas in 1594, whilſt thoſe who had followed the League were diſengaging themſelves from it on advantageous conditions, employs the remarkable words following: "We do not envy your killing the fatted "calf for the prodigal ſon, provided you ſay with a "ſincere heart to the obedient ſon, thou knoweſt, my "ſon, that all I have is thine; and that you, at "leaſt, do not ſacrifice the obedient ſon, to make the "better entertainment for the prodigal one. In fine, "I am greatly pleaſed with whatever is done, pro"vided it be advantageous; but I dread thoſe bar"gains, in which things are given up, and nothing "got but mere words; the words of thoſe, who hither"to have had no words at all (76)."

(76) Memoires of du Pleſſis Mornai, tom. 2. pag. 398, 399.

[R] Mr. de Sulli complains of this .... and aſſerts, among other particulars, that this Prince did not ſuffer his miſtreſſes to fleece him at will.] He ſpeaks of certain Hiſtoriographers, who had beſtowed their elogiums and cenſures unjuſtly. They ſcarce ſaw one fault in thoſe whoſe hirelings they were, and ſcarce one tolerable quality in Henry the Great, who had given them nothing. And "foraſmuch, ſays he (77), "as they cannot deny him ſome praiſes, among a "numberleſs multitude which are publickly beſtowed "upon him by the conſent of all nations, they ma"liciouſly forget ſuch as are moſt neceſſary to be "known; diſguiſe others; and extenuating them "all as much as poſſible, they employed another "kind of malice, filled with impoſture, viz. to aſcribe "to him, impudently and falſely, deſires, projects, "deſigns, enterprizes, and reſolutions, with regard "to ſtate-affairs; all of them the moſt abſurd, ſilly, "impertinent and ridiculous poſſible. On this occa"ſion they give themſelves airs; they talk as if they "had been the King's greateſt confidents, and been "admitted into all his moſt ſecret thoughts and de"ſigns; or held intelligence with ſome of his moſt "familiar ſervants both for peace or war, who had "told them all theſe particulars. Afterwards pro"ceeding to diſcourſe on his private converſation, the "ſtate of his family, his behaviour in it, and eſpeci"ally on his recreations, diverſions, ſports, plea"ſures, paſtimes and feſtivities; though they were "for the moſt part ordinary, common and familiar "to men in general, nay even to women; and al"ways moſt general, univerſal, tolerated, lawful and "permitted to all Kings, Potentates, Princes and "great Lords, there being few to be found, even a"mong the moſt prudent, virtuous, gracious, pious "and holy, who were not delighted with them, and "which their people and ſubjects have not chearfully "ſuffered, when, for ſuch pleaſures and paſtimes, "there has not been committed any injuſtice, rape, "murder, violence, extortion or plundering. Never"theleſs, when they come to diſcourſe on the gaiety "and mirth of this ſo clement and gracious a Prince, "they exaggerate and miſrepreſent them to ſuch a "degree, by ſo many falſhoods and fallacious cir"cumſtances; by ſo many miſchievous and pernici"ous conſequences; charging him with ſo many vi"cious, ſhameful, infamous and even execrable and "ſcandalous deſires and paſſions; that one would ima"gine, in hearing them ſpeak with ſo much audaci"ouſneſs, impudence, boldneſs and raſhneſs, that "they were the ſearchers into the hearts and thoughts "of men ..... or that they had been his Majeſty's "confeſſors and great penitentiaries ..... and they "have eſpecially been ſo raſh, as to rank in the "number of his miſtreſſes, a Lady whoſe qualities, "eminence, virtues and wiſdom, ſhould ever have "cautioned him, even though he had thought of her, "not to look upon her as ſuch; and therefore theſe "knaviſh writers deſerve a moſt ſevere puniſhment for "writing after this manner. Theſe writers ſay in "other places, that the woman had gained ſo great "an aſcendant over him, becauſe vice was grown na"tural and habitual to him by long uſe and acquain"tance with wicked people; and that he was ſo diſ"tractedly fond of ſome of thoſe beauties, that he "had no other will but theirs; and that this weak"neſs was the cauſe that the moſt important affairs "were tranſacted by their mediation, and that they "were not refuſed any thing they deſired. They ſo "often add ſuch a number of trifling, impertinent "particulars, that all theſe raſh falſhoods being too "prolix to be refuted by the preſent diſcourſe, which "was drawn up for another purpoſe, we ſhall refer "thoſe who are deſirous of ſeeing their calumnies ſet "in a full light, to all that will be ſaid of them "in the courſe of theſe memoirs, from which it will "appear, how, and for what reaſons, the King never "intended to marry a Lady of gallantry; that the "women had no manner of influence in ſtate-affairs; "and that he had ſervants, who, by his command, "would tell them their faults, even in his preſence; "and divert them from, and refuſe them ſuch "things as they might think to be unjuſt and preju"dicial to the ſtate, the affairs and revenues of the "King, or to his people; and they were forced to "ſubmit to this." This ſhall be confirmed by ſome words extracted from a letter of Henry IV, wherein the reader will ſee the calumnies that were ſpread againſt him. "Some blame me as being too fond of "edifices and coſtly works; others cenſure my hunt"ing, hounds and hawks; ſome reproach me with "cards, dice, and other kind of games; others blame "me on account of women; ſome tax me with "loving feaſtings, banquets, and dainties; whilſt o"thers find fault with me for being delighted with "aſſemblies, plays, balls, dances, and running at "the ring,, in which (ſay they to reproach me) I am "ſtill ſeen with my grey beard, as much delighted, "and being as proud of having run victoriouſly, en"tred twice or thrice, as they merrily expreſs it, and "carried off ſome fine Lady's ring, as I could have "been in my youthful days, nay, as the moſt vain "man in my Court. I will not deny but that there "may be ſome truth in all theſe diſcourſes; but I "muſt obſerve at the ſame time, that as I do not "act in an immodeſt manner on theſe occaſions, this "ought rather to be ſpoke in my commendation than "as a fault; but be this as it will, I ſurely ought to "be excuſed for delighting in ſuch diverſions, as they "are not any way inconvenient or prejudicial to my "people, by way of recompence for the frequent bit"terneſs I have taſted; and for the many uneaſi"neſſes, diſguſts, fatigues, perils and dangers, which "I have paſt through from my childhood till the age "of fifty .... The ſcriptures do not abſolutely com"mand us to be free from ſins and failings, foraſmuch "as ſuch infirmities are inſeparable from the haſtineſs "and impetuoſity of human nature; but only not to "be enſlaved from them, nor to ſuffer them to gain "an empire over our wills; and this I have ſtudied "to do, not being able to do better: And you are "very ſenſible, from many things which have paſt, "with regard to my miſtreſſes (all people thinking thoſe harpies, and whoſe reſiſtance he approved, they would have had a ſtill more abſolute aſcendant over him. Henry did not often diſcover, though he did more than once, thoſe ſnares which were laid for him by beautiful women [S]. Such perſons as were of approved fidelity, might venture to give that Prince their advice without angring him; and we do not find that Villeroy diſpleaſed him, for having delivered himſelf with ſuch a freedom to this Prince, as might have offended him or any other [T]. It cannot be denied but that this Monarch had a great fund of generoſity, which made him abhor a numberleſs multitude of artifices, which are but too much ſeen in thoſe who govern. We will here ſee, on this ſubject, the judgment he formed of the artifice, which a King of France had employed [U].

(77) See Memoires du Sulli, in the preliminary Epiſtle to tom. 3. folio m. e. ij.

HERACLEOTES

" that love was the moſt predominant paſſion in me)
" whether I have not often aſſerted and maintained
" your opinions in oppoſition to their whims and
" chimeras, even ſo far as to tell them, when they
" pretended to give themſelves airs and make a noiſe,
" that I had rather loſe ten ſuch miſtreſſes as they,
" than one ſuch ſervant as you, who were neceſſary
" to me for affairs of an honourable and uſeful na-
(78) Mémoires de Sulli, tom. 3. pag. 137, 138. " ture (78)."

[S] There were ſome occaſions in which Henry eſcaped thoſe ſnares which were laid for him by beautiful women.] Catherine of Medicis aſking him at the conference of St. Brix (79), " What he would " have? He anſwered, looking on the Ladies in her
" train, I am not for any thing there, Madam; as " though he hinted thereby, that he would never
" more ſuffer himſelf to be enſnared by ſuch lures."
(79) A caſtle near Coignac. But he had not ſhown the like prudence on other occaſions; for ſome time after the maſſacre on St. Bartholomew's day (80), " he ſuffered himſelf to be cap" tivated by the charms of certain Ladies of the " Court, which it is ſaid that Queen had employed,
" purpoſely to amuſe the Princes and great Lords,
" and to diſcover all their thoughts (81)." What an abominable Queen was this! Every one knows what name is given to ſuch a behaviour. Heavens! what a ſchool was this for young Ladies of quality. Ladies who went by the name of Maids of Honour! And it is to be obſerved, that had this Queen deſired to keep two or three hundred, ſhe would have been ſupplied with them; ſo great was the corruption in thoſe times, the uſe to which thoſe Maids of Honour were employed being well known.

(80) Perefixe, Hiſt. de Henry le Grand, pag. 80. ad ann. 1586.

(81) Ibid. pag. 33.

[T.] Villeroy delivered himſelf with ſuch a freedom to this Prince, as might have offended him.] What people are they who do not know that it is a very rude advice, and which touches to the quick, to repreſent to a perſon, that he is not able to maintain his rank, but forgets the dignity of his character? Now Villeroi repreſented this to Henry IV. and he is applauded for it by Naude. One of the beſt Counſels, ſays he, (82), that Mr. de Villeroy ever gave to Henry the Great, who had led a Soldier's life during the wars which had broke out at his acceſſion to the Crown, was, when he told him, that a Prince who was regardleſs of the reverence due to his Majeſty, ſuffered it to be contemned and affronted. That the Kings his Predeceſſors, in times of the greateſt confuſion, had always behaved as Kings, and that it was high time for him to ſpeak, write, and command as a King.

(82) Naudé, Coups d'Eſtat, chap. 1. pag. m.

[U.] We will here ſee the judgment he formed of the artifice which a King of France had employed.] He was " a great obſerver of ſuch things as re-
" late to the preſerving the reputation of Princes,
" wherein he choſe rather to recede from his own
" right and power, than to give the leaſt occaſion for
" cenſuring his ſincerity; he always blaming faithleſs
" and inſidious Princes, not excepting even his pre-
" deceſſors, whenever the converſation fell on ſuch of " their Actions, in which they had been wanting with " regard to prudence in their promiſes and publick
" faith, as he did one day, when the ſubject of diſ-
" courſe, in his preſence, was on the weighty affairs of
" King Philip of Valois; and his great courage,
" which was ſo ill ſeconded by fortune." He was a great Monarch, (ſaid the King) but there were certain ſubtilties in his words, which would have become wheedlers of little Children better than Kings, as was the following, which I no ways approve. He had concluded a treaty with the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria, and promiſed by the treaty, not to make war with the Empire, notwithſtanding which, he levied both ſea and land armies, with which he invaded the Low Countries, under the command of the Duke of Normandy his eldeſt ſon, who was defeated by ſea at Sluys; and having laid ſiege to the City of Thin, the King his father was at that ſiege, as a ſoldier fighting under his ſon, being nevertheleſs one of his Counſellors; he thinking, by this captious equivocation, that no one could blame him for breaking the treaty which he had made as King of France; as tho' it were not the ſame thing to attempt any enterprize one's ſelf, as by another (83). It is not long ſince that walking with a Doctor, he told me that Henry IV. having been told a fraud of the King of Spain, cried out, It muſt be owned, that Kings are great knaves. I immediately ask'd whether he had read this particular in any Book, to which he replied, that this was one of Henry IV's ſmart ſayings, (α), inſerted in the collection which was publiſhed of them, at the end of his hiſtory written by the biſhop of Rhodez (84), preceptor to Lewis XIV. I very much doubt this, replied I; for I formerly read that work of Mr. de Perefixe quite through, and I have not the leaſt idea of what you now tell me; and yet theſe words are ſo very likely to make an impreſſion, that they could not be eaſily forgot. I afterwards run over Perefixe's work, and found that they were not there, and accordingly I wrote word to the Doctor about this. He then ſent me word, that, upon recollection, he believed that this exclamation of Henry IV. is told in one of Howel's Letters (in Engliſh). I relate this only by way of advice, viz. that we muſt not truſt hear-ſays; and that incidents vary greatly, by their paſſing from one writer to another. What a difference there is between the words of le Grain and thoſe of Howell!

(83) Baptiſte le Gruin, Décade du Roy Henry le Grand, liv. 8. pag. m. 781.

(84) Hardouin de Perefixe.

§ (α) There is a collecton of them, but two repartees are wanting which this Prince made when but fifteen years of age; and which his renowned mother, the illuſtrious Joan d'Albret, Queen of Navarre, has preſerved. The Queen-mother, Catherine of Medicis, in concert with the Cardinal of Lorrain, had ſent the Sieur de la Motte-Fenelon to the Queen of Navarre, to diſſuade her from joining her forces with theſe, which under the command of the Prince of Conde, the Proteſtants were aſſembling in 1568, juſt before the civil war. As la Motte-Fenelon one day, directing himſelf privately to the Prince of Navarre, ſtudiouſly affected to appear ſurprized, that he, being ſo young, ſhould engage in a quarrel which properly concerned no one but his uncle the Prince of Conde, and thoſe Huguenots who waged war againſt the King: I do ſo, anſwered the young Prince, becauſe it being manifeſt, that upon pretence of rebellion with which my Uncle and the Huguenots are falſly charged here, our enemies have no leſs a deſign in view than to extirpate the whole royal branch of Bourbon, we are determined to die all together, to ſave the expences of mourning, which we otherwiſe ſhould be obliged to wear for one another.

The ſame Gentleman directing himſelf, another time, to the Prince of Navarre, bewailed the miſeries which, he ſaid, the fire of this war would occaſion throughout the whole Kingdom. Pugh, ſays the Prince; ſuch a fire as this may be extinguiſhed with a bucket of water. How could that be, ſaid la Motte-Fenelon? by forcing, (continued the Prince) the Cardinal of Lorrain, the true and principal incendiary of France, to ſwallow down that water till he burſt. It is the Queen of Navarre herſelf who, pag. 234, 235, of a collection printed in 12mo, Anno 1570, entitled, Hiſtoire de notre tempes, &c. relates this in a long, noble manifeſto of her's. By the way, I know not whether Henry IV. was not as much obliged, for this vivacity and fire, to his mother, as to his father Anthony of Bourbon, who is not repreſented, in our hiſtory, as poſſeſſed of very ſhining qualities; and a circumſtance which

HERACLEOTES (DIONYSIUS) ſo named becauſe he was of Heraclea (a) a city of Pontus, ſtudied under various maſters, and at laſt attached himſelf to the founder of the Stoics (b). From him he learnt to aſſert, that pain is not an evil; that nothing but vice deſerves this name, as nothing but virtue deſerves the name of good; and that all other things are indifferent. He perſevered in this doctrine ſo long as he was in health; but being afterwards afflicted with the ſharpeſt pains, he abjured his opinions [A], and renounced the Sect of the Stoics; and, what is worſe, embraced that of the Cyrenaics, who made the ſummum bonum to conſiſt in pleaſure. He now entered without the leaſt ſenſe of ſhame, and in the moſt public manner, into the ſtews; and was willing that the whole world ſhould know the pleaſures in which he immerſed himſelf (c). Some perſons even ſay, that he was a debauchee from his youth [B]; and that recollecting as he paſſed

(a) Diog. Laert. lib. 7. num. 166.

(b) Idem, ibid.

(c) Idem, num. 167.

which is pretty ſtrong in the mother's favour, is a delicate raillery we find, page 236 and 237 of the manifeſto in queſtion, of that Princeſs, with regard to one Deſcars, a Limouſin Gentleman, who had ridiculouſly boaſted to the King and the Queen Mother, that he had the command of 4000 Gentlemen, who would be able to prevent ſo much as one ſingle Huguenot from marching, to join the Prince of Conde's army. However, as the Queen of Navarre, and her forces, paſſed without oppoſition; not to mention that Deſcars was not conſiderable enough, to prevail with ſo great a number of the Gentry to follow him as Volunteers: In all probability, ſaid ſhe, by theſe 4000 Gentlemen, Deſcars underſtoood Swine, who were called Gentlemen in his Village, becauſe they are cloathed in ſilk. The Reader may here obſerve the origin of the word Pourceaugrac. REM. CRIT.

[A] Being afterwards afflicted with the ſharpeſt pains, he abjured his opinions.] On account of this change, he was called μεταθέμενος (1), which we may tranſlate deſerter. Some relate, that his having ſore eyes was the occaſion of Heracleotes's changing his opinion, but others aſcribe it to the pains he felt in the gravel. Cicero gives us both theſe traditions (2). Nobis Heracleotes ille Dionyſius flagitioſe deſciviſſe videtur à Stoicis propter oculorum dolorem. Quis verò hoc didiciſſet à Zenone, non dolere quum doleret? Illud audierat, nec tamen didicerat malum illud non eſſe, quia turpe non eſſet, & eſſet ferendum viro. Hic ſi Peripateticus fuiſſet, permanſiſſet, credo, in ſententia, quoniam dolorem dicunt malum eſſe, de aſperitate autem ejus fortiter ferenda præcipiunt eadem quæ Stoici (3). "Dionyſius Heracleotes "ſeems to have left the Stoicks infamouſly, becauſe of "a pain in his eyes. For what man had been taught "by Zeno, that what is really painful is not ſo? "He had been told, but without underſtanding it, "that pain was not an evil, becauſe it does not reflect "ignominy on men, and ought to be borne by them. "Had Heracleotes been a Peripatetick, I fancy he "would have continued as ſuch, they maintaining "that pain is an evil; but they inculcate, in like manner as the Stoicks, that men ought to bear it courageouſly." I have quoted more words than I needed to have done, to prove what I advanced, and yet I do not think my Labour loſt; for I ſhew by the way, that the controverſies between the Stoicks and Peripateticks, with reſpect to the nature of pain, was but a mere diſpute about words. Both agreed that it ought to be borne courageouſly, but one part would not allow it to be called an evil, and the other aſſerted that it was. Did this deſerve to have ſuch a pother made about it? We diſpute at this time, both in Divinity and Philoſophy, about things wherein the miſunderſtanding is no leſs viſible. Here follows another paſſage of Cicero; I will cite it at length, in order that the Reader may have a full view of the manner in which our Philoſopher Heracleotes reaſoned. He preſumed greatly on the ſtrength of Philoſophy; he judging that as it was inferior to the force or violence of pain, pain muſt conſequently be an evil. Homo ſanè levis Heracleotes Dionyſius, cùm à Zenone fortis eſſe didiciſſet, à dolore deductus eſt. Nam cùm ex renibus laboraret, ipſo in ejulatu clamitabat, falſa eſſe illa, quæ antea de dolore ipſe ſenſiſſet. Quem cum Cleanthes condiſcipulus rogaret, quænam ratio eum de ſententia deduxiſſet, reſpondit, Quia cùm tantum operæ Philoſophiæ dediſſem, dolorem tamen ferre non poſſem, ſatis eſſet argumenti, malum eſſe dolorem. Plurimos autem annos in Philoſophia conſumpſi, nec ferre poſſum: malum eſt igitur dolor. Tum Cleanthem, cùm pede terram percuſſiſſet, verſum ex Epigonis ferunt dixiſſe:

Audiſne hæc Amphiarae, ſub terram abdite?

Zenonem ſignificabat: à quo illum degenerare dolebat (4). (4) Idem, Cicero, Tuſcul. 2. cap. 25.

"Dionyſius Heracleotes, being a fickle man, after "Zeno had taught him ſtrength and hardineſs, fell "from it, being vanquiſhed by pain; for being troubled with great pain in the kidneys, he cried aloud in "the anguiſh he felt, that what he had formerly taught "with regard to pain, was falſe. And when Cleanthes, his fellow diſciple, asked him wherefore he "had altered his opinion, he replied, ſince I have devoted ſo many years to Philoſophy, and yet am "not able to bear pain, this ſhews ſufficiently that "pain is an evil. Upon this Cleanthes, after ſtamping his foot on the ground, is ſaid to have repeated "the following Verſe out of the Epigonæ,

"Amphiaraus now laid low in Earth,
"Heareſt thou this?

"He hinted at Zeno, from whom he was grieved "that Heracleotes had degenerated."

[B] Some perſons ſay that he was a debauchee even from his youth.] We have juſt now ſeen, that he had adhered many years to the ſevere maxims of the Stoicks, and this he himſelf aſſerts, if Cicero may be credited. What are we then to think of a ſtory which we meet with in Athenæus? Shall we conclude that this author took a pleaſure in collecting whatever ſcandalous ſtories he met with, whether true or falſe, in the moſt ſatyrical writers? I ſhall leave this to the deciſion of my readers; and will only inſert Athenæus's Greek, with Dalecampius's tranſlation (5) which it may be neceſſary to rectify by Caſaubon's notes. Ἦν δὲ ὁ Διονύσιος ἔτι ἐκ νέου, ὡς φησι Νικίας ὁ Νικαεὺς ἐν ταῖς διαδοχαῖς πρὸς τὰ Ἀφροδίσια ἐκμανὴς, καὶ πρὸς τὰς δημοσίας εἰσήει παιδίσκας ἀδιαφόρως· καί ποτε πορευόμενος μετὰ τινῶν γνωρίμων, ὡς ἐγένετο κατὰ τὸ παιδισκεῖον εἰς ὃ τῇ προτεραίᾳ παρελήλυθώς ὤφειλε καλκοῦς, ἔχων τότε κατὰ τύχην, ἐκτείνας τὴν χεῖρα πάντων ὁρώντων ἀπέδιδε. Fuit autem Dionyſius ille, quod ait Niceas Nicæenſis libro de Succeſſionibus, jam ab adoleſcentia, tam immani furioſaque libidine percitus, ut ſine diſcrimine cum plebeiis ancillis ac pediſſequis coiret & aliquando cum familiaribus inambulans, ubi ad ancillarum ædes venit, quas pridie ingreſſus aliquot obolos quos debebat non ſolverat, caſu tum forte in loculis habens, diſtentâ manu coram omnibus numeraverit (5). (5) Athen. lib. 10. pag. 437.

i. e. "It is related in Niceas Nicenſis's Book of Succeſ- "ſions, that this Dionyſius was, from his youth, fired "with ſuch luſt, that he would lie indiſcriminately with "all the wenches who came in his way. And that "walking one day with ſome friends, and going by the "houſe of certain girls, with whom he had had an affair "the day before, and to whom he owed a few pence, "he happening to have ſome then in his pocket, "ſtretched forth his hand, and paid his debt before "every one." Thoſe who ſhall well remember Athenæus's ſeventh book will eaſily join with Cicero; and will believe that Dionyſius did not quit the Stoics, till after he had ſpent a great number of years among them; for Athenæus calls him an old man at the time he deſerted; and cites Timon the joker, who uſed to ſay that this man had begun to devote himſelf to pleaſure, at a time when the ſeaſon proper for it was over. But I had better quote the original, which is in Chapter VI, Book VII, Page 281 of Athæneus. Περὶ δὲ Διονυσίου τοῦ Ἡρακλεώτου τί δεῖ καὶ λέγειν; ὃς ἄντικρυς ἀπόδυς τὸν τῆς ἀρετῆς χιτῶνα ἄνδρα μετημφιάσατο, καὶ Μεταθέμενος καλούμενος ἔχαιρε, καί τοι γεραιὸς ἀποφὰς τῶν τῆς σοφῆς λόγων,

(1) That word ſignifies immutatus, and not tranſpoſitor, as Athenæus's tranſlator renders it, book 10. pag. 437. See Voſſius, De Hiſt. Græc. pag. 466. Caſaubon, in Athenæum, pag. 733. had always obſerved that fault.

(2) Compare citation (3) with citation (4).

(3) Cicero, lib. 5. de Finib. cap. 31. Laert. num. 166. ſpeaks only of his ſore eyes.

paſſed by a brothel, that he had left it the day before without paying what he owed the ſtrumpets, he put his hand into his pocket, and paid his debts regularly, in preſence of every one. A puzzling objection was made to him [C], viz. his admitting, with all the Dogmatiſts, that there is a rule to diſcover truth from falſhood. He compoſed ſeveral philoſophical works, and likewiſe ſome Poems (d). He impoſed upon Heraclides by one of his Poems [D]. He lived to fourſcore years of age, when being grown quite weary of life, he ſtarved himſelf (e). He burnt with laſcivious deſires, even in an age when nature was not able to ſatiate them [E].

(d) Diogen. Laert. lib. 7. num. 167.

(e) Idem, ibid.

Moreri

λόγων, ᾗ ἐπὶ τὸν Ἐπίκουρον μεταπηδήτας· περὶ ὃ δὴ καὶ ἀχαρίτως ὁ Τίμων ἔφη, Ἤιξ ἰχεῖν δύνειν, νῦν ἄρχεται ἡδύνεσθαι.

Ὥρη ἐρᾶν: ὥρη δὲ γαμεῖν, ὥρη δὲ πεπαύσθαι.

Quid autem de Heracleote Dionyſio attinet dicere? Apertè quidem & palàm virtutis exuta veſte, cùm indumentum mutaſſe & alienum ſumpſiſſe criminarentur, gaudebat, quamvis jam natu grandis à Stoïcorum ſchola defeciſſet, & tranſiviſſet ad Epicurum. De illo non invenuſte Timon ſcripſit.

Ille voluptati ſe tradit jam moriturus.
Tempus amandi, tempus habendæ conjugis, eſt quod
Rebus ab his tandem moneat deſiſtere tempus.

i. e. " What ſhall be ſaid of Heracleotes Dionyſius? who " having diveſted himſelf publickly of the robe of " virtue, and being accuſed for ſo ſhamefully changing " his principles, only laughed at the reproach, though " he was ſo far advanced in years when he abandoned " the Stoics and went over to the Epicureans. Timon " wrote pleaſantly of Heracleotes as follows :

" He dedicates his ebbing life to pleaſures.
" There is a time for love, a time for marriage;
" And there is a time we ſhould abſtain from both."

I ſhall add that Lucian obſerves, that Dionyſius was extremely ſober and prudent, when he left the Stoics (6). I dare not affirm, as Menage does (7), that he travelled into Aſia in Alexander's retinue ; and that he danced to the ſound of flutes at this conqueror's nuptials. Athenæus indeed ſpeaks this of one Dionyſius Heracleotes ; but how many perſons does he mention of the ſame name, without diſtinguiſhing them by any characteriſtic?

(6) Ἀνδρα τότε σώφρονα. Lucian. in his accuſato, pag. 325. tom. 2.

(7) In Laert. lib. 7. pag. 334.

[C] A puzzling objection was made to him.] The perſon who made it was one Antiochus. He had gone over to the ſect or principles of thoſe who did not admit of any knowledge, that is, any propoſition to be certainly true; and he afterwards had quitted that ſect, after having long maintained incomprehenſibility, and wrote ſubtilly in favour of it. Scripſit de his rebus acutiſſime, & idem hoc acrius accuſavit in ſenectute quàm antea defenſitaverat. Quamvis igitur fuerit acutus, ut fuit, tamen inconſtantia elevatur autoritas. Quis, inquam, etiam iſte dies illuxerit, quæro, qui illi oſtenderit eam quam multos annos eſſe negaviſſet veri & falſi notam (8)? i. e. " He wrote with great acuteneſs " and ſubtlety on theſe ſubjects ; and cenſured his for- " mer doctrine more vehemently than he had before " defended it. Therefore, although he was a ſubtle " and acute writer, yet his fickleneſs leſſened his au- " thority. For I would enquire of him when that " propitious day would ariſe, which ſhould reveal to " him that criterion of truth and falſhood which he had " denied during ſo many years." Now whilſt he was oppoſing knowledge or certainty, he haraſſed our Heracleotes in a moſt dreadful manner ; you believed for a long time, ſays he to him, that there was no other good but virtue ; after which you aſſerted, that virtue is only an empty name, and that the ſupreme good conſiſts in pleaſure. You therefore ought to believe, that falſhood preſents itſelf to our minds, and impreſſes itſelf there under the ſame characteriſtic or image under which truth exhibits itſelf ; and conſequently that this diſtinguiſhing characteriſtic of truth and falſhood, which you truſt to in affirming or denying, is deceitful and illuſive. The whole ſtrength of the objection in queſtion conſiſted in this, that Heracleotes had ſucceſſively maintained two contradictory propoſitions. Antiochus felt the force of his own objection, when he had changed his opinion, he being defeated with the ſame weapons which he had employed againſt Heracleotes. Here follows Cicero's Latin (9). Quoque ſolebat uti argumento

(8) Cicero, Academ. Quæſt. lib. 2. cap. 22.

A SCEPTICAL OBJECTION.

(9) Idem, ibid.

tum, cùm ei placebat, nihil poſſe percipi, cum quæreret, Dionyſius ille Heracleotes, utrum comprehendiſſet certa illa nota quæ aſſentiri dicitis oportere, illudne, quod multos annos tenuiſſet, Zenonique magiſtro credidiſſet, honeſtum quod eſſet, id bonum ſolum eſſe ; an quod poſteà defenſitaviſſet, honeſti inane nomen eſſe, voluptatem eſſe ſummum bonum : qui ex illius commutata ſententia docere vellet, nihil ita ſignari in animis noſtris à vero poſſe, quod non eodem modo poſſit à falſo, is curavit, quod argumentum ex Dionyſio ipſe ſumpſiſſet, ex eo cæteri ſumerent. i. e. " He employed this argument, whilſt " he thought that we could not arrive at any certainty " of truth ; which, ſaid he, of thoſe two opinions did " Heracleotes find out, by that criterion, to which " you declare that we ought to ſubmit ; whether the " firſt which he had long maintained, and had been " taught by Zeno his maſter, viz. that nothing is " good but what is virtuous ; or that which he af- " terwards defended, viz. that virtue is a vain and " empty name, and that pleaſure is the ſupreme " good? he intending to ſhew, from Heracleotes's " changing his opinion, that truth does not make " any impreſſion on the mind, but what it may like- " wiſe receive from falſhood. He took care, that " others ſhould draw the ſame argument from his " inconſtancy, as he had drawn from that of Hera- " cleotes." This objection may puzzle ſuch modern Proteſtants, as aſſert that the truths of the Goſpel do not enter into our minds by the way of evidence, but by that of ſenſe. What will they ſay ſhould they be ſhewed ſome Chriſtians who change their religion ; and who in imitation of our Heracleotes, a long time eſpouſe with incredible zeal and ardor, the very tenets which they afterwards reject with equal ardor? Does not the ſenſation of falſhood, will it be aſked, impreſs or ſtamp itſelf on the mind, with all the ſame characteriſtics as the ſenſe of truth?

[D] He impoſed upon Heracleotes by one of his poems.] Having written a Poem intitled Παρθενοπαῖον, Partheno-pæum, he publiſhed it under Sophocles's name, as tho' he had been the author of that poem. Heraclides was ſo far impoſed upon as to think it had really been writ by Sophocles, and quoted it as ſuch in one of his works. Heracleotes then diſcovered the artifice, which Heraclides would not believe in any manner, he aſſerting that it certainly was writ by Sophocles; and even when Heracleotes ſent him his manuſcript, he ſtill perſiſted in his opinion, and declared, that chance might make two poets form the very ſame compoſition (10); ſo diſpleaſing it is to an author, to own that he has ſuffered himſelf to be impoſed upon in ſuch a manner. Scaliger, when impoſed upon thus by Muretus, was not ſo obſtinate, but then he was prodigiouſly vexed at it.

(10) Diog. Laert. lib. 5. num. 92, 93.

[E] He burnt with laſcivious deſires, even in an age when nature was not able to ſatiate them.] Upon a high feſtival, which he ſolemnized as agreeably as he could, he cauſed a courteſan to be brought, that nothing might be wanting to the feſtivities of the day ; but old age had impaired his faculties to ſuch a degree, that all his attempts were fruitleſs. He confeſſed his imbecillity, employing the words (11) which Homer puts into the mouth of one of Penelope's gallants, who not being able to bend Ulyſſes's bow, cried, let another take this bow, I am not able to bend it (12). Heracleotes declared in like manner, that ſince he was not able to engage with the courteſan, another man ought to take her. Φησὶ τὸν Διονύσιον τοῖς οἰκέταις συνεορτάζοντα, ἐν τῇ τῶν Χόων ἑορτῇ, ᾗ μὴ δυνάμενον δῆσαι γῆρας χρήσθαι ἢ παμιλήφισαν ἑταίρᾳ, ὑποσρέψαντα εἰπεῖν ὡρὸς τὰς συνδιατριβάς, ΟΥ̓ δύναμαι τανύσαι, λαβέτο δὲ ᾗ ἄλλος. Tradit Dionyſium cum domeſticis, diebus feſtis congiorum, ferias illas agentem, cum ob ſenectutem meretrice quam adduxerant uti non poſſet, ad convivas facie verſa, dixiſſe, Arrigere nequeo, ſumat alius (13). Antigonus Caryſtius related thoſe particulars in the life of our Heracleotes.

(11) He made ſome alterations in them by way of parody. See Caſaubon on Athenæus, pag. 733.

(12) Odyſſ. lib. 21. pag. m. 647.

(13) Athen. lib. 10. pag. 437, &c. Antigonus Caryſtius.

Moreri has made conſiderable blunders [F].

[F] Moreri has made conſiderable blunders.] I. He ſays that Dionyſius Heracleotes ... having quitted Zeno's ſchool, became a follower of the Cynics. Now he ſhould have ſaid the Cyrenaics, which ſect differed greatly from that of the Cynicks. The reader may judge of this, from the oppoſite characters that were found in Ariſtippus and Diogenes. There is not in the main, any great difference between Diogenes Laertius, who declares that our Heracleotes went over to the Cyrenaicks, and Athenæus who ſays that he went over to the Epicureans; for though Epicurus gave a more virtuous explication of the word pleaſure, he agreed with the Cyrenaicks, that the ultimate end of man, the ſupreme good, the happineſs of man, is pleaſure. II. The following words, he did not ſcruple in any manner ... to do publicly what might give him pleaſure, are a conſequence of his firſt error, and a new error. Had Heracleotes gone over to the Cynicks, he would not have been aſhamed to lie with a woman in the middle of the ſtreets; but as he did but go over to the ſchool of Ariſtippus, who was an agreeable debauchee, a polite libertine, and who knew the world admirably well; and as the Cyrenaicks who were for indulging nature to the utmoſt of its wiſhes, were not nevertheleſs as barefaced and impudent as the Cynicks, it is wrong for any writer to aſſert that he had as little deference and reſpect, as Diogenes, for his neighbour's eye. I own, that he was willing to have people ſee him enter into the public brothels, and that it ſhould be known he had lain with proſtitutes (14); but every one knows that this does not ſignify, to know a woman publicly, and in the ſight of every one, as the Cynicks uſed to do. III. It would be impoſſible for any one to repreſent in a more confuſed manner than Moreri has done, our Philoſopher's deſerting the Stoicks. Dionyſius, ſays he, being extremely tortured with a dreadful pain in his eyes, would never ſay that pain was an indifferent thing. Is this a faithful deſcription of the change of this philoſopher? Would not the reader be apt to image to himſelf a man who is put on the rack, in order to force him to declare, that pain is an indifferent thing; and who perſiſts obſtinately in refuſing to make ſuch a confeſſion? See in the paſſages above cited (15) from Cicero, the genuine ſtate of this affair. IV. He ſhould not have ſubtracted ten years from Heracleotes's age; he ſtarving himſelf at eighty years of age, and not at threeſcore and ten.

(14) Εἴς τε τὰ χαμαιτυπεῖα ὑπιοῦσι καὶ τἄλλα ἀπαραλύπτως, ἰδυναῖοι. Luſtra ingrediebatur cæteriſque voluptatibus aperte operam dabat. Laertius, lib. 7. num. 167. The common verſion is expreſt in too ſtrong terms, and very probably miſled Moreri. Palam luſtra ingrediebatur, cæteraque ſub omnium gerebat oculis quæ ad voluptatem pertinerent.

(15) Citation (3) and (4).

HERACLIUS, Patriarch of Jeruſalem in the twelfth Century, made his own fortune by his art and conduct. He was a native of Auvergne, without either friends or fortune; notwithſtanding which he roſe to be Archbiſhop of Cæſarea, and afterwards Patriarch of Jeruſalem. His handſome air and artful conduct procured him the moſt intimate confidence of the King's mother; inſomuch that the oppoſitions of the Archbiſhop of Tyre were of no effect, though founded on prophecies [A]. It was in vain that he proteſted againſt the election of Heraclius, appealed to the Pope on that account, and even went to Rome in order to get it revoked; he had not time ſufficient to put an end to this affair. Heraclius cauſed him to be poiſoned [B], and going afterwards to Rome, got himſelf confirmed by the Pope. He ſucceeded Almericus the Patriarch, who died in 1180. He led a very ſcandalous life with the wife of a Merchant of Napoli in Syria, whom he ſent for to Jeruſalem after her huſband's death (a). The particulars of this incident are related below, in old French [C]. He muſt not be diſtinguiſhed from (a) See Hiſtoire de la Conquête du Roiaume de Jeruſalem par Saladin, printed in Paris, anno 1679.

[A] Though founded on prophecies.] He ſaid, that it was threatned in the prophecies, that as the Croſs was conquered by one Eraclius (Heraclius) it ſhould be loſt under another (1). I am of opinion that he would have ſpoke more conformably to Hiſtory, had he ſaid, that as the Infidels had taken the Croſs under one Eraclius, i. e. under the Empire of Heraclius, they ſhould re-take it under another Heraclius. I know very well that the Emperor Heraclius recovered, by a treaty of peace, the Croſs which the Perſians had carried off; but can we call this conquering the croſs?

(1) Hiſtoire de la Conquête de Jeruſalem par Saladin. See the remark [C].

[B] The Archbiſhop of Tyre ..... had not time ſufficient to put an end to this affair. Heraclius cauſed him to be poiſoned.] I found this particular in the preface which Bongars wrote to the Geſta Dei per Francos. He relates that William Archbiſhop of Tyre, the ſame who wrote the Hiſtory of thoſe times, declared, but in vain, to the Canons of the Holy Sepulchre, that it would not be proper for them, in any manner, to nominate Heraclius to the Patriarchate of Jeruſalem. He told them the prophecy related above; and, to prevent their entertaining a thought that he aſpired to the vacant dignity, he conjured them not to nominate either Heraclius or himſelf. However, they nominated theſe two; and the King, purſuant to the promiſe he had made his mother, choſe Heraclius, who immediately publiſhed his mandate, requiring obedience from the Archbiſhops and Biſhops, ſubordinate to the Patriarchate of Jeruſalem. The Archbiſhop of Tyre was the only Prelate who refuſed to appear; he appealing to the Pope, and boaſting he would prove that Heraclius was not worthy of the Patriarchat. He ſet out immediately for Rome, and met with a very gracious reception there; and ſettled matters on ſuch a foot, that it was believed Heraclius would inevitably be depoſed; but the new Patriarch warded off the blow, by bribing a Phyſician who poiſoned William the Archbiſhop. Heraclius afterwards went to Rome, and was indulged by the Pope in all things he deſired. Bongars met with theſe particulars in none but French Authors.

[C] The particulars of this incident hereunder, in old French.] The Hiſtoire de la Conquête de Jeruſalem, abovecited, was publiſhed at Paris in 1679. The Editor had taken it from an old manuſcript, which Mr. Cabart de Villermont had put into his hands. He publiſhes what follows in the very words and orthography of the original: Et celle (2) tenoit li Patriarche tout en apiert, & ſans celée de gens, ainſi comme un homme fait ſa femme, fors tant qu'elle ne manoit pas avec li, & quant li Patriarche alloit au Monſtier, elle eſtoit auſſi bien aornée de riches draps, comme ſe cou fut une Emperées ou une Reine, & ſes ſerians devant li, & quant aucunes gens la veoient qui ne la connoiſſoient point, ſi demandoient qui cette Dame eſtoit, ainſi qu'on fait des gens qu'on ne connoit; & ceux qui la connoiſſoient diſoient que cou eſtoit la Patriarcheſſe, la femme le Patriarche, & ſachez qu'elle avoit nom Paſque de Riveri, & ſi avoit aſſez d'enfans du Patriarche. On conte que ce Prelat aſſiſtant à un Conſeil d'importance, un fol s'eſtant fourré dans la chambre, courut droit à lui, & lui dit, Sire Patriarche preparez moi une riche recompenſe, car je vous aporte de joyeuſes nouvelles, voſtre femme Paſque de Riveri eſt heureuſement accouchée d'une belle fille (3). i. e. "The Patriarch kept her in the moſt "public manner, as a man does his wife, except that "ſhe did not live with him. And whenever the "Patriarch went to church, ſhe was in as rich and "ſplendid a habit as if ſhe had been an Empreſs or "Queen, having her domeſtics before her; and when "any perſons, who did not know her, uſed, when "they met her, to aſk who that Lady was, people "would anſwer, the Patriarcheſs, wife to the Pa"triarch. The reader is to know that her name was "Paſque de Riveri, and that ſhe had ſeveral children "by the Patriarch. It is related that this Prelate be"ing in Council when affairs of an important nature "were debating, a madman happening to get into "the room, ran up to him and ſaid, Lord Patriarch, "get

(2) i. e. the widow to the merchant of Napoli in Syria.

(3) I give this paſſage, according to the copy I took of it, a long time ſince. I fear I have not always followed the orthography according to the printed book; and I have it not by me at this time to compare them.

from the Patriarch Heraclius, mentioned in the hiſtory of the Cruſades, and who diſcovered ſo much animoſity againſt Henry II King of England [D], when he found that this Prince did not care to go and ſuccour Jeruſalem in perſon. He was the chief of the embaſſy which the Princes of the holy Land had ſent into the Weſt to aſk for ſuccours; and he had undertaken in Paleſtine, to bring thither the King of England, or one of the three Princes his ſons (b).

(b) Maimbourg, Hiſt. des Croiſades, liv. 4. tom. 2. pag. 65. Dutch edit.

" get ready a handſome reward for me, for I bring " you joyful news, Paſque de Riveri, your wife, is " happily brought to bed of a lovely girl."

Bongars tells the ſame ſtory in Latin, and more at large (4); for he ſays that the French Author who relates it, obſerves that this conduct of the Patriarch ſerved as a pattern or example to others; and that the Prieſts, the Clerks and Monks, were ſo immerſed in lewdneſs and adultery, that ſcarce ſo much as one woman was chaſte in Jeruſalem; and that Jeſus Chriſt, ſeeing theſe obſcene actions in the city where he had ſhed his blood, to redeem his people, would no more ſuffer them than thoſe of Sodom and Gomorrah. For this reaſon he repurged it ſo thoroughly of this filthy practice, that of all thoſe who were living in Heraclius's time, only two perſons eſcaped impriſonment, when that city was taken by Saladine. The ſame Bongars quotes Marinus Sanutus, and Paulus Æmilius, the firſt of whom ſays, that the people uſed to give the name of Patriarcheſs to Heraclius's concubine. Cui (Almerico) ſucceſſit, Heraclius tam pernicioſi exempli, ut procedentem ornatiſſimam mulierem quam publicè tenebat vulgus Patriarchiſſam vocaret (5). Paulus Æmilius aſſerts, that this Patriarch and his clergy led a diſſolute life. Sacerdotes fuiſſe flagitiis ſceleribuſque obrutos: atque adeo ipſum Patriarcham neque caſte neque integre vitam egiſſe (6).

(4) Bongars Præfat. Geſtorum Dei per Francos.

(5) Marinus Sanutus, lib. 3. Part 4. cap. 24. apud Bongars, Præf. Geſt. Dei per Francos.

(6) Paulus Æmilius, de Rebus geſtis Francorum, lib. 5. ſub finem, apud eundem, ibid.

[D] It was he . . . . who diſcovered ſo much animoſity againſt Henry II, King of England.] This Prince, " to expiate the crime he had committed, by occa- " ſioning the aſſaſſins of St. Thomas (a Becket) Arch- " biſhop of Canterbury, to murther that Prelate in his " own church, had ſubmitted to a penance of the " Pope, by which he had bound himſelf to convey, " in perſon, in three years time, a conſiderable ſuc- " cour to the Holy Land. Above ten years were " elapſed ſince the time fixed upon, and yet this " King did not prepare to fulfill his promiſe (7)." This made Heraclius hope that he ſhould be ſucceſsful in his negotiation. He made an extremely pathetic ſpeech to that Monarch, after preſenting him with the keys of Jeruſalem, and thoſe of the Holy Sepulchre (8). He was made to hope that his requeſt ſhould ſoon be indulged, but the King did not keep his word with him. Henry conſulted his Clergy, in order to enquire, if, in the preſent poſture of affairs, it was incumbent on him to fulfill his promiſe; and ſubmit to that part of the penance which the Pope had enjoined him, and to which he had ſolemnly bound himſelf (9). Heraclius the Patriarch was preſent in this aſſembly where this caſe of conſcience was examined. " All the Biſhops and " Abbots . . . . concluded unanimouſly, that not only " the King was not then obliged to go to Paleſtine, " but that it would be much better for the ſalvation " of his ſoul, to continue in his dominions; becauſe " that the promiſe he had made, in ſubmitting to the " penance, from which he might, and even ought, " to be diſpenſed, could not prejudice or interfere " with that which is abſolutely indiſpenſable, and " which he had taken at his coronation, viz. to rule " his ſubjects with goodneſs and juſtice; and to de- " fend them from the inſults of foes both foreign and " domeſtic, which it would not be poſſible for him " to do during his abſence, conſidering the ſtate of " affairs at that time. They all added unanimouſly " with the Lords, that as to one of the King's ſons " who was demanded in his ſtead, the aſſembly could " not come to any determination on that head, ſince " they were abſent; and that the reſolution they were " to take depended abſolutely on them (10)." The Patriarch, " who was a very paſſionate man, was ſo " exaſperated at this reſolution, that he had like to " have ſpoilt all, by quite neglecting the reſpect and " veneration he owed the King; and by treating him " in ſuch a manner as cannot be excuſed, what at- " tempts ſoever may be made to cover it with the " name and ſpecious appearance of zeal (11)." He anſwered the King, who offered fifty thouſand marks of ſilver for this war (12), " That they did not want " his money, but his perſon; that they had more " gold and ſilver than they deſired; and that the " only motive of their coming ſo far was, to look for " a man who wanted money, in order for the carry- " ing on a war, advantageouſly, againſt the Infidels; " and not to ſearch for money, which ſhould want or " require a man who had the art of applying it ad- " vantageouſly in this war. By the way, added he, " with a moſt inſulting air, you have hitherto reigned " with great glory; but know that God, whoſe cauſe " you abandon, will now forſake you. To be per- " ſuaded of the truth of this, you need but compare " the mercies he has indulged you, with the horrid " crimes you have committed, and with which you " have ſo ungrately repaid him. You have broke the " faith that you owed to the King of France your So- " vereign; and you now alledge that the war, which " you are afraid he will declare againſt you, as a pre- " tence for your refuſal. You have cauſed the holy " Archbiſhop of Canterbury to be murdered, and you " now refuſe to go and defend the Holy Land, after " having moſt ſolemnly engaged in it upon the holy " Sacrament. The Patriarch obſerving that the King, " changing colour, redned with anger and indignation: " Do not imagine, continued he ſtretching out his neck " towards him, that I fear the effects of that fury, " which the truth you are told, but cannot bear, " lights up in your ſoul. Behold my head; treat me " as you have done St. Thomas; I ſhall be as well " ſatisfied to die by your hand in England, as by that " of the Saracens in Syria; and indeed you are little " better than a Saracen (13)." The King bore all theſe words patiently, and continued to treat the Patriarch with great civility, even ſo far as to conduct him to his own ſhip at Roan, from whence he conveyed him to the frontiers, in order that he might be preſent at the conference which he had there, during three days, with King Philip, concerning the Holy War (14). Heraclius returned back, without obtaining what he deſired, and even without the ſuccour that was offered him, and which his paſſion made him fooliſhly ſlight, contrary to all the rules of prudence and good ſenſe, and to the great prejudice of his Sovereign's affairs: ſo greatly it concerns Kings not to abandon their intereſt to the diſcretion of thoſe who have very little; and who very often are deprived, by the ſtrong paſſions with which they are fired, of the little they have.

(7) Maimbourg, Hiſt. des Croiſades, liv. 4. tom. 2. pag. 57. Dutch edit.

(8) Ibid. pag. 58. ad ann. 1185.

(9) Ibid. pag. 59. (12) Ibid. pag. 63.

(10) Ibid. p. 61.

(11) Maimbourg, Hiſt. des Croiſades, liv. 4. tom. 2. pag. 62. Dutch edit.

(12) Ibid. pag. 63.

(13) Maimbourg tells us, pag. 64. that the Patriarch ſaid ſome things ſtill more injurious to the King; and which, adds he, I will not repeat.

(14) Maimbourg, ibid. pag. 65.

HERALDUS (DESIDERIUS) in French Herault, a Counſellor in the Parliament of Paris, has given good proofs of his erudition, by ſeveral works he publiſhed [A]. He diſguiſed himſelf under the name of David Leidhreſſerus, to write a political Diſſertation on the independence of Kings (a), ſome time after the death of Henry IV. He died in June 1649, and left children [B]. Salmaſius and our

(a) It was refuted by Joannes Eudæmon the Jeſuit.

[A] He has given good proofs of his erudition, by ſeveral works he publiſhed.] His Adverſaria appeared in 1599. This is a little book which, if the Scaligerana may be credited, he repented the having publiſhed. His Notes on Tertullian's Apology, on Minutius Felix, and on Arnobius, have been eſteemed. He alſo wrote notes on Martial's Epigrams.

[B] He left children.] Mr. Daillé (1), ſpeaking of ſuch Proteſtant writers as condemned the executing Charles I, King of England, quotes the Pacifique royal en

(1) Replique à Adam & à Cottibi, Part 2. chap. 21. pag. 127.

our Heraldus wrote againſt one another [C].

en deuil, by Mr. Heraud. This Author, ſon to our Deſiderius Heraldus, was a Miniſter in Normandy, when he was called to the ſervice of the Walloon Church of London, under King Charles I; and he was ſo zealous a Royaliſt, that he was forced to return to France, to eſcape the fury of the Commonwealth's Men, who were diſpleaſed at his exhorting them to ſubmit to their lawful Prince. He returned to England after the Reſtoration, and reſumed his antient employment in the Walloon Church at London; ſome time after which he obtained a Canonry in the Cathedral of Canterbury, and enjoyed it till his death. I was lately told this by a perſon who had opportunities of being acquainted with his hiſtory. See alſo the laſt page of Bochart's Letter to Dr. Morley.

[C] Salmaſius and our Heraldus wrote againſt one another.] "An old, and very learned Counſellor, "named Mr. Heraut (Deſiderius Heraldus) is dead here. "He was engaged in a quarrel with Salmaſius, who "had wrote againſt him, about four years ſince, Ob-"ſervationes ad Jus Atticum & Romanum. Heraut, "who found himſelf injuriouſly treated in that book, "was writing an anſwer to it in folio; but as he was "ſnatched away by death, I believe it muſt be ſold "as it is, and an end put to it where the author "found his own. He ſeemed to be threeſcore and "ten. . . . . He was looked upon as a very learned "man, both in the Civil-Law and in Polite Literature, "and wrote with great facility on any ſubject he might "pitch upon (2)." I am informed by a letter of Mr. Sarrau (3), that Heraldus, after being ſilent twenty ſeven years, having looked over his papers at the requeſt of his friends, was going to publiſh the work intitled de Autoritate rerum judicatarum. The piece he had prepared againſt Salmaſius was printed in 1650. It is a folio volume, and intitled Quæſtiones quotidianæ, & Obſervationes ad Jus Atticum ac Romanum. There are two books, in the Bodleian Catalogue, aſcribed to Hier. Herbarius, which were certainly miſplaced by the Printers. They ought to have been put a little higher, under Deſid. Heraldus. Here follow the titles of them; De rerum judicatarum autoritate Libri II, Paris 1640. Obſervationum & Emendationum Liber unus, ibid.

(2) Patin, Lettre 29. pag. 121. of tom. 1. dated Nov. 3, 1649.

(3) It was written in the year 1639. See Sarravii, Epiſt. pag. 16.

HERBELOT (BARTHOLOMEW D'), a French Writer, eminent for his ſkill in the Oriental Learning, was born at Paris December the 4th 1625 of a good family. When he had paſſed through a courſe of polite Literature and Philoſophy, he applied himſelf to the ſtudy of the Eaſtern Languages, eſpecially the Hebrew, in order to underſtand the original text of the Old Teſtament. After a continual application for ſeveral years he took a journey into Italy, being perſuaded that the converſation of the Armenians and other Eaſtern people, who frequent that country, would perfect him in the knowledge of thoſe Languages. At Rome he was particularly eſteemed by the Cardinals Barberini and Grimaldi, and contracted a ſtrict friendſhip with Lucas Holſtenius and Leo Allatius, two of the moſt learned men of the laſt age. Upon his return from this journey, in which he ſpent a year and an half, Monſieur Fouquet, Procureur General of the Parliament of Paris, and Sur-intendant of the Finances, invited him to his houſe, and gave him a penſion of fifteen hundred livres. Though that Miniſter was diſgraced ſoon after, yet our author was preferred to the place of Interpreter for the Eaſtern Languages. Some years after he took a ſecond journey into Italy, where he gained ſo great a reputation, that perſons of the higheſt diſtinction for their learning or rank, were ſollicitous of his acquaintance. Ferdinand II Grand Duke of Tuſcany gave him extraordinary marks of his eſteem. It was at Leghorn that Monſieur d'Herbelot had the honour of ſeeing the Duke for the firſt time. He had frequent converſations there with his Highneſs and the Prince his ſon, and they were ſo highly pleaſed with him, that they engaged him to promiſe to viſit them at Florence. He arrived there July the 2d 1666, and was received by the Secretary of State, who conducted him to an houſe prepared for him, where he was entertained with great magnificence, and had a chariot kept for him at the expence of the Grand Duke. A Library being at that time expoſed to ſale at Florence, the Duke deſired Monſieur d'Herbelot to ſee it, to examine the manuſcripts in the Oriental Languages, to ſelect the beſt of them, and to mark the price. When this was done, that generous Prince purchaſed and made them a preſent to our author. Theſe diſtinguiſhed favours conferred upon him might ſeem a reproach to France for ſuffering itſelf to be deprived of a perſon of his merit. But Monſieur Colbert, who had a great affection for men of learning, invited him to return to Paris, with aſſurances that he ſhould receive the moſt ſubſtantial proofs of his eſteem for him. The Grand Duke would ſcarce permit him to depart, and refuſed to conſent till he had ſeen the expreſs order of the Miniſter for his return. When he came to France the King often did him the honour of converſing with him, and gave him a penſion of fifteen hundred livres. During his ſtay in Italy he began his Bibliotheque Orientale [A], which he finiſhed in France. Whatever could not be inſerted in this work was digeſted by him under the title of [A] His Bibliotheque Orientale.] He wrote this work at firſt in Arabic; and Monſieur Colbert had a deſign to print it at the Louvre with a ſet of types caſt on purpoſe. But after the death of that Miniſter this reſolution was waved, and Monſieur d' Herbelot tranſlated his work into French, in order to render it of more extenſive uſe. He committed it to the preſs, but had not the ſatisfaction to ſee the impreſſion finiſhed, for he died in the courſe of it. It was printed at Paris 1697 in folio under this title, Bibliotheque Orientale, ou Dictionaire univerſel contentant generalement tout ce qui regarde la Connoiſſance des Peuples de l'Orient. Leurs Hiſtoires & Traditions veritables ou fabuleuſes. Leurs Religions, ſectes & politique. Leurs Government, Loix, Coûtumes, Mœurs, Guerres, & les Révolutions de leurs Empires. Leurs Sciences & leur Arts. Leurs Théologie, Mythologie, Magie, Phyſique, Morale, Médicine, Mathématiques, Hiſtoire naturalle, Chronologie, Geógraphie, Obſervations Aſtronomiques, Grammaire, & Rhétorique. Les vies & actions remarquables de tous leurs Saints, Docteurs, Philoſophes, Hiſtoriens, Poëtes, Capitaines, & de tous ceux qui ſe ſont rendus illuſtres parmi eux par leur Vertu, ou par leur Savoir. Des Jugemens critiques & des Extraits de tous leurs Ouvrages, de leurs Traitez, Traductions, Commentaires, Abregez, Recueils, de Tables, de Sentences, de Maximes, de Proverbes, de Contes, de bons Mots, & de tous leurs livres, écrits en Arabe, en Perſan, ou en Turc, ſur toutes ſortes de ſciences, of Antologie; but this was never publiſhed, any more than a Turkiſh, Perſian, Arabian, and Latin Dictionary, to which he had given the laſt hand, and ſome other works. It was in conſideration of his extraordinary talents that Monſieur de Pontchartrain procured him, upon the death of Monſieur d'Auvergne, the place of Royal Profeſſor of the Syriac Language. He died December the 8th 1695, aged ſeventy years, after a ſickneſs of ten or twelve days. He was no leſs converſant in the Greek and Latin Learning than in the Oriental Languages and Hiſtory. He was indeed an univerſal ſcholar; but what was moſt valuable in him, was, that his modeſty was equal to his erudition. He never ſpoke of what he was a great maſter of, without being called upon by his friends; he was not the leaſt dogmatical, nor preferred his own ſentiments to thoſe of others: he heard their reaſons with patience, and anſwered with the utmoſt civility. His uncommon abilities were accompanied with the utmoſt probity, piety, charity, and other Chriſtian virtues, which he practiſed through the whole courſe of his life (a).

(a) See his Eloge par Monſ. Couſin, prefixed to our Author's Bibliotheque Orientale; Perrault, Hommes illuſtres, qui ont paru en France pendant le XVII Siecle, tom. 2. pag. 154-158. edit. Paris 1701, and Journal des Savans du 3 Janvier 1696.

d'Arts, & de Profeſſions. Par Monſr. D'Herbelot. This work is a proof of the author's profound knowledge of the Eaſtern learning. It contains the ſubſtance of a great number of Arabic, Perſian, and Turkiſh Books, which he had read; and informs us of an infinite multitude of particulars unknown before in Europe. T.

☞HERBERT (EDWARD) Lord Herbert of Cherbury in Shropſhire, an eminent Engliſh writer in the ſeventeenth Century, was deſcended of an antient family, and ſon of Richard Herbert Eſq; [A], by Magdalen youngeſt daughter of Sir Richard Newport [B], and ſiſter to Sir Francis Newport of High-Arcall in Shropſhire Knt. grandfather to Francis Lord Newport, Comptroller of the Houſhold to King Charles II (a). He was born at Montgomery-Caſtle in Wales (b) in 1581, and was entered a Gentleman-Commoner of Univerſity-College in Oxford in 1595 [C], where he was put under an eminent Tutor, and laid the foundation of that admirable learning, of which he was afterwards maſter. Thence he betook himſelf to travel, and applied himſelf to military exerciſes in foreign countries, by which he became a moſt accompliſhed Gentleman (c). After his return he was made Knight of the Bath, when Prince Henry was inſtalled Knight of the Garter (d), which was on the 2d of July 1603 (e); or on the 23d of that month, when ſixty one Knights of the Bath were created, being the day before King James's coronation (f). He was afterwards one of the Counſellors to that King for military affairs (g); and was ſent Embaſſador to Lewis XIII King of France to mediate for the relief of the Proteſtants of that Realm then beſieged in ſeveral parts; but was recalled in July 1621 on account of a diſpute between him and the Conſtable de Luines [D], but at his return he juſtified his conduct ſo effectually, that he was immediately

(a) Life of Mr. George Herbert. By Izaac Walton, printed with the Lives of Dr. Donne &c. by Mr. Walton, pag. 262, 263. 4th edit. Lond. 1675.

(b) Idem, ibid. pag. 262.

(c) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 117. 2d edit. London 1721.

(d) Walton, ubi ſupra, pag. 263. and Wood, Hiſt. & Antiquit. Univerſit. Oxon. lib. 2. pag. 65.

(e) Camdeni Apparatus Annalium Regis Jacobi I. ſubjoined to G. Camdeni & illuſtrium Viror. Epiſtol. pag. 2. edit. London 1691 in 4to.

(f) Idem, ibid.

(g) Wood, Ath. Oxon. ubi ſupra.

[A] Deſcended of an ancient Family, a Son of Richard Herbert, Eſq;] Richard Herbert was the ſon of Sir Edward Herbert, Knt. ſon of Sir Richard Herbert, Knt. ſon of the former Sir Richard Herbert of Colebrook in the County of Monmouth, who was youngeſt brother of William Herbert, Earl of Pembroke in the reign of King Edward IV (1).

(1) Life of Mr. George Herbert. By Izaac Walton, printed with the Lives of Dr. Jonn Donne &c. written by Mr. Walton, pag. 262. 4th edit. London 1675.

[B] Magdalen, youngeſt daughter of Sir Richard Newport.] Lloyd erroneouſly calls her Suſan (2) This Lady having continued a Widow above twelve years, after the death of her firſt Husband Mr. Herbert, married a noble Gentleman, the brother and heir of the Lord Danvers, Earl of Danby. She was eminent for the excellent accompliſhments of her body and mind, and highly eſteemed by Dr. John Donne the Poet (3), who had a long and intimate friendſhip with her, and left a character of her in one of his Poems intitled, The Autumnal (4), which begins thus:

(2) State-Worthies, pag. 1017. 2d edit. London 1670.

No Spring nor Summer Beauty hath ſuch Grace
As I have ſeen in one Autumnal Face.
Young Beauties force our Love, and that's a Rape;
This doth but counſel, yet you cannot ſcape.
If 'twere a ſhame to love, here 'twere no ſhame, Affections here take Reverence's Name.
- - - - - - - - - - - - - -
In all her Words unto all Hearers fit,
You may at Revels, or at Counſels ſit.

(3) Walton, pag. 266, 267.

(4) Poems by J. D. With Elegies on the Authors death, pag. 151. edit. London 1633, in 4to.

(5) Walton, pag. 268, 269.

He ſent her likewiſe with a Letter dated at Micham, July 11. 1607 (5), ſeveral holy Hymns and Sonnets, and a Poem intitled,

To the Lady Magdalen Herbert, of St. Mary Magdalen.

" Her of your Name, whoſe fair Inheritance
" Bethina was, and jointure Magdalo,
" An active Faith ſo highly did advance,
" That ſhe once knew more than the Church did know,
" The Reſurrection; ſo much Good there is " Deliver'd of her, that ſome Fathers be
" Loth to believe one Woman could do this;
" But think theſe Magdalens were two or three.
" Increaſe their Number, Lady, and their Fame;
" To their Devotion add your Innocence,
" Take ſo much of th' Example, as of Name,
" The latter half; and in ſome Recompence,
" That they did harbour Chriſt himſelf, a Gueſt,
" Harbour theſe Hymns, to his dear Name addreſt."

She died in the year 1627; and Dr. Donne preached her funeral Sermon at Chelſea near London, where ſhe lies interr'd.

[C] Was enter'd a Gentleman Commoner of Univerſity College in Oxford.] This we are aſſured of by Mr. Wood (6), whoſe authority in theſe points is unqueſtionable. And therefore Mr. Iſaac Walton is miſtaken in aſſerting (7), that he was entered in Queen's College; confounding him with another of the ſame name, an Eſquire's ſon of Montgomery, who was matriculated in that Univerſity as a Member of Queen's College in the beginning of July 1608, aged 17 years, and who appears to be the ſame, who was afterwards a Knight and Attorney General in the reign of King Charles I. (8.)

(6) Athen. Oxon vol. 2. col. 117. 2d edit. London 1721.

(7) Pag. 266.

(8) Wood, col. 118.

[D] Recalled in July 1621, on account of a diſpute between him and the Conſtable de Luines.] Camden informs us (9), that he had irreverently treated the Conſtable Edw. Herbertus revocatur e Galliâ, quod Luinum Conſtabularium irreverenter tractaſſet. Mr. Iſaac Walton obſerves (10), that Sir Edward, while he continued at the court of France, " could not ſubject himſelf to a compliance with the humours of the Duke " de Luines; who was then the great and pow-" erful

(9) Annalium Regni Regis Jacobi I. Apparatus, ſubjoined to G. Camdeni & illuſtrium Virorum Epiſtolæ, pag. 73. edit. London 1691 in 4to.

(10) Pag. 263.

ately ſent back on his embaſſy. In 1624 he publiſhed his book De Veritate [E]. In 1625 he was advanced to the dignity of a Baron of the Kingdom of Ireland by the title of Lord Herbert of Caſtle Iſland; and in 1631 to that of Lord Herbert of Cherbury in Shropſhire. After the breaking out of the civil wars he adhered to the Parliament (h), and on the 25th of February 1644 had "an allowance granted him for his livelihood, "having been ſpoiled by the King's forces (i)." Beſides his Hiſtory of the Life and Reign of King Henry VIII [F], which is greatly admired, and his book De Religione Gentilium, (h) Whitelocke's Memorials of the Engliſh Affairs, pag. 105. edit. London 1732 and Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 117.

(i) Whitelocke, pag. 134.

"erful favourite at Court; ſo that upon a complaint "to our King, he was called back into England in "ſome diſpleaſure; but at his return he gave ſuch an "honourable account of his employment, and ſo juſti- "fied his comportment to the Duke, and all the court, "that he was ſuddenly ſent back upon the ſame Em- "baſſy." Lloyd relates the Affair in the following manner (11): Sir Edward, while he was in France, had private inſtructions from England to mediate a Peace for the Proteſtants in France; and in caſe of refuſal, to uſe certain menaces. Accordingly being referred to de Luines the conſtable and favourite, he delivers to him the meſſage, reſerving his threatnings till he ſaw how the matter was reliſhed. De Luines had concealed behind the curtain a Gentleman of the reformed Religion, who being an Ear-witneſs of what paſſed, might relate to his friends what little expectations they ought to entertain of the King of England's interceſſion. De Luines was very haughty, and would needs know what our King had to do with this Affair. Sir Edward replied, "It is not to you, to whom the "King my maſter oweth an account of his actions; "and for me, it is enough that I obey him. In the "mean time I muſt maintain, that my maſter hath "more reaſon to do what he doth, than you to aſk "why he doth it? Nevertheleſs, if you deſire me "in a gentle faſhion, I ſhall acquaint you farther." Upon this de Luines bowing a little, ſaid, Very well. The Embaſſador anſwered, that it was not on this occaſion only, that the King of Great Britain had deſired the peace and proſperity of France, but upon all other occaſions, whenever any war was raiſed in that Country; and this he ſaid was his firſt reaſon. The ſecond was, that when a Peace was ſettled there, the King of France might be better diſpoſed to aſſiſt the Palatinate in the Affairs of Germany. De Luines ſaid, We will have none of your advices. The Embaſſador replied, that he took that for an anſwer, and was ſorry only, that the affection and good will of the King his maſter was not ſufficiently underſtood; and that ſince it was rejected in that manner, he could do no leſs than ſay "That the King his maſter knew well enough "what to do." De Luines anſwered, We are not afraid of you. The Embaſſador ſmiling a little, replied, "If "you had ſaid, you had not loved us, I ſhould have "believed you, and given you another anſwer. In "the mean time, all that I will tell you more, is, "that we know very well what we have to do." De Luines upon this riſing from his chair with a faſhion and countenance a little diſcompoſed, ſaid, By God, if you were not Monſieur the Embaſſador, I know very well how I would uſe you. Sir Edward Herbert riſing alſo from his chair, ſaid, "that as he was the King of Great "Britain's Embaſſador, ſo he was alſo a Gentleman; "and that his ſword, (whereon he laid his hand) ſhould "give him ſatisfaction, if he had taken any of- "fence." After which de Luines making no reply, the Embaſſador went on towards the door; and de Luines ſeeming to accompany him, Sir Edward told him, that there was no occaſion to uſe ſuch ceremony after ſuch language; and ſo departed, expecting to hear further from him. But no meſſage being brought from de Luines, he had in purſuance of his inſtructions a more civil audience of the King at Coignac, where the Marſhal of St. Geran told him, that he had offended the Conſtable, and was not in a place of ſecurity there; to which he anſwered, "that he thought himſelf to be "in a place of ſecurity whereſoever he had his ſword "by him." De Luines reſenting the affront, procured Cadinet his Brother, Duke of Chaun, with a Train of Officers, (of whom there was not one, as he told King James, but had killed his man) to go as an Embaſſador extraordinary; who miſrepreſented the affair ſo much to the diſadvantage of Sir Edward, that the Earl of Carliſle, who was ſent to accommodate the miſunderſtanding, which might ariſe between the two Crowns, got him recalled untill the Gentleman who had ſtood behind the curtain, out of regard to truth and honour, related all circumſtances ſo, as that it appeared, that tho' de Luines gave the firſt affront, yet Sir Edward had kept himſelf within the bounds of his inſtructions and honours. He afterwards fell on his knees to King James before the Duke of Buckingham, requeſting, that a Trumpeter, if not an Herald, might be ſent to de Luines, to tell him, that he had made a falſe relation of the paſſages abovementioned; and that Sir Edward Herbert would demand ſatisfaction of him ſword in hand. The King anſwered, that he would take it into conſideration; but de Luines died ſoon after, and Sir Edward was ſent again Embaſſador to France.

(11) Pag. 1018, 1019, 1020.

[E] In 1624 he publiſhed his Book De Veritate.] It was printed at Paris, and reprinted there in 1633 in 4to, and at London 1645 in 4to under the following Title: De Veritate, prout diſtinguitur a Revelatione, à verifimili, à poſſibili, à falſo. Cui Operi additi ſunt duo alii tractatus; primus de Cauſis Errorum: alter de Religione Laici. Una cum Appendice ad Sacerdotes de Religione Laici, & quibusdam Poematibus. Autore Edvardo Barone Herbert de Cherbury in Angliâ, & Caſtri Inſulæ de Kerry in Hiberniâ, & Pari utriuſq; Regni. The Treatiſe de Veritate was tranſlated into French, and printed at Paris in 1639 in 4to under the following Title: De la Verité en tant qu'elle eſt diſtincte de la Revelation, du Vraiſemblable, du Poſſible, & du Faux, par Edward Herbert de Cherbury: traduit du Latin & augmenté par lui-même. In this Book our author aſſerts the doctrine of innate principles, and in his chapter de Inſtinctu naturali lays down theſe ſix marks of his Notitiæ Communes. 1. Prioritas. 2. Independentia. 3. Univerſalitas. 4. Certitudo. 5. Neceſſitas, i. e. as he explains it, faciunt ad hominis Conſervationem. 6. Modus Conformationis, i. e. Aſſenſus nullâ interpoſitâ morâ. At the latter end of his Tract de Religione Laici, he ſays thus of thoſe innate principles, Adeo ut non uniuscujuſvis Religionis Confinio arctentur quæ ubique vigent Veritates: ſunt enim in ipſâ mente cælitus deſcriptæ nulliſq; traditionibus, ſive ſcriptis, ſive non ſcriptis, obnoxiæ. And Veritates noſtræ Catholicæ, quæ tanquam indubia Dei effata in foro interiori deſcripta. Thus having given the marks of the innate principles or common notions, and aſſerted their being imprinted on the minds of men by the hand of God, he proceeds to ſet them down, and they are theſe; 1. That there is ſome ſupreme Deity. 2. That this Deity ought to be worſhipped. 3. That Virtue joined with Piety is the beſt Method of divine Worſhip. 4. That ſins ought to be repented of. 5. That there will be rewards and puniſhments after this Life. Mr. Locke (12) obſerves, that tho' he allows theſe to be clear truths, "and ſuch, "ſays he, as if rightly explained, a rational crea- "ture can hardly avoid giving his aſſent to, yet I "think he is far from proving them innate impreſ- "ſions in Foro interiori deſcriptæ." To which purpoſe he makes ſeveral reflections. Gaſſendi wrote a confutation of our Author's De Veritate at the deſire of Peyreſcius and Elias Diodati, and finiſhed it at Aix; but as he did not publiſh it, he retouched it in 1641; and the Lord Herbert paying him a viſit in September 1647, Gaſſendi was ſurprized to find, that this piece had not been delivered to him, for he had ſent him a copy; upon which he ordered another copy to be taken of it, which that Nobleman carried with him to England. Gaſſendus's Tract is entitled, Ad Librum D. Edvardi Herberti Angli de Veritate Epiſtola, and is imperfect, ſome Sheets of the original being loſt (13). It was printed after Gaſſendus's death in the edition of his works at Lyons 1658 in fol. Mr. Richard Baxter in his More reaſons for the Chriſtian Religion has likewiſe ſome reflections upon our Author's Book.

(12) Eſſay concerning human Underſtanding, lib. 1. cap. 3.

(13) Vie de Pierre Gaſſendi, lib. 2. pag. 137. edit. Paris 1737.

[F] His Hiſtory of the Life and Reign of King Henry VIII.] It was printed at London 1649, 1672, and

Gentilium, Errorumque apud eos Cauſis [G], both printed after his death, he wrote in 1630 Expeditio Buckinghami Ducis in Ream Inſulam, publiſhed by Timothy Baldwin LLD. and Fellow of All-Souls College in Oxford, at London 1656 in 8vo: and Occaſional and 1683 in fol. and reprinted in the ſecond volume of Kennet's Compleat Hiſtory of England. In the Dedication to the King he obſerves, that this work took its firſt beginning from his Majeſty's particular and unexpected commands; and the parts thereof, ſays he, as faſt as I could finiſh them, were laſtrated by your gracious eye, and conſummated by your judicious animadverſions . . . I am not yet ignorant, that the King, whoſe hiſtory I write, is ſubject to more obliquies, than any ſince the worſt Roman Emperor's times. But I ſhall little care for cenſure, as long as the teſtimonies I uſe do aſſure and warrant me; ſince I pretend not to deſcribe him otherwiſe, either good or bad, but as he really was. Only where he holds any doubtful part, I conceive it will be but juſt to give a favourable conſtruction. Mr. Wood tells us (14), that our author was aſſiſted in collecting the materials for this hiſtory by Mr. Thomas Maſter, Fellow of New College in Oxford. "Four thick "volumes in folio of ſuch materials, ſays that writer, I have lying by me, in every one of which I "find his [Mr. Maſter's] hand-writing, either in interlining, adding, or correcting, and one of thoſe four, "which is intitled Collectaneorum Liber ſecundus, is "moſtly written by him, collected from Parliament "Rolles, the Paper-Office at Whitehall, Vicar Generall's Office, books belonging to the Clerk of the "Council, MSS in Cotton's Library, Books of Convocation of the Clergy, &c. printed authors, &c. "And there is no doubt, that as he had an eſpecial "hand in compoſing the ſaid Life of King Henry VIII, "(which as ſome ſay, he turned moſtly into Latin, "but never printed) ſo had he a hand in Latinizing "that Lord's book De Veritate, or others." Archdeacon Nicholſon tells us (15), that in this Hiſtory our Author acquitted himſelf with the like reputation as the Lord Chancellor Bacon gained by that of Henry the Seventh. For in the public and martial part this honourable Author has been admirably particular and exact from the beſt records that were extant; though as to the Eccleſiaſtical, he ſeems to have looked upon it as a thing out of his province, and an undertaking more proper for men of another profeſſion.

(14) Athen. Ox. vol. 2. col. 40.

(15) Engliſh Hiſtorical Library, Part 1. pag. 226. edit. London 1696 in 8vo.

[G] His book De Religione Gentilium Errorumque apud eos Cauſis.] The firſt part was printed at London 1645 in 8°, and the whole in 1663 in 4to, and reprinted there in 1700 in 8vo. In 1645 he ſent the manuſcript of this book to Gerard John Voſſius, as appears from a letter of his Lordſhip to that learned man dated from his houſe near Weſtminſter on the 15th or 25th of Auguſt that year (16), and from Voſſius's Anſwer dated at Amſterdam 3 Kal. Jan. 1645. (17). An Engliſh tranſlation of this work by Mr. William Lewis was publiſhed at London 1705 in 8vo under the following title: The antient Religion of the Gentiles and Cauſes of their Errors conſidered. The Miſtakes and Failures of the Heathen Prieſts and wiſe Men, in their Notions of the Deity and Matters of Divine Worſhip, are examined with regard to their being deſtitute of Divine Revelation. With a compleat Index. By the learned and judicious Edward Lord Herbert of Cherbury, &c. In the firſt chapter our author mentions the Occaſion of the whole Work, and tells us, that when for a long time he had employed his moſt ſerious thoughts in conſidering whether any common means for the obtaining eternal ſalvation were ſo propoſed to all mankind, that from thence we might neceſſarily infer the certainty of an univerſal divine providence, he met with many doubts and difficulties not eaſy to be ſolved. He found, that many of the Fathers of the Church had not only a mean opinion of the antient religion of the Heathen, but alſo condemned it. The Divines of the laſt age alſo pronounce as ſevere a ſentence againſt all thoſe, who are without their pale; ſo that according to their opinions, the far greateſt part of mankind muſt be inevitably ſentenced to eternal puniſhment. This appearing to our author too rigid to be conſiſtent with the attributes of God, he began to conſult the writings of the Heathens themſelves. But when from their own hiſtories he found that their Gods were often not only mere men, but alſo ſome of them moſt vile, and when he had obſerved that their religious worſhip, rites and ceremonies, were ridiculous and extravagant; he was very much inclined to be of the common opinion againſt them. But then again when he conſidered, that this was altogether incompatible with the dignity of an univerſal divine providence, he began to make a diligent enquiry, whether they meant the ſame by God as we now do. Now by God we underſtand a perfect, immenſe, and eternal Being. And he found, that with them it ſometimes ſignified nature, or a certain imperfect, finite, and tranſitory power; ſo that not only heaven, the planets, ſtars, etherial and aerial ſpirits, but alſo men who had deſerved well of mankind in general, or their country in particular, were unanimouſly tranſlated into the number of their Deities. Their Emperors likewiſe, ſome of whom were the worſt of men, were deified in their life-time; and even the fever, fear, and paleneſs were eſteemed Gods and Goddeſſes by them: ſo that they aſcribed divine honour to whatſoever was above the common rank of mankind, or exceeded the apprehenſion of the vulgar. But ſtill it is very evident, that wherever we find the attributes of Summus, Optimus, Maximus, they meant the ſame God and common Father with us. So that the word God being explained, the doubts which ariſe in comparing our God with theirs, will ſoon be cleared. But yet neither their religious worſhip or rites could ever make our author have an ill opinion of the common people, they being the invention of the Prieſts only; and therefore this might ſolely be imputed to their great men, and not to the populace, who were only paſſive in this affair. Our author thinks, that it cannot be denied, that Prieſts have introduced ſuperſtition and idolatry, as well as ſown quarrels and diſſentions wherever they came. This inclined him not to make ſo raſh and peremptory a determination concerning the future ſtate of the Heathen Laity, as ſome Divines have done; they being only culpable for totally devoting and ſubjecting themſelves to the authority of their Prieſts. Their great defection from the pure worſhip of the ſupreme God being juſtly to be attributed to the ſacerdotal order, this put him upon the enquiry, whether amongſt thoſe heaps of Heathen ſuperſtitions a thread of truth might be found, by the aſſiſtance of which it was poſſible for them to extricate themſelves out of that labyrinth of error, in which they were involv'd. Upon this five undeniable propoſitions immediately occurred, which all mankind in general muſt acknowledge. I. That there is one ſupreme God. II. That he ought to be worſhipped. III. That virtue and piety are the chief parts of divine worſhip. IV. That we ought to repent of our ſins. V. That the Divine Goodneſs diſpenſes rewards and puniſhments both in this life and after it. Our author obſerves, that the modern Divines were more conſiderate in their determinations concerning the ſouls of the Heathens; The moſt rigid, ſuch generally as are leaſt acquainted with learning in general, and eſpecially polite literature, expreſſing themſelves to this purpoſe: "that after the "fall of Adam all mankind was formed and produced "out of a degenerate maſs. Some of them out of the "good pleaſure of God, and through the intervention "of Chriſt's death were elected to eternal glory; but "the far greater part, nay even thoſe, who never heard "of the name of Chriſt, were reprobated and determined to everlaſting perdition; and the moſt innocent and irreproachable lives, which the Heathens "could lead, will avail nothing, in regard their works "were merely moral, and upon that account altogether inſignificant." Now when our author perceived that they reſolved the cauſes of ſalvation or damnation only into the good pleaſure of God on the death of Chriſt; he found that their opinion was grounded not on reaſon, but on ſome peremptory decrees, which no perſon pretended to know; and he could not think theſe Divines ſo privy to the ſecret councils of God, as to eſtabliſh any thing for certain. He left them therefore, as entertaining mean and unworthy thoughts of the Deity and mankind in general. Then he met with ſome other Divines, who aſſerted, that Chriſt was revealed to ſuch Heathens, as led pious and honeſt lives, at the very moment of their deaths, caſional Verſes, publiſhed 1665 in 8vo, by his ſon Henry Herbert [H], and dedicated to Edward Lord Herbert, grandſon of our author. We have likewiſe other occaſional Poems of his in the books of other Writers, and particularly in that of Mr. Joſhua Silveſter, intitled, Lacrymæ Lacrymarum: or the Spirit of Tears diſtilled for the untimely death of Prince Henry. London 1613 in 4to. He died at his houſe in Queen-ſtreet in London Auguſt the 20th 1648, and was interred in the Chancel of the Church of St. Giles's in the Fields, with an inſcription upon a flat marble ſtone over his grave [I]. Chriſtian Kortholt has ranked him, on account of his book De Veritate, with Hobbes and Spinoſa, in his Diſſertation, intitled, De tribus Impoſtoribus magnis, Edvardo Herbert, Thomâ Hobbes, & Benedicto Spinoſâ, Liber: printed at Kilon 1680 in 4to, and at Hamburg 1700 in 4to. Wood tells us (k), "that he was a perſon well ſtu- "died in the Arts and Languages, a good Philoſopher and Hiſtorian, and underſtood "men as well as books." And Mr. Lock (l) ſtiles him a man of great parts.

(16) Vide Clarorum Virorum ad Voſſium Epiſt. num. CDX. pag. 272, 273. edit. London 1690 in fol.

(17) G. J. Voſſii Epiſt. num. DV. pag. 435, 436.

(k) Athen. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 117.

(l) Eſſay concerning Human Underſtanding, lib. 1. cap. 3. § 15.

deaths, and ſo they were conveyed to paradiſe. But their opinion being neither founded on hiſtory, tradition, or rational conjecture, it appeared to him very improbable, though theſe Divines ſhewed much greater tenderneſs towards mankind. At laſt he conſulted the ſchoolmen, to ſee if their ſentiments concerning the Heathens were more juſt and regular; but they ſkipping from faith to reaſon, and then immediately again from reaſon to faith with wonderful agility, and being ſo very nice and ſubtle in their diſtinctions, he could not receive the leaſt ſatisfaction from them. Amongſt other axioms he found this an eſtabliſhed one amongſt them; Facientibus quod in ſe eſt, non deeſt gratia ſalutaris. i. e. "Saving grace is never wanting to thoſe, who "do all that is in their power." He had recourſe then to other authors, but eſpecially Crellius, a very learned man, who hath written concerning the ſtate of the ſouls of the Heathens, and quoted ſeveral excellent paſſages upon this ſubject out of the moſt antient Fathers; by which our author found they were of opinion, that ſome of the beſt amongſt the Heathens, through the infinite mercy of God, might be capable of eternal ſalvation. He ſoon embraced their opinion, not ſeeing how the doctrine of an univerſal divine providence, could be ſolved otherwiſe, than that ſome means ſhould be afforded unto all men, by which they might come to God. And ſeeing that nature or common providence ſupplies us here with all things neceſſary and convenient for food and raiment; he could not conceive how the ſame God either could or would leave any man quite deſtitute, either by nature or grace, of the means of obtaining a more happy ſtate. And though the Heathens did not make ſo good uſe of them as they might have done, yet the Deity is not in the leaſt to be charged with their miſcarriage. He knew it to be a generally received opinion, that common providence doth not afford ſufficient means without the concurrence of grace and particular providence. But his deſign is to make it evident, that an univerſal providence is extended to all mankind. Now ſince the Heathens, as the ſcriptures teſtify, and learned Divines acknowledge, worſhipped the ſame God as we do, had the ſame abhorrence of ſin, and believed the rewards and puniſhments after this life; he could not but think, that after they had led a good life, they were made partakers of the fulneſs of that divine grace, eſpecially in regard they knew the moſt rational and clear parts of the true divine worſhip.

[H] Occaſional Verſes, publiſhed at London 1665 in 8*vo by his ſon* Henry Herbert.] They were publiſhed under this title: Occaſional Verſes of Edward Lord Herbert, Baron of Cherbury and Caſtle-Iſland, deceaſed in Auguſt 1648. The Dedication is dated March the 18th 166$\frac{4}{5}$.

[I] With an inſcription upon a flat marble-ſtone over his grave.] The inſcription is as follows. Heic inhumatur corpus Edwardi Herbert Equitis Balnei, Baronis de Cherbury & Caſtle-Iſland, Auctoris Libri, cui titulus eſt, De Veritate. Reddor ut herbæ, viceſſimo die Auguſti anno Domini 1648. T.

☞HERBERT (GEORGE), brother of the preceding, was an eminent Engliſh Poet and Divine. He was born at Montgomery Caſtle in Wales April the 3d 1593 (a), and educated in Grammar Learning at Weſtminſter School, where he was a King's Scholar; and about the year 1608 was elected into Trinity College in Cambridge (b). In 1611 he took the degree of Bachelor of Arts; and March the 15th 1615 was choſen Major Fellow of his College, and the ſame year became Maſter of Arts (c). In 1619 he was choſen Orator of the Univerſity; which office he held eight years (d); and during that time had learned the Italian, Spaniſh, and French tongues very perfectly; hoping, that he might in time (as his predeceſſors Sir Robert Naunton, and Sir Francis Netherſoll had done) obtain the place of Secretary of State, he being at that time highly eſteemed by the King and the moſt eminent of the Nobility. This and the love of a Court-Converſation, mixed with a laudable ambition to be ſomewhat more than he then was, drew him often from Cambridge to attend his Majeſty, wherever the Court was, who gave him a Sine Cure, which Queen Elizabeth had formerly conferred on Sir Philip Sidney, worth about a hundred and twenty pounds per ann. (e). His hopes of preferment at Court failing upon the death of the Duke of Richmond and the Marquis of Hamilton, he entered into holy Orders, and on the 15th of July 1626 was collated to the Prebend of Layton Eccleſia in the dioceſe of Lincoln by the Biſhop of that See (f). About the year 1630 he married Jane, the daughter of Charles Danvers of Bainton in Wiltſhire Eſq; a near kinſman to the Earl of Danby (g). April the 26th the ſame year he was inducted into the Rectory of Bemerton near Sarum, to which he was preſented by the King, upon the advancement of Dr. Curle to the Biſhopric of Bath and Wells (h). Here he diſcharged the duty of his function in the moſt exemplary manner. We have no certain account of the exact time of his death; but it happened between the years 1630 and 1640. His Poems, intitled, The Temple, were printed at London 1635 in 12mo, and his Prieſt to the Temple; or the Country Parſon's Character and Rules of holy Life, was publiſhed by Mr. Barnabas Oley at London 1652, and the third edition in 1675. He was highly valued by the moſt eminent perſons of that age. Dr. Donne inſcribed to him a copy of Latin Verſes; and the Lord Bacon dedicated to him his Tranſlation of ſome Pſalms into Engliſh metre. T

(a) Walton's Life of Mr. George Herbert, printed with the Lives of Dr. John Donne &c. pag. 262. 4th edit. London 1675.

(b) Ibid. pag. 265.

(c) Ibid. pag. 272.

(d) Ibid. pag. 273.

(e) Ibid. pag. 277, 278.

(f) Ibid. pag. 281.

(g) Ibid. pag. 290.

(h) Ibid. pag. 291, 292, 293.

☞HERBERT (THOMAS), ſon of Chriſtopher Herbert, and grandſon of Thomas Herbert Alderman of York, deſcended from Sir Richard Herbert of Colebrook in Monmouthſhire Knt. was born in York, and admitted a Commoner of Jeſus College in Oxford in 1621, under the tuition of Mr. Jenkin Lloyd his kinſman. But before he took a degree, his uncle Dr. Ambroſe Aikroyd, Fellow of Trinity College in Cambridge, brother to his mother Jane, daughter of Jo. Aikroyd of Folkerthorpe in Yorkſhire, invited him to that College. He made but a ſhort ſtay there, and went up to London to wait upon William Earl of Pembroke, who owning him for his kinſman, and intending his advancement, ſent him to travel in 1626 at his expence. He ſpent ſome years in his travels in Africa and Aſia, an account of which he publiſhed [A], and upon his return waiting on the Earl, the latter invited him to dinner the next day at Baynard's Caſtle in London, but dying ſuddenly that night (a), Mr. Herbert's expectations of preferment from him were fruſtrated; upon which he left England a ſecond time, and viſited ſeveral parts of Europe. After his return he married, and ſettling himſelf in his native country, proſecuted his ſtudies. Upon the breaking out of the civil wars, he adhered to the intereſt of the Parliament, and by the endeavours of Philip Earl of Pembroke was appointed one of the Commiſſioners of Parliament to reſide in the army of Sir Thomas Fairfax, and a Commiſſioner to treat with thoſe of the King's party for the ſurrender of the garriſon of Oxford. He afterwards attended that Earl, eſpecially in January 1646, when he with other Commiſſioners were ſent from the Parliament to the King at Newcaſtle about peace, and to bring his Majeſty nearer London. While the King was at Holdenby, about May 1647 Mr. Herbert and James Harrington Eſq; author of the Oceana, were appointed Grooms of his Majeſty's Bed-chamber [B]; and the former attended on the King to his death. Upon the Reſtoration he was advanced by letters patents dated July the 3d 1660, to the dignity of Baronet by the name of Thomas Herbert of Tinterne in Monmouthſhire, becauſe Little Tinterne about half a mile from Tinterne Abbey was his own eſtate, and the ſeat of his grandfather Thomas Herbert (b). Beſides his Threnodia Carolina, containing an hiſtorical account of the two laſt years of the Life of King Charles I [C], he wrote an account of the laſt days of that King, 1721.

(a) He died April 10, 1630.

(b) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 690, 691, 692. 2d edit. London

[A] An account of which he publiſhed.] It was printed under the title of A Relation of ſome Years Travels into Africa and the great Aſia, eſpecially the Territories of the Perſian Monarchy, and ſome parts of the Oriental Indies, and Iſles adjacent. London, 1634, 1638, and 1677, in Folio. This laſt is the fourth impreſſion, and has ſeveral additions. This book was tranſlated by Mr. Wicquefort into French, with an account of the revolutions of Siam in the year 1647. Paris, 1663, in 4to.

[B] While the King was at Holdenby, about May 1647, Mr. Herbert and James Harrington, Eſq; author of the Oceana, were appointed Grooms of his Majeſty's Bedchamber.] Mr. Wood tells us (1), that when the King was ſettled at Holdenby, the Parliament Commiſſioners, purſuant to inſtructions, addreſſed themſelves all together to his Majeſty, and deſired him to diſmiſs ſuch of his ſervants as were there, and had waited upon him at Oxford. "This their application "was in no wiſe pleaſing to the King, he having had "long experience of the loyalty and good affection "of thoſe his ſervants, as appeared by his counte-"nance and the pauſe he made ere he gave the "Commiſſioners any anſwer. Howbeit after ſome ex-"poſtulation and deliberation, he condeſcended to "what they propoſed, they not oppoſing the conti-"nuance of Mr. James Maxwell's and Mr. Pat. "Maule's attendance upon his royal Perſon, as "Grooms of his Majeſty's Bedchamber, in which "place they had ſeveral years ſerved the King. Next "day his Majeſty's ſervants came, as at other times, "into the Preſence-Chamber, where all dinner-time "they waited, but after his Majeſty roſe from dinner, "he acquainted them with what paſſed betwixt him "and the Commiſſioners, and thereupon they all "knelt and kiſſed his Majeſty's hand, and with "great expreſſion of grief for their diſmiſs, they "poured forth their prayers for his Majeſty's freedom "and preſervation, and ſo left Holdenby. All that "afternoon the King withdrew himſelf into his bed-"chamber, having given order, that none ſhould in-"terrupt him in his privacy. Soon after this his "Majeſty purpoſing to ſend a meſſage to the Parlia-"ment, he after dinner called Philip Earl of Pem-"broke to him, and told him, that he would have "Mr. Herbert come into his chamber; which the Earl "acquainting the Commiſſioners with, Mr. Thomas "Herbert, our Author, was brought into the Bedcham-"ber by Mr. Maxwell, and upon his knees deſired to "know the King's pleaſure. He told him, he would "ſend a meſſage to the Parliament, and having none "there, that he uſually employed, and unwilling it "ſhould go under his own hand, called him for that pur-"poſe. Mr. Herbert having wrote as his Majeſty "dictated, was enjoined ſecrecy, and not to commu-"nicate it to any, untill made public by both Houſes, "if by them held meet; which he carefully obſerved. "This errand was, as I conceive, his Majeſty's meſ-"ſage for peace, dated from Holdenby, the 12th of "May, 1647." About a week after the King told the Commiſſioners, that ſince Mr. James Levingſton, Henry Moray, John Aſhburnham, and William Legge, were for the preſent diſmiſſed, he had taken notice of Mr. James Harrington and Mr. Thomas Herbert, who had followed the Court from Newcaſtle, and having received ſatisfaction concerning their ſobriety and education, he was willing to receive them as Grooms of his Bedchamber, to wait upon his perſon with Mr. Maule and Mr. Maxwell; which the Commiſſioners approving, they were that night admitted. Being thus ſettled in that honourable office, and in good eſteem with his Majeſty, Mr. Herbert continued with him, when all the reſt of the chamber were removed, till his Majeſty was brought to the block. . . . . His Majeſty, though he found him to be Preſbyterianly affected, yet withall he found him very obſervant and loving, and therefore intruſted him with many matters of moment.

(1) Athen. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 691.

[C] His Threnodia Carolina, containing an hiſtorical account of the two laſt years of the Life of King Charles I.] This was written by him in 1678, on the following occaſion. The Parliament having a little before taken into conſideration the appointing of ſeventy thouſand pounds for the funeral of that King, and for a monument to be erected over his grave, Sir William Dugdale, then Garter King of Arms, ſent to our Author, then living at York, to know of him, whether the King had ever ſpoke in his hearing, where his body ſhould be interred. To this Sir Thomas returned a large anſwer, with many obſervations concerning his Majeſty; which Sir William Dugdale being pleaſed with, deſired him by another letter, to write a treatiſe of the actions and ſayings of the King, from his firſt confinement to his death; which he did accordingly.

(c) Vol. 2. col. 693, & ſeqq.

King, publiſhed by Mr. Wood in his Athenæ Oxonienſes (c) [D], and at the deſire of his friend John de Laet of Leyden, tranſlated ſome books of his India Occidentalis; but was prevented by buſineſs from perfecting them. He aſſiſted alſo Sir William Dugdale in compiling the third volume of his Monaſticon Anglicanum. He died at his houſe in York March the 1ſt 168½, aged ſeventy ſix years, and was interred in St. Croſs Church in Foſſegateſtreet in that City, where a monument was erected to his memory by his widow Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Gervas Cutler of Stainborough in Yorkſhire. His firſt wife was Lucia daughter of Sir Walter Alexander, ſervant to King Charles I, by whom he had iſſue Philip, Henry heir to his father, Montgomery, Thomas, William, &c. A little before his death he gave ſeveral manuſcripts to the public Library at Oxford, and others to that belonging to the Cathedral at York; and in the Aſhmolean Muſæum at Oxford there are ſeveral Collections of his, which he made from the Regiſters of the Archbiſhops of York, given to it by Sir William Dugdale.

[D] Wrote an account of the laſt days of that King, publiſhed by Mr. Wood in his Athenæ Oxonienſes.] Mr. Wood obſerves (2), that about the ſame time that Sir Thomas wrote his Threnodia Carolina, himſelf "having occaſion to write to him for information "of certain perſons then or about that time (3) attending the King, he thereupon ſent him ſeveral "letters in anſwer to his queries, with divers other "matters by way of digreſſion; which letters con"tain, as it ſeems, the chief contents of Threnodia "Carolina, and are ſeveral times quoted in this "work (4). . . . . With the ſaid letters, which Mr. "Wood received from Sir Thomas, he received from "him an account of the laſt days of King Charles I "of ever bleſſed memory, with an earneſt deſire, "that if he ſhould have any occaſion to make men"tion of that moſt pious and good King, he would "by no means omit him for theſe reaſons: 1. Be"cauſe in the ſaid account there are many things, "that have not yet been divulged. 2. That he was "grown old, and not in ſuch a capacity, as he "could wiſh, to publiſh it. And 3. That if he "ſhould leave it to his relations to do it, they, out "of ignorance or partiality, may ſpoil it. Upon "his deſire, and theſe reaſons given, he [Mr. Wood] "did then promiſe him to find ſome place to receive "it in a work that he was then compiling, viz. Athenæ "Oxonienſes." We ſhall add here a copy of a very remarkable letter from our author to Dr. Samways, by whom it was ſent to Dr. Sancroft, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and referred to in col. 524, line 73, Vol. II. of the Athenæ Oxon. Edit. 1692, and in col. 701, line 39, of the ſame volume, Edit. 1721. This letter was found in a copy of that book lately in the hands of the Lord Viſcount Preſton, and was communicated to us by the very learned Richard Rawlinſon, LL. D. and F. R. S. It is as follows.

(2) Ibid. col. 692, 693.

(3) Juſt before King Charles I's death.

(4) Athenæ Oxonienſes.

"Sir,

"After his late Majeſty's remove from Windſor to "St. James's, albeit according to the duty of my "place I lay in the next room to the Bedchamber, "the King then commanded me to bring my pallate "into his chamber, which I accordingly did the "night before that ſorrowful day. He ordered what "cloaths he would wear, intending that day to be "as neat as could be, it being (as he called it) his "wedding-day. And having a great work to do "(meaning his preparation to eternity) ſaid, he would "be ſtirring much earlier than he uſed. For ſome "hours his Majeſty ſlept very ſoundly. For my "part, I was ſo full of anguiſh and grief, that I "took little reſt. The King ſome hours before day "drew his bed-curtains to awake me, and could by "the light of a wax-lamp perceive me troubled in my "ſleep. The King roſe forthwith, and as I was "making him ready, Herbert, ſaid the King, I "would know why you were diſquieted in your ſleep. "I replied, May it pleaſe your Majeſty, I was in a "dream. What was your dream, ſaid the King? "I would hear it. May it pleaſe your Majeſty, ſaid "I, I dreamed, that as you were making ready, one "knocked at the Bedchamber door, which your Ma"jeſty took no notice of, nor was I willing to ac"quaint you with it, apprehendng it might be Colonel "Hacker. But knocking the ſecond time, your "Majeſty aſked me, if I heard it not? I ſaid, I "did, but did not uſe to go without his order. Why "then go, know who it is, and his buſineſs. Where"upon I opened the door, and perceived that it was "the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Dr. Laud, in "his pontifical habit, as worn at Court. I knew "him, having ſeen him often. The Archbiſhop de"ſired he might enter, having ſomething to ſay to "the King. I acquainted your Majeſty with his de"ſire; ſo you bad me let him in. Being in, he "made his obeyſance to your Majeſty in the middle "of the room, doing the like alſo when he came "near your perſon; and falling on his knees, your "Majeſty gave him your hand to kiſs, and took "him aſide to the window, where ſome diſcourſe "paſſed between your Majeſty and him, and I kept "a becoming diſtance, not hearing any thing that "was ſaid, yet could perceive your Majeſty penſive "by your looks, and that the Archbiſhop gave a "ſigh; who after a ſhort ſtay again kiſſing your "hand, returned, but with his face all the way to"wards your Majeſty, and making his uſual reve"rences, the third being ſo ſubmiſs, as he fell proſ"trate on his face on the ground, and I immediately "ſtept to him to help him up, which I was then "acting when your Majeſty ſaw me troubled in my "ſleep. The impreſſion was ſo lively, that I looked "about, verily thinking that it was no dream. The "King ſaid, my dream was remarkable, but he is "dead; yet had we conferred together during life, it is "very likely, albeit I loved him well, I ſhould have "ſaid ſomething to him might have occaſioned his ſigh." Soon after I had told my dream, Dr. Juxon, then "Biſhop of London, came to the King, as I relate "in that narrative I ſent Sir William Dugdale, "which I have a tranſcript of here, nor know whe"ther it reſts with his Grace the Archbiſhop of "Canterbury, or Sir William, or be diſpoſed of in "Sir John Cotton's Library near Weſtminſter Hall; "but wiſh you had the peruſal of it, before you re"turn into the North. And this being not commu"nicated to any but yourſelf, you may ſhew it his "Grace, and none elſe, as you promiſed.

"Sir,

"Y[ork], 28 "Your very affectioned
"Aug. 80. "Friend and Servant,
Tho. Herbert.

T.

HERCULES. There have been ſeveral heroes of this name [A], but he of Thebes was the moſt renowned, becauſe the Greeks aſcribed to him the actions atchieved by the

[A] There have been ſeveral Heroes of this Name.] Cicero reckons ſix. Quamquam quem potiſſimum Herculem colamus ſcire ſane velim, plures enim tradunt nobis ii qui interiores ſcrutantur & reconditas literas: antiquiſſimum Jove natum, ſed item Jove antiquiſſimo; nam Joves quoque plures in priſcis Græcorum literis invenimus. Ex eo igitur & Lyſito eſt is Hercules, quem concertaviſſe cum Apolline de tripode accepimus. Alter traditur Nilo natus Ægyptius, quem aiunt Phrygias literas conſcripſiſſe. Tertius eſt ex Idæis Dactylis, cui inferias afferunt. Quartus Jovis eſt, & Aſteriæ Latonæ ſororis, quem Tyrii maximè colunt, cujus Carthaginem filiam ferunt. Quintus in India, qui Belus dicitur. Sextus hic ex Alcumena, quem Jupiter genuit; ſed tertius Jupiter: quoniam, ut jam docebo, plures Joves etiam accepimus (1). i. e. "I want very much to be informed, "which

(1) Cicero, de Natura Deorum, lib. 3. cap. 16.

the reſt, and have ſtudiouſly affected to ſpeak concerning him, according to the fabulous genius of their Nation. I intend to write of that Hercules only. He was looked upon as the ſon of Jupiter and Alcmene. I obſerved in other articles (a), in what manner that Lady was impoſed upon by this God; and will not repeat that, nor what is found in Moreri. Our Hercules exerted prodigious ſtrength, as well in the combats of Mars, as in thoſe of Venus [B]. He alſo was a prodigious eater [C], of which

(a) See the articles ALCMENE and AMPHITRYO.

" which of the Hercules's it is we chiefly worſhip, " for thoſe who peruſe ſecret Hiſtory, declare, that " there were ſeveral of this Name; the moſt antient " of all having ſprung from Jove, and the moſt antient of the Jupiters; for we find ſeveral of the Jupiters in old Greek Authors. 'Twas this Hercules, " the ſon of Jupiter and Lyſito, who is related to have " had a conteſt with Apollo concerning a tripod. Another Hercules, an Egyptian, Nilus's ſon, whom we " are told was the inventor of the Phrygian Letters. " A third deſcended from the Idæi Dactyli, to whom " infernal rights are offered. A fourth Hercules was " the offspring of Jupiter and Aſteria, Latona's ſiſter, " who is chiefly worſhipped by the Tyrians, and " who is ſaid to have a Daughter called Carthage. " There was a fifth in India, and who is named Belus; and a ſixth, the ſon of Alcmena by Jupiter, " but a third Jupiter; becauſe, as I ſhall ſoon ſhow, " we are told of ſeveral Jupiters." According to this account, the Egyptian Hercules would be but the third; however, the Egyptians gave him the firſt place (2). Diodorus Siculus (3), who ſpeaks but of three Hercules's, declares him of Egypt to have been the eldeſt; and owns that a ſimilitude of name and inclinations, was the reaſon why the acts of the others have been aſcribed to the Theban Hercules, who was the youngeſt of them all. 'Tis ſaid, that Varro reckons forty-four Hercules's.

(2) Inde proximum amnis (Nili) os dicatum Herculi, quem indigenæ ortum apud ſe antiquiſſimum perhibent, eosque qui poſtea pari virtute fuerint in cognomentum ejus aſcitos. Tacit. Annal. lib. 2. cap. 60.

(3) Lib. 3. ſub fin.

[B] Our Hercules exerted prodigious ſtrength, in the combats of Venus.] Some relate (4) that Hercules, in ſeven days, cropt the virgin Flower of the fifty Daughters of Theſtius; others (5) declare, that this buſineſs took up but one night; and add, that he had got each of them with child of a Boy; and that two of them, the eldeſt and youngeſt brought him each twin ſons. According to ſome writers (6), the youngeſt would never conſent to loſe her maidenhead; but to puniſh her for this, he ſentenced her to perpetual virginity, and would have her ſerve him as prieſteſs; and for this reaſon, a prieſteſs who was to live for ever a maid, was to officiate in Hercules's temple in Theſpis (7). Pauſanias could not think, that Hercules could have been ſo prodigiouſly exaſperated with the Daughter of his good friend (8); he therefore conſidered the ſentence, which Hercules was ſaid to have pronounced on her, as a very ſevere puniſhment. What he relates of the friendſhip which Theſtius had for Hercules, agrees very well with what we read in Diodorus Siculus (9), viz. that Theſtius (10) being deſirous that his daughters might give him poſterity, of which Hercules might be the father, invited him to a grand banquet, and regaled him in a very magnificent manner, and then ſent him his fifty Daughters one after the other. Vigenere has ſaid pleaſantly enough, that this was the ſtouteſt battle in which Hercules was ever engaged in his life (11): and yet the antients have not ranked this in the catalogue of his labours. It has been obſerved, that becauſe he made war, ſometimes in one country, and at other times in another, and was very fond of the fair ſex, he had diſperſed or ſettled women in different parts of the world, in order that he might have ſome for his purpoſe wherever he came. Lactantius had juſt reaſon to laugh at the Heathens, who had ranked in the number of their Deities, a man who left works of his uncleanneſs in all parts of the earth. Hercules . . . nonne orbem terræ quem peragraſſe ac purgaſſe narratur, ſtupris, libidinibus, adulteriis inquinavit? nec mirum, cum eſſet adulterio genitus, Alcmenæ. Quid tandem potuit in eo eſſe divini, qui ſuis ipſe vitiis mancipatus, & mares, & Fœminas, contra omnes leges infamia, dedecore, flagitio, afficit (12). i. e. " Did not Hercules, who is ſaid to " have travelled through the whole earth, and to have " purged it from Monſters, defile and pollute it with " whoredoms, with leud and adulterous actions? " but this we are not to wonder at, ſince he ſprung " from Alcmena's Adultery. Now what could there " be divine in him, who being himſelf a ſlave to vice, " in oppoſition to all Laws, brought infamy, ſhame, " and guilt on both ſexes." Arnobius has ridiculed the Heathens very agreeably, for ſuppoſing that nine nights were required for Jupiter to get a child; and that Hercules in one night's time got fifty women with child. Quis illum (Jovem) in Alcmena novem noctibus fecit pervigilaſſe continuis? non vos? . . . Et ſane adjungitis beneficia non parva: ſiquidem vobis Deus Hercules natus eſt, qui in rebus hujuſmodi patris ſui tranſiret exuperaretque virtutes. Ille noctibus vix novem unam potuit prolem extundere, concinnare, compingere: at Hercules ſanctus Deus natas quinquaginta de Theſtio nocte una perdocuit, & nomen virginitatis exponere, & genitricum pondera ſuſtinere (13). i. e. " Who declared that this Jupiter lay nine whole nights with " Alcmena? was it not you? and you really make noble " advantages reſult upon it; and from this embrace " your God Hercules ſprung, who greatly ſurpaſſed " his father in ſuch kind of feats. Jupiter could ſcarce " get one child in nine nights; but the holy God " Hercules, in a ſingle night, not only deflowered " Theſtius's fifty Daughters, but got them all with " child." It is to be obſerved that Theſtius was frightened at this vigour of Hercules (14).

(13) Arnobius, lib. 4. pag. 145.

(14) Qualemque vagæ poſt crimina noctis, Theſpius obſtupuit toties ſocer. Stat. Silv. 1. lib. 3. ver. 42.

[C] He was a prodigious eater.] He boaſted that he could eat more than any other man, and therefore was extremely vexed to meet with one who equalled him in that particular. He diſputed the prize of voraciouſneſs with one Lepreus, but did not win it (15). Each ſacrificed an Ox; and as Hercules eat all his at a ſingle meal, his antagoniſt exerted himſelf no leſs ſpeedily and vigorouſly with regard to his victim. Lepreus ought to have ſtopt here; but he was ſo inſolent as to challenge Hercules to engage him in another kind of combat, in a true Duel, in which he loſt his life. I ſhall expatiate farther on this diſpute, at the end of this remark. Here follows another Story. Hercules travelling with his wife, and young Hylacs his ſon; and finding that the child was very hungry, he addreſſed a husbandman, and deſired ſome victuals; however he got nothing, upon which he took one of the Oxen from the plough, ſacrificed it to the Gods, and eat it (16). This canine appetite did not abandon him, even in Heaven, whence it is, that Callimachus exhorts Diana not to catch hares, but wild boars and bulls; becauſe Hercules had not loſt now he was among the Gods, that faculty he had of eating prodigiouſly when among men.

(15) Pauſan. lib. 5. pag. 151.

(16) See Natalis Comes, Mythol. lib. 7. pag. m. 693, 694. Apollodorus, liv. 2. pag. 145. does not ſay ſo much, and has not the ſame circumſtances; but he owns that Hercules killed and eat the ox. The Scholiaſt on Apollonius, lib. 1. ver. 1212, ſays the ſame as Natalis Comes.

Οὐ γὰρ ὄγε Φρυγίη περ ὑπὸ δειρὴ γυῖα θεωθεὶς
Παύσατ' ἀδηφαγίης· ἔτι οἱ παρὰ νηδὺς ἐκείνη
Τῇ ποτ' ἀροτριάοντι συνήλετο Θειοδάμαντι (17).

" Tho' now a God, he is not leſs voracious,
" Than, when a man, in Phrygia's blooming plains,
" He loos'd from Theodamas's plough, the ox,
" And eat it at a meal.

(17) Callimachus in Hymno Dianæ, ver. 159. pag. m. 78.

Athenæus cites ſome verſes of Epicharmus, which expreſs admirably well the voraciouſneſs of this hero.

Πρῶτον μὲν αἶκ' ἔσθοντ' ἰδὴς νιν, ἀπεθάνοις,
Βρέμει μὲν ὁ φάρυγξ ἔνδοθ', ἀραβεῖ δ' ἃ γνάθω,
Ψοφεῖ δ' ὁ γόμφιος, τρίζει γ' ὁ κυνόδων,
Σίζει δὲ ταῖς ῥίνεσσι, κινεῖ δ' ἄλα, τῶν τετραπόδων οὐδὲν ἧττον (18).

(18) Athen. lib. 10. init.

" Should you behold his furious meals, you'd die;
" Hear his jaws craſh, and his ſwollen cheeks reſound;
" The thunder of his grinders, and the roar
" Of his wide noſtrils, ſee his moving ears.

He cites ſome other Poets to prove his poſition, viz. that Hercules was a prodigious great eater, ὅτι ἦν καὶ ὁ Ἡρακλῆς ἀδηφάγος; and does not omit Lepreus's competition. Here follows all he ſays of it.

(7) Idem, ibid.

(8) Ἐκεῖνο δὲ οὐκ ἔστιν ὅπως ἡγήσομαι πιθόν. Ἡρακλέα ἐπὶ τοσοῦτον ὀργῆς ἀνδρὸς φίλου θυγατρὶ ἀφικέσθαι. Idem, ibid.

(9) Liv. 4. cap. 29.

(10) The father of theſe fifty girls is called Theſtius by ſome, and Theſpius by others.

(11) Vigenere, ſur Philoſtrate, tom. 1. pag. 98. edit. in 4to.

(12) Lactant. lib. 1. cap. 9.

which I ſhall relate ſome extraordinary particulars; as alſo of his mighty quaffing [D], for which he was no leſs remarkable. He diſplayed the voraciouſneſs of his appetite, on an occaſion that gave riſe to a very ſingular ceremony, viz. that opprobrious expreſſions were always vented againſt Hercules, all the time that the inhabitants of Lindus were offering up ſacrifices to him [E]. Some, from the ſtrong love which Hercules had for wine Lepreus challenged Hercules to a gluttonous contеſt, and was overcome. Εἰσάγεται δὲ ὁ Ἡρακλῆς καὶ Λεπρεῖ περὶ πολυφαγίας ἐρίζων ἐκείνῳ προκαλεσαμένῳ, καὶ νενίκηκε (19). i. e. "Hercules is brought in contending "with Lepreus, who had challenged him, for the "prize of gluttony, on which occaſion Hercules came "off victorious." Zenodotus relates, that Hercules had put in chains Lepreus, grandſon to Neptune, after having cleanſed the Augean ſtables: He ſet him at liberty after he had ended his labours, and then had three conteſts with him. They play'd at Quoits, they ſtrove who ſhould pump water with the greateſt vigour, and who ſhould have the ſooneſt devoured an ox. Hercules came off victorious on all theſe occaſions. At laſt Lepreus being intoxicated with liquour, challenged Hercules anew, and was killed by him. Others relate, that they did not diſpute who ſhould eat moſt, but who ſhould drink moſt; and that Hercules was victorious over Lepreus (20). Others pretend that their conteſt was, who ſhould ſooneſt eat up a bull, and who ſhould drink moſt (21). I ſhall relate ſome other particulars in the remark [H].

(19) Idem, ibid.

(20) Matris in Herculis Laudatione. Caucalus, Rhetor Chius, frater Theopompi Hiſtoriographi in Herculis Laudatione, apud Ath. ibid.

(21) Ælian. Var. Hiſt. lib. 1. cap. 24.

[D] His mighty quaffing.] To be convinced of this, we need but conſider the prodigious ſize of his goblet, which required two men to carry it; but as to himſelf, he wanted but one hand, in order to lift it up, and drink it off.

Huic pretium palmæ gemini cratera ferebant
Herculeum juvenes. Illum Tyrinthius olim
Ferre manu ſola, ſpumantemque ore ſupino
Vertere ſeu monſtri victor, ſeu marte ſolebat (22).

(22) Statius, Theb. lib. 6. ver. 531.

"The prize, a mighty goblet, by two youths
"Aloſt was held; and Hercules of old,
"With eaſe oft carried it, with but one hand;
"And, from the field or labours when return'd,
"Could drink it off, tho' running o'er the brim.

It appears by the Hiſtory of Alexander the Great, that in feaſts in which the gueſts quaffed in an extraordinary manner, they all drank off a mighty cup, called the cup of Hercules. It was reſerved for the cloſe, as may be inferred from Alexander's not having drunk it, when he was taken ſick at table. Nondum Herculis Scypho epoto repente velut telo confixus ingemuit (23), during a feaſt in which he before had drunk very copiouſly. Others ſay he had drunk it, and that it proved his fatal doſe. Alexandrum . . . intemperantia bibendi atque ille Herculeanus & fatalis ſcyphus condidit (24). Diodorus Siculus relates, that Alexander having quaffed a great quantity, at laſt emptied Hercules's cup, and immediately fell into a ſwoon (25). To reconcile theſe ſeveral variations, I believe it muſt be ſuppoſed that the Monarch in queſtion was ſtruck as he was drinking off this cup, and before he had drunk it off. The Hiſtorian in queſtion obſerves, that this cup of Hercules was of a vaſt ſize. But what can be more expreſs, with regard to this ſubject, than the following words of Macrobius? Scyphus Herculis poculum eſt, ita ut Liberi patris cantharus: Herculem vero pictores veteres, non ſine cauſa cum poculo fecerunt & nonnunquam caſabundum & ebrium, non ſolum quod is heros bibax fuiſſe perhibetur, ſed etiam quod antiqua hiſtoria eſt Herculem poculo tanquam navigio ventis immenſa maria tranſiſſe. Sed de utraque re pauca ex Græcis antiquitatibus dicam, & multibibum Heroa iſtum fuiſſe, ut taceam quæ vulgo nota ſunt, illud non obſcurum argumentum eſt, quod Ephippus in Buſiride inducit Herculem ſic loquentem, &c. (26). i. e. "Hercules's cup is the ſcyphus, as "the cantharus is that of Bacchus. It was not with"out reaſon that the antient Sculptors repreſented Her"cules holding a cup, and ſometimes reeling and "drunk; not only becauſe the hero in queſtion is "ſaid to have been a quaffer, but alſo becauſe we are "told in antient Hiſtory, that Hercules ſailed over "boundleſs ſeas in a cup, as though it had been a "ſhip. But I will preſent my readers with a few "particulars concerning both, from the Greek an"tiquities. With regard to Hercules's being a "mighty quaffer, not to mention what is commonly "known, we have no ill proof of this, where Ephip"pus, in his Buſiris, introduces Hercules ſpeaking as "follows, &c." Athenæus ſeems to denote the capaciouſneſs of this cup, he ſaying (27), that that which killed Alexander, held two congiarii or gallons. We learn a very remarkable particular from Steſichorus the Poet. He ſays that Pholus drunk a health to Hercules in a pitcher holding twenty four pints. Centaurorum & Lapitharum convivium deſcribens (Steſichorus) ait Pholum (quem propterea hoſpitem Alcidæ nuncupat Lucanus) impleviſſe Herculi craterem trium lagenarum capacem, quem prior ipſe obbibiſſet: amplum autem fuiſſe oportuit, qui urnam, hoc eſt, quatuor & viginti ſextarios caperet (28). He drank it off firſt, and was pledged a moment after by Hercules.

(23) Q. Curt. lib. 10. cap. 4. num. 18. edit. Freinſhem. See alſo Plutarch in Alexandro, ſub fin.

(24) Seneca, Epiſt. 83.

(25) Diod. Sic. lib. 17. cap. 117.

(26) Macrob. Saturn. lib. 5. cap. 21. See Dempſterus in Roſinum, lib. 5. cap. 30. pag. m. 856.

(27) Lib. 10. cap. 9. pag. 434.

(28) Hadrian, Junius, Animadverſ. lib. 4. cap. 5. pag. m. 410.

Σκυφίον δὲ λαβὼν ὀίπας ἔμμιτρον ὡς τριλάγυνον
Πῖν ἐπισχόμενος, τὸ ῥά οἱ παρέθηκε Φόλος κεφάσας (29).

(29) Apud Hadrian. Junium, ibid.

Hercules (de eo enim loquitur) acceptum in manus ſcyphum plenum, trium lagenarum capacem, ori admovens obbibit, quem Pholus ipſi infuderat.

"He took the mighty cup, which Pholus fill'd
"With three Lagenæ, and at once quaff'd off
"The glorious bumper."

Athenæus explains after a very probable manner, the reaſon, why the Poets feigned that Hercules croſſed the ſea in a cup. This fiction, ſays he, in all probability took its riſe, from the pleaſure this hero took in drinking out of large glaſſes, Μάλιστα μεγάλοις ἔχαιρε πολλοῖς ὁ ἥρως, διὰ τὸ μέγεθος παίζοντες οἱ ποιηταὶ [καὶ συγγραφεῖς] πλεῖν αὐτὸν ἐν ποτηρίῳ ἐμυθολόγησαν (30). Poculis fortaſſe quia heros amplis gaudebat, per jocum ſcriptores, ac Poëtæ, eum in poculo navigaſſe fabulati ſunt; for he was a mighty drinker: Ὅτι δὲ εἷς ἦν ὁ Ἡρακλῆς τῶν πλείστων πινόντων προείπομεν (31). Bibacem inter alios Herculem fuiſſe antea nos memoravimus.

(30) Athen. lib. 11. pag. 496.

(31) Idem, ibid.

[E] Opprobrious expreſſions were always vented againſt Hercules, all the time that the inhabitants of Lindus were offering up ſacrifices to him.] I related above, that Hercules eat up an ox which he had taken from a peaſant; but I ſhall add here, that the peaſant, all the time he was devouring the animal, vented the moſt opprobrious expreſſions againſt him, which was only a diverſion to Hercules; ſo that when an altar was erected to his honour, he would have this peaſant to be his prieſt, and commanded him to repeat the ſame curſes, every time that ſacrifices ſhould be offered up to him; for, did he uſe to ſay, I never in my life eat with a better appetite. Lactantius relates this incident at large. Apud Lindum, quod eſt oppidum Rhodi, Herculis ſacra ſunt, quorum à cæteris longe diverſus eſt ritus. Si quidem non εὐφημία, ut Græci appellant, ſed maledictis, & execratione celebrantur, eaque pro violatis habent, ſi quando inter ſolemnes ritus vel imprudenti alicui exciderit bonum verbum. Cujus rei hæc ratio redditur, ſi tamen ulla eſſe ratio in rebus vaniſſimis poteſt. Hercules, cum eo delatus eſſet, famemque pateretur, aratorem quendam aſpexit operantem, ab eoque petere cæpit, ut ſibi unum bovem venderet. Ille negavit fieri poſſe, quia ſpes ſua omnis colendæ terræ duobus illis jumentis niteretur. Hercules ſolita violentia uſus, quia unum accipere non potuit, utrumque ſuſtulit. At ille infelix, cum boves ſuos mactari videret, injuriam ſuam maledictis ultus eſt, quod homini eleganti & urbano gratiſſimum fuit. Nam dum comitibus ſuis epulas apparat, dumque alienos boves devorat, illum ſibi amariſſime conviciantem, cum riſu, & cachinnis audiebat. Sed poſtquam Herculi divinos honores ob admirationem virtutis deferri placuit, à civibus ei ara poſita eſt, quam de facto βούζυγον, id eſt bovis jugum nominavit; ad quam duo juncti boves immolarentur, ſicut illi, quos abſtulerat aratori, wine and women, have denied his atchieving the noble exploits aſcribed to him [F]. A very particular circumſtance is told concerning the greedineſs with which he devoured his victuals, it being ſaid, that the motion on theſe occaſions made his ears move (b). This is a very rare and uncommon thing [G]. I fancy it is a miſtake to aſſert, that Hercules aratori, eumque ipſum ſibi conſtituit Sacerdotem, ac præcepit, ut iiſdem maledictis ſemper in celebrandis ſacrificiis uteretur, quod negaret, ſe unquam epulatum eſſe jucundius (32). i. e. "In Lindus, a city of Rhodes, there "are offered up, to Hercules, rites which differ greatly "from thoſe uſed in other places. For theſe rites are "not performed with praiſes, but with curſes; and "they would be thought to be profaned, ſhould a "good or virtuous word ſlip inadvertently from any "perſon who was preſent at the ſolemnity, for which "the reaſon is given, if there can be any reaſon in "ſuch trifling practices. Hercules, as it is related, "coming that way, was hungry, when ſeeing a "countryman ploughing, he deſired him to ſell him "an ox. The countryman replied, that he could not "oblige him on that occaſion, becauſe thoſe oxen "were the only cattle he had to plough with. Her"cules employing his uſual violence, ſince he could "not be favoured with one ox, took them both a"way. The unhappy peaſant, ſeeing his oxen "ſlaughtered, took his revenge by curſes, which were "exceedingly pleaſing to the elegant and polite Her"cules; for whilſt he was preparing this entertain"ment for his companions, and was devouring the "cattle which did not belong to him, he laughed "at, and ridiculed the ill-fated owner, who was "curſing him in a moſt bitter manner. But when "it was afterwards judged proper, in admiration of "the virtues which Hercules poſſeſſed, to pay him di"vine honours, the inhabitants of that city erected "two altars to him, which he, from the action itſelf, "called the yoke of oxen. Here two yoked oxen "were to be offered, as were thoſe which he forced "from the peaſant, whom he conſtituted his prieſt; "and commanded him to employ always the ſame "kind of curſes in ſolemnizing the ſacrifices, Her"cules declaring that he had never in his life feaſted "with greater delight."

(b) See the remark [C].

(32) Lactant. lib. 1. cap. 21. pag. m. 70. See alſo Conon, apud Photium, pag. 429.

[F] Some have denied his atchieving the noble exploits aſcribed to him.] Meglacides in Athenæus, cenſures the Poets who came after Homer and Heſiod, for their ſaying that Hercules had commanded armies and taken cities, ſince it is certain that he led a very voluptuous life, having ſeveral lawful wives, and getting a very great number of young women with child clandeſtinely, Ὃς μετ' ἡδονῆς πολείσης τὸν μετ' ἀνθρώπῳ βίον διετέλεσε πολίσας μὲν γυναῖκας γήμας, ἐκ πολίσων δὲ λάθρα παρθένων παιδοποιησάμενος. Cum maximè voluptariam inter homines vitam egerit, plurimarum uxorum maritus, & puellis quam multis compreſſis, è quibus ſuſcepit liberos (33). Beſides, he was a great lover of good eating and drinking; ſo that after his example, thoſe who offered libations to him, quite emptied the glaſſes, and did not leave ſo much as a drop. Other proofs were brought (34) of his ſoftneſs and effeminacy; and it was pretended that Steſichorus firſt armed him with a club, a bow, and a lyon's ſkin. We meet with one particular in Eraſmus, which ſtrongly oppoſes the tradition concerning Hercules's effeminacy. It is in the explication of the proverb, beware of the man with the black buttocks (35). Eraſmus tells us, that a mother gave this caution to her two ſons, who were unlucky rogues. They were for attacking Hercules as he was ſleeping under a tree; but he awaked, and tied them to his club (36), and threw them over his ſhoulders with their heads downward. By this poſture they diſcovered that Hercules's back was very hairy, and that the hair was very black and thick; a circumſtance which made them call to mind their mother's caution, and forced a laugh from them. Hercules being told what they laughed at, gave them their liberty. The words of Eraſmus which I am to cite are theſe. Melampygus Græcis ſignificat eum qui nigro ſit podice: quo quidem cognomento notatus eſt Hercules quod eam corporis partem, non Lydorum more vulſam, neque candidam (quemadmodum effœminati ſolent) ſed nigris pilis hirſutam ac ſylvoſam haberet. Nam Græci quemadmodum molles & imbelles, fractoſque deliciis, τυγάργυς καὶ λευκοπύγυς appellant; itidem è diverſo fortes ac ſtrenuos, μελαμπύγυς vocare conſueverunt, ut author eſt Lycophronis interpres. i. e. "Melampygus ſignifies, among "the Greeks, one who has black buttocks, which "ſirname was given to Hercules, becauſe that part of "his body was rough and ſhaggy, with black hair, "and not ſhaved after the manner of the Lydians, "nor white as effeminate people are. For as the "Greeks call'd the effeminate and weak, and ſuch as "immerſed themſelves in luxury white-breech'd: ſo, "on the contrary, they commonly gave the name of "black-breech'd to the valiant and ſtrong, as we are "told by the interpreter of Lycophron." See Suidas under the article μελαμπύγυ τύχοις, in Melampygum incidas. See alſo Apoſtolius, Zenobius, Diogenianus, in their collections of proverbs.

(33) Athen. lib. 12. cap. 1. pag. 512.

(34) Idem, ibid.

(35) Μὴ τῷ μελαμπύγῳ περιτύχοις. It is the 43d proverb of Century 1. of the ſecond Chiliad in Eraſmus.

(36) See Moreri under the word Acbemon.

[G] This is a very rare and uncommon thing.] The Journal of the Academia Naturæ curioſorum (37) mention a maiden whoſe ears moved. The author of Nouvelles de la republique des Lettres, giving the extract of this Journal, obſerved (38) that there was no room to doubt of this ſingular particular, after what Abbé de Marolles atteſts concerning Craſſot the Philoſopher, pag. 32 of his Memoirs. "He very much reſembled, "ſays he, the portraits of thoſe Cynical Philoſophers, "which are found in the cabinets of the curious, he "being ſlovenly like them; having a long and buſhy "beard, and his hair neglected and uncombed. There "was one thing very peculiar in him, which I never "ſaw in any other perſon; and this was, he could "move his ears up and down without touching them." Peter Meſſie relates in the 24th chapter of part I, that St. Auſtin had ſeen (29) a man, who not only mov'd his ears at pleaſure, but alſo his hair, without making the leaſt motion either with his hands or head. Give me leave to join to this ſome collections which bear a relation to it. I ſhall begin with a pretty long paſſage from Caſaubon (40). Iſtud planè communi hominum naturæ contrarium eſt; quibus [ſolis (41) ex omnibus animantibus (niſi forte ſimias excipias)] dedit aureis ἡ πολυποίκιλος τῆ ΘΕΟΥ ſοφία moveri ſuapte ſponte neſcias. [Nam quod ſcribit Martialis, Cinnæ cuidam natum filium auribus longis Quæ ſic moventur ut ſolent Aſellorum: poetica ſine dubio licentia eſt, non rei veritas.] Narrat tamen Euſtathius ſacerdotem fuiſſe quendam aureis motitantem. Accepimus etiam à viris fide dignis, viſas manifeſto aures movere viro cuidam eruditiſſimo (42) cum Allobrogum fides tranſiens, vivicomburii periculum ſibi à magiſtratu imminere intellexiſſet, quod diceretur nefandi criminis reus Toloſa in Italiam fugere. i. e. "This in"terferes directly with the common nature of men, "to whom only of all animals, unleſs apes ought to be "excepted, Heaven has given ears which move of "themſelves. For what we find in Martial concern"ing the ſon of one Cinna, who had long ears which "moved like thoſe of aſſes, it is doubtleſs a poetical "fiction, and not a true incident. Nevertheleſs Euſta"thius tells us that a certain Prieſt moved his ears. I "have alſo been told by perſons worthy of credit, that "the ears of a certain man of learning were plainly "ſeen to move, when travelling by the borders of "Savoy, he found that he was in danger of being burnt "alive by the magiſtrate, on its being reported that "he was flying into Italy from Thouloufe, becauſe "he had perpetrated a heinous crime." Since Caſaubon does not doubt the truth of Euſtathius's report, nor what had been told him concerning the learned man who had fled from Thouloufe, why does he doubt what relates to Cinna's child, in the 39th epigram of the 6th book of Martial? He would have leſs doubted it had he taken notice, not only of what St. Auſtin relates in Chap. XXIV, Book XIV, De civitate Dei: ſunt qui & aures moveant vel ſingulas vel ambas ſimul. i. e. "Some people move their ears either "ſingly or together:" but alſo what is atteſted by Veſalius. This great anatomiſt affirms (43), that he ſaw, in Padua, two men whoſe ears moved. He explains the cauſe of this motion in another place. Interdum, ſays he (44), quibuſdam raris fibris carnalis membrana quam carnoſam vocamus ſupra aures augetur, & modice auri

(37) In the volume for anno 1685.

(38) Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, for September 1686, pag. 1021.

(39) St. Auſtin's words, cited below, do not denote that he had ſeen this, and therefore Father Hardouin in Plin. lib. 11. pag. 543. ſhould not have ſaid, quæ vidit Auguſtinus.

(40) Caſaubon, in Athen. lib. 10. cap. 1. pag. 702.

(41) This is extracted from Ariſtotle, μόνον ἀνθρωπος οὖς οὐ κινεῖ, ſays he, lib. 1. Hiſt. Animal. cap. 9. Pliny in like manner, Aures homini tantum immobiles, lib. 11. cap. 37.

(42) It is a little probable, that Anthony Muretus is hinted at here.

(43) De humani Corporis Fabrica, lib. 2. cap. 13. apud Coquæum, Not. in Auguſt. de Civitat. Dei, lib. 14. cap. 24.

(44) Ibid. cap. 17. apud eundem Coquæum, ibid.

Hercules would be drawn in this attitude, in one of his moſt famous portraits [H]. It is falſe to aſſert, that his club was in a chapel at Rome [I], and that it drove away from thence auri proximam cutem, & ipſam quoque aurem motu agit arbitrio. i. e. " Sometimes by means of certain " delicate fibres, the fleſhy membrane, call'd by us " Carnoſa, is ſtretched above the ears, and gives the " ſkin next the ear, and the ear itſelf, an arbitrary " motion. Du Laurent affirms, that he had ſeen ſome perſons, who gave motion to their ears (45). Valverdus ſaw a Spaniard do the ſame in Rome (46). Procopius compares Juſtinian " to an aſs, not only on ac- " count of his dulneſs and ſtupidity, but likewiſe be- " cauſe of his ſelf-moving ears, whence he was called, " in a full theatre, γαύδων, that is to ſay, word for " word, maſter-aſs, by thoſe of the green faction or " Praſini, to which he was an enemy." I read theſe words in la Mothe le Vayer, pag. 134 of tom. 3 in 12mo. He cites pag. 36 of Procopius's ſecret Hiſtory.

(45) Laurent. lib. 11. Hiſt. Anat. cap. 12. apud eundem, ibid. I have verified this paſſage.

(46) Valverdus, lib. 2. Anatomes Corporis Humani, cap. 2. apud eundem, ibid. I correct Coquæus, who calls him Valvardus.

[H] It is aſſerted that Hercules would be drawn in this attitude in one of his moſt famous portraits.] This is told by Coſtar, in his Dialogues. Here follows the ſequel of what he there ſays concerning Hercules. In the Anthologia a peaſant " highly applauds Mercury's moderation, " for being ſatisfied with milk and fruits; and com- " plains againſt Hercules, for requiring a conſiderable " number of ſheep and oxen in ſacrifice. And being " told; But this God preſerves your flocks ſo well. " What difference is there, replied he, whether my " flocks are devoured by wolves, or by their keeper?"

(47) Entretiens de Voiture & de Coſtar, pag. 32.

---- Τί τὸ πλέον εἰ τὸ φυλακτέν
Ὄλλυται ὑπὸ λύκων ἢ ὑπὸ τοῦ φυλακός (47).

Voiture thus anſwers Coſtar. " It is true indeed that " Hercules eat gladly of ſheep, and devoured a great " number of them. The Argonauts in their voyage " to Colchos, put him aſhore on an iſland. Many " pleaſant reaſons are given for this: ſome ſay that " it was becauſe he broke all the oars as he rowed; " others, becauſe he was too weighty: ſome, becauſe " the Argonauts were afraid that he alone would carry " away all the glory; and others again becauſe he eat " too much. I remember to have read in a Greek " Poet (that is to ſay Greek and Latin) that he moved " his ears as he eat, &c. (48)." Coſtar anſwering his friend, ſays to him that Hercules eat like a Devil, and that, according to Athenæus, ... he had an ox at every meal. He cites Philoſtratus in his picture of Theodamas. We there find the following words according to Vigenere's verſion, page 906 of vol. I. " You per- " haps found it in Pindar, where having fought in " Coronus's hovel, he eat up an ox ſo compleatly, " that he did not even think, that the bones ought to " be left." Coſtar cites alſo Lactantius, in chapter 21 (50) of the Chriſtian Inſtitution. It is to inform his friend of the ceremony of the execrations which were vented by the Lyndians, when they offered up their ſacrifices to Hercules. He tells him, that in " this caſe Hercules was of the ſame humour with " fortune, which is never had in ſo much honour as " when ſhe is reviled; and that ſhe is accuſed of oc- " caſioning all the changes and diſorders which hap- " pen in the world, cum convitiis colitur, this is an ex- " preſſion of Pliny's (51)." He adds that this " Beef- " eater (for thus he was ſirnamed βοφάγος and βο- " τοίνης) was ſo renowned for his voraciouſneſs, that " the antients conſecrated to him a bird call'd by them " glutton; it is that which is called in French " Foulque, in Latin Gavia or Furica, and in Greek " λάρος." One might ſay of him, continues he, as Martial ſays of Tucca, viz. that he was not ſatisfied with being a glutton, but would have every one know, and ſpeak of it.

(48) Ibid. pag. 38.

(49) Ibid. pag. 55.

(50) He ſhould have added of book 1. Beſides, this work of Lactantius is not intitled, Chriſtian Inſtitution, but Divinæ Inſtituti-ones. Vigenere miſled Coſtar.

(51) Theſe words of Pliny are in chap. 7. of book 2. but they do not ſignify, that Fortune is never ſo much honoured as when ſhe is exclaimed againſt.

Non eſt Tucca ſatis, quòd es guloſus,
Et dici cupis, & cupis videri (52).

(52) Martial, lib. 12. Epig. 41.

And indeed, he once revealed himſelf to Parrhaſius the painter, in the ſame ſtate he was in, when his ears moved; and he would be painted in the ſame attitude in which Theodamas had ſeen him. He cites, with regard to this apparition, the twelfth book of Athenæus; and obſerves that in Pliny, lib. 35, cap. 10, one Demon, an Athenian painter, boaſts his having painted Hercules in the city of Lindus, exactly as he had ſeen him in his ſlumbers. He carried this boaſting ſo far, as to put it into the inſcription of the picture Οἷος δ' ἐννύχιον φανλάζετο πολλάκι φοιτῶν Παῤῥασίῳ δι' ὕπνυ, τοῖος ὅ δ' ἐστὶν ὁρᾶν. Qualem noctu videntur ſe objiciebat dormienti Parrhaſio, talem hic videre licet (53); but it does not follow from thence, that he aſcribes to Hercules that ſelf motion of the ears mentioned by Coſtar. is a ſtrange boldneſs to affirm, 1ſt, that we find in Athenæus that Hercules appeared to Parrhaſius in the ſame ſtate he was in when his ears moved; 2dly, that Theodamas had ſeen Hercules in that very attitude; but theſe two errors are inconſiderable in compariſon of the blunder I ſhall here take notice of. Here follow Pliny's words. Pinxit Demon Athenienſium, argumento quoque ingenioſo. Volebat namque varium, iracundum, injuſtum, inconſtantem; eundem exorabilem, clementem, miſericordem, excelſum, glorioſum, humilem, ferocem, fugacemque, & omnia pariter oſtendere Idem pinxit Theſea, ... & in una tabula quæ eſt Rhodi, Meleagrum, Herculem, Perſea (54). i. e. " He painted the people " of Athens, and that after a very ingenious man- " ner; for he drew them fickle, paſſionate, unjuſt, " and inconſtant; and, at the ſame time, exorable, " merciful, haughty, humble, fierce and cowardly, " The painter in queſtion drew likewiſe Theſeus, ... " and in one picture, which is in Rhodes, Meleager, " Hercules, and Perſeus." Pliny here enumerates the works of Parrhaſius; the word Demon ſignifies the people of Athens, whoſe oppoſite paſſions Parrhaſius had repreſented after an ingenious manner. Here Coſtar metamorphoſes this picture of Parrhaſius into a painter: and pretends that this chimerical painter aſcribed to himſelf the picture of Hercules, where that hero moved his ears. But this is a new blunder; for ſuppoſing Demon to be a Painter, no other picture could be aſcribed to him but that picture, which was at Rhodes, viz. the picture where Meleager, Hercules, and Perſeus had been painted, and which Pliny diſtinguiſhes plainly from the Hercules that was in Lindus, which was exhibited agreeable to the painter's dream; & Herculem, qui eſt Lindi, talem à ſe pictum, qualem ſæpe in quiete vidiſſet (55). But if we are for aſcribing the Hercules of Lindus to the pretended Demon, we muſt alſo aſcribe to him the greateſt part of Parrhaſius's pictures.

(53) Athen. lib. 11. pag. 544.

(54) Plin. lib. 35. cap. 10. pag. m. 202.

(55) Idem, ibid. pag. 204.

[I] It is falſe to aſſert, that his club was in a chapel at Rome.] A famous proteſtant divine has writ as follows (56). You ſhall frequently hear in our Temples Atheiſm and Error combatted and trampled on: Thoſe Peſts are drove from them by the odour of the word of God, which is there preached in its purity; as anti- ently, in Rome, Hercules's Club uſed to drive out Dogs and Flies from the chapel where it was. He quotes the ſecond chapter of Solinus, where nothing like this is found; but here follows what he ſays in Chapter I. Hoc ſacellum Herculi in boario foro eſt, in quo argumenta & convivii & majeſtatis ipſius remanent. Nam divinitus illò neque canibus neque muſcis ingreſſus eſt. Etenim cum viſcerationem ſacricolis daret, Myiagrum deum dicitur imprecatus, clavam vero in aditu reliquiſſe, cujus olfactum refugerint canes: id uſque nunc durat: i. e. " This little Temple dedicated to Hercules, ſtands in " the Forum Boarium, and proofs ſtill exiſt in it both " of the ſacrifices and majeſty of the God; for by " his divine power neither dogs nor flies enter it, and " when he gave the bowels to the prieſt, it is ſaid " that he prayed to the God Myiagrus, and left " in the entry his Club, the ſmell whereof drove a- " way Dogs; and this continues to this preſent time." It is plain Solinus does not affirm that Hercules's Club was ſtill there; he ſaying only, that Hercules had left it in the entry of that place, where he gave the prieſts an entertainment after the ſacrifice; and that the ſmell of this Club drove away Dogs. Such was the effect the Club had; but as to the Flies, they were not repulſed by the Club, but by the prayers which Hercules offered up to the God Myiagrus. What was obſerved on this occaſion, viz. that the Flies and Dogs kept at a diſtance from that place, continued in the whole ſeries of ſucceeding ages. This is what Solinus ſays; but it was not neceſſary that the Club ſhould be preſerved in the chapel, nor does Solinus ſay ſo. If the incident abovementioned related by the proteſtant Miniſter had been true, this Club might have been ranked among the Taliſmans; and be thence dogs and flies; and it is a ſtill falſer aſſertion to maintain, that he ſet up pillars at the Cape called Fineſterre [K], and there lodged a mirror or looking-glaſs which had an aſtoniſhing property [L]. Some writers ſay, that he lived but till fifty years of age; and that he then conſumed himſelf in the flames, becauſe he no longer had ſtrength to bend his bow [M]. He was the laſt child that Jupiter had by any mortal woman [N].

(56) Sam. Des Marets, Eſchantillon des Maximes du Clergé Romain és Provinces unies, pag. 59.

It

compared to the Fly, which we are told, is engraved on the Door of the Shambles in Toledo, and which keeps flies at a diſtance from them. Since we are upon this ſubject, I ſhall relate a particular which I read in a modern writer (57), viz. that in Miſitra, dogs never go into the Turkiſh Moſques, nor the Churches of the Chriſtians. This the Turks explain by a miracle with regard to themſelves, and by a natural reaſon with reſpect to the Greeks. Guillet's words are as follow:

(57) Guillet, Lacedemone ancienne & nouvelle, pag. 232. Dutch edit.

Dogs that never go into Churches.

"The Turks ſpeak of the diſcretion of theſe dogs, "as of ſomething miraculous. Theſe animals ſometimes ſlip into private houſes, when they find the "doors of them open; but as to the Moſques, they need "not be ſhut at all, for the dogs never enter them. "The Turks take an occaſion from hence to make "a wonder of it; and call that a miraculous reſpect, "which is only an imitation of the young Dogs, "who have ever ſeen the oldeſt keep at a diſtance "from the doors of Moſques, where, in all probability, they had been heartily drubbed by the firſt "Turkiſh inhabitants to make them keep away from "them for ever. Neither are Dogs to be ſeen in the "Churches of the Greeks; but this is not looked "upon as ſtrange by the Turks, who give a reaſon "for it, which, to me, appears probable enough. "I before obſerved, that when the Greek Schiſmaticks go into their Churches, they make ſo profound "a bow, that their hands touch the Ground. The "Turks ſay, that the Dogs ſeeing them ſtoop their "hands ſo low, imagine that it is in order to take "up ſtones, and to throw at their heads; and that "the fear of this keeps them at a diſtance from the "Churches."

To return to Hercules's Club, I ſay that a great miracle was related concerning it, viz. that being fixed in the Ground, it had taken root, and ſhot up into a tree. Πρὸς τούτῳ τῷ ἀγάλματι τὸ ῥόπαλον θεῖναί φασιν Ἡρακλέας καὶ (ἦν γὰρ κοτίνου) τοῦτο μὲν (ὅτῳ πιστά) ἐνέφυ τῇ γῇ καὶ ἀνεβλάστησεν αὖθις. Ei clavam ab Hercule dedicatam perhibent, factam ex oleaſtro. Quod adjiciunt miraculum, haud ſcio an cuiquam fide dignum videri poſſit, eam clavam radicibus actis regerminaſſe (58). I add, that 'twas the Trœzenians who related this incident. They had the ſtatue of Mercurius Polygius, to which Hercules had conſecrated his Club. It is univerſally known that it was of the wood of the olive-tree; and Pauſanias ſays, that this tree, whence it was taken, was ſtill ſhewn, which Hercules found near the fen called Saronis (59). Here is an article proper for a writer who would undertake a collection of hiſtorical parallels, with reſpect to certain ſtories told by Heathens as well as Chriſtians; for we find by travellers, that at the gate of the old fortreſs of Smyrna, there is a great wild cherry-tree, which the Greeks of that country declare to have been the ſtaff of St. Polycarp, firſt biſhop of Smyrna, which the inſtant after it was fixed in the ground, ſhot forth branches (60).

(58) Pauſan. lib. 2. pag. 74.

(59) Ibid.

(60) Spon, Voyage de Greece, tom. 1. pag. 232. Dutch edit.

(K) . . . nor that he ſet up Pillars at the cape called Fineſterre.] The fiction with regard to the foundation of Corrunna, which I ſhall ſpeak of in the following remark, has made ſome learned men conclude, that Hercules had ſet up pillars in that place. Paul Jovius fell into this error, for which he was cenſured as follows by Ludovicus Nonnius. Ab hac fabula perſuaſi nonnulli, credidere arcem Herculis fuiſſe, & alteras columnas ab illo hic fixas, non ſecus ac circa Gades, dictamque urbem hanc Corunna tanquam columnam: quod egregium etymon apud Paulum Jovium, virum aliàs gravem & doctum, tantum valuit, ut ab imperito aliquo Hiſpaniæ antiquitatis perſuaſus, huic opinioni etiam ſubſcriberet, cùm in vita Gonſalvi Ferdinandi d'Aguilar, agens de adventu Regis Philippi I. in Hiſpaniam, ita ſcriberet: Nec diu Philippus amicorum ſuorum ſtudia, votaque fruſtratus, ut ſua regna ex arbitrio adminiſtranda ſuſciperet, in Cantabriam Oceano devectus, pervenit in portum, qui vocatur ad Columnas, fortaſſe quòd ibi quoque alteræ Herculis columnæ, ſicuti Gadibus, poſitæ fuerunt, quum eo externo litore terræ Hiſpanicæ finis. Sed opinio hæc infirmiori tibicine fulta quàm ut rationibus convelli mereatur (61). i. e. "This "fiction made ſome people imagine, that it was a caſtle "which had been built by Hercules; that he ſet up "pillars there, as he did near Cales; and that this "city was called Corunna, as it were, Columna or "Pillar. This fine etymology was thought ſo good by "Paul Jovius, in other reſpects a man of learning and "judgment, that being miſled by ſome writer who was "ignorant of the antiquities of Spain, he has given "into it, he writing as follows in the Life of Gonſalvo Ferdinando d'Aguilar, where he ſpeaks of "the arrival of Philip I. in Spain: Nor did Philip long baulk the deſires and wiſhes of his friends, "viz. that he would take the reins of Government into "his own hands. Being arrived in the Bay of Biſcay, "he went on ſhore in the harbour of Columna, which "perhaps had that name, becauſe certain pillars were "ſet up there as at Cales, this being the utmoſt limits of "Spain. But this opinion is ſo weakly grounded, that "it does not deſerve a confutation."

(61) Ludov. Nonnius, in Hiſpania, cap. 54. pag. m. 170.

[L] . . nor that he there lodged a mirror or looking-glaſs, which had an aſtoniſhing property.] Ludovicus Nonnius, after ſaying that the Flavium Brigantium of the antients is the preſent Corunna, adds that the inhabitants inſcribe the foundation of it to Hercules; and ſay, that he built a tower there, wherein he fixed a mirror, that brought the moſt diſtant Ships in ſight. Incolæ ab Hercule conditam referunt, turrimque hic eſſe ab eodem exſtructam, in qua ſpeculum arcana arte fabricatum erat, unde naves vel longiſſimo ſpatio diſtantes contemplari liceret (62). The origin of this fiction is almoſt as ridiculous as the fiction itſelf. In tam ridiculam opinionem vocum ignorantia & antiquitatis imperitia ita lapſi ſunt, nam cum turris illa ſpecula dicatur, ſpeculum illud mirandum ſine opifice ullo confinxere (63.) i. e. "They fell into this ridiculous opinion from their unſkilfulneſs in language and antiquity; for that tower being "called ſpecula in Latin, they raiſed this aſtoniſhing "mirror or ſpeculum without the aſſiſtance of any artiſt."

(62) Idem, ibid. pag. 196.

(63) Idem, ibid.

[M] He then conſumed himſelf in the flames, becauſe he no longer had ſtrength to bend his bow.] Ὡς πυρὶ αὐτὸν ἀνεῖλε μὴ δυνηθεὶς τὸ οἰκεῖον ἐντεῖναι τόξον πεντεκοντούτης γεγώμενος. Ut igne vitam ſibi abſtulerit, quod arcum ſuum intendere non poſſet annos jam natus quinquaginta (64), i. e. "That he burnt himſelf to death, becauſe he could not bend his bow, at fifty years of "age." Some perſons who trifle away their leiſure in ſearching after allegories, imagine that under theſe words the following meaning is ſhadowed, viz. that Hercules finding himſelf no longer able to dally with the fair-ſex, was ſo ſtruck with this dreadful change, that it threw him into the deepeſt melancholy, and made him reſolve to diſpatch himſelf. He would have been more impatient than Milo the wreſtler (65), who only wept when he viewed, in his old age, the weakneſs of his arms, that had been ſo robuſt and vigorous in his youth. In caſe I write the article Penelope, I ſhall ſpeak of theſe hunters after allegories; for they explain in the ſame manner, nemo meo melius arcum tendebat Ulyſſe. i. e. "No man could bend his bow better than my Ulyſſes."

(64) Ptol. Hephæſt. apud Photium, Cod. 190. pag. 472.

(65) See the article ACHILLES citation (128).

[N] He was the laſt child that Jupiter had by any mortal woman.] Diodorus Siculus makes this remark, in order to heighten the glory of Hercules. He ſuppoſes, that Jupiter left off all commerce with the fair ſex, becauſe he would not have his laſt Productions inferior to the preceding ones. In hac ipſa (Alcmena) tandem deſiit, nec cum ulla deinceps mortali rem habere ſobolemque procreare voluit, ne præſtantioribus ſcilicet deteriora ſubſtitueret (66). He therefore was afraid, that the children he ſhould get after Hercules would not come up to him. The younger Pliny ſays a thing (67) which recalls that thought to my memory. It turns on Nerva's dying a little after he adopted Trajan. I have read in Lactantius, a ſtrong raillery, with regard to the greateſt of the Gods ceaſing to beget children. Cum verò dicantur aliqui (Dii) ex aliquibus nati, conſequens eſt, ut ſemper naſcantur ſiquidem aliquando ſunt nati; vel ſi aliquando naſci deſierunt, ſcire nos convenit, cur, aut quando deſierint. Non illepide

(66) Diod. Sicul. lib. 4. cap. 14. See the remark [C] of the article ALCMENA.

(67) Hunc (Nervam) Dii cœlo vindicaverunt, ne quid poſt illud divinum & immortale factum mortale faceret. Plin. in Panegyr. Traj.

Seneca

It was ſaid that he had been three days in a whales's belly [O], and got ſafe and ſound out of it, with the loſs only of his hair. He was adopted, after his death, by Juno; but it is ſaid that he refuſed to be incorporated in the College of the twelve greater Deities [P]. I muſt take ſome notice of the Hercules of Gaul [Q].

One

Seneca in libris moralibus Philoſophiæ. QUID ergo eſt (inquit) quare apud Poëtas ſalaciſſimus Jupiter deſierit liberos tollere? Utrum ſexagenarius factus eſt, & illi lex Papia fibulam impoſuit? an impetravit jus trium liberorum? An tandem illi venit in mentem, Ab alio expectes alteri quod feceris?

Et timet, ne quis ſibi faciat quod ipſe Saturno (68)? i. e. "Since ſome Deities are ſaid to ſpring from others, it "follows, that they ſhould always continue to be born "in caſe they are once ſo; or if at any time "they left off being born, it is proper we ſhould be "informed, why, or when they did this. Seneca "ſays, pleaſantly, in his Ethicks; Wherefore do the "Poets relate that Jupiter, who was ſo very luſtful, "has ceaſed to procreate children? Is it becauſe be"ing now threeſcore, the Lex Papia has check'd his "Proweſs? Or has he obtained the privileges en"joyed by the fathers of three children? Or does "the following proverb occur to him?

Expect to be treated yourſelf as you've treated others?

"and ſo is afraid, leſt any one ſhould ſerve him as he "did Saturn."

(68) Lactant. lib. 1. cap. 16. pag. m. 51, 52.

[O] 'Twas ſaid that he had been three Days in a whale's Belly.] I will borrow the words of Philoſtratus's commentator, to deſcribe that adventure, and the circumſtance that gave occaſion to it. "The Gods "having once upon a time formed a conſpiracy in or"der to impriſon Jupiter their ſovereign, he being "privately told this by Themis, fruſtrated their "plot, and puniſhed them after a different manner. "As to Neptune and Apollo, he ſent them in his in"dignation, to ſerve the maſons who were building the "walls of Ilion; where, having hired themſelves to "Laomedon, after the work was compleated, he indeed "rewarded Apollo with a great number of ſacrifices "and offerings, but did not offer to ſatisfy Neptune. "The God being exaſperated at this, ſent an enor"mouſly large whale, which diſgorging great floods "of water on the country, quite drowned it; and "Laomedon, by the command of the Oracle, to free "himſelf from that calamity, was forced to expoſe "his daughter Heſione, dreſſed in her royal robes, "to this monſter, in order to be devoured by him. "Hercules happening to paſs that way, and being "moved with pity, offered Heſione's father to deliver "her, upon condition that he would give him the "horſes ſprung from an immortal race, which he had "had from Jupiter, for Ganymede, whom he forced "away to Heaven, to ſerve him as cup-bearer. The "terms being approved of, Hercules, armed cap"apee, plunged headlong down the monſter's "throat; whence deſcending to his belly, he re"mained ſhut up three days there, all which he ſpent "in hacking and hewing, till ſuch time as he had "chopt it to pieces. Laomedon refuſing after this to "perform the contract, Hercules returned to Troy "with ſix ſhips filled with ſoldiers, and ſacked that "city; put Laomedon to death; carried off Heſione "priſoner, and preſented her to Telamon, the father "of Ajax, for his having firſt mounted the wall (69)." It is pity that Vigenere ſhould not have cited any author. To ſupply this defect, I will quote a paſſage from Tzetzes, which Mr. Drelincourt communicated to me (70). Τειὸτερον γὰρ τὸ Ἡρακλέα καλεῖ διὰ τὸ ἐν τῷ κήτει τρεῖς ἡμέρας εἶναι ὡς ἑσπέρας καλεῖ Λυκόφρων διὰ τὸ ἀφότιστον καὶ σκοτεινὴν εἶναι τὴν γαστέρα τοῦ θηρίου (71). The Scholiaſt on Homer (72) relates moſt of the particulars, which I have cited from the Commentator on Philoſtratus; and informs us that this ſtory was found in Hellanicus. By the way, Hercules did not come out the ſame way as he went in; he iſſuing at the breach, I mean by the whale's belly. I have not been able to verify whether Natalis Comes has juſtly related what he cites from Andrœtas of Tenedos, with reſpect to the loſs of Hercules's hair (73). Ubi vero cetus acceſſiſſet, hians in ejus os Hercules irruit, ubi cùm per triduum fuiſſet, ceto diſrupto exiit omnibus amiſſis capillis capitis, ut ſcriptum reliquit Andrœtas Tenedius in navigatione Propontidis (74). i. e. "When the whale "approached with open jaws to Hercules, he ruſhed "down his throat, where, when he had ſtaid three "days, the whale burſting, he iſſued out, having "loſt all the hair off his head, as we find it related "by Andrœtas of Tenedos, in his voyage to the Pro"pontis." Lycophron inſinuates plainly, that the heat of the whale's belly occaſioned Hercules's hair to fall off.

(74) Voſſius, de Hiſtor. Græcis, pag. 321. ſays, that this work of Andrœtas is cited by the Scholiaſt. upon Apollonius in lib. 2.

Ἔμπνους δὲ δαιτρὸς ἡπάτων φλοιδύμενον,
Τιτθῶ λίθῃ θ' ἀφλόγοις ἐπ' ἰσχάραις,
Σμήριγγας ἐστέλαξε κωδίας πάλῳ (75).

(75) Lycophron. ver. 35.

Vivus autem diſſector inteſtinorum ambuſtus,
In calido campo, in ollæ focis non ignitis,
Jubas capitis deſtillavit.

[P] He was adopted, after his death, by Juno, but it is ſaid that he refuſed to be incorporated in the College of the twelve greater Deities.] Juno, who had perſecuted him with ſo much violence in his life-time, was greatly inclined to love him when he was dead. This verifies the following lines of Horace.

Diram qui contudit Hydram,
Notaque fatali portenta labore ſubegit,
Comperit invidiam ſupremo fine domari (76).

(76) Horat. Ep. 1. lib. 2. ver. 10.

"He that kill'd Hydra, he deſign'd by fate
"To quell the monſters rais'd by Juno's hate;
"Tho' he, the mighty he, had always try'd,
"Found envy could be vanquiſh'd only when he
"dy'd.

CREECH.

Here follows what we find related by Diodorus Siculus. After that Hercules had been ranked among the Gods, he was adopted by Juno, who was afterwards a kind mother to him. The ceremony of this adoption was as follows. Juno went to bed; when, to imitate a true delivery, ſhe placed Hercules in ſuch a manner, that he fell to the earth from under her petticoats. The barbarians likewiſe obſerved this ceremony in their adoptions, in Diodorus Siculus's time. Hercules was afterwards married to Hebe; but he refuſed the honour which Jupiter would have done him, viz. to aſſociate him into the College of the twelve greater Deities; and he gave this reaſon for his refuſal, viz. that as there was no vacancy in that College, he ought not to enter it; and that it would be very unjuſt to degrade any other Deity, to make room for him (77). Juno had for a long time begun to act as a mother with regard to Hercules; but it was without knowing him. The affair was this. Alcmena, dreading the jealouſy of that Goddeſs, did not dare to own herſelf to be Hercules's mother, and therefore expoſed him in the middle of a field as ſoon as he was born. Minerva and Juno ſoon came that way; and as Minerva was gazing upon this child with admiring eyes, ſhe adviſed Juno to ſuckle it. Juno did ſo; but the child bit her nipple to ſuch a degree, that ſhe felt an intolerable pain, and laid down the child. Minerva then took it up, and carried it to Alcmena, as to a nurſe ſhe would recommend him to (78). A parallel might here be drawn between Moſes and Hercules.

(77) Ex Diod. Sicul. lib. 4. cap. 40.

(78) Ex eodem, ibid. cap. 9.

[Q] I muſt take ſome notice of the Hercules of Gaul.] A modern Author (79) has imitated the Greeks whilſt he refuted them: He has transferred to this Hercules moſt of the actions performed by the other; and has left the Grecian Hercules none but moral conqueſts, that is to ſay, only triumphs over his paſſions. According to this author, the Gallic Hercules built the city Aliſe or Alexia in Gaul (80). He was attacked by Albion King of Great Britain, and by Bergiona, both ſons to Neptune. He defeated them in Provence, by

(79) Audigier, Origine des François, & de leur Empire, Part 1. pag. 225, & ſeq.

(80) Idem, ibid.

(69) Vigenere, in the Summary of Perſeus in Philoſtratus, tom. 1. pag. m. 466.

(70) With ſeveral other particulars relating to the text of this remark.

(71) Tzetzes ad Lycophronem, pag. 13.

(72) In Iliad. lib. 19. ver. 145.

(73) Natalis Comes, Mythol. lib. 8. cap. 3. pag. m. 821.

One of the moſt celebrated Athenian Orators obſerves, that writers took an extreme delight in celebrating the combats and bravery of Hercules; but did not make the leaſt mention of his other qualities, which yet might have furniſhed them with a very noble field. He declares, that that part of the exalted character of Hercules, which they had neglected ſo much, would require an excellent Orator; and that had he thought of drawing it in his youth, he would have ſhewn that this hero had ſurpaſſed all other men, in prudence, in knowledge, and in juſtice, more than in bodily ſtrength. Old age, adds he, does not ſuffer me to attempt this panegyric in that reſpect; I find myſelf too weak to undertake ſo important and copious a ſubject (c). This Orator's remark may make us reflect on the depraved taſte of the mind of man [R]. We may confirm what this great Rhetorician the ſuccour which he received from his father Jupiter, who obſerving that the army of his ſon was unprovided with arrows, diſcharged ſuch a volly of ſtones on the enemy, as quite overpowered them (81). In quo (lapideo campo) Herculem contra Albionem & Bergiona Neptuni liberos dimicantem cum tela defeciſſent, ab invocato Jove adjutum imbre lapidum ferunt, credas pluiſſe, adeo multi paſſim, & latè jacent (82). He was the firſt among the Gauls who went into Italy by the way of the Alps (83). "He there made Umbria "habitable, having formed the river Arno out of "its marſhes. He led the Gallic colonies on the "other ſide of the Pyrenees, where Gerion, King "of Spain, was vanquiſhed . . . . . He died during "this expedition into Spain, where he was honoured "with a magnificent temple which the Tyrians dedicated to him in the city of Gades, where his "bones ſtill exiſted in the time of Pomponius Mela, "who affirms this particular (84)" "His accoutrements were as follow: a quiver hanging at his "back, a club in his right hand, and a bow in his "left; with the face of a bald, wrinkled, ſwarthy "old man, whoſe aſpect was yet venerable; drawing after him a crowd of people, who were bound "with little chains of gold and ſilver, hanging from "his tongue; and though theſe chains were vaſtly "ſlender, yet none of theſe captives endeavoured to "break them; and all, on the contrary, diſcovered "by their air and countenance, that it would have "been a grief to them to be delivered from ſo delightful a captivity, as being vanquiſhed, much more by "the eloquence of the Gallic Hercules, than by the "ſtrength of his arms. Such is the deſcription which "Lucian has given us of him (85)." This deſcription agrees little with what Menage read in ſome book, viz. that our antient Gauls had a great veneration for Hercules, becauſe he was of a MIGHTY STATURE AND STRONG; and having declared, on their being converted to Chriſtianity, that it would be one of their greateſt troubles not to ſee his image any more; they were comforted in being told, that the Chriſtians had a ſaint, who was ſix times as TALL and as STRONG as Hercules (86). (a).

(c) Extracted from Iſocrates, Orat. ad Philippum, p. m. 152.

(81) Ibid. pag. 231.

(82) Pomponius Mela, lib. 2. cap. 5. pag. m. 38, 39.

(83) Audigier, Origine des François, Part 1. pag. 230.

(84) Lib. 3. cap. 6. but Pomponius ſpeaks of the Egyptian Hercules.

(85) Audigier, Origine des François, Part 1. pag. 229.

(86) Suite du Menagiana, pag. 285. Dutch edit.

§ (a) That is, ſix Hercules Alexicaci, in which ſenſe St. Chriſtopher is the Hercules of the French, and in general of all the Roman Catholics, witneſs the fine verſes following, quoted by St. Aldegonde, in his Tableau des differens de la Religion, Tom. II. fol. 136, printed in 1605.

Chriſtophori ſancti faciem quicunque tuetur,
Illa nempe die mala morte non morietur.

"Whoe'er ſhall ſee St. Chriſtopher's bright face,
"The ſtroke of death, that day, he need not fear.

REM. CRIT.] Audigier applies to his hypotheſis, as well as he can, a ſtory related by Diodorus Siculus; viz. that the daughter of a King of Celtæ, proud of her extraordinary ſtature, and her exquiſite beauty, deſpiſed all the ſuitors who addreſſed her in marriage; but when ſhe had ſeen Hercules, ſhe had a violent deſire to have an affair with him, with her father's conſent. Her paſſion was indulged. Hercules had a ſon by her, named Galates (87). The Hiſtorian does not name this daughter, but others pretend that ſhe was called Galatea (88). This ſtory is related differently in the Erotica of Parthenius. We there find, that Hercules, when he was driving Gerion's oxen from Erythia, went through Gaul; and came to the houſe of Bretannus, father to Celtina, who fell ſo violently in love with this hero, that ſtealing Gerion's oxen from him, ſhe could not be prevailed with to reſtore them, but upon condition that he ſhould lie with her. Hercules, as well to recover his oxen, as on account of Celtina's beauty, went in to her, and got a boy, who was called Celtus, and gave his name to the Celtæ. Herodotus (89) relates, that Hercules being in Scythia, laid himſelf on the ground on his lion's ſkin, and fell aſleep. At his waking, he did not ſee his mares; upon which he ſought for them every where; and when he was arrived in Hyleus's country he entered into a cave, where he met with a maid, who had nothing of the human ſhape, but from the head to the girdle; the remainder reſembling a ſerpent. Have you ſeen my mares, ſays he to her? Yes, replied ſhe, I have them in my cuſtody, but will not return them unleſs you will lie with me. Hercules was willing to recover them on that condition; but when the ſport was ended, the girl poſtponed as long as ſhe could the reſtoring him the mares; ſhe having a ſtrong deſire to begin again. At laſt, when ſhe could no longer detain Hercules, he being very deſirous of leaving that place with his mares, ſhe ſpoke thus to him: I kept them for you, and you have rewarded me; for I am now big with three boys, by you. Τὴν δὲ φάναι ἑαυτὴν ἔχειν, καὶ οὐκ ἀποδώσειν ἐκείνῳ πρὶν ἢ οἱ μιχθῆναι, τὸν δὲ Ἡρακλέα μιχθῆναι ἐπὶ τῷ μισθῷ τούτῳ. κείνην τε δὴ ὑπερβαλέσθαι τὴν ἀπόδοσιν τῶν ἵππων, βουλομένην ὡς πλεῖστον χρόνον συνεῖναι τῷ Ἡρακλεῖ. Illamque reſpondiſſe, ſe quidem illas habere: ſed non prius reddituram ei quam cum ipſa coiiſſet: Herculem pro ea mercede cum fœmina concubuiſſe. Sed quum illa differret reddere equas, cupida diutiſſime cum Hercule concumbendi, &c. (90).

(89) Herod. lib. 4. cap. 9.

(90) Herodot. ibid. pag. m. 227, 228.

Audigier pretends (91) that the Celtic Jupiter, the moſt antient of the Jupiters, is the father of our Gallic Hercules; and that all the greater Deities of Greece were firſt known in Gaul (92). This is a very ſtrange pretenſion, but not ſo chimerical as that of the learned Rudbeck (93).

(91) Pag. 228.

(92) Pag. 222.

[R] A remark of Iſocrates may make us reflect on the depraved taſte of the mind of man.] The prudence of Hercules, his philoſophy, his juſtice, were qualities of an infinitely more valuable kind than his bodily ſtrength. Καὶ τῇ φρονήσει καὶ τῇ φιλοσοφίᾳ καὶ τῇ δικαιοσύνῃ, πολὺν διενεγκόντα πάντων τῶν προγεγενημένων, ἢ τῇ ῥώμῃ τῇ τοῦ σώματος. Et prudentia, & literis, & juſtitia plus antecelluiſſe (Herculem) ſuperiorum temporum hominibus omnibus, quam robore corporis (94). And yet the Orators and Poets applauded him only for thoſe actions, which ſtrength had enabled him to perform; and at the ſame time ſuffered the perfections of ſoul to be buried in oblivion. They did thus, as well becauſe they themſelves were more ſtruck with glittering, than with ſolid things; as becauſe they were perſuaded that their auditors and readers would be more ready to applaud the relation of battles, than the deſcription of ſuch virtues as are exerciſed in times of peace. Horace has very well obſerved this, in ſuppoſing that the ſhades or ghoſts liſtned favourably to the poetical compoſitions of Sappho and Alcæus; but that they were more delighted with the latter, becauſe they treated of nothing but wars, ſtate-revolutions, baniſhment, &c. (95).

(93) See Nouv. de la Republique det Lettres, Feb. 1685. pag. 140.

(94) Iſocr. Orat. ad Philippum, pag. m. 152.

(95) Dura navis,
Dura fugæ mala,
Dura belli. Hor. Od. 13. lib. 2.

Utrumque ſacro digna ſilentio
Mirantur Umbræ dicere: ſed MAGIS
Pugnas, & exactos tyrannos
Denſum humeris bibit aure vulgus (96).

(96) Idem, ibid.

(87) Audigier does not cite Diodorus's Work; it is in chap. 24. of Book 5. Hanov. 1611, in 8vo.

(88) Compare with Diodorus Siculus theſe words of Ammianus, Marcellinus, Book 15. cap. 9. Celtas nomine Regis amabilis, & matris ejus vocabulo Galatos dictos.

"With

Rhetorician has obſerved, with regard to the knowledge of this hero; it being well known, that the Antients declared, that there was a very intimate correſpondence between the Muſes and Hercules (d); thence it is that he was ſirnamed Muſagetes, i. e. the companion and conductor of the Muſes; and that thoſe nine Deities were put under his protection, in the temple which Fulvius Nobilior built in his honour [S]. The thought (d) See Paſſerat on Propertius, Eleg. 10. lib. 4.

" With ſilent reverence ghoſts admire
" The wondrous fury of his lyre:
" The vulgar ſhades throng moſt to hear
" Of Kings depos'd, of feats of war,
" And drink them with a greedy ear.

CREECH.

It is to be further obſerved, that ſuch ſubjects as tyrants overthrown, and monſters tamed, in a word, times of confuſion and ſlaughter, give a writer a better opportunity of diſplaying his genius and eloquence, than a life or ſeries of years, led after an uniform manner, and ſpent agreeably to the rules of virtue. An Hiſtorian who has no great events to deſcribe, ſleeps over his work, and makes his readers yawn; but a civil war, two or three conſpiracies, and as many battles, the ſame leaders ſometimes humbled, and at other times exalted; ſuch ſubjects, I ſay, ſharpen his pen, warm his imagination, and always keep his readers in a breath. I am really of opinion, that ſhould he be commanded to write the hiſtory of a peaceable reign, ſuch an one as was not checquered with variety; he would bewail himſelf much after the ſame manner as Caligula did, viz, becauſe there did not happen ſome grievous calamites in his reign. Queri etiam palam de conditione temporum ſuorum ſolebat: quod nullis calamitatibus publicis inſignirentur. Auguſti principatum clade Variana: Tiberii, ruina ſpectaculorum apud Fidenas, memorabilem factum: ſui oblivionem imminere proſperitate rerum. Atque identidem exercituum cædes, famem, peſtilentiam, incendia, hiatum aliquem terræ optabat (97). i. e. " He would often complain pub-
(97) Sueton. in Caligula, cap. 31. " licly of the ſtate of the times in which he lived,
" becauſe they were not made remarkable by ſome pub- " lic calamities; ſaying that the defeat of Varius
" would tranſmit to poſterity the remembrance of Au-
" guſtus's reign; and the falling of the theatre in Fi-
" denæ, the reign of Tiberius; but that he himſelf
" was in danger of being for ever forgot, becauſe of " the felicity of the times in which he lived. He " would frequently wiſh for the ſlaughter of armies,
" for famine, peſtilence, the burning of cities, and
" earthquakes." Deſolations and public calamities are of advantage to an Hiſtorian, and add a luſtre to his writings. He pities, if he be a good man, the illuſtrious veſtal who was buried alive, and abhors the tyrant who, to make his reign the more remarkable, cauſed that Veſtal to be put to death: Cum Corneliam Veſtalium maximam defodere vivam concupiſſet (Domitianus) ut qui illuſtrari ſeculum ſuum ejuſmodi exemplo
(98) Plin. Epiſt. 11. lib. 4. arbitraretur (98; but this melancholy incident is, at the ſame time, of advantage to his pen, it proving an ornament to his books. This work is a kind of ſhip that never ſails better than during ſtorms; a tempeſt is to him a kindly gale; a calm is as unpropitious to him as to a real ſhip; and when an Hiſtorian can begin as Tacitus does, Opus aggredior opimum caſibus, atrox prœliis, diſcors ſeditionibus, ipſâ etiam pace ſævum. Quatuor Principes ferro interempti. Tria bella civilia,
(99) Tacit. Hiſt. lib. 1. cap. 2. plura externa, ac plerumque permixta (99). i. e. " I am " going upon a work that is fruitful in mighty events,
" made cruel by wars, diſcordant by ſeditions, and " dreadful even in peace. Four Monarchs ſlain, three " inteſtine wars, more foreign, and theſe generally
" blended." When, I ſay, he can begin thus, he prejudices his readers in his favour, and is very ſenſible that he has made choice of a favourable ſubject. But ſtill it ſhews a bad taſte, to prefer the relation of warlike actions before an account of ſuch as are equitable; and to admire ſtill more in a man his bodily ſtrength, and the boldneſs whereby he is enabled to defeat a wild boar, or a bull, than that virtue which gives him the maſtery over his paſſions, and prompts him to eſtabliſh good and wholeſome laws among his neighbours. This virtue, though it does not ſhine ſo much as the other, has much more of true grandeur in it; there is more reality in ſuch of Hercules's qualities as writers had taken no notice of, than in thoſe which they ſo pompouſly magnified. But what ſhall we ſay? they comply'd with the taſte of the public. It is to be obſerved that young people take much greater pleaſure in reading romances than true hiſtories; and that after years have ripened them, and matured their judgment, they chooſe to peruſe a Thuanus and a Mezerai, rather than a Calprenede and a Scuderi. But very few perſons loſe the taſte of their younger years, with reſpect to the deſcription of a calm and unruffled reign, and the hiſtory of a reign filled with troubles and mighty events.

[S] The Muſes... were put under his protection in the temple.] This temple was built by Fulvius Nobilior, who had vanquiſhed the Ætolians in the year of Rome 565. He was Conſul at that time. The name of their chief city was Ambracia, which he took; and having found therein the ſtatutes of the nine muſes, he carried them to Rome, where he conſecrated them to the temple which he cauſed to be built in honour of Hercules, and put them under the protection of this God. I am of opinion that we ſhould not have known theſe particulars, had they not been mentioned by an Orator who lived five or ſix centuries after. His words deſerve to be quoted. Ædem Herculis Muſarum in circo Flaminio Fulvius ille Nobilior ex pecunia Cenſoria fecit, non id modo ſecutus, quod ipſe literis & ſumma Poetæ amicitia duceretur, ſed quod in Græcia cum eſſet imperator, acceperat Herculem Muſagetem eſſe, id eſt comitem ducemque Muſarum; idemque primus novem ſigna, hoc eſt omnium Camænarum, ex Ambracienſi oppido tranſlata, ſub tutela fortiſſimi numinis conſecravit, ut res eſt, quâ mutuis operibus & præmiis juvari ornarique deberent; Muſarum quies defenſione Herculis, & virtus Herculis voce Muſarum (100). i. e. " Fulvius Nobilior raiſed a tem-
(100) Eumenius, in Oratione pro ſcholis inſtauran-dis. " ple in honour of Hercules and the Muſes, in the " Circus Flaminius, out of the monies he got amaſſed
" when Cenſor. He was prompted to this, not only
" becauſe he was a great patron of letters and poetry;
" but becauſe he had been informed, whilſt he was " Generaliſſimo in Greece, that Hercules was called " Muſagetes, that is, the companion and leader of the " Muſes. It was he alſo who firſt put the ſtatues
" of the nine Muſes, brought by him from the city
" of Ambracia, under the protection of this moſt
" powerful God. This was very proper, becauſe they " ought to help and adorn each other with recipro-
" cal ſervices and rewards. The Muſes ſhould owe " their tranquillity to the bravery of Hercules, and " Hercules's bravery be ſung by the Muſes. It is juſt in this orator to aſſert, that mighty warriors and the Muſes want one another: it is the buſineſs of the former to procure tranquillity and ſecurity to the Muſes; and it is the duty of theſe to immortalize the illuſtrious actions of heroes by their poems. One might, in conſequence of this orator's notion, apply what follows to our Hercules, viz. that thoſe who atchieve actions worthy of being celebrated by the Poets, are themſelves lovers of verſe (101). It is to be obſerved that Her-
(101) Carmen amat quiſquis carmine digna gerit. cules, according to Statius, was well ſkilled in Muſic.

Dic age, Calliope, ſocius tibi grande ſonabit
Alcides, tenſoque modos imitabitur arcu (102).
The ſenſe is,
" Tune, tune, Calliope, the heavenly lyre,
" With thee, in concert, Hercules ſhall ſing,
" And add his twanging bow.

(102) Statius, Sylv. 1. lib. 3. ver. 50.

Others obſerve that he was ſkilled in aſtrology: Naudæus aſſerts this as certain; but, by his leave, he has diſcovered a little ignorance on this occaſion. It is in that part of his Coup d'Etat, where he ſpeaks of ſome perſons who had employed fraud, in order to obtain the honour of deification. " What Hercules per" formed, ſays he (103), was much more ingenious;
" for being extremely well ſkilled in aſtrology, witneſs
" fables concerning his life, which ſuppoſe him to " carry the heavens together with Atlas, he choſe pre-
" ciſely at the time when a great comet made its ap-
(103) Naudé, Coups d'Eſtat, chap. 2. pag. m. 89.

thought, which Poſidonius employed, to ridicule a paſſage in a tragedy of Æſchylus, was not juſt; and Strabo who cenſured it, did not know wherein the real defect of it conſiſted [T]. This relates to a certain ſhower of ſtones which fell, in order to ſuccour Hercules, whilſt he was engaged in battle againſt the Ligurians.

" pearance, to lay himſelf on the burning pile, where " he would die, in order that this new celeſtial fire " might be preſent as a witneſs, and make mankind " believe what the Romans would perſuade, in after- " ages, the world concerning their Emperors, by " means of an eagle, which uſed to fly out of the " midſt of flames, as though it was going to waft the " ſoul of the deceaſed Monarch into Jupiter's arms." Here we have an author who ſuppoſes that the appearance of comets may be foretold by aſtrology: but he is miſtaken, and has been cenſured for it by his commentator (104).

(104) See the Reflexions de Louis de Mai ſur les Coups d'Eſtat de Naudé, pag. 144.

It is to be obſerved, that the temple, which Fulvius Nobilior had built in honour of Hercules, lay almoſt in ruins in Auguſtus's time; but Lucius Martius Philippus (105) rebuilt it, and added a portico. See Ovid de Faſtis, at the cloſe of the 6th book; and epigram 51 of the 5th book of Martial.

(105) This Philippus was ſecond huſband to Auguſtus's mother.

[T] Strabo, who cenſured a thought of Poſidonius, did not know wherein the real defect of it conſiſted.] Æſchylus ſuppoſes (106), that it was foretold Hercules, that in his combat againſt the Ligurians, he ſhould be deſtitute of arrows, the fates having ſo ordained it, and this in a place where it would not be poſſible for him to get any ſtones; but that, when reduced to this extremity, he would excite the pity of Jupiter, who would waft a cloud filled with ſtones; and that, with theſe he ſhould vanquiſh the Ligurians. Would it not have been infinitely better, ſaid Poſidonius, for Jupiter to hurl theſe ſtones at the Ligurians, and quite deſtroy them, than to reduce Hercules to ſuch a neceſſity? ἢ τοσοῦτον δεόμενον ποιῆσαι λίθον τὸν Ἡρακλέα. Quam ad tot lapidum indigentiam redigere Herculem (107). Strabo has anſwered this cenſure, and ſaid two things; firſt, that a vaſt number of ſtones were required, becauſe the enemy to be fought were very numerous, ſo that, in this reſpect, Æſchylus's thought is more probable than that of his Cenſor. Τὸ μὲν δὴ τοσοῦτον ἀναγκαῖον ἦν, εἴπερ πρὸς πολὺν ὄχλον παμπληθῆ. ὥς τε ταύτῃ γε πιθανώτερος ὁ μυθογράφος τῇ ἀναισχυντίᾳ τὸν μῦθον. At verò tot lapidibus opus erat contra tantam multitudinem; ut hac quidem in parte fabulæ autor probabiliora dixerit, quam fabulæ reprehenſor (108). Secondly, he adds, that as the Poet ſaid expreſly, that this was a thing ordained by fate, it ought to have ſtopped the mouths of all criticks; for ſhould one go about to diſpute on predeſtination and providence, many things would be found both in morality and phyſicks, which might give people occaſion to ſay, that they might have been better ordered in another manner: for inſtance, it would have been better for rain to have fallen in Egypt, than for it to be moiſtened by the waters of Ethiopia; it would have been better, had Paris been ſhipwrecked in his paſſage to Lacedemonia, than to let him carry off Helen; and to puniſh him for it afterwards, to the great detriment of both Greeks and Trojans; a circumſtance which Euripides aſcribes to Jupiter. Καὶ τὸν Πάριν εἰς τὴν Σπάρτην πλέοντα, ναυαγίῳ περιπεσεῖν. ἀλλὰ μὴ τὴν Ἑλένην ἁρπάσαντα, δίκας τίσαι τοῖς ἀδικηθεῖσιν ὕστερον, ἡνίκα τοσοῦτον ἀπεργάσατο φθόρον Ἑλλήνων καὶ βαρβάρων. ὅπερ Εὐριπίδης ἀνήνεγκεν εἰς τὸν Δία,

Ζεὺς γὰρ κακὸν μὲν Τρωσὶ πῆμα δ' Ἑλλάδι
Θέλων γενέσθαι, τὰ δ' ἐβούλευσεν πατήρ.

Et Paridem cùm Spartam peteret debuiſſe potiùs naufragium facere, quam rapta Helena pœnas poſtmodò ſceleris dare, autorem tantæ cladis Græcorum ac Barbarorum: quam Euripides Jovi imputat:

Jupiter malum Troibus, & cladem Græciæ
Volens contingere, iſta decrevit pater (109).

(107) Idem, ibid.

(108) Idem, ibid. pag. 127.

(109) Strabo, lib. 4 pag. m. 127.

I am of opinion that Strabo uſed more artifice than ſincerity. It is no ways probable that Poſidonius grounded his raillery on Hercules's having wanted ſo great a number of ſtones; nevertheleſs as his words would bear that ſenſe, Strabo took advantage of it. But ſtill he has not animadverted on the real fault of the criticiſm. He ſhould have anſwered Poſidonius, that had Jupiter intended merely, and in general, to knock the Ligurians on the head, he had much better have ſhowered down the ſtones on their heads, than round about Hercules; but that deſigning to make Hercules defeat that people, the ſtones were therefore to fall near him, and not on his enemies. The critic went upon a notion, which is an inexhauſtible ſource of fallacious ſyllogiſms; and did not conſider that fate includes, at one and the ſame time, both the end and the means.

HERLICIUS (DAVID) a Philoſopher, a Phyſician, and Aſtrologer, was born at Ceitz in Miſnia, December the 28th 1557. He wanted the aſſiſtance of his mother's relations to be educated at ſchool, for his father's eſtate was not ſufficient to maintain him there. He learnt to write verſes and to ſing; by which means he got ſomething on ſeveral occaſions when neceſſity oppreſſed him [A]. He continued but a little while at the Univerſity of Wittemberg, becauſe Peucer, whoſe Lectures he chiefly deſigned to hear, was put in priſon. As he could not therefore improve himſelf under that learned Profeſſor, he went to Leipſic, where he made a conſiderable progreſs in his ſtudies. He went afterwards to Roſtock, where the Profeſſors gave him leave to read private Lectures. He acquitted himſelf ſo well of that function, that the Duke of Wittemberg made him Sub-Principal of the College of Guſtraw. He continued two years in that poſt, and employed all the time he could ſpare in the practice of Phyſic, and in drawing Horoſcopes (a). He ſpent the two following years (b) at Primiſlaw (α), where he taught natural Philoſophy, and in the year 1513 he accepted the like employment at Anclam, where he alſo practiſed Phyſic. The next year he publiſhed an Almanack, which was extremely applauded [B]. Since

(a) Quicquid temporis extraordinarii lucrari potuit, Aſtrologiæ ſtudio, conſtructioni & judicio geniturarum tribuit, & inſuper ad medicinam factitandam ſe applicuit. Eichſtadius, ubi infra Quotation (d).

(b) In the Marquiſate of Brandenburg.

[A] By which means he got ſomething, when neceſſity oppreſſed them.] This is what his Friend Eichſtadius ingenuouſly confeſſes. Sponte, ſays he, (1) ad Poëſin & Muſicam exercendam ſe dedit: à quo utroque ſtudio etiam poſtea in Academiis, quoties aliquâ inopiâ laborabat, fructus non pœnitendos percepit, eoque ſibi viros bonos & homines doctos patronos atque amicos conciliavit; ſicut & habuit duos alios fratres Stralſundi in Pomerania & Muſica inſtrumentali & Vocali (quorum unus Cantorem Scholæ, alter Muſicum organicum in templo Nicolaitano inibi egit) celebres atque excellentes. i. e. " He applied himſelf " of his own accord to the learning of Muſick, from " which he reaped afterwards conſiderable benefits in " the univerſities, whenever he laboured under any " want; and by his skill in that art he made himſelf " Patrons and Friends of ſeveral honeſt and learned " men. He had alſo two brothers famous at Stralſund in " Pomerania, for their skill both in inſtrumental and " vocal Muſick, in which they excelled, one of whom " was Chantor to a School there, and the other Or- " ganiſt of St. Nicholas's Church."

(1) Eichſtad. in Vita Davidis Herlicii, apud Henning. Witte, Memor. Medicorum, Decad. 1. pag. 74.

(α) The true name of that City, both in German and in French and Engliſh is Prenſlaw. Crit. Rem.]

[B] He publiſhed an Almanack, which was extremely applauded.] Here follow Eichſtadius's words (2), Anno 1584

(2) Apud Witte, ibid. pag. 76.

Since that time he made one conſtantly every year during fifty two years. In the year 1585 he was choſen to teach Mathematics in the Univerſity of Gripſwald, and he continued thirteen years in that poſt, and publiſhed ſeveral works. He received the degree of Doctor of Phyſic in that Univerſity with great ſolemnity in the year 1597; and at a year's end he accepted the Profeſſorſhip of Natural Philoſophy, which was offered him at Stargard in Pomerania, whence he removed to Lubeck in the year 1606, where he had an employment of the ſame kind. He did alſo practiſe Phyſic there with great reputation (c); and yet, through I know not what inconſtancy, he retired to Stargard, where he paſſed the remainder of his life. He died Auguſt the 15th 1636. He had had a very ſad loſs the preceding year; for his houſe and all his papers were burnt in the fire, which conſumed the whole city of Stargard to aſhes October the 7th 1635. Had it not been for this loſs the public would have ſeen an infinite number of our Herlicius's Aſtrological Obſervations [C]; for he had very much ſtudied that Science (d). He got money by drawing of Horoſcopes [D], and as he did not want wit, he acted with all the caution he could, that he might not too much expoſe the uncertainty of his Art.

(c) See the remark [E], quotation (12).

(d) Taken from a Letter of Laurence Eichſtadius, inſerted in Henninges Witte's Memoriæ Medicorum, Decad. 1. pag. 73, &c.

1584 primum ſuum Calendarium & Prognoſticon de mutationibus auræ & tempeſtatum in hoc phyſicatu publicavit, quod magno hominum applauſu ſtatim exceptum fuit. i. e. "Whilſt he was in the poſt of teacher of "natural Philoſophy, he publiſhed in the year 1584 "his firſt Almanack and Calendar of the changes of "the wind and weather, which was immediately re-"ceived with a great applauſe." This good ſucceſs encouraged him to continue his work, and he had the pleaſure to ſee that his Almanacks were tranſlated into ſeveral Languages, and that upon this account he was conſidered as the ornament of Pomerania. Sed & Prognoſtica annua de ſtatu aëris, quæ jam per quatuor ac decem annos conſcripſerat, maximo labore, ſumma fide, indefeſſiſque obſervationibus, in uſum Pomeraniæ & regionum regnorumque adjacentium quotannis per 52 annos continuavit. Qui labor progreſſu annorum in tantam lucem venit, ut non tantùm à Germanis in ſuo idiomate expetitus, verùm etiam ab exteris in Latinam, Bohemicam, Polonicam, Danicam, & denique Suecicam linguam tranſlatus, mox hinc inde in vicina climata illatus, atque HERLICIUS noſter tam utili anniverſario opere Decus & Ornamentam Pomeraniæ factus ſit (3). i. e. "He had already publiſhed his annual Calendar of "the conſtitution of the air during fourteen years, "and continued with great labour, with the utmoſt "exactneſs, and by unwearied obſervations, during "fifty-two years to publiſh it yearly for the uſe of "Pomerania, and the adjacent Countries and King-"doms. This work in proceſs of time gained ſuch a "reputation, that not only the Germans deſired to "have it in their own tongue, but it was alſo tranſla-"ted by foreigners into the Latin, Bohemian, Poliſh, "Daniſh, and Swediſh Languages, and thus it was "diſperſed thro' the neighbouring countries, and our "Herlicius became by this uſeful annual work the glory "and ornament of Pomerania." He loved this kind of labour to ſuch a degree, that one of the reaſons why he left Lubec was, that he hoped to have at Stargard the leiſure he wanted to finiſh a large work, of which Aſtrology was to be a conſiderable part (4). Ut defatigatus iſtic plurimis negotiis, curis, turbis, honeſtum ſibi otium quæreret, & DEO, ſuis Muſis atque affinibus vacare commodiùs poſſet, rurſus valedicens Lubecæ anno 1614; cum univerſa ſua familia rebus compoſitis Stargardiam Pomeranorum ſe contulit, ubi majore tranquillitate literariâ ad abſolvendum & expoliendum opus illud magnum, quod de triplici Kalendario Eccleſiaſtico, Aſtronomico, & Aſtrologico conſcribere inceperat, ſed ante annum (6), proh dolor, in communi Civitatis Stargardenſis flamma unà conflagravit, ſe frui poſſe ſperabat. i. e. "Being diſturbed there, at Lubec, by a great "deal of buſineſs, cares and troubles, he deſired to "live in a place where he might enjoy an honeſt "leiſure, and apply himſelf to his duty towards God, "cultivate the Muſes, and ſee his relations: he left "therefore Lubec again in the year 1614, and having "ſettled his affairs he retired with his whole family "to Stargard in Pomerania, where he hoped to live "with a greater literary tranquillity, ſo that he might "finiſh and poliſh that great work, which he had be-"gun to write, of a threefold Calendar, namely, Ec-"cleſiaſtical, Aſtronomical, and Aſtrological: but, oh, "misfortune! it periſhed a year ago in the flames that "burnt the whole city of Stargard." See the following Remark.

(3) Ibid. pag. 77.

(4) Ibid. pag. 77, 78.

(5) His wife was of Stargard. She was a widow, when he married her in the beginning of the year 1611. Ibid. pag. 78.

(6) That is to ſay in the year 1635.

[C] Had it not been for this loſs the Publick would have ſeen an infinite number of our Herlicius's Aſtrological Obſervations.] That the reader may ſee how much this man applied himſelf to the minuteſt particulars of Aſtrology, I ſhall tranſcribe the following inſtances of it, as I find them in his life. Interea ſuas Obſervationes Aſtrologicas publici juris facere decreverat ſæpe enim ad me ſcripſit, quod ultra mille & ducenta collegerit Themata, quæ ſuo tertio operi Calendariographico & Aſtrologico inſerere, iiſque veritatem aliquot Aphoriſmorum Aſtrologicorum probare nitebatur: e. g. Quod Planetæ benefici, Jupiter & Venus conjuncti, imprimis in octava domo longam vitam & annos (ultra 70) diuturnos polliceantur. Item, quod Fomabant, inſignis ſtella aſteriſmi Aquarii, in octava domo celebrem & glorioſum poſt mortem faciat. Item, quod Cauda Draconis in prima domo Cœli vel altero oculo carentem, vel gibboſum fore minetur. Ut complures alios taceam. At hæc cum reliqua ſua inſtructiſſima Bibliotheca (cujus ſimilem vix privatus alius tota noſtra in Pomerania quoad Mathematicos, Hiſtoricos, & Medicos libros poſſedit) in communi Stargardienſi excidio flammis conflagrarunt (7). i. e. "He deſigned in the "mean time to publiſh his Aſtrological Obſervations; "for he wrote to me often that he had collected a-"bove one thouſand and two hundred Horoſcopes, "which he propoſed to inſert in his third Aſtrologi-"cal and compleat Calendar, endeavouring to prove "thereby the truth of ſome Aſtrological Aphoriſms. "As for inſtance, That the kind Planets Jupiter and "Venus, being in a Conjunction, eſpecially in the eighth "houſe, promiſed a long life, and a great number of "years (above threeſcore and ten). And alſo, that the "bright Star Fomabant in the Conſtellation of Aquarius, "being in the eighth houſe, rendered a man celebrated and "famous after his death: And alſo, that the Dra-"gon's Tail in the firſt houſe of the Heavens threatened "that a perſon ſhould be born either blind of one eye, "or crooked. Not to mention a great many other "ſuch maxims. But all this, together with his Li-"brary, which was ſo large that hardly any private "perſon in all Pomerania was poſſeſſed of the like, "eſpecially with regard to Mathematical, Hiſtorical, "and Phyſical Books, periſhed in the flames, that "deſtroyed the City of Stargard."

(7) Witte, Memor. Medicorum, Decad. 1. pag. 81.

[D] He got money by drawing of Horoſcopes.] The Bohemians and Polanders were thoſe that paid him moſt liberally. Diverſæ ſæpe nationes ad eum confluebant, & ob multa experimenta nominiſque celebritatem judicium de ſuis genituris ab eo poſcebant Germani & exteri, præſertim Bohemi & Poloni, quorum liberalitatem præ reliquis prædicabat (8). i. e. "Several nations "reſorted to him, and on account of his numerous "experiments, and the reputation he had gained, the "Germans and the Foreigners deſired him to draw "Horoſcopes, but eſpecially the Bohemians, and the "Polanders, whoſe generoſity he extolled above that "of any other nations." And as he was one of thoſe who make much of themſelves, he ſpared his eyes that they might be of uſe to him in his old age, and therefore he made uſe of the aſſiſtance of his friend Eichſtadius, who alſo meddled with Aſtrology: he gave him his Horoſcopes to calculate, and aſked him his advice of them. Et quia in ſua ingraveſcente ætate parcere oculis, & ad plures annos eorum uſum reſervare volebat, haud raro a me petiit, ut ſibi ad calculum genturarum perficiendum, & aliquod breve judicium de iis ferendum ſubvenirem, cui lubens annui (9).

(8) Ibid. pag. 80.

(9) Ibid.

Art [E]. The prediction he publiſhed againſt the Turks did not prove true in the event [F]. He [E] He acted with . . . . caution . . . that he might not too much expoſe the uncertainty of his art.] He would never work for thoſe that could not tell him exactly at what hour they were born, and he choſe rather to loſe what money he might have received from them, than to run the riſk of expoſing his reputation. Numquam illis γενεθλίακον ſuum adornare volebat, qui ſine cognita nativitatis hora ad eum accedebant ; maluitque dignitati Artis, quam pecuniæ turpique lucro conſulere (10). What he wrote to Eichſtadius, proves that he was ſincere, and that he really imagined Aſtrology was a venerable ſcience, the dignity of which ought to be kept up, though it would coſt ſomething. He did not like that people ſhould aſk him, of what colour cloaths or horſes ought to be, in order to be lucky ; he perceived very well that he was in danger of being miſtaken, if he pretended to anſwer ſuch queſtions. He was angry with ſeveral Aſtrologers, who for want of ſuch a cautiouſneſs, expoſe judicial Aſtrology to contempt and cenſure ; and upon the whole he wiſhed he were rich enough to have no occaſion to get a livelihood by this deſpicable trade. Sobriè quoque hanc artem tractari volebat : hinc aliquando in ſuis literis ita ad me perſcripſit : Utinam amicis fortuna me intueretur oculis, ut ſine Aſtrologicis gerris ſenectuti meæ (quæ mihi cæcitatem minatur) proſpicere poſſem, nunquam γενέθλια calculo inquirerem. Interim quomodo multi plura inquirunt, & ſcire deſiderant, quam ars noſtra fert, aut patitur, aut habet, aut explicat, malo juxta conſcientiam agere, quàm Sanctam Uraniam noſtram deturpare & velut ſtuprare, eique nigrum ſalem vel atram notam aſpergere : quum alias tot ſuperſtitionibus Chaldaicis noſtra Ars ſcateat, quas multi ex noſtratibus adhuc mordicus tenent. Multi ex me ſcire laborant, qui colores veſtimentorum & equorum fortunati ſibi ſint futuri ? Hæc & alia monſtra quæſtionum ſæpè albis dentibus rideo, ſæpè etiam deteſtor. Amo enim virginitatem noſtræ Artis, nec patiar eam ita nefario ſtupro pollui, ne Miſaſtrologi hoſce abuſus in contemptum Aſtronomiæ nobis objicere poſſint (11). i. e. " He was of opinion that this art muſt be managed with caution, whence he wrote to me ſometimes after this manner : O that fortune would look kindly upon me ! that without meddling with thoſe aſtrological trifles, I might make proviſion for old age, which threatens me with blindneſs ; and I would never draw any horoſcope. In the mean time, when a great many perſons enquire for, and deſire to know more things, than are within the compaſs of our art, or more than it can explain, I chooſe rather to act with conſcience, than to diſgrace, and, as it were, to defile our ſacred Aſtrology, and to caſt a blemiſh upon it. For our art abounds ſtill with a great number of Chaldean ſuperſtitions, which ſeveral of our countrymen are ſtill obſtinately fond of. A great many aſk me, what colour of cloaths and horſes will be lucky to them ? Sometimes I laugh heartily at theſe and other ſuch abſurd queſtions, but I do alſo often abhor them. For I am enamoured with the virgin ſtate of our art, nor can I ſuffer that it ſhould be ſo abominably defiled, as to give the enemies of Aſtrology an opportunity to object to us thoſe abuſes to the contempt of the art itſelf." One can hardly imagine why a man, who had ſo much buſineſs in the practice of phyſic (12), and who never had any children, ſhould fear to want bread in his old age, unleſs he drew horoſcopes. This may give ſome weight to the ſlanders that were ſpread abroad againſt him, and perſuade us that he made extravagant expences in keeping miſtreſſes.

(10) Ibid.

(11) Eichſtadius, apud Witte, Memor. Medicor. pag. 76.

(12) Idem, ibid. pag. 77.

[F] The prediction he publiſhed againſt the Turks, did not prove true in the event.] Monſieur Thomaſius delivered an oration at Leipſic, October the 15th, 1665, at a ſolemn thankſgiving for the peace which had been concluded between the Emperor and the Ottoman Port. The Millenarians were very much diſpleaſed with this peace, becauſe they had foretold that the end of the Turkiſh Empire was near at hand. They grounded their predictions on ſome paſſages in the ſcripture, and on a number of preſages, which they explained after their own fancy. Non aliis armis inſtructi prodierunt, qui per hos annos credi a nobis voluere, fore brevi, ut jam deletum Ottomannidarum imperium cerneremus : non levi, opinor, cum ſacræ Scripturæ profanatione, quam & generis diverſiſſimi prædictionibus ſociarent, & ſui cerebri ſomnia cogerent interpretari (13). i. e. " The ſame arguments were made uſe of by thoſe, who during theſe laſt years would have us believe, that we ſhould ſoon ſee the Ottoman Empire deſtroyed ; which, in my opinion, was a great prophanation of the holy ſcripture, which they put in the ſame rank with predictions of a quite different nature, and by which they would abſolutely explain the idle fancies of their own brains." This is their conſtant practice, which they renew daily. Thomaſius wonders, that after ſo many falſe predictions, that had been publiſhed of the pretended approaching ruin of the Ottomans, men did not propheſy with more caution. One would think however, that the more perſons there are, that have been miſtaken in their prophecies, the leſs reaſon there is to fear a miſtake for the future ; for after all, the word of God, who cannot impoſe upon us, has promiſed us the overthrow of that powerful Monarchy. And this it is which makes the new Prophets the bolder. The Orator does not inſiſt upon this reaſon only ; he does alſo imagine, that theſe Gentlemen are miſled by an eager deſire of enjoying the golden age here upon earth. Sed fortaſſe curioſitati huic nihil potentiorem ſtimulum admovet, quàm neſcio cujus aurei ſeculi per mille duraturi annos perſuaſio, ubi profligatis ab omni latere hoſtibus Deo dilecta cohors in otio ſit ſuaviſſimo victura. Trahimur omnes beatæ his in terris vitæ cupiditate. Itaque ſi qua nobis eam fama polliceatur, ei ſitientiſſimas aures adjungimus, inque omnes articulos temporis, qui favere huic affectui videntur, enixè vigilamus (14). i. e. " But there is perhaps nothing that raiſes this eager deſire of knowing futurity more, than a perſuaſion of I know not what golden age that is to laſt a thouſand years, during which God's enemies being every where deſtroyed, the choſen people is to live in the moſt delightful eaſe. So that if any report promiſes us the reproach of that age, we hearken to it moſt earneſtly, and watch with the utmoſt attention every circumſtance, that ſeems to favour this deſire." He repreſents afterwards to his audience, that there never was, during the XVIIth Century, any conſiderable war againſt the enemies of the true church, but ſome predictions were ſpread abroad, promiſing the entire overthrow either of the Pope, or of the Turks, or of both. The glory of this overthrow was promiſed firſt to Frederick King of Bohemia, then to Guſtavus Adolphus, and afterwards to Charles Guſtavus. Tantæ victoriæ lauream erant qui ſuperioris Germanici belli tempore Friderico Palatino, erant qui Guſtavo Adolpho Suecorum Regi, erant qui Carolo Guſtavo deſtinarent, cùm is Poloniam ante hos novem annos infeſtaret (15). i. e. " During the war in Upper Germany, ſome deſigned the glory of this great victory to Frederic Elector Palatine ; others to Guſtavus Adolphus, King of Sweden ; others again to Charles Guſtavus, when he was making war in Poland about nine years ago." He ſpeaks afterwards of our David Herlicius, who towards the latter end of the XVIth Century had promiſed that the Empire of the Turks would ſoon be deſtroyed. Plenus talium in primis eſt Davidis Herlicii, in aliis fortaſſe prædictionibus, quàm in hâc felicioris Aſtrologi, libellus, quem ſub finem ævi ſuperioris, miſerè Pannoniam vexante Turcâ, vulgavit. Ibi Danielem, Apocalypſin, dictum Eliæ, præſagia Joannis Hilteni, Antonii Torquati Ferrarienſis, Turcarum ipſorum, curſus ſiderum, conjunctiones planetarum, quaſi in exercitum unum conſcribi video, quo in animis hominum ultimo prælio cum Turcâ decidatur (16). i. e. " Such things are above all to be met with in a little book of David Herlicius, who perhaps was a happier Aſtrologer in other predictions than he was in this. He publiſhed that book towards the latter end of the laſt century, when Hungary was miſerably oppreſſed by the Turks. Daniel, the revelation of St. John, a ſaying of Elijah, the preſages of John Hiltenus, of Anthony Torquatus of Ferrara, and of the Turks themſelves, with the courſe of the ſtars, and the conjunctions of the planets, are collected together there, as it were into an army, by which in the people's opinion, the Turks were to be deſtroyed in a laſt and deciſive battle."

(13) Thomaſius, in Orationib. pag. m. 397.

(14) Idem, ibid. pag. 395.

(15) Idem, ibid.

(16) Ibid.

He was twice married, and very unhappy with his firſt wife [G]. It was perhaps his fault; for he was charged with being one of thoſe whore-maſters, who go and make love abroad. His friend does not clear him well of that charge [H]. There are

[G] He was very unhappy with his firſt wife.] God knows for what reaſon, ſays the writer of his life. Anno 1593 honeſtiſſimam virginem Reginam Hungers primarii civis Primiſlavienſis filiam in matrimonium accepit, cum qua tamen non adeo concorditer (cauſam novit Deus) vixit, & ſine fructu matrimonii per 17 annos (17). i. e. "In the year 1593 he married a very honeſt "virgin named Regina Hungers, who was the daughter of one of the moſt eminent citizens of Primiſlaw; "but he did not live in great union with her (God "knows why) and they had no children during ſeventeen years they were married." Seventeen years are a pretty long term for perſons that are not well matched together. We ſeldom meet in thoſe who write the lives of illuſtrious perſons, with the ingenuity we have here. I have peruſed a great many elogies and lives of learned men, ſince I am about this work, but I hardly read in any of them that they do not live well with their wives; it is almoſt always aſſerted, that their marriage was bleſſed with the moſt happy union that can be wiſhed for; and yet the neighbours very often know the contrary. I remember a particular which deſerves ſome attention. A learned Roman (18) who died in the year 1640, had his wife under ſo ſtrict a confinement, that he ſuffered no body to ſee her, nor her to ſee any body. Uxorem adeo amplius quadraginta annos quibus cum ea vixit cuſtodiis ſuis domi ſubjectam habuit, ut mortalium nemini fas fuerit aſpicere (19). He would not even ſuffer that the Curate of the pariſh ſhould come to his houſe in the Eaſter holy-days, to take an account of the perſons that lived in his family, and to make the aſperſions with holy water, as it is the cuſtom at Rome. He uſed to ſay, that when the Pope went by his houſe, he gave his bleſſing to the whole family, and that this was ſufficient: and if the Curate pretended to inſiſt, he was ill uſed, and threatned with a ſtick. Parochis, quibus mos eſt quotannis, Paſchalibus feriis, ſuis in parochiis capita hominum recenſere, ac ſingulorum domus aqua luſtrali conſpergere, verborum contumeliis, ac metu etiam fuſtis, ſi auſi eſſent accedere, domi ſuæ foribus abigebat, quod diceret, Pontificem Max. cum illac iter faceret, bene domui ſuæ dicere, proinde nihil opus eſſe cujuſquam ad eam rem opera. It happened one day, that he aſked the Curate of his pariſh leave for his wife not to keep Lent, upon which the Curate anſwered, that he would not grant it, unleſs he ſaw with his own eyes, in what condition the patient was: the huſband replied aloud, that the diſtemper was in the womb; do you pleaſe, added he, to ſee the place where the diſtemper is? Nicius Erythræus was preſent at that converſation. Atque ipſemet adfui, cum in ſacrario S. Spiritus in Saxia Parocho, neganti, non aliter ſe uxori ejus poteſtatem facturum veſcendi carnibus in quadrageſima, niſi ſuis ipſe oculis, quo morbo affecta eſſet, aſpexiſſet, palam multis audientibus, dixit, Uxori meæ morbus in matrice inhæret, placetne morbi locum aſpicere? It is an eaſy matter to judge, whether ſuch a man could live forty five years with his wife without any diſpute or quarrel whatſoever: And yet this is aſſerted in his epitaph, which is inſerted in page 275 of Proſper Mandoſio's Bibliotheca Romana. Sed quod raro contingit cum Claudia Sebaſtiani Tiburtina uxore ſine querela conjunctiſſime vixit annis XLV. i. e. "But, what happens very ſel-"dom, he lived forty five years, without any diſpute, "and in the ſtricteſt union with his wife Claudia "Tiburtina, Sebaſtian's daughter." We muſt depend neither upon epitaphs, nor elogies.

[H] His friend does not clear him well of that charge.] Some, ſays he, aſſert that Herlicius loved young girls; his ſtars would have it ſo; but if one pretended to infer from thence, that this occaſioned the unhappineſs of his firſt marriage, I would anſwer in his defence, that he had no children by either of his wives, and that he uſed to ſay, he ſowed in a barren field; and conſequently, he deſigned only to be beloved by the young girls, but not to enjoy them. Ferunt nonnulli eum, quum ætas ferret, non abhorruiſſe à puellarum amoribus, id quod in geneſi ejus conjunctio Veneris cum Marte præ ſe ferre videtur. Quod ſi quis hinc eum fortè ſalacem, & hinc multas turbas in priore matrimonio ortas eſſe dixerit, ille ſciat, D. HERLICIUM ex utraque ſua conjuge nullos liberos vel Herliciolum ſuſcepiſſe, ſed illorum exortem fuiſſe, atque in ſterili agro (ut dicere ſolebat) laboraſſe, & proinde animo juvencularum mutuo potiùs, quàm coitu captum eſſe (21). And in order to add ſtrength to this apology he quotes Cardan, who proved by the great number of his children, that he was very laſcivious. Hieron. Cardanus quidem in judicio ſuæ genituræ ſe laſcivum fuiſſe multitudine procreatorum liberorum probat (20). There was never a more wretched apology; for in the firſt place, Herlicius did not boaſt of his continence and moderation in the pleaſures of love, but only complained that he cultivated a barren ground. He had laboured therefore, and confeſſed it himſelf. What inference can you draw then from his having no children? Will you infer from thence, that if he endeavoured to gain the young maiden's affection, it was only for the bare pleaſure of being beloved by them, without pretending to any thing beſides? But ſuch a concluſion can by no means be drawn from the premiſes. In the ſecond place, barren marriages are no proofs at all of leſs incontinency, on the contrary, the Phyſicians aſſert, that too great a laſciviouſneſs is one of the cauſes that hinders a conception; and that the reaſon why ſome marriages are fruitleſs the firſt year, is, that the young married couple are too laviſh of their embraces, ſo that before their firſt heat is abated, nature being too often diſturbed and interrupted, cannot well perform her functions. Read Ariſtotle quoted by Montagne (23). "A man, ſays Ariſtotle, muſt come to his wife pru-"dently and ſparingly, leſt if he ſhould tickle her "too laſciviouſly, ſhe ſhould go beyond the rules of "reaſon. What he aſſerts as a rule of conſcience, "the Phyſicians preſcribe as a neceſſary precaution "to preſerve one's health: namely, that a pleaſure "exceſſively hot, voluptuous and frequent, ſpoils the "ſeed, and prevents conception. They aſſert farther, "that this being naturally a faint congreſſion, a man "ought to come to it ſeldom, and only after a con-"ſiderable interval, in order to furniſh it with a pro-"per and fruitful heat.

"Quo rapiat ſitiens Venerem, interiuſque recondat.

"That the woman may long after the venereal plea-"ſure, and receive the ſeed in its proper place."

Laurence Joubert a famous Phyſician, deſigned one of the chapters (24) in his book of the popular errors, to refute thoſe, who never ceaſe to embrace each other, in order to have children, and thoſe who do it but ſeldom, for fear of having too many. The ignorant vulgar, ſays he (25), is miſtaken two contrary ways, acting intirely againſt their own intention. Some who do earneſtly wiſh to have children, never ceaſe to embrace their wives as often as they can; and others ſpare them for fear of having too numerous a family: whereas it happens quite otherwiſe than they expect. For what could be performed by one good hit, may be deſtroyed by the next. And beſides, when they come to it ſo often, without being prompted by nature, the ſeed has not time to be thoroughly ripened, and perfect. Whence it proves unfruitful, and uſeleſs like water.

It is very juſtly obſerved, that it is better not to have one's cauſe pleaded, than to commit it to an indifferent Counſellor. Eichſtadius deſerves to be compared with that perſon, whom Scipio the Prætor recommended to one who had a law-ſuit. Ille Siculus, cui Prætor Scipio patronum cauſæ dabat hoſpitem ſuum, hominem nobilem, ſed admodum ſtultum: Quæſo, inquit Prætor, adverſario meo da iſtum patronum, deinde mihi neminem dederis (26). i. e. "A Sicilian, to whom Sci-"pio the Prætor recommended a Counſellor to plead "his cauſe, a man who was his gueſt, and of a noble "birth indeed, but very ſilly, told him, pray, Prætor, "recommend that man to my adverſary, and I "ſhall be content to have no body to plead my cauſe."

(17) Eichſtadius, in Vita Herlicii, apud Witte, Memor. Medicor. pag. 76.

(18) His name was Joſper Cælius.

(19) Nicius Erythræus, Pinacoth. 1. pag. 229.

(20) Idem, ibid.

(21) Eichſtadius, in Vita Herlicii, apud Witte, Medicor. pag. 78.

(22) Idem, ibid.

(23) Montagne, Eſſais, liv. 3. chap. 5. pag. m. 112.

(24) It is the 6th of the 2d book.

(25) Joubert, Erreurs populaires, liv. 2. ch. 6. pag. m. 74.

(26) Cicero, de Orat. lib. 2. cap. 69.

are a great many books of his extant [I]. I forgot to obſerve that he was a very good Lutheran.

[I] There are a great many books of his extant.] Moſt of them are in the German tongue: Thoſe that are in Latin, are either Poems, Orations, or Philoſophical and Phyſical Treatiſes. Witte gives a catalogue of them (27).

(27) Memoriæ Medicor Decad. 1. pag. 87.

HERMANT (GODFREY) one of the moſt celebrated writers in the ſeventeenth Century, was born at Beauvais February the 7th 1617. "From his infancy he gave "proofs of a lively genius, and a happy memory, which qualities he enjoyed to the "end of his life. He learnt the Greek and Latin Tongues with a wonderful readineſs, "and in an age in which children can hardly read and write. He was but twelve years "old when Meſſire Auguſtin Potier Biſhop and Count of Beauvais ſent him to ſtudy Rhe"toric under the Jeſuits at Paris. When he had finiſhed his courſe of Philoſophy in "the College of Navarre, and of Divinity in the Sorbonne, this good Prelate, who "loved him, made him return to Beauvais, to teach the Belles Lettres and Rhetoric "there. In the year 1640 he ſent him again to Paris, to be tutor to his nephew Mon"ſieur d'Ocquerre. Notwithſtanding this employment he taught Philoſophy in the "College of Beauvais, that he might be admitted a member of the Sorbonne. He was "made a Bachelor in the year 1641, and Canon of the Cathedral Church of Beauvais "in the year 1642. None but his friends were all this time acquainted with his merit. "But the Jeſuits having preſented a petition to the King in the year 1643, deſiring to "be incorporated with the Univerſity of Paris, Monſieur Hermant was choſen to defend "the cauſe of the Univerſity;" and he wrote three or four books which gained him great reputation. Monſieur le Camus Biſhop of Bellai congratulated him upon it in ſuch a manner as deſerves to be related [A]. He repreſented to him, that the reſentment of the Jeſuits was to be dreaded. But as Monſieur Hermant lived without any ambition, he did not give them an opportunity to exert their credit to his prejudice. "He was "made Prior of the Sorbonne in the year 1644, and Licentiate and Rector in 1646. "In the ſecond year of his Rectorſhip, there happened one of thoſe fortuitous events, "which make ſome perſons think favourably of Judicial Aſtrology [B], and prevent "them

[A] Monſieur le Camus . . . congratulated him in ſuch a manner as deſerves to be related.] Monſieur Hermant publiſhed four pieces on this occaſion. 1. The Obſervations on the Petition of the Jeſuits; 2. The firſt Apology for the Univerſity; 3. The Academical Truths; 4. The ſecond Apology; this laſt is a reply to the Anſwer which the Jeſuits publiſhed. His name was not put to any of theſe four pieces. "Monſieur le Camus "Biſhop of Bellai having found that Monſieur Her"mant was the author of them, went to meet him at "Albiac-Houſe, where he lodged, and embracing him "told him that he bleſſed God for giving him in his "younger days, not only ſo much wit and learning, "but alſo courage and ſtrength of mind enough, not "to dread the hatred and revenge of ſo formidable a "ſociety, as that was, againſt which he wrote. And "yet all the wrong the Jeſuits ever could do him, "came only to this, namely, that they did not love "him, and never ſpoke of him with any eſteem, "though he had been their pupil. His modeſty ſkreened "him againſt their moſt dreadful reſentment, nor "could they oppoſe him in the purſuit of the firſt "eccleſiaſtical dignities, which were all at their diſpo"ſal, becauſe he was ſo far from hunting after "them, that he even refuſed them, when they "were offered him, and he was preſſed to accept "them (1)." To have no ambition is very often a ſafe ſanctuary.

(1) Taken from Memoirs, communicated to the bookſeller.

[B] There happened during this Rectorſhip one of thoſe fortuitous events, which make ſome perſons think favourably of Judaical Aſtrology.] Here follow the words of the memoirs, that have been communicated to us (2). "Marcellus, Profeſſor of Rhetoric in the "college of Liſieux, had compoſed a Latin elogy of "Monſieur the Marſhal de Gaſſion, who was ſhot "with a muſquet at the ſiege of Lens. Marcellus was "to deliver it in a public oration, when an old "Doctor who made it his chief buſineſs to read all "the bills that were poſted up, and being ſurprized "to ſee one, in which it was advertiſed, that Mar"cellus was to deliver his oration that day at two of "the clock in the afternoon, ran immediately to com"plain of it to Monſieur Hermant, and repreſenting "to him that it was not to be ſuffered, that a funeral "oration of a man, who died in the pretended re"formed religion, ſhould be delivered in a Catholic "univerſity, he deſired him to appoint a meeting, to "determine this affair. Monſieur Hermant could not "refuſe his requeſt, ſo that the aſſembly met, and it "was reſolved by a majority of votes, that they ſhould "go immediately to Marcellus, to forbid him to de"liver Monſieur de Gaſſion's panegyrick. The aſtro"logers were exceedingly pleaſed with this, and made "all the world obſerve, that in the almanac of the "celebrated Larrivey, amongſt other predictions for "that ſame month, there was written in a large cha"racter, LATIN LOST." That the reader may be the better acquainted with the circumſtances of the prohibition that was notified to the Marſhal de Gaſſion's panegyriſt, I ſhall tranſcribe here a paſſage from du Boulai (3). "Monſr. Will. Marcel, Profeſſor of "Rhetoric, in the college of Liſieux, having adver"tiſed, by bills poſted up, that he would deliver a "funeral oration on Marſhal de Gaſſion, the Rector "forbad him to do it, becauſe the ſaid Gaſſion died "an Huguenot. Upon which Monſieur James Deſ"periers, Principal of the ſame college, went with the "ſaid Marcel, to complain to the Chancellor of France, "who referred them to the Rector's ſentence: as ap"pears from the deed extracted from the records of the "German nation. 22 Decemb. (an. 1647) Ampl. D. "Rector habitis Comitiis ex conſilio D. D. Decanorum, "& 4 Procuratorum prohibuit D. Guill. Marcel. Elo"quentiæ Profeſſorem in Collegio Lexoveo declamare lau"des & præconia demortui Mareſchalli nomine "Gaſſion, quod prolixo programmate publico notum fe"cerat omnibus ſtudioſis; ſed quia res erat peſſimi exempli, "& contra Religionem laudare hominem in hæreſi mor"tuum, noluit Academia acquieſcere inſtantiſſimis præci"bus D. Marcelli, neque D. Deſperiers Gymnaſiarchæ "Lexovæi, qui provocarunt ad D. Seguier Franciæ Can"cellarium, qui eos auditos ad Ampliſ. D. Rectorem hu"jus rei Judicem remiſit. Et ſic ſilentium illis impoſitum "eſt." i. e. "December the 22d, 1647; the Rector "in a general aſſembly, and by the advice of the "Deans and of four Procurators, has forbidden William "Marcel Profeſſor of Rhetoric in the college of Li"ſieux to deliver publicly an oration in the praiſe and "commendation of the late Marſhal de Gaſſion; "which he had given notice of to all the ſtudents, "in a long advertiſement publickly poſted up; but as "it was of a very bad example, and againſt religion, "to commend a man who died an heretic, the uni"verſity would not yield to the earneſt requeſt of "Marcel,

(2) Ibid.

(3) Cæſar Egaſſe du Boulai, Remarques ſur la Dignité, Préſeance, &c. du Recteur de L'Univerſite de Paris, pag. 91.

" them from condemning it without reſtrictions." I ſhall give a compleat catalogue of the works which Mr. Hermant publiſhed [C], and I ſhall give ſome account of his controverſy with Father Maimbourg [D]. He died ſuddenly in the ſtreet at Paris July the

A COLLECTION of paſſages relating to ſcruples of the Church of Rome about commending of heretics.

" Marcel, nor of Monſieur Deſperiers Principal of the " college of Liſieux, who appealed thereupon to " Monſieur Seguier Chancellor of France, by whom " they were referred to the Rector, who is the proper " judge in this affair; and thus they were both ſi- " lenced."

How many reflections could not one make upon that ſpirit of policy, or of miſtaken devotion, which makes the Church of Rome refuſe to heretics the praiſes they deſerve? But waving all reflections, I ſhall only take notice of ſome facts, and I begin with a paſſage in the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, taken from the extract of a book of Daniel Francus, intitled, de Papiſtarum Indicibus Librorum prohibitorum & expurgandorum. i. e. " Of the Papiſt's expurgatory In- " dexes and thoſe of books prohibited." " The author " relates the rules, which the Inquiſitors are obliged to " follow, by which it appears, amongſt other things, " that they have a poſitive order to blot out, without " any mercy, all the praiſes that are beſtowed upon a " heretic. Theſe are things which we muſt ſee with " our own eyes in order to believe them; otherwiſe, " we ſhould never imagine that religion is capable of " putting ſuch a byaſs upon our minds. Bellarmine was " ſo fully perſuaded, that it was a part of an ortho- " dox character never to praiſe an heretic, that the " author ridicules him for aſſerting poſitively †, that " we do not find the Catholicks ever commended the doc- " trine or the actions of thoſe heretics. And yet he " proves againſt Bellarmine that his touch-ſtone is not " very much to be depended upon, as appears by the " elogies, which Cochleus, Æneas Sylvius, Poggius " of Florence, Clavius the Jeſuit, Monſieur de l'Au- " beſpine Biſhop of Orleans, and Caramuel have beſ- " towed upon Hereticks. But yet this acquaints us " with the true genius of the Inquiſition. It is ſome- " thing very remarkable; for the Inquiſitors give or- " ders to eraſe from all ſorts of books the prefaces, " dedications, and abſolutely all that can in the leaſt " be to the honour of perſons who are ſeparated from " the Church of Rome, without excepting the Princes " themſelves. Hence it is, that it is commanded in " the Expurgatorii Indexes, that if any Hiſtorian ſaid, " ſuch a day was born Chriſtopher, the illuſtrious Duke " of Wittemberg, Præclarus Dux Wertenbergenſis, the " title illuſtrious, præclarus ſhall be erazed, which yet is " of ſo little conſequence, that it is given in Latin to the " meaneſt ſcholar. They command alſo, that all the " capital letters, which are uſually prefixed to proper " names, ſignifying that an heretic is ſtiled a Doctor, " Mr. a celebrated Divine, vir clariſſimus, vir reve- " rendus, a famous man, a reverend man, be immediately " blotted out. The Jeſuit Serrarius aſſerts in his Mi- " nerval, that the praiſes of a heretic in the book of " a Catholic, are an abomination unto God, in the ſame " manner as thoſe abominable offerings, which are " mentioned in the XXIIId chapter of Deuteronomy, " verſe the 18th (4)." I have read in the Paris Ga- zette, that in the year 1633, the maſter of the ſacred palace publiſhed at Rome a prohibition to keep any proſe, or verſe, or image, or picture, or medal made to the me- mory of Guſtavus Adolphus King of Sweden (5). Monſr. Sallo has the following reflections in his account of a work of Father Bona. This writer, ſays he (6), is the firſt that ever gave a catalogue of the authors he quotes, with his opinion of every one of them (7). There are ſome things pretty curious in this Critique. But let us ob- ſerve, that we ought not to think it ſtrange, that this good father ſhould ſpeak ſo ill in this Critique of the Heterodox Authors even upon ſubjects in which faith is not at all concerned; for he writes at Rome, where it is a crime to approve the leaſt thing in the book of an heretick. Let us add to this theſe words of Balzac (8). " Madam de Saumaiſe deſired me, by Mr. Conrart's " means, to write a few lines to the memory of her " huſband to be engraved on his tomb. But I " was very far from promiſing it to her, being in a " condition in which I could not have kept my " word, and labouring under pains, which never a- " bating, left no room for poetical thoughts. And " beſides, funerals, and all that relates to funeral rites " belonging to religion, I was of opinion that the " epitaph of a Huguenot could not be written by a " Catholic. I ſay, ſuch an epitaph as this, which is to " be placed in a Proteſtant Church, which ought to " be written in a Chriſtian ſtile, and in which it would " be very difficult, on account of ſome word, upon " which a favourable conſtruction might be put, that " the deceaſed was paſſed from this life to a better. " Now, you know, my Lord, that it is a ſin in our " Church to uſe ſuch expreſſions, and that they have " been condemned at Rome in the writings of the " greateſt men of this age."

Take notice that this maxim of Rome is not always practiſed, for if you conſult James Laurent in the IId and VIth Chapters of his Prodiga Jeſuitarum liberali- tas, i. e. " the prodigal liberality of the Jeſuits," you will find there ſome praiſes that were beſtowed by Roman Catholic authors upon the morals and learning of the Heterodox. See the margin (9).

[C] I ſhall give a compleat catalogue of the works which Monſieur Hermant publiſhed.] I make no ſcru- ple to ſtile it thus, becauſe I ſhall tranſcribe from the Memoirs, which have been communicated to me. In the year 1644 he publiſhed an apology for his friend Monſieur Arnaud againſt a libel of F. Nouët intitled, Remarques judicieuſes ſur le livre de la Frequente communion. i. e. " Rational remarks upon the " books concerning the frequent taking of the ſacra- " ment." In the year 1651, " he wrote under the " name of St. Julien againſt the fantaſtical notions of " Labadie a renegado Jeſuit; and under that of Hie- " ronomus ab Angelo Forti three Latin letters to Monſ. " de Saintebeuve againſt Monſ. des Marets a Miniſter " at Groeningen, who had taken ſome advantage from " a Catechiſm concerning Grace, printed by a pious " Biſhop's orders. He publiſhed St. Chryſoſtom's " Life in 1664, that of Athanaſius in 1671, St. Baſil's " Aſceticks in 1663, and the Lives of St. Baſil and " of St. Gregorius Nazianzenus in 1674. He publiſhed " Devout Converſations on St. Matthew in 1690. " And ſince his death they have publiſhed his De- " vout Converſations on St. Mark, and a ſmall Trea- " tiſe of Silence. A perſon of quality having deſired " him to give him the Extracts he had made from " the Councils, truſted an unfaithful writer with them, " who kept a copy of them, and printed it at L'Iſle " in the year 1693 with this title, Clavis Diſciplinæ " Eccleſiaſticæ, ſeu Index univerſalis totius Juris Eccle- " ſiaſtici. i. e. " A Key to the Church Diſcipline, or " an univerſal Index to the whole Eccleſiaſtical Law." " His Extracts are diſgraced in that edition by ſuch " additions as are unworthy of Monſieur Hermant, " and which might injure his reputation if the public " were not told that they are not his, and eſpecially " the collection of the letters falſely aſcribed to our " firſt Popes. God grant, that we may once have his " Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Hiſtory of Beauvais, and the " territories belonging to it, and that it may not be loſt " in the hands of thoſe, who ſeized upon it to the pre- " judice of one of his friends, whom he truſted with it, " charging him in his laſt will with the care of pub- " liſhing it (10)."

[D] I ſhall give ſome account of his controverſy with Father Maimbourg.] This Jeſuit " having tranſcribed " in his Hiſtory of Arianiſm all that was moſt curious " and remarkable in the life of St. Athanaſius, ima- " gined that if he did but diſgrace the author of it " in a wicked and malicious preface, it would be ſuffi- " cient to hide his plagiariſm, and that no man in the " world would think that he would have deigned to " extract the leaſt thing from a book, of which he " ſpake with ſo much contempt. He cenſures Monſr. " Hermant, 1. For tranſcribing the paſſages of the " authors he quotes. 2. For giving at the end of his " work an explanation of the moſt difficult points. " 3. For ſaying, that it is difficult to ſay any thing " more of the order and rank in which the members " of the Council of Nice ſat, except only that they " were regulated by the ſimplicity, modeſty and civi- " lity of the members themſelves; and that the argu- " ments which are alledged to prove the contrary, (†) De Notis Eccleſ. c. 6. art. 1.

(4) Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, for July 1685, Art. 2. pag. 776, &c.

(5) Gazette de Paris, of March 14, 1633.

(6) Journal des Savans, for Jan. 19, 1665, in the account of the book, de Divina Pſalmodia.

(7) This is not true; it is a long time ſince Demſter did this in his Additions to Roſinus's Roman Antiquities. See alſo the ſame in Nicholas Vignier's Theatre de l'Antechriſt, of the Geneva edition 1613, in 8vo.

(8) Balzac, Extrait d'une Lettre à Mr. le Marquis de Montauſier. It is to be met with at the end of his Letters to Mr. Conrard, p. 416. of the Dutch edition 1659.

(9) Lorenzo Craſſo has inſerted the Elogies of ſeveral Proteſtants, and amongſt others of Guſtavus Adolphus and of Salmaſius, amongſt the Elogies of the great Captains, and of the learned men, which he publiſhed in Italy.

(10) Taken from the Memoirs quoted above.

the 11th 1690, as will appear by his epitaph. I ſhall tranſcribe it at length, though it was not put upon his tomb [E], for his enemies had malice and power enough to prevent it (a).

(a) Taken from Memoirs ſent to the bookſeller.

" how plauſible ſoever they appear, are not extremely " ſtrong, nor proper to determine the queſtion. Monſr. " Hermant publiſhing in the year 1674 the Lives of " St. Baſil and of St. Gregorius Nazianzenus, an- " ſwered in his Preface Father Maimbourg's three " objections or cavils, and finiſhes his reply thus. " But ſome perſons will perhaps find fault with me " for dwelling too long upon the refutation of a charge " which has no ſolid foundation, and indeed, I might " have deſpiſed it intirely. For it is certain that an " author expoſes himſelf to the indignation of all " equitable perſons, when having made an advantage " of another's labours, and enriched and adorned him- " ſelf with their ſpoils, all his gratitude terminates in " loading him with injuries. This will excuſe me " from giving a particular anſwer to the writer who " has acted thus with regard to me; and it is enough " for me to know, that there is no rule more univer- " ſally admitted in the world, than this maxim of the " Canoniſts, namely, that we ought firſt of all to make " a reſtitution to them we have robbed. Spoliatus " ante omnia reſtituendus. I muſt make a better uſe " of my time, than to examine his blunders, " which are perhaps more numerous, than he ima- " gines. What he cenſures in my Hiſtory of St. Atha- " naſius will ſtand by the unconquerable ſtrength of " truth; it is not neceſſary that I ſhould ſupport it " with new arguments, &c. (11)."

(11) Taken from the Memoirs quoted above.

(12) Ibid.

[E] I ſhall tranſcribe his epitaph, though it was not put upon his tomb.] Let us make uſe of the very words in the Memoirs we have quoted (12). " A Canon, " who was his relation, had compoſed an epitaph for " him, which had been approved by the Chapter; " but ſome falſe brother having given the Jeſuits no- " tice of it, they cauſed it to be ſuppreſſed by an " Order from the court, at the very time when in the " ſight of the whole city of Paris, and to the diſgrace " of the Church, they were prophaning a whole chapel " by raiſing a monument to Lulli . . . Here follows the " epitaph which was deſigned for Monſieur Hermant.

" Heic reſurrectionem expectat
" GODEFRIDUS HERMANT BELLOVACUS,
" Eruditione clarus, fama celebris, virtute præſtantior,
" Rector quondam Academiæ Pariſienſis
" ſtrenuuſque defenſor,
" Doctor & Socius Sorbonicus,
" Hujus Eccleſiæ Canonicus,
" Amans diſciplinæ ſi quis unquam ſanctioris
" Excelſi vir ingenii, ſtupendæ doctrinæ, facundiæ mira-
" bilis
" Debebantur majora.
" Oblata recuſavit modeſtiâ ſingulari.
" Impendit
" Doctis elucidata illuſtrium Patrum geſta,
" Piis Sacras in Matthæum & Marcum exercitationes,
" Civibus urbis hujus & Diœceſis hiſtoriam.
" Omnibus ſeipſum, verbo, converſatione, charitate.
" Super impendit
" Egenis ſua omnia.
" Repentinâ morte ereptus non improviſâ
" Pariſiis ictu ſanguinis exanimatus viâ publicâ
A. R. S. MDCXC. XI. Julii. Æt. LXXIII.
" Ad ſacelli hujus cancellos tumulum deſignavit ſibi,
" Dignum cum Ambroſio ratus requieſcere ſacerdotem
" ubi offerre conſueverat."

i. e. " Here waits for the reſurrection GODFREY " HERMANT of Beauvais, famous for his learning, " celebrated for his reputation, but more eminent ſtill " for his virtue. Being formerly Rector of the Uni- " verſity, he was a ſtrenuous aſſertor of her rights. He " was a Doctor and Fellow of the Sorbonne, and a " Canon of this Church. He was as great a lover as " any man in the world of the holy diſcipline; he had " an exalted mind, wonderful learning, and an ad- " mirable eloquence. He deſerved greater preferments; " but his great modeſty made him refuſe thoſe that " were offered him. He beſtowed upon the learned " clear accounts of the lives of the moſt illuſtrious " Fathers, upon the Pious his obſervations on St. " Matthew and St. Mark, upon his fellow-citizens " the hiſtory of this city and dioceſs: he ſacrificed " himſelf for all in his words, converſation, and " charity: laſtly he left all that was his to the poor. " He was ſnatched away by a ſudden but not unex- " pected death, and died in the ſtreet at Paris of a bloody- " flux in July 11, 1690, in the 73d year of his age. " He choſe his tomb here in the Chancel of this Cha- " pel, thinking with St. Ambroſe, that it was proper " a Prieſt ſhould reſt in the ſame place where he uſed " to officiate."

HERMESIANAX, an elegiac Poet, born at Colophon, was honoured with a ſtatue erected to him in his native place (a). See the remark (b) of the article LEONTIUM.

(a) Pauſanias in Eliacis, (and not Iliacis, as we read in Voſſius, de Hiſtor. Græc. pag. 374.) Sive lib. 6. pag. 194.
(b) The remark [A].

HERMIAS, a Philoſopher of Alexandria in the fifth Century, ſtudied with Proclus under Syrianus. He had two ſons, Ammonius and Heliodorus, who were of his profeſſion, and the former of whom became much more celebrated than the latter. Hermias was a very honeſt and plain man, of a mild temper. He was as laborious as a man can be; but he had an indifferent genius, and could not invent thoſe ſtrong arguments, which one who pretends to philoſophize has occaſion for. He had an admirable memory, and could repeat to a wonder the Lectures of his Profeſſor, and what he read in books: this was what he excelled in; for if he had the objections or difficulties of an opponent to anſwer, he ſoon diſcovered his weakneſs. His ſyſtem of Morality was very ſound [A]. It is aſſerted that he did not approve of thoſe diminutive and endearing expreſſions, which mothers

[A] His ſyſtem of morality was very ſound.] We may judge of it by the maxims he followed when he bought any thing. He aſſerted that one muſt never make an advantage of the ſeller's ignorance, but that one ought to acquaint him with the true price of his wares, when he does not know it. They who acted otherwiſe were according to him guilty of a very great injuſtice. They did not rob after the manner of Highwaymen, and with danger of their lives, but they perverted the law, and corrupted juſtice. He did not like this axiom volenti non fit injuria. i. e. " There is no injury done to a man that conſents to " it." He pretended that beſides the injuries that are committed by mere force, there are others that are done without acting againſt the conſent of thoſe that ſuffer them. He uſed himſelf to practiſe this noble theory; for as he obſerved one day, that a man who was ſelling him a book to him did not put the whole value upon it, he acquainted him with it, and paid for the book more than he was aſked for it. He did the ſame ſeveral other times, and whenever there was occaſion for it (1). Καὶ οὐχ ἅπαξ τὴν δικαιοσύνην ταύτην, ὡς τοῖς ἄλλοις ἐδέ τις ἐπιστροφὴ· ἀλλὰ καὶ πολλάκις, ὁσάκις συνέβαινεν ἀγνοεῖν τὸν πιπράσκοντα τὸ δίκαιον τίμημα ἐπεδείκνυτο,

(1) Taken from Photius, pag. 1044.

(a) Ὁ δὲ ἀκούσας ἠγανάκτησε, καὶ ἐπετίμησε τὸν παιδικὸν τοῦτον ὑποκορισμὸν. Photius, Biblioth. pag. 1044.

mothers and nurſes are wont to uſe with regard to children, and that he reproved his wife ſeverely (a) on that account (b).

(b) Taken from Photius, in the the Extract of Damaſcius, pag. m. 1044.

(2) Photius, in Damaſcio, Biblioth. pag. 1044.

ἐπεδείκνυτο. i. e. "Nor did he practiſe this kind of "juſtice once only, which others do not in the leaſt "mind, but ſeveral times, and as often as the ſeller "did not know the true price of what he ſold, he "acquainted him with it." Can any thing be imagined more worthy a Philoſopher? The Chriſtians who do the ſame are very ſcarce.

Rara avis in terris nigroque ſimillima cygno. (3) Juven. Sat. 6. ver. 164.

"A black ſwan is not half ſo rare a bird."
Dryden.

☞HERODIAN, an eminent Greek Hiſtorian, flouriſhed under the reigns of Severus, Caracalla, Heliogabalus, Alexander, and Maximin (a). His Hiſtory contains eight books, and begins from the death of Marcus Antoninus the Philoſopher, and ends with the death of Balbinus and Maximin, and the beginning of the reign of Gordian. It was tranſlated into Latin with great elegance by Angelus Politianus, and paſſed thro' ſeveral editions. Julius Capitolinus (b) charges him with favouring Maximin out of prejudice againſt the Emperor Alexander. Photius (c) tells us, that his ſtyle is elegant and perſpicuous, and that he is ſcarce inferior to any Hiſtorian in his manner of writing. Iſaac Caſaubon (d), and John Henry Bœcler (e) incline to acquit him of the imputation of partiality againſt Alexander caſt upon him by Capitolinus. T

(a) Martini Hankii de Romanarum Rerum Scriptoribus, Part 1. cap. 21. pag. 129. edit. Lipſiæ 1669 in 4to.

(b) In Maximinis, cap. 12.

(c) Bibliotheca, cap. 99.

(d) In Notis ad Capitolinum in Maximinis.

(e) In Præfatione in Herodianum, edit. Argentorati 1644 in 8vo.

☞HERODOTUS, an antient Greek Hiſtorian, was born at Halicarnaſſus, according to Pamphila cited by Aulus Gellius (a), in the firſt year of the ſeventy fourth Olympiad, ſince he was fifty years old at the beginning of the Peloponneſian war, and but four years of age when Xerxes invaded Greece. The name of his father was Lyxus, and that of his mother Dryo (b). The city of Halicarnaſſus being at that time under the dominion of Lygdamis, grandſon of Artemiſia Queen of Caria, Herodotus quitted his country in ſearch after the liberty which is neceſſary to learned men, and retired to Samos, from whence he travelled into Egypt, Italy, and through all Greece; and in his travels acquired the knowledge of the origin and hiſtory of Nations. He then begun his Hiſtory [A], and after having laboured in that work in the Iſle of Samos, he returned to

(a) Lib. 13. cap. 23.

(b) Suidas, in voce Ἡρόδοτος.

[A] His Hiſtory.] His principal deſign in it was, to write an account of the Perſian war againſt the Greeks, from the reign of Cyrus to that of Xerxes; but he alſo extended it to the Hiſtory of other nations. Lucian informs us (1), That our Author having left Caria to go into Greece, employed his thoughts in contriving meaſures, by which in a ſmall time, and without much trouble, he might gain great reputation. He foreſaw, that it would be tedious to go through the reſpective places, and recite them to the Athenians, Corinthians, Argives, and Lacedemonians. He thought it moſt proper to take the opportunity of their aſſembling all together; and accordingly recited his work at the Olympic Games; which rendered him more famous than even thoſe, who had obtained the prizes. None were ignoranr of his name, nor was there a ſingle perſon in Greece, who had not either ſeen him at the Olympic Games, or heard thoſe ſpeak of him, who came thence; ſo that wherever he came, the people pointed to him with their Finger, ſaying, "This is that Herodotus, who has written the Per-"ſian wars in the Ionick Dialect; this is he, who "has celebrated our victories." His work is divided into nine Books, each of which are diſtinguiſhed by the name of one of the Muſes. His ſtyle has been admired by all antiquity, and the beſt Judges of the modern Ages. With regard to the truth of his Hiſtory, he has been accuſed by ſeveral Authors as faulty in that reſpect. Cteſias ſuſpected him in his Hiſtories of the Medes and Aſſyrians. And Manetho cenſured his account of Egypt; and it is ſaid, that Thucydides had him in his eye, when he blames thoſe Hiſtories, which were writ for no other end but to divert the Reader. But that Hiſtorian did not apply this to our Author, but ſays it in general of all Hiſtories of that character. Strabo particularly accuſes Herodotus of this fault, and tells us, that he trifles very agreeably, interweaving extraordinary events with his narration by way of ornament. Juvenal likewiſe aims at him in that paſſage (2):

(1) Du Pin, Bibliotheque Univ. Hiſt.

(2) Satyr 10.

——— ——— Creditur olim
Velificatus Athos, & quicquid Grecia mendax
Audet in Hiſtoriâ.

But none have ventured to attack him with ſo much freedom as Plutarch, who conceived a warm reſentment againſt him for caſting an odium upon his countrymen the Thebans. This he owns to be the motives of his writing that little Treatiſe of the Malignity of Herodotus (3), in which he accuſes that Hiſtorian of having maliciouſly taxed the Honour not only of the Thebans and Corinthians, but almoſt all the Greeks, out of partiality to the Medes, and in order to raiſe the glory of his country higher in the perſon of Artemiſia Queen of Halicarnaſſus, whoſe heroick Actions in the battle of Salamis he ſo exaggerates, that this Princeſs alone takes up the greateſt part of his Narration. Plutarch owns, that it is one of the beſt written and moſt agreeable pieces, which can be read; but adds, that amidſt the charms of his Narrative he makes his Readers ſwallow the poiſon of Detraction; and compares the Malignity, which he imputes to him, to Cantharides covered with Roſes. Some are of opinion, that Plutarch's criticiſm is written with ſo much heat, that he ſeems poſſeſſed of all that ill nature, which he aſcribes to his Antagoniſt. But La Mothe le Vayer (4) obſerves, that if we conſider in what manner Herodotus ſpeaks in his Urania of Themiſtocles, whom he accuſes of Rapine and carrying on a correſpondence with the Perſians, it is not eaſy to acquit him of the ſuſpicions of what Plutarch charges him with. Dion Chryſoſtom likewiſe (5), introduces our Author among the Corinthians, expecting from them a reward for his Hiſtory, in which they had a great ſhare; and tells us, that he had not yet falſified them. But becauſe the Corinthians declared, that they would not purchaſe honour with money, he changed the account of what paſſed in the Sea-fight at Salamis, accuſing Adimantus the Corinthian General of flying in the beginning of the battle, and betraying by that means the common cauſe of Greece. Dion adds a little afterwards, that he could not allow of what Herodotus has written upon this ſubject, the publick Epitaphs and Inſcriptions on Sepulchres, erected by the conſent of all Grece in the Iſland of Salamis, teſtifying againſt him. And he recites part of the ſame Epigrams of Simonides the Poet, which Plutarch had cited to ſhew Herodotus guilty of Prevarication. However, our Author has not wanted perſons to defend him. Aldus Manutius, Joachim Camerarius, and Henry Stephens have written Apologies for him. And the long Voyages to the North or South, and to the Eaſt Indies, which have been made in the later times, have greatly juſtified his writings, and ſhewn a prodigious number of things related by him upon the authority of others, tho' doubted by himſelf, to be true. T.

(3) Περὶ τῆς Ἡροδότου κακοηθείας.

(4) Jugemens des Hiſtoriens Grecs & Latins.

(5) Orat. 37.

to his own country, and expelled the tyrant, but afterwards finding himſelf expoſed to the envy of his fellow-citizens went to Thurium in Italy, where he died, though ſome ſay it was at Pella (c). The only remaining work of him is his Hiſtory abovementioned; beſides which he promiſed in two places of his firſt book to write the Hiſtory of Aſſyria; but this never appeared, being probably prevented by his death; for if it had ever been publiſhed, it is ſcarce credible that none of the Antients ſhould mention it. Ariſtotle indeed (d) blames Herodotus for ſaying that an eagle drank during the ſiege of Antioch, becauſe, as he affirms, that bird, as well as thoſe who have forked claws, never drinks. And this fact not being mentioned in all our author's nine books yet extant, ſome writers have conjectured, that Ariſtotle meant the Hiſtory of Aſſyria, to which the ſiege of Nineveh properly related. There is aſcribed to Herodotus a Life of Homer, printed at the end of his works; but there is no probability that this was written by the antient Herodotus. The author of that Life does not agree with him with reſpect to the time when that Poet lived; for, he ſays, that Homer flouriſhed CLXVIII years after the Trojan war, and DCLXII years before Xerxes's expedition into Greece. But Herodotus in his Euterpe affirms, that Homer and Heſiod preceded him CD years; and conſequently they flouriſhed at a greater diſtance of time from the taking of Troy. Beſides, the ſtyle of this piece is very different from that of Herodotus, and the author mentions ſeveral things of Homer, which do not at all agree with what the Antients have ſaid of that Poet; and he treats of his ſubject more like a modern Grammarian than an antient Hiſtorian. Suidas mentions an Abridgment of Herodotus's Hiſtory by Theopompus of Chios. There is ſo much reſemblance between our Author and Homer, that Longinus (e) aſſures us, that none but Herodotus perfectly imitated that Prince of Poets; and that he alone is Ὁμηρικώτατος. Cicero (f) ſtiles him the Father of Hiſtory. It was a monſtrous error of James Gaultier the Jeſuit, in his Chronographical Tables printed at Cologne in 1616, to place our author under Conſtantine the Great and his children.

(c) Idem.

(d) De Animal. lib. 8. cap. 18.

(e) In his Treatiſe of the Sublime.

(f) De Legibus, lib. 1.

HEROLD (BASIL JOHN) was born at Hochſtad (a) on the Danube in Suabia, in the year 1511. He applied himſelf to polite Literature, and went to Baſil in the year 1539, where he ſtudied at the ſame time Divinity and Hiſtory. He married there, and was appointed Miniſter to a village of that Canton; but as the bookſellers had found him proper for their ſervice, they prevailed upon him to return to Baſil in the year 1546. He prepared works for them with an incredible application; and it was to reward his continued labours, that the Magiſtrates of Baſil preſented him with the freedom of their city in the year 1556 (b). I ſhall give the titles of moſt of his works [A]. Lezana, who wrote the Annals of the Carmelites, has committed a very groſs blunder when he mentioned this author [B]. Konig has made two writers of John Herold, and Baſil John

(a) Hence it is that he ſtiles himſelf Acropolita, in his Philopſeudes.

(b) Taken from Martin Hanckius, de Scriptoribus Rerum Romanarum, tom. 2. pag. 142.

[A] I ſhall give the titles of moſt of his works.] I have mentioned in another place (1) his Philopſeudes, ſive Declamatio pro Deſid. Eraſmo Rot. contra Dialogum famoſum Anonymi cujuſdam Medici. i. e. "The "lover of falſities, or a Declamation for Eraſmus a- "gainſt an infamous Dialogue of a certain anonymous "Phyſician. This piece was printed at Baſil in the year 1541 (2), His ſix Books Belli ſacri Hiſtoria continuata, a continuation of the Hiſtory of the holy war, was printed by William of Tyre in folio in the year 1560; they begin with the year 1185, and end at the year 1521, as alſo his Princeps juventutis ſive Panegyricus Ferdinando Archiduci Auſtriæ dicatus, cum Hiſtoria Turcici belli anno 1556 geſti; i. e. "The "prince of the youths, or a Penegyrick offered to "Ferdinand Arch-duke of Auſtria, together with the "Hiſtory of the war waged againſt the Turks in the "year 1556." He tranſlated ſeveral works into the German Tongue, of which you will find a Catalogue in the Epitome of Geſner's Bibliotheque. His Pannoniæ Chronologia or Chronology of Hungary is generally printed with Bonfidias's Decads. His Treatiſe de Germaniæ veteris veræ quam primam vocant locis antiquiſſimis; item de Romanorum in Rhætia littorali ſtationibus, & hinc ortorum ibidem vicorum atque municipiorum hodie ſuperſtitum originibus. i. e. "Of "the moſt ancient place of old true Germany, which "they now call the firſt, and of the ſtations of the "Romans in Rhætia or the Banks of the Danube, "and of the origin of the Towns and Cities which "do ſtill ſubſiſt, and owe their Foundation to theſe "Nations." This Treatiſe, I ſay, has been inſerted in the firſt vol. of Simon Schardius's Collection de Scriptoribus rerum Germanicarum, i. e. "Of the writers of the "Affairs of Germany." Chriſtopher Lehman (3) has criticized upon it in the firſt Book of his Chronicle of Spires; but there has been a vindication of Heraldus publiſhed. How laborious the latter was, will appear to any one who conſults the Preface (4), which he has prefixed to the firſt Volume of Eugyppius's Treaſures: He promiſes there a collection of Stratagems, and I find in Geſner's Epitome, that he has publiſhed ſix Chiliads or Thouſands of it. He made a funeral Oration on the death of the Emperor Ferdinand, which was printed at Francfort in the year 1564. We muſt not forget to obſerve, that he publiſhed (5) the writings of 76 Authors under the Title of Orthodoxographi, i. e. "Orthodox writers," and an Hæreſeologia ſeu Syntagma veterum Theologorum tam Græcorum quam Latinorum numero 18, qui graſſatas in Eccleſia Hæreſes confutarunt, & præcipua Theologiæ capita tractarunt (6). i. e. "A collection of 18 antient Divines, both Greek "and Latin, who have refuted the Hereſies, which "have raged in the Church, and who have treated of "the chief ſubjects in Divinity."

(1) In the remark [C] of the article ERASMUS.

(2) Geſnerus, in Biblioth. folio 425, verſo.

(3) See Zeiller, De Hiſtoricis, Part 2. pag. 74.

(4) Geſner, Biblioth. fol. 425 verſo gives a paſſage of it.

(5) At Baſil in the year 1555.

(6) At Baſil in the year 1556.

[B] Lezana ... has committed a very groſs blunder, when he mentioned this Author.] He obſerves under the year 1159, that St. Antoninus was in the wrong to tranſcribe word for word a paſſage from John Heroldus, without refuting him. This paſſage contains a deſcription of the firſt dreſs of the Carmelites. The Jeſuit Papebroch has cenſured this blunder, obſerving that St. Antoninus flouriſhed a whole Century before John Herold; for, adds he, St. Antoninus died in the year 1459, and the Princeps juventutis, which Herold dedicated to the Arch-duke Ferdinand, was printed in the year 1557 (7). There is not a full Century between them; for we have ſome Books of Heroldus, printed in the year 1540; but yet Lezana was greatly miſtaken. Here follows a queſtion, which this Jeſuit propoſed to a Carmelite, who wrote againſt him (8). An Joannes Heroldus Hochſtenſis, continuator belli ſacri, cujus Continuationis ſingulos libros Catholicis Prælatis dedicavit, ſemper cum laude etiam de religioſis mendicantibus locutus, ſed in ſolis Carmelitis explodens enormem quem fingebant ſeſe in Syria habuiſſe, monaſteriorum ac Fratrum numerum; an, inquam Heroldus iſte indignus ſit qui citetur, tanquam infeſtiſſimus ſedis Apoſtolicæ

(7) See Daniel Papebroch, Reſponſ. ad Exhibit. Errorum, p. 153.

(8) Papebroch. in Synopſi Quæſt. curioſarum, Art. 24. pag. 43.

John Herold; he ſhould not have diſtinguiſhed the one from the other. There was in the fifteenth Century a Dominican Friar named JOHN HEROLDUS, a German by nation; he was an able Divine, and a very good Preacher. He compoſed ſeveral books, which have been printed in different places. There was an edition of his works publiſhed at Mentz in the year 1612 in three volumes in quarto (c).

(c) See Cave, Script. Eccleſ. Hiſt. Literar. Part 2. pag. 314, 315. of the Geneva edit. 1699.

licæ hoſtis: eſto juvenis ſub nomine Heroldi Acropolitani, ſcripſerit Apologiam pro Eraſmo, inter prohibitos relatam. i. e. "Whether John Herold of Hochſtad, "who continued the Hiſtory of the holy war, every "part of which continuation he dedicated to ſome "Catholick Prelate, and who always ſpoke with "praiſe, even of the mendicant Fryars, but only re-"jected that immenſe number of Monaſteries and "Brethren, which the Carmelites feigned they had in "Syria, whether, I ſay, this Herold is unworthy to "be quoted, as being a moſt bitter enemy of the "Apoſtolick See? though, indeed, in his youth, he "wrote under the name of Herold of Acropolita an "Apology for Eraſmus, which is ranked amongſt the "prohibited Books."

HERWART (JOHN (GEORGE) Chancellor of Bavaria towards the beginning of the ſeventeenth Century, gained a reputation by the Apology he wrote for the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria againſt the falſities of Bzovius, whom he alſo charged with ſeveral other blunders. Scaliger judged him an indifferent Chronologiſt (a).

(a) See the Scaligerana, under the word Chancelier, pag. m. 48.

Our Herwart was deſcended from a Patrician family, which came originally from Augſburg; I ſhall give the title of a Chronological work he compoſed, and that of a book which his ſon publiſhed [A], and which contains a very particular opinion concerning the firſt Gods of the Heathens; for the author maintains, that the Winds, the Magnetical Needle, &c. were the firſt Gods of the Egyptians, and that they were worſhiped under myſterious names. There is a branch of the family of the Herwarts ſettled at Paris, where they hold a conſiderable rank (b).

(b) Monſ. Fachelier Des-Mareſts, whom I have already mentioned above, quotation (3) of the article EPPENDORF, has communicated to me almoſt all that I obſerve in this addition, both in the Text and in the Commentary.

[A] I ſhall give the Title of a Chronological work he compoſed, and that of a Book which his ſon publiſhed.] Chronologia nova, vera, & ad calculum aſtronomicum revocata. i. e. "A new and true Chronology, calcula-"ted from Aſtronomical Obſervations," printed at Munich in the year 1612, in 4to; Pars prima. Part the firſt. The ſecond part was printed in the year 1626. Pars altera quæ eſt Chronologicorum ſeu emendatæ temporum rationis, adverſus incredibiles aliorum errores. i. e. "Part the ſecond, which contains "the Chronology reformed from the incredible errors "of others," in 4to. You will ſee his ſon's Chriſtian name in the following title, which I promiſe to tranſcribe. Admiranda Ethnicæ Theologiæ Myſteria propalata, ubi lapidem magnetem antiquiſſimis paſſim nationibus pro Deo cultum, & artem qua navigationes magneticæ per univerſum orbem inſtituerentur à veterum ſacerdotibus ſub involucris deorum dearumque, & aliarum perinde fabularum cortice ſummo ſtudio occultatam eſſe noviter commonſtratur. Acceſſit exacta temporum ratio adverſus incredibiles Chronologiæ vulgaris errores. Opus diu deſideratum. Jo. Fredericus Herwart ab Hohenburg in Schuuindeck S. E. Bavariæ, &c. à Conſiliis ex incompletis optimi parentis P. M. eruit monumentis, atque ad finem perduxit. i. e. "The wonder-"ful Myſteries of the Heathen Theology unfolded; "ſhewing that the Loadſtone has been worſhipped "every where by the moſt antient nation, as a God, "and that the art of navigating over the whole world "by the help of the Loadſtone was moſt carefully hid "by the Prieſts of the antients under the myſterious "names of the Gods and Goddeſſes, and under the "veil of ſuch other Fables. To which is added, an "exact account of times, againſt the incredible errors "of the vulgar Chronology. A work that has "been a great while wanted. Joh. Frederick Her-"wart of Hohenburg in Schuuindek, counſellor to "the Elector of Bavaria, has extracted it from the "imperfect manuſcript of his late father, and com-"pleated it." At Munich, 1626, in 4to. There is a great deal of learning in this work; we find an Index prefixed to it, intitled, Tabula nauticæ & hieroglyphicæ deſcriptionis totius mundi vetuſtiſſima, quæ Theologiam Chaldæorum Babylonis Ierogrammateon Ægypti, & Orphei Phrygis, nec non Magiæ, Sophiæque Zoroaſtris & Magorum Perſidis oſtendit originem. i. e. "An Index containing a deſcription of the moſt an-"cient navigation, and of the Hieroglyphicks uſed in "the whole world; which ſhews the origin of the Theo-"logy of the Chaldeans of Babylon, of the holy "ſcribes in Egypt, and of Orpheus in Phrygia; as "alſo of the Magic and Wiſdom of Zoroaſter, and of "Magi or Wiſe-men in Perſia." Voſſius's ſilence with regard to the Books I have mentioned here, is to be wondered at. That learned man does not ſay a word of them, neither in his collection of Chronology, nor in his large work of the origin of Idolatry, where he has collected a great many particulars concerning the Loadſtone, and where he did not forget to obſerve, that the winds were worſhipped as Gods. Did not he in the leaſt know, that the two Herwarts both the father and the ſon were Authors? This would be ſtrange in a man of ſuch an extenſive reading. Or did he not care to quote them, though he were acquainted with their works? This would not be leſs ſtrange in an author, who loved ſo much to make a ſhew of his reading.

HESHUSIUS (TILEMANNUS) a Divine of the Augſburg Confeſſion, born at Weſel [A] in the year 1526, gained a very indifferent reputation by his reſtleſs and violent temper. He was ſtill very young when two conſiderable poſts were conferred upon him at Heidelberg, namely that of Divinity Profeſſor, and that of Preacher in the Church of the Holy Ghoſt. He did not perform his functions without occaſioning a great confuſion; for there aroſe a terrible diſpute between him and William Clebitius concerning the doctrine of the Euchariſt. The Elector Palatine Frederic III, being perſuaded that Melanchthon's opinion would be of great weight to put an end to this controverſy, conſulted him upon that ſubject. His anſwer exaſperated Heſhuſius, who would not ſwerve a jot from Luther's opinions; and as there was no likelihood to ſee an end of the injuries with which the parties loaded each other [B], as long as Heſhuſius ſhould live

(1) Quenſtedt, de Patris Viror. Illuſt. pag. 208.

[A] Born at Weſel.] According to Moreri, he was born at Ober Weſel, upper Weſel, on the Rhine in the Dioceſs of Treves. But Quenſtadt (8), who aſſerts it was at Weſel in the dutchy of Cleves, deſerves, I think, more credit.

[B] There was no likelihood to ſee an end of the injuries live at Heidelberg, he was commanded to leave that City. He went into Saxony, and publiſhed ſome polemical writings in the Univerſity of Iena. Being called into Pruſſia he taught Divinity at Koningſberg, till he was baniſhed in the year 1577 with the Miniſters of his faction. He had a violent diſpute with Wigandus upon ſubjects of very little importance (a) [C]. He retired with his family to Lubec, and thence to Helmſtad, where he was made Profeſſor of Divinity. He died there September the 25th 1588. He did ſtrongly oppoſe the doctrine of Ubiquity in the Conference of Quellenburg held in the year 1583 [D]. Melchior Adam, from whom I have borrowed what I have been relating, gives us but a very ſuperficial account of this man's actions. I adviſe them, who have a mind to ſee them related more at length, to conſult Heſhuſius's Life written by juries with which the Parties loaded each other.] Melanchthon's anſwer was compoſed in the year 1559; they publiſhed it after his death, without any regard to his intention (2). Heſhuſius fell in a furious paſſion againſt him, and forgot the reſpect he owed to his great Maſter. Heſhuſius itaque cùm Lutheri de cœna ſacra ſententiam mordicus retineret ac propugnaret: à principe Electore, ut finis eſſet conviciorum & inſectationum in ſua urbe, dimiſſus offenſuſque vehementer judicio Melanchthonis de ſe, acerbè reſpondit, ac ne moro tuo quidem & benè merito præceptori pepercit (3). i. e. "Heſhuſius, who maintained and defended Luther's "opinion concerning the Lord's Supper obſtinately, "was baniſhed from the Town by the Elector; and "being extremely offended at Melanchthon's judgment "of him, he anſwered him paſſionately, nor did he "in the leaſt ſpare his Maſter, though he was dead, "and to whom he was very much obliged." Calvin reproves him for his paſſion againſt Melanchthon. Pauliſper expendant lectores, ſays he (4), quam atrociter Philippum Melanchthonem ſuum præceptorem cujus memoriam ſancte revereri debuerat, ſugillet ac laceret . . . . . Probroſis elogiis Philippum ita digito monſtrat, ut videri poſſit data opera materiam ejus traducendi in ſcribendo libro captaſſe. i. e. "Let the Readers conſi-"der a little, how groſly he defames and abuſes Phi-"lip Melanchthon, who was his Maſter, and whoſe "memory he ought to have religiouſly revered . . . . "He leads him with ſuch opprobrious language, that "he ſeems to have taken an opportunity of writing "that Book on purpoſe to traduce him.

(a) Ingens inter ipſum & Wigandum diſſidium fuit, exortum propter abſtracti uſum. Melchior Adam, in Vit. Theolog. pag. 622.

(2) Publice poſt mortem auctoris, contraque voluntatem ejus editum exſtat in Conſil. Th. Part 2. pag. 378. Melchior Adam, in Vitis Theol. pag. 622.

(3) Melch. Adam, in Vitis Theolog. pag. 622.

(4) Calvin. in dilucida Explicat. Janæ Doctrinæ de vera participatione, pag. 840. Tractat. Theolog.

[C] He had a violent diſpute with Wigandus upon ſubjects of very little importance.] The origin of this diſpute was as follows: Heſhuſius aſſerted in a Book againſt Beza (5), that the Fleſh of Jeſus Chriſt is to be worſhipped in abſtracto (6). Non ſolum in concreto dici debere, filium Dei eſſe adorandum, omnipotentem, & vivificum, ſed etiam in abſtracto carnem Chriſti eſſe adorandam: quia majeſtas adorationis ſit carni communicata. i. e. "We ought to ſay not only, that the al-"mighty and vivifying ſon of God is to be worſhip-"ped in concreto, that is, the Godhead being con-"ſidered united with the human nature, but alſo that "Chriſt's fleſh is to be adored in abſtracto, that is, "being conſidered without that union, becauſe the "majeſty of adoration is communicated to the fleſh." Great clamours were raiſed againſt him on this account; it was pretended that he aſſerted, Jeſus Chriſt's fleſh is adorable in itſelf, without conſidering the hypoſtatical union. Quod in abſtracto & in ſua eſſentia caro Chriſti, etiam extra unionem conſiderata, ſit adoranda (7). He denied that this was his opinion, and he explained his meaning. But his adverſaries were not ſatisfied with this. Biſhop Wigandus (8) aſſerted, that this propoſition, Humanitas Chriſti in abſtracto eſt adoranda, omnipotens, vivifica. i. e. "Chriſt's hu-"man nature conſidered in itſelf is adorable, al-"mighty, and vivifying," that this propoſition, I ſay, was dangerous. Heſhuſius maintained that he never aſſerted it, and explained his meaning again; but to no purpoſe: A Synod was aſſembled, in which Heſhuſius's expreſſion was rejected, and Wigandus would even oblige him to make a public recantation; which Heſhuſius refuſing to do, he was baniſhed the country, though he promiſed to alter and correct the improper expreſſions that dropped from his pen. All the Miniſters who endeavoured to ſupport him, received the ſame treatment. The adminiſtrator of Pruſſia conſulted in the year 1578 the Divines, who were met at Hertzburg, to draw up articles of union and agreement, and having received from them an anſwer that was favourable to Heſhuſius, he commanded Wigandus not to put an end to this controverſy. This was the eleventh ſchiſm that happened in the Lutheran church (9). It is more uſeful, than ſome perſons may imagine, to be acquainted with ſuch hiſtories; we learn by them to know by what factious ſpirit the authors of ſuch controverſies are animated.

(5) Intitled, Aſſertio contra Bezianam Exegeſin Sacramentorum.

(6) Micrælius, Syntagm. Hiſt. Eccleſ. pag. m. 867.

(7) Micrælius, ibid.

(8) Wigandus Epiſcopus Pomezanienſis. Idem, ibid.

[D] He did . . . oppoſe the doctrine of Ubiquity in the conference of Quellenburg, held in the year 1583.] This conference was held January the 14th, and 16th, 1583 (10), between the divines of his Highneſs the Elector of Saxony, and thoſe of Brunſwick. Heſhuſius was at the head of the latter. The acts of this diſpute and conference were publiſhed. In eo (Colloquio) præcipuæ partes demandatæ à Theologis Brunſuicenſibus Heſhuſio fuerunt, qui διαφόρων negavit dogma illud generalis Ubiquitatis . . . . in ſacræ ſcripturæ canone haberi, neque inde poſſe demonſtrari (11). i. e. "In "this conference the divines of Brunſwick committed "the chief part to Heſhuſius, who openly denied that "the doctrine of a general Ubiquity . . . . was to be "found in the holy ſcripture, and aſſerted that it "could not be proved from it." Quenſtedt pretends that Heſhuſius did not know the true ſtate of the queſtion, aſcribing to his adverſaries a doctrine which they did not hold, and which was a mere invention of his own brains. This is often the caſe in ſuch controverſies. Let us tranſcribe Quenſtedt's words: they are hiſtorical with regard to our Doctor. Veſalia inferior vulgo Unter Weſel . . . urbs Cliviæ clariſſima, . . . excepit in hanc lucem editum . . . . Tilemannum Heſhuſium Theologum Lutheranum inſignem, multiſque ſcriptis Didacticis & Polemicis contra Calviniſtas clarum, qui ante Librum Concordiæ defendit Omnipræſentiam Carnis Chriſti, poſtmodum verò non tam ipſam in Libro Concordiæ de Majeſtate Chriſti hominis doctrinam, quam præconceptum cerebri ſui idolum impugnavit, talem ſcil. omnipræſentiam, quâ ſubſtantia Carnis Chriſti ſit localiter, extenſivè, diffuſivè & objectivè in omnibus creaturis, cum qua portentoſâ ubiquitate noſtris Eccleſiis nihil quicquam fuit commercii. Vide Concord. Concord. Hutteri, cap. XLVI. (12). i. e. "Lower Weſel . . . . a famous city in the "Duchy of Cleves . . . . gave birth . . . to Tileman-"nus Heſhuſius, a very eminent Lutheran Divine, "who aſſerted the omnipotence of Chriſt's fleſh, be-"fore the book of concord was publiſhed. But after-"wards, he refuted not ſo much the doctrine concern-"ing the Majeſty of the Man Chriſt, which is aſſert-"ed in the book of Concord, as a vain fancy of his "own brains, namely ſuch an omnipreſence, by "which the ſubſtance of Chriſt's fleſh is locally, ex-"tenſively, diffuſively, and objectively in all the "creatures, which monſtrous ubiquity our churches "never dreamt of. See Hutterus's Concord of Con-"cord, chap. 46." Micrælius pretends that Heſhuſius diſputed only out of ſpite againſt the doctrine of Ubiquity. There was an aſſembly held to conſider of a vindication that was to be publiſhed of the book of Concord, in which aſſembly meaſures were taken which Heſhuſius did not approve of. This was enough to exaſperate his contradicting ſpirit, and to make him take up arms againſt the Ubiquitarians. Contra Calvinianos ore & calamo omnipræſentiam carnis Chriſti fortiter uſque ad annum Chriſti 1582 defendit. Tandem cum nonnulli theologorum ad conſcribendam pro Formula concordiæ apologiam convenirent: ille ſuum ad arbitrium non omnia agi indignatus, majeſtatem Chriſti, libro Concordiæ inſertam, quam ubiquitatem generalem vocant, oppugnare cœpit, & cum Dan. Hoffmanno, collega, orthodoxis eam ſententiam affinxit, ac ſi ſubſtantiam carnis Chriſti extenſive ac localiter in omnibus creaturis eſſe

(9) Taken from Micrælius, ibid.

(10) According to Melchior Adam, in Vitis Theolog. pag. 622. Micrælius places it under the year 1585. I cite him below quotation (14).

(11) Melch. Adam. ibid. pag. 622.

(12) Quenſtedt, de Patriis Viror. Illuſtr. pag. 622.

by his ſon-in-law [E]. Heſhuſius was four times baniſhed [F], and he took care, if we may believe Calvin (b), not to receive any detriment by it. He has publiſhed ſeveral books [G]. They who mention to us a ſect of the Heſhuſians, and who charge them with the opinion of Arius, deſerve the utmoſt contempt [H], and (b) See the remark [F].

eſſe dicerent. Sic igitur proprii cerebri commentum impugnans, loco omnipræſentiæ introduxit multipræſentiam (13). i. e. " He had vigorouſly defended Chriſt's om-(13) Micrælius, Syntag. Eccleſ. Hiſt. pag. 758. " nipreſence againſt the Calviniſts, both in his diſ-" courſes and in his writings, till the year 1582.
" But at laſt, when ſome Divines were agreed about " an apology for the formulary of union, Heſhuſius
" being exaſperated becauſe every thing was not done
" according to his own will, began to attack Chriſt's
" Majeſty, as it is aſſerted under the name of general
" Ubiquity in the book of Concord, and with his col-
" legue Dan. Hoffman, he aſcribed to the orthodox an " opinion, as though they aſſerted that Chriſt's fleſh
" is extenſively and locally preſent in every creature.
" Thus, attacking a fancy of his own brains, he " ſuppoſes a preſence in ſeveral places, inſtead of an " omnipreſence." Daniel Hoffman aſſiſted him vi-gorouſly, and would not yield one ſingle point in the (14) Nec pertinacia ejus in Quedlenburgenſi Colloquio anno 1585. frangi voluit. Idem, ibid. pag. 759. conference of Quellenburg (14).

[E] Melchior Adam . . . . gives us but a very ſuperficial account of this man . . . . I adviſe . . . . to conſult Heſhuſius's life . . . . by his ſon-in-law.] The authors of the Journal intitled Acta Eruditorum, publiſhed at Leipſic, were in the right to obſerve it (15). Tilemanni Heſhuſii vitam conciſam admodum & mancam ad nos tranſmiſit Melchior Adam, Vit. Germ. Theolog. p. 621. ſeq. multo locupletiorem, eamque carmine heroico exaratam, & Heſhuſii commentariis in Eſaiam adjectam gener ejus D. Jo. Olearius: ubi & quarti, quod ſuſtinendum illi fuit, mentionem reperies exilii ; cujus hiſtoriam illuſtrabunt egregie quæ (16) Parte II. ſub anno 1565. p. 182. ſeqq. tum in ipſius Heſhuſii, tum in aliorum epiſtolis leguntur. i. e. " Melchior Adam has given us
" but a ſhort and very imperfect account of Tilemannus Heſhuſius, in his lives of the German Divines, p. 621, &c. We have a much fuller account of him
" written in heroic verſe by his ſon-in-law John Olearius, and added to Heſhuſius's Commentary on
" Iſaiah ; you will find there an account of his fourth
" baniſhment, the hiſtory of which is wonderfully
" cleared up by what we read of in the letters of Heſhuſius and others, in the ſecond part, under the year
" 1565, pag. 182, &c."

(15) Acta Eruditor. Lipſienſ. Menſe Junio 1684, pag. 288.

(16) That is to ſay, in the book which is intitled, Hiſtoriæ Eccleſiaſticæ ſeculi à Chriſto nato ſexti decimi ſupplementum, celeberrimorum ex illo ævo Theologorum Epiſtolis ad Joannem, Eraſmum, & Philippum Marbachios conſtans... editum à Jo. Fechtio.

[F] Heſhuſius was four times baniſhed.] You may have obſerved in the paſſage from the Journal of Leipſic, which I have juſt now quoted ; here follows a diſtich, which confirms the ſame particular, and which is not very honourable to this Doctor's memory.

Quæritur, Heſhuſi, quarta cur pulſus ab urbe ;
In promptu cauſa eſt, ſeditioſus eras (17).

(17) See the article ACRONIUS in the text.

" They aſk, Heſhuſius, why you was baniſhed from " a fourth city ? The reaſon of it is plain ; you was
" a quarrelſom man."

(18) Calvin. Tractat. Theolog. pag. 842. col. 1. The character Calvin gives us (18) of Heſhuſius does wonderfully confirm what is aſſerted in this diſtich. Illuc (19) eum rapit naturæ intemperies, vel quod videt in moderata docendi ratione nullum ſibi laudis gradum relinqui, qui tamen ambitione totus ad inſaniam uſque flagret. Certè in ſuo libello turbulenti ſe ingenii hominem, præcipitis etiam audaciæ & temeritatis eſſe prodit . . . Concionatur de ingentibus ſuis periculis, qui ſemper non minus ſecurè, quam lautè, delicias ſuas coluit. Prædicat multiplices ærumnas, qui cùm largos theſauros habeat domi repoſitos, ſemper amplis ſtipendiis ſuas operas vendiderit, omnia tamen ſolus ingurgitat. Verum quidem eſt, quum multis locis tranquillum nidum figere voluerit, ſæpius propria inquietudine fuiſſe excuſſum. Sic Gloſſario (20), Roſtochio, Heidelberga, Brema pulſus, Magdeburgum nuper conceſſit. Ac laudi quidem danda eſſent exilia, ſi pro conſtanti veritatis confeſſione ſolum vertere ſæpius coactus eſſet : ſed quum homo inexplebili ambitione plenus, contentionibus & rixis deditus, immani verò ferocia ubique fuerit intolerabilis, non eſt cur queratur aliorum injuria ſe fuiſſe vexatum, qui ſua importunitate moleſtias homini delicato graves exhibuit. Intereà tamen providè ſibi cavit, ne damnoſæ eſſent migrationes : quinetiam divitiæ ipſum magis animoſum reddunt. i. e. " His violent temper brought him to this, or his

(19) That is to ſay, ad Paradoxa, & opinionum abſurditatem, i. e. " To para-
" doxes, and abſurd opinions."

(20) I think it ought to have been Goſſario.

" knowing, that he could not get any reputation by
" a moderate way of teaching, though he be ambi" tious even to madneſs. And indeed he ſhews him-
" ſelf in his little book a turbulent man, of a deſperate
" audaciouſneſs and temerity. He boaſts of the great " dangers to which he has been expoſed, though he " treats himſelf delicately, living with as much ſecurity
" as ſplendor. He mentions his numerous misfor-
" tunes, who having large ſums of money at home,
" always ſold his labours for a great price, and yet
" enjoys all by himſelf alone. It is true indeed, that
" as he deſigned to lead a quiet life in ſeveral places,
" he was often baniſhed from them becauſe of his reſt-
" leſs temper. Thus being baniſhed from Goſlar,
" Roſtoch, Heidelberg and Bremen, he removed late" ly to Magdeburg. Theſe baniſhments might be ho" nourable to him, had he been obliged to remove " from place to place for his conſtant confeſſion of " the truth. But as this man through his unſatiable
" ambition, quarrelſome temper, and exceſſive ſur-
" lineſs, was every where unſufferable, he ought not to " complain that he was unjuſtly vexed, ſince by his " own outrageouſneſs he drew upon him thoſe vexations,
" which indeed were hard for a man of a tender con-
" ſtitution. However, he took care not to ſuffer any " damage by theſe changings of habitation ; nay,
" his very riches render him more outrageous." We might infer from this paſſage, that Heſhuſius was baniſhed above four times ; for it is not obſerved there that he was baniſhed from Iena, and then from Pruſſia ; nor could this be obſerved, ſince theſe facts happened after this book of Calvin was written (21). He was expelled from Iena in the year 1573 (22), and went into Pruſſia, where he was made Biſhop of Samia in Morlinus's ſtead.

(21) It was written in the year 1561.

(22) Micrælius, Syntagm. Hiſt. Eccleſ. pag. 758.

[G] He has publiſhed ſeveral books.] A Commentary on the Pſalms, on Iſaiah, and on all St. Paul's Epiſtles. A Treatiſe of the Lord's Supper, and of Juſtification. Aſſertio Teſtamenti Jeſu Chriſti contra blaſphemias Calviniſtarum. i. e. " A Vindication of " Chriſt's Teſtament, againſt the blaſphemies of the " Calviniſts." Antidotum contra impium dogma Math. Flacii Illyrici, quo aſſerit quod peccatum originis ſit ſubſtantia. i. e. " An Antidote againſt Math. Flacius
" Illyricus's impious opinion, who aſſerts that origi" nal ſin is a Subſtance." De ſervo hominis arbitrio, & converſione ejus per Dei gratiam, contra Synergiæ aſſertores. i. e. " Of man's will being enſlaved and
" of his converſion by God's grace, againſt thoſe who
" aſſert, that a man co-operates in his converſion."
De vera Eccleſia, ejuſque auctoritate. i. e. " Of the " true Church and of her Authority. . . . &c."

[H] They who mention to us a ſect of the Heſhuſians . . . deſerve the utmoſt contempt.] I have more than once (23) given my opinion of thoſe wretched Compilers of Catalogues of Heretics. The only voucher they have on this occaſion is a Dialogue of Lindanus, in which are the following words (24) : Heſhuſii, a Tilmanno Heſhuſio quem Calvinus Servetianum infamat, Boquinus Arrianum, Wilhelmus Cleinwitzius vero præter peculatum plurimis de fidei capitibus accuſat : quibus hoc anno (25) ſua reſpondit defenſione objecta inficiatus, niſi quod illud Trinitas eſt unitas negat ſe meminiſſe an dixerit in lectionibus : cum ita diſerte doceat de præſentia Chriſti corporis in cœna Domini objectione quinta. i. e. " The Heſhuſians are
" thus called from Tilemannus Heſhuſius, whom Calvin
" repreſents as a diſciple of Serveut ; Boquinus as an " Arian, and Will. Cleinwitzius, beſides the crime of " embezzling money, charges him alſo with errors in " ſeveral points of the Chriſtian Faith. He has an-
" ſwered them this year (1564) by denying the charges,
" adding that he did not remember he ever aſſerted in " his lectures that the Trinity is an Unity, where-
" as he aſſerts it expreſly in his Treatiſe of the Pre-
" ſence of Chriſt's Body, in the Sacrament, Ob" jection the fifth." There are three things to be cenſured in this paſſage. I. It is an impertinent piece of injuſtice to charge a man with the hereſies, of which his adverſaries accuſe him in the heat of the controverſy. Has not Hunnius a Lutheran author

(23) See the article BEZANITES.

(24) Lindanus, in Dubitat. Dial. 2. pag. 135.

(25) That is to ſay the year 1564, which is the date of Lindanus's dedication.

and yet Moreri followed their account.

wrote a pretty large book in which he boasts that he has convicted Calvin of Judaism? And therefore tho' Calvin, Boquinus, and other such adversaries of Heshusius, being exasperated by his opprobrious language, ascribe Arian opinions to him, no man of sense will think this a sufficient reason to stile him an Arian. He will think, that such imputations may very well be the fruit of too great a leisure, which a man misimploys in examining too scrupulously every word of his enemy, and in putting a false construction upon them, with a design to find them heretical by far-fetched consequences. II. The injustice, which would only be impertinent, if a man did not know Heshusius's answers becomes absolutely criminal, when it is known that he publicly denied those things, with which his adversaries charged him. Now Lindanus himself tells us that he knew this. III. Though this Divine had taught some heresies, it does not follow from thence that there is a sect of Heshusians in Germany. A Professor who teaches particular doctrines does not always make proselytes to them, much less to his disciples always separate from the Church, which is necessary to deserve the name of a sect.

Prateolus, upon the bare credit of Lindanus, has put the Heshusians in the catalogue of heretics. Father Gaultier (26) has done the same on the bare credit of Prateolus.

(26) In Tabula Chronographica.

O imitatores servum pecus, ut mihi sæpe
Bilem, sæpe jocum, vestri movere tumultus (27)!

(27) Horat. Epist. 19. lib. 1. ver. 19.

" Base imitators, slaves to others wills,
" How oft you move my frowns, how oft my smiles?
Creech.

☞HEYLIN (PETER) an eminent English writer in the seventeenth Century, was descended from an antient family of his name at Pentrie-Heylin in Montgomeryshire, and second son of Henry Heylin, Gentleman (a), by Elizabeth, daughter of Francis Clampard of Wrotham in Kent (b). He was born at Burford in Oxfordshire November the 29th 1600 (c), and educated in Grammar-learning in the free-school there, where he distinguished himself by several exercises both in prose and verse, particularly a Tragi-Comedy upon the wars and destruction of Troy, and other exercises historical (d). In 1613 (e), he was admitted into Hart-Hall in Oxford; and the next year stood for a Demy's place in Magdalen-College, but being very young, and the Fellows already pre-engaged, he was then put by, but the year following elected (f). In 1616 he wrote an English Tragedy, called Spurius, which was so generally approved of by the society, that Dr. Langton the President ordered it to be acted in his lodgings (g), but it was never printed (h). Having taken the degree of Bachelor of Arts October the 17th 1617 (i), he read every long vacation, till he was Master of Arts, Lectures on Cosmography in the common Refectory of the College, of which the first being performed in the latter end of July 1618, it was so well approved, that he was chosen Probationer-Fellow, and Moderator of the Senior Form in the Hall; and on July the 19th 1619 was admitted perpetual Fellow (k). July the 1st 1620 he took the degree of Master of Arts (l). The year following he published his Microcosmus: A Description of the Great World [A]. In 1623 he was ordained Deacon and Priest by Dr. Howson, Bishop of Oxford, at St. Aldate's Church in that city (m). In 1625 he made a tour to France for about five or six weeks, the particulars of which he wrote an account of, which was printed about thirty years after [B]. April the 24th 1627 he answered pro forma, upon these two questions, 1. An Ecclesia unquam fuerit invisibilis? i. e. " Whether the Church was ever " invisible?" 2. An Ecclesia possit errare? i. e. " Whether the Church can err?" both which he determined negatively; which gave great offence [C]. In February 162$\frac{7}{8}$ he was (a) Theologo-Historicus: or the true Life of the most reverend Divine and excellent Historian Peter Heylin, D. D. Sub-Dean of Westminster. Written by his son-in-law John Barnard, D. D. pag. 75. edit. London 1683.

(b) Ibid. pag. 80.

(c) Ibid. pag. 74.

(d) Ibid. pag. 81, 82.

(e) Wood, Hist. & Antiquitat. Universit. Oxon. lib. 2. pag. 203.

(f) Barnard, ubi supra, pag. 84, 85.

(g) Idem, pag. 86.

(b) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 279. 2d edit.

(i) Idem, Fasti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 203.

(k) Barnard, pag. 87.

(l) Wood, Fasti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 216.

(m) Idem, Hist. & Antiquit. ubi supra, and Barnard, pag. 93.

[A] The year following he published his Microcosmus.] It was printed at Oxford 1622, and 1624 in 4to, and enlarged afterwards to a great folio, intitled, Cosmography in four books, &c. London 1652, 1664, 1677, 1682. Dr. John Barnard informs us (1), that the first edition was published November the 7th 1621: and the first copy was presented to Prince Charles, to whom it was dedicated, who received the author very graciously, being introduced by Sir Robert Carr, one of the Gentlemen of the Prince's Bed-Chamber, and afterwards Earl of Ancram. The first edition being highly approved, it was reprinted and enlarged in the second edition in 1624, and presented again to the Prince. But the book being afterwards put into King James I's hands by Dr. John Young Dean of Winchester, his Majesty was greatly pleased with it, till he fell upon a passage, wherein Mr. Heylin gave precedency to the French King, and stiled France the more famous Kingdom, which so offended him, that he immediately ordered the Lord Keeper to call in the Book. Mr. Heylin, then at Oxford, was informed of this by Dr. Young, and advised by him to repair to Court, that by the Prince's patronage he might pacify the King's resentment; but not knowing whether the Prince himself might not also be offended, he staid at Oxford, and by the advice of the Lord Danvers sent up an apology to Dr. Young, which was an explanation of his meaning upon the words in question. He alledged, that the error in one passage (2) was not his own, but the Printer's, who had put is instead of was; and that when he mentioned the precedency of France before England, besides that he did not speak of England as it then stood augmented by Scotland, he had it from Camden in his Remains. The King was satisfied with his apology; and Mr. Heylin took care, that the whole clause, which gave so much offence, should be left out of all his books (3).

(1) Theologo-Historicus: or the true Life of the most reverend Divine and excellent Historian, Peter Heylin, D. D. pag. 89.

(2) Microcosmus, pag. 441. Line 1. edit. 1624.

(3) Barnard, ubi supra, pag. 94-101.

[B] In 1625 he made a tour to France for about five or six weeks, the particulars of which he wrote an account of, which was printed about thirty years after.] The original of this account he presented to the Lord Danvers (4); but a copy of it he kept by him, and to " correct a false copy which had been printed, he pub- " lished it at London in 1656 in 4to. under this title. A full relation of two Journies: the one into the main Land of France; the other into some of the adjacent Islands. In five Books. In this relation he treats the French nation with great contempt and ridicule.

(4) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 276.

[C] Both which he determined negatively, which gave great offence.] In stating of the first question he tells us (5), that he " fell upon a different way from " that of Dr. Prideaux the Professor in his lecture de Visi- " bilitate Ecclesiæ, and other Tractates of and about that " time, in which the visibility of the Protestant Church " (and consequently of the renowned Church of En- " gland) was no otherwise proved than by looking " into the scattered conventicles of the Berengarians " in Italy, the Waldenses in France, the Wickliffists in " England, and the Hussites in Bohemia; which man- " ner of proceeding not being liked by the Respon- " dent, as that which utterly discontinued that succession " of the hierarchy, which the Church of England " claims from the very Apostles and their immediate " successors, he rather chose to find out a visible Church " in

(5) Appendix to the Advertisements on Mr. Sanderson's History.

was recommended by the Earl of Danby to Dr. William Laud, then Biſhop of Bath and Wells, for his advancement in the Church (n); and in the latter end of 1628 he attended the Earl as Chaplain into the Iſle of Guernſey, of which his Lordſhip was Governor; where continuing about three weeks, upon his return, he wrote an account of that voyage [D]. June the 13th 1629 he took the degree of Bachelor of Divinity (o), and was appointed one of the Chaplains in ordinary to his Majeſty by the intereſt of the Earl of Danby (p). In 1630 he preached on Act-Sunday before the Univerſity of Oxford at St. Mary's on Matth. xiii. 25. [E]; and the ſame year reſigned his Fellowſhip, having been married almoſt two years before [F]. In 1631 he publiſhed his Hiſtory of St. George [G]; and in October the ſame year was preſented by the King to the Rectory of Hemingford in Huntingtonſhire; and on the firſt of November following his Majeſty gave him a Prebend of Weſtminſter. In 1632 (q) the King beſtowed on him the Rectory of Houghton in the Biſhoprick of Durham, worth near four hundred pounds per ann.; which he afterwards exchanged with Dr. Marſhall for the Rectory of Alreſford in Hampſhire; which exchange he was commanded by his Majeſty to make, that he might live nearer the Court (r). April the 13th 1633 he took the degree of Doctor of (n) See Dr. Heylin's Cyprianus Anglicus: or the Hiſtory of the Life and Death of William Laud, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, lib. 3. ad ann. 1627.

(o) Wood, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 247.

(p) Idem, Athen. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 277. and Barnard, pag. 120, 121.

(q) Wood, ubi ſupra.

(r) Bernard, pag. 142, 143.

of Thomas Highgate of Heys Eſq; (4).

(4) Barnard, pag. 114.

" in Aſia, Ethiopia, Greece, Italy, yea Rome itſelf, " as alſo in all the Weſtern Provinces, then ſubject to the " power of the Roman Biſhop when he was the chief " Patriarch." He obſerved likewiſe in his Diſputation, that the writers of the Romiſh Church, even Bellarmin himſelf, had ſtood up as cordially in maintenance of ſome fundamental points of the Chriſtian Faith, againſt Anti-Trinitarians, Anabaptiſts, and other heretics of theſe laſt ages, or other learned men of the Proteſtant Churches; which point Mr. Heylin cloſed up with theſe words; utinam quod ipſe de Calvino, ſic ſemper erraſſet nobiliſſimus Cardinalis. Theſe words ſo exaſperated the Profeſſor, that he called our author Papicola, Bellarminianus, Pontficius (6). This raiſed a great clamour againſt Heylin for the preſent, which Dr. Prideaux increaſed the monday after, when Mr. Heylin oppoſed Mr. William Hayes of Magdalen Hall, at which time he was again treated as a Papiſt by the Profeſſor in the public ſchool of Divinity. On the 5th of Auguſt following Mr. Edward Reynolds, afterwards Biſhop of Norwich, preaching to the Univerſity in the Chapel of Merton College, of which he was a Fellow, touched upon the paſſages, which had happened between Dr. Prideaux and Mr. Heylin, in order to expoſe the latter to cenſure (7); who to clear himſelf from the ſuſpicion of Popery, in November following preached before the King on John iv. 20, in which ſermon he declared with great zeal againſt the errors and corruptions of the Church of Rome (8).

(6) Barnard, pag. 108, 109.

(7) Wood, ubi ſupra, col. 276.

(8) Barnard, pag. 111.

[D] Upon his return he wrote an account of that voyage.] It was printed in his Full Relation of two Journies abovementioned.

[E] In 1630 he preached on Act-Sunday before the Univerſity of Oxford at St. Mary's on Matt. xiii. 25.] In this ſermon, ſays Mr. Wood (9), " he diſcovered " the great myſtery of iniquity, which lay hid under " the ſpecious project of the Feoffees for buying in of " Impropriations, and was the firſt who gave notice " of the danger of it to the undeceiving of the people. " It made much noiſe, and brought to him more " envy." The Reader may conſult Prynne's Canterbury's Doom. p. 386. and Dr. Heylin's Hiſtory of the Life and Death of Archbiſhop Laud, L. III. p. 210.

(9) Col. 277.

[F] The ſame year he reſigned his fellowſhip, having been married almoſt two years before.] This we are informed of by Mr. Wood (10); and Dr. John Barnard (11) owns this clandeſtine marriage, and tells us (12), that though " it was performed upon St. Simon " and St. Jude's day between ten and eleven of the " clock in the morning in his own College Chapel, " in the preſence of a ſufficient number of witneſſes " of both ſexes, and the wedding dinner kept in his " own chamber (13);" yet all this while it was a marriage clancularly, a marriage in maſquerade, a marriage incognito to the College, becauſe the Preſident and Fellows neither knew nor believed there was a true ſolemnization of marriage in their Chapel; and though ſome of them were invited to the wedding-dinner, they took the invitation to a merriment and not to a marriage. Indeed it was not clandeſtine againſt the Laws of our Church and Realm, becauſe the uſual ceremonies and formalities of both were performed in the ſolemnization betwixt the parties; but ſuch marriage was expreſly againſt the Laws and Statutes of the College-Founder, and much more for a married Fellow to keep his Fellowſhip after. The young Gentlewoman was Letitia, third Daughter

(10) Ibid.

(11) Pag. 17.

(12) Pag. 18, 19.

(13) Life of Dr. P. Heylin, by George Vernon, pag. 13.

[G] In 1631 he publiſhed his Hiſtory of St. George.] It was printed with this title, The Hiſtory of that moſt famous Saint or Soldier of Jeſus Chriſt St. George of Cappadocia, aſſerted from the fictions of the middle ages of the Church, and oppoſition of the preſent. London 1631 and 1633 in 4to. To this was ſubjoined The Inſtitution of the moſt noble order of St. George, named the Garter, and A Catalogue of all the Knights of the Garter from the firſt inſtitution to this preſent; as alſo of the principal Officers thereto belonging. At the end of the edition in 1633 is A Review of the whole work, conſiſting of additions and emendations. On the 2d of February $163\frac{2}{3}$, the author was introduced by Dr. Laud, then Biſhop of London, to the King at Whitehall, to whom he preſented this Hiſtory, which his Majeſty graciouſly received. He afterwards preſented ſeveral copies to all ſuch Knights of the Garter and men of eminence, as were then in London, and was received by them all with great reſpect, except by Archbiſhop Abbot and William Earl of Exeter, the former diſliking the argument, and the other treating him as a begging ſcholar (15). Soon after this Hiſtory was attacked by a Diſcourſe of Dr. George Hakewill, which, as our author ſays (16), was full of moſt baſe and malicious calumniations, both againſt the perſon and religion of the author. Whereupon his Majeſty having received notice of it from Biſhop Laud, (who had a copy of it ſent to him from Oxford by Dr. William Smith the Vicechancellor, and he from Dr. Hakewill to be approved before it was ſent to the preſs) commanded Mr. Heylin to conſider of the matter, and withal ſent him to Windſor to ſearch into the records of the Order of the Garter there. The command he immediately obeyed, and accordingly publiſhed a ſecond edition of the Hiſtory in 1633, wherein he endeavoured to anſwer all Dr. Hakewill's objections. Upon the publiſhing of this, he heard no more of the Doctor till a ſecond edition of that writer's Apology or Declaration of the Power and Providence of God in the Government of the World, wherein Mr. Heylin found a Retractation of the paſſages, which related to St. George. However, though the Doctor thought proper to continue ſilent rather than to reply, he about the ſame time acquainted his friends what his ſentiments were of the Second Edition of the Hiſtory of St. George, in ſeveral Letters; in one of which he writes thus (17). In the ſecond impreſſion of this book [The Hiſtory of St. George] where he hath occaſion to ſpeak of the Roman writers, eſpecially the legendaries, he magnifies them more, and when he mentions our men, he vilifies them more than he did in his firſt edition. But the matter is not much, what he ſaith of the one or of the other, the condition of the man being ſuch, that his word hardly paſſeth either for commendation or ſlander, &c. From this Hiſtory of St. George is taken a little Pamphlet, intitled, The Hiſtory of that moſt famous Saint and Soldier of St. George of Cappadocia, &c. London 1661 in 7 ſheets in 4to. and another for the moſt part, intitled, The Hiſtory of the Life and Martyrdom of St. George the titular Patron of England, &c. London 1644 in eight ſheets in 4°, written in verſe by Thomas Lowick Gent. And many things are taken thence with due acknowledgment by Elias Aſhmole Eſq; in his Inſtitution, Laws, and Ceremonies of the moſt noble Order of the Garter. London 1672 in fol.

(14) Barnard, pag. 114.

(15) Barnard, pag. 124. and Wood, col. 279, 280.

(16) Appendix to the Advertiſements on Sanderſon's Hiſtory.

(17) See Sanderſon's Poſt haſte. A Reply to Peter's Appendix to his Treatiſe, intitled, Reſpondet Petrus, &c. London 1658 in 4to, pag. 13.

of Divinity (s) [H]. In 1636 he publiſhed his Hiſtory of the Sabbath [I], and his Anſwer to the Biſhop of Lincoln's Letter to the Vicar of Grantham [K], and wrote two other Tracts [L]; and the year following publiſhed his Antidotum Lincolnienſe [M]. Upon the ſuſpenſion and impriſonment of Dr. John Williams Biſhop of Lincoln, and Dean of Weſtminſter, he was choſen Treaſurer of the Church of Weſtminſter; and preſented by his brethren the Prebendaries to the Rectory of Iſlip near Oxford, worth about two hundred pounds per ann. (t), which in 1638 he exchanged for that of South-Warnborough in Hampſhire (u); and the ſame year was put into the Commiſſion of the Peace for that County (w). In 1639 he was employed by Archbiſhop Laud to tranſlate the Scots Liturgy into Latin; and on April the 10th 1640 he was choſen by the College of Weſtminſter their Clerk to ſit in Convocation (x); but was ſoon after brought into trouble by his old antagoniſt Biſhop Williams, and William Prynne [N]. He retired

(s) Wood, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 258.

(t) Barnard, pag. 172, 173, 174.

(u) Idem, pag. 174. and Wood, Athen. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 278.

(w) Wood, ibid.

(x) Barnard, pag. 177.

[H] Took the degree of Doctor of Divinity.] Upon this occaſion he maintained the affirmative of theſe three queſtions. I. An Eccleſia habeat authoritatem in determinandis fidei controverſiis? i. e. "Whether the "Church hath authority in determining Controverſies "of Faith?" II. An Eccleſia habeat authoritatem interpretandi Scripturas ſacras? i. e. "Whether the "Church hath authority of interpreting the holy "Scriptures?" III. An Eccleſia habeat authoritatem decernendi Ritus & Ceremonias? i. e. "Whether the "Church hath authority of appointing Rites and Ce-"remonies?" Our author tells us * that Dr. Prideaux "was as little pleaſed with theſe queſtions, and the reſ-"pondent ſtating of them, as he was with the for-"mer †. And therefore to create the greater odium, "he openly declared that the reſpondent had falſified "the public doctrine of the Church, and charged the "article with that ſentence, viz. Habet Eccleſia Ritus ſive Ceremonias, &c. which was not found in the "whole body of it. And for proof thereof he read "the article out of a book, which lay before him, be-"ginning thus, Non licet Eccleſiæ quicquam inſtituere quod verbo Dei ſcripto adverſetur, &c. To which "the reſpondent readily anſwered, that he perceived "by the bigneſs of the book, which lay on the Doctor's "cuſhion, that he had read that article out of the Har-"mony of Confeſſions, publiſhed at Geneva 1612, which "therein followed the edition of the articles in the "time of King Edward VI, anno 1552, in which "that ſentence was not found; but that it was other-"wiſe in the articles agreed on in the Convocation "anno 1562, to which moſt of us had ſubſcribed in "our ſeveral places. But the Doctor ſtill perſiſting "upon that point, and the reſpondent ſeeing ſome un-"ſatisfiedneſs in the greateſt part of the auditory, he "called on one Mr. Weſtly, (who formerly had been "his Chamberfellow in Magdalen College) to ſtep to "the next Bookſeller's ſhop for a Book of Articles; "which being obſerved by the Doctor, he declared "himſelf very willing to decline any further proſecu-"cution of that particular, and to go on directly to "the diſputation. But the reſpondent was reſolved to "proceed no further, uſque dum liberaverat animam "ſuam ab iſta calumnia, as his own words were, till "he had freed himſelf from that odious calumny. But "it was not long before the coming of the book had "put an end to that controverſy, out of which the "reſpondent read the article in the Engliſh tongue, "in his verbis, viz. The Church hath power to decree "rites and ceremonies, and authority in controverſies of "faith, &c. which done, he delivered the book to one "of the ſtanders-by, who deſired it of him, the book "paſſing from one hand to another till all men were "ſatisfied." But Mr. Anthony Collins remarks upon this §, that they were ſatisfied with very little reaſon; for the Engliſh edition produced, which was in all probability the late edition ſet forth with the King's Declaration, ſeems very improper to determine the controverſy by, when the queſtion related to the Latin articles. If any Latin copy of the articles printed by authority had been brought into the ſchools, the aſſembly muſt have been ſatisfied of the contrary, if they had judged of the authority of the clauſe by a printed copy of the articles. Dr. Prideaux, as Mr. Wood informs us (18), in the courſe of the diſpute, aſſerted, that, 1. Eccleſia eſt mera Chimera. 2. Eccleſia nihil docet nec determinat. 3. Controverſiæ omnes melius ad Academiam referri poſſunt quam ad Eccleſiam. 4. Docti homines in Academiis poſſunt determinare omnes Controverſias, etiam ſepoſitis Epiſcopis, &c. This being complained of to the King by Bp. Laud, Chancellor of the Univerſity, Dr. Prideaux was obliged to ſend up a proteſtation with letters to the Biſhop (19), in Auguſt following, but was ſo exaſperated at Dr. Heylin upon this account, that at the ſame time (the King being then at Woodſtock) he cauſed a paper to be ſpread about the court, relating to the affair in the laſt act; it very much tending to Dr. Heylin's diſgrace, who reſenting it, in October following, when his Majeſty's declaration concerning lawful ſports was publiſhed, and raiſed a great clamour againſt the King and Biſhop Laud, tranſlated Dr. Prideaux's Lecture upon the Sabbath, to which he prefixed a Preface, and publiſhed it in Hilary-Term 163¾; by which Lecture Dr. Prideaux loſt much of his character among the Puritans (20),

[I] In 1636 he publiſhed his Hiſtory of the Sabbath.] It was twice printed at London in 4to that year, and written to ſatisfy thoſe, who turned the obſervation of the Lord's Day into a Jewiſh Sabbath, not allowing themſelves or others the ordinary liberties, or works of neceſſity which the Jews never ſcrupled (21).

[K] His Anſwer to the Biſhop of Lincoln's Letter to the Vicar of Grantham.] Dr. John Williams, Biſhop of Lincoln having publiſhed A Letter to the Vicar of Grantham, againſt placing the Communion-Table in the manner of an Altar; our author wrote the tract abovementioned under this title: A Coal from the Altar: or an Anſwer to the Biſhop of Lincoln's Letter to the Vicar of Grantham. London 1636 in 4to. To which the Biſhop in 1637 returned an anſwer under this title; The holy Table, Name, and Thing, &c. pretending that it had been written long ago by a Miniſter in Lincolnſhire, in anſwer to Dr. Cole, a Divine in Queen Mary's reign.

[L] Two other Tracts.] The one intitled, A brief Diſcourſe by way of Letter touching the Form of Prayer appointed to be uſed by Preachers before their Sermons, Can. 55. written at the requeſt of the Biſhop of Winchester in 1636, and afterwards printed in the firſt part of his Eccleſia vindicata. The other is intitled, A brief and moderate Anſwer to the ſeditious and ſcandalous Challenge of Hen. Burton, late of Friday-ſtreet, in two ſermons preached by him on the 5th of November 1636, and in the Apology ſet before them. London 1637 in 4to.

[M] His Antidotum Lincolnienſe.] The whole title is as follows: Antidotum Lincolnienſe: or an Anſwer to a book intitled, The holy Table, Name, and Thing, &c. ſaid to be written long ago by a Miniſter in Lincolnſhire, and printed for the Dioceſe of Lincoln, anno 1637. Written and inſcribed to the grave, learned, and religious Clergie of the Dioceſe of Lincolne. By Peter Heylin, Chaplaine in Ordinary to his Majeſtie. London 1637 in 4to. It is dedicated to the King. The Imprimatur is dated May the 7th 1637. Another Anſwer likewiſe came out againſt the Biſhop's Holy Table, &c. intitled Two Looks over Lincoln: or a View of his Holy Table, &c. London 1641 in four ſheets and a half, written by Richard Day, who ſtiles himſelf a Miniſter of the Goſpel, but appears to be an enemy to the Ceremonies of the Church. In this Tract Dr. Heylin's Coal from the Altar is ſometimes animadverted upon.

[N] Brought into trouble by his old antagoniſt Biſhop Williams, and William Prynne.] The Doctor preaching on his courſe at Weſtminſter-Abby, and exhorting Chriſtians to moderation, love, and charity among themſelves, for the preſervation of the public peace, although

(19) Idem, Hiſt. & Antiq. ibid.

(20) Idem, ibid. and Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 278.

(21) Idem, Ath. Oxon. ibid.

* Appendix to the 2d Part of his Examen Hiſtoricum.

† When Dr. Heylin took his degree of Bachelor of Divinity in 1627.

§ Hiſtorical and Critical Eſſay on the thirty nine Articles of the Church of England, Introduction, pag. 28.

(18) Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 278. and Hiſt. & Antiquit. Univerſit. Oxon. lib. 1. pag. 340.

tired first to his living of Ailresford, and afterwards to Oxford; upon which in the beginning of 1643 the House of Commons voted him a Delinquent, and made an order for the sequestration of all his estate, and his excellent Library was carried to Portsmouth (y). At Oxford he was employed, by the King's command, in writing the Mercurius Aulicus, begun by Sir John Berkenhead. In 1645 he left Oxford, and travelled in disguise from place to place, himself and his family being in the greatest necessity (z); and the same year settled with them for some time at Winchester, till that city was taken; and in 1648 removed to Minster-Lovel in Oxfordshire, the seat of his elder brother, which he farmed for six years of his nephew Colonel Heylin; and cleared his although they differed in some opinions, made use of these words: "Is it not that we are so affected with "our own opinions, that we condemn whatsoever "shall opine the contrary; and so far wedded to our "own wills, that when we have espoused a quarrel, "neither the love of God, nor the God of love shall "divorce us from it? Instead of hearkening to the "voice of the church, every man hearkens to himself, "and cares not, if the whole miscarry, so that himself "may bravely carry out his own devices. Upon "which stubborn height of pride what quarrels have "been raised? What schisms in every corner of this "our church? (to enquire no further,) some rather "putting all into open tumult, than that they would "conform to the lawful government, derived from "Christ and his Apostles to these very times." At the speaking of these words, the Bishop of Lincoln sitting in the great pew knocked aloud with his staff upon the pulpit, saying, no more of that point, no more of that point, Peter. To whom the Doctor readily answered, I have a little more to say, my Lord, and then I have done; which was as follows: "Others "coming into close and dangerous factions, because "some points of speculative Divinity are otherwise "maintained by some than they would have them. "Also regardless of the common Peace, that rather "than be quiet, we will quarrel with our blessed peace-"maker for seeking to compose the differences, tho' "to the prejudice of neither party. Thus do we "foolishly divide our Saviour, and rent his sacred "body on the least occasion, rarely conceiving that "a difference in a point of judgment must needs draw "after it a disjoining of the affections also, and that "conclude at last in an open schism. Whereas diver-"sity of opinions, if wisely managed, would rather "tend to the discovery of the truth, than the dis-"turbance of the church, and rather whet our indus-"try than excite our passions. It was St. Cyprian's "resolution, Neminem, licet aliter senserit, a commu-"nione amovere, not to suspend any man from the "communion of the church, although the matter then "debated, was, I take it, of more weight than any "of the points now controverted: which moderation "if the present age had attained unto, we had not "then so often torn the church in pieces, nor by our "frequent broils offered that injury and inhumanity "to our Saviour's body, which was not offered to his "garments." After the sermon was ended, Dr. Heylin took his friend Sir Robert Filmer and some other Gentlemen of quality, who were his auditors, to his house, where he immediately sealed up the book, which contained this sermon, and other notes, to which they also set their seals, that so there might not be the least alteration made in the sermon, nor any ground to suspect it, which was presently after sent to the Bishop, who kept it in his hands for some days, and then returned it untouched. This is the account of Dr. John Barnard (22); but Dr. Helyn himself relates the latter part of the story with some different circumstances (23), and tells us, that as soon as he was brought back to his stall, the Bishop calling on Dr. Wilson, another of the Prebendaries, to bear witness of what passed between them, required the Doctor to deliver a copy of the sermon, to which the Doctor chearfully yielded, and presently gave his Lordship the whole book of sermons, which he had then with him. The same day, as they came from the evening service, the Bishop sent one of his gentlemen to desire the Sub-Dean, Dr. Wilson, and Dr. Heylin, to come to his lodging; to which it was answered openly, and in a full cloyster, by Dr. Heylin, that he would not go; that he would meet his Lordship in either of the houses of Parliament, or either of the courts of Westminster-Hall, or the public Chapter of the Church, and would there answer any thing that he would charge him with; but that he would never shuffle up the business in the Bishop's lodging, or take a private satisfaction for a public baffle. He had scarce put off his church-vestment, when his friends the Bishop of Peterborough, and Sir Robert Filmer, who had heard all that had passed before, came to spend an hour with him; and not long after comes the Sub-Dean from the Bishop of Lincoln with the book of sermons, assuring him, that the Bishop meant him nothing but well; that he had read none of the sermons, but that which had been preached that morning; that he professed himself much beholden to him for committing into his hands so great a trust; and lastly, that since the Doctor would not come to receive the book, he had sent it to him. To which the Doctor made reply, that since the book was taken from him in the sight of hundreds; he would not otherwise receive it, than in the same place, or a place more public; that therefore he should carry back the book to him that sent it, to the end that he might read over all the rest of the sermons, and pick out of them what he could to the Doctor's disadvantage; that as he did not court his favours, or expect any thing from him, so neither did he fear his frown, or any further mischief, which he could do to him equal to what he had done already; and lastly that he was more ashamed of the poorness of this prostitution than at the insolencies of the morning: which being the best answer that the Sub-Dean could at that time obtain from him, he threw the book into the room, and so went his way. The Doctor understanding what reports had been spread abroad upon the accident, some saying that the Bishop had interrupted him for preaching against the Scots, some of whose commissioners were then present, others for preaching in defence of Transubstantiation, and others for Arminianism, he gave an account thereof to the King, and then transcribed a copy of the whole passage, which had been and was to have been spoken, and sent it in a letter to Mr. John White of the Temple, whom he observed to hear the sermon, desiring him to communicate it to the Committee, that when he was to appear before them the second time, they might be satisfied in all things touching that particular. This address took so good an effect, that Mr. White, though most eagerly bent against the Doctor at his first appearance, did the business for him, reading the whole passage to that Committee, and testified what he saw and noted when he was at the sermom; and thereupon it was declared by the unanimous voice of all then present, that there was nothing in that passage which did not become an honest man to speak, and a good Christian to hear; and not only so, but that the Bishop was transported beyond his bounds, and failed in his accustomed prudence. And this perhaps both smoothed the way unto the Doctor for his next appearance, where he found better entertainment than he did at the first; and drew the Bishop into gentler and more moderate counsels. About the same time he was summoned to appear before the Committee for the Court of Justice, on the complaint of Mr. Prynne, who had joined him in a petition with the Lord Archbishop, as the chief agents and contrivers of all his sufferings (24); but though it was resolved upon the question on Tuesday April the 20th, 1641, that the sentences against Mr. Prynne in the Star-Chamber were illegal, and it was ordered, that the charge against the Doctor should be transmitted to the Committee for religion, to be considered of with such other charges and complaints as were come against him; yet after that time the Doctor never heard more of this business, nor of any other, which did or might create any trouble to him from the houses of Parliament, or any of the Committees or Members (25).

(y) Barnard, pag. 202, 203, 204. and Wood, Athen. Oxon. col. 278.

(z) Barnard, pag. 205, & seqq.

(22) Pag. 192-196.

(23) Extraneus Vapulans; or the Observator rescued from the violent but vaine Assaults of Hamon L'Estrange Esq; &c. pag. 58, & seqq.

(24) Barnard, pag. 192-196.

(25) Id. Extran. Vapul. p. 57, 58.

his temporal eſtate from ſequeſtration by compoſition with the Commiſſioners at Goldſmith's Hall. Thence ſeveral years after he removed to Abingdon in Berkſhire, where he bought an houſe called Lacies Court. In 1657 he ſuffered in his eſtate by decimation. In 1660, upon his Majeſty's return to his Kingdoms, he was reſtored to his Spiritualties, but never roſe higher than the place of Sub-Dean of Weſtminſter [O]. His writings are very numerous [P]. He died May the 8th 1662, and was interred before the Sub-Dean's Stall within the Choir of St. Peter's Church at Weſtminſter, where he had a monument erected to him. Mr. Wood tells us (aa), that he was "a perſon endowed with "ſingular (aa) Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 279.

[O] Never roſe higher than the place of Subdeacon of Weſtminſter.] Mr. Wood obſerves (26), that this was a wonder to many, and a great diſcontent to him and his; but the reaſon, ſays that Hiſtorian, being manifeſt to thoſe, that well know the temper of the perſon, I ſhall forbear to make mention of that matter any further. Dr. Barnard tells us (27), that he happened to be preſent when Dr. Coſins, Biſhop of Durham, came to ſee Dr. Heylin, and ſaid, "I wonder, brother Hey-"lin, thou art not a Biſhop, for we all know thou "haſt deſerved it." To which he anſwered, Much good may it do the new Biſhops I do not envy them, but wiſh they may do more than I have done.

(26) Col. 279.

(27) Pag. 256.

[P] His writings are very numerous.] Beſides thoſe already mentioned he wrote the following. I. Theomachia, a Comedy, written in 1618, but never printed (28). II. An Eſſay called Auguſtus, printed in 1682, and ſince inſerted in his Coſmography. III. An uniform Book of Articles to be uſed by all Biſhops or Archdeacons in their Viſitations, London 1640 in 4to. IV. De Jure Paritatis Epiſcoporum, a manuſcript written in 1640, upon a propoſition in the Houſe of Lords, whether Biſhops ſhould be of the Committee for the preparatory Examinations in the cauſe of Thomas Earl of Strafford. It was afterwards printed and inſerted in his Hiſtorical and miſcellaneous Tracts, London 1681 in fol. V. Reply to Dr. Hakewill's Diſſertation touching the ſacrifice of the Euchariſt, London 1641 in 4to. VI. An Help to Engliſh Hiſtory: containing a Succeſſion of all the Kings of England, and the Engliſh Saxons, the Kings and Princes of Wales, &c. As alſo of all the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Dukes, Marquiſſes, and Earls within the ſaid Dominions, in three Tables, London 1641 in 8vo. Publiſhed under the Name of Robert Hall, Gent. Several Additions to this Book were made by Chriſt. Wilkinſon, a Bookſeller living againſt St. Dunſtan's Church in Fleet-ſtreet, London; the firſt Edition of which Additions came out in 1670 in 8°, with the name of Pet. Heylin put to the book, who made uſe of Dr. Francis Godwin's Commentary of the Biſhops of England, in his ſucceſſion of Archbiſhops and Biſhops, and of Ralph Brook's and Auguſtin Vincent's Catalogue of the Succeſſion of the Kings, Dukes, Marquiſſes, Earls, &c. Mr. Wood obſerves (29) that our Author is ſaid to have written and publiſhed in the ſame year 1641, a Book entitled, Perſecutio Undecima, &c. London 1641, 1648 in 4to and 1681 in fol. but that finding no ſuch thing in the Doctor's Diary, which he had ſeveral times peruſed, he cannot affirm him to have been the Author. VII. Hiſtory of Epiſcopacy, in two parts, London 1642 in 4to. Publiſhed under the name of Theophilus Churchman. This makes the ſecond part of his Eccleſia Vindicata, &c. London 1657 in 4to. VIII. Hiſtorical Narration of Liturgies, &c. written in 1642, and afterwards printed in the firſt part of his Eccleſia Vindicata. IX. A Relation of Lord Ralph Hopton's Victory near to Bodmin in Cornwall, on the 19th of Jan. 1642, Oxford 1642-3 in one ſheet in 4to. X. A Brief Relation of the remarkable Occurrences in the Northern Parts, viz. the Landing of the Queen's Majeſty in the Bay of Burlington from Holland, and of the Repulſe given to the Rebels at the Town of Newark, Oxford 1642 in 2 ſheets in 4to. XI. A View of the Proceedings in the Weſt for a Pacification. XII. A Letter to a Gentleman in Leiceſterſhire about the Treaty at Uxbridge, ſhewing that all the Overtures, which have been made for Peace and Accommodation, have proceeded from his Majeſty only, printed in 1643 in 4 ſheets in 4to. XIII. The Roundheads Remembrances: or true and particular Relation of the great Defeat given to the Rebels by his Majeſty's Subjects of Cornwall, under the Command of Sir Ralph Hopton, on Tueſday 16th of May 1643, printed 1643 in one ſheet in 4to. This Pamphlet is generally ſaid to have been written by Dr. Heylin (30). XIV. A Relation of the Proceedings of Sir John Gell, printed 1643 in 4to in a ſheet and an half. This is ſuppoſed by Mr. Wood (31) to be the ſame with a Pamphlet, intitled, Thieves, Thieves; or a Relation of Sir Jo. Gell's Proceedings in Derbyſhire, in gathering up the Rents of the Lords and Gentlemen of that Country by pretended Authority from the two Houſes of Parliament, printed 1643 in 4to. XV. The black + Croſs; ſhewing that the Londoners were the cauſe of this preſent Rebellion. XVI. The Rebels Catechiſm, compoſed in an eaſy and familiar way to let them ſee the heinouſneſs of their Offence, &c. printed in 1643, in 4 ſheets in 4to. XVII. Diſcourſe in anſwer to the common, but groundleſs Clamour of the Papiſts nicknaming the Religion of the Church of England by the name of a Parliament Religion. Written in 1644 at the requeſt of George Aſhwell of Magdalen College in Oxford. But when the Book was printed, it had the following title; Parliament Power in Laws for Religion: or an anſwer to that old and groundleſs Calumny of the Papiſts nicknaming, &c. Oxford 1645 in 6 ſheets in 4to. In another edition printed at London 1603, in 7 ſheets in 4to, it hath this title; The way of Reformation of the Church of England declared and juſtified againſt the Clamours of our Adverſaries, reproaching the Religion here by Law eſtabliſhed by the name of a Parliament Religion, &c. This was afterwards printed in the firſt part of our Author's Eccleſia Vindicata. XVIII. A brief Relation of the Death and Sufferings of the moſt reverend and renowned Prelate the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, with a copy of his Speech, and other paſſages on the Scaffold, more perfect than hath been hitherto imprinted. Oxford 1644 in 4 ſheets in 4to. XIX. Bibliotheca Regia: or, the Royal Library, &c. London 1649, 1650, and 1659 in 8vo. Our Author's name is not put to it, but it is generally known to be his Collection from ſome of the works of King Charles I. In this Book is inſerted the Conference between that King and the Marquis of Worceſter at Ragland. XX. Stumbling block of Diſobedience, &c. in anſwer to an Examination of the two laſt Sections in Calvin's Inſtitutions againſt Sovereign Monarchy. Writtten in 1644, and printed at London 1658 in 4to with this title; The Stumbling-block of Diſobedience and Rebellion, cunningly laid by Calvin in the Subjects way, diſcovered, cenſured, and amended. XXI. The Promiſed Seed, written in Engliſh Verſe. XXII. The undeceiving the People in point of the Tithes, &c. London 1648, 1651. Publiſhed under the name of Ph. Treleinie: which is an Anagram for Peter Heylin. It was reprinted at London 1657 in the firſt Part of his Eccleſia Vindicata. XXIII. Theologia Veterum: The Sum of Chriſtian Theology contained in the Creed, according to the Greeks and Latins, &c. London 1654 and 1673 in fol. XXIV. Full Relation of two Journies. The one into the main Land of France; the other into ſome of the adjacent Iſlands, in 5 Books, London 1656 in 4to. To this is ſubjoined A Survey of the Eſtate of the two Iſlands of Guernſey and Jerſey, with the Iſles depending, &c. in one Book. London 1656 in 4to. Our Author publiſhed both the Books, becauſe a little before one William Leak, a Bookſeller, publiſhed a falſe copy of them under the title of France painted to the Life, fathered it upon Richard Bignall (32). XXV. Obſervations on the Hiſtory of the Reign of King Charles, publiſhed by Hamon L'Eſtrange, Eſq; for Illuſtration of the ſtory, &c. London 1656 in 8vo. upon the publiſhing of which Obſervations Mr. L'Eſtrange printed another Edition of the ſaid Hiſtory at London 1654 in fol. and at the end added a piece, intitled, The Obſervator obſerved, or Animadverſions upon the Obſervations on the Hiſtory of King Charles, &c. In anſwer to which Dr. Heylin publiſhed, XXVI. Extraneus Vapulans; or the Obſervator reſcued from the violent but vain Aſſaults of Hamon L'Eſtrange, Eſq; and the

(28) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 272. and Hiſt. & Antiquit. Univ. Oxon. lib. 2. pag. 204.

(29) Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 281.

(30) Idem, ibid. col. 221.

(31) Col. 282.

(32) See Heylin's Preface to his Extraneus Vapulans.

" ſingular gifts, of a ſharp and pregnant wit, and ſolid and clear judgment . . . a bold " and undaunted man among his friends and foes, (though of very mean port and " preſence) and therefore by ſome of them he was accounted too high and proud for " the function he profeſſed. On all occaſions he was a conſtant aſſertor of the Church's " right and the King's prerogative, either in their afflicted or proſperous eſtate, a ſe- " vere and vigorous oppoſer of Rebels and Schiſmatics, a deſpiſer of envy, and in " mind not at all diſcouraged." Mr. Wood likewiſe obſerves (bb), that in ſome things he was too much a party man to be an Hiſtorian, and equally (cc) an enemy to Popery and Puritaniſm. Dr. Barnard informs us (dd), that he was of a middle ſtature, his face oval, his complection florid, his hair ſhort and curling, his eyes quick and ſparkling, before he loſt his ſight; that he had a prodigious memory, not uſually taking notes, or making

(bb) Ibid.

(cc) See Dr. Edw. Stillingfleet's Several Conferences between a Romiſh Prieſt, a Fanatic Chaplain, and a Divine of the Church of England, &c, in anſwer to Tho. Godden's Dialogues, London 1679, in 8vo.

(dd) Pag. 258, 259, & ſeqq.

the Back Blows of Dr. Barnard, an Iriſh Dean. By a well wiſher to the Author of the Obſervations on the Hiſtory of the Reign of King Charles, London 1656 in 8vo. The Preface ſigned by our Author is dated at Lacies Court in Abingdon June the 7th 1656. XXVII. Eccleſia Vindicata; or the Church of England juſtified, 1, In the way and manner of her Reformation, &c. 2. In officiating by a publick Liturgy. 3. In preſcribing a ſet form of Prayer to be uſed by Preachers before their Sermons. 4. In her Right and Patrimony of Tithes. 5. In retaining the Epiſcopal Government, and therewithal the Canonical Ordination of Prieſts and Deacons, London 1657 in 4to, dedicated to Mr. Edward Davys, Vicar of Shilton in Berkſhire, formerly his Maſter in the Free School of Burford in Oxfordſhire. It contains the ſeveral pieces abovementioned. XXVIII. Reſpondet Petrus; or the Anſwer of Peter Heylin, D. D. to ſo much of Dr. Bernard's Book entitled, the Judgment of the late Primate of Ireland, &c. as he is made a Party by the ſaid Lord Primate in the point of the Sabbath, &c. London 1658 in 4to. It was not burnt as it had been reported (33). XXIX. An Appendix in anſwer to certain paſſages in Mr. Sanderſon's Hiſtory of the Life and Reign of King Charles, &c. printed with reſpondet Petrus. Whereupon Will. Sanderſon, Eſq; publiſhed a Pamphlet, intitled, Poſthaſte, a Reply to Peter's Appendix to his Treatiſe, intitled, Reſpondet Petrus 1658 in 8vo in three ſheets in 4to. XXX. Short View of the Life and Reign of King Charles (the ſecond Monarch of Great Britain) from his Birth to his Burial, London 1658 in 8vo. This Life Mr. Wood (34) ſuppoſes to be the ſame with that, which was printed with and prefixed to Reliquiæ ſacræ Carolinæ, printed at the Hague 1649 in 8vo. XXXI. Examen Hiſtoricum; or a Diſcovery and Examination of the Miſtakes and Defects in ſome modern Hiſtories, viz. 1. In the Church Hiſtory of Britain, by Tho. Fuller. To which is added, An Apology of Dr. Jo. Coſin, Dean of Peterborough, in anſwer to ſome paſſages in the Church Hiſtory of Britain, in which he finds himſelf concerned. 2. In the Hiſtory of Mary Queen of Scots, and of her ſon King James VI; The Hiſtory of King James I. of Great Britain; and the Hiſtory of King Charles I. from his Cradle to his Grave, by Will. Sanderſon, Eſq; London 1658 in a large 8vo. To this is added, An Appendix in an Anſwer to ſome paſſages in a ſcurrilous Pamphlet called A Poſt-haſte Reply, &c. by Will. Sanderſon, Eſq; Soon after Dr. Thomas Fuller publiſhed a thin folio, intitled, The Appeal for injured Innocence, which was commonly bound up with the remaining Copies of his Church Hiſtory in Quires; and Mr. Sanderſon wrote a Pamphlet, intitled, Peter purſued; or Dr. Heylin overtaken, arreſted, and arraigned upon his three Appendixes: 1. Reſpondet Petrus, (35). 2. Anſwer to Poſt-Haſte Reply (36). 3. Advertiſements on three Hiſtories, viz. of Mary Queen of Scots, King James, and King Charles, 1658 in 8 ſheets in 4to. XXXII. The Parable of the Tares, expounded and applied in ten ſermons, with three other ſermons by the ſame Author. London 1659 and 1661 in 4to. XXIII. Certamen Epiſtolare: or the Letter-Combat, managed by Peter Heylin, D. D. with 1, Mr. Baxter of Kidderminſter. 2. Dr. Barnard of Grays-Inne. 3. Mr. Hickman of Mag. C. Oxon. and 4, J. H. (37) of the city of Weſtminſter Eſq; With 5, An Appendix to the ſame, in anſwer to ſome paſſages in Mr. Fuller's late Appeal. London 1650 in 8vo. The Epiſtle prefixed to it, and addreſſed to his dear brethren, the poor remainders of the old regular and conformable Clergy of the Church of England, is dated at Lacies-Court in Abingdon May the 2d 1659. XXXIV. Hiſtoria Quinqu- Articularis: or a Declaration of the Judgment of the Weſtern Churches, and more particularly of the Church of England, in the five controverted Points, reproached in theſe laſt times by the name of Arminianiſm. Collected in the way of an Hiſtoricall Narration out of the public acts and monuments, and moſt approved Authors of thoſe ſeverall Churches. By Peter Heylin. London 1660 in 4to. The Preface is dated at Lacies-Court in Abingdon December the 26th 1659. To this book is added a Poſtſcript to the Reader, concerning ſome particulars in a ſcurrilous Pamphlet intituled, A Review of the Certamen Epiſtolare, &c. dated at Lacies-Court December the 29th 1659. The ſame year was publiſhed a book, intitled, Fratres in malo: or the matchleſs Couple repreſented in the Writings of Mr. Edward Bagſhaw, and Mr. Henry Hickman, in Vindication of Dr. Heylin and Mr. Thomas Pierce. London 1660 in 4to. In the title-page it is ſaid to be written by M. O. Bachelor of Arts; but it was univerſally ſuppoſed at that time, that Dr. Heylin or Mr. Pierce, or both, had an hand in it (38). Mr. Hickman wrote Animadverſions upon our Author's Hiſtoria Quinqu- Articularis; the firſt edition of which was printed at London 1661, and the ſecond in the ſame city in 1674, with the following title. Hiſtoria Quinqu- Articularis Exarticulata; or Animadverſions on Dr. Heylin's Quinquarticular Hiſtory: in which, 1. The Aſperſions caſt on foreign reformers are wiped off. 2. The Doctor's manifold Contradictions are manifeſted. 3. The Doctrine of the Arminians in the five points is proved to be contrary to the Doctrine of the Reformed Church of England. By Henry Hickman, B. D. The ſame Edition corrected and enlarged. XXXV. A Sermon preached in the Collegiate Church of St. Peter's in Weſtminſter on Wedneſday the 29th of May 1661, on Pſalm xxxi. 21. London 1661 in 4to. XXXVI. Hiſtory of the Reformation of the Church of England from the firſt Preparations to it made by King Henry VIII, until the legal ſettling and eſtabliſhing of it under Queen Elizabeth, &c. London 1661, 1670, and 1674 in folio. It was anſwered in a book intitled Plus Ultra: or England's Reformation needing to be reformed. Being an Examination of Dr. Heylin's Hiſtory of the Reformation of the Church of England, &c. Wherein by laying together all that is there ſaid by the Doctor about the Reformation of the Church, and by many Teſtimonies of Reverend Jewel, Biſhop of Salisbury, and by ſeveral Obſervations made upon the whole, it doth evidently appear, that the preſent State of the Church of England is no way to be reſted in, but ought to proceed to a farther degree of perfection. Written by way of Letter to Dr. Heylin by H. N. O. J. Oxon. in 7 ſheets in 4to. XXXVII. Cyprianus Anglicus: or the Hiſtory of the Life and Death of William [Laud] Archbiſhop of Canterbury &c. London 1668 and 1671 in folio. XXXVIII. Aerius Redivivus: or the Hiſtory of the Presbyterians. Containing the Beginning, Progreſs, and Succeſſes of that Sect. Their Oppoſitions to Monarchical and Epiſcopal Government. Their Innovations in the Church; and their Imbroylments of the Kingdoms and Eſtates of Chriſtendom in the purſuit of their Deſignes. From the year 1536 to the year 1647. By Peter Heylin, D. D. &c. London 1670 and 1672 in folio. It is dedicated by his ſon Henry Heylin to the Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons in Parliament aſſembled. The Doctor aſſures us in his Preface, that he " adventures " upon nothing but what is warranted by the teſti- " mony of unqueſtioned authors, from whoſe ſenſe, " ſays he, I ſhall never vary, though I may find it " ſometimes neceſſary not to uſe their words. And " by ſo doing, I ſhall keep myſelf unto the rules of a " right

(38) Wood, col. 285.

(33) See H. Hickman's Preface to his Juſtification of the Fathers and Schoolmen &c. and Dr. Barnard's Life of Dr. Heylin, pag. 237.

(34) Col. 285.

(35) Mr. Sanderſon here means the Appendix to Reſpondet Petrus.

(36) This hath no Appendix, and therefore Mr. Sanderſon is miſtaken, ſince it is itſelf an Appendix to Examen Hiſtoricum, or Advertiſements on three Hiſtories.

(37) James Harrington, Author of the Oceana.

making collections out of authors, but committing what he read to memory; and that he was of great generosity and charity.

" right Hiſtorian, in delivering nothing but the truth, " without omitting any thing for fear, or ſpeaking " any thing in favour of the adverſe party, but as I " ſhall be juſtified by good authors." XXXIX. Hiſtorical and Miſcellaneous Tracts, London 1681 in folio. Several of theſe are mentioned before; as 1. Eccleſia Vindicata. 2. Hiſtory of the Sabbath in two Parts. 3. Hiſtoria Quinq- Articularis. 4. Stumbling-Block, &c. 5. Tractatus de Jure Paritatis, &c. Dr. Heylin's Life is prefixed to this volume, written by George Vernon, Rector of Bourton on the Water in Glouceſterſhire; which being altered and mangled, ſays Mr. Wood (†), before it went to the preſs, by the Biſhop of Lincoln, T. Barlow, and the Bookſeller that printed it, Henry Heylin ſon of our author made a proteſtation againſt it; and Dr. John Barnard, who married Dr. Heylin's daughter, wrote his Life to correct that of Vernon, who likewiſe drew up another Life, which he publiſhed at London 1682 in 8vo. Dr. Heylin wrote alſo A Diſcourſe of the African Schiſm: and in 1637 at Archbiſhop Laud's deſire, drew up The Judgment of Writers on thoſe Texts of Scripture, in which the Jeſuits found the Popedom and the Authority of the Roman Church; both which Pieces the Archbiſhop intended as materials towards his large Anſwer to Fiſher the Jeſuit, which was printed 1639 in folio. T.

(†) Col. 285. See likewiſe, col. 1025.

☞HICKES (GEORGE), the ſecond ſon of William Hickes, the youngeſt ſon of ——— Hickes of Neſſe near Nunnington in the pariſh of Stangrave in the Eaſt Riding of Yorkſhire, Gentleman. His mother was a daughter of the Reverend Mr. Kay or Key Rector of Topcliffe in Yorkſhire. His parents ſettled upon a large farm at Newſham in the pariſh of Kirkby Wiſk near Thurſk in the North Riding, called Moorhouſe, where their ſon George was born on June the 20th 1642. He was educated in the grammar ſchool at North Allerton under Mr. Thomas Smelt, a very loyal man as well as a good ſchoolmaſter; and was admitted in April 1659 Batteler in St. John's College Oxford. Soon after the Reſtoration of King Charles II he removed to Magdalen College where Dr. Henry Yarborough was his Tutor, under whom he gave ſuch proofs of his great parts and progreſs in learning, that he had certainly been choſen Demy if he had been of a ſtatutable County. February 24th 166$\frac{2}{3}$ he proceeded Bachelor of Arts, and immediately removing to Magdalen Hall he compleated that degree by determination. On the 23d of May 1664 he was unanimouſly choſen Fellow of Lincoln College againſt three competitors, and one of them a Gentleman of the Savil Family. December the 8th in the year following he was admitted Maſter of Arts. And that Cambridge may have ſome ſmall ſhare in the honour of ſo great a man, he was July the 8th 1668 incorporated in the ſame degree at that Univerſity. June the 10th 1666, he was ordained a Deacon, and on December the 23d next following he was ordained a Prieſt, by Dr. Walter Blandford Biſhop of Oxford. He became an eminent Tutor ſoon after, taking his Maſter of Arts degree, and diſcharged this office with great diligence and reputation for ſeven years, till he endangered his health, and was thereupon adviſed to travel about the country for its recovery. Sir George Wheeler, who had been his Pupil and had always a filial affection for him, took this opportunity of inviting him to accompany him in his travels. They ſet out in October 1673 and made the grand tour of France; after which in the ſame month next year they parted, Mr. Hickes being obliged to return to take his Bachelor of Divinity's degree. At Paris where he ſtaid a conſiderable time he became acquainted with Mr. Henry [A] Juſtell, who in confidence told him many ſecret affairs, particularly that of the intended perſecution of the Huguenots in France, and of a deſign in Holland and England to extirpate the Royal Family of

[A] Juſtell.] Dr. Hickes has left behind him an account of theſe matters in a letter to a friend: " The " very obliging manner in which Mr. Juſtell received " me, and the particular reſpect he profeſſed for thoſe " of our nation, encouraged me to wait upon him a- " gain, when I found him alone. He then talked " with great freedom of his acquaintance in England, " moſt of which were great men, and of that party " which were accounted not well affected to the crown. " . . . As I acquainted him with the rout I intended to " take in making the tour of France, he would have " perſuaded me to wait upon the honourable Mr. Al- " gernoon Sydney, and young Mr. Hambden, who " lived both together ſome where in Guien or Lan- " guedoc, at a place, the name of which I have now " forgot, and who ſince have been unfortunately ſig- " nalized by their different fates. But knowing how " different my principles were from theirs, I told him " I had particular reaſons why I thought it not pro- " per for me to wait upon them, one of which was, " becauſe I was to travel in company with others. " . . . After my return to Paris, I never failed to viſit " him once a week . . . It happened once that talking " of the many temples or Proteſtant churches that I " obſerved were demoliſhed in ſeveral places, he told " me moſt of them were ſuch as had been irregularly " erected ſince the Edict of Nantes; and that the " King, though he had acted very ſeverely in razing " ſuch temples, yet he had not much violated the " privileges granted by that Edict, becauſe, as his " phraſe was, thoſe temples were mal fondez. Then " he proceeded to tell me, ... Alas, Sir, as I am " wont to talk in confidence with you, ſo I will tell " you a ſecret that almoſt none of us know beſides " myſelf: Our extirpation, meaning the Proteſtants, " is decreed, we muſt all be baniſhed our country or " turn Papiſts: I tell it you, becauſe I intend to come " into England, where I have many friends, and that " when I come to ſee you among the reſt, you may " remember that I told it you. Upon this I aſked " him how long it would be before this ſad perſecu- " tion would be put in execution; he anſwered with- " in four or five years at moſt, and remember, ſaith " he again, that I foretold the time . . . . Among " other things he told me how many and inveterate " enemies the King and Monarchy of England had in " Holland, where a ſecret deſign had been long ma- " naging with the diſaffected party in England, to " extirpate the Royal Family of the Stuarts; and when " I expreſſed my ſurprize and unwillingneſs to believe " ſo ſtrange and wicked a deſign, he told me again, " that it was not ſo ſtrange and incredible as I thought " it, and that I was young enough to ſee it brought " to paſs . . . . It was about the time the Bill of Ex- " cluſion was thrown out of the Houſe of Lords, and " the King had overcome the difficulties in which " he

of the Stuarts, and committed to him his father's manuſcript of the Codex Canonum Eccleſiæ Univerſalis to be preſented in his name to the Univerſity of Oxford; and when he delivered it to him he made him this complement, that he had long waited for a perſon to entruſt with one of the greateſt treaſures he had, and now had met with one according to his heart's deſire. After his return home May the 14th 1675 he took the degree of Bachelor of Divinity, being about that time Rector of S. Ebbe's Church in Oxford. Not long after he received a letter from Dr. Jane Chaplain to Dr. Compton Biſhop of London to tell him the Duke of Lauderdale had aſked the Biſhop if he knew Mr. Hickes Fellow of Lincoln College, and if his Lordſhip thought he would accept of being his Grace's Chaplain. He was very cautious at firſt of complying with this offer, becauſe the Duke was then loaded by his enemies with moſt heavy reproaches, and ſaid to be guilty of the moſt enormous vices. But Dr. Fell Biſhop of Oxford aſſured him thoſe ſcandalous reports were only the lies and malice of the Preſbyterian and Republican Party; and upon his advice he returned anſwer to Dr. Jane, that he waited for his Grace's commands when he ſhould attend upon him, and accordingly he was made the Duke's Chaplain by letters under hand and ſeal dated September the 15th 1676. In May 1677, his Grace being to be made High-Commiſſioner of Scotland took his Chaplain with him into that Kingdom, where he was received by many of the Nobility, and particularly by the Biſhops with the greateſt reſpect. In April 1678 the Lord Commiſſioner ſent Mr. Hickes up to Court with Dr. Burnet Archbiſhop of Glaſgow to lay before the King the proceedings of the Faction in Scotland, which began then to be turbulent and audacious; as alſo to undeceive the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and the Engliſh Prelates as to the ſcandalous and falſe reports which the malice of the adverſe party had raiſed againſt the Duke. In the latter end of the next month he returned with the Archbiſhop of Glaſgow to Scotland, when he was deſired by the worthy Dr. Sharp Archbiſhop of St. Andrews to accept the degree of Doctor of Divinity in that Univerſity as a teſtimony of his and his country's great eſteem for him, and of the eminent and faithful ſervice he had done to the Church. Which requeſt of the Archbiſhop's the Duke approved ſo well, that Mr. Hickes was obliged to agree to it; and to do his Chaplain the more honour he ſent his ſon-in-law and ſervants with him thither, where he was dignified with that title in a full Convocation. After which when Dr. Hickes was returning with his Patron into England, the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews in his own name and that of all his Brethren preſented him with the eighteen volumes of Labbe's Councils as an acknowledgment of his ſervices to that Church. December the 17th 1679 he was actually created Doctor of Divinity of the Univerſity of Oxford. A little before viz. September the 13th he married Mrs. Frances Marſhal widow of Mr. John Marſhal Citizen of London and daughter of Mr. Charles Mallory of Raynham in Eſſex. She was perfectly of his own principles as well as of her father's, who had been a great ſufferer under Cromwell: and ſhe had the happineſs of a great both active and paſſive courage, which afterwards made her a very patient and cheerful fellow-ſufferer with her huſband. In March $167\frac{9}{80}$ he was promoted by the King to a Prebend of Worceſter, and was inſtalled on the 11th of June; and in Auguſt following he was preſented by Dr. Sancroft Archbiſhop of Canterbury to the Vicarage of All-hallows Barkin near the Tower of London, which obliged him to leave his good Patron the Duke of Lauderdale to the great regret of his Grace, and with all that concern on his part which the beſt men are wont to expreſs at parting with their deareſt friends. He alſo reſigned his Fellowſhip, being on December the 27th 1681 made Chaplain in Ordinary to his Majeſty. In Auguſt 1683 the King advanced him to the [B] Deanery of Worceſter upon the recommendations of the Commiſſioners for diſpoſing of Eccleſiaſtical Preferments, in the place of Dr. William Thomas Biſhop of St. David's, who kept that dignity in commendam with his Biſhoprick till he was tranſlated to Worceſter; and on October the 13th he was inſtalled.

The

" he was involved by his reſtleſs enemies, that Mr. " Juſtell came into England, and after he had been " ſome time in London, he came to viſit me at my " houſe on Tower-Hill, where preſently after the com- " mon forms of congratulating one another, he ſaid, " Sir, do not you remember what I told you of the " perſecution we have ſince ſuffered, and of the time " when it would begin, and now you ſee all has ac- " cordingly come to paſs. When I had anſwered I " was very ſorry for it .... I then put him in mind " of another thing he had foretold, which I hoped " would never happen, I mean, Sir, ſaid I, the ex- " tirpation of the Royal Family of the Stuarts .... " But to this he replied nothing, but with a ſhrug ſaid, " Par Dieu, Monſieur, le Roy d'Angleterre c'eſt un " tres grand Roy, and this was all the anſwer I could " get from him."

[B] Deanery of Worceſter.] Upon the vacancy the vogue of both town and country gave this Deanery to Dr. Hickes, but it was ſo far from his thoughts, that he went to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury to ſollicit for Dr. Cave, who gave him then no other anſwer, but that he believed it would be hard to bring that about. All the Commiſſioners were for Dr. Hickes, except the Earl of Haliſax, who oppoſed it to the utmoſt, having been underhand ſet againſt him by Dr. Tillotſon and Dr. Burnet, by whom his Lordſhip had been always much influenced. But when he found all oppoſition fruitleſs, his Lordſhip propoſed that Dr. Hickes ſhould be promoted to this dignity, on condition of quitting all his other preferments, which was done with deſign to get him out of London, where about two years paſt he had had a greater intereſt than even Dr. Tillotſon himſelf. When the recommendation of the Commiſſioners was brought to the King, the Earl of Clarendon, with whom Dr. Hickes had not then the honour to be acquainted, ſtanding by the King and over reading the paper in his Majeſty's hand, obſerved that conditional clauſe in it, and ſaid thereupon to his Majeſty, Sir, by this clauſe the Commiſſioners take from the Doctor more than they give him. To which the King anſwered, I think ſo too; for which reaſon his patent paſſed the ſeals without taking notice of that additional clauſe.

3

The next year upon the death of Dr. Gulſton Biſhop of Briſtol the Duke of Beaufort went to his Majeſty to deſire him to promote the Dean of Worceſter to that See; but the King, in great reſpect to the Dean, ſaid he would not offer him that ſmall Biſhoprick, though if he would accept of it he ſhould hold his Deanery in commendam with it; and no doubt, if his Majeſty had lived long enough, he would have conferred upon him one of the beſt [C] Biſhopricks in the Church. In May 1686 he left the Vicarage of Barkin, and went to ſettle on his Deanery, the Biſhop of Worceſter having offered him the Rectory of All Church, but fourteen miles diſtant from that City. He was collated June the 24th and inducted two days after. Upon the Revolution, he with many other great and worthy men refuſing to take the oaths to King William and Queen Mary, fell under ſuſpenſion Auguſt the 1ſt 1689, and was deprived February the 1ſt $16\frac{89}{90}$; but continued in poſſeſſion till the beginning of May following; when reading in the Gazette that the Deanery of Worceſter was granted to Mr. William Talbot, ſince ſucceſſively Biſhop of Oxford, Saliſbury, and Durham, immediately he drew up in his own hand writing a [D] claim of right to it directed to all the members of that Church, and May the 2d 1691 affixed it over the great entrance into the Choir, that none of them might plead ignorance in that particular. The Dean hereupon expecting the reſentment of the Government privately withdrew to London, where and near it he abſconded for many years, till on the 18th of May 1699 the Lord Somers, then Lord Chancellor, a Worceſterſhire man, and who had opportunities of being thoroughly acquainted with his great worth, procured, without his ſeeking, an Act of Council to order the Attorney General to cauſe a Noli proſequi to be entered to all proceedings againſt him. Soon after their deprivation the Archbiſhop of Canterbury Dr. William [E] Sancroft and his Collegues began to conſider about continuing the Epiſcopal ſucceſſion among thoſe who adhered to them; and having reſolved upon it, they ſent Dr. Hickes over with a liſt of the deprived Clergy to confer with King James II about the matter. The Doctor ſet out May the 19th 1693, and going by the way of Holland, by reaſon of many difficulties made it ſix weeks e'er he arrived at St. Germain's. He had ſeveral audiences of King James, who readily complied with all that was deſired, and taking his leave of the King on the latter end of July, he arrived at Rotterdam on the 7th of Auguſt, where he waited two months to return in a Fleet of Merchants; but when he ſhould have gone on board he was ſeized with an ague and fever, which detained him till January 24th, on which day he went from Rotterdam, and going on board the Packet the 26th, arrived at Harwich the 29th. At length he came to London the 4th of February, and on the Eve of St. Matthias the conſecrations were performed by Dr. William Lloyd Biſhop of Norwich, Dr. Francis Turner Biſhop of Ely, and Dr. Thomas White Biſhop of Peterborough at the Biſhop of Peterborough's lodgings at the Reverend Mr. Giffard's houſe in Southgate. Dr. Hickes * was conſecrated Suffragan Biſhop of Thetford, and Mr. Thomas Wagſtaffe Suffragan of Ipſwich; at which ſolemnity Henry Earl of Clarendon was preſent. The Dean had been recommended to the King by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Mr. Wagſtaffe

* The inſtrument of his Conſecration bears date 29 Feb. 1693.

[C] Beſt Biſhoprics in the church.] A few months after he was made Dean, the Lord-Keeper North told him the King had commanded him to acquaint him, that he did not intend he ſhould ſtay long at Worceſter, and therefore deſired he would apply himſelf to ſtudy the Parliament Rolls, becauſe the Biſhops, for want of more knowledge in that matter, were, ſince the Reformation, of the leaſt influence of any Members in the Houſe of Lords, whereas before that time they uſed to have the greateſt ſway there. Hereupon his Lordſhip preſented the Dean with Ryley's Placita Parliamentaria, which is the firſt volume of the Rolls, and told him when he had read that, he ſhould have the uſe of the reſt in order from him. The Dean had read over the firſt and ſecond volumes in MS. and half the third, when King Charles died, which made him give over that ſtudy, knowing he could not expect to be a favourite in the next reign.

[D] Claim of right.] The Earl of Nottingham, then Secretary of State, called it Dr. Hickes's Manifeſto againſt the Government; Dr. Francis Lee has publiſhed it in the Appendix, N°. IV. to his Life of Mr. Kettlewell, with this title, The Proteſtation of Dr. George Hickes, and Claim of Right fixed up in the Cathedral Church of Worceſter.

[E] Sancroft and his collegues.] Not long after the Revolution there was a report ſpread about the town, and it was not only reported but printed in ſeveral pamphlets, that the Archbiſhop was one of the Lords Spiritual who wrote to the Prince of Orange to invite him over into England. Dr. Hickes acquainted the Archbiſhop with this report, who abſolutely denied he had done any ſuch thing, and ſaid ſeveral things in his own juſtification. Laſt of all he ſaid, Mr. Dean, do you know Dr. Stanley, I refer you to him to juſtify me from this falſe and groundleſs report. He being ſatisfied with what his Grace had told him, did not think it needful to trouble Dr. Stanley at that time. But afterwards, May 17, 1715, at the requeſt of ſome friends he wrote to the Doctor, to deſire the favour of him to give an account of the conferences between the Archbiſhop and him upon the ſubject of the invitation. In anſwer to which Dr. Stanley returned the following letter.

" Sir, " Amen-Corner, May 26.
" I do not remember that ever I heard, that the " late good Archbiſhop Sancroft was thought to have " invited the Prince of Orange over into England. If " any one did charge him with it, I believe it was " without ground. All that I can ſay as to the mat- " ter is, that in 1687, when I came into England out " of Holland, I confeſs I did deſire the Archbiſhop " to write to the then Princeſs of Orange, on whom I " had the honour to attend, to encourage her ſtill to " give countenance to the Church of England, but he " was pleaſed not to write to her. And afterwards " when we were come over into England, and a re- " port being ſpread abroad that ſome of the Lords " ſpiritual as well as temporal had invited the Prince " of Orange into England, in my diſcourſing with the " Archbiſhop, I remember that he ſaid to me, I am " now glad that I did not write to the Princeſs as " you deſired, for if I had written to her, they would " have ſaid that I had ſent to invite them over. " This is true, and this is all that I can ſay of that " affair.

" I am, Sir,
" 22d of Feb. " Your moſt faithful Friend,
" 1693. " and humble Servant,
Will. Stanley.

Wagſtaffe by the Biſhop of Norwich. It has been lately averred in print, that the Doctor was once in the mind to take the oaths and ſave his preferments; but this is ſo contrary to his character all his life-time, that few people will believe ſuch a report, raiſed on purpoſe to aſperſe him after he had many years lain peaceably in his grave, where a generous adverſary would ſcorn to inſult him. Every body, I believe, will confeſs thus much of him, that he was a perſon of univerſal learning, and one of the greateſt ornaments of the age he lived in, as his immortal [F] works will bear witneſs for him to all future generations.

[F] Works.] He hath written and publiſhed the following pieces. 1. A Letter ſent from beyond the ſeas to one of the chief Miniſters of the Nonconforming party, by way of reply to many particulars, which he ſent to the author in a letter of news, uſeful for theſe diſtempered times. By a lover of the Eſtabliſhed Government both of Church and State. Ann. 1674, in 4to. It was afterwards reprinted under the following title. The judgment of an anonymous writer concerning theſe following particulars. 1. A Law for diſabling a Papiſt to inherit the Crown. 2. The execution of penal laws againſt Proteſtant Diſſenters. 3. A Bill of comprehenſion, all briefly diſcuſſed in a Letter ſent from beyond the Seas to a Diſſenter ten years ago, the ſecond edition, 1684. This Letter was in reality an anſwer to his elder brother Mr. John Hickes, a Diſſenting Miniſter, bred up in Cromwell's time at the College of Dublin, and deeply infected with the principles of thoſe times, whom the Doctor always endeavoured to convince of his errors, but without ſucceſs, the ſaid Mr. John Hickes perſiſting in them to his death, and at laſt, to the Doctor's great grief, ſuffering for his rebellion under the Duke of Monmouth; though upon the Doctor's unwearied application and petition, the King would have granted him his life, but that he had been falſely informed, that this Mr. Hickes was the perſon who adviſed the Duke of Monmouth to take upon him the title of King. Upon the Duke's landing the Dean knowing his brother's principles and inclinations, uſed the utmoſt diligence to get him ſecured by the Lieutenancy, but he could not be found. 2. A Diſcourſe to prove the ſtrongeſt temptations conquerable by Chriſtians in a Sermon on 1 Cor. x. 13, preached before Sir Thomas Davis, Lord Mayor of London, and Court of Aldermen, the 14th of January $16\frac{76}{77}$, and dedicated to them, being printed at their deſire, in 1677. It had a ſecond edition, 1683 4to. 3. Ravillac Redivivus, being a narrative of the late trial of Mr. James Mitchel, a Conventicle Preacher, who was executed the 18th of January, 1677, for an attempt which he made on the ſacred perſon of the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, to which is annexed an account of the trial of that moſt wicked Phariſee Major Thomas Weir, who was executed for adultery, inceſt, and beſtiality. It was firſt printed in 1680, in 4to, the MS. copy being tranſmitted by the Author to Dr. Simon Patrick, then Prebendary of Weſtminſter, who ſent it to the preſs. The ſecond edition was in Folio, 1682, very much augmented and enlarged, and at the end there is added an Appendix, containing an exact relation of the proceedings before the Lords of the Articles againſt Charles Maitland of Halton, Treaſurer-Depute, for perjury, having given a falſe teſtimony at the tryal of James Mitchel. The writing of this book was occaſioned by his attending in quality of Domeſtic Chaplain upon the Duke of Lauderdale in Scotland, who to confute the many lies raiſed by the Fanatics about Mitchel's trial, deſired him to write the true narrative of that trial, which he did from the Records of the Criminal Court. 4. The Spirit of Popery ſpeaking out of the mouths of fanatical Proteſtants; or the laſt Speeches of Mr. John Kid, and Mr. John King, two Preſbyterian Miniſters, who were executed for high treaſon at Edenburg, on the 14th of Auguſt 1679. London 1680, Folio. To which is ſubjoined, A Narrative of the Murder of the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews from the records of the Privy Council. The Doctor was ſtanding by his Patron, the Duke of Lauderdale, when he opened the Scotch packet which brought the news of that murder, the ſeveral relations of the barbarous manner whereof ſo affected him (the Doctor) that it made him ill for ſome time. The fact was ſo miſrepreſented by the faction in both Kingdoms, and particularly at London, by Dr. Gilbert Burnet, that Dr. Hickes deſired leave of his Grace to write the true narrative of it from the records of the Privy Council, as they were ſent up by order to his Grace. It was no ſooner publiſhed but all thoſe lying reports were ſilenced, though the diſperſers of them were not aſhamed. Ravillac and the Spirit of Popery were publiſhed privately, and under the diſguiſe of a Scotiſh Gentleman, ſo that it was ſome time before the Author was known, though the King, to whom the Lord Chancellor Nottingham firſt ſhewed and recommended the book, enquired of the Biſhop of London who was the Author of it: The Biſhop then could not tell. Soon after his Majeſty knowing it was Dr. Hickes, took a particular liking to him, and not long after made him Prebend of Worceſter againſt the powerful ſollicitations of the Duke of York, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and Biſhop of London, for another very deſerving perſon. Theſe two pieces are with ſeveral additions, and ſome alterations prepared by the Author for another impreſſion. 5. A Narrative of a ſtrange and ſudden apparition of an Archangel at the Old-Baily, on Monday March the 7th 1680, Engliſh Stile, betwixt the hours of three and five in the afternoon, to the great aſtoniſhment of the Court, and all that were preſent. Dedicated to all the Miniſters and Church-Wardens of the whole Nation. By an eye-witneſs of the Apparition. Printed in the year $16\frac{80}{81}$, one ſheet Folio, and dated March 15 in the ſame year. The courage wherewith the Doctor preached againſt the diſaffected, put them upon contriving to blaſt his reputation, which in confederacy with his two Church-Wardens, both of that party, more particularly one Sherman, and with Sheriff Bethel, they attempted in the following manner. They employed one Whitaker to indict the Doctor of Idolatry in worſhipping St. Michael the Archangel, and to cover their deſign, they joined with him in the ſame indictment his two Church Wardens and the Lecturer. The Church-Wardens pleaded guilty, and then one of them, Sherman, went and told the Doctor they had done ſo, and that it was the opinion of his beſt friends that he ſhould do ſo too. To which the Doctor replied, for worſhipping St. Michael, pray where? In your Church, ſaith he. How, Mr. Church-Warden? For bowing to him, ſaith he, as you go up to the Communion-Table. Why, replied the Doctor, is St. Michael there? No, ſays the other, but the figure of him ſtands over it. To which the Doctor replied, that though he had been reſident about four months, he had never obſerved any ſuch figure. This made him deſire Sherman to deſcribe it, who told him it was a graven wooden image, gilt over, as big as a man, with a trumpet at his mouth, and a label on his breaſt, with theſe words, Awake, ye dead, and come to judgment. This, replied the Doctor, is a ſymbol of the Reſurrection, and not of St. Michael. But my brother and I, ſaith the Church-Warden, have pleaded guilty, and you had beſt do ſo too. To this the Doctor anſwered, I am a Doctor of Divinity, and a Miniſter of the Church of England, and will ſooner plead guilty to an indictment of treaſon, than to one of idolatry. You may take your courſe, and I will take mine. Afterwards the Doctor enquired when this image was made, and upon what occaſion; and he was informed it was firſt made and ſet up in Cromwell's time upon the Church clock, between the two figures of Time and Death, on the inſide of the tower; whence how it came to be afterwards removed and placed over the Altar, is related in this Narrative. The Doctor having got a copy of the indictment, went next day to the Old-Baily to plead not guilty; but before he went into the Court, he was informed that all the party were there, and Mr. Sherman with the image, waiting till he came in, when they intended to ſet up a loud laugh, and put him out of countenance But he diſappointed them, and came to the Court the next day, attended with ſome of the chief of his pariſh, and he was there received with great reſpect, and pleaded not guilty, and deſired time to traverſe till the next generations. He was particularly remarkable for his ſkill in the old Northern languages, and has ſhewed how uſeful the knowledge of the Saxon tongue is both to Lawyers and Divines. And to uſe the words of that moſt excellent man his dear friend (a) Mr. Nelſon; " though he was admirably ſkilled in other parts of uſeful learning, yet he hath laboured " with ſeſſions, which was granted. Here I muſt obſerve, that the party being diſappointed the day before, did however carry St. Michael into the Court and ſet up a loud laugh; and Sheriff Bethel made ſome reflections upon the idol, as they called it, which occaſioned the Doctor's writing this Narrative. At the firſt publication 1500 were ſold one morning; and it ſo confounded the party, that when the Doctor came the next ſeſſions, there was not one appeared to proſecute. But Bethel preſuming again to inveigh againſt the idol, the Doctor begged leave to anſwer him, and was heard very patiently. After which Sir Job Charleton, one of the Judges, ſtood up, and ſaid: Whether the image be an idol or not an idol, or whether the Doctor is guilty of idolatry or not, belongs to the Court Chriſtian to judge, and is not of the cogniſance of this Court. So the indictment was quaſhed. 6. The Spirit of Enthuſiaſm exorciſed in a Sermon on 1 Cor. xii. 4. preached before the Univerſity of Oxford on Act Sunday, July 11. 1680, printed in the ſame year, at the requeſt of the then Vice-Chancellor Dr. Timothy Halton, and many others, who heard it preached, and dedicated to him. It had three editions in quarto, and a fourth in 8vo, 1709, much enlarged, before two other Diſcourſes occaſioned by the new Prophets, viz. the Hiſtory of Montaniſm, wrote by Mr. Francis Lee, deprived Fellow of St. John's Oxon, and the new pretenders to Prophecy examined by Nat. Spinkes a deprived Clergyman. The plans of theſe two Diſcourſes were firſt deſigned by the Dean himſelf, but being diſabled by his infirmities, he prevailed upon the two learned Gentlemen already mentioned to write them for him; but he has prefixed a Dedication of his own to the whole Book to the Rev. Sir George Wheeler, D. D. and Prebendary of the Cathedral Church of Durham. The deſign of this diſcourſe was to reſcue the holy Scriptures from the abuſive interpretations of Enthuſiaſts, and it was ſo acceptable to the world, at its firſt appearance, that the Dr. received the particular thanks of very learned men for it both by Letter and otherwiſe. 7. Peculium Dei: a diſcourſe about the Jews as the peculiar people of God, in a Sermon on Rom. ix. 4, 5. preached before the Aldermen of London, February 6. 1680-81. printed at their deſire ſoon after, and dedicated to Sir Patience Ward, Lord Mayor, and the Court of Aldermen. The deſign of this diſcourſe was to confute the many dangerous doctrines and opinions ancient and modern, grounded upon the miſunderſtanding the Jewiſh Oeconomy and the Moſaick Law. The Doctor firſt preached it in his courſe at St. Mary's before the Univerſity of Oxford when he was only B. D. and Dr. Alleſtree then Regius Profeſſor was ſo pleaſed with it, that he ſent for him next day, and gave him particular thanks for it. 8. The true notion of Perſecution ſtated, in a Sermon on 2 Cor. iv. 9. preached at the time of the late contribution for the French Proteſtants. Publiſhed at the earneſt requeſt of many that heard it 1681. The Author endeavours in it to remove the prejudices many had then taken againſt the French Refugees, as people altogether of the ſame ill principles with our Diſſenters both with reſpect to Church and State; and tho' it was the only Sermon preached in their favour upon that occaſion, yet he never received the leaſt thanks from any of them, which he could aſcribe to no other cauſe more probable, than becauſe about that time he had ſignalized himſelf againſt thoſe who diſturbed the peace of the Church and State. 9. A Sermon preached before the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London upon Acts xvii. 7. at Bow Church on January 30. 1681-2, and then printed at their requeſt with a Dedication to Sir John Moor, Lord Mayor, &c. At the preaching of it, a knot of Gentlemen ſtanding in the middle Iſle were heard to curſe and threaten the Doctor, with which he was immediately after acquainted in the Veſtry by ſome loyal Gentlemen, who thereupon offered him their ſervice to conduct him home for fear of danger from thoſe threats; but the Doctor thankfully refuſed to give them that trouble, or betray the leaſt fear in a cauſe wherein God had given him the ſpirit of courage, which made him refuſe the like offer from the Lord Mayor the ſame Evening. The printing of this Sermon, which had afterwards ſeveral editions, was much oppoſed in the Court of Aldermen by Sir Patience Ward, who ſaid the Doctor had ſpoken many things in the pulpit concerning the principles of the Diſſenters which he could not prove, and that was the occaſion of his adding in the margin his proofs from their own writings. This Sermon did alſo ſo enrage the Party, that they employed Mr. Samuel Johnſon to write againſt it; and the Doctor in a Book, intitled, Julian the Apoſtate, which the Doctor anſwered in his Jovian, whereof hereafter. 10. The moral Shechinah, or, a diſcourſe of God's glory, in a Sermon on 1 Cor. x. 32. preached at the Yorkſhire Feaſt in Bow Church, June 11. 1682, and printed at the requeſt of the Stewards of that Feaſt, with a dedication to them. 11. A Diſcourſe of the Sovereign Power, in a Sermon on Rom. xiii. 4. preached at St. Mary le Bow November 28. 1682, before the Artillery Company: publiſhed at their requeſt, to whom and Sir William Prichard, Lord Mayor of London, it is dedicated. 12. Jovian, or, an Anſwer to Julian the Apoſtate; printed twice in 1683, 8vo. This excellent anſwer in defence of paſſive Obedience the Doctor wrote at the deſire of Archbiſhop Sancroft, tho' many artful endeavours were uſed with him from other hands to prevent the writing of it: particularly by Dr. John Williams of the Poultry, ſince Biſhop of Chicheſter, an enemy to the Doctrine of Non-reſiſtance. Of Mr. S. Johnſon's reply to this Book after the Revolution, and of the anſwer to that Reply by Dr. William Hopkins, Prebendary of Worceſter. Dr. Hickes has given an account in his preface to Dr. Hopkins's Sermons. This Book with many large additions the Author had prepared for another impreſſion. It is obſervable, that Dr. Kennet, tho' he mentions Julian in his compleat Hiſtory, takes no notice of this learned anſwer. 13. The caſe of Infant Baptiſm in five Queſtions 1683 in 4to. It is the fifth caſe in the ſecond Volume of a Book, intitled, A Collection of Caſes and other Diſcourſes lately written to recover Diſſenters to the Communion of the Church of England 1685 quarto. On this pious deſign the Clergy met ſeveral times at the Deanery of St. Paul's, Dr. Hickes being then Reſident upon his Prebend at Worceſter. At his return Dr. Edward Stillingfleet, Dean of St. Paul's, ſent to deſire to ſpeak with him, and told him what had been done in his abſence, and added ſmiling, they had left one caſe for him, that of infant Baptiſm, which ſeveral of them, and particularly Dr. Cave, had refuſed to undertake. To which Dr. Hickes replied, that then his was Hobſon's choice, but however he would not refuſe it. 14. A Sermon on Heb. xiii. 16. preached at the Church of St. Bridget on Eaſter Tueſday, being the firſt of April 1684, upon the ſubject of Alms-giving, before Sir Henry Tulſe, Lord Mayor of London, and the Court of Aldermen, at whoſe deſire it was printed, and to whom it is dedicated. 15. A Sermon on Pſal. xiv. 7. preached in the Cathedral Church of Worceſter upon the 29*th of May* 1684; publiſhed then at the joint requeſt of the Mayor and Aldermen of that City, and dedicated to them. 16. The Harmony of Divinity and Law in a Diſcourſe on Prov. XXX. 31. about not reſiſting of Sovereign Princes 1684 4to. This diſcourſe was the ſubject of three Sermons preached on January 30. and the two preceding Sundays at Allhallows Barkin upon occaſion of the dying Speech of Mr. Algernoon Sydney, and of the prevailing opinion then ſpread abroad by ſome Lawyers, upon the impeachment of the Earl of Danby, that the King could not pardon any perſon impeached by the houſe of Commons before his tryal, for that the impeachment of that Houſe had the nature of an appeal of Murder, which is at the ſuit of the Party. Of which and many other particulars relating to that buſy juncture, ſee more in the preface to this

(a) In his Life of Biſhop Bull, pag. 512.

(b) Linguarum Vet Septentr. Theſaurus, 2 vol. fol.

" with great ſucceſs in (b) untrodden paths, a certain mark of a great genius, whereby " the utmoſt parts of Europe will have an occaſion to celebrate his profound erudition. " But he excelled in his own profeſſion, having built his ſtudy of Divinity upon the " holy this Diſcourſe. 17. Speculum Beatæ Virginis, a Diſcourſe on Luke 1. 28, of the due praiſe and honour of the Virgin Mary, by a true Catholick of the Church of England 1686, and reprinted with additions the ſame year. This was the ſubſtance of ſome Sermons preached in his pariſh Church, for that he had found diſperſed amongſt his pariſhioners ſome popiſh papers which aſſerted, that when the Romaniſts prayed to the Saints in heaven, they did no more than when they deſired their Brethren on earth to pray for them in the name and through the mediation of Jeſus Chriſt. 18. An Apologetical Vindication of the Church of England in anſwer to her Adverſaries, who reproach her with the Engliſh Hereſies and Schiſms, 1686. in 4to, reprinted with many additions, a large Preface and an Appendix of papers relating to the Schiſms of the Church of Rome, in 8vo 1706. This Diſcourſe was at firſt a Sermon preached in his Pariſh Church upon occaſion of his Majeſty's printing King Charles II's papers: the preaching of which occaſioned much talk in the town. The Sunday following being deſired by Dr. Sherlock to preach for him at his Lecture in St. Dunſtan's in the Weſt, the Dean preached the ſame Sermon there in a crouded audience, which very much increaſed the town-talk, and was by ſome ſpy moſt odiouſly repreſented to the King; who thereupon commanded the Biſhop of Ely to bring the Dean to him at an hour appointed, and as ſoon as his Majeſty had notice they were come, he came out and took them into his cloſet, where the Dean expecting ſome ſevere reproof from his Majeſty, carried with him ſeveral Popiſh Pamphlets to produce for his vindication. But his Majeſty only telling him he had been informed the Dean called King Charles's papers printed by his Majeſty's order, a ſcandalous libel, with other reproachful expreſſions, he reply'd, he hoped his Majeſty would not believe him capable of ſo treating any thing that came from his hands. Upon which the King immediately reply'd, that indeed he did not believe it: ſaying, Mr. Dean, perhaps you preached againſt thoſe papers becauſe you did not believe them to be my brother's: but to convince you they are, if you ſhould have any doubt of it, and that you may convince others, I will ſhew you the originals written and interlined with his own hand, to which you are no ſtranger; whereupon his Majeſty immediately fetched the papers and gave them into the Dean's hands, who upon the ſight of them told his Majeſty that he acknowledged that to be the late King his brother's hand. What his Majeſty ſaid to him farther upon this occaſion was to this effect; that as he reſolved to protect the Clergy of the Church of England, ſo he hoped, that according to their profeſſed principles they would be dutiful and loyal to him. Soon after this the Dean being invited by the Biſhop of Worceſter to accept the Rectory of Allchurch, he left London, and was no ſooner ſettled in his Deanery, but the Papiſts there began in all public meetings to aſk the people tauntingly, where the Church of England was, and bid them go aſk their Biſhop aud their Dean where to find it among ſo many ſects and ſchiſms. This news was brought daily to both their ears, which occaſioned the Dean at the requeſt of the Biſhop to enlarge the Sermon abovementioned into a juſt Diſcourſe upon that ſubject; after the firſt publication of which the adverſaries were never heard to mutter the leaſt word about the Engliſh Hereſies and Schiſms. 19. The celebrated ſtory of the Thebæan Legion no fable: in anſwer to the objections of Dr. Gilbert Burnet's preface to his tranſlation of Lactantius de mortibus Perſecutorum, with ſome remarks on his diſcourſe of perſecution. This piece was written in the year 1687 but not publiſhed, till 1714 in 8vo. The reaſon why it was then publiſhed, and not when it was firſt wrote, is given by the very Reverend Mr. H. Bedford in his preface to this treatiſe. 20. Reflections upon a Letter out of the country to a member of this preſent Parliament, occaſioned by a Letter to a Member of the Houſe of Commons, concerning the Biſhops lately in the Tower, and now under ſuſpenſion, in 4to, ſubſcribed A. Z. Theſe reflections were written, as appears by the occaſion of them, in the year 1689 by the Dean then at Worceſter. The author of that letter to which they are an anſwer, was generally preſumed to be Dr. G. Burnet, who is that Butting Divine pointed at in the Reflections. Soon after the publication of them a paper came out, wherein it was aſſerted, that Dr. Burnet was neither the author of that letter, nor had any hand in it, which whether true or no, was yet generally disbelieved. 21. Inſtitutiones Grammaticæ Anglo-Saxonicæ & Mæſo-Gothicæ, Authore G. Hickeſio Eccleſiæ Anglicanæ Presbytero. Grammatica Iſlandicæ Runolphi, Ionæ, Catalogus librorum Septentrionalium. Accedit Edwardi Bernardi Etymologicum Britannicum. Oxoniæ 1689 in 4to. While the Dean was writing the preface to this book, there were great diſputes every where, and particularly in the Houſe of Commons, about the original contract, which occaſioned him to inſert therein the ancient coronation oath of our Saxon Kings, wherein there is not the leaſt footſtep of any ſuch contract. A little before the book was publiſhed the Dean aſked leave of Archbiſhop Sancroft to dedicate it to him, when they were both under ſuſpenſion for not taking the new oath; and having the good Archbiſhop's leave, who had hitherto of his great modeſty refuſed almoſt all the requeſts of this nature which had been made to him, the Dean wrote a dedication and ſent it from Worceſter to Dr. Mill Principal of Edmund Hall, who had the care of the impreſſion. But he to the Dean's great diſſatisfaction did in compliance with the times ſuppreſs that dedication, and inſtead of it only inſcribed the book to the Archbiſhop as it now ſtands in print. 22. A Letter to the author of a late paper, intitled, a Vindication of the Divines of the Church of England &c. in defence of the Hiſtory of Paſſive Obedience. 1689 in 4to. The author of the Vindication was Dr. Edward Fowler, though his name was not to it. Before the Dean publiſhed this anſwer he ſhewed it to Dr. Sherlock, telling him he feared one paſſage in it was too ſharp upon their old friend. But the Doctor reply'd, it ſhall go, for he deſerves it. 23. A word to the wavering, in anſwer to Dr. Gilbert Burnet's Enquiry into the preſent State of Affairs. 1689 in 4to. 24. An Apology for the new Separation, in a Letter to Dr. John Sharp, Archbiſhop of York, occaſioned by his farewel Sermon preached at St. Giles's in the Fields June the 28th 1691. The Apology is dedicated to the Gentlemen of the Veſtry of St. Giles's, to whom the Archbiſhop had dedicated his Sermon. Printed 1691 in 4to. 25. A Vindication of ſome among ourſelves againſt the falſe principles of Dr. Sherlock, in a Letter to the Doctor, occaſioned by the Sermon which he preached at the Temple Church on the 29th of May 1692. In which Letter are alſo contained Reflections on ſome other of the Doctor's Sermons publiſhed ſince he took the oath. 1692 4to. The ſecond edition of this Vindication, with a large Preface, was ſeized in the preſs. This book was a great mortification to Dr. Sherlock, who in that Temple Sermon had preached againſt his old brethren under the phraſe of ſome among ourſelves, with great diſreſpect, which occaſioned the Dean to expoſe him in ſuch a manner as he thought he deſerved and could never anſwer. All he had to ſay for himſelf to his friends was, that the author had betrayed the ſecrets of private converſation, which occaſioned the Dean to ſend him a letter written in another hand, and without a name, to challenge him to ſhew any one particular paſſage in the Vindication relating to himſelf, which he had not before that ſaid in ſeveral companies, and to many other of his old friends as well as to the author of the Vindication: but he never thought fit to make any anſwer thereto. 26. Some Diſcourſes on Dr. Burnet and Dr. Tillotſon, occaſioned by the late funeral Sermon of the former upon the latter. 1695 in 4to. To this piece Biſhop Burnet wrote an anſwer, intitled, The Biſhop of Sarum's Vindication, whereto the Dean made a reply, as the learned Editor of the abovementioned Treatiſe, intitled: The celebrated ſtory of the Thebæan Legion, no fable, informs us in his Preface, but for obvious reaſons never publiſhed it. 27. The Pretences of the Prince of Wales examined and rejected, in a Letter to a friend in the Country, dated November the 7th 1701. In this Treatiſe all the arguments againſt the birth are ridi-

" holy Scriptures, and the primitive Fathers of the Church, as the beſt Expoſitors of " thoſe ſacred Writings," and pointed out the way to his Brethren of the Clergy how to make themſelves maſters of the true Theology, by paying leſs regard to modern inconſiſtent culed and confuted. 28. Antiquæ Literaturæ Septentrionalis Libri duo, quorum primus G. Hickeſii S. T. P. Linguarum Vet. Septentrionalium Theſaurum Grammatico-criticum & Archæologicum; Ejuſdem de antiquæ Literaturæ Septentrionalis utilitate diſſertationem Epiſtolarem; & Andreæ Fountaine Equitis Aurati Numiſmata Saxonica & Dano-Saxonica complectitur. Alter continet Humfredi Wanleii Librorum Vet. Septentrionalium, qui in Angliæ Bibliothecis extant, Catalogum Hiſtorico-criticum; necnon multorum Vet. Cod. Septentr. alibi extantium notitiam, cum totius operis ſex Indicibus. Oxoniæ 1705 in folio. This moſt extraordinary laborious and ſplendid work is juſtly celebrated by thoſe who have any reliſh for antiquities in all parts of the learned world, as may be ſhewn by numerous teſtimonies of both our own countrymen and foreigners who have declared their approbation of it. The Great Duke of Tuſcany's Envoy ſent a copy of it to his maſter, which his Highneſs looking into and finding full of ſtrange characters, called a Council of the Dotti, and commanded them to peruſe it, and give him an account of it. They did ſo, and told him it was an excellent work, worthy to be placed in his Highneſs's Library, and would be an ornament to it: and that they believed the author was un huomo d'uno cervello particolari, i. e. " A man of a particular head." This was the Envoy's compliment to the author when he went to him with a preſent from his maſter. 29. Several Letters which paſſed between Dr. G. Hickes and a Popiſh Prieſt, with an Appendix containing ſeveral remarkable papers. 1705 in 8vo. Reprinted 1715. The perſon on whoſe account this book was publiſhed, was the Lady Theophila Nelſon wife of Robert Nelſon Eſq;. 30. A ſecond Collection of Controverſial Letters relating to the Church of England and the Church of Rome, as they paſſed between Dr. G. Hickes and an honourable Lady. 1710 in 8vo. This Lady was the Lady Gratiana Carew of Haccombe or Hadcombe in Devonſhire near Exeter. Before this book there is a large Preface wherein he vindicates the doctrine of the Euchariſt's being a ſacrifice, and himſelf from the aſperſions caſt upon him by Dr. Kennet, Dr. Hancock and others upon account of that doctrine. 31. Two treatiſes, one of the Chriſtian Prieſthood, the other of the dignity of the Epiſcopal Order, written to obviate the erroneous opinions in a late book intitled, The Rights of the Chriſtian Church with a large prefatory diſcourſe in anſwer to the ſaid book. With an Appendix whereto are added in this edition ſeveral new Tracts. The third edition enlarged in two vol. in 8vo. 1711. About the latter end of 1714 he publiſhed a Supplement of Additions to this learned work. The occaſion of writing it was not only the general ignorance the author had obſerved among the laity of all ſorts, of the nature of the Sacerdotal Powers, and their duty to their Biſhops and Prieſts, but alſo a want of a due knowledge of theſe matters among too many of the Clergy themſelves, for whoſe ſake more eſpecially he wrote theſe two Tracts. While the Doctor was writing the prefatory diſcourſe in anſwer to the Rights &c. Dr. Thomas Turner Preſident of Corpus Chriſti in Oxford, ſent him notice in a Letter dated May the 5th 1707, that he was aſked by every one he met whether the Dean was writing againſt the Univerſity or no; for they had all been informed of it, and were confident it was ſo. " I am therefore, ſays he, deſired by ſome wiſe and " good men, and very good friends of yours and mine, " to lay the thing before you, to intreat you to con- " ſider what advantage you will give both to your " enemies and ours. You will force the Univerſity " to reply upon you, or to employ ſomebody to do ſo, " to ſhew you we ſay no more than Mr. Hooker, " Biſhop Andrews, Mr. Thorndike and ſeveral others " do, nay no more, as I am deſired to tell you, though " I cannot aſſert it upon my own knowledge, than you " yourſelf ſay of the French Proteſtants in your Sermon " about Perſecution: to which it is added, I cannot " tell certainly how truely, that you yourſelf commu- " nicated with them." The Dean thanked the Preſident May the 13th for his kind letter of advice, and thus proceeds. " To return you and my good friends " an anſwer, I am not writing againſt the Univer- " ſity, nor intend to write againſt it. In my anſwer " to the Rights I have been forced by my under- " taking to lay things which do not agree with your " letter to the Genevenſes, but without reflection, or " couching any reflection upon the Univerſity, or on " the Biſhop of London, whoſe letter to the Church " of Geneva I never ſaw till Friday laſt. And as I " had finiſhed my whole anſwer before I ſaw his Lord- " ſhip's Letter, ſo I had finiſhed that ſmall part of " it which relates to the other Proteſtant Churches, " excepting a few queries to a certain perſon, before I " ſaw the Univerſity's letter: and as the Univerſity's " letter ought not to be called an anſwer to what I " have written of the other Proteſtant Churches, ſo " what I have written on that ſubject neither is nor " ought to be eſteemed as an anſwer to it. Mr. Pre- " ſident, I was bred, I thank God for it, in the Uni- " verſity, and I hope I love and honour it as much as " any man that ever was bred in it, and will ever " thankfully acknowledge that I have received great " favours and kindneſſes from it: and theſe conſidera- " tions, and not all the others mentioned in your letter, " had I a mind to write an anſwer to the Univer- " ſity's letter, would effectually reſtrain me; and " therefore depend upon it, I ſhall neither write ſuch " an anſwer, or any ways encourage ſuch an anſwer " to be written. As to the conſiderations in your letter " which moſt nearly concern myſelf, I freely own that " when I was in France 34 years ago I went to Charenton, and once there received the Sacrament, and " afterwards at Blois; but when I came to Montpellier, " I declined the Sacrament though I went to the " Temple, having by reading and conferring about " the miſſion of the French Proteſtant Miniſters al- " tered my opinion, I ſhould have ſaid my Irenicum " opinion, for I had no other than Irenicum princi- " ples when I went into France, having not read ſo " much as St. Ignatius's Epiſtles or any other father. " We went from Montpellier to Lyons, where I was a " month and never went to the Temple, thence we " went to Geneva, where once out of curioſity I went " to the great Church, and once to the Church at the " bridge, upon invitation to hear their moſt celebrated " Preacher, who preached one of Dr. Sanderſon's Ser- " mons in French. There alſo I was invited to the " Sacrament by Mr. Diodati, but not going, he told " me he believed I abſented as many Engliſh did who " queſtioned their miſſion, and afterwards he grew cold " and dry in his converſation with me. I believe the " Engliſh he meant was my Lord Chancellor Clarendon " and the Engliſh that were with him. I have now " made a frank confeſſion of my error, and I hope my " friends will allow a man to alter his opinion upon " better information once in 35 years. The great " compaſſion I had for the French Proteſtants made " me preach and publiſh my Sermon of Perſecution 25 " years ſince, in which I ſaid all I could for them to " remove a common objection againſt them that they " were of the ſame principles with our Preſbyterians, and " as much enemies to the Church of England. In that " Sermon I think I have ſaid nothing contrary to my " principle, or if any kind expreſſion leans or ſeems " to lean towards favouring or approving their Church " and Miniſtry, though I think there is none ſuch, it " muſt in equity paſs for an unguarded expreſſion, " which ſlipt from me while my eye was wholly di- " rected to the deſign I had to do them good." This ſatisfied Dr. Turner, who thanked him May the 26th for his great condeſcenſion, and ſays, " Indeed, Sir, " I did not intend to call you to that account you give " of yourſelf: after which I think it but juſt and " reaſonable you ſhould be allowed to alter your opi- " nion in ſo many years for the better, rather than as " a great many others have done for the worſe. If " men may be thus allowed to differ from them- " ſelves, much more ſure from others, eſpecially if " it be without offence to them, as I hear your book is. 32. A ſeaſonable and modeſt Apology in behalf of the reverend Dr. G. Hickes, and other Nonjurors, in a Letter to Thomas Wiſe, D. D. 1710, 8vo. This ſeems as if wrote by ſome friend, but it was his own performance.

conſiſtent ſyſtems, and more to the conſentient ſuffrage of the primitive Writers. And as no one better underſtood the Doctrine, Worſhip, Conſtitution and Diſcipline of the Catholick Church in the firſt and pureſt ages of Chriſtianity, ſo no one has proved the Church

ance. In this he vindicates himſelf and his friends from the weak arguments Dr. Wiſe had urged againſt the Euchariſtic Sacrifice, and from the calumny of their being inclined to Popery, which the ſaid Doctor had raiſed againſt them. Dr. Wiſe made ſome trifling reflections upon this Apology, in his book, intitled, The Chriſtian Euchariſt rightly ſtated, which were refuted by a friend of the Dean's, or rather, as I gueſs from the ſtile by the Dean himſelf, in a piece, intitled, 33. A Vindication of the Reverend Dr. G. Hickes, and the Author of the ſeaſonable and modeſt Apology, &c. from the undeſerved Reflections of the Reverend Dr. Thomas Wiſe, &c. 1712, in 8vo. 34. A Collection of Sermons formerly preached by Dr. Hickes, in two volumes, with a Preface by Mr. Spinckes, 1713, in 8vo. Of moſt of theſe Sermons I have given ſome account above; only I muſt add, they are dedicated by the Author to Dr. John Montague, the Dean and the Prebendaries of the Cathedral Church of Durham, wherein he expreſſes his great obligations to that Chapter: and that in the ſecond volume there are from pag. 135, ſeveral Sermons never before publiſhed; viz. Sermons 11, 12, on John xv. 14. Shewing an univerſal obedience to the Divine Will, to be the only proper means of obtaining the favour of God. 13. Upon the third verſe of the Epiſtle of St. Jude, entitled, Earneſtneſs in contending for the Faith; preached at Worceſter at the triennial Viſitation of Dr. Thomas, Biſhop of that Dioceſe. 14, 15, Upon James ii, 23. Explaining the Doctrine of Juſtification. 16. On Pſalm viii. 5. preached upon the Feaſt of St. Michael the Archangel. 17. Upon Pſalm lxxii. 8. preached before the Maſter, Wardens, &c. of the Trinity-Houſe of Deptford Strond. 35. A Letter in the Philoſophical Tranſactions, N°. 302, pag. 2076, entitled, Epiſtola Viri Reverendi D. G. Hickeſii S. T. P. ad D. Hans Sloane, M. D. & S. R. Secr. de varia lectione inſcriptionis quæ in ſtatua Tagis exaratur per quatuor alphabeta Hetruſca. 36. Two Letters to Robert Nelſon, Eſq; relating to Biſhop Bull; the firſt dated Hamſtead, Auguſt 5, 1712, and the other February 3, $17\frac{1}{13}$, publiſhed in the Life of that Biſhop, pag. 513, &c. 37. Some Queries propoſed to Civil, Canon, and Common Lawyers, in half a ſheet in Folio, 1712, printed after ſeveral editions with another title, in 8vo 1714, viz. Seaſonable Queries relating to the Birth and Birth-right of a certain Perſon. There was an anſwer to them in 1713, which helped rather to ſpread than confute them. The Anſwerer by miſtake ſuppoſes Mr. Leſley wrote them. 38. A Diſcourſe wherein ſome account is given of Dr. Grabe and his MSS. prefixed to a ſhort tract, found among his Engliſh MSS. and publiſhed by the Dean with this title, Some inſtances of the defects and omiſſions in Mr. Whiſton's collection of teſtimonies from the Scriptures and from the Fathers, againſt the true Deity of the Son and the Holy Ghoſt, by Dr. Grabe, 1712, 8vo. 39. He likewiſe reprinted and publiſhed three ſhort Treatiſes. 1. A Modeſt Plea for the Clergy, by Dr. Lancelot Addiſon. 2. A Sermon of the Sacerdotal Benediction, by Samuel Gibſon. 3. A Diſcourſe publiſhed to undeceive the people in the point of Tythes, by Dr. Heylin; and ſet a Preface before them in defence of the Prieſthood and true Rights of the Church, 1709, 8vo. Since his deceaſe were publiſhed the following pieces: 40. The Conſtitution of the Catholick Church, and the nature and conſequences of Schiſm, ſet forth in a Collection of papers written by the late Right Reverend George Hickes, D. D. 1716, 8vo. The Book begins with Letters which paſſed in King William's time, between the Doctor and a Serjeant at Law, Mr. T. Geers, Brother to Mrs. Suſanna Hopton, a Lady famous for her Piety and Charity. Two years before he died, or thereabouts, the Dean reviewed theſe Letters, and made ſeveral Alterations in them, as a man has a right to do with his own works: which is the reaſon of the difference between them as here printed, and the copy of them, which Dr. Nathaniel Marſhal, who endeavoured to anſwer them, had the uſe of, in order to ſhew the variations of them. Next come 40 Propoſitions concerning the polity of the Church, and the nature of Schiſm, which were ſent to the ſame Serjeant, who returned them with ſome objections; to anſwer which the author wrote a Vindication, dividing it into four parts, the two firſt of which were printed under the title of a diſcourſe concerning the dignity of the Epiſcopal Order; the two laſt are inſerted in this Book. The next paper is intitled, A Letter written for the uſe of a Gentleman (Robert Nelſon, Eſq;) who lived in the Communion of the Nonjurors till the Death of the Rev. Father in God Dr. William Lloyd, Lord Biſhop of Norwich; but ſhortly after his Death, left it, and joined himſelf to the other oppoſite Communion of the Church of England before this Letter could be finiſhed. On Thurſday before Eaſter, April 6. 1710, Mr. Nelſon being of opinion with Mr. Dodwell, that the Schiſm was at end by Biſhop Lloyd's death, acquainted the Dean by Letter, that he found himſelf under an obligation of changing his practice, and that he thought he ought not to neglect thoſe advantages which attend the approaching Feſtival, however he thought it proper to acquaint him with his Reſolution, that if he had any thing farther to offer, he might conſider it before Eaſter, and tho' he differed from him in this point, yet no body could have a greater value and eſteem for him. The Dean's anſwer, dated Good-Friday, is in theſe words, " Honoured Sir, You may remember I came to " you this day ſennight in the Morning to tell you, that " on the Wedneſday before a friend of mine came to me " to let me know, you had declared your reſolution of " going to church, and that it would be a reflection on " me if I did not do ſomething to prevent it if I poſſibly " could. Upon this I told you I had begun the " Thurſday Morning following to put ſomething in " writing for your conſideration, but that I was in- " terrupted by a long viſit, and diſcouraged to pro- " ceed, becauſe I had heard you had declared your " reſolution of leaving our Communion for the other, " and given a real proof of it by asking the benedic- " tion of one of their Biſhops, which you did not de- " ny nor ask me to go on; but on the contrary came " to me the day following in the Evening to pray me " not to give myſelf any farther trouble in writing " upon your account, becauſe you thought we had " talked all we could ſay upon that ſubject; to which " I replied, we had, I thought, talked but little, and " ſeldom together of it, and however that talk was at " beſt but talk, and had not the advantages of wri- " ting. This and what I often heard ſince of your " declaring your reſolution with all frankneſs in other " places made me think no more of my papers till " yeſterday, when I reſolved by God's aſſiſtance to " finiſh them, becauſe they may be of uſe to me in " confirming other perſons, who are undetermined: " but upon reflection of what I have to write I fear " it will take up ſome time with all my infirmities to " finiſh it; indeed more than at firſt I thought it would. " However, when it is finiſhed and fit to be read, I " will impart it to you, if you can prevail with your " ſelf in the mean time to forbear going to the publick; " though if it ſhould have no effect upon you after de- " claring yourſelf ſo often under an obligation of " changing your practice, it would occaſion ſuch " inſulting reflections upon me by many, as you " know are uſually made in ſuch caſes upon ſucceſs- " leſs endeavours to convince. Such at all times has " been my behaviour towards you, ſince I had the " honour of your acquaintance, and ſo much expe- " rience have I had of your candor, that I doubt not " in the leaſt of your continuing your eſteem for me, " of which I have had ſo many proofs. And I do " aſſure you, that your change ſhall never alter or di- " miniſh that reſpect and honour for you, of which I " have given the world publick Teſtimonies." On the ſame day Mr. Nelſon returned an anſwer, and aſſured the Dean, " he had ſome difficulty to ſatisfy " myſelf in a point which was not ſupported by his " accurate judgment, and if he could have reſigned " himſelf implicitly to the determination of another, " the great deference he had for him would quickly " have influenced his choice. He tells him the fre- " quent Converſations he had with him upon the " ſubject, and the peruſal of papers which he knew

Church of England to be perfectly conformable thereto in every thing of moment, with more ſolid and convincing arguments, and with greater clearneſs and vivacity of thought and expreſſion, againſt all her adverſaries, whether Infidel, Puritanical, or Popiſh. He was a perſon very ſtrict in his principles of morality, and did not allow himſelf a liberty of breaking the laws of Chriſt for his own convenience, or of bending or miſinterpreting them to ſerve any intereſt whatſoever. What he was convinced was his duty he cloſely adhered to, chooſing to ſuffer any thing rather than violate his conſcience. Tho' he wrote with ſome ſharpneſs againſt ſuch as he believed acted with a view to ſerve their own ambition and avarice; yet to others worthy of his acquaintance, though of different principles,

" paſſed through his hands, together with ſeveral par" ticulars diſcourſed over with him by Mr. Cherry,
" made him think it not neceſſary to trouble him up-
" on this occaſion, and he is confident none but the " perſon who came to the Dean would have thought
" it any reflection upon him, if he had not given
" himſelf any farther trouble. But when the Dean
" had declared he had put pen to paper, in order to " convince him the Schiſm was not at an end, he " thought the reſpect which will always be paid him
" by him, obliged him, notwithſtanding the convic" tions of his mind, not to change his practice till
" had finiſhed his thoughts, which he hoped he would " have concluded this week. He declares he ſhould
" be ſorry to draw any reflections upon the Dean by " his conduct, and let him determine which way ſo-
" ever, his much ſuperior ſenſe ought not to ſuffer,
" tho' many too frequently inſult upon ſuch occaſions.
" Therefore, adds he, as you know the ſtate of my " mind at preſent, I deſire you to judge whether or " no I ſhould defer going to the publick. If you re" quire it, I will wait till you have finiſhed your pa" pers, tho' I muſt own to you, that the reaſons of thoſe
" who have already complied appear to me ſo con" vincing, that except you deſire the contrary, I
" ſhould think myſelf obliged to change my practice
" ſooner. —— The latter end of your Letter gives " me great Satisfaction, for any coldneſs in your
" friendſhip would have been a load upon my mind,
" which would have oppreſſed me very much. I am
" ſure it is a great Inſtance of your goodneſs that you
" have given me ſo many publick and private teſti-
" monies of your favour; and it will be ſtill a far-
" ther proof of it, that the difference between us cre" ates no diminution in your kindneſs, which I ſhall
" always endeavour to cultivate to the beſt of my " power; and I ſhall reckon it as a happy circum-
" ſtance of my life to be able to ſay of you, as ſome
" great man did of his friend: " Ita diſſenſi ab illo,
" ut in disjunctione ſententiæ, conjuncti tamen amicitia
" maneremus." The next day, Eaſter Eve, April 8, the Dean replied as follows: " Honoured Sir, As you " know I cannot in conſcience adviſe you to go to " Church, or in the leaſt approve your going thither,
" ſo conſidering the declarations, I know you have " made in ſeveral places, and I doubt not in ſeveral
" others, of which I have not heard, to go thither;
" I think I ſhould be juſtly cenſured for great im-
" prudence by my friends, and for great confidence
" and ſelf-ſufficiency by our enemies, ſhould I take " upon me, after ſo many ſignal manifeſtations of your
" reſolution, by which you have raiſed the expecta" tions of the other communion, to require or deſire
" you to defer the putting of it in practice, when " there are ſo little hopes of convincing you, who are
" ſo far gone towards the other ſide, and even ready
" to enter into the church, that were there no more " than the expreſſions of your own letters, they are " enough to make me think you are too much fixed
" to be reduced by any thing I can write; and if " you were ſo far gone from us towards any other
" communion, I ſhould think the ſame. I believe,
" Sir, you would judge ſo of me were you in my con" dition and I in your's; and therefore prudence
" obliges me in this, as in my former letter, to leave
" you wholly to the liberty of your own judgment,
" eſpecially conſidering that ſhould I deſire you to for" bear going to church to morrow, where I have
" reaſon to preſume you are expected, it would give
" the expectants occaſion to enquire why you did not " come, and oblige you to tell the reaſon, which be" ing known would ſoon become town-talk, and
" raiſe the expectations both of friends and enemies;
" and at laſt when you went thither, extremely expoſe
" me and our communion, and bring upon us, in the " condition and criſis we are, and are like to continue
" in, all the indignation, ſcorn and deriſion of the world,
" which you, I am ſure, who underſtand the times ſo
" well, can better imagine than I can expreſs: I
" wiſh, Sir, you had written the letter which you
" wrote to me on Thurſday in the evening a month
" or ſix weeks ago, before you were ſo much deter" mined, and had made yourſelf expected at the other
" ſide, then the controverſy might have been ma" naged with more privacy between us, and without
" thoſe great inconveniencies and mighty prejudices,
" to which I believe you cannot but think it would
" now expoſe your moſt faithful, &c." The next day Mr. Nelſon went to church, and for this reaſon it is apparent the author never deſigned this letter for his view, although having begun it by way of letter to him, he ſtill continued to addreſs it to the ſame perſon. Theſe two worthy men, notwithſtanding their difference of ſentiments, conſtantly maintained the ſtricteſt friendſhip, which was never interrupted till Mr. Nelſon's death. 41. The Introduction and ſome part of Mr. Kettlewell's Life prefixed to his works in Folio 1719, which Life was about the ſame time printed alone in 8vo. 42. A volume of Poſthumous Diſcourſes publiſhed by Mr. Spinckes 1726. The titles and texts of the Sermons are, 1. What willingneſs of mind is accepted by God, upon 2 Cor. viii. 12. 2. Confirmation of Divine Original, upon Heb. vi. 2. 3. Upon Rev. xiii. 11, 12. The Epiſcopal Character the Ordinance of Chriſt. 4. Upon 2 Cor. iii. 1, 2, 3. That people ſhould be tender of the reputation of their Paſtors. 5. Upon St. Mark x. 14, 15. The neceſſity of becoming like little children before we can be the diſciples of Chriſt. 6, 7. Upon Phil. iv. 7. Peaceableneſs the chief of virtues and a Preſervative againſt Hereſy. 8. Upon Rev. ii. 4, 5. Remiſſneſs in the love of God and decay of Zeal, preſage the loſing a light of the Goſpel. 9. On Mat. v. 17. Chriſtianity not the deſtruction, but the perfection of Judaiſm. 10, 11. Upon Luke xi. 42. Moral Laws to be preferred before poſitive, though the poſitive have a title to be obſerved. 12. On Jam. ii. 10. The whole Law ought to be obeyed. 13. Upon 1 John iii. 7. The ſame ſubject as the former. 43. Dr. Hickes's Determination of two Queſtions: 1. Whether there ought to be a true Sacrifice in the Church? 2. Whether there is any ſuch thing in the Church of England, ſince the preſent Liturgy eſtabliſhed at the Reformation? It is printed from p. 51, to p. 67, in a book intitled, Two Diſcourſes, wherein it is proved that the Church of England bleſſeth and offereth the Euchariſtic Elements, &c. 1732, in 8vo. 44. Some Propoſitions concerning Separation, &c. ſeriouſly tendered by a Miniſter to the conſideration of one of his Pariſhioners, who lived in full Communion with the Church by Law eſtabliſhed, and with thoſe who ſeparate from it in Congregational Meetings, to which is annexed, an Anſwer to a Popiſh Letter: they are printed in a pamphlet entitled, Three ſhort Treatiſes never before printed, the firſt and ſecond by the late very Reverend Dr. George Hickes: the third, A Letter againſt a Proteſtant's marrying a Papiſt, by Mr. Kettlewell, 1732, in 8vo. Beſides theſe works there are extant many excellent Prefaces and Recommendations wrote by him, at the earneſt requeſt of the Authors or Editors of other works. 1. A ſhort recommendation to a ſerious and pathetical contemplation of the mercies of God, in ſeveral moſt devout and ſublime thankſgivings, 1699, in 12mo. 2. A Preface to the Caſe of Sureties in Baptiſm, in which is ſhewn that Schiſmatics ought not to be admitted as Godfathers and Godmothers in the principles, he was remarkably affable and courteous; and he was much reſpected by men of all ranks and opinions, not only for his uncommon learning, but likewiſe for his agreeable and polite converſation. Some years before he died he was grievouſly tormented with the ſtone, a diſtemper to which the moſt ſtudious are ever liable. At length his conſtitution, though naturally ſtrong, being quite broke with age, and the frequent returns of racking pain, he gave way to nature December the 15th 1715, in the ſeventy fourth year of his age, and was on the 18th interred [G] in St. Margaret's Church-yard Weſtminſter by his fellow-ſufferer the very Reverend Mr. Nathaniel Spinckes.

the miniſtration of that holy Sacrament, by Dr. William Higden, 1701, in 4to. 3. Preface to Thomas à Kempis of the Imitation of Jeſus Chriſt, volume the ſecond 1707, and 1711, 8vo. 4. Dedication to Edward Hyde, Baron Clifton, of the Gentleman inſtructed in the conduct of a virtuous and happy Life. Third Edition, 1707, in 12mo. 5. Preface to a Latin Letter of Dr. Morley, late Biſhop of Wincheſter, to the learned Janus Ulitius, made Engliſh by the Reverend Mr. James Hope, depriv'd Curate of Eaſington, under Dr. Denys Granville, depriv'd Dean and Archdeacon of Durham, 1707, in 4to. 6. Preface to two Diſcourſes, viz. 1. Of the ſtrict Obſervance of Aſh-Wedneſday. 2. A Defence of thoſe who keep Lent, 1708, 12mo. 7. Dedication to the Ducheſs of Ormond, recommending the Education of a Daughter, by the Author of Telemachus, made Engliſh 1708, in 12mo. 8. Preface to The Divine Right of Epiſcopacy aſſerted, by —— Tremellier, 1708, in 8vo. 9. Preface to ſeventeen Sermons of Dr. William Hopkins, publiſhed by the Dean, being an account of his Life and Works, 1708, in 8vo. 10. Preliminary diſcourſe to Spinoza reviv'd, 1709, in 8vo. 11. Preface to the Invalidity of Lay-Baptiſm, in a Letter to the Author, by Mr. Roger Lawrence, 1709, in 8vo. 12. Recommendation to the very Reverend Mr. Hilkiah Bedford's tranſlation of the Anſwer to Fontenelle's Hiſtory of Oracles, 1709, in 8vo. 13. Preface to twelve Sermons of Mr. Cock, the depriv'd Vicar of St. Oſwald's Durham, with ſome account of his Life, 1710, in 8vo. 14. Preface to Epiſcopal Ordination the only Apoſtolical Ordination, by Archdeacon Hamilton, 1713, in 8vo. 15. Letter before Groome's Dignity and Honour of the Clergy, 1710, in 8vo. 16. Preface to the Devotions in the antient way of Offices, publiſhed by the Dean four times; the laſt edition, 1712, in 8vo. A farther account of the Reformation and Reformer of this book, Mrs. Suſanna Hopton, may be ſeen in the Preface to the ſecond Collection of Controverſial Letters. 17. A ſhort Recommendation to Sir John Hayward's Paſſion Week. 18. Judgment prefixed to Mr. Archibald Campbel's book entitled, Some primitive Doctrines reviv'd, 1713, in 8vo, and reprinted in Folio, 1721. Beſides the abovementioned Sermons, there are ſtill ſeveral in MS. in a private hand, from whoſe accurate judgment and known impartiality, it is not to be doubted but the world and the Dean's memory will receive equal juſtice.

[G] Interred.] The Inſcription on his Tomb-ſtone is, Depoſitum Georgii Hickes, S. T. P. non ita pridem Coll. Linc. Oxon. Socii, & Eccleſiæ Cathedralis Wigornienſis Decani qui obiit 15 die Decembris 1715: by his own direction, as appears from his Will, printed 1716, in 8vo.

HIEROCLES, the author of a book intitled, Φιλίστορες, The Lovers of Hiſtory (a). had related a great many fabulous ſtories, if we may judge of his book by the paſſages which Tzetzes has quoted from it. He aſſerted that the torrid Zone is inhabited by men whoſe ears ſerve them for an umbrella, and by others whoſe feet ſerved them for the ſame purpoſe when they lifted them up. He boaſted that he had ſeen it; and that he heard it reported that there are ſome men who have no heads, and others who have ten heads, four hands and four feet (b). It is not known at what time he lived, but it is not in the leaſt probable, that he is the ſame Hierocles, who from a Wreſtler turned Philoſopher, and who was a native of Hyllarima, a city of Caria (c).

(a) Steph. Byzant. Βραχμᾶνες & Ταρκυνία.

(b) Tzetzes, Chil. 7. Hiſtor. 146. ex Hierocle.

(c) Steph. Byzant. Voce Τλλάριμα.

HIEROCLES, a great perſecutor of the Chriſtians in the beginning of the fourth Century, was at firſt Preſident of Bithynia, and afterwards Governor of Alexandria. He was the chief promoter of the bloody perſecution, which the Chriſtians ſuffered under the Emperor Diocleſian. It was not ſufficient for him to cruſh them by the power he enjoyed by means of his employments, he would alſo deſtroy them with his pen; for which purpoſe he compoſed two writings which he addreſſed to them, and in which he endeavoured to prove, that the holy Scripture refutes itſelf by the inconſiſtencies with which it abounds, according to him. He railed againſt our Saviour, and againſt his Apoſtles, and he made a parallel between Jeſus Chriſt's miracles, and thoſe of Apollonius of Tyana, in order to ſhew that Apollonius was equal and even ſuperior to Jeſus Chriſt in that reſpect (a). Two Fathers of the Church have refuted him [A]. It is reported, that the

(a) Taken from Lactantius, cap. 2, 3. Divin. Inſtitutionum. See the remark [A].

[A] Two fathers of the Church have refuted him.] Namely, Lactantius and Euſebius. The former relates that at the time he was teaching rhetoric in Bithynia (1), and the Church of the Chriſtians was pulled down there, two authors undertook to write with a deſign to inſult the truth that was oppreſſed. One of theſe writers was a Philoſopher, whoſe work was deſpiſed, and ſoon neglected. The other was one of the Judges, and handled this ſubject with more malice. Alius eandem materiam mordaciùs ſcripſit, qui erat tum è numero judicum, & qui auctor in primis faciendæ perſecutionis fuit, quo ſcelere non contentus, etiam ſcriptis eos, quos afflixerat, inſecutus eſt. Compoſuit enim libellos duos non contra Chriſtianos, ne inimicè inſectari videretur, ſed ad Chriſtianos, ut humanè ac benignè conſulere putaretur; in quibus ita falſitatem ſcripturæ ſacræ arguere conatus eſt, tanquam ſibi eſſet tota contraria; nam quædam capita, quæ repugnare ſibi videbantur, expoſuit, adeo multa, adeo intima enumerans, ut aliquando ex eadem diſciplina fuiſſe videatur . . . præcipuè tamen Paulum Petrumque laceraverit, cæteroſque diſcipulos, tanquam fallaciæ ſeminatores, quos eoſdem tamen rudes, & indoctos fuiſſe teſtatus eſt; nam quoſdam eorum piſcatorio artificio feciſſe quæſtum . . . (2). Ipſum autem Chriſtum affirmavit à Judæis fugatum, collecta nonlingentorum hominum manu latrocinia feciſſe. . . . Item cum facta ejus mirabilia deſtruerèt, nec tamen negaret, voluit oſtendere Apollonium vel paria, vel etiam majora feciſſe (3).

(1) Lactant. Divin. Inſtitut. lib. 5. cap. 2.

(2) Idem, ibid. pag. m. 337.

(3) Idem, ibid. cap. 3. pag. 308.

i. e. "There was another who wrote upon the ſame ſubject more ſmartly: he was then one of the Judges, and had been the chief promoter of the perſecution, which the Chriſtians ſuffered; but not being ſatisfied with this crime, he attempted to abuſe them in his writings, whom he had already vexed as a Judge. He wrote therefore two ſmall books, not againſt the Chriſtians, leſt he ſhould ſeem to inveigh againſt them as an enemy, but addreſſed to the Chriſtians, that he might be thought to adviſe them kindly as a friend. In theſe books he endeavoured to prove that the holy Scripture is falſe, by ſhewing the holy martyr Ædeſius, being acted by a very great zeal, approached him whilſt he was preſiding at the trial of ſome Chriſtians at Alexandria, and loaded him with ſhame both by words and deeds; I mean that whilſt Hierocles was upon his Tribunal, Ædeſius gave him a box on the ear, upbraiding him with his infamous cruelty [B]. I ſhall take notice of ſome blunders of Moreri and of Cardinal Baronius's [C].

HIEROCLES,

" that it is inconſiſtent with itſelf; he inſiſted upon " ſome points which ſeemed to contradict each other, " and he had collected ſo many ſecret particulars, that " he appears to have been for ſome time a Chriſtian " himſelf.... He abuſed chiefly Peter and Paul, " and the other diſciples, as though they had been " the contrivers of the cheat, and yet he confeſſed " at the ſame time that they wanted ſkill and learning; " for ſome of them gained their bread by being fiſh- " ermen... He aſſerted alſo, that Chriſt himſelf be- " ing baniſhed by the Jews, aſſembled nine hundred " men, at whoſe head he robbed and plundered the " country... And to evade the conſequence of Chriſt's " miracles, the truth of which he did not diſown, he " pretended to prove that Apollonius had performed " ſuch or even greater wonders."

We do not meet with that author's name in this paſſage; but we do not doubt but Lactantius meant the ſame Judge whom he calls Hierocles in another book. Incidiſti... in Hieroclem ex Vicario præſidem, qui auctor & conſiliarius ad faciendam perſecutionem fuit (4). i. e. " You fell into the hands of Hierocles, who from " a Lieutenant became a Magiſtrate, and was the " chief author and adviſer of the perſecution." In order to confirm this, we ſhall make two obſervations, the one concerning the title of the book which this great perſecutor of the Chriſtians wrote; the other concerning the name which Euſebius gives to the author of that book. Auſus eſt libros ſuos nefarios, ac Dei hoſtes φιλαληθεῖς annotare. i. e. " He dared to in- " title his abominable and impious books, The Lovers " of Truth." Theſe are Lactantius's words (5). Now Euſebius calls the author of the book intitled Φιλαλήθης, Hierocles (6). It is therefore unqueſtionable, that the author whoſe name does not appear in Lactantius's 5th book, is the ſame who is called Hierocles in the treatiſe de Mortibus Perſecutorum. i. e. " Of the deaths " of the Perſecutors." Obſerve that Euſebius in his refutation of this author confines himſelf to the parallel between Jeſus Chriſt's miracles, and thoſe of Apollonius of Tyanea. He does not attempt to anſwer the other objections, and only obſerves, that Origen had refuted them beforehand in his book againſt Celſus, and that Hierocles only borrowed the thoughts and expreſſions of another. Obſerve alſo with regard to this parallel, that Euſebius only curſorily runs over Apollonius's Life written by Philoſtratus, and makes a few critical remarks upon it. It is certain that Euſebius has not done wonders in that refutation. Here follows what Dr. Cave ſaid of it. Poſterioris hujus operis partem de comparatione Apollonii cum Chriſto refutandam in ſe ſuſcepit Euſebius libro contra Hieroclem; quod & SATIS JEJUNE præſtitit, cum potius Philoſtrati libros de vita Apollonii in eo opuſculo breviter percurrit & refellit (7). i. e. " Euſebius undertook to confute in his book " againſt Hierocles the latter part of this work, " which contains a parallel between Apollonius and " Jeſus Chriſt: but he has done it very indifferently, " for he rather runs over and refutes Philoſtratus's " Life of Apollonius." Obſerve laſtly, that Lactantius did not deſign to make a particular anſwer to Hierocles; for he is ſo far from following him cloſely, that he never anſwers directly any objection tranſcribed from the work of that enemy of Chriſt. His deſign was to eſtabliſh the foundations of the Goſpel, and to ruin thoſe of Paganiſm: he thought that this would be anſwering at once all that the adverſaries of Chriſtianity had publiſhed, or would publiſh for the future. Ii ergo, de quibus dixi, cum præſente me ac dolente, ſacrilegas ſuas literas explicaſſent, & illorum ſuperba impietate ſtimulatus, & veritatis ipſius conſcientia, & (ut ego arbitror) Deo, ſuſcepi hoc munus, ut omnibus ingenii mei viribus accuſatores juſtitiæ refutarem; non ut contra hos ſcriberem, qui paucis verbis obteri poterant, ſed ut omnes, qui ubique idem operis efficiunt, aut effecerunt, uno ſemel impetu profligarem. Non dubito enim, quin & alii plurimi, & multis in locis, & non modò Græcis, ſed etiam Latinis literis monumentum injuſtitiæ ſuæ ſtruxerint, quibus ſingulis quoniam reſpondere non poteram, ſic agendam mihi hanc cauſam putavi, ut & priores cum omnibus ſuis ſcriptis perverterem, & futuris omnem facultatem ſcribendi, aut reſpondendi amputarem (8). i. e. " When " therefore, they, whom I have mentioned, had ex- " plained before me and to my grief, their ſacrilegious " opinions, I being provoked at their haughty impiety, " and animated by the knowledge of truth, and, as I " imagine, moved by God himſelf, have under- " taken to refute the enemies of religion, with all the " ſtrength I am capable of. I do not indeed deſign to " write againſt them who can be anſwered in a few " words, but to bear down with one ſtroke all thoſe who " any where undertake or have undertaken the ſame " taſk. For I do not doubt, but ſeveral others, in a " great many places have left monuments of their im- " piety not only in Greek, but alſo in Latin; and as " I could not make a particular anſwer to every one " of them, I thought it was proper thus to plead this " cauſe, that I might overthrow the former authors " with all their writings, and at the ſame time put it " out of the power of any future author both to write " any more (againſt our religion) and to anſwer me."

(4) Lactant. De Mortib. Perſecutor.

(5) Idem, Divin. Inſtitut. lib. 5. pag. 311. cap. 3.

(6) Euſeb. contra Hierocl. init. pag. 511, 514. Volum. de Demonſt. Evangel.

(7) Cave, Hiſt. Liter. Script. Eccleſ. Part 2. pag. m. 61.

(8) Lactant. Divin. Inſtit. lib. 5. cap. 4. pag. 311, 312.

[B] It is reported, that... Ædeſius gave Hierocles a box on the ear, upbraiding him with his infamous cruelty.] Euſebius does not expreſs himſelf clearly, but we ought to think that this circumſtance is implicitly meant by the words he made uſe of. Λόγοις τε καὶ ἔργοις τὸν δικαστὴν αἰσχύνῃ καὶ ἀτιμίᾳ περιβαλών. i. e. " He " loaded the Judge with ſhame and diſgrace both by " his words and deeds (9)." Here follows Valeſius's note upon this paſſage (10). In hoc Euſebii loco, ἀτιμία quidem deſignat verba, quibus judex affectus eſt ab Ædeſio. αἰσχύνη verò denotat convicia, quibus Ædeſius judicem ipſum appetiit. Utrumque autem indicat Euſebius his verbis: λόγοις τε καὶ ἔργοις τὸν δικαστὴν, &c. i. e. " In this paſſage of Euſebius, the word ἀτιμία (diſ- " grace) relates to the blows which Ædeſius gave the " Judge; and the word αἰσχύνη (ſhame) ſignifies the re- " proaches he loaded him with. Euſebius gives us " both theſe particulars to underſtand in theſe words; " By his words and deeds he loaded the Judge, &c." Euſebius does not tell us the name of the Judge who was treated thus; it is from other writers that we learn his name was Hierocles. You will find this, with ſome other particulars, in the following words of Metaphraſtes: you will find there, that he ſtruck the Governor of all Ægypt, that he threw him down on the ground, and repeated his blows. Poſt hanc calamitatem, incidit in Hieroclem, qui totam Ægyptum adminiſtrabat. Hunc cùm in Dei martyres injuria ſævientem animadverſiſſet, ſanctaſque Dei virgines tradentem lenonibus, nec tantam iniquitatem perferre poſſet, ſimile fraterno facinus aggreditur. Namque Divino repletus zelo procedit, & verbis ac factis Hieroclem confundit. Manu enim ſua plagas illi in os infligit, humique ſupinum proſternit & cædit: ac monet, ne audeat contra naturæ leges Dei ſervos offendere (11). i. e. " After this calamity he met with " Hierocles, who was Governor of all Egypt. And " obſerving that this man unjuſtly raged againſt God's " Martyrs, and expoſed God's holy Virgins to the " panders, and not being able to ſuffer ſo great an in- " juſtice, he attempted an action like that of his bro- " ther; for being animated with a divine zeal, he " loaded Hierocles with ſhame both by words and deeds: " for he ſtruck him on the face with his hand, and " throwing him down he continued to beat him, warn- " ing him, never to venture any more to vex God's " ſervants againſt the laws of nature." Valeſius quotes the Menæum or Martyrology of the Greeks, in which it is aſſerted that Hierocles the Governor was ſtruck by Ædeſius at Alexandria (12).

(9) Euſeb. de Martyr. Paleſtin. cap. 5. pag. m. 326.

(10) Valeſius, Not. in Euſebium, ibid. pag. m. 177.

(11) Metaphraſtes, apud Valeſium, ibid.

(12) Αὐτοχείρως τὸν ἄρχοντα ἔτυψεν; i. e. " He ſtruck the " Governor with " his own hand.

[C] I ſhall take notice of ſome blunders of Moreri and of Cardinal Baronius.] I. He ſtiles our Hierocles a Platonic Philoſopher, though he was not ſo much as a Philoſopher, taking the word in a general ſenſe. I have not met with any author among the ancients, that makes him of that profeſſion; and I find that Dr.

HIEROCLES, the ſon of that Alypius, who had commanded the Roman Army in England,

Dr. Cave amongſt the moderns, doubts whether we ought to call him a Philoſopher (13). II. Moreri mentions another Hierocles an Heathen Philoſopher, and one of the Judges of the Areopagus, who laboured to demonſtrate that Apollonius of Tyanea was the ſame with Jeſus Chriſt. Euſebius wrote againſt him, adds he. This is multiplying beings without any neceſſity. For that Hierocles, who was refuted by Euſebius, does not differ from him, whom Moreri had given an account of in the preceding article, and whom he had called a Platonic Philoſopher. III. We know of no Hierocles who was a Judge of the Areopagus. Cardinal Baronius who has miſled Moreri in this particular, might very eaſily have avoided that miſtake; for he grounded his aſſertion on Lactantius's authority, whoſe very words he tranſcribes (14). Now Lactantius tells us expreſly, that the author who wrote againſt the Chriſtians, was one of the Judges in Bithynia. Since therefore Baronius ſuppoſed very rightly, that the name of this adverſary of the Chriſtians was Hierocles, he ſhould not have placed him among the Judges of the Areopagus. Take notice that he is in the right to obſerve, that Euſebius and Lactantius wrote againſt the ſame Hierocles; and yet Moreri, who only tranſcribes from Baronius, mentions two Hierocles's to us, the one refuted by Lactantius, the other by Euſebius. IV. Moreri did not underſtand theſe words of Baronius. Nihil magis monſtrare conatus eſt (Hierocles) quam Apollonium æqualem fuiſſe Chriſto (15). i. e. "The chief thing, which Hierocles "laboured to prove is, that Apollonius was equal to "Jeſus Chriſt." Moreri imagined that theſe words ſignify, that Hierocles pretended to prove that Apollonius was the ſame with Jeſus Chriſt (16). What I have ſtill to obſerve is rather againſt Cardinal Baronius, than againſt Moreri. We have ſeen above, that Lactantius mentions two Heathen authors, who wrote againſt the Chriſtians. Baronius pretends that our Hierocles is the ſecond of theſe authors, and that Porphyry is the firſt. Moreri tranſcribes this without making any critical remark upon it. He declares indeed that in this particular he follows Baronius's opinion. Let us therefore level our remarks againſt this Cardinal, and obſerve to him, that he would not have found Porphyry's character in that paſſage of Lactantius, had he examined it narrowly. The former of theſe Heathen authors was at Nicomedia at the ſame time with Lactantius, and publiſhed his invective againſt the Chriſtians in that very city (17). He was a man abandoned to all manner of vice; covetous, voluptuous, and exceſſively prodigal in his diet. He was very rich, and made his court very aſſiduouſly to the Judges, in order to inrich himſelf more and more; namely, by ſelling their verdicts, and ſtopping the proceedings that were carried on againſt him by his neighbours, whoſe eſtates he ſeized upon. The three books he publiſhed againſt the Chriſtians were very ſilly and ridiculous; he knew nothing of the matter, and knew not what he ſaid. The Chriſtians laughed at him, and he miſcarried moſt wretchedly in his deſign (18). Such is the character of this author and of his book, if we may credit Lactantius. How then could Baronius (19) imagine that Porphyry was hinted at in this deſcription? Where did he find that Porphyry continued a great while at Nicomedia? A man cannot court the favour of the Judges in order to keep poſſeſſion of the lands, on which he unjuſtly ſeizes about his country houſes; a man, I ſay, cannot do this, when he is a travelling; it is ſuch a conduct as requires a fixed abode, and a ſettled eſtabliſhment. If therefore Baronius were in the right, it muſt be ſuppoſed that Porphyry was thus ſettled at Nicomedia; now this is a circumſtance which no author ever mentioned. This Philoſopher ſpent the greateſt part of his life at Rome and in Sicily; and beſides, he was never charged with indulging himſelf in ſenſual pleaſures; and after all, he did not write in a ſilly manner againſt the Chriſtians. They complained indeed of his cavils, of his malice, and of his ſlanders; but they did not aſſert, that he wanted wit, or that his books were impertinent and ridiculous (10), or that they expoſed him to the cenſure of the heathens themſelves, inſtead of the reputation he expected. Verum hic pro ſua inanitate contemptus eſt; qui & gratiam, quam ſperavit, non eſt adeptus, & gloria, quam captavit, in culpam reprehenſionis converſa eſt (21). i. e. "But this author was "deſpiſed for his fillineſs; nor did he gain the fa-"vour of the heathens as he expected; and inſtead "of the reputation he aimed at, he was only blamed." Porphyry had been a Chriſtian, according to Baronius (22); he ought not therefore to have been ſo groſly ignorant of the ſubject he handled, as the perſon whom Lactantius mentions; for you muſt obſerve, that this father having aſſerted, that that writer examined ſeveral things in particular, adds immediately, one would think that he had been formerly a Chriſtian, ut aliquando ex eadem diſciplina fuiſſe videatur (23). This obſervation ought to have been of ſome weight with Baronius, not to miſtake Porphyry in the character, which Lactantius gives us of the Philoſopher, who wrote ignorantly and impertinently againſt the perſecuted Chriſtians.

To conclude, let us obſerve that the preface which this Philoſopher had prefixed to his Book, is proper to ſhew us how much the perſecutions carried on by the Heathen were like thoſe which the Chriſtians carry on. A ſelfiſh and flattering Author never fails to write againſt the perſecuted Party; he looks upon it as a fair opportunity to commend his Prince, and will be ſure to improve it. He expatiates on the ſervice that is done to God, and on the charity of the Teachers, who ought to make inſtruction go hand in hand with the authority of the laws, that they, who have the misfortune to err, being brought back to the knowledge of the truth, may thus eſcape the Puniſhment, which their obſtinacy would otherwiſe draw upon them. This voluptuous Philoſopher of Nicomedia omitted none of thoſe common-place Topicks; one would think that he was the model, which ſeveral French Authors copied after, who wrote whilſt the Proteſtants were perſecuted in France. You will find in the following paſſage, how he expreſſed himſelf. Profeſſus ante omnia Philoſophi officium eſſe, erroribus hominum ſubvenire; atque illos ad veram viam revocare, id eſt, ad cultus Deorum; quorum numine ac majeſtate (ut ille dicebat) mundus gubernetur: nec pati, homines imperitos quorundam fraudibus illici; ne ſimplicitas eorum prædæ ac pabulo ſit hominibus aſtutis. Itaque ſe ſuſcepiſſe hoc munus, philoſophia dignum; ut præferret non videntibus lumen ſapientiæ; non modo ut ſuſceptis Deorum cultibus reſaneſcant, ſed etiam ut pertinaci obſtinatione depoſita, corporis cruciamenta devitent; neu ſævas membrorum lacerationes fruſtra perpeti velint. Ut autem appareret, cujus rei gratia opus illud elaboraſſet, effuſus eſt in principum laudes; quorum pietas, & providentia (ut quidem ipſe dicebat) cum in cæteris rebus humanis, tum præcipue in defendendis Deorum religionibus claruiſſet; conſultum eſſe tandem rebus humanis, ut cohibita impia & anili ſuperſtitione, univerſi homines legitimis ſacris vacarent, ac propitios ſibi Deos experirentur (24). i. e. "He declared firſt of all, that it is "the Duty of a Philoſopher to undeceive men in "their Errors, and to lead them back into the road "of truth, that is to ſay, to the worſhip of the Gods, "by whoſe Providence and Power, as he pretended, "this World is governed; and not to ſuffer that un-"ſkilful Perſons be impoſed upon by the artifice of "others, leſt their innocence ſhould make them a "prey to crafty men. That he therefore undertook "this taſk, worthy of a Philoſopher, in order to "carry the light of wiſdom before thoſe that were "blind; not only that they might come to their "right ſenſe again and worſhip the Gods, but alſo "that by renouncing their obſtinacy, they might "avoid the cruel puniſhments that were deſigned "for them, and not expoſe themſelves any longer "in vain, to have their members tortured and "torn in pieces. And that it might appear with "what deſign he wrote that book, he expatiated on the praiſes of the Princes, whoſe piety and "wiſdom, as he ſaid, had been eminent not only in "the government of civil affairs, but alſo chiefly "in defending and promoting the worſhip of the "Gods. That the welfare of human kind was at "laſt provided for, by ſuppreſſing that impious and "ſilly ſuperſtition, and bringing all men to a lawful "worſhip, which would render the Gods kind and "propitious to them." It is eaſier to recede from the method of the perſecutor Dioclefian, than from that of his Panegyriſts.

(13) Philoſophus, an ſolum homo politicus, non liquet. i. e. "It is not "certain whe-"ther he was a "Philoſopher, or "only a Politi-"cian. Cave, Hiſt. Liter. Part 1. pag. m. 279. He ſtiles him a Philoſopher in Part 2. pag. 61. without telling us how his doubts were removed.

(14) Baron. ad an. 68. num. 31. pag. m. 654.

(15) Idem, ibid.

(16) This blunder has been corrected in the Dutch edition, and in that of Paris.

(17) Lactant. lib. 5. cap. 2, and 4.

(18) Taken from Lactant. ibid. cap. 2.

(19) Baronius, ad ann. 302. num. 51. pag. m. 730.

(20) Ineptus, vanus, ridiculus apparuit. i. e. "He "appeared to be "impertinent, "ſilly and ridicu-"lous." Lactant. Divin. Inſtitut. lib. 5. cap. 2. pag. 307.

(21) Idem, ibid.

(22) Baron. ad ann. 302. num. 53. who quotes Socrates, lib. 3. cap. 19. N. B. It is cap. 23. in Reading's edition, publiſhed at Cambridge 1720.

(23) Lactant. lib. 5. cap. 2.

(24) Idem, ibid. pag. 306.

England, and whom Julian the Apoſtate ſent to Jeruſalem to rebuild the Temple, was impeached together with his father, under the Emperor Valens, and tormented ſo cruelly, that they did no longer know which of his members to torture again, in order to extort from him by the violence of the rack, what they would have him declare (a). Orders were at laſt given to carry him to the place of execution; but whilſt he was going thither, the whole people addreſſed the Emperor in a body, and petitioned him ſo earneſtly for that man, that they obtained his pardon. This is what may be inferred from a paſſage in Ammianus Marcellinus, compared with another in St. Chryſoſtom [A]. Our Hierocles was a diſciple of Libanius, and had a great ſhare in his eſteem [B].

(a) Omni laniena excruciato, ut verba placentia Principi, vel potius arceſſitori loqueretur; quo cum pœnis non ſufficerent membra, vivo exuſto, &c. Amm. Marcell. lib. 29. cap. 1. pag. 556.

[A] He obtained his Pardon. This is what may be inferred from a paſſage in Ammianus Marcellinus, compared with St. Chryſoſtom.] The paſſage in Marcellinus is as follows. Ipſe quoque Alypius, poſt multationem bonorum exulare præceptus, filium miſerabiliter ductum ad mortem, caſu quodam proſpero revocatum excepit (1). i. e. "Alypius being ordered to go into baniſhment, "his eſtate being forfeited, did alſo by a lucky event "recover his Son who was unhappily going to be "executed." The paſſage from St. Chryſoſtom is in the third Homily on the incomprehenſible nature of God. This Father, in order to acquaint his audience with the powerful efficacy of a whole people's prayer, quoted to them an inſtance which they had ſeen ten years ago, when a certain malefactor, who was going to the place of execution with a gagg in his mouth, obtained his pardon at the requeſt of the whole people of Antioch, who went in a body to petition the Emperor for him. Valeſius (2) does not doubt but this Malefactor was Hierocles the ſon of Alypius.

(1) Amm. Marcellin. lib. 29. pag. 557.

(2) Hen. Valeſius, in Marcellin. lib. 29. pag. 557.

[B] He had a great ſhare in the eſteem of Libanius.] Libanius in a letter to Alypius (3) tells him, that his ſon being ſtill but a Child, appeared wiſer than grown perſons, and that there were ſeveral fathers, who when they reproved their children, propoſed to them the example of Alypius's ſon. Ammianus Marcellinus's character of him agrees upon the whole with that which Libanius gives him. Citatus eſt cum Hierocle filio adoleſcente indolis bonæ. i. e. "He was ſummoned "with his ſon Hierocles, a youth of a virtuous diſ-"poſition (4)."

(3) Lib. 4. Epiſt. 284. apud Valeſium, ibid.

(4) Citatus eſt cum Hierocle filio, adoleſcente indolis bonæ. Amm. Marcell. ibid. pag. 556.

HIEROCLES, a Platonic Philoſopher in the fifth Century, taught at Alexandria with great reputation, and was admired for the ſtrength of his mind, and the beauty of his noble expreſſions (a). He wrote ſeven books upon Providence and Fate, and dedicated them to the Philoſopher Olympiodorus, who by his embaſſies did the Roman Empire great ſervices, under the Emperors Honorius and Theodoſius the younger (b). Theſe books are loſt, and we know them only by the extracts which are to be met with in Photius. It appears from theſe extracts that Hierocles had ſhewed, that there is a perfect agreement between Plato's doctrine and that of Ariſtotle, and that they who denied it, did not well underſtand the opinions of theſe two great Philoſophers (c). He racked his brains a thouſand ways to remove the difficulties which occur in the doctrines of Providence, Fate, and Freewill; and he pretended that the ground or principle of all this conſiſted in the ſoul's paſſing from one body into another, and in the life which the ſouls had led before they entered into human bodies. He ſpent all his ſtrength upon this ſubject, ſo that he had none left to think of ſtrong arguments proper to eſtabliſh the doctrine he undertook to prove (d); and therefore Photius obſerves, that all his great ſhew of reaſoning came at laſt to nothing but trifles (e). We may obſerve ſomething very ſingular in this Philoſopher's doctrine; for he aſſerted that Plato taught, the world was made out of nothing [A].

(a) Photius, Biblioth. Cod. 242. pag. m. 1037.

(b) Idem, Cod. 214. pag. 549.

(c) Idem, ibid.

(d) Idem. ibid.

(e) Εἰς λῆρον αὐτοῦ τὸ πολύμοχθον διαλύσται σπούδασμα. In nugas operoſa illa machinatio abit. Idem, ibid.

He

[A] He aſſerted that Plato taught, the world was made out of nothing.] Hierocles (1) refuted in a very ſtrong manner the Platonick Philoſophers, who aſſerted, that though God ſhould operate eternally by his power and wiſdom, he would yet be incapable of forming a world without the help of uncreated matter. Theſe Philoſophers maintained that God did not produce any thing but by co-operation of matter, the exiſtence or being of which did not depend on him. Every thing, added they, was potentially contained in that matter; God only extracted things from it, and put them in order. Hierocles argued with a great deal of judgment againſt this Hypotheſis; he aſſerted that ſuch a work of God would be the effect of an unneceſſary labour, rather than a proof of goodneſs. Ὁ περιεργία μᾶλλον ἂν εἴη ἀγαθότητος θεοῦ. Quod ſupervacaneæ potius eſſet diligentiæ quàm bonitatis Dei (2). For why ſhould he labour to put that in order which he has not made? Is not a being that is from all eternity ſelf-exiſtent ſufficiently regular? And is not every thing that happens to ſuch a being againſt the nature of it? And is it not therefore a defect? Τί γὰρ δὴ μαθὼν ἂ μὴ ὑπέστησε διατάττειν πειρᾶται, πάντως τι τῆς εὐταξίας αὐτοῖς ἐν τῇ ἀγενησίᾳ τῆς ἑαυτῶν φύσεως κειμένης; τὸ γὰρ ἀγένητος καθ' ἑαυτὸ ὑφεῖναί τι προσλάβοι, παρὰ φύσιν προσλήψεται. τὸ δὲ παρὰ φύσιν διατεθῆναι, κακὸν τῷ μεταστρεπομένῳ ὥστε μὴ ἀγαθὸν τῇ λεγομένῃ ὕλῃ τὰ κοσμεῖσθαι, εἴπερ ἀγένητος εἴη μὴ ἀπὸ χρόνου μόνον, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸ ἀπὸ αἰτίου. i. e. "Why does he endeavour to put "that into order, which he has not created, ſince "things that are not created, are of their own na-"ture in a good order? For if any thing be added to "what is uncreated and ſelf-exiſtent, it is added a-"gainſt nature; now what is added againſt nature is "bad; ſo that it is not good to adorn the ſaid matter, "ſince it is uncreated, not only with regard to time, "but alſo with regard to the cauſe of its exiſting (3)."

(1) Photius, Biblioth. Cod. 251. pag. 1380.

(2) Photius, Biblioth. Cod. 251. pag. 1380.

(3) Idem. ibid.

He infers from thence that God could not have begun his work but by an evil action (4), namely, by undertaking to deprive a ſubſtance uncreated like himſelf and his own ſiſter, of her natural condition. Theſe are ſuch ſtrong arguments (5), that whoever weighs them duly, and is concerned for Plato's reputation, will endeavour to prove, that he did not admit two collateral principles, both eternal and independent from each other, viz. God and matter. This is no doubt the reaſon why our Hierocles aſcribed to him the doctrine of a Creation ſtrictly ſo called. I am apt to think, that he had read it in the writings of the Chriſtians, and that being ſenſible of the ſtrength of the arguments, which ſhew the abſurdity of an uncreated Matter, and adding to this the moſt exalted notions of a Creator, whoſe power and majeſty are infinite, he ſuppoſed, for the glory of his ſect, that its founder had known God under the notion of a being, who by a bare act of his will was capable of producing the univerſe. Ὅτι δημιουργὸν θεόν, φησι, προϋφίστησιν ὁ Πλάτων ἐφεξῆς τε πάσης ἐμφανοῦς τε καὶ ἀφανοῦς διακοσμήσεως, ἐκ μηδενὸς πρόϋποκειμένου γεγενημένης. ἀρκεῖν γὰρ τὸ ἐκείνου βούλημα εἰς ὑπόστασιν τῶν ὄντων. i. e. "Plato, ſays he, ſup-"poſed that God is the author of all, and that he "has produced this whole univerſe with all that is "viſible

(4) Τὴν ἀρχὴν τῆς δημιουργίας ἀπό τινος κακοποιίας ἐνστησάμενος. i. e. "Beginning his "creation with "an evil action." Idem, ibid.

(5) Compare this with what is obſerved in the remark [R] of the article EPICURUS.

He married only with a design to get children [B]. His wife became poſſeſſed with the Devil (f). In vain did he uſe the moſt civil expreſſions to deliver her from that Devil; the evil ſpirit had no regard to his compliments: but Theoſebius (g), without underſtanding Magic, exorciſed her ſo effectually, that he forced the Devil to retire. Jonſius, who proves very ſtrongly that our Hierocles lived after Euſebius, is however miſtaken in other particulars [C], namely, in ſuppoſing that he was the author of an Hiſtory of Apollonius of Tyana, and that the ſeven books concerning Providence were refuted by a writer named Euſebius, different from him who wrote the Church Hiſtory, &c.

(f) Photius, Cod. 242. pag. m. 1037.

(g) He was a diſciple of Hierocles.

" viſible and inviſible in it out of nothing that exiſted " before; becauſe his will alone was ſufficient to pro- " duce whatever exiſts (6)." But it would be very eaſy to ſhew that this is an officious lie, ſince Plato does very clearly ſuppoſe the being of an independent and uncreated matter. We may therefore aſſert, that Hierocles made uſe on this occaſion of his ſkill as much as he had done in any other; I mean the ſkill of putting ſuch a ſenſe as one pleaſes upon an Author's words (7), or at leaſt of finding two or three different ſyſtems in his works. He underſtood this practice perfectly well; for the two explications he gave of Plato's Gorgias, were intirely different, and yet they ſeemed to agree with the Platonick Doctrine. Theſe are ſports of wit, but which require a moſt fruitful imagination. Ἀντιπαραβαλὼν τὰ πρότερα καὶ τὰ ὕστερα εὗρεν οὐδὲν τῶν αὐτῶν, ὡς ἔπος εἰπεῖν· ἑκάτερα δὲ ὅμως, ὃ καὶ παράλογον ἀκοῦσαι, τῆς Πλάτωνος ἐχόμενα, καθόσον οἷόν τε, προαιρέσεως. τοῦτο μὲν δὴ ἐπιδέδεικται, τοῦ ἀνδρὸς ἡλίκον ἦν ἄρα τὸ τῶν φρενῶν πέλαγος. i. e. " When his two ex- " plications were compared together, they appeared, " if I may ſay ſo, very different; and yet, which " looks like a Paradox, both his explications ſeemed " to agree with Plato's Doctrine. Which ſhews how " fruitful this man's genius was."

(6) Photius, Biblioth. Cod. 251. pag. 1381.

(7) See the remark [C] in the article HEMMINGIUS.

(8) Photius, Biblioth. Cod. 242. pag. 1037.

[B] He married only with a deſign to get children.] Damaſcius makes the ſame obſervation with regard to Theoſebius a Diſciple of Hierocles, and this ſhews us that the moſt celebrated Platonick Philoſophers were perſuaded, that theſe were the true rules and real bounds of Matrimony, and that all that went beyond theſe limits, was a diſorder, or at leaſt a licentiouſneſs, in which wiſe men ought not to indulge themſelves. This Theoſebius finding that his wife was barren, made a ring of chaſtity, and gave it her. Formerly, ſaid he to her, I made you a preſent of a ring of generation (9), but now I give you a ring of continence, which will help you to lead conſtantly a chaſte life. Ἐπίκουρόν σοι παρεσόμενον ἀεὶ τῆς σώφρονος οἰκειρίας. i. e. " It will always be to you a help to " chaſtity (10)." You may continue with me, if you pleaſe, and if you can contain yourſelf; but if you do not like this condition, you may marry another man; I conſent to it, and the only favour I beg of you is, that we may part friends. She readily accepted the offer. Here my Author ſtops, and leaves us in the dark; for we do not know whether the woman accepted the former or the latter offer. The Author ſhould not have left his account thus ambiguous.

(9) Δακτύλιον ἁρμοσὴν παιδουργοῦ συμβιώσεως. i. e. " A ring " rendring the " union fruitful." Idem, ibid.

(10) Idem, ibid.

[C] Jonſius, who proves . . . . . that our Hierocles lived after Euſebius, is however miſtaken in other particulars.] His firſt Argument is, that Hierocles mentioned Plutarch the Athenian, who lived after Jamblichus (11). Now the latter flouriſhed under Julian the Apoſtate; we have ſtill ſome letters, which this Emperor wrote to him. The ſecond argument is, that Olympiodorus, to whom Hierocles's Books were dedicated, did not live before the reigns of Honorius and Theodoſius the Younger; for he wrote an Hiſtory which began with the ſeventh Conſulſhip of Honorius, and the ſecond of Theodoſius the Younger, and he continued it to the reign of Valentinian, or to the year 425 (12). Jonſius is in the right on this foot to maintain, that the ſame Euſebius, who wrote the Church Hiſtory, the Evangelical Preparation, &c. did not refute the writings of this Hierocles; but he is miſtaken when he aſſerts that they have been refuted by another Euſebius. Here follows the cauſe of his blunder. He imagined that the ſame Hierocles, who compoſed the ſeven books upon Fate, wrote alſo the Hiſtory of Apollonius of Tyanea, entitled, Philalethes, and of which there is a refutation amongſt the works of Euſebius. This is miſtaking Hierocles the Perſecutor of Chriſtians under the Emperor Diocleſian, for Hierocles a Philoſopher of Alexandria under Theodoſius the Younger. It is a little ſurpriſing that Jonſius, who had a very extenſive and exact Knowledge of the Authors who had the ſame name, knew nothing of the Preſident of Bithinya, and Governor of Alexandria, who vexed the Chriſtians ſo much, who wrote againſt them, and whoſe name was Hierocles. Let us infer from all this, that this learned man was miſtaken in believing that Euſebius refutes our Hierocles's opinions upon Fate. It is certain that Euſebius refuted only the opinion of Apollonius, ſuch as he had read it in Philoſtratus (13),

(11) Jonſius, de Script. Hiſt. Philoſoph. pag. 303.

(12) Idem, ibid. pag. 304. He quotes Photius, Cod. 80.

(13) Obſerve, that Dr. Cave, Hiſt. Literar. Script. Eccleſ. Part 1. pag. 131. cenſures theſe two blunders of Jonſius.

HIERO I King of Syracuſe was the ſon of Dinomenes and the brother of Gelon, who after he had invaded the ſovereign power at Gela, was ſo happy as to ſee the city of Syracuſe ſubmit to him, when he had no other deſign but to reſtore ſome citizens of that City, whom the populace had baniſhed. He was ſo well pleaſed with this new acquiſition, that of his own accord he reſigned Gela to his brother Hiero, and applied himſelf entirely to the government of Syracuſe, employing all poſſible means to put that city in the moſt flouriſhing condition (a). His reign was glorious and happy; he acquired a great reputation by his victories, and gained the love of his ſubjects by his equity and moderation (b). Hiero, who ſucceeded him, did not follow his ſteps; he was covetous and paſſionate, and was very far from imitating Gelon's virtuous conduct; for which reaſon ſeveral perſons had a mind to rebel againſt him; but the memory of his predeceſſor was ſo dear to them and ſo glorious, that it prevented their rebellion (c). He had a great mind to put his brother Polyzelus to death, whom the Syracuſans loved very much, and whom he ſuſpected to aim at the ſovereign power. He deſigned to ſend him to aſſiſt the Sybarites, who were beſieged by the Crotonians: he deſigned, I ſay, to ſend him thither, that he might be killed in battle; but Polyzelus, who perceived his wicked intention, refuſed the employment, and ſeeing that the King his brother was extremely exaſperated at his refuſal, retired to the Court of Theron, who reigned at Agrigentum. They were ſometime after reconciled by Theron's mediation (d). The latter might have made an advantage of this miſunderſtanding, but he was an honeſt man (e), and would reward one kind office with another [A]. His ſon Thraſydeus ſucceeded

(a) Herodot. lib. 7. cap. 155, 156.

(b) Diod. Siculus, lib. 10. cap. 67. See alſo Plutarch. de Sera Numinis Vindicta, pag. 551, 552.

(c) Idem, Diod. ibid.

(d) Idem, ibid. cap. 48.

(e) Diodor. Sicul. lib. 11. cap. 53.

[A] Theron . . . . . would reward one kind office with another.] Whilſt Hiero was making preparations to attack Theron, to whoſe court his brother was retired, the inhabitants of Himera ſent him Deputies ceeded him, and was unfortunate in the war in which he engaged againſt the Syracuſans. Hiero invaded the country of the Agrigentines with a ſtrong army, and gained a victory which made Thraſydeus loſe his crown (f). Obſerve here the difference there is between Poets and Hiſtorians. The ſame Hiero, who is repreſented as a very accompliſhed Prince in Pindar's Odes [B], appears to be a very bad King in Diodorus Siculus's Hiſtory. I think, that if the Poet flatters him too much, the Hiſtorian does not treat him with a ſufficient impartiality; for he does not relate all that is to his honour; I mean, that Hiero became more moderate, and was very much improved in his morals by converſing with ſome men of wit [C], whom he loved and loaded with favours. He died in the city of Catana the ſecond year of the 78th Olympiad (g), after he had reigned near twelve years (h). It was a city which he had entirely changed, having driven the antient inhabitants out of it, and ſettled there in their ſtead a Colony of Greeks from Peloponneſus, and from Syracuſe (i). He changed its name of Catana into that of Ætna, and would himſelf be ſurnamed Ætneus, when he was proclaimed Conqueror at the Pythick Games (k). The ſolemnities of his burial were like thoſe that uſed to be celebrated for heroes (l). His brother Thraſybulus ſucceeded him, but his tyrannical actions forced the citizens of Syracuſe to revolt, and they reduced him to ſuch ſtraits, that he was obliged to ſubmit to very hard terms. He retired into Italy in the country of the Locri, where he paſt the remainder of his days in a private life. He reigned but one year. The citizens of Syracuſe having reſtored the Republican Government, continued it till the time of Dionyſius's tyranny. This was an interval of threeſcore years (m). We may obſerve, that it is ſurpriſing that Dinomenes, Hiero's ſon, did not ſucceed him.

(f) Diod. Sicul. lib. 11. cap. 53.

(g) Idem, ibid. cap. 66.

(h) Idem, ibid. cap. 38. pag. m. 397.

(i) Idem, ibid. cap. 49.

(k) See Pindar. Pyth. Od. 1. & ibid Commentar. Joh. Benedicti.

(l) Diod. Sicul. lib. 11. cap. 66. Obſerve that the ancient inhabitants of Catana ſettled again in that city, and deſtroyed the monument raiſed to Hiero. See Strabo, lib. 6. pag. 185.

(m) Diod. Sicul. lib. 11. cap. 67, 68.

He

to offer him their aſſiſtance, and even to let him know that they were determined to live under his Government. Thraſydeus, Theron's ſon, had been ſent to command them, and had made himſelf odious to them by his outrages and by his pride. Hiero took hold of this opportunity, not to proſecute his deſign of continuing the war, but to procure a pacification. He gave the King of Agrigentum notice of what the inhabitants of Himera contrived. This notice made Theron take neceſſary meaſures to make their plot miſcarry; and was the reaſon why he made peace with the King of Siracuſe, and reſtored a good underſtanding between the two brothers (1). Moreri, quoting the XIth Book of Diodorus Siculus, aſſerts, that Hiero routed the tyrant of Agrigentum, who deſpiſed him. I could not find the leaſt hint of this particular in Diodorus Siculus. Obſerve that the Hiſtorian Timæus had related, that Theron not being able to bear that his ſon-in-law Polyzelus ſhould be abuſed by Hiero, declared war againſt this King of Syracuſe; but it ended immediately, and before there was any act of hoſtility committed on either ſide (2). Let us obſerve by the by, that Demarata (3) Theron's daughter, was married to King Gelon, who on his death-bed ordered that ſhe ſhould marry Polyzelus (4).

(1) Diod. Sicul. lib. 11. cap. 48.

(2) See Benedictus's Commentary on Pindar, Od. 2. Olymp. pag. 43.

(3) Concerning this woman, ſee Diod. Sicul. lib. 11. cap. 26.

(4) See Benedictus's Commentary on Pindar, Od. 2. Olym. pag. 43.

(5) See the 1ſt Ode of his Olympicks, and the 1ſt, 2d, and 3d of his Pythicks.

(6) See Pauſanias, lib. 8. pag. 687.

(7) Jo. Benedictus, in Pindar. Od. 1. Olymp. pag. 2.

(8) Pindar. Od. 1. Olymp.

(9) Diod. Sicul. lib. 11. cap. 38, 39.

[B] Hiero . . . . is repreſented as a very accompliſhed Prince in Pindar's Odes.] He carried the prize of the horſe-Race at the Olympick Games, and had the ſame advantage at the Pythick Games, and was alſo conqueror at the chariot-races. Theſe Victories were celebrated in a lofty ſtile by the Poet Pindar (5); and you may be ſure, that tho' his digreſſions fill up above three fourths of his Odes, yet he does not forget to obſerve, that Hiero had all the virtues of a good and brave King. Obſerve that the inſcription of Hiero's ex Voto (6), (or the offering he had vowed) ſhews, that he carried the prize three times at the Olympick Games, twice at the horſe-races, and once at the Chariot-races. John Benedictus (in French Benoit) who in his Commentary on Pindar aſſerts (7), that Hiero carried the prize of the horſe-races at the Olympick Games celebrated in the 73d Olympiad, is miſtaken; for Hiero was already King of Syracuſe when he carried that prize (8), and he did not begin to reign at Syracuſe till the 75th Olympiad (9). The ſame Commentator pretends that he died after he had gained ſuch another victory in the 77th Olympiad, which is ſuppoſing that he reigned above ſixteen years, and contradicting the beſt Hiſtorians without any reaſon.

[C] Hiero became much more moderate, and was very much improved in his morals by converſing with ſome men of wit.] He was one of the moſt ignorant men in the world, and as ruſtical as his brother Gelon; but having had a fit of ſickneſs, he ſpent the leiſure, which the weakneſs of his body gave him, in converſing with learned men, and became learned himſelf: and when he had entirely recovered his health, he continued to take a delight in thoſe converſations, and often diſcourſed with Simonides, Pindar, and Bacchilides (10). The Author, who acquaints us with this, adds, that he was a great lover of literature; that he was very generous; that he had an exalted mind; that he lived with his three brothers without any miſtruſt; that he loved them tenderly, and was alſo thus beloved by them; and that his inclination to make conſiderable preſents, determined Simonides, though he was then very old, to croſs the ſea, and to come to him (11). There are ſome Critics (12), who pretend that it is inconſiſtent with Chronology to ſuppoſe that Hieron had ſeen Simonides: but others ſhew that they are miſtaken (13). All the antient writers were fully perſuaded of their meeting, and converſing together. Xenophon ſuppoſes a dialogue between them (14), which is a very good piece. Hiero ſpeaks there as a man of wit, and of great judgment. The Hiſtorian Timæus had aſſerted, that Simonides was the mediator of the peace, that was concluded between Hiero and Theron (15). See alſo Athenæus (16) and Pauſanias (17); and obſerve, that though there were not the leaſt flattery in the praiſes which Pindar and Ælianus beſtowed upon Hiero, yet one could not infer from thence, that Diodorus Siculus gave a falſe account of him: for what he has obſerved concerning Hiero's covetouſneſs and paſſionate temper, might be true with regard to his conduct before he fell ſick. I do not obſerve this with a deſign to excuſe Diodorus in every reſpect: I ſtill blame him for not mentioning Hiero's converſion, and for hinting but too plainly that he never mended his morals. Μετὰ δὲ τὸν Ἱέρωνος τελευτὴν παραλαβὼν τὴν ἀρχὴν Θρασύβουλος ὁ ἀδελφὸς ὑπερέβαλε τῇ κακίᾳ τὸν πρὸ αὐτοῦ βασιλεύσαντα (18). i. e. "Hiero being dead, Thraſybulus his brother reigned in his ſtead, and exceeded in wickedneſs his predeceſſor." This ſeems abſolutely falſe to me, and in my opinion we ought to give ſome credit to Ælian and to Plutarch (19), and to quote this Prince as an inſtance, which proves the truth of the following maxim of Horace:

Nemo adeo ferus eſt, ut non miteſcere poſſit,
Si modo culturæ patientem commodet aurem (20).

"The raſh, the lazy, lover, none's ſo wild,
"But may be tam'd and may be wiſely mild,
"If they conſult true virtue's rules with care,
"And lend to good advice a patient ear.

CREECH.

(10) Ælian. Var. Hiſt. lib. 4. cap. 15.

(11) Idem, ibid. lib. 9. cap. 1.

(12) Biſciola, tom. 2. Hor. ſubciſ. lib. 2. cap. 19.

(13) See Kuhnius's Notes on Ælian. lib. 4. cap. 15.

(14) Intitled, Ἱέρων, ἢ Τύραννικός. Hieron, ſive Tyrannicus.

(15) See Benedictus's Commentary on Pindar, Ode 2. Olymp. pag. 43.

(16) Athen. lib. 14. pag. 656.

(17) Pauſan. lib. 1. pag. 6.

(18) Diod. Sicul. lib. 19. cap. 67.

(19) Plutarch. de ſera Numinis Vindicta, pag. 551. & in Apophthegm. pag. 175.

(20) Horat. Ep. 1. lib. 1. ver. 39.

Let us obſerve that the diſtemper which gave our Hiero an opportunity to uſe himſelf to learned converſations, was the Gravel. The Scholiaſt on Pindar (21), quotes upon this occaſion a work of Ariſtotle which is loſt. Moreri was groſly miſtaken, when he aſcribed to Hiero II what relates only to Hiero I. I mean that learning acquired in bed, &c.

(21) See Jo. Benedicti Comment. in Pindar. pag. 260, 296.

He ſurvived him, as appears by an inſcription of the gifts which his father had vowed to Jupiter Olympius (n). The offerings which this King of Syracuſe conſecrated in the temple of Delphi were very ſplendid (o). He had no children by his firſt wife, who was the daughter of Anaxilaus King of Rhegium, and couſin of Theron (p). But by his ſecond wife, who was Niocles's daughter, he had Dinomenes, whom I have mentioned above (q). It is pretended that he made him Governor of the city of Catana with the title of King of Ætna [D]. I cannot tell to which of his two wives we ought to aſcribe the anſwer related by Plutarch (r).

(n) See Pauſanias, lib. 8. cap. 42. pag. 687. & lib. 6. cap. 12. pag. 479.

(o) See Athenæus, lib. 6. pag. 231, 232.

(p) See Benedictus's Commentary on Pindar, Od. 1. Pyth pag. 263.

(q) Ibid.

(r) Plutarch. in Apophtheg. pag. 175. See above. the remark [E] of the article DUELLIUS.

[D] It is pretended, that he made his ſon Governor of Catana, with the title of King of Ætna.] They who pretend this, ground their opinion on the following words of Pindar (22).

(22) Pindar. Od. 1. Pyth. pag. m. 262, 263.

Μοῖσα κὴ τὼς Δεινομένει κελαδῆσαι πεῖθεό μοι ποινὰν τεθρίππων, χάρμα δ' ἐκ ἀλλότριον νι-καφορία πατέρ.
ἄγ' ἔπειτ' Αἴτνας βασιλεῖ
φίλιον ἐξεύρωμεν ὕμνον.
τῷ πόλιν κτίναν Θεοδμά-
τῳ σὺν ἐλευθερίᾳ,
Ὑλλίδ. θάθμας Ἱέρων
ἐν νόμοις ἔκλισσε.

i. e. "Aſſiſt me, Muſe, to ſing to Dinomenes the "prize carried at the chariot-races, for it becomes "a ſon to rejoice for his father's victory. Let us "afterwards invent an hymn acceptable to the King "of Ætna, for whom Hiero has built a city, the "liberty of which is ſettled by the Gods, and in "which Hiero publiſhed the Doric Laws." Benedictus's note upon this is as follows. Poſtquam Pœta laudavit Hieronem ab εὐτεκνία, & filium Dinomenem à ſtudio in patrem: ad alias ejuſdem Dinomenis laudes digreditur: quem Ætnæ regem appellat: nam illam à ſe conditam Hiero dedit filio adminiſtrandam: eumque ducem Ætnæorum conſtituit. i. e. "After the Poet "has commended Hiero for his happineſs in his chil-"dren, and his ſon Dinomenes for his love and re-"ſpect for his father, he proceeds in a digreſſion to "praiſe Dinomenes upon other accounts, and he "ſtiles him King of Ætna, becauſe Hiero having "founded that city, gave the government of it to his "ſon, whom he made King or Commander of the Ætneans." This makes us wonder the more to ſee that Thraſybulus ſucceeded to Hiero. I am apt to think, that the Syracuſans favoured the brother rather than the ſon, in order to do more honour to Gelon's memory. For Dinomenes, Hiero's ſon, was only Gelon's nephew; whereas Thraſybulus was Gelon's brother. So that by raiſing them to the throne, who were Gelon's neareſt relations, the Syracuſans ſhewed very plainly, that they looked upon him as the chief foundation of any perſon's pretenſions to the crown.

HIERO II, King of Syracuſe, was deſcended from the family of Gelon, who had reigned in the ſame place; but his mother being a ſervant, his father Hierocles looked upon him as a child who was a diſgrace to his family, and therefore he abandoned him to the care of fortune (a), that is to ſay, that he expoſed him. The bees nurſed him for ſeveral days; and the Soothſayers declaring that this was a ſign that he would be a King, Hierocles had him brought home again, and took all poſſible care of his education. The child made a conſiderable progreſs, and diſtinguiſhed himſelf ſeveral ways. He became a perfectly handſome and ſtrong man, he ſpoke with a very good grace, and he fought very often with thoſe who challenged him, and was always the conqueror. He received as a reward a great many military gifts from Pyrrhus (b). When Pyrrhus was gone, the Syracuſans made him Prætor [A]; and as he acquitted himſelf of that office with a great deal of prudence, all the cities agree unanimouſly to chooſe him their Captain General againſt the Carthaginians, and they raiſed him afterwards to the Throne (c). Soon after he carried on a vigorous war againſt the Mamertines, whom he had already defeated on ſome occaſions; and he propoſed to drive them out of the city of Meſſana *, which they had ſeized againſt the Law of Nations. As they did not find themſelves in a condition to reſiſt him, they applied themſelves, ſome to the Carthaginians, and others to the Romans. The queſtion whether they ſhould be aſſiſted was ſtrongly debated at Rome, and at laſt paſſed in the affirmative; and this was the beginning of the Punic War. The Conſul Appius Claudius, who was ſent to the aſſiſtance of the Mamertines, landed with his army in Sicily, in the year 490 after the building of Rome. The Mamertines gave their city up to him, and obliged the Carthaginian General, who commanded

(a) Ex Ancilla natus ac propterea à patre, velut deboneſtamentum generis, expoſitus fuerat. Juſtin. lib. 23. cap. 4.

(b) A Pyrrho rege multis militaribus donis donatus eſt, Idem, ibid.

(c) Juſtin, lib. 23. cap. 4.

* Now Meſſina.

[A] The Syracuſans made him Prætor.] I have been contented with following Juſtin's compendious expreſſions; but I ſhall give here a more particular account of this fact, which is imperfectly related by that Author. I obſerve then, that there was a miſunderſtanding between the Citizens of Syracuſe, and their army; and that the army being encamped near Mergana, proceeded to the election of the Magiſtrates, and conferred that dignity on two Officers of the army, Artemidorus, and Hiero. The latter being introduced into the City by the ſecret intrigues of his friends, overcame all the oppoſitions of the contrary party, and behaved himſelf with ſuch moderation and generoſity, that the inhabitants conſented to own him for Prætor, though they looked upon thoſe aſſemblies as unlawful, in which the ſoldiers pretended to chooſe the Magiſtrates (1). Polybius, who is my voucher here, relates two inſtances of Hiero's policy. The firſt is, his putting a ſtop to a diſorder which was very prejudicial to the State. The Syracuſans, who continued in the City whilſt the army and the Prætors were in the field, raiſed a thouſand ſeditions, and laboured to make innovations in the Government: it was therefore neceſſary, that when the army was abſent, ſome perſon ſhould keep the Citizens in awe. Leptines was very proper for this deſign, for he had a great many clients in the City, and great credit with the people. Hiero therefore made ſure of him, by marrying his daughter, and by this means he provided for the public tranquillity at Syracuſe, whilſt he ſhould be abroad at the head of the army. His ſecond ſtroke of policy was his getting rid of the old foreign ſoldiers, who were mutinous and diſſolute. He took the field with a pretence of attacking the Mamertines (2); and when he came in ſight of the enemy, he divided his army into two bodies, the one compoſed of the ſoldiers who were Syracuſans, the other of the foreigners; he put himſelf at the head of the former, as though he deſigned to aſſault the enemy; and left the latter expoſed to the fury of the Mamertines, who cut them in pieces. He raiſed other troops, and attacked the enemies ſo opportunely, that he gained a glorious victory over them. He was choſen King after this great action (3).

(1) Polybius, lib. 1. cap. 8.

(2) This was the name which thoſe ſoldiers took who made themſelves maſters of the city of Meſſina by artifice. See Polyb. lib. 1. cap. 7.

(3) Taken from Polybius, lib. 1. cap. 8, 9.

commanded in their citadel to leave it. The Carthaginians beſieged Meſſina, and entered into an alliance with Hiero, who joined his army with theirs. The Roman Conſul reſolved to give them battle, and attacked firſt the Syracuſans; the fight was ſharp; Hiero behaved himſelf with a great deal of courage; but he was routed, and thought fit to return to Syracuſe. Appius Claudius having alſo gained a victory over the Carthaginians, was maſter of the country, and advanced to Syracuſe, and beſieged it. Hiero obſerving that all Sicily was under a conſternation, and that the army of the Carthaginians was very much weakened, made ſome propoſals of a peace to the Romans; his propoſals were accepted, and from that time till his death he continued faithfully attached to the intereſt of the Romans (d), and gave them all poſſible proofs of the moſt ſincere friendſhip [B]. If he had lived but five or ſix years, after he entered into an alliance with them, and if we ſhould judge of things according to the practice of this age, we ſhould (d) Ex Polybio, lib. 1. cap. 10, & ſeq.

[B] He gave the Romans all poſſible proofs of the moſt ſincere friendſhip.] I ſhall relate what he did, when the affairs of the Romans were in very great confuſion after the battle, which Hannibal gained near the lake called Thraſymenus (4). This was the third battle they had loſt in Italy, ſince Hannibal entered that country, that is to ſay, in one year only. This would be more than ſufficient at this time, to make a Prince forſake his allies, and ſide with the conqueror; a Prince, I mean, whoſe dominions ſhould be ſituated, as Syracuſe was with regard to the Republic of Carthage. Yet Hiero followed only the rules of Generoſity; he continued a conſtant friend to the Romans, and ſent them a powerful ſupply. Read the following words of Livy (5). Per eoſdem dies ab Hierone claſſis Hoſtium cum magno commeatu acceſſit. Legati Syracuſani in ſenatum introducti nunciarunt, cædem C. Flaminii conſulis exercituſque allatam adeo ægrè tuliſſe regem Hieronem, ut nulla ſua propria, regnique ſui clade moveri magis potuerit. Itaque, quamquam probè ſciat magnitudinem populi Romani admirabiliorem propè adverſis rebus, quàm ſecundis, eſſe, miſſa tamen à ſe omnia, quibus à bonis fidelibuſque ſociis bella juvari ſoleant. Quæ ne accipere abnuant, magnoperè ſe P. C. orare, Jam omnium primum ominis cauſa victoriam auream pondo CCCXX. afferre ſeſe; acciperent eam, tenerentque & haberent propriam & perpetuam. Advexiſſe etiam trecenta millia modiûm tritici, ducenta hordei, ne commeatus deeſſent. Et quantum præterea opus eſſet, & quò juſſiſſent, ſubvecturos. Milite atque equite ſcire niſi Romani Latinique nominis non uti populum Romanum: levium armatorum auxilia etiam externa vidiſſe in caſtris Romanis. Itaque miſiſſe mille ſagittariorum ac funditorum aptam manum adverſus Baleares ac Mauros, pugnaceſque alias miſſili telo gentes. Ad ea dona conſilium quoque addebant, ut prætor, cui provincia Sicilia eveniſſet, claſſem in Africam trajiceret, ut & Hoſtes in terra ſua bellum haberent, minuſque laxamenti daretur iis ad auxilia Annibali ſummittenda. Ab ſenatu ita reſponſum regi eſt, Virum bonum, egregiumque ſocium Hieronem eſſe, atque uno tenore, ex quo in amicitiam populi Romani venerit, fidem coluiſſe, ac rem Romanam omni tempore ac loco munificè adjuviſſe: id, perinde ac deberet, pergratum populo Romano eſſe. Aurum & à civitatibus quibuſdam allatum, gratia rei accepta, non accepiſſe populum Romanum: victoriam, omenque accipere: ſedemque ei ſe divæ dare, dicare Capitolium, templum Jovis Optimi Maximi. In ea arce urbis Romæ ſacratam, volentem propitiamque, firmam ac ſtabilem fore populo Romano. Funditores, ſagittariique, & frumentum traditum conſulibus. i. e. "At that time a "fleet, ſent by Hiero, landed at Oſtia, laden with a "great deal of proviſions. The Embaſſadors of Syracuſe being admitted into the Senate, declared that "Hiero was ſo much grieved at the death of the Conſul C. Flaminius, and at the ſlaughter of their army, "that no misfortune of his own or of his Kingdom "could afflict him more. And though he was ſenſible that the Majeſty of the Romans was in a "manner more wonderful in their adverſity, than in "their proſperity; yet he ſent them all the aſſiſtance "that is uſually expected in war from good and "faithful allies. And he earneſtly deſired the Fathers "not to refuſe that aſſiſtance. The Embaſſadors added, that they had brought with them, firſt of all, "as a good omen, a golden ſtatue of Victory, of "three hundred and twenty pound weight, which "they deſired the Senate to accept, and to keep for "ever as their own. That they had alſo brought "three hundred thouſand buſhels of wheat, and two "hundred thouſand of barley, that they might not "want proviſions; and if they had occaſion for more, "it ſhould be ſent to whatever place they ſhould order. That they knew the Romans never made uſe "of any foot-ſoldiers or horſemen, but ſuch as were "natives of Rome, or at leaſt of Latium: that Hiero "had however ſometimes obſerved auxiliary troops "lightly armed in the armies of the Romans, and "even ſuch auxiliaries as were foreigners; and therefore he ſent them a good number of archers and "ſlingers, whom they might oppoſe againſt the Baleārians, Mauritanians, and other nations who fling "offenſive weapons from a diſtance. To theſe gifts they "added a piece of advice, which was, that the Prætor, "who was to command in Sicily, ſhould ſail with a "fleet into Africa, that the enemy might have the "war in their own country, and be thus leſs capable "of ſending Hannibal freſh ſupplies. The Senate's anſwer to the King was, that Hiero was a good and "excellent ally to the Romans, who had conſtantly "been faithful to them, from the time he became a "friend to them, and had at all times and in all places "generouſly aſſiſted them: that the people of Rome "acknowledged this with pleaſure, as they ought to "do; that when ſome cities ſent them gold, they "were thankful for the favour, but would not accept "the gold. But yet they accepted the ſtatue of Victory as a good omen, and would give it a ſeat in "the Capital, which was the Temple of Jupiter the "Great God. That being conſecrated in that Temple of the city of Rome, the Goddeſs would for ever "be kind and propitious to the Romans; laſtly, "that the ſlingers, the archers, and the proviſions, "ſhould be committed to the care of the Conſuls." One can hardly meet with ſuch a generous behaviour in private men towards each other. Gelon, Hiero's ſon, was not capable of following this noble example; he left the vanquiſhed party, without minding in the leaſt how much his father would be grieved at it. You will find Livy's words in the following paſſage from Caſaubon. Fides & vera & conſtantia ejuſdem (Hieronis) in conſervanda Po. Ro. majeſtate laudari ſatis pro merito non queat; quum præſertim ea mox & deinceps perſæpe ſecuta ſint tempora, quæ ejus conſtantiam eximie probarent. Quot & quantas clades populus Ro. bello Punico primo, & ſecundi initio ſit perpeſſus, nemo neſcit. Solent adverſa hominum voluntates & abdita mentium nudare. Hieronis propoſitum & conſtantiam in ſuſcepta ſemel amicitia Romanorum, non Reguli calamitas, non Claudii naufragium, non Thraſymenus, non Trebia, poſtremo ne Cannenſis quidem dies potuit labefactare. Manſit inconcuſſa illi fides, etiam tunc quum & in Italia & extra Italiam omnes Po. Ro. ſocii & amici ad Pœnos fortunam ſecuti inclinabant. Ne domus quidem Hieronis tota (verba ſunt Livii) ab defectione abſtinuit. Namque Gelo maximus ſtirpis contempta ſimul ſenectute patris, ſimul poſt Cannenſium cladem Romana ſocietate ad Pœnos defecit. Hiero tamen nihilo ſecius immotus ſtetit, ceu Marpeſia quædam cautes, eique etiam tunc fides conſtitit: quam etiam ad extremum vitæ conſtantiſſime ſervavit (6). i. e. "One cannot ſufficiently commend Hiero's fide- "lity and conſtancy in ſupporting the Majeſty of the "Romans; eſpecially ſince there happened ſoon after, "and in ſucceeding times, ſuch exigences as put his "conſtancy to great trial. All the world knows how "many and what great misfortunes befell the Romans "in

(4) In the year 537. ſince the building of Rome.

(5) Titus Livius, lib. 22. pag. 340, 341. See alſo Valerius Maximus, lib. 4. cap. 8. num. 1. in Extr.

(6) Caſaubon, Commentar. in Polyb. pag. 151, 152.

ſhould have reaſons to wonder at his conſtancy. What then ought not our admiration to be, when we conſider that he lived near fifty years after he made that alliance? This long reign was very happy; for Hiero's conduct was attended with ſo much prudence, that he was ſafe amongſt his ſubjects, and gained great reputation abroad, and all his affairs, both public and private, ſucceeded according to his wiſh. He cultivated the friendſhip of the Greeks, and was proud of having his ſhare in the crowns they diſtributed (e). His ſons erected an equeſtrian ſtatue, and another on foot to him at Olympia (f). His ſubjects alſo raiſed ſtatues to him in the ſame city (g). The money he gave to the Rhodians, and the preſents he ſent them, after that great earth-quake, which had done a very conſiderable damage in their iſland, and thrown their Coloſſus down, are a very eminent proof of his generoſity and magnificence (h). He built a ſhip, which was one of the moſt famous veſſels of antiquity. Archimedes (i) had the direction of that work. You will find a deſcription of it in Athenæus (k), who quotes a book written on purpoſe upon this ſubject by a certain Moſchian. The 16th Idyl of Theocritus is addreſſed to this King of Syracuſe, and the author ſeems to complain that he praiſed him without receiving the leaſt reward from him. Hiero wrote ſome books of Agriculture (l), and died at the age of fourſcore and ten years [C], the ſecond year of the 141ſt Olympiad, and the 539th (m) ſince the building of Rome. He ſurvived his ſon Gelon (n), who had been married with Nereis the daughter of Pyrrhus (o), and who had a ſon by her called Hieronymus (p). He obſerved that this Hieronymus had a great deal of pride, and he was afraid, leſt the good condition, in which he had ſettled his Kingdom, ſhould ſoon be altered under ſuch a Prince: he deſired therefore to reſtore the Syracuſans their liberty, but his daughters diſſuaded him from it [D]; and in his old age, he had not that ſtrength of mind which was neceſſary to reſiſt the careſſes and artifices of theſe two women, who were night and day about him. He was therefore obliged to leave his Kingdom to his grandſon, under the guardianſhip

(e) See Polyb. lib. 1. cap. 12.

(f) Pauſan. lib. 6. cap. 12. pag. 480.

(g) Idem, ibid. cap. 15. pag. 489. But obſerve that he aſſerts, pag. 480. that his ſons raiſed two ſtatues to him; and, pag. 489. that they raiſed but one, and. the Syracuſans two.

(h) See Polyb. lib. 5. cap. 88.

(i) Concerning the care which Hiero took to have Archimedes's Geometrical Speculations applied to mechanical uſes. See Plutarch, in Vita Marcelli, pag. 305.

(k) Athen. lib. 6. pag. 206, &c. See the article ARCHIMELUS.

(l) See the remark [C].

(m) And not 529, as Moreri ſays.

(n) Calviſius, ad ann. Rome 538. ſuppoſes the contrary, but he is miſtaken.

(o) Pauſan. lib. 6. cap. 12. pag. 479.

(p) Polybius, in Excerpt. Legat. cap. 1. T. Livius, lib. 24. pag. 382.

" in the firſt Punic War, and in the beginning of the " ſecond. Adverſity does generally diſcover men's " true inclinations, and their moſt ſecret thoughts. " But neither Regulus's unfortunate caſe, nor Claudi- " us's ſhipwreck, nor the battle of Thraſymenus, nor " that of Trebia, nor even the ſlaughter of Cannæ " were capable of ſhaking Hiero's conſtancy, or " weakening in the leaſt the friendſhip he once had for " the Romans. His fidelity continued firm, even " when all the allies and friends of the Romans, both " within and without Italy, were ready to join with " the Carthaginians, becauſe fortune favoured them. " Nay the very family of Hiero, as Livy tells us, " was not intirely free from defection. For Gelon, " the eldeſt of his children, in ſpite of his father's old " age, abandoned the Romans, and joined with the " Carthaginians, ſoon after the battle of Cannæ was " loſt. Yet Hiero ſtood unmoved, like a Marpeſian " rock, and even then he was faithful, and continued " ſo moſt conſtantly to the end of his life."

Let us add another obſervation; viz. that this Prince's fidelity for the Romans was ſometimes very burthenſome to him; for it happened on ſome occaſions, that the ſhips of the Carthaginians made great havock in his territories (7). Let us obſerve laſtly, that on his death-bed he recommended to the guardians of his grandſon, who was to ſucceed him, not to ſuffer any alteration to be made in the alliance, which he had ſo long and ſo faithfully kept with the Romans (8).

(7) See Tit. Liv. 22. pag. m. 349.

(8) Livius, lib. 24. pag. 381.

[C] Hiero... died at the age of fourſcore and ten years.] Livy aſſerts it, as you will ſee in the following remark. Lucian quotes (9) Demetrius Calliſtianus, who wrote that Hiero died of ſickneſs, aged fourſcore and twelve years, after he had reigned threeſcore and ten years. But let us keep to the even number mentioned by Livy and by Valerius Maximus. Siciliæ rector Hiero ad nonageſimum annum pervenit (10). i. e. " Hiero the Governor of Sicily lived to be ninety " years old." Let us take notice by the by of a little miſtake of Father Hardouin. Hieron, Siciliæ Rex, quem inter ſcriptores de agricultura memorant Varro, & Columella l. 1. c. 1. cum Attalo Philometore Pergami rege. Multa de eo præclara habet Valerius Max. l. 8. c. 13. p. 405 (11). i. e. " Hiero King of Sicily, " whom Varro and Columella (B. I. Ch. I.) mention " among the writers on agriculture, with Attalus Phi- " lometor King of Pergamus. Valerius Maximus re- " lates a great many honourable particulars of him." Conſult Valerius Maximus in the paſſage quoted by Father Hardouin; you will find nothing there concerning Hiero, but the ſeven words which I have tranſcribed; but you will find there a great many curious things concerning Maſſiniſſa King of Numidia. I am perſuaded that a falſe glance of the eye was the occaſion of Father Hardouin's being miſtaken. Having ſkipped one line, he imagined that the whole page in Valerius Maximus related to Hiero: this ſkip made him overlook the word Maſſiniſſa, which is in the following line; ſuch an overlooking is oftener the cauſe of miſtakes, than ſome perſons are apt to imagine. A writer who is to conſult a great many authors, dwells as little as he can upon every thing in particular; his eyes run ſwiftly over the pages, they ſlide ſometimes ſo nimbly over certain lines, that there is not the leaſt notion of it preſerved in the mind. In ſuch a caſe a man connects together in his writings facts which ſhould be ſeparated.

(9) Lucian. in Macrobiis, pag. 635. tom. 2. Oper.

(10) Val. Max. lib. 8. cap. 13. num. 1. in Ext.

(11) Hardouin, in Ind. Autor. Plinii, pag. 115.

To conclude, remember that Hiero did not reign threeſcore and ten years, as Lucian aſſerts; for he was Prætor during ſeven years, before he was proclaimed King (12).

(12) See Caſaubon, in Polyb. Librum 1. pag. m. 99, 100.

[D] He deſired to reſtore the Syracuſans their liberty; but his daughters diſſuaded him from it.] It was becauſe they knew that they and their huſbands would have the chief management of the affairs of the Kingdom. Livy deſcribes this admirably well. In Sicilia, ſays he (13), Romanis omnia mutaverat mors Hieronis, regnumque ad Hieronymum nepotem ejus tranſlatum, puerum vixdum libertatem, nedum dominationem modicè laturum. Lætè id ingenium tutores atque amici ad præcipitandum in omnia vitia acceperunt. Quæ ita futura cernens Hiero, ultima ſenecta voluiſſe dicitur liberas Syracuſas relinquere, ne ſub dominatu puerili per ludibrium bonis artibus partum firmatumque interiret regnum. Huic conſilio ejus ſumma ope obſiſtere filiæ: nomen regium penes puerum futurum ratæ, regimen rerum omnium penes ſe, viroſque ſuos, Andronodorum, & Zoilum: nam ii tutorum primi relinquebantur. Non facile erat nonageſimum jam agenti annum, circumſeſſo dies noctesque muliebribus blanditiis liberare animum, & convertere ad publicam privatamque curam. Itaque tutores numero quindecim puero reliquit. i. e. " Hiero's death had made a great alteration in the " affairs of the Romans in Sicily; Hieronymus his " ſon ſucceeding him, a child who would abuſe " liberty, and much more the ſovereign power. " His guardians and friends were very glad that this " character of his gave them an opportunity to throw " him headlong into all manner of vices. Hiero fore- " ſeeing this, had ſome deſign in his old age, they " ſay, to reſtore the Syracuſans to their liberty, leſt " the Kingdom, which had been eſtabliſhed by wiſdom " and prudence, ſhould again be imprudently ruined, " under the government of a child. But his daughters guardianſhip of fifteen perſons. What the old man had foreſeen and dreaded, came really to paſs. Syracuſe was in the utmoſt confuſion after his death [E]. Pauſanias, who aſſerts that Dinomenes killed him (q), is miſtaken.

(13) Titus Livius lib. 24. pag. 381.

(q) Pauſan. lib. 6. cap. 12. pag. 480.

" did all that was in their power to perſuade him from " that deſign. They knew that the child would have " the name of a King, but that all the power would " be lodged with them, and their huſbands, Androno- " dorus and Zoilus. For theſe were named the firſt " guardians to the young Prince. Nor was it an eaſy " matter for a man, who was fourſcore and ten years old, " and night and day beſet by the women, who cajoled " him continually, to have his thoughts free, and ap- " ply them to public and private affairs. So that he " left the child under the care of fifteen guardians."

[E] Syracuſe was in the utmoſt confuſion after his death.] The firſt thing that was done was, that they acquainted the people with Hiero's laſt will, and ſhewed them Hieronymus their new King, who was then but about about fifteen years old. Some perſons appointed on purpoſe to applaud, approved the laſt will; others were under the greateſt uneaſineſs, and conſidered the Kingdom as an orphan who had loſt his father. They proceeded afterwards to the King's funeral; and if he was interred in a ſolemn manner by the great number of perſons who attended his burial, it ought to be aſcribed to the people's affection for him, rather than to his family's care (14). It was afterwards ſeen that Andronodorus, the deceaſed's ſon-in-law, and one of Hieronymus's fifteen guardians, declared that the King was of age to govern the Kingdom, and that the guardianſhip was expired. By this means he got into his own hands and for himſelf alone the power of all the other guardians. A Kingly attendance was ſoon introduced; and whereas Hiero had always been dreſſed like the other citizens, his grandſon appeared in public dreſſed in a purple habit, with a diadem on his head, and ſurrounded with a life-guard. Pride, cruelty, and diſſoluteneſs were ſoon anſwerable to this pompous appearance, and one would have thought that Hieronymus made it his buſineſs, that his ſubjects might bewail the loſs of his grandfather. The Syracuſans had loved him to ſuch a degree, that had his grandſon been poſſeſſed of all the good qualities of the beſt Princes, they would hardly have been ſufficient to ſatisfy them. How great therefore muſt their diſcontent have been, under a ſucceſſor, who was ſo different from Hiero? I cannot ſufficiently admire the noble expreſſions, which Livy makes uſe of to repreſent this. Vix quidem ulli bono moderatoque regi facilis erat favor apud Syracuſanos, ſuccedenti tantæ charitati Hieronis. Verùm enim vero Hieronymus, velut ſuis vitiis deſiderabilem efficere vellet avum, primo ſtatim conſpectu omnia quàm diſparia eſſent, oſtendit. Nam qui per tot annos Hieronem, filiumque ejus Gelonem, nec veſtis habitu, nec alio ullo inſigni differentes à cæteris civibus vidiſſent, conſpexere purpuram, ac diadema ac ſatellites armatos: quadrigiſque etiam alborum equorum interdum ex regia procedentem, more Dionyſii tyranni. Hunc tam ſuperbum apparatum habitumque convenientes ſequebantur mores, contemptus omnium hominum, ſuperbæ aures, contumelioſa dicta: aditus non alienis modo, ſed tutoribus etiam difficiles: libidines novæ, inhumana crudelitas (15). i. e. " It was " hardly poſſible for any good and modeſt Prince to " gain the people's favour, coming to the throne after " Hiero, who had been ſo much beloved. But Hiero- " nymus, as though he would have made his ſubjects " wiſh again for his grandfather's reign, ſhewed by his " firſt appearance in the world, the great difference " there was in every reſpect between their characters. " For they who for ſo many years had obſerved that " Hiero and his ſon Gelon did not in the leaſt differ " from the other citizens in their dreſs, nor in any other " mark of diſtinction, beheld now the Prince dreſſed " in a purple habit with a diadem on his head, and " attended by a numerous guard; and coming ſome- " times from his palace in a chariot drawn by four " white horſes, after the manner of Dionyſius the " Tyrant. His morals anſwered his haughty appear- " ance and his dreſs; he ſcorned all men, heard them " with pride, and gave them opprobrious language: it " was difficult not only for ſtrangers, but even for his " guardians to have acceſs to him; his licentiouſ- " neſs was unheard of, and his cruelty beyond ex- " preſſion." This young King preferred the alliance of the Carthaginians before that of the Romans (16). But he had not time to do the former any ſervice; there was a conſpiracy againſt him, and he was killed (17). Andronodorus ſheltered himſelf as well as he could in the ſtrongeſt places of Syracuſe, and yet notwithſtanding the advice of Demarata (18) Hiero's daughter, he ſubmitted to the new republican government, and was made Prætor. But new troubles ariſing, he endeavoured to make an advantage of them, being tired with the repeated inſtigations of his wife (19). He adviſed about his undertaking with Themiſtius, the huſband of Harmonia Gelon's daughter, and truſted a player with his deſign, who betrayed him; ſo that he and Themiſtius were killed, as they were entering into the Senate-houſe (20). In order to juſtify this murther it was neceſſary to acquaint the people with the crime of theſe two men. The orator who was ordered to do it, obſerved amongſt other things, that their wives had inſpired them with ambition. Hereupon a great outcry was made in the aſſembly, the people declaring that theſe women muſt be put to death, with the whole family of the tyrants. Orders were given for it immediately, and the thing was done accordingly. Livy, who relates this ſtory, adds to it a reflection concerning the capricious and changeable temper of the populace. Sub hanc vocem ex omnibus partibus concionis clamor oritur, nullam earum vivere debere, nec quenquam ſupereſſe tyrannorum ſtirpis. Hæc natura multitudinis eſt: aut ſervit humiliter, aut ſuperbè dominatur; libertatem, quæ media eſt, nec ſpernere modice, nec habere ſciunt, & non fermè deſunt irarum indulgentes miniſtri, qui avidos atque intemperantes plebeiorum animos ad ſanguinem & cædes irritent: ſicut tum extemplo Prætores rogationem promulgarunt. Acceptaque penè prius quàm promulgata eſt, ut omnis regia ſtirps interficeretur. Miſſique à Prætoribus Demaratam Hieronis, & Harmoniam Gelonis filias, conjuges Andronodori & Themiſtii, interfecerunt (21). i. e. " At this word the whole aſſembly " cried out, that none of theſe women ought to live, and " that whole family of the tyrants ought to be put to " death. For ſuch is the character of the multitude, " they either obey ſlaviſhly, or proudly command. " Liberty, which is a medium between both, they " know not how to enjoy with moderation, nor how " to uſe rightly; nor are there wanting ſome perſons " who make it their buſineſs to indulge the people's " paſſion, and who provoke their eager and immo- " derate minds to ſlaughter and bloodſhed, as it hap- " pened on this occaſion: for the Prætors put the " queſtion immediately, and it was carried in the affir- " mative almoſt before it was propoſed, the whole " people voting that all the royal family ſhould be put to " death. And the Officers ſent by the Prætor killed " Demarata Hiero's daughter and wife to Andronodo- " rus, and Harmonia Gelon's daughter, and The- " miſtius's wife." There was another of Hiero's daughters named Heraclea. As ſoon as ſhe knew that the Officers came to put her to death, ſhe took ſanctuary in the chapel of her houſe, and ſtayed with her houſhold Gods, and employed the moſt moving ſupplications and the ſtrongeſt arguments to ſave her life, or at leaſt her daughters; but it was in vain; they dragged her out of the chapel, and cut her throat; her two daughters, who had made their eſcape out of the houſe, were killed in the ſtreets (22). See the margin (23).

(14) Funus ſit regium magis amore civium, & charitate, quam cura ſuorum celebre. Tit. Livius, lib. 24. pag. 381.

(15) T. Livius, lib. 24. pag. 381.

(16) Idem, ibid. pag. 381. See alſo Polyb. in Excerpt. Legat. cap. 1.

(17) Livius, ibi'.

(18) What ſhe told him is related in the remark [F] of the article PERIANDER towards the end.

(19) Feſſus tandem uxoris vocibus monentis, nunc illud eſſe tempus occupandi res, dum turbata omnia nova atque incognita libertate eſſent, dum regiis ſtipendiis paſtus obverſaretur miles: dum &c. Livius, lib. 24. pag. 391.

(20) Idem, ibid.

(21) Idem, ibid. pag. 392.

(22) Idem, ibid. pag. 193.

(23) I ſhall make ſome reflections upon this in the remark [C] of the article HOBBES.

HIERO, a great friend of Nicias, and the Chief or Leader of the Colony that reſtored Thurium (a), pretended to be the ſon of Dionyſius ſurnamed Χαλκὸς [A], that is to (a) A city in Italy.

[A] The ſon of Dionyſius, ſurnamed Χαλκὸς.] This Dionyſius was a Poet, and ſome of his poems were ſtill extant in Plutarch's time (1), His elegies have been quoted by Athenæus (2), and by Ariſtotle (3). He

(1) Plutarch. in Nicia, p. 526.

(2) Ath. lib. 10. p. 443. & lib. 15. pag. 668.

(3) Ariſtot. Rhetor. lib. 3. cap. 2.

to ſay, made of Braſs, Æneus. He had been educated at Nicias's houſe, who himſelf taught him polite Literature and Muſic; and Hiero, in return, had recourſe to a great many artifices to ſupport Nicias's intereſt (b). I have met with an error in Amiot, and in ſome Dictionaries (c).

(b) Taken from Plut. in Vita Niciæ.

(c) See quotation (5).

He was alſo an orator; for he was ſurnamed Χαλκὸς only becauſe the Athenians made uſe of braſs money, being perſuaded to it by his oration (4). See the margin (5).

(4) Callimachus, in Tract. de Rhetoribus, apud Athen. lib. 15. pag. 669.

(5) Obſerve that Amiot pretends that this Dionyſius was at the Head of the Colony that ſettled at Thurium. But Plutarch aſcribes this to Hiero. Obſerve alſo, that Charles Stephens, Lloyd and Hoffman aſſert that the Poems which were extant in Plutarch's time, were written by Hiero, which is falſe.

HIEROPHILUS a Phyſician, of whom I can ſay nothing, but that he taught Phyſic to a certain Maiden called Agnodice. She was obliged to diſguiſe herſelf in men's cloaths; for there was a Law amongſt the Athenians, by which the women and the ſlaves were forbidden to ſtudy Phyſic (a). Agnodice, who ſet up for a midwife, was the occaſion of the altering of that Law. This ſtory is too curious not to be related in a note [A].

(a) Athenienſes caverant ne quis ſervus aut fœmina artem Medicinam diſceret. Hygin. cap. 274.

HILDEBERT

[A] This ſtory is too curious, not to be related in a remark.] Hyginus tells us, "that as there were no "midwives amongſt the ancients, a great many women "died in labour, becauſe they were aſhamed to ſend "for a Phyſician; and that there was a law amongſt "the Athenians, by which the women were forbidden "to meddle with Phyſick. Wherefore a young maiden "who had a ſtrong inclination for that ſcience, diſ-"guiſed herſelf in men's cloaths and ſtudied it. She "went afterwards to the women who were in labour, "and to remove all their ſcruples, ſhe ſhewed them "firſt of what ſex ſhe was, and then delivered them. "The Phyſicians obſerving that this made them loſe "their practice amongſt the women, impeached Ag-"nodice, and charged her with a criminal converſation "with the women; they complained even of a certain "colluſion between them, as though the women pre-"tended ſome indiſpoſitions in order to favour their "gallant. In a word, they had her condemned by "the Areopagites, but Agnodice gave in a full court "ſuch evident proofs of her innocence in that reſpect, "that the Phyſicians were obliged to play another "game; they pleaded the Law, by which all perſons "of her ſex were forbidden to practiſe Phyſick. Here-"upon the Athenian Ladies became parties in the "cauſe, and at their requeſt the Law was amended; "ſo that it was afterwards lawful for the women to "learn that art (1)." The author from whom I have borrowed this paſſage makes an obſervation againſt Hyginus. "Theſe words of Hyginus, ſays he (2), "are a little inaccurate; for one might infer from his "diſcourſe, that ſince Agnodice had begun to de-"liver the women, they did no longer ſend for Phy-"ſicians, when they were in labour, which would "prove againſt this author's own obſervation, that be-"fore that time they were wont to make uſe of the "Phyſicians aſſiſtance. But if he wanted accuracy, "we may however clear him from contradiction, by "ſuppoſing his meaning was, that the women finding "themſelves eaſed in their labour by Agnodice, would "no longer employ any other but her, in their other "diſtempers, in which they had no reaſon to be "aſhamed to ſend for a Phyſician." This author makes another reflection concerning Hyginus's obſerving that before Agnodice practiſed the art of midwifry, ſeveral women died becauſe they were aſhamed to ſend for a Phyſician (3). "It muſt be confeſſed, "ſays the author of the Nouvelles de la Republique des "Lettres (4), that modeſty is not much leſs ſubject "than other things to the whimſical changes of the "faſhion. There was a time when it was the faſhion "to be aſhamed of ſending for a man-midwife, and "we read in a book of Louiſa Bourgeois, a very un-"derſtanding midwife, that Henry IV recommended "her to do her duty ſo well in delivering Queen Mary "de Medicis, that there might be no occaſion to ſend "for a man, which, added he, would make her mo-"deſty ſuffer too much. It is now the faſhion not to "have that modeſty; our age is truly much more "knowing than the former ages were." This raillery againſt our age is not well grounded; for if on the one hand there be leſs modeſty now in ſome reſpects, than there was formerly, on the other hand impudence is not ſo great amongſt us, as it was at Athens. Are there any honeſt women to be met with now-a-days, who in a full court would dare to lift up their ſhift in order to ſhew the Judges of what ſex they are? And yet this is what Agnodice did in the Areopagus, the moſt grave and moſt venerable tribunal that was then in the world. Quod cum vidiſſent medici, ſe ad fœminas non admitti, Agnodicen accuſare cœperunt, quod dicerent eum glabrum eſſe & corruptorem earum, & illas ſimulare imbecillitatem. Quo cum Areopagitæ conſediſſent, Agnodicen damnare cœperunt. Quibus Agnodice tunicam allevavit, & ſe oſtendit fœminam eſſe (5). i. e. "The Phyſicians ſeeing "that they were no longer called by the women, be-"gan to impeach Agnodice, ſaying ſhe was a man with-"out a beard, who debauched the women; who pre-"tended to have diſtempers, that they might have an "opportunity to ſend for him. The Areopagite "being met again to condemn her, Agnodice "took her gown up, and ſhewed them ſhe was a wo-"man." Can one imagine greater impudence than this was? Had ſhe not already given before this ſufficient proofs of her want of ſhame? Could ſhe not diſcover her ſex in a more modeſt manner than that ſhe made uſe of with the women? Quæ cum credere ſe noluiſſet, æſtimans virum eſſe, illa tunica ſublata oſtendebat ſe fœminam eſſe (6). i. e. "A woman, in la-"bour, refuſing to truſt herſelf in Agnodice's hands, "the latter took up her gown to ſhew that ſhe was a "woman." Thoſe Prelates, who in order to prove their innocence ſhewed their nakedneſs to whole Councils (7), were not by far ſo impudent as this Athenian Lady.

I have obſerved in another place, that Albertus Magnus pretended to midwifry, if we may depend upon ſcandalous reports (8). If it be ſo, it is a long while ſince the modeſty of the Athenian Ladies is out of date. And as Albertus Magnus's reputation was very well eſtabliſhed, who knows but there were ſome women who took a pride in being delivered by him? as the affected Ladies in Moliere would have every thing belonging to them, even to their very drawers, made by the beſt workmen.

Since the firſt edition of this Dictionary was printed, I have met with an obſervation in the Acta Eruditorum of Leipſic, which will furniſh me with a Supplement to this Article. It muſt be confeſſed, ſay the Authors of that Journal, that the French are more proper than any other nation, to teach us the method of aſſiſting the women who are in labour. Not becauſe the French have a more happy genius, but becauſe they have often an opportunity to be preſent at a woman's delivery. It is now the faſhion in France, that even new-married women are not at all aſhamed to be ſeen and handled by the Chirurgeons without the leaſt ſcruple, and women of all conditions deſire that a Chirurgeon be with them, and aſſiſt them when they are near their time. There is a quite different cuſtom amongſt the other nations, for the women generally ſpeaking, and eſpecially thoſe that have been but lately married, are ſo baſhful and ſcrupulous, that they can hardly be perſuaded to ſuffer themſelves to be examined by their Midwives, or by their female friends; they are determined to it only in caſe of neceſſity, and when their pains are ſo violent that it overcomes their reluctancy. As I have not tranſlated the

(1) Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, for Jan. 1686, p. 28, 29.

(2) Ibid. pag. 30.

(3) Antiqui obſtetrices non habuerunt, unde mulieres verecundia ductæ interierant. Hygin. cap. 274.

(4) Jan. 1686, Pag. 30.

(5) Hyginus, cap. 274. pag. m. 329.

(6) Ibid. pag. m. 328.

(7) Concerning Dionyſius, Patriarch of Conſtantinople, ſee the Nouvelles Lettres contre Maimbourg, pag. 686. and add the following paſſage to it: Atteſtantibus Nicephoro & Zonara, quum Macedonius Epiſcopus Conſtantinopolitanus, ſub Anaſtaſio, falſo atque factionibus Arrianorum & Manichæorum ab adoleſcentulis, impuræ Veneris; & Methodius Patriarcha, ſub Michaele, ſtupri accuſati eſſent; amboſ ut convincerent mendacium, tunicâ ſublatâ oſtendiſſe, virilibus ſe carere: & exinde à criminibus illis liberos atque immunes fuiſſe pronunciatos. Salmuth. in Pancirolum, Part 2. pag. 88.

(8) See his article remark [B].

HILDEBERT, Biſhop of Mans, and afterwards Archbiſhop of Tours in the 12th Century, had led a very diſſolute life before he was raiſed to the epiſcopal character [A]. It is to no purpoſe that ſome perſons pretend to diſpute it againſt the Annaliſt of the Church of Rome [B], and object to him the diſcoveries of a critic. Father Maimbourg ſucceſsfuly expatiated upon an action of this Prelate [C], with a deſign to abuſe the few Biſhops, the paſſage from the Journal of Leipſic word for word, I ſhall tranſcribe it here that the reader may ſee I have given the ſenſe of it with all the fidelity that is requiſite. Non eſt negandum, de adjuvandis parturientibus Gallos præ cæteris nationibus nos inſtruere poſſe, non ingenio, ſed occaſione, qua licet illis quam frequentiſſime partui adeſſe, feliciores. Ita enim moris apud ipſos eſſe, ut poſito pudore, etiam recens nuptæ ad tactum atque explorationem omnem chirurgos admittant faciles, & partus tempore præſentes atque adjutores fæminæ quælibet eos expetant. Quod longe ſit aliter apud cæteras nationes, ubi plerumque vix perſuaderi poſſunt uxorculæ, imprimis nuper in matrimonium ductæ, ut obſtetricibus propriique ſexus amicis ſuis faciant copiam, niſi doloribus ac neceſſitate victæ (9). Thus the Authors of the Journal of Leipſic ſpeak in the beginning of their account of a Book publiſhed by a Chirurgeon of Paris (10) in the year 1694 with this title, La Pratique des Accouchemens. i. e. "The Practice of Midwifry." This Chirurgeon did not publiſh his Obſervations till after a long courſe of Experience; for he had been preſent at the delivery of four or five thouſand women. Another chirurgeon of the ſame city (11) publiſhed the next year a Book entitled, Obſervations ſur la Groſſeſſe & l'Accouchement des Femmes. i. e. "Obſervations upon the women's pregnancy and delivery." This work contains ſeven hundred choice obſervations out of about three thouſand more which the Author had made (12). This is ſufficient to prove that it is very much the faſhion at Paris to ſend for men-midwives inſtead of women. Time will come perhaps, when the ſame faſhion will prevail almoſt through all Europe; ſhame and modeſty will have the fate of a thouſand other things, which are ſubject to the fantaſtical and inconſtant laws of cuſtom.

(9) Actor. Erud. Supplem. tom. 2. Sect. 10. pag. 470.

(10) Called Philip Peu.

(11) Named Francis Mauriceau.

(12) See the Acta Eruditor. for Jan. 1695, pag. 42.

[A] He had led a very diſſolute life before he was raiſed to the epiſcopal character.] Even after he was promoted to the dignity of an Archdeacon, he took ſo many concubines that he had a very great number of baſtard ſons and daughters. This is what Ivo Biſhop of Chartres wrote to him (1). Dicunt quidam de majoribus Cenomanenſis Eccleſiæ, qui anteactam vitam tuam ſe noſſe teſtantur, quod ultra modum laxaveris fræna pudicitiæ, in tantum ut poſt acceptum Archidiaconatum accubante lateribus tuis plebe muliercularum, multam genueris plebem puerorum & puellarum. i. e. "Some of the moſt ancient Perſons of the Church of "Mans, who declare that they are very well acquainted with your former way of living, aſſert, "that you indulged yourſelf in ſenſual pleaſures to "that degree, that after you was made an Archdeacon, you uſed to lie with a whole tribe of Concubines, by whom you have got a vaſt number of "boys and girls."

(1) This letter is the 277th. See Menage, Hiſt. de Sable, pag. 107.

[B] . . . . . It is to no purpoſe, that ſome perſons pretend to diſpute it againſt the Annaliſt of the Church of Rome.] Juret (2) cenſures Baronius for aſſerting in his Annals upon the authority of this Letter of Ivo of Chartres, that Ildebert was given to women before he was a Biſhop, and he pretends that this letter was written to one Aldebert, and not to Ildebert. Aldeberto Cenomanenſis Eccleſiæ electo. i. e. "To Al"debert Biſhop elect of Mans." Thus that letter is intitled at the end of the manuſcript of Ivo of Chartres's Letters which is lodged in St. Victor's library . . . . . But father Sirmond has very well cleared Baronius, in his Notes upon Geofrey de Vandôme. Here follow his words. Ildebertus, vir in Epiſcopatu eximius: ante illum vitæ ſolutioris, ut indicat Ivonis epiſtola 277. Quam quidem, qui de Ildeberto, de quo agimus, ſcriptam, pertinacius neget, is opinor, clauſis oculis ſibi credi velit. Ecquæ enim alia Ivonis tempore Cenomanenſis Epiſcopi electio fuit, quàm Ildeberti? quem præterea ſcimus ex Archidiacono, quod Ivo notat, ad Epiſcopalem Cathedram evectum. Neque tamen hæc ita diſſero, ut viri docti, qui contra ſenſit, nomini obtrectem: ſed quia immortalis memoriæ Cardinali Baronio me debere judico, ut quæ rectè & verè ab eo dicta ſunt, ea ut pro veris habeantur, enitar quoad poſſum (3). i. e. "Ildebert, a man eminent in his Epiſcopal func"tions, had led a diſſolute life before he was made a "Biſhop, as appears from Ivo's 277th Letter. For "they who obſtinately deny that our Ildebert is men"tioned in that letter, muſt pretend, in my opinion, "that we ſhould blindly believe them upon their "word. For what other perſon was elected Biſhop of "Mans, in Ivo's time, but Ildebert? who, we know, "was raiſed from an Archdeacon to the Biſhop's ſee, "which Ivo alſo obſerves. I do not obſerve this with "a deſign to aſperſe the Author, who is of a contrary "opinion, but only becauſe I think I owe that juſtice "to Cardinal Baronius of immortal memory, to prove, "as much as lays in my power, that to be really "true, which he has aſſerted with reaſon and truth." Monſieur Menage adds ſeveral very good obſervations to theſe Arguments of Father Sirmond. "Ildebertus, "ſays he (4), is the ſame name with Aldebertus; and "Ildebert, Biſhop of Mans, calls himſelf Aldebertus "in one of his Letters printed in the 13th Volume of "the Spicilegium. Ranulpho, Dei gratia, Dunelmenſi "Epiſcopo, omni honore & gratia ſublimando, Aldebertus humilis Cenomanorum Sacerdos. i. e. To Ranulphus, by the Grace of God, Biſhop of Durham, "worthy of all honour and grace, Aldebert, an humble Prieſt of Mans. Thus he is alſo called in a "Record of the Abby of Etival, quoted by Monſieur "Pavillon in his Notes on Arbriſſel's Life. Aldeberto Epiſcopo Cenomanenſi, for thus we ought to "read his name in that paſſage, and not Alberto * Epiſcopo Cenomanenſi, for there never was a Biſhop of "Mans named Albertus. In a Record of the Abby "of Frontevaux, cited by Colnier in his notes on Arbriſſel's Life, he is alſo called Audebertus, which is "the ſame as Aldebertus. Courvaiſier in his Life of "Ildebert ſupport Ivo of Chartres's aſſertion by the "following paſſage of the Necrologus † of St. Peter de "la Cour du Mans. Tertio Idus Auguſti, obiit Gervaſius, Hildeberti Præſulis filius; matris Eccleſiæ canonicus, qui vivens ad hujus Eccleſiæ ſervitium quandam contulit Bibliothecam; cujus anima quiete fruatur æterna. i. e. Auguſt the 11th died Gervaſe, "Biſhop Hildebert's ſon, and a Canon of our mother "the Church; who in his life-time beſtowed a Library "for the uſe of this Church. May his ſoul enjoy eternal "reſt. Courvaiſier pretends that this Gervaſe was the Biſhop's baſtard; Bondonnet maintains that he was only "his ſpiritual ſon. But this Prelate's delicta juventutis "(i. e. The Sins of his Youth) are mentioned, in the "Lives of the Biſhops of Mans, publiſhed by Dom. "Mabillon in the third volume of his Analecta, which "again confirms the account given in Ivo of "Chartres's Letter." Monſieur Menage quotes in his additions (5) two records cited by Father de la Mainferme (6), in which our Hildebert is called Audebertus. So that Juret's cenſure (7) falls to the ground with all the commendations which Father Maimbourg beſtows upon him. See the following Remark.

(2) Notis in Ep. 277. Ivonis Carnutenſis.

(3) Menage, Hiſt. de Sablé, pag. 107, 108.

(4) Ibid. pag. 108.

* But Alberto has perhaps been put there by abbreviation for Aldeberto, and Albertus is perhaps the ſame name with Aldebertus.

† A catalogue of the dead, or bill of mortality.

(5) Page 310.

(6) In Clypeo naſcentis Fontebraldenſis Ordinis, pag. 62, 63.

[C] Father Maimbourg ſucceſsfully expatiated upon an action of this Prelate.] He firſt commended this Biſhop; the bleſſed Hildebert, ſaid he (8), Biſhop of Mans, and afterwards Archbiſhop of Tours, has been one of the moſt holy and moſt learned Prelates the Gallican Church ever had. "We have ſome Letters "and ſome other beautiful works of his in the col"lection of the Fathers. St. Bernard ſtiles him the "excellent Pontiff and the chief ſupport of the Church; "whom the moſt celebrated writers mention with "great elogium, and whoſe Holineſs God himſelf was "pleaſed to ſhew, and to honour by the miracles which "were performed at his tomb. And on this occaſion, "I think that to do his memory the Juſtice it deſerves, I am obliged to obſerve, that they, who on "the credit of a letter of Ivo of Chartres, have aſſerted, "that when Hildebert was made Biſhop of Mans, "he

(7) Voſſius, de Hiſt. Latin. pag. 404. and Moreri after him have admitted that cenſure.

(8) Hiſt. du Lutheraniſme, liv. 2. pag. m. 192.

ſhops, who ſtill oppoſed the extenſion of the Regale. The remark I ſhall make upon this ſubject, will contain ſome particulars of our Hildebert's life. Illyricus has placed him amongſt the witneſſes of the truth, becauſe he wrote a very ſmart letter againſt the Court of Rome [D]. He was not of a diſtinguiſhed family [E].

" he led a very ſcandalous life, have miſtaken him " for another, being miſled by the inſcription of that " letter, in which they found Hildeberto, inſtead of " Aldeberto, which is in the antient manuſcripts, as " Monſieur Juret, to whom we are obliged for this " important obſervation, proves in his learned notes " on Ivo of Chartres's life." Father Maimbourg relates afterwards how Hildebert was tranſlated from the Biſhoprick of Mans to the Archbiſhoprick of Tours by Pope Honorius II. in the Year 1125; and he obſerves that this prelate finding that King Lewis the Big had given two Canonſhips in his dioceſe during the vacancy of that ſee, he went himſelf to court to make his humble repreſentations to the King (9). His Majeſty heard him, but as he would not be ſatisfied with the ſentence that was given, and demanded a canonical judgment, all the income of his Archbiſhopriek was ſeized upon becauſe of his obſtinacy. This made him have recourſe to the moſt humble petitions, and he recommended his caſe to a Biſhop, for whom the King had a great eſteem. I do not write to you, ſays he *, with a deſign to complain of the King's proceedings againſt me; nor to rouze you by my expoſtulation, nor to raiſe clamours, troubles, ſeditions, and ſtorms againſt the Lord's anointed, nor to demand that the ſeverity and cenſures of the Church be made uſe of againſt him. Far from it; I only beg of you, that by your kind and charitable offices, you would prevail upon his Majeſty, not to exert the weapons of his anger and indignation againſt a poor Biſhop, full of years, and who deſires nothing but reſt. Father Maimbourg does not omit to obſerve, that the King kept the upperhand, and had the full enjoyment of his right, and that Honorius a very holy Pope, and this Archbiſhop's great protector, did not find fault with it. Thus you ſee how this Hiſtorian found an opportunity to inſert in his Hiſtory of Lutheraniſm an epiſode concerning the affairs of the Regale, with a deſign to pay his court to the King, by rendering the conduct of the Biſhop of Ponniers and that of Pope Innocent XI odious. He did the ſame with regard to all the affairs of his time, as it is objected to him in the fourth and fifth letter of the general cenſure of his hiſtory of Calviniſm †.

(9) Ibid. pag. 193.

* Nec tamen hæc loquor tanquam vobis clamorem ſuper Chriſto Domini deponens, tanquam poſtulans Eccleſiaſticæ rigorem diſciplinæ. Subvenire Eccleſiæ & mihi per veſtrum deprecor interventum, & Regi ex charitate ſuggeri, ne ſagittas ſuas in ſene compleat ſacerdote. Hildebert. Epiſt. 6. apud Lucam Dacherium, tom. 13. Spicilegii.

† Critique generale du l'Hiſtoire du Calviniſme, written by Mr. Bayle himſelf.

[D] He wrote a very ſmart Letter againſt the Court of Rome.] The deſcription he makes of the vices of that court is very lively, and I think it loſt nothing of its ſtrength in the French tranſlation, which Monſieur Du Pleſſis Mornai made of it (10). Hildebert was ſtill but Biſhop of Mans when he wrote that letter; but when he wrote another to Honorius II, complaining that all the cauſes were carried to Rome by way of appeal, he was Archbiſhop of Tours. He wrote a deſcription of Rome in verſe, which ends with theſe two lines.

(10) In pag. 280, of his Myſtere d'Iniquité.

Urbs fælix, ſi vel dominis urbs illa careret,
Vel dominis eſſet turpe carere fide.

" Happy city, if it had no Maſters; or if its maſ-
" ters were aſhamed to want faith."

Coeffeteau (11) does not deny that the Letter to Honorius was written by Hildebert, but he has not the ſame opinion of the other. It is not at all probable, ſays he, that Hildebert wrote that letter, conſidering not only, that it is not to be found, either amongſt thoſe that are printed, or amongſt thoſe that are manuſcript, which I got with ſeveral other ſcarce books from Meſſieurs Du Puy . . . . . but alſo becauſe if we except the follies of this Prelate's youth, we find that he was always very modeſt, and had conſtantly a very great reſpect for the holy ſee, as we ſhall ſhew immediately (12). Let us obſerve further, that neither Vignier, nor Illyricus, nor du Pleſſis tells us upon what ſubject that letter was written. They give us only a fragment of it without any title, or any other mark by which we may diſcover the true Author of it. It is reaſonable to relate what was anſwered to this. " If this way of reaſoning is good, " we ſhall get a double advantage by it, and we ſhall " inſiſt with much more reaſon, and better vouchers, " upon his party's baſe impoſition in forging of new " pieces, and falſifying the antient writings. Illyricus " having met with this letter amongſt the others, " publiſhed the very words of it, which appear very " plainly not to be of his invention. If he, and the " others after him, quote it without mentioning the " title or ſubject of it, this ought not to appear new " to thoſe who have ſeen his printed Letters, amongſt " which there are a great many, concerning which it " is impoſſible to gueſs to whom they were written, " and to know particularly upon what ſubject (13)." Thus ſpeaks Rivetus. He obſerves a little lower, that " Gretſer (14) cannot believe that the 82*d Letter, which* " ſpeaks of ſuppreſſing or regulating the appeals to Rome, " came from Hildebert, though Coeffeteau aſſerts, " it is really his." The curious may conſult Father Hommey's Supplementum Patrum, which contains ſeveral pieces of Hildebert, with notes on his Letters, and an addition of the name of the perſons, to whom they were written (15).

(11) Réponſe au Myſtére d'Iniquité, pag. 757.

(12) He obſerves in the next page, that Hildebert being perſecuted by the King of England in the year 1107, went to implore Pope Paſcal's advice and aſſiſtance, and that having held a Synod at Nants under Honorius, he ſent that Pope the acts of it.

(13) Rivet, Remarques ſur la Réponſe au Myſtere d'Iniquité, Part 2. pag. 240.

(14) In Examine Myſterii Pleſſæani, pag. 376.

(15) See the Acta Erud. Lipſ. 1685, pag. 465.

[E] He was not of a diſtinguiſhed family.] " There " is near Montoire in the Province of Main a place " called Lavardin, from which a very illuſtrious fa- " mily of the Vandômois take their name . . . . . La " Croix du Main aſſerts in his Bibliotheque, in the " Article of James Lavardin, that Hildebert Biſhop " of Mans was of that family, which is not true. He " was a native of the place called Lavardin, but not " of the family of that name; he was a man of great " learning and merit, but of a mean extraction (16)." Here follow la Croix du Maine's words (17). This family of the Lavardins (18) has uſually produced learned men even from the remoteſt antiquity. For Hildebert, Biſhop of Mans and afterwards Archbiſhop of Tours above five hundred years ago, was of that family, and was ſurnamed of Lavardin, and in his time he was reckoned the moſt learned Poet and Orator, as appears alſo from his Latin Epiſtles and Poems.

(16) Suite du Menagiana, pag. 103. of the Dutch edition.

(17) Biblioth. Françoiſe, p. 190.

(18) He ſpeaks of the family of the Lavardins near Montoire in the Vandômois: which is different from that of Lavardin ſix leagues diſtant from Mans, the Lords of which family bore the ſurname of Beaumanoir, and are originally come from Brittany.

HILTEN (JOHN) a German Cordelier, pretended to ground his predictions on the Prophet Daniel's Book in the year 1485 [A]. Melanchthon, who had ſeen the original of this work, relates, that the author foretold that the Pope's power would begin to decline in the year 1516, and that afterwards it would draw nearer and nearer to its ruin, and be [A] He pretended to ground his predictions on the Prophet Daniel's book in the year 1485.] I met with this date in a paſſage quoted by Melchior Adam, in which we ſee in what Univerſity this Cordelier ſtudied. Ego olim juvenis, it is Hilten that ſpeaks (1), almæ matris Univerſitatis Erphurdenſis alumnus, ardens philoſophus: nunc ſenex exuli ſolitudini deditus ab anno Chriſti milleſimo quadringenteſimo ſeptuageſimo primo, in hunc annum milleſimum quadringenteſimum octogeſimum quintum ejuſdem Domini Jeſu Chriſti voluntate: qui & me inſtigavit ex ſuo libro cognoſcere veritatem, contra vacuos errores de futuro tempore nunc volantes. Quam me ſolum ſcire amor Dei & proximi non ſinit, ſed & aliis piis & benevolis impertiri admonet. i. e. " I who in my youth " have been educated in the Univerſity of Erford, " and who was a zealous Philoſopher, have now in " my old age been confined to a ſolitary baniſhment " from the year of our ſalvation 1471, to this year " 1485 by Chriſt's will, who alſo has prompted me " to ſtudy the truth from his book, againſt the idle " errors, which are ſpread abroad concerning future " events; nor does the love of God and of my neigh- " bour ſuffer me to keep the truth to myſelf, but " commands me to impart it to all pious and well- " diſpoſed perſons." Notwithſtanding this paſſage, Melchior Adam aſſerted a few lines before he tranſcribed it, that Hilten lived in the XIVth Century. This is a want of attention very common with writers.

(1) Apud Melchior Adam, in Vitis Theol. p. 3.

be never reſtored; and that about the year 1600 the Turks would reign in Italy and in Germany (a) [B]. Some relate (b), that he foretold that the world would ſee a very cruel man in the year 1600, and that Gog and Magog would reign over all Europe in the year 1606. After he had endeavoured with a great deal of labour to find when the world would end (c), he concluded at laſt that it would be in the year 1651 (d). Monſieur du Pleſſis-Mornai extracted from theſe predictions only what ſerved his purpoſe [C]. Hilten imagined that charity would not ſuffer him to conceal the knowledge of futurity, which God had communicated to him (e). It is ſaid he died in the year 1502 (f).

(a) Taken from a Letter of Melanchthon to Matheſius. It is the 65th of the 2d book, pag. 259. of the London edition 1642.

(b) See Freher. Theatrum, p. 97.

(c) Multus fuit in exquirendo fine mundi. Melchior Adam, in Vitis Theolog. pag. 5.

(d) Idem, ibid.

(e) See the remark [A].

(f) Freherus, in Theatro, pag. 97.

[B] He foretold that the Turks would reign in Italy and in Germany.] He ſeemed to promiſe that the Turks would, by the means of a very great reformation, be the ruin of Popery: but thoſe that had reformed themſelves were afterwards to deſtroy Mahometiſm, and then the Emperor of the Romans was to reſign his Crown to Jeſus Chriſt, never to recover it any more.

Ita digerit omnia Calchas (2).

" Thus Calchas ordered every thing.

(2) Virg. Æn. lib. 2. ver. 128.

It appeared from the event, that John Hilten was not much better acquainted with futurity, than this Soothſayer of the Greek army. Let us tranſcribe his own words (3). Plures gloriantur Romanum Papam eſſe monarcham, quia Jeſus omnia dedit Petro & ejus ſucceſſoribus. Fateor, verùm quamdiù ſunt ejus vicarii. Sed legantur revelationes S. Brigittæ: & videbitur querela Chriſti de perverſione illius vicariatûs. Quapropter Deus dedit gladium Mahometo: quo monarchiam illam à vicario ad ejus Dominum Jeſum Chriſtum compellit, vicarium & omnes Chriſtianos reformando. Qui plenè reformati exurgent: & delebunt ſectam Mahometi. Quo facto, ultimus Imperator Romanus reſignabit cum effectu Jeſu Chriſto coronam regalem, & omne jus Imperiale; non recepturus, ut Conſtantinus. i. e. " Several perſons " boaſt that the Pope of Rome is a Monarch, becauſe " Chriſt gave Peter and his ſucceſſors all power. I " grant it is true, as long as they are really Chriſt's " Vicars. But read St. Briget's Revelations, and you " will ſee how Chriſt complains of the corruption " of that Vicarſhip. For which reaſon God put a " ſword into Mahomet's hand, who will reſtore that " Monarchy from the Vicar to his Lord Jeſus Chriſt, " by reforming both the Vicar himſelf and all the " Chriſtians. Who being perfectly reformed will " riſe againſt Mahomet's ſect, and deſtroy it; after " which the laſt Roman Emperor will effectually re- " ſign to Jeſus Chriſt his royal Crown, and all his im- " perial rights, not to recover them any more, as " Conſtantine did."

(3) Apud Melchior Adam, in Vitis Theol. p. 4.

[C] Monſieur du Pleſſis extracted from Hilten's predictions only what ſerved his purpoſe.] " John Hilten, " a Monk of Henac in Thuringia, who notwithſtanding all human foreſight, was impriſoned becauſe he " had cenſured ſome monaſtical abuſes, being very " ill, called for the Keeper, and told him, I have " not ſaid much againſt the Monks, but there will " ariſe a perſon in the year 1516, who ſhall over- " throw them all, and whom they will not be a- " ble to reſiſt. And that ſame year Luther began " to preach (4)." He is miſtaken in one year; for the Lutheran Æra begins only with the year 1517. I believe alſo that he does not write well the name of the place, and that he ſhould have ſaid Eiſenac inſtead of Henac. He ought alſo to have obſerved, that this happened about the year 1500, according to Melanchthon (5).

(4) Du Pleſſis Mornai, Myſtere d'Iniquité, pag. 573. He quotes Philip Melanchthon, in Apolog. Cap. de Votis Monaſticis.

(5) See Micræli-us, Syntagma Hiſt. Eccleſ. pag. 647.

HIPPARCHIA, the Philoſopher Crates's wife, had been ſo charmed with this Cynic's diſcourſes, that ſhe would abſolutely marry him at any rate. She was courted by a great many lovers who were handſome men, and diſtinguiſhed by their rank and riches; her relations preſſed her to chooſe an huſband amongſt all theſe rivals, but nothing was capable to withdraw her affection from Crates. She declared that Crates was to her inſtead of every thing, and that if they would not marry her to him, ſhe would ſtab herſelf. Upon this declaration her friends applied themſelves to Crates, and deſired him to exert all his eloquence, and to make uſe of all his authority with this maid, in order to cure her of her paſſion. He exerted all his ſkill, but ſhe was ſo obſtinate, that he loſt his labour. At laſt, when he found that both his arguments and his advices proved ineffectual, he diſplayed his poverty before her [A], he ſhewed her his crooked back, his bag and his cloak, and told her: This is the man you will have; this is all the furniture you will meet with at his lodgings; conſider of it ſeriouſly; you cannot become my

[A] Crates diſplayed his poverty before her.] There is no Author who gave a more accurate account of this than Apuleius: he aſſerts, that Hipparchia anſwered, ſhe had ſufficiently conſidered this affair, and was perſuaded, it was impoſſible for her to find either a more handſome, or a richer huſband than Crates was, and that he might lead her whitherſoever he pleaſed. He led her to the portico, which was one of the moſt ſtately public buildings that could be ſeen at Athens, and where the greateſt number of people continually reſorted. There Crates conſummated his marriage. All the world would have ſeen it, and the bride was determined to entertain them with that ſhew, but one of Crates's friends ſpread his cloak about them, and made them thus a kind of curtains, which prevented the people from ſeeing them. That the reader may ſee I do not aſcribe any thing to my author, but what he relates, I ſhall tranſcribe his own words. Adeoque is (Crates) cupiebatur, ut virgo nobilis, ſpretis junioribus procis, ultro eum ſibi optaverit. Cumque interſcapilium Crates retexiſſet, quod erat aucto gibbere, peramque cum baculo & pallium humi poſuiſſet, eamque ſuppellectilem ſibi eſſe puellæ profiteretur, eamque formam quam viderat: proinde ſedulò conſuleret, ne poſt querelæ cauſam caperet: enimverò Hipparche conditionem accipit. Jamdudum ſibi proviſum ſatis, & ſatis conſultum reſpondit: neque ditiorem maritum, neque formoſiorem uſpiam gentium poſſe invenire. Proinde duceret quo liberet. Ducit Cynicus in porticum. Ibidem, in loco celebri, coram luce clariſſimâ accubuit: coramque virginem imminuiſſet, paratam pari conſtantiâ; ni Zeno procinctu palliaſtri, à circumſtantis coronæ obtutu magiſtrum in ſecreto defendiſſet (1). Monſieur Menage (2) aſſerts, that St. Clemens of Alexandria relates, that the nuptials of Crates and Hipparchia were celebrated in the Portico, which was ſirnamed Ποικίλη (variegated): but it is certain that Clemens of Alexandria does not ſay this; it can only be inferred from theſe words of his: The Cynogamia, ſays he (3), were celebrated in the Pœcile on Hipparchia's account. The word Cynogamia ſignified, according to the ſame Monſieur Menage (4), a feſtival, which the Cynics celebrated to the honour and memory of Crates's nuptials. He adds, that Monſieur Petit the Phyſician had made a very beautiful poem on the amours and wedding of this Cynic. This poem is intitled Cynogamia. Several readers will remember here a French verſe tranſcribed by Furetiere (5):

Voulurent chauds de reins faire noces de chiens.

" Being full of luſt they would make a Cynic wed- " ding."

(1) Apuleius, in Floridis. pag. m. 350.

(2) In Hiſtoria Mulierum Philoſopharum, ad calcem Diog. Laert. pag. 497.

(3) Ἐφ' ᾗ καὶ τὰ κυνογάμεια ἐν τῇ ποικίλῃ ἐτετέλεστο. i. e. " For " whoſe ſake " (namely Hipparchia's) the Cy- " nogamia were " celebrated in " the Poecile."

Clem. Alexand. Stromat. lib. 4. pag. 523.

(4) In Laert. lib. 6. num. 96.

(5) Under the word Reins; this verſe is Reigner's and relates to the fights of Lapithæ, a people of Theſſaly.

my wife, without leaaing ſuch a life as our ſect preſcribes us. He had hardly done ſpeaking, but ſhe declared that ſhe was infinitely pleaſed with the propoſal. She took the habit of the Order; I mean the Cynic's dreſs, and ſhe loved Crates to ſuch a degree, that ſhe rambled every where with him, went to entertainments with him [B], and did not even ſcruple to pay him conjugal duty in the open ſtreets [C]. It was one of the tenets of this Sect, that we ought not to be aſhamed of any bodily exerciſe which nature requires of us [D]. Hipparchia dining once at Lyſimachus's houſe with Theodore the

[B] She went to entertainments with him.] This and her rambling up and down with Crates, were what the other Grecian Ladies never did. They were ſhut up in the inner rooms of the houſe, none were admitted to ſee them but their relations, nor did they ever go to any entertainment, but at their relations houſes. Cornelius Nepos, who relates this, obſerves that the manners of the Romans were quite different from theſe. The women lived then at Rome, as they do now at Paris. The faſhion of Italy has been very much changed ſince that time. It has been long ago like that of antient Greece. Altri tempi, altri coſtumi. Other times, other faſhions. Let us tranſcribe Cornelius Nepos's words (6). Quem Romanorum pudet uxorem ducere in convivium? aut cujus materfamilias non primum locum tenet ædium, atque in celebritate verſatur? Quod multo fit aliter in Græcia. Nam neque in convivium adhibetur, niſi propinquorum: neque ſedet niſi in interiore parte ædium, quæ γυναικωνῖτις appellatur: quò nemo accedit niſi propinquâ cognatione conjunctus. i. e. "Who "is there amongſt the Romans, that is aſhamed to "lead his wife to an entertainment? Or is there a "mother of a family, who does not reſide in the beſt "part of the houſe, and ſee a great deal of company? "It is quite otherwiſe in Greece. The women are "not ſuffered at an entertainment, except it be with "their relations; and they keep in the inner-rooms of "the houſe, which are called the women's apartment; "and none are admitted to ſee them but their neareſt "relations."

(6) In Præfat.

[C] She did not ſcruple to pay him conjugal duty in the open ſtreets.] The reader will not wonder that the Woman-Philoſopher, Hipparchia, acted againſt the cuſtom of her ſex with regard to the two articles, which I have juſt now mentioned, ſince ſhe was capable to trample under her feet the principles of decency and modeſty with regard to this third particular. It is impoſſible to carry the contempt for cuſtom farther. This was love's grand triumph: that virtue was made a ſacrifice to it, which is the moſt natural to the fair ſex; I mean, that ſhame, that baſhfulneſs, which is a thouſand times more deeply rooted in the women's hearts than even chaſtity itſelf. And what is more ſurprizing ſtill, Hipparchia was from the very firſt time fully prepared for this piece of impudence; there was no occaſion to perſuade her to it by little and little and by degrees. Juvenal obſerves that nothing is difficult for the women, when they have a mind to gratify their love. Muſt they embark with an huſband, againſt whom they have taken a diſguſt; they cannot be perſuaded to it; the inconveniencies of the ſea are too great for them: but are they to follow a gallant on board a ſhip, they have the beſt ſtomach in the world; nothing is more agreeable than a ſailor's life.

Fortem animum præſtant rebus quas turpiter audent,
Si jubeat conjux, durum eſt conſcendere navim,
Tunc ſentina gravis, tunc ſummus vertitur aër:
Quæ mœchum ſequitur, ſtomacho valet. Illa maritum
Convomit, hæc inter nautas & prandet & errat
Per puppim, & duros gaudet tractare rudentes (7).

(7) Juv. Sat. 6. ver. 97.

"But womankind, in ills, is ever bold.
"Were ſhe to follow her own Lord to ſea,
"What doubts and ſcruples would ſhe raiſe to ſtay?
"Her ſtomach ſinks, and her head giddy grows;
"The tar and pitch are nauſeous to her noſe.
"But in love's voyage nothing can offend;
"Women are never ſea-ſick with a friend.
"Amidſt the crew, ſhe walks upon the board;
"She eats, ſhe drinks, ſhe handles every cord;
"And if ſhe ſpews, 'tis thinking of her Lord.

DRYDEN.

Hipparchia proves the truth of this obſervation: ſhe was exceſſively in love with Crates; his ſyſtem was, that we ought to give up all manner of ſhame; non aliter hæc ſacra conſtant, i. e. "theſe myſteries cannot "otherwiſe be celebrated," he probably ſaid to her; and ſhe conſented to it in order to pleaſe him. This particular is related by ſeveral authors. Sextus Empiricus (8), and Theodoret (9) aſſert it, and I have already quoted two other writers. But St. Auguſtin had a particular opinion concerning this ſubject. He imagined that the Cynics only uſed poſtures and fruitleſs endeavours. But the Latin tongue is much more proper to repreſent his opinion than our language. Illum (Diogenem) vel eos qui hoc feciſſe referuntur, potius arbitror concumbentium motus dediſſe oculis hominum neſcientium quid ſub pallio gereretur, quàm humano premente conſpectu potuiſſe illam peragi voluptatem. Ibi enim Philoſophi non erubeſcebant videri ſe velle concumbere, ubi libido ipſa erubeſceret ſurgere (10). i. e. "I ſhould be apt "to think that Diogenes and the others, who are ſaid "to have done this, did only expoſe ſome motions to "men's view, who were ignorant of what was done "under the cloak, rather than I could believe that "ſuch a pleaſure can be taſted when other perſons "are lookers-on. For theſe Philoſophers did not bluſh "to ſeem to do what luſt itſelf bluſhed to per"form. A modern author has acted the Cato againſt this father of the Church, and cenſures him very ſeverely for that reflection. "As for what he adds, that "he cannot believe that Diogenes nor his followers, "who, as it was reported, did every thing in public, "found any true and real pleaſure in it, imagining, that "they only imitated under the Cynic cloak the motions "of thoſe who embrace each other, thus deceiving the "ſpectators, though in reality they could not do any "thing to the purpoſe before witneſſes; this, I ſay, is "what I am aſhamed to relate, and which I deſire you "to read in his own words (11).... Is it poſſible that "ſo great a man ſhould ſuffer his imagination to dive "into theſe Cynic myſteries, and that St. Auguſtin's "hand did not ſcruple to lift up Diogenes's cloak, in "order to ſhew us motions under it, which ſhame "(though this Philoſopher pretended to have none) "made even him hide under his cloak (12)."

(8) Pyrrhoniarum Hypotypoſeon, lib. 1. cap. 14. pag. m. 31; & lib. 3. cap. 24. pag. 152.

(9) Sermon. 12. de Virtute Activa.

(10) Auguſt. de Civitate Dei, lib. 14. cap. 20.

(11) Here he tranſcribes the paſſage from St. Auguſtin.

(12) La Mothe le Vayer, in the Hexameron ruſtique, pag. 63, 64, 65.

[D] That we ought not to be aſhamed of any bodily exerciſe, which nature requires of us.] See what we have obſerved above in the remark [L] of the article DIOGENES. Some perſons think that the Cynics were ſo called, becauſe, after the example of the dogs, they lay with their wives in the open ſtreets. Nam quid ego de Cynicis loquar; quibus in propatulo coïre cum conjugibus mos fuit. Quid mirum ſi à canibus, quorum vitam imitantur, etiam vocabulum nomenque traxerunt (13). i. e. Why ſhould I mention the Cynics, "who are uſed to lye with their wives in the open "ſtreets. Why ſhould we wonder that ſince they imi"tate the dogs, they ſhould have their names from "them." The Cynics pretended to have reaſon on their ſide. For, ſay they, if it be lawful to know one's wife, it is lawful therefore to know her in public. Hoc illi canini Philoſophi, hoc eſt Cynici, non viderunt, proferentes contra humanam verecundiam, quid aliud quam caninam, hoc eſt immundam impudentemque ſententiam, ut ſcilicet quoniam juſtum eſt quod fit in uxore, palam non pudeat id agere, nec in vico, nec in platea qualibet conjugalem concubitum devitare (14). i. e. "The canine Philoſophers, that is to ſay, the "Cynics, did not ſee this; who aſſerted, againſt all "human modeſty, this obſcene and impudent, and "dog-like opinion, namely, that becauſe what a man "does with his wife is lawful, they muſt not be "aſhamed to do it publicly, nor to come to conjugal "embraces even in the open ſtreets." I have quoted elſewhere (15) an argument of Diogenes much like this. This is the pitiful ſophiſm, a dicto ſecundum quid, ad dictum ſimpliciter, that is to ſay, "drawing a gene"ral and abſolute inference from what is ſaid with re"gard

(13) Lactant. lib. 3. cap. 15. Divin. Inſtitut.

(14) Auguſt. De Civit. Dei, lib. 14. cap. 20.

(15) Above, in the beginning of the remark [E] of the article DIOGENES the Cynic.

the Atheiſt, propoſed him a ſubtle objection, to which he made no verbal anſwer,

" gard to ſome particular caſe or circumſtance." It is, as though a man ſhould argue thus. It is wholeſome to drink wine; it is therefore wholeſome to drink it when a perſon has a fit of the ague. Theſe Philoſophers did not know that there are ſeveral actions which are good only in ſome circumſtances; ſo that the want of theſe circumſtances is ſufficient to make an action bad which otherwiſe had been good. To lend money to a friend, that he may pay his creditors, is a very commendable action; but to lend him money that he may get drunk, or that he may game, is a very ill action. There are ſome actions which are bad in their own nature; no circumſtances in the world can ever render them good and lawful; but there are other actions which are ſometimes good and ſometimes bad, according to the times, places, and other circumſtances, in which they are done. I confeſs that this is not ſufficient to ſilence the Cynics; for they might urge their argument after this manner: when an action is good and lawful in its own nature; we ought not to be aſhamed to commit it: now the conjugal duty is an action good and lawful in its own nature, we ought not therefore to be aſhamed to perform it; it may therefore be lawfully performed in public: if any thing could make this public action unlawful, it would be only the want of ſhame and modeſty in ſuch circumſtances, in which men ought to be baſhful and modeſt. The whole difficulty would then be reduced to this ſingle queſtion. Muſt we be aſhamed to perform the conjugal duty in the ſight of the public? This is a fine queſtion indeed, will ſome ſay, and who is there that doubts of it? I, would Diogenes anſwer, I doubt of it; and ſhew me that I am in the wrong. We might reply to him, that ſhame, with regard to thoſe actions, is a natural ſenſe, and therefore that the want of ſhame on thoſe occaſions is againſt nature. But, would Diogenes reply, if ſhame were a natural ſenſe, the brutes, who follow the inſtinct of nature ſo exactly, would alſo chooſe ſecrecy and darkneſs, when they want to propagate their ſpecies. Now this is abſolutely falſe; all men, at leaſt, would in ſuch a caſe look for the darkeſt and moſt hidden receſſes, which again is falſe; for there are ſome nations in the Indies, who perform the act of generation in the ſight of all them that happen to go by. This is what the famous Pyrrhonian Empiricus obſerves (16), in order to ſhew, that the ordinary practice is not grounded on an immutable and eternal law of nature, but only upon cuſtom, and that is a mere effect of education. He might have alledged the cuſtom of the MOSYNIANS of whom I ſhall give an article hereafter. A modern author has obſerved that certain nations uſed to make love in the very temples, and that they ſaid, that if the Gods were diſpleaſed with this action, they would not ſuffer it in the other animals (17). He adds that there is a ſect amongſt the Mahometans, which ſtill practiſes this, and that we found the inhabitants of the new world in this ſtate of innocency. One might reply to Diogenes, that it is ſufficient that the civilized nations are ſubject to ſhame, and that we ought not to mind the conduct of the barbarous nations; but he would reply in his turn, that the nations we ſtyle barbarous and wild, have much leſs ſwerved from the rules of nature, than thoſe nations, who by their niceties and ſubtleties have ſo much multiplied the laws of decency and civility; and that after all, there being no preſcription againſt the law of nature, every one has a right to claim it at any time and in any place whatſoever, without any regard to the arbitrary yoke of the cuſtoms and opinions of his countrymen.

(16) Τὸ δημοσίᾳ γυναικὶ μίγνυσθαι καίτοι παρ' ἡμῖν αἰσχρὸν εἶναι δοκοῦν, παρά τισι τῶν Ἰνδῶν οὐκ αἰσχρὸν εἶναι νομίζεται· μίγνυνται οὖν ἀδιαφόρως δημοσίᾳ καθάπερ καὶ περὶ τοῦ φιλοσόφου Κράτητος ἀνηκόαμεν. Sext. Empiricus, Pyrrhon. Hypot. lib. 3. cap. 24. pag. 152.

(17) La Mothe le Vayer, Dialog. d'Oraſius Tubero, pag. m. 165. He quotes Herodotus, lib. 2.

A REFLECTION upon the weakneſs of human reaſon.

Let this be obſerved in order to ſhew how much human reaſon is capable to miſlead us. It has been given us with a deſign to direct us to the right way, but it is an uncertain, changeable and flexible inſtrument, which may be turned on every ſide like a weather-cock. See what uſe the Cynics made of it, in order to vindicate their abominable impudence. I may add for the honour and glory of the true religion, that ſhe alone furniſhes us with arms that are proof againſt all the ſophiſms and fallacious reaſonings of theſe men; for though we could not meet in the Holy Scripture with a direct commandment concerning the ſecrecy with which the pleaſures of the marriage-bed ought to be enjoyed, it is ſufficient to obſerve in the firſt place, that the nature of the Goſpel obliges us to avoid all that is capable to weaken the impreſſions of modeſty and ſhame: ſecondly, that there are clear and poſitive paſſages, in which we are forbidden to to do any thing inconſiſtent with decency, or which may give offence to our neighbours. I do not know whether any of thoſe caſuiſts, who have ſo much miſpent their leiſure hours in examining ſuch caſes of conſcience, as are in a manner only metaphyſical, ever thought of examining to what kind of crimes the impudence of a Crates and of a Diogenes ought to be referred. Theſe Philoſophers did not believe there was any divine law upon this ſubject, nor that men were obliged to conform to the cuſtoms of their country; they imagined that by not conforming to them, all the blame they could draw upon themſelves was that of ruſticity, and want of complaiſance for a received cuſtom. To be unpolite and ruſtical, and an ill obſerver of the cuſtoms and uſages of one's country, is not a crime, or an evil action morally ſpeaking. What could one therefore object againſt the Cynics, ſuppoſing they were not condemned by the revealed truth? I never read any thing whatſoever upon this ſubject, nor do I know that any perſon ever aſſerted, that a Cynic action would be criminal at preſent only for theſe reaſons; 1. becauſe of the offence given to one's neighbours: 2. becauſe it is ſhewing a contempt for the cuſtoms of one's country: 3. becauſe of the neglect in preſerving the limits of chaſtity. I ſuppoſe here a man, who is perſuaded that the action conſidered in itſelf has not been expreſly forbidden in the Scripture, and that it is not againſt the law of nature. If it were againſt it, thoſe ſentences, by which the Judges appoint a congreſs, would be ſo many crimes, for which the Judges themſelves would be anſwerable.

There are, no doubt, ſome caſuiſts, who would think that ſelf-pollution, which Diogenes committed in a full market (18), are greater crimes, than Crates's and Hipparchia's meeting. It is a ſtrange and moſt ſcandalous thing, to ſee Chryſippus, that celebrated and ſevere Stoic, commend Diogenes's action. Ἐπαινεῖ τὸν Διογένην τὸ αἰδοῖον ἀποτριβόμενον ἐν φανερῷ, καὶ λέγοντα πρὸς τὰς παρόντας, εἴθε καὶ τὸν λιμὸν οὕτως ἀποτρίψασθαι τῆς γαστρὸς ἠδυνάμην. Diogenem laudat, qui in publico maſturbaſſet, dixiſſetque adſtantibus, utinam liceret ſic etiam famem attrito ventre pellere (19). This Cynic could not have cleared himſelf by his ſophiſm. It is lawful to perform the conjugal duty; it is therefore lawful to perform it in the ſtreet; for his action is bad both in private and in public. Sextus Empiricus confeſſes, that it was looked upon as abominable, though Zeno the founder of the Stoic ſect had approved it, and ſeveral others had practiſed it as a very good action. Τότε αἰσχρεργεῖν ἐπόρατον ὃν παρ' ἡμῖν, ὁ Ζήνων ἐκ ἀποδοκιμάζει καὶ ἄλλοι δὲ ὡς ἀγαθῷ τινὶ τούτῳ χρῆσθαι τῷ καλῷ συνδανόμεθα. Quum præterea deteſtabile ſit apud nos αἰσχρεργεῖν, Zeno approbat, & alios quoſdam ut bono quodam hoc uſos malo accepimus (20). Diogenes had recourſe to another ſophiſm: he pretended that what ſome fiſhes do is a leſſon of nature to us (21); but this ſophiſm is not better than that, which might be borrowed from the practice of the Lydians. To conclude, though the Cynics endeavoured to find out arguments to palliate their abominable impudence, yet they dared to continue in that practice. The general indignation which it drew upon them, was probably a ſtronger curb on them than the notions of decency. St. Auguſtin obſerves that natural modeſty got the aſcendant at laſt even in theſe men. Vicit tamen pudor naturalis opinionem hujus erroris, nam etſi perhibent, hoc aliquando gloriabundum feciſſe Diogenem, ita putantem ſectam ſuam nobiliorem futuram, ſi in hominum memoriam inſignior ejus impudentia figeretur, poſtea tamen à Cynicis fieri ceſſatum eſt; pluſque valuit pudor, ut erubeſcerent homines hominibus, quàm error, ut homines canibus eſſe ſimiles affectarent (22). i. e. " Yet natural modeſty got at laſt the " advantage over this erroneous opinion; for though " it be reported that Diogenes did it ſometimes with " boaſting, imagining that his ſect would thus gain a " greater reputation, if his notorious impudence was " deeply

(18) See his article remark [L].

(19) Plutarch. de Stoicor. Repugnant. pag. 1044.

(20) Sext. Emp. Pyrrhon. Hypot. lib. 3. cap. 24. pag. 153.

(21) See his article quotation (73).

(22) De Civit. Dei, lib. 14. cap. 20.

anſwer [E], but only made uſe of his hands; and whatever he could ſay or do afterwards, he found her ſo bold and reſolute, that nothing could daunt her (a). She wrote ſome books which have not been tranſmitted down to us [F]. Moreri has committed ſome errors in this article [G], and Lorenzo Craſſo

(a) Taken from Diogenes Laertius, in Hipparchia, lib. 6. num. 96, & ſeq.

" deeply rooted in the memory of men; yet the Cynics " have ſince left it off; and the ſhame which made " men bluſh before men had a greater influence over " them than that error, by which they would make men " act like dogs." But as the moſt general rules are always liable to ſome exceptions, we meet in Lucian with the Cynic Peregrinus, who begins again to imitate Diogenes's conduct. Ἐν πολλῷ δὲ τῶν περιεστώτων δήμῳ ἀναφλῶν τὸ αἰδεῖον, καὶ τὸ ἀδιάφορον δὴ τοῦτο καλούμενον ἐπιδεικνύμενος. Multa autem in corona populi pudenda contrectabat, & hæc indifferentia vocans oſtentabat (23).

(23) Lucian. de Morte Peregr. pag. m. 767. tom. 1.

Thoſe who may think it ſtrange that I ſhould relate ſuch horrid obſcenities as theſe are, want to be told, that they do not ſufficiently conſider either the privileges or the duty of an Hiſtorian. Any man, who at this time writes the Hiſtory either of an ancient Philoſopher, or of ſome other perſon who gained ſome reputation in former ages, has a right to relate all that the books acquaint him with, whether they be commendable actions, or ſuch as deſerve the reader's horror and execration; if he collects only what is praiſeworthy, he acquits himſelf very ill of the duties, which the nature of his work requires of him. One has more liberty in writing the Life of a modern perſon; for if he has committed ſome very obſcene actions, which the public is not acquainted with, they may be omitted, if it be found neceſſary to obviate ſome inconveniences, which might ariſe from the publication of ſuch things. But as to a fact related by an hundred authors, one is not free to uſe ſuch a diſcretion; and if an Hiſtorian ſhould chooſe to omit ſome particulars, he yields to a very inſignificant and uſeleſs ſcruple; for the readers will eaſily find by other means, what is thus concealed from them. All the world is ſo well acquainted with Diogenes the Cynic's impudence, that there are even ſome ſayings ſpread abroad concerning him, which are not related by any ancient writer whatſoever. Du Mouſtier put me in mind of a book of the Orleans, intituled The Human Plant to the Queen; which is a ridiculous title: this made me remember Diogenes's ſaying: Planto hominem. I plant a man (24). Theſe are Cardinal Du Perron's words. There are numberleſs perſons, who relate the ſame ſtory in their private converſations: it is to be met with in ſeveral books, in which it is aſſerted, that Diogenes embracing a woman in the public ſtreets, was aſked what he was doing? and that he anſwered, φυτεύω ἄνθρωπον: I plant a man. None of the ancients, as far as I know, have related this ſtory, and Monſieur Du Rondel, whom I have conſulted upon it, anſwered me, that he never met with it but in modern authors. Since therefore ſuch an ill-grounded ſtory has been ſpread abroad concerning this ancient Philoſopher's impudence, it is impoſſible but the world muſt know what is really related by the authors whoſe words I quote. To what purpoſe ſhould I then conceal or ſuppreſs thoſe particulars? But then, you will ſay, I ought to have choſen ſuch expreſſions, as might cover thoſe obſcenities with a thick veil. I reply, that this would have been a proper method to leſſen the horror with which they ought to ſtrike us; for thoſe nice and dark expreſſions, which are uſed now about ſmutty ſubjects, do not diſguſt the reader ſo much, as a more natural and ſtronger ſtyle would do, which would ſo much the more fill the reader with indignation, as the author does not loſe his time in inventing indirect expreſſions, which after all, and to ſpeak the truth, are nothing but mere varniſh. I add, that it is more uſeful and more important than people are apt think, thus to repreſent with ingenuity thoſe wickedneſſes and abominations, which the Heathen Philoſophers approved. This is proper to humble and mortify our reaſon, to convince us of the infinite depravation of man's heart, and to teach us a truth, which ſhould never be out of our mind, namely that men wanted a light from heaven, a revelation, to ſupply the defects of the Philoſophical light; for you ſee that the Stoics (25), who applied themſelves more than any other Philoſophers, to moral Philoſophy and Ethics, approved Diogenes's impudent obſcenities: ſo that we may apply to them particularly St. Paul's general aſſertion againſt the Heathens, profeſſing themſelves to be wiſe, they become fools (26).

(24) Perroniana, under the word Orleans, pag. m. 225.

(25) Above, quotations (19), (20).

(26) Epiſtle to the Romans, ch. 1. ver. 22.

[E] Hipparchia . . . . . propoſed an objection . . . . . to which Theodorus the Atheiſt made no verbal anſwer.] It was a Sophiſm which might be eaſily ſolved, and urged againſt her. If I, ſaid ſhe to him, ſhould commit the ſame action, which you had lawfully committed, I coula not be charged with committing an unlawful action. Now if you ſhould beat yourſelf, you would act lawfully; if therefore I ſhould beat you, I could not be charged with committing an unlawful action. Theodorus did not loſe his time in anſwering her like a Logician, but fell upon her and untied her gown. Conſidering the dreſs, and manner of ſpeaking of this time, we ſhould ſay, that he took up her petticoats. Thus Monſieur Menage explains theſe words of Diogenes Laertius; ἀνέσυρε δ' αὐτῆς ἱμάτιον. This is a very merry and galant way of anſwering a woman. Hipparchia was not put out of countenance: and when Theodorus had repeated to her ſome verſes from a Tragedy, which gave the Character of a woman, who left her ſpinning-wheel and her diſtaff, ſhe replied, I know myſelf under that character, I am that woman, but do you think that I made a bad choice, in chooſing to ſpend my time in philoſophizing rather than in ſpinning? Let us ſee now what Theodorus might have anſwered, if he would have taken that trouble. To make a direct anſwer, he might have obſerved, that the action of Theodorus's beating himſelf, and the action of Hipparchia's beating Theodorus, were two different actions, and not actions of the ſame kind: ſo that there were four terms, or propoſitions in Hipparchia's ſyllogiſm. In order that two actions may be like each other, there muſt be the ſame relation between the agent and the patient in the one, as there is in the other. Now there was not ſuch a relation in the actions mentioned in Hipparchia's ſuppoſition. If Theodorus had had a mind to turn the argument againſt Hipparchia, and to puzzle her, he might have argued thus: If I ſhould commit the ſame action, which your huſband may do lawfully, I could not be charged with committing an unlawful action. Now your huſband acts lawfully when he kiſſes you, &c. Therefore, if I ſhould kiſs you, &c. I could not be charged with committing an unlawful action. One might have ſeen, whether Hipparchia, who was very impudent, would have dared to anſwer before witneſſes, with a concedo totum: I grant the whole Argument.

(27) Notis ad Laert. lib. 6. num. 97. pag. 266.

[F] She wrote ſome Books which have not been tranſmitted down to us.] Suidas aſſerts, that ſhe wrote Hypotheſes Philoſophicas: Epicheremata quædam, & quæſtiones ad Theodorum cognomento Atheum. i. e. " Philoſophical Hypotheſes or Suppoſitions: ſome Reaſonings, and Queſtions propoſed to Theodorus ſurnamed the Atheiſt." Monſieur Menage's conjecture is very probable; namely, that we muſt not read in Diogenes Laertius (28), Φέρεται δὲ τοῦ Κράτητος βιβλίον ἐπιστολαί. i. e. " There is a Book of epiſtles to " Crates extant;" but φέρεται δὲ πρὸς τὸν Κράτητα βιβλίον ἐπιστολαί. i. e. There is a Book of epiſtles to Cra- " tes extant." According to this conjecture, we may aſſert, that Hipparchia publiſhed Letters, which ſhe wrote to her huſband, and in which ſhe philoſophized nobly, and in a ſtile like that of Plato. We muſt ſay alſo that ſhe wrote ſome Tragedies, in which ſhe employed the lofty ſtile of Philoſophy. It would be very ſtrange that Diogenes Laertius, who wrote Crates's life, ſhould have mentioned this Philoſopher's writings in Hipparchia's Life. It is in order to clear him of this blemiſh and irregularity, that Monſieur Menage made the conjecture we have mentioned above.

(28) In Hipparchia, lib. 6. num. 98.

[G] Moreri has committed ſome errors in this Article.] He ought not to have ſaid, that Hipparchia's love for the ſciences made her prefer Crates before all the other perſons that courted her with a deſign to marry her. She loved Crates's perſon, and it was for his ſake that ſhe began to philoſophize. It is true that ſhe had been charmed with his beautiful and learned diſcourſes; but this is not a ſufficient ground for aſſerting that the reaſon why ſhe choſe this Philoſopher

Craſſo alſo [H]. I forgot to obſerve, that Hipparchia, and her brother Metrocles, who was a diſciple of Crates (b), were born at Maronea (c). They flouriſhed in the time of Alexander. From Hipparchia, and Crates's marriage, came a ſon named Paſicles (d).

(b) Diog. Laert. in Hipparchia, lib. 6. num. 94, and 96.

(c) A city in Thrace, which has alſo been called Hipparchia. Menag. Not. ad Diog. Laert. lib. 6. num. 96.

(d) Diog. Laert. in Cratete, lib. 6. num. 88.

rather than any other man was, that ſhe loved the ſciences. There have been maidens and women, who fell in love with ſome Miniſters by hearing them preach; and who choſe to marry them rather than any other men, though they might have made a more advantageous match. The learning and eloquence of theſe Miniſters was indeed the cauſe of thoſe Ladies falling in love with them, but it was not the love for the ſciences or for books that made them marry thoſe Gentlemen. If Moreri had mentioned the correction (29) of the Paſſage in Diogenes Laertius, he might have obſerved, that according to this Hiſtorian, Hipparchia's ſtile was very much like Plato's, and that ſhe wrote Tragedies: but as he did not mention that correction, he could not reaſonably aſſert the reſt.

(29) It is that of Mr. Menage, which I have mentioned in the foregoing remark.

[H] . . . . . And Lorenzo Craſſo alſo.] He quotes only Diogenes Laertius; he is therefore in the wrong to obſerve, 1. That Hipparchia ſtudied firſt under her brother Metrocles. 2. That ſhe was courted by ſeveral lovers on account of her youth, her riches, and her beauty. Quantunque come giovane ricca, e bella deſiderata veniſſe da molti, con tutto ciò ricuſar volle ogni altro per Crate vecchio, povero, et mal d'apparenza (30). i. e. "Though ſhe being a rich and beauti- "ful young lady was courted by a great many men, "yet ſhe refuſed them all, and choſe Crates, an old, "poor, and ill-looking Man. 3. That ſhe dreſſed in men's clothes in order to follow Crates every where. 4. That having diſputed with Theodorus, who denied a Providence, ſhe convinced him by very ſtrong proofs and unqueſtionable arguments. Riuſci coſì dotta che in diſputa convinſe con ſodiſſime prove e incontraſtabili ragioni, e con ſomma ſua gloria Theodoro che niegava la divina providenza (31). Read the text of this Article, and you will find that Lorenzo Craſſo has miſtaken the ſenſe of Laertius's words. The riches, beauty, and nobility which Laertius mentions, belong only to Hipparchia's lovers. She did not dreſs in men's clothes in order to follow Crates, but becauſe he declared to her, that he would not marry a woman but who would ſubmit to the rules of the Cynic Sect. Laſtly, you have ſeen that her diſpute with Theodorus was not about Providence, nor about any point of religion. One cannot imagine how much Authors miſlead their Readers.

(30) Lor. Craſſo, Iſtoria di Poeti Greci, pag. 296.

(31) Idem, ibid.

HIPPARCHUS a great Aſtronomer born at Nice in Bithynia (a), flouriſhed between the 154th and the 163d Olympiads [A]. There is one of his works ſtill extant, it is his Commentary on Aratus's Phænomena [B]. Monſieur Rohault was very much miſtaken [C], when he aſſerted that this Aſtronomer was not acquainted with the particular motion of the fixed ſtars from Weſt to Eaſt; by which motion their Longitude changes. Pliny mentions Hipparchus pretty often, and with great commendations. He places

(a) Suidas, pag. 1264.

[A] He flouriſhed between the 154*th and the* 163*d Olympiads.*] The proof of this is as ſtrong as can be deſired, for it is taken from the aſtronomical obſervations he made in that ſpace of time. Ptolemy has given us ſome of them (1). Voſſius was in the right to place Hipparchus under the reign of Ptolemy Philometor, and under that of Ptolemy Euergetes, and to cenſure Suidas who only obſerves, that this Aſtronomer lived in the time of the Roman Conſuls; he ſhould have mentioned a more particular time; that of the third Punic War, and that of the War againſt the Numantines. Thus far Voſſius is in the right: but when he aſſerts that he agrees with Suidas about the time when Hipparchus lived (2), he forgets himſelf, and aſſerts a falſity; for Suidas does not agree better with Voſſius upon this point, than with an Author, who would have placed Hipparchus at the beginning of the fourth century of Rome, or at the end of the fifth. Calviſius (3) was in the wrong to aſſert, that Suidas places Hipparchus 130 years after the firſt Ptolemies. A French Author (4) is not leſs evidently miſtaken, who aſſerts that Hipparchus lived in Plato's time. Moreri, who had no guide in this Article but Voſſius, ought to have found in that Author a powerful preſervative againſt all the blunders which he has committed. He places Hipparchus in the years of Rome 570 and 80 under the reigns of Ptolemy and Philometor Euergetes Kings of Egypt. Ought he not to have made the Olympiads mentioned by Voſſius (5) agree with the time that paſſed from the year 589 ſince the building of Rome, to the year 625? Further, when one mentions Ptolemy without any addition to his name, it is a ſign that one means the firſt King of that name who reigned in Egypt; and there are few accurate writers, who do not diſtinguiſh him more particularly. It is therefore a very groſs blunder, to make uſe of the word Ptolemy abſolutely and without any addition, when one does not intend to ſpeak of the Prince, who had Egypt for his ſhare after Alexander's death. Now it is plain that Moreri does not mean that Prince, or if he does, he is greatly miſtaken; for a man, who lived in the Year 570 and 80 of Rome, could not flouriſh under the firſt Ptolemy, who died in the year 468 ſince the building of Rome. Moreri has been miſtaken in another particular; he ſuppoſes that there was a King of Egypt, whoſe name was Philometer Euergrees.

(1) Eight; one in the 2d book, and the ſeven others in the 3d. See Voſſius, de Scient. Mathem. pag. 159.

(2) Convenit de ætate Suidas. Voſſius, ibid.

(3) Ad annum Mundi 3665.

(4) Coutel, du Calcul Eccleſiaſtique, pag. 189.

(5) The 154th and 163d.

[B] There is . . . . . extant . . . . . his Commentary on Aratus's Phænomena.] It is properly a criticiſm on Aratus; for Hipparchus charges him with having plundered Eudoxus's Books, and tranſcribed even thoſe obſervations in which Eudoxus was miſtaken. He makes the ſame remarks againſt Aratus the Grammarian, who wrote a Commentary on Aratus. Peter Victorius is the firſt that publiſhed this Commentary of Hipparchus. Father Petavius gave afterwards a more correct edition of it, to which he added a Latin Tranſlation which he made himſelf (6). Hipparchus's other works were, de Conſtitutione Stellarum inerrantium, & ſtatione immota, deque menſtruo Lunæ motu ſecundum latitudinem, &c. (7). i. e. "Of the order "and conſtant ſituation of the fixed Stars, as alſo of "the Moon's monthly motion in longitude, &c."

(6) Voſſius, de Scient. Mathem. pag. 160.

(7) Idem, pag. 159. ex Suida.

[C] Monſieur Rohault was very much miſtaken.] Such great Mathematicians as he was, have not, generally ſpeaking, a very exact knowledge of facts; and they often commit unawares hiſtorical blunders (8). However it be, let us ſee what this learned Carteſian tells us, who by his very ſpelling of Hipparchus ſhewed that he did not underſtand Greek.

(8) Compare this with what is obſerved in the remark [R] of the article of the 3d Duke of GUISE.

Hyparchus, ſays he (9), ſpent the greateſt part of his life, without obſerving any thing elſe concerning the fixed Stars, but that they move from Eaſt to Weſt, in circles, which ſeemed to him to be exactly parallel to the Equator, from which he inferred, that they are all fixed in the ſolid ſubſtance of the ſame heaven (which is called the Firmament,) and which he placed beyond all the Planets; and as he was of opinion, that it was not neceſſary this Heaven ſhould borrow its motion, which is ſimple, from any other Heaven above it, he aſſerted, that this was the laſt of all the Heavens; that it was this which moved all the others the ſame way as it moved itſelf; and that it was thus the Primum Mobile, or Firſt Mover. Hyparchus being therefore of opinion, that the fixed Stars did not change their place in the Heavens, he imagined that they might ſerve to determine the courſe of the Planets; juſt as one might make uſe of ſeveral rocks in the ſea, to mark the courſe of the ſhips, which leave no tracks behind them as they ſail along. With this view he exerted his ſkill in meaſuring the diſtance there is between every fixed Star, and the Ecliptick in which the Sun moves; and this he calls the latitude of a Star. He endeavoured afterwards to determine the number of degrees and minutes on the Ecliptick, which are reckoned from Weſt to Eaſt, from the firſt point of Aries to the Point overagainſt which each fixed Star

(9) Rohault, Traité de Phyſique, tom. 2. Part 2. chap. 8. pag. m. 35.

WHAT is meant by the Longitude and Latitude of the Stars.

places him amongſt thoſe men of a ſublime genius, who by foretelling the Eclipſes taught mankind that they ought not to be frightened at theſe Phænomena [D], and that even the Gods

Star correſponds, which is called its longitude; but death having interrupted his deſign, it could not be carried on but by his ſucceſſors. Ptolemy, who came about two hundred years after Hyparchus, deſigned to give an account of the motion of the Planets, and being curious to examine, whether his predeceſſor had exactly marked the longitude and latitude of the fixed Stars, he found that their latitude was indeed ſuch as he had marked it, but that their latitude was increaſed two degrees. He inferred from thence, that the fixed Stars, beſides their motion from Eaſt to Weſt in twenty four hours, had alſo another motion from Weſt to Eaſt in circles parallel to the Ecliptick; by which motions they were to finiſh a whole revolution in the ſpace of thirty ſix thouſand years, ſince they advanced two degrees in two hundred years. And as the Firmament could have but one motion proper to it, Ptolemy aſcribed to it the motion from Weſt to Eaſt in thirty ſix thouſand years, and aſſerted that its diurnal motion from Eaſt to Weſt was borrowed from another Heaven, which muſt be beyond it. And thus men began to believe that the Primum Mobile, or Firſt Mover, is a Heaven, which contains no Stars, and ſurrounds the Firmament.

(10) Regis, Syſteme de Philoſophie, tom. 3. pag. 42, 43. of the Lyons editions 1691, in 12mo.

Monſieur Regis (10), who is another very learned Carteſian, aſſerts the ſame thing in fewer words. But Monſieur Gadroys, an excellent Carteſian, very well knew, that the diſcovery of the particular motion of the fixed ſtars from weſt to eaſt, muſt be aſcribed to Hipparchus (11). He had probably conſidered with more attention than the others, a particular related by Gaſſendi, which is as follows. The Chaldeans, the Egyptians, and the Greeks, imagined that all the fixed ſtars were placed in the concavity of the laſt Heaven, and conſequently of the firſt mover, and that therefore they moved only from eaſt to weſt, on the poles of the equator. But at laſt Hipparchus found, 130 years before Chriſt, that this hypotheſis could not be true: for having conſidered, that according to Timocharis's obſervation, made two hundred years before, there were eight degrees weſt between the Spica Virginis, and the point of the autumnal equinox, and that he could find but ſix degrees between that ſtar, and that point of the firmament, he inferred from thence, that the fixed ſtars muſt have a proper motion from weſt to eaſt on the poles of the ecliptic; and that if Timocharis's obſervation were exact, the progreſs of the fixed ſtars by this particular motion was one degree every hundred years. He wrote two treatiſes upon this new doctrine, the one intitled, Of the Motion of the Equinoxes and Solſtices; and the other Of the length of the year. Quare & intellexit, ſi Timocharis quidem rite obſervaſſet, ac Stellæ moveri ſic perſeverarent, peragi hoc motu unum gradum intra annos proxime centum. Intellexit præterea debere hunc motum fieri ſecundum Zodiacum, ſeu ſuper Eclipticæ Polis; idque prodidit tam in Tractatu, quem inſcripſit de tranſgreſſu Æquinoctialium, Solſtitialiumque punctorum, quam in eo, quem conſcripſit, de Anni magnitudine, ut apud Ptolemæum habetur (12), Obſerve that Gaſſendi does not exactly ſet down the time when Timocharis lived, for this Aſtronomer flouriſhed about the CXXIſt Olympiad, and only 130 years before Hipparchus made the firſt obſervations, which Ptolemy mentions. But this error of Gaſſendi is much more pardonable than that of Monſieur Gadroys (13).

(11) Gadroys, Syſtéme du Monde, chap. 2. pag. 27.

(12) Gaſſendus, Phyſicæ, Sect. 2. lib. 3. pag. m. 596. primi Volum. Operum, ex Ptolemæo 7. Almag. 2, & 3.

(13) He ſuppoſes but 200 years between Timocharis and Ptolemy the Aſtronomer. Syſt. pag. 30. whereas there were above 400 years between them. Rohault, who puts but two centuries between Hipparchus and Ptolemy, tom. 2. Part 2. pag. 36. of his Phyſique, ought at leaſt to have imitated Gaſſendi, who puts 260 years between theſe two Aſtronomers.

[D] Pliny . . . . places him amongſt thoſe . . . . who by foretelling Eclipſes taught mankind, that they ought not to be frightened at theſe Phænomena.] Thales was the firſt amongſt the Greeks, who could diſcover when there was to be an eclipſe. Sulpitius Gallus amongſt the Romans began to ſucceed in this kind of predictions, and gave an eſſay of his ſkill that way very ſeaſonably the day before the battle was fought, in which Perſius was vanquiſhed (14). After theſe two Hipparchus improved that ſcience very much; for he made Ephemerides, or Catalogues of Eclipſes for ſix hundred years. Poſt eos utriuſque ſideris curſum in ſexcentos annos præcinuit Hipparchus, menſes gentium, dieſque & horas, ac ſitus locorum & viſus populorum complexus, ævo teſte haud alio modo quam conciliorum naturæ particeps (15). i. e. " After them came Hipparchus, who foretold the courſe of the ſun and moon " for ſix hundred years, calculated according to the dif- " ferent manner of reckoning the months, days, and " hours uſed by ſeveral nations, and for the different " ſituations of places and nations: the ſucceeding " ages witneſs, that he ſeems to have been admitted " in Nature's privy-council." Thus Pliny calls him upon this account Nature's Confident. The elogiums, which he on this occaſion beſtows upon the Aſtronomers, are, in my opinion, very well grounded. Viri ingentes ſupraque mortalium naturam, tantorum numinum lege deprehenſa, & miſera hominum mente abſoluta in defectibus ſtellarum ſcelera, aut mortem aliquam ſiderum pavente . . . . Macti ingenio eſte cœli interpretes, rerumque naturæ capaces, argumenti repertores, quo Deos homineſque viciſtis. Quis enim hæc cernens, & ſtatos ſiderum (quoniam ita placuit appellare) labores, non ſuæ neceſſitati mortalis genitus ignoſcat (16)? i. e. " Moſt (16) Idem, ibid. " eminent men, who are raiſed above the condition of " mortals; you have diſcovered the laws, by which " the great Gods rule this univerſe; and thus you " have delivered the wretched minds of men from " the terror under which they laboured at the ſight " of an eclipſe, dreading either ſome great misfor- " tune, or the death (if I may ſay ſo) of the ſun " or moon . . . . Let the reputation of your great ge- " nius be ſpread more and more, O interpreters of " Heaven, who underſtand the nature of things, and " found means to explain it; by which you excell " the Gods and men. Who, though born a " mortal, would not excuſe fate, when he con- " ſiders theſe Phænomena, and reflects upon the " regular returns of the labours (ſince men were " pleaſed to call the eclipſes thus) of the ſun and " moon."

This elogium in proſe is full as good as the following one in verſe.

Felices animos, quibus hæc cognoſcere primis,
Inque domos ſuperas ſcandere cura fuit!
Credibile eſt illos pariter vitiiſque luciſque
Altiùs humanis exſeruiſſe caput.
Non Venus & vinum ſublimia pectora fregit;
Officiumve fori, militiæve labor.
Nec levis ambitio, perfuſaque gloria fuco;
Magnarumve fames ſollicitavit opum.
Admovêre oculis diſtantia ſidera noſtris;
Ætheraque ingenio ſuppoſuêre ſuo.
Sic petitur cœlum: non ut ferat Oſſan Olympus;
Summaque Peliacus ſidera tangat apex (17).

(17) Ovid. Faſt. lib. 1. ver. 297, & ſeq.

" Happy minds, who firſt endeavoured to know this, " and who firſt attempted to aſcend into Heaven, if I " may ſay ſo. It is probable that they raiſed them- " ſelves higher than other men, above all human vices " and pleaſures: neither love nor wine ſubdued their " lofty ſouls; nor was their time taken up in civil or " military employments; vain ambition did not fill " their hearts, nor were they fond of empty glory; " nor was their breaſt poſſeſſed with an eager deſire " after riches. They brought the diſtant ſtars nearer " to our view, and ſubjected the very ſky to their " inquiries. This is the way, that leads to Heaven; " nor is it neceſſary to heap up mountains upon moun- " tains to reach the ſky."

Hipparchus had ſo carefully examined what relates to eclipſes, that he had marked the proportion there is between the ſeveral intervals of time, at which they happen (18). He had obſerved that the eclipſes of the moon might return after five months, and thoſe of the ſun after ſeven months, and that the ſun may be eclipſed twice within the ſpace of thirty days, with regard to different parts of the earth. Intra ducentos annos Hipparchi ſagacitate compertum eſt, & lunæ defectum aliquando quinto menſe à priore fieri, ſolis vero ſeptimo: eundem bis in triginta diebus ſupra terras occultari, ſed ab aliis atque aliis hoc cerni. Some have miſunderſtood theſe words of Pliny; there is a very learned man, who imagined that by the words intra ducentos annos we muſt underſtand, that two centuries muſt be paſt, before one eclipſe of the moon can ſucceed another at five month's diſtance (19); whereas

(18) Plin. lib. 2. cap. 13.

(19) Neque vero ſenſus eſt, ut exiſtimavit vir alioqui extra ingenii aleam poſitus, expectandos eſſe annos ducentos ut recurrat Lunæ defectus quinto menſe, cum vel intra annos decem animadverſum fuerit noſtra ætate geminam ita recurrere. Harduinus, in Plinium, lib. 2. cap. 13. pag. 159, 160.

Gods were bound by laws [E]. He admires him for making a review of all the ſtars, for reckoning them, and for acquainting us with the ſituation and bigneſs of every one of them; by which his deſcendants will be enabled to diſcover, not only whether they are born and die, but alſo whether they change their place, and whether they increaſe or decreaſe. We learn from this paſſage of Pliny, that Hipparchus aſcribed a celeſtial origin to our ſouls [F]. Strabo (b) charges this Aſtronomer with loving too much to find fault, and to have pretty often criticiſed in ſuch a manner, as ſavoured more of cavil, than of an accurate genius. Pliny judges more favourably of him (c).

(b) Lib. 1, 2. paſſim.

(c) Hipparchus in coarguendo eo (Eratoſthene) & in reliqua omni diligentia mirus. Plin. lib. 2. cap. 108.

Pliny's meaning is, that Hipparchus had diſcovered that proportion two hundred years ago. Pliny's Chronology is exact; there were two hundred years between him, and that famous Aſtronomer.

[E] . . . . and that even the Gods were bound by laws.] There is no inconvenience in aſſerting that God loves and approves what is regular and good, by a neceſſary and indiſpenſible law; for on the contrary, the being capable to act againſt this law would be an imperfection. But to be ſubject to an order, by which the exerciſe of our functions is ſtopped or weakened, is certainly a defect. So that they, who pretended that the ſtars are Gods, if they deſigned to reaſon coherently, ought to have ſaid, that the Aſtronomers found out the blind ſide of the divine nature, her dependency on a very oppreſſive law, which ſubmitted her to a kind of death, or to a fainting fit, or to ſlavery. It will be objected, that the ſun is not leſs bright in itſelf during an eclipſe, than either before or after it: but may not I anſwer, that a meſſenger, who is arreſted, does not loſe for all that, any thing of his ſtrength and health? And yet this is a proof of his being ſubject to a burdenſome law; in a word, it is a ſign of weakneſs to ſee that he cannot continue his journey. Apply this to the ſun, and you will find, that the eclipſes are a proof of its imperfection: they prevent it from ſhining on the earth. The ſun in this caſe is a Prince whoſe meſſengers are ſtopped, and whoſe functions are ſuſpended. If Pliny had deſigned to reaſon, he would not have drawn from this phænomenon the conſequence he mentions; he would not have ſaid, that this phænomenon of eclipſes ought to make us eaſy in this ſtate of mortality (20); but he would have ſaid that this proves the ſtars are not a divine nature.

(20) This conſideration would have more weight than that which Lucretius urges above quotation (8) of the article BAUTRU (William).

[F] We learn from a paſſage in Pliny, that Hipparchus aſcribed a celeſtial origine to our ſouls.] It is ſo beautiful, that by tranſcribing it at length, I am ſure to pleaſe thoſe, who do not like to turn from one book to another, in order to gratify their curioſity. Idem Hipparchus nunquam ſatis laudatus, ut quo nemo magis approbaverit cognationem cum homine ſiderum, animaſque noſtras partem eſſe cœli; novam ſtellam & aliam in ævo ſuo genitam deprehendit: ejuſque motu, quia die fulſit, ad dubitationem eſt adductus, anne hoc ſæpius fieret, moverenturque & eæ, quas putamus affixas. Idemque auſus, rem etiam Deo improbam, annumerare poſteris ſtellas, ac ſidera ad normam expangere (21), organis excogitatis, per quæ ſingularum loca, atque magnitudines ſignaret: ut facile diſcerni poſſet ex eo, non modo, an obirent, naſcerenturve, ſed an omnino aliqua tranſirent, moverenturve; item an creſcerent, minuerenturque, cœlo in hæreditate cunctis relicto; ſi quiſquam, qui rationem eam caperet, inventus eſſet (22). i. e. "The ſame "Hipparchus, who can never be ſufficiently commended, ſince he ſhewed how nearly men are related to the celeſtial bodies, and that our ſouls are a part of Heaven; Hipparchus, I ſay, obſerved a new ſtar, which firſt appeared in his time; the motion of which, the day it ſhined, made him doubt, whether ſuch ſtars aroſe often, or whether even thoſe ſtars, which are thought to be fixed, did alſo move. He alſo dared, which is a great work for the Gods themſelves, to give poſterity an account of the number of the ſtars, and of the ſituation of the celeſtial bodies, having contrived a machine, in which he marked their places, and their bigneſs; by this means it was eaſy to obſerve, not only whether any ſtar periſhed, or whether there aroſe any new one, but alſo whether they changed their ſituation, and had any proper motion; and alſo whether they grew larger or ſmaller: thus he left the Heavens as a legacy to his ſucceſſors, in caſe there ſhould be any perſons capable of underſtanding that ſcience."

(21) In Father Hardouin's edition we read ad nomen expungere.

(22) Plin. lib. 2. cap. 26. pag. m. 182, 183.

HIPPOMANES. There is in the plan of this Dictionary a long article upon the Hippomanes. I do not inſert it in this place, becauſe I have altered the deſign I had at firſt of giving indifferently real and perſonal articles. But I ſhall give it in the form of a diſſertation at the end of this work.

HIPPONAX, a Greek Poet, born at Epheſus, lived, not in the 23d Olympiad, as Euſebius has aſſerted [A], but in the 60th, as Pliny teſtifies it (a). Being baniſhed from Epheſus, by the tyrants Athenagoras and Comas (b), he ſettled at Clazomenæ [B]. He was deformed, ſhort and thin (c). But his deformity has been accidentally the cauſe of his immortality; for he is little known but by the ſatyrical verſes, which he wrote againſt two (a) Plin. lib. 36. cap. 5.

(b) Suidas, in Ἱππώναξ.

(c) Ælian. Div. Hiſt. lib. 10. cap. 7.

[A] He lived not in the XXIIId Olympiad, as Euſebius aſſerted.] Scaliger (1) refutes him by a paſſage from Pliny; he thought therefore that Pliny was not miſtaken. This is right: but then he adds that Euſebius followed Tatian, and he refers us to his Notes upon Number 908, in which Notes there is not a word relating to Hipponax. This is not being very exact. Euſebius may alſo be refuted by Proclus's authority (2), who aſſerts that Hipponax flouriſhed under the reign of Darius. He means no doubt the ſon of Hyſtaſpes, who began to reign in the LXIVth Olympiad.

(1) Pag. 79.

(2) Apud Photium, Biblioth. pag. 983.

[B] He ſettled at Clazomenæ.] Hence it is that the Poeteſs Sulpitia deſcribes him after this manner:

Nec trimetro jambo, nec qui pede fractus eodem
Fortiter iraſci diſcit duce Clazomenio (3).

(3) De Edicto Domitiani, inter Catalecta Virgilii, edit. Lugd. Bat. 1617, pag. 247.

"Neither he, who writes ſatires in Iambic verſes of ſix feet, nor he, who being exaſperated by the ſame kind of ſatires, learns to rail ſtoutly after the example of the Clazomenian."

If what Monſieur le Fevre relates be true, namely, that Hipponax lived at Epheſus when he revenged himſelf of thoſe, who had inſulted him on account of his deformity, it will follow from thence, either that he returned into his native country, or that his baniſhment was not occaſioned by this ſtory. I have not met with any thing in Pliny, that ſhews that Hipponax was or was not of Epheſus, or that he and the Statuaries whom he ſatarized, did or did not live in that city. And yet Monſieur Dacier (4) would perſuade us that Pliny is of the ſame opinion with thoſe who aſſert, that our Poet's verſes obliged his enemies to retire from Epheſus. Lloyd and Hoffman ſay, that Bupalus lived at Clazomenæ (5). I imagine this is only an inference drawn from the following particulars. They have obſerved on the one hand, that Hipponax retired into that City, and on the other, that Bupalus made a ridiculous and comical ſtatue to repreſent him; from theſe two facts they inferred, that Bupalus lived at Clazomenæ.

(4) Rem. ſur Horace, tom. 5. pag. 151.

(5) Charles Stephens ſays the ſame under the word Bupalus.

two Statuaries [C], who had made the moſt ridiculous figure of him that was in their power (d). He ſent out againſt them a thundering legion of iambic verſes, which vexed them to ſuch a degree, that it was reported they hanged themſelves out of ſpite. Pliny maintains that this is falſe, and proves it ſo, by a great number of ſtatues which they made ſince that time in the neighbouring iſlands. Some authors write, that they only left Epheſus where Hipponax lived (e). However it be, this author was, and is ſtill very much diſtinguiſhed by his ſatyrical humour and verſes [D]. His ſlanders did not even ſpare thoſe to whom he owed his life (f). Some writers pretend, that he was ſtarved to death [E]. It is obſerved, that though he was ſhort and thin, yet he was very ſtrong, and could throw an empty veſſel farther than any other man could do (g). He was not the firſt nor the only perſon, who by his invectives have been the cauſe of other people's death [F].

(d) Plinius, lib. 35. cap. 5.

(e) Apud Tanaq. Fabrum, Vie des Poetes Grecs.

(f) Ὁ καὶ τεκόσαν ἐο βαύξας. i. e. "Who barked "even at his "own parents." Anthol. lib. 3. cap. 30. num. 22. pag. m. 655.

(g) Metrodor. Scepſius, apud Athenæum, lib. 12. pag. 552.

HIRPINI,

[C] Againſt two Statuaries.] They were two brothers, the one called Bupalus, and the other Athenis; they were of the iſle of Chios, and the ſons of Anthermus, whoſe father was named Micciades, and his grandfather Malas. All theſe perſons had practiſed Sculpture in that iſland from father to ſon, ſo that this art might be as antient there as the Olympiads. Si quis horum familiam ad proavum uſque retroagat, inveniet artis ejus originem cum Olympiadum origine cœpiſſe (6). i. e. "If you will trace this family up to the great-"grandfather, you will find that this art began with the "Olympiads." Pauſanias (7), ſpeaking of the ſtatue of Fortune, and of that of the Graces, which were to be ſeen at Smyrna, and which Bupalus had made, commends him on that account. He makes him more antient than Pindar; two witneſſes like Pauſanias and Pliny, deſerve more credit than the Scholiaſt on Horace (8), who aſſerts that Bupalus was a Painter, wherein he has been followed by Meſſieurs le Fevre (9) and Dacier (10), and by almoſt all the writers of Dictionaries (11). Suidas makes both the brothers Sculptors; and becauſe he calls the latter Athenis, Father Hardouin imagined, that the paſſage in Pliny, where this Sculptor is named Anthermus, was corrupted; and therefore he put the word Athenis inſtead of that. See the remark [E], and the article BUPALUS.

(6) Plin. lib. 36. cap. 5.

(7) Pauſan. lib. 4. pag. 140. and lib. 9. pag. 309.

(8) In VI Epod.

(9) Vie des Poetes Grecs.

(10) Remarques ſur Horace, tom. 5. pag. 151.

(11) See the remark [A] of the article BUPALUS.

[D] He was diſtinguiſhed by his ſatyrical humour and verſes.] This gave riſe to ſome proverbs, which we meet with in Cicero (12). Eum addictum jam tum puto eſſe Calvi Licinii Hipponacteo præconio. i. e. "I "take him to be already ruined in his reputation by "Calvus Licinius's Hipponactean commendation of "him." Horace joins Hipponax with Archilochus, as the two greateſt patrons for ſlander:

(12) Epiſt. 24. lib. 7. ad famil.

——— —— In malos aſperrimus
Parata tollo cornua.
Qualis Lycambæ ſpretus infido gener,
Aut acer hoſtis Bupalo.

(13) Horat. 6. Epod. See alſo Cicero, de Nat. Deorum, lib. 3.

——— —— "To rogues a deadly foe,
"I'm ſtill prepar'd to ſtrike the blow:
"As ſharp as fierce Archilochus his ſong,
"Like Hipponax revenge a wrong.
CREECH.

Here follow Pliny's words: Hipponacti notabilis vultus fœditas erat: quamobrem imaginem ejus laſcivia jocorum ii propoſuere ridentium circulis. Quod Hipponax indignatus amaritudinem carminum diſtrixit in tantum, ut credatur aliquibus ad laqueum eos impuliſſe: quod falſum eſt. i. e. "Hipponax's face was remarkably "ugly; wherefore theſe Statuaries made a figure of "him out of joke, which they expoſed to the laughter "of a multitude of people. Hipponax was ſo exaſpe-"rated at this, that he laſhed them very ſeverely in "his verſes, which vexed them to that degree, that "ſome think they hanged themſelves; but this is "not true." There are three or four epigrams in the Anthology (14), in which Hipponax is repreſented as being ſtill dreadful even after his death. The paſſengers are adviſed to run from his tomb, becauſe it was a place where there fell a terrible hail. Φεῦγε τὸν καλαζεπῆ τάφον, τὸν φριχτὸν, fuge grandinantem tumulum horrendum (15).

(14) Lib. 3. cap. 25.

(15) Ibid. num. 24. pag. m. 566.

[E] Some writers pretend, that he was ſtarved to death.] I do not think there is any ground for this aſſertion but the two following lines.

Utque parum ſtabili qui carmine læſit Athenas
Inviſus pereas, deficiente cibo (16).

(16) Ovid. in Ibid. ver. 525.

i. e. "May you periſh for want of bread, and hated "by all, like him, who injured Athens (or Athenis) "by his lame verſes."

Some writers pretend, that Ovid did not write Athenas but Athenim, whence it would follow that he meant Hipponax here. Qui primus iambum claudicare fecit, & ſcazonta in Bupalum & Athenin compoſuit, ut eſt apud Suidam, ut recte Ovidius, parum ſtabile, id eſt claudum carmen ei tribuat. i. e. "Who firſt made lame "Iambic verſes, and wrote ſatyrs in that kind of "verſe againſt Bupalus and Athenis; whence Ovid "aſcribes to him an unſteady, that is a lame poem." Thus ſpeaks Alciat in the XVIIIth Chapter of the fifth Book of his Parerga. Turnebus does not diſlike this opinion. Videtur, ſays he (17), de Hipponacte hoc intelligi, qui claudicante & parum ſtabili verſu, id eſt ſcazonte in Bupalum & Athenim invectus eſt Athenienſes: quo in carmine ne Athenis quidem pepercerat. Quid tamen ſi pro Athenas, Athenin ſcribamus, quem ab eo probris oneratum accepimus? ne hanc quidem lectionem improbarem, etſi alteram delere non auſim. i. e. "It "ſeems that this muſt be underſtood of Hipponax, who "in his lame Iambic verſes inveighed againſt Bupalus "and Athenis two Athenians; in which poem he did "not ſpare even the city of Athens: but what, if inſtead "of Athenas we ſhould write Athenim; for we are told "that he loaded Athenis with injuries? I cannot diſ-"prove this reading, though I ſhould not dare to ex-"punge the other." Monſieur Boiſſieu (18), who tranſcribes theſe two paſſages, obſerves that Sanctius and Valerius approve them. And for his part, he admits that opinion with all his heart, and thinks it very probable, that Ovid ſhould have mentioned the two inventors of the Iambic verſe one after the other. Now, he had juſt mentioned Archilochus, and we know from Dionyſius of Halicarnaſſus (19), from Clemens of Alexandria (20), from Rufinus (21), and from the Poeteſs Sulpitia (22), that Hipponax invented the Scazons. Monſ. Boiſſieu might have cenſured Turnebus for aſſerting, that Hipponax's two adverſaries were of Athens: for Pliny expreſly obſerves that they were of the iſle of Chios, and that they were uſed to mark it upon their works. Quibus ſubjecerunt carmen non vitibus tantum cenſeri Chium, ſed & operibus Anthermi filiorum (23). i. e. "On which (their works) they ingraved an in-"ſcription, declaring that the iſle of Chios was famous "not only for her wine, but alſo for the works of An-"thermus's ſons." What Turnebus aſſerts, namely that Hipponax did not ſpare the city of Athens in his verſes againſt thoſe two Sculptors, is intirely groundleſs, and ſaid at random. A German Miniſter (24), having applied the two verſes in Ovid to Hipponax, continues thus. Ex Plinio nimirum compertum eſt Athenim vel Athenam ſculptorem in Hipponactis ſcripta incurriſſe, carmina ejus ſuſtuliſſe maledica, authorem verò lethali inedia fuiſſe confectum. i. e. "For we know "from Pliny, that Athenis or Athenas the Sculptor "fell upon Hipponax's writings, and demoliſhed his "ſlandering verſes; and that the author of them died "for want." Pliny ſays no ſuch thing.

(17) Adverſar. lib. 9. cap. 25.

(18) Comment. in Ibid. pag. 100, 101.

(19) Lib. de Interpr.

(20) Stromat. lib. 1.

(21) De Metris Comicis.

(22) Her verſes have been quoted in the remark [B].

(23) Plin. lib. 36. cap. 5.

(24) Spizelius, in Fel. Literat. pag. 718.

[F] He was not the firſt nor the only perſon, who by his invectives have been the cauſe of other people's death.] Before him, Archilochus had wrote ſatires, which obliged two or three perſons to hang themſelves (25). Poliagrus being abuſed in a Comedy hanged himſelf (26). We ought not to wonder that a ſatire ſhould make a man deſperate, ſince we find that a mere cenſure produced ſometimes that fatal effect. Pythagoras having reproved one of his diſciples ſomewhat ſeverely before ſeveral

THE deadly effects of ſlanders or cenſures.

(25) See the article ARCHILOCHUS, remark [C].

(26) Ælian. Var. Hiſt. lib. 5. cap. 8.

HIRPINI, a Nation of Italy in the country of the Samnites. They were ſo called, becauſe they had a wolf (a) for their leader, when they went to ſettle a colony. Some authors relate, that on a certain day, when they celebrated a great ſolemnity, they walked upon fire without burning themſelves [A]; but it is probable that theſe authors aſcribe to them, what belongs only to the Hirpii [B], who lived in another part of Italy. They were (a) A Wolf was called Hirpus in the language of the Samnites. Strabo, lib. 6. pag. 173.

ſeveral perſons, threw him into ſo diſmal a melancholy, that it obliged him to ſtrangle himſelf; and after that time this great Philoſopher never reproved any perſon but privately. Πυθαγόρᾳ δὲ τραχύτερον ἐν πολλοῖς γηραίῳ προσενεχθέντι, ἀπάγξασθαι τὸ μειράκιον λέγουσιν. ἐκ τούτου δὲ μηδέποτε τὸν Πυθαγόραν αὖθις ἄλλῳ παρόντι. ἄλλον νουθετῆσαι. Ferunt, adoleſcentulum quendam à Pythagora, cui operam dabat, multis præſentibus compellatum aſperius, ſuſpendio vitam finiſſe, atque ab eo tempore Pythagoram numquam alio præſente quenquam corripuiſſe (27). Diodorus Cronus died with grief, being ſeverely reproved by a King of Egypt, becauſe he could not ſolve thoſe difficulties in Logic, which Stilpo propoſed to him at the King's table (28). There have been cenſures, which tho' they did not occaſion the death of the perſons cenſured, yet vexed them to ſuch a degree, that they made them attempt the reprover's life. Apollodorus the Architect loſt his life, becauſe he had made the Emperor Hadrian obſerve ſome defects in a temple which this Prince had ordered to be built (29). Theſe latter ages afford us ſeveral inſtances of all theſe effects of cenſure. Muret had been acquainted with a man, whom ſome verſes, that had been written againſt him, threw into ſo deep a melancholy, that it carried him to the grave. And hereupon that writer quotes Plato, who adviſes thoſe, that are concerned for their reputation, to take care not to exaſperate the Poets. Laceſſiti (poetæ) ita ſe ulſciſcuntur, ut interdum eos à quibus offenſi erant, ad mortem adegiſſe narrentur. Nam præter id quod de Archilocho accepimus, novi ego, qui hâc ætate tantum verſibus ſuis inimico dolorem inuſſerit, ut ex eo ille ſit mortuus . . . quocirca Plato in Minoe præcipit iis, qui bonæ famæ ſtudioſi ſunt, ut diligenter caveant, ne cum poëtis inimicitias ſuſcipiant (30). i. e. "When the Poets are provoked, they know how to revenge themſelves ſo, as "to force ſometimes thoſe that exaſperate them to "kill themſelves. For beſides what we read of Archi"lochus, I know a Poet, who at this time did by his "verſes give his enemy ſo much pain, that it proved "his death. . . Wherefore Plato, in his Minos, ad"viſes thoſe who are tender of their reputation, to "take care not to draw upon them the reſentment of "the Poets." It is reported that George of Trebizonde died with grief, when he ſaw that the blunders, which he had made in his tranſlation of Ptolemy, were cenſured by Regiomontanus, and that the ſons of the deceaſed poiſoned the Critic (31). I have obſerved in another place (32), that it was thought John Denores would have died with grief, at the reading of Guarini's Reply, had he lived long enough to ſee that work publiſhed. The zealous Calviniſts . . . publiſhed ſo outragious a libel againſt Quintin . . . that this Doctor, who was too eaſily vexed, went to bed after he had read that libel, and never got up any more (33). He had harangued in favour of the Clergy at the meeting of the States of the Kingdom in the year 1560: the criticiſm on his oration was the occaſion of his death. Gregory of Valencia having read before Pope Clement VIII (34), a paſſage from St. Auguſtin otherwiſe than he ſhould have done, was convicted of a falſification; upon which the Pope told him (35). Is it thus you pretend to impoſe upon the Church of God? "Theſe words "were like a thunderbolt, which ſtruck Valencia "down: he ſwooned away in the Pope's preſence, and "died two days after." See in the article CERASI another ſtroke of the ſame Pope. "Monſieur de l'Etoile "uſed to cenſure boldly, bluntly, and with the utmoſt "ſeverity all that he diſliked in thoſe things, upon "which he was aſked his opinion. He is charged "with occaſioning a young man to die with grief and "ſorrow, who came from Languedoc, bringing a "Play with him, which he thought a maſterpiece "in its kind, and in which he was ſhewn very "clearly a thouſand faults." I borrow theſe words from Monſieur Peliſſon (26). Philip II King of Spain did not cenſure in a leſs killing manner than the King of Egypt, whom I have mentioned above. "Cardi"nal Eſpinoſa died, becauſe he heard Philip II "ſpeak only theſe ſingle words, by which he perceived "that he had loſt the King's favour. Cardinal yo "ſoy el Preſidente. Cardinal I am the Preſident of "the Council. And the ſame King, telling a Secre"tary, who had ſpilt ink inſtead of ſand upon ſome "writings. Eſte es el tintero, y eſtotra (37) la ſal"vadera; theſe few words went ſo deep to the poor "Secretury's heart, that from the King's preſence he "retired to his bed, and died (38)." There are inſtances of ſome authors, who have murthered, or attempted to murther their Cenſors. Murtola being mad to ſee that the Cavalier Marino had ruined his reputation in a ſatire, let off a piſtol at him in the ſtreets of Turin; he miſſed him, though he had loaded his piſtol with five balls, and had fired very near him; he confeſſed that his deſign was not to wound but to kill Marino (39). Here follows what we read in Monſieur Baillet (40). "Francis Robortel having "criticized ſome words of Baptiſt Egnacio, a Vene"tian, was like to be killed with a bayonet, which "this Egnacio ſtuck into his bowels, in anſwer to his "critic." Baillet quotes Joh. Imperial. Muſæi hiſtor. pag. 61, & Theoph. Spizel. de felic. literat. comment. 4. p. 485. Here follow Imperialis's words. Cum Alciato pariter, aliiſque clariſſimis ejus ævi luminibus, internecinas prope ſimultates exercuit (Robortellus) quo factum ut ſemel Venetiis Baptiſta Egnatius optimus ac doctiſſimus vir crebris ab eo laceſſitus injuriis, educto ſenili gladiolo in eum impetum facere non dubitarit. i. e. "There was "almoſt a mortal hatred between Robortel, and Alciat, "and alſo between him and other moſt eminent men "of his time; whence it happened, that Baptiſt Eg"nacio a very good and learned man, being provoked "by Robortel's repeated injuries, did not ſcruple to "fall upon him ſword in hand."

(27) Plutarch. de Diſcrim. Adulat. & Amici, pag. 70, F.

(28) Diog. Laert. lib. 2. num. 112. See alſo Pliny, lib. 7. cap. 57.

(29) Xiphilin. in Hadriano, pag. m. 258.

(30) Muretus, Variar. Lect. lib. 8. cap. 1.

(31) Naude, Conſiderations ſur les Coups d'Etat. See alſo Thuanus, lib. 90.

(32) In the article GUARINI remark [B].

(33) Varillas, Hiſtoire de Charles IX, tom. 2. pag. m. 18.

(34) Morale Pratique des Jeſuites, tom. 3. pag. 122. where they correct an error of the firſt vol.

(35) Morale Pratique, tom. 1. pag. 268.

(36) Hiſt. de l'Acad. Françoiſe, pag. m. 322.

(37) I imagine it ſhould be eſta era.

(38) La Mothe le Vayer, Lettre 53. pag. 441. of the 10th vol.

(39) See the Anti-Baillet, tom. 1. num. 95.

(40) Jugemens des Savans, tom. 1. pag. 66.

Had I diſperſed all this in ſeveral places throughout my work, I ſhould have eſcaped the cenſure of thoſe, who will ſtyle this remark an inſignificant collection of common-place topics. But as I mind my reader's conveniency rather than my own, I am content to ſubmit to that cenſure, if I ſave them the trouble of collecting, what I might have thus diſperſed.

I ſhall add a new inſtance to the foregoing. A certain Poet having preſented Pope Urban VIII with a work, the ſubject, diſpoſition and verſes of which were unworthy of a Chriſtian, the Pope upbraided him ſo earneſtly with his impudence, that the poor wretch died with grief and ſhame. You will find theſe words in the 3d page of a book, which Father Menêtrier publiſhed at Paris in the year 1681, with this title, Des Repréſentations en Muſique anciennes & modernes. i. e. "Of "ancient and modern muſical Acting upon a Stage."

[A] Some authors relate that they walked upon fire, without burning themſelves.] Varro, who exploded all kinds of ſuperſtitions as much as lay in his power, having metioned a certain ſalve, adds immediately this obſervation, the Hirpini rubbed the ſoles of their feet with it, when they were to walk upon fire. Varro ubique expugnator religionis, ait, cùm quoddam medicamentum deſcriberet: eo uti ſolent Hirpini ambulaturi per ignem, medicamento plantas ungunt (1). Theſe words do not give us the leaſt hint concerning the ſituation of the Hirpini: ſo that we cannot determine, whether Varro ſpoke of a people, who were a part of the nation of the Samnites, or whether, like Servius, he gave the name of Hirpini to perſons who lived near mount Soracte in Etruria, and who were properly called Hirpii. Several perſons imagine, that Varro meant that nation amongſt the Samnites, which was called Hirpini. If this was really his meaning, it is very probable that he was miſled by the reſemblance of the names. They who walked upon fire were different from the Samnites, and lived pretty far from them. Their name was Hirpii and not Hirpini. Servius the Commentator was miſtaken with regard to their name, and this miſtake had led him into ſome others, concerning the ſituation of thoſe who walked upon fire in the ſolemn feſtival of mount Soracte, as we ſhall ſee in the following remark.

(1) Servius, in Æneid. lib. 11. ver. 787.

[B] . . . What belongs only to the Hirpii.] Virgil does were anciently other feſtivals, in which the ſame ſhew was to be ſeen [C].

HOBBES

does not name thoſe who walked upon the fire, he only hints that they lived near mount Soracte.

Summe Deûm ſancti cuſtos Soractis Apollo,
Quem primi colimus, cui pineus ardor acervo
Paſcitur, & medium freti pietate per ignem
Cultores multa premimus veſtigia pruna.
Da, pater, hoc noſtris aboleri dedecus armis (2)

(2) Virgil. Æn. lib. 11. ver. 785.

" O Patron of Soracte's high abodes,
" Phœbus the ruling pow'r among the Gods;
" Whom firſt we ſerve, whole woods of unctuous pine
" Are fell'd for thee, and to thy glory ſhine:
" By thee protected, with our naked ſoles,
" Thro' flames unſing'd we march, and tread the " kindled coals."
" Give me, propitious pow'r, to waſh away
" The ſtains of this diſhonourable day."

Dryden.

But Servius calls them Hirpini; Soractis, ſays he in his Commentary on this paſſage of Virgil, mons eſt Hirpinorum in Flaminia collocatus. i. e. " Soracte is " a mountain of the Hirpini, ſituated in the road " from Rome to Ariminum." He adds, that this mountain is conſecrated to the infernal Gods; and that as they were once offering a ſacrifice to Pluto there came ſome wolves which carried off from the fire the entrails of the Victim. The Shepherds purſued them, and entered into a cave, whence aroſe immediately a deadly vapour which occaſioned a very great peſtilence, of which an Oracle promiſed them that they would be delivered if they followed the example of the wolves; that is to ſay, if they lived upon plunder: They did it, and hence theſe people were called, Hirpini Sorani, that is to ſay, Pluto's Wolves; for Hirpus ſignifies a Wolf in the language of the Sabines, and Soranus is Pluto's name. Any perſon who conſults Strabo and Pliny muſt be convinced that Servius has committed here an egregious blunder. He has blended together the names and hiſtories of two different nations. Strabo (13) relates, that wolf having been the guide of a nation who came to ſettle a colony in the country of the Samnites, that nation was called Hirpini, Hirpus ſignifying a wolf in the language of the Samnites. As for Pliny, he aſſerts, that there is in the Country of Hirpini a place which is mortal to them that enter it. In Hirpinis Amſancti ad Memphitis ædem, locum quem qui intravere moriuntur (4). Virgil deſcribes that curſed place more at large, and obſerves not only that there aroſe a dangerous ſteam or vapour from it, but alſo that it was an air-hole of Hell.

(3) Lib. 5. pag. 173.

(4) Plin. lib. 2. cap. 93. pag. m. 240.

Eſt locus Italiæ medio ſub montibus altis,
Nobilis, & fama multis memoratus in oris,
Amſancti valles.
. . . . . .
Hic ſpecus horrendum, & ſævi ſpiracula Ditis
Monſtrantur: ruptoque ingens Acheronte vorago
Peſtiferas aperit fauces (5).

(5) Æn. lib. 7. ver. 563.

" In midſt of Italy well known to Fame,
" There lies a lake Amſanctus is the name.
" . . . . . .
" Here Pluto pants for breath from out his cell,
" And opens wide the grinning jaws of Hell.

Dryden.

There was nothing like this in mount Soracte. The vapour that aroſe from it was fatal only to birds. Pliny aſſerts it poſitively. Alibi volucribus tantum ut Soracte vicino urbis tracta (6). It is therefore plain that when Servius called this mountain a place conſecrated to Pluto, which he ſaid was near a cave, which was mortal to men, he blended together what relates to the Hirpini, and what relates to the Hirpii. See Salmaſius in Solinum, p. 85.

(6) Plin. lib. 2. cap. 43 pag. 240.

If you have a mind to know what the antients ſay of the Hirpii you may ſoon be ſatisfied. The Hirpii were a few families that lived in the country of the Faliſci near Rome, and who could walk upon fire without any hurt. This ſhew was ſeen every year on mount Soracte, the day when a ſolemn ſacrifice was offered to Apollo. The Hirpii walked upon a pile ſet on fire without burning themſelves, for which reaſon they were by a decree of the Senate diſpenſed from bearing arms, and from ſerving any burthenſome office. Haud procul Urbe Roma in Faliſcorum agro familiæ ſunt paucæ quæ vocantur Hirpi: hæ ſacrificio annuo quod fit ad montem Soractem Apollini, ſuper ambuſtam ligni ſtruem ambulantes non aduruntur, & ob id perpetuo Senatus conſulto militiæ omniumque aliorum munerum vacationem habent (7). Solinus pretended to follow this account very exactly, and he did not take notice that he had altered a very conſiderable particular of it. He expreſſed himſelf ſo as to hint that the Hirpii paſſed through the Flames. Impune inſultant ardentibus lignorum ſtruibus, in honorem divinæ rei flammis parcentibus (8). i. e. " They leap upon the burning " piles without any damage, the flames ſparing them " in honour of divine ſervice." And yet Pliny does not ſay this: he does even hint clearly enough, that they only walked over the burning coals. Nor can we doubt but this was all they did, ſince Varro pretended that they rubbed the ſoles of their feet with a certain ſalve. Conſider alſo theſe words of Virgil, multa premimus veſtigia pruna. i. e. " We tread the " kindled coals;" and the expreſſions of the Authors I am going to quote, and you will have no reaſon to doubt but Salmaſius juſtly cenſured Solinus. Sed is eſt Solinus: verba tantummodo curat, rerum ſecurus, quas digerit, miræ ubique ablepſiæ incuſandus (9). i. e. " Such is the character of Solinus; he minds only his " expreſſions, and is careleſs about the ſubject he " treats of, and is every where guilty of a wonderful " overſight." A Poet, who lived after Virgil, tells us, that they who walked over the fire, went three times through that trial laden with the entrails of the Victims, which they carried afterwards upon Apollo's altars.

(7) Plin. lib. 7. cap. 2. pag. m. 10.

(8) Solin. cap. 2.

(9) Salmaſ. Exercitat. in Plin. pag. 86.

Tum Soracte ſatum præſtantem corpore & armis
Æquanum noſcens, patrio cui ritus in arvo,
Cum pius arcitenens accenſis gaudet acervis,
Exta ter innocuos late portare per ignes;
Sic in Apollinea ſemper veſtigia pruna
Inviolata teras, victorque vaporis ad aras
Dona ſerenato referas ſolemnia Phœbo (10).

(10) Silius Italicus, lib. 5.

We have ſeen that the feſtival celebrated on mount Soracte, in which they who walked on the fire, acted their part ſo well, was ſacred to Apollo; but we ſhall now ſee it conſecrated to another Deity. Strabo obſerves (11) that there was at the foot of mount Soracte a city called Feronia. This was alſo the name of a Goddeſs, who was extremely revered in that place. There was an admirable ſacrifice offered in the Lucus or Grove dedicated to this Goddeſs. Some men, whom the ſpirit of this Deity ſeized, walked bare footed on a heap of kindled coals, and did not receive the leaſt hurt from it. Ἧς (Φερωνίας) τέμενός ἐστιν ἐν τῷ τόπῳ θαυμαστὴν ἱεροποιΐαν ἔχον· γυμνοῖς γὰρ ποσὶ διεξίασιν ἀνθρακίαν καὶ σποδιὰν μεγάλην οἱ κατεχόμενοι ὑπὸ τῆς δαίμονος ταύτης ἀπαθεῖς. Ibi eſt lucus Feroniæ, in quo ſacrificium perpetratur mirabile: correpti enim ejus numinis afflatu homines nudis pedibus prunarum ardentium ſtruem illæſi perambulant (12). There was every year a ſolemn meeting at that place, where the ſpectators were entertained with this ſhew. It is not much to to the honour of the antients that they ſhould be ſo little agreed amongſt themſelves, with regard to ſuch particulars as could not but be publickly known.

(11) Strabo, lib. 5. pag. 156.

(12) Idem, ibid.

[C] There were antiently other feſtivals, on which the ſame ſhow was to be ſeen.] There was at Caſtabala in Cappadocia a Temple of Diana ſurnamed Paraſia. The Prieſteſſes of this Temple walked barefoot upon kindled coals without burning themſelves. Strabo mentions it only upon an hear-ſay. Ὅτι φασὶ τὰς ἱερείας γυμνοῖς τοῖς ποσὶ δι' ἀνθρακιᾶς βαδίζειν ἀπαθεῖς. Ubi ajunt ſacrificas mulieres illæſis pedibus per prunas ambulare (13). There have been Quacks in theſe latter ages who have done things much more ſurpriſing (14) than all that is related of the Hirpii, and of theſe Prieſteſſes. But to ſhew more evidently how much the antient abuſes in religion agree with the modern, I ſhall relate what I heard the late Monſieur Fremont d'Ablancourt ſay, who being a zealous Huguenot became,

(13) Idem, lib. 12. pag. 370.

(14) See the Journal des Savans, for the year 1677, pag. 54, and 222. of the Dutch edition.

HOBBES (THOMAS) one of the greateſt genius's of the ſeventeenth Century, was born at Malmeſbury in England, April the 5th 1588 [A]. He had made a great progreſs in the Languages [B], when he was ſent at fourteen years of age to Oxford, where he ſtudied for five years Ariſtotle's Philoſophy. He afterwards went into the family of William Cavendiſh, who ſoon after had the title of Earl of Devonſhire conferred upon him, and was Governor to his eldeſt ſon. He travelled into France and Italy with his pupil; and perceiving that he remembred little either of his Greek or Latin, and that the Philoſophy of Ariſtotle, in which he had made a conſiderable progreſs, was deſpiſed by perſons of the beſt ſenſe, he applied himſelf intirely to polite literature upon his return to his own country. Thucydides appearing to him preferable to all the Greek Hiſtorians, he tranſlated him into Engliſh, and publiſhed that tranſlation in 1618, in order to ſhew the Engliſh, from the Athenian Hiſtory, the diſorders and confuſions of a Democratical Government [C]. In 1629 he travelled into France as Governor to a young Engliſh Gentleman; came, during his ſtay at Liſbon, very well acquainted with the tricks which the Monks uſe to play. He told me that there is in Spain a certain convent (15), from whence there came every year a Monk who ſhut himſelf up in an hot oven, and continued there ſome hours with only a linnen garment about him. He comes out of the oven in the ſight of a croud of people, who takes this for a very great miracle. It brings the Convent a very good income, ſo that it is worth their while to uſe a Monk little by little to endure the Heat. But I do not pretend to give an account of all the tricks there may be in this pretended miracle.

(15) He told me the name of the place, but I have forgot it.

[A] Born at Malmſbury . . . . April the 5th, 1588.] His mother being frighted at the rumours of the approach of the Spaniſh armada, was brought to bed of him before her time. It is very ſurprizing therefore, that he lived ſo long. Hobbes's father was a Miniſter (1).

(1) Vita Hobbeſii, pag. 32.

[B] He had made a great progreſs in the languages.] Before he left Malmeſbury ſchool to go to the Univerſity of Oxford, he had tranſlated into Latin verſe the Medea of Euripides. Tantos autem jam adhuc in ludo literario degens in literatura tam Latina quam Græca progreſſus fecit, ut Euripidis Medeam ſimili metro Latinis verſibus eleganter expreſſerit (2).

(2) Ibid. pag. 33.

[C] The diſorders and confuſions of a Democratical Government.] I have known ſome men of parts, who were ſurprized, that in Kingdoms, in which the Prince's authority is unlimited, the inſtructors of youth are allowed to make uſe of the books of the antient Greeks and Romans, in which we find ſo many examples of the love of liberty, and ſo many anti-monarchical maxims. But this is not more ſurprizing than to ſee Republican States permit their Law-Profeſſors to explain the Code and Digeſt, in which there are ſo many principles, which ſuppoſe the ſupreme and inviolable authority of the Emperor. Here we ſee two things, which ſeem equally ſurprizing, but in reality ought not to ſurprize any perſon; for omitting ſeveral reaſons, which might be urged, may not we ſay, that the ſame books, which contain the poiſon with regard either to Monarchs, or Republics, contain likewiſe the antidote? If you ſee on one hand the great maxims of liberty, and the noble examples of courage, with which it has been maintained or recovered; you ſee on the other, faction, ſeditions, tumultuous humours, which have diſturbed and at laſt ruined that infinite number of little States, which ſhewed themſelves ſuch zealous enemies of tyranny in antient Greece. Does not this picture ſeem to be a leſſon very capable of diſabuſing thoſe, who are terrified at the mere notion of a Monarchy? Hobbes thought ſo (3), ſince he publiſhed the tranſlation of an Athenian Hiſtorian with this view. Turn the tables, and you will find, that this picture will be very proper to give an inſtruction different from the former, and to ſtrengthen the horror againſt Monarchy: for whence comes it, will it be ſaid, that the Greeks and Romans choſe rather to be expoſed to theſe confuſions, than to live under a Monarchy? Did not this ariſe from the hard condition, to which tyrants had reduced them? And muſt not an evil be very grievous, inſufferable, and deplorable, when people chooſe to deliver themſelves from it at ſo dear a rate? It is certain, that the deſcription, which Hiſtory has left us of the conduct of ſeveral Monarchs, gives us horror, and makes our hair ſtand an end. Do not object to me, that generally ſpeaking more diſorders have been occaſioned by the conſpiracies, which have put an end to tyranny, than there would have been by ſuffering it. Do not repreſent to me what I have ſaid in the article of HIERO II (4). The Syracuſians, who had enjoyed a prodigious happineſs under the long reign of that Prince, immediately loſt their patience under his ſucceſſor, who governed in a tyrannical manner: They killed him in the very beginning of the ſecond year of his reign; and ſoon after put to death the two daughters of Hiero, and his three grand-daughters. Of theſe five Ladies there were three, againſt whom no complaint had been made, and who had fled, as one may ſay, to the foot of the altar. Was not this removing one tyranny to eſtabliſh a greater (5). Was Livy (6) in the wrong to remark upon this occaſion, that the people are incapable of keeping within due bounds; humble even to baſeneſs, when they obey, but inſolent to the laſt degree, when they command? The maſſacre of theſe five Ladies was not the raſh action of ſome private perſons; it was commanded by the Senate and people of Syracuſe, and this even while the memory of Hiero was ſtill freſh among them; a Prince, whom they had loved ſo tenderly and juſtly. The injuſtice of their barbarous decree was ſo manifeſt, that they immediately perceived it; they revoked it; but this ſignified nothing; it was already executed. Tandem vulneribus confectæ, cum omnia repleſſent ſanguine, exanimes corruerunt, cædemque per ſe miſerabilem, miſerabiliorem caſus fecit; quod paulò poſt nuntius venit, mutatis repente ad miſericordiam animis, ne interficerentur. Ira deinde ex miſericordia orta, quod adeò feſtinatum ad ſupplicium, neque locus pœnitendi aut regreſſus ab ira relictus eſſet. Itaque fremere multitudo (7). i. e. "At length being covered with "wounds, and having filled all things near them with "blood, they fell down dead; and this miſerable "ſlaughter was made much more miſerable by this "accident, that ſoon after a meſſenger came to ſtop "the execution, the minds of the people being of a "ſudden changed to pity. Reſentments afterwards "aroſe from their pity, becauſe the execution had been "ſo much haſtened, and no room had been left to "prevent the effects of their paſſion. Upon this the "multitude began to murmur." The factions were not extinguiſhed by the intire extirpation of the Royal Family; they increaſed daily, and in a ſhort time overturned the liberty and ſovereignty of the country. They unſeaſonably expoſed Syracuſe to the reſentments of the Romans, who beſieged and ſubdued it. Silius Italicus deſcribes very well the confuſion, into which that city fell, after the tyrant Hieronymus and his relations were killed. It was a confuſion from which the Romans knew how to draw a famous conqueſt. The diſcord of the city encouraged them to beſiege it.

(4) Remark [E].

(5) Ne tyrannos ulciſcendo, quæ odiſſent ſcelera ipſi imitarentur. T. Livius, lib. 24. pag. 393. This is what Heraclea, the daughter of Hiero repreſented to her murtherers.

(6) See his words above citation (21) of the article of HIERO II.

(7) T. Livius, lib. 24. cap. 26.

(3) See the remark [O] of the article PERICLES.

Sævos namque pati faſtus, juvenemque cruento
Flagrantem luxu, & miſcentem turpia duris,
Haud ultra faciles, quos ira metuſque coquebat
Jurati obtruncant, nec jam modus enſibus, addunt
Fœmineam cædem, atque inſontum rapta ſororum
Corpora proſternunt ferro, nova ſævit in armis
Libertas, jactatque jugum: pars Punica caſtra,
Pars Italos & nota volunt: nec turba furentum
Deſit, quæ neutro ſociari fœdere malit (8).

(8) Sil. Ital. lib. 14. pag. m. 589.

i. e. "Not

(a) His name was Gervas Clifton. The father of his former pupil died in 1626, and his pupil in 1628.

Gentleman (a); and applied himſelf to the ſtudy of the Mathematics during that journey [D]. In 1631 he was employed by the Counteſs of Devonſhire (b), to be tutor to her ſon, who was then thirteen years old, and travelled with him three years after into France and Italy. During his ſtay at Paris he applied himſelf to the ſtudy of Natural Philoſophy, and eſpecially to the enquiry into the cauſes of the ſenſitive operations of Animals. He diſcourſed with Father Marſenne daily upon this point. He was recalled to England in 1637; but foreſeeing the civil war, upon reflecting on what paſſed during the firſt ſeſſion of the Parliament of 1640, he went to Paris to ſeek an agreeable retreat there, in order to philoſophize quietly with Father Marſenne, Gaſſendi, and ſome other great men. He wrote there his book de Cive [E], of which he publiſhed but a few

(b) Widow of the Earl of Devonſhire, the father of his former pupil.

i. e. " Not being any longer capable of bearing the " haughty, cruel, and vitious conduct of the young " King, and being inſpired by indignation and fear, " they kill him; and do not ſtop there, but put to " death the innocent women of his family. Liberty, " new to them, rages in arms, and ſhakes off the yoke. " Part of the people incline to the Carthaginians, " and part to the Romans, who were well known to " them; while others, poſſeſſed with the rage of " faction, are averſe to the alliance of both nations."

Repreſent all this as long as you pleaſe, you will not perſuade thoſe, who are prejudiced againſt Monarchy: they will anſwer you, that from the very conſideration, that the diſorders of it cannot be remedied but by ſuch ſhocking miſeries, you ought to conclude, that it is a great evil.

[D] Applied himſelf to the Mathematics during that journey.] It is pity that he ſtayed ſo long before he applied himſelf to it (9): he was above forty years of age, when he began that ſtudy; and this was the reaſon why he could not perfect himſelf in it ſo much as was neceſſary to avoid giving an advantage to his Critics. His fate was like that of Scaliger. For the reſt, he knew perfectly well why Mathematics ought to be ſtudied: it was not to know the properties of angles, or numbers, or lines, or ſurfaces; but in order to habituate the mind to a ſolid method of reaſoning and proving. Euclidi operam dare cœpit, non tam demonſtrationum materia allectus, quam perſpicuitate, certitudine, & indiviſa rationem ſerie delectatus. Non enim Mathematicas artes admiratus eſt vir perſpicaciſſimus, ob laterum & angulorum affectiones, aut numerorum, linearum, ſuperficierum, corporumve mutuas inter ſe proportiones (de homogeneis intelligo quantitatibus) ſubtiliter indicatas; quippe iſtiuſmodi omnia à communi vita remotiora facilè animadvertit; licet ad praxin relata uſus non adeo contemnendi; ſed quod methodo ipſis propria intellectus ad rerum cognitionem optimè duceretur, atque difficilia inveniendi, vera aſſerendi, falſa redarguendi certiſſima ratione imbueretur (10). i. e. " He " began to apply himſelf to Euclid, not ſo much in- " duced to it by the ſubject of the demonſtrations, as " delighted with the perſpicuity, certainty, and unin- " terrupted ſeries of the reaſoning. For this moſt ſa- " gacious man did not admire the ſcience of Mathema- " tics on account of the ſubtle demonſtrations of the pro- " perties and mutual relations of ſides and angles, or " numbers, lines, ſurfaces, or bodies (I mean of ho- " mogeneous quantities) ſince he readily ſaw, that " all theſe things were remote from the uſes of com- " mon life, though when reduced to practice, of no " ſmall advantage; but becauſe by the method pecu- " liar to it the underſtanding is beſt led to the know- " ledge of things, and ſupplied with the moſt certain " means of diſcovering difficult truths, proving what " is true, and refuting what is falſe."

(9) Dolendum nobile hoc ingenium eodem quo & magnum Scaligerum infortunio laboraſſe, quod Mathematicis ſtudiis.. ſerius paulo animum adjecit. Vita Hobbeſ. pag. 40.

(10) Ibid. pag. 39.

[E] He wrote at Paris his book De Cive.] He made one edition of a ſmall number of copies at Paris 1642. He reviſed it ſoon after, and enlarged it in the manner, in which this book appeared in the Amſterdam edition of 1647. It was Sorbiere, who procured this ſecond edition. He did more than this, for he tranſlated it into French, and publiſhed it in that language (11). Hobbes raiſed himſelf a great many enemies by this work; but he obliged the moſt intelligent perſons to own, that no writer had ever penetrated ſo far into the grounds of politics. I do not doubt, but that he has carried many things too far; this is common with thoſe, who write in order to attack a party, againſt which they have conceived a great averſion. Hobbes was exaſperated againſt the principles of the Parliamentarians (12): their conduct was the reaſon of his living out of his own country, and he was informed every day in the place of his exile, that their rebellion triumphed over the royal authority. He went over to the contrary extreme; he taught, that the authority of Kings ought to be unlimited; and that in particular the externals of religion, as the moſt fruitful ſource of civil wars, ought to depend upon their will. There are ſome, who think, that if we conſider only the theory, his ſyſtem is very well connected, and very agreeable to the ideas, which may be formed of a ſtate well ſecured againſt tumults. But becauſe the moſt juſt notions are ſubject to a thouſand inconveniences, when they come to be reduced to practice, that is, when they are ſet againſt an horrible maſs of paſſions, which reign among mankind, it is not difficult to perceive clearly the defects of our author's political ſyſtem. He might anſwer, that the oppoſite ſyſtem includes, even in the theory, a neceſſary principle of confuſion and rebellion. However that be, it is ſaid, that the love of his country inſpired him with the deſign of this book, and that his view was to rectify the falſe principles of the nation which produced there an horrible contempt of the regal authority. Graſſante interim per Angliam civili bello, Hobbius pro ſummo in patriam amore, quod bonum & fidelem ſubditum maximè decuit; populares ſuos ſanioribus quam quæ hactenus obtinuerant principiis imbuere, exacerbatos hominum animos ad pacis & concordiæ rationes revocare, & in ſummæ poteſtatis obſequium addictiores præſtare anniſus eſt. Quare reliquis poſthabitis ſtudiis, quantum ipſi ſuppetiit temporis Politicæ ſcientiæ impendens, Librum de Cive (cujus pauca duntaxat Exemplaria Pariſiis 1642 evulgaverat) reviſit, & notis utilibus adauxit, in quo ſubditorum contra ſummum imperatorem conjurationes rebellioneſque, & immanes illas de principe regnis vitaque exeundo opiniones penitus damnavit: poteſtati Civili Jura ab Eccleſiaſticis caliginoſorum temporum beneficio prærepta reſtituit, & diram ſectariorum hydram, effrænem nempe conſcientiæ libertatem, heroico auſu perdomuit (15). i. e. " While the civil war was " raging over England, Hobbes, out of the great re- " gard to his country becoming a good and faithful " ſubject, endeavoured to infuſe into his countrymen " ſounder principles, than had before prevailed among " them, to recall their minds, which had been ſowr'd " and exaſperated, to the methods of peace and con- " cord, and to bring them to a greater ſubmiſſion to " the ſupreme authority. Laying aſide therefore other " ſtudies, he ſpent all his leiſure hours in that of po- " litics, and reviſed his book de Cive (of which he " had publiſhed a few copies at Paris in 1642) and " enlarged it with uſeful notes; in which book he " condemned the conſpiracies and rebellions of ſubjects " againſt the ſupreme powers, and all theſe ſhocking " opinions with regard to the depoſing of Kings, and " putting them to death; reſtoring to the civil power " the rights taken from them by the Eccleſiaſtics in " the dark ages, and heroically ſubduing that dread- " ful hydra of the ſectaries, namely, a boundleſs li- " berty of conſcience." The reader I am ſure, will not be diſpleaſed to ſee the judgment of Des Cartes upon this work of Hobbes. " I am opinion, ſays " he (14), that the author of the book de Cive is the " ſame, who wrote the third objections againſt my " meditations (15). I think him a much greater " maſter of morality than of Metaphyſics or Natural " Philoſophy; though I can by no means approve of " his principles or maxims, which are very bad and " very dangerous, becauſe they ſuppoſe all men to be " wicked, or give them occaſion to be ſo. His whole " deſign is to write in favour of monarchy; which

(11) At Amſterdam 1679.

(12) Tum pro ſua in Regem officio atque obſequio, tum pro decumano quo ſemper in Democraticos odio laboravit, libellum ſcripſit juris regii aſſerendi gratia, qui poſtea in librum de Cive, & tandem in Leviathan excrevit. Vita Hobbeſii, pag. 45.

(13) Vita Hobbeſii, pag. 45.

(14) Tom. 3 of his Letters, pag. 104. quoted by Baillet, Vie de Des Cartes, tom. 2. pag. 174.

(15) He was not miſtaken.

few copies in 1642. He taught Mathematics to the Prince of Wales, who had been obliged to retire to France, aad ſpent all his leiſure time in compoſing his Leviathan [F], which he cauſed to be publiſhed in England in 1651. He ſtill reſided at Paris. Tho' he had given proofs of his faith according to the rites of the Church of England [G], yet he was rendered obnoxious to the Epiſcopal party, and this was carried ſo far, that he was ordered not to come near the King any more (c). This was the reaſon of his returning to England, where he lived but in an obſcure manner, conſidering his great merit, in the

(c) See the remark [F].

" might be done to more advantage than he has done; " upon maxims more virtuous and ſolid. He wrote " likewiſe greatly to the diſadvantage of the Church " and Roman Catholic religion; ſo that if he is not " particularly ſupported by ſome powerful intereſt, I " do not ſee how he can eſcape having his book cen- " ſured." Des Cartes, was in the right to diſapprove of the ſuppoſition that all men are wicked; and this puts me in mind, that Montagne, though he knew ſo well the defects of mankind, was diſpleaſed, that Guicciardini imputes to bad motives all the actions related in his Hiſtory (16). It is certain, that there are ſome, who act upon the principles of virtue, and out of a deſire of a good reputation; and that the greateſt part of mankind are only moderately wicked. This mediocrity, I own, is ſufficient to render the courſe of human affairs full of iniquity, and marked almoſt throughout with traces of the corruption of the human heart; but it would be much worſe (17), if the greateſt part of mankind were not capable of reſtraining upon many occaſions their bad inclinations through fear of diſgrace, or hope of praiſe. Now this is a proof that the corruption is not carried to the higheſt pitch. I do not conſider here the good effects of true religion; I conſider man in general.

(16) See the remark [E] of the article GUICCIARDINI.

(17) The reaſon why innocence is not oppreſſed upon many occaſions, is the mediocrity, which I am ſpeaking of. See the remark [A] of the article EDWARD IV towards the end.

POLITICAL ideas found to be defective in practice.

With regard to the inconveniences which may ariſe from the ſuppoſitions of Hobbes put in practice, I ſay again, that we muſt not attack them upon that foot; for has not the oppoſite ſyſtem in practice many great inconveniences? Do what you pleaſe, raiſe ſyſtems better than Plato's republick, than Sir Thomas More's Utopia, or Campanella's Commonwealth of the Sun, &c. all theſe fine ideas will be found defective when they come to be reduced to practice. The paſſions of men, which ſpring from one another in a prodigious variety, will ſoon deſtroy the hopes which may be conceived from theſe beautiful Syſtems. See what happens when Mathematicians endeavour to apply to matter their ſpeculations concerning points and lines. They do whatever they pleaſe with their lines and ſuperficies; theſe are mere ideas of the mind, and ſuffer themſelves to be diveſted as much as we think proper of their dimenſions; and for this reaſon we can demonſtrate the fineſt things in the world concerning the nature of a circle, and the infinite diviſibility of matter. But all this fails when we apply it to matter which exiſts out of our minds, and is hard and impenetrable. Here is an image of the human paſſions, compared with the ſpeculations of a man, who forms ideas of a perfect government. You will find a very ſtrong criticiſm of Hobbes's Political Syſtem in the Author whom I quote (18).

(18) Galeottus Galeatius Kariſbergius, apud Deckherum, de Scriptis Adeſpotis, pag. 328.

[F] He ſpent all his leiſure hours in writing his Leviathan.] He means the body politic under the name of this beaſt. The Divines of the Church of England, who attended King Charles II in France, exclaimed vehemently againſt this Book, and ſaid, that it contained a great many impious aſſertions, and that the Author was not of the Royal Party (19). Their complaints were regarded. Hobbes received orders not to come any more to court; and as he had extremely provoked the Papiſts, he thought it not ſafe to continue in France, ſince he was deprived of the King of England's protection. Hoc tanto præſidio orbatus Hobbius, Romanæ Eccleſiæ, Spiritualis Monarchiæ ſatellitum metu correptus eſt, quorum odium implacabile ſeſe merito incurriſſe ſenſerat, ob detectas in Leviathane Eccleſiaſticorum technas, regni tenebrarum dolos, Pontificis Romani poteſtatem malis artibus occupatam, quà in civilis Poteſtatis jura involando, quà ſimplici ac imperitæ plebeculæ ſanctis præſtigiis illudendo; quare Pariſiis ſe minus tutum judicans, mediâ Hyemis tempeſtate aufugiens, in patriam ſe contulit (20). i. e. " Hobbes " being deprived of this important protection, began " to grow fearful of the adherents to the Church of " Rome, that ſpiritual monarchy, whoſe implacable " hatred he knew that he had juſtly incurred, be- " cauſe in his Leviathan he had detected the Arti- " fices of the Eccleſiaſticks, and the frauds of the " kingdom of darkneſs, and expoſed the power of the " Pope, which had been raiſed by unjuſt methods, " by invading the rights of the civil power, and im- " poſing upon the ſimple and ignorant multitude by " pious frauds. Upon this account thinking himſelf " not ſafe at Paris, in the midſt of the winter he " retired from thence into his own country." He tranſlated his Leviathan into Latin, and publiſhed it with an Appendix in 1668 (21), ten years after it was printed in Low-Dutch. The ſubſtance of this book is, that without peace there is no ſecurity in a ſtate, and that peace cannot ſubſiſt without command, nor command without arms; and that arms are of no uſe, if they are not put into the hands of one perſon; and that the terror of arms cannot incline to peace thoſe perſons who are urged to war by an evil more terrible than death itſelf, viz. diſſentions concerning things neceſſary to ſalvation. Ejus autem ſumma hæc fuit, ſine Pace impoſſibilem eſſe incolumitatem, ſine imperio Pacem, ſine Armis Imperium, ſine opibus in unam manum collatis nihil valere Arma, neque metu Armorum quicquam ad pacem profici poſſe in illis, quos ad pugnandum concitat malum morte magis formidandum; nempe dum conſenſum non ſit de iis rebus, quæ ad ſalutem æternam neceſſariæ creduntur, pacem inter cives non poſſe eſſe diuturnam (22). The Leviathan has been very much written againſt, eſpecially in England (23).

(19) Hobbium tanquam partibus regiis minus addictum, tum ut novarum impiarumque in religione opinionum autborem criminabantur. Vita Hobbeſii, pag. 61.

(20) Ibid. pag. 62.

(21) At Amſterdam for John Bleauw, with his other Philoſophical Works, in two volumes in 4to. He could not procure a permiſſion in England to print them there. Ibid. pag. 70.

(22) Ibid. pag. 45.

(23) The catalogue of the writings publiſhed againſt the Leviathan and other works of Hobbes, is to be met with at the end of his Life.

[G] He had given proofs of his faith according to the rites of the Church of England.] Being very ſick near Paris, he had a viſit from Father Marſenne, who had been adviſed not to ſuffer him to die out of the Pale of the Church. This good Father ſate by the ſick man, and after the uſual preambles of conſolation, began to diſcourſe upon the power of the Church of Rome to forgive Sins. Father, anſwered Mr. Hobbes, I have examined a long time ago all theſe points; I ſhould be ſorry to diſpute now; you can entertain me in a more agreeable manner. When did you ſee Mr. Gaſſendi? The honeſt Monk ſaw well enough what he meant, and turned the converſation to other ſubjects (24). Dr. Coſins (25) a few days after offered to pray with Hobbes, who conſented to it upon condition that he made uſe of the prayers of the Church of England (26). After prayers he received the Sacrament. Cum non amplius cuiquam relictus eſt fucum faciendi locus, eo momento ſe Religioni patriis legibus ſtabilitæ addictiſſimum oſtendit, & preci- bus juxta Eccleſiæ Anglicanæ ritus præmiſſis ſupremum Viaticum recepit (27). Upon his return to England in 1651, he found the Churches ſeized by the rebels, as he ſaid, who had no Liturgy, and he was three months without knowing with whom to communicate. Concionantes quidem invenit in Eccleſiis, ſed ſeditioſos; etiam preces extemporarias, & illas audaces, & nonnunquam blaſphemas, Symbolum autem fidei nullum, Decalogum nullum; adeo ut per tres primos menſes non invenerit quibuſcum in ſacris communicare potuerit (28). i. e. " He " found Preachers indeed in the Churches, but rebels; " and extempore prayers, but preſumptuous and ſome- " times blaſphemous; no creed nor decalogue; ſo that " for the three firſt months he could not find with whom " to communicate." But at the end of three months he was carried to an aſſembly, where the Sacrament was adminiſtred according to the Church of England, and he communicated there. The author of his life remarks, that it was an evidence of Hobbes's attachment to the Epiſcopal party and his ſincere belief of the Chriſtian religion, ſince at that time no perſon was obliged to adhere to any particular communion. Alterum ſignum erat non modo hominis partium Epiſcopalium, ſed etiam Chriſtiani ſinceri; nam illo tempore ad Eccleſiam quamcunque legibus aut metu cogebatur nemo (29).

(24) Vita Hobbeſii, pag. 20.

(25) He was afterwards Biſhop of Durham.

(26) Obtulit ſe illi comprecatorem ad Deum. Cui ille cum gratias reddidiſſet, ita (inquit) ſi præcibus præiveris juxta ritum Eccleſiæ noſtræ. Ibid.

(27) Ibid. pag. 59.

(28) Ibid. pag. 21.

(29) Ibid.

the Earl of Devonſhire's houſe [H]. He gained this advantage by his obſcure condition, that he had more leiſure to compoſe his book de Corpore, and ſome others [I]. He received great marks of reſpect from King Charles II at the Reſtoration in 1660 [K]. From that time till his death he applied himſelf to his ſtudies, and to oppoſe the attacks of his adverſaries, who were very numerous. He retained the uſe of his ſenſes till his laſt ſickneſs [L], tho' he was above ninety one years old. His long life was always that of a perfectly honeſt man. He was a lover of his country, he was faithful to his King, a good friend, charitable, and obliging. However he was reckoned an Atheiſt; but the writers of his life maintain, that he had very orthodox notions concerning the nature of God [M]. It was ſaid likewiſe that he was fearful of ſpectres and demons.

[H] He lived in a very obſcure manner at the Earl of Devonſhire's houſe.] It was not for want of powerful friends: but as he had great enemies, all that could be done for him was to ſecure him from being oppreſſed. So that his ſituation was the effect of an equilibrium between his friends and enemies (30). He ſpent the remainder of his life with the Earl of Devonſhire.

(30) Stantem inter amicos & inimicos quaſi in æquilibrio, fecerunt illi ne ob doctrinam oprimeretur, hi ne augeretur. Vita Hobbeſii, pag. 22.

[I] To compoſe his book de Corpore, and ſome others.] This book was printed at London in 1655 under the title of Elementorum Philoſophiæ ſectio prima de Corpore. The year following Hobbes publiſhed Prælectiones ſex ad Profeſſores Savilianos. His book de Homine, ſive Elementorum Philoſophiæ ſectio ſecunda, was printed at London in 1658. His Quæſtiones de Libertate, Neceſſitate, & Caſu, contra Doctorem Bramhallum Epiſcopum Derrienſem, were printed in the ſame city in 1656. He had a diſpute upon the ſame ſubject with Dr. Benjamin Laney Biſhop of Ely, which he did not publiſh till 1676 (31). Dr. Wallis, Profeſſor of Mathematics at Oxford, having publiſhed his Elenchus Geometriæ Hobbianæ in 1655, it occaſioned a diſpute which laſted till Hobbes's death, and in which a great many reproachful terms were made uſe of. Diuturni illius belli Mathematici claſſicum cecinit, quod acerrimo Marte, adhibitis quadra & circino, intervolantibus nonnunquam acutiſſimis convitiorum telis, utrinque geſtum, vicennium & amplius perduravit, nec tandem niſi Hobbiana morte conquievit (32). i. e. "He ſounded "the charge to that long mathematical war, which was "carried on on both ſides with great reſolution, with "ſquare and compaſs, and ſometimes great vollies of "the ſharpeſt reproaches, and continued above ten "years, and was not ended till the death of Hobbes." Sorbiere mentions this diſpute (33).

(31) Ibid. pag. 59.

(32) Ibid. pag. 64, 65.

(33) Sorbiere, Relation d'Ang. pag 78. edit. de Hollande.

[K] He received great marks of reſpect from King Charles II.] Hobbes left the country, and came to London as ſoon as he heard of the King's arrival. His Majeſty paſſed in his coach by the houſe where Hobbes lodged, ſaw him, and ſent for him. He gave him his hand to kiſs, and enquired of him concerning his condition and health. Some time after he gave him a particular audience, aſſured him of his affection, and promiſed him an eaſy acceſs (34). He ordered an excellent painter to draw Hobbes's picture, which he placed in his own cloſet (35). But the moſt ſubſtantial mark of his affection was, that he gave Hobbes an annual penſion (36) of an hundred Jacobus's (37).

(34) Vita Hobbeſii, pag. 66.

(35) Ibid. pag. 28. and 103. See Sorbiere, Relation d'Anglet. pag. 79.

(36) Vita Hobbeſii, pag. 53.

(37) Sorbiere, pag. 79.

[L] He retained his ſenſes till his laſt ſickneſs.] He was able not only to proſecute the ſtudy of the Mathematics, after he was above eighty ſix years of age, but even to write long poems. Quod autem inter rara fœlicitatis exempla numerandum eſt, ſummo ingenii vigore & ſenſibus integris ad obitum uſque in Philoſophia & Matheſi ſe aſſiduò exercitavit, & quod magis mirum, Poëſin exercuit, quâ propriis animi conceptibus exprimendis, quâ aliorum transferendis (38). i. e. "But what "is to be ranked among the rare inſtances of happi"neſs, he enjoyed the utmoſt vigour of his mind, "and his ſenſes intire till his death, daily cultivating "the ſtudy of Philoſophy and Mathematics, and, "what is more ſurprizing, exerciſed his talent in "Poetry, both in expreſſing his own thoughts, and "tranſlating thoſe of others." He tranſlated into Engliſh verſe ſome books of the Odyſſey in 1674; and becauſe this eſſay met with the approbation of the learned, he publiſhed a like verſion of the Iliad and the whole Odyſſey not long after, with a Diſſertation upon the Excellencies of Heroic Poetry)39).

(38) Vita Hobbeſii, pag. 98, 99.

(39) Ibid. pag. 99.

[M] The writers of his life maintain, that he had very orthodox notions concerning the Nature of God.] Of all the moral virtues there was only that of religion, which was a point in diſpute with regard to Hobbes. He was frank (40), civil, communicative of what he knew (41), a good friend, a good relation, charitable to the poor (42), a ſtrict obſerver of juſtice (43), and never troubled himſelf about amaſſing of wealth (44). This laſt quality is a favourable prejudice for the goodneſs of his life; for there is no ſource of more bad actions than that of avarice. So that when perſons knew Hobbes, they had no occaſion to aſk whether he eſteemed and loved virtue; but one might have been tempted to aſk him this queſtion:

Heus age, reſponde, minimum eſt quod ſcire laboro,
De Jove quid ſentis (45)?

"But pray anſwer me a ſmall queſtion; what are "your ſentiments concerning Jove?"

(40) Ibid. pag. 30. and 111.

(41) Ibid. pag. 111.

(42) Ibid. pag. 108.

(43) Juſtitiæ erat cum ſcientiſſimus tum tenaciſſimus. Ibid. pag. 30.

(44) Cum eſſet pecuniæ negligentiſſimus. Ibid.

(45) Perſius, Sat. 2. ver. 17.

The anſwer which he might have made ſincerely, if we believe the writers of this life, would have been, that there is but one God, who is the origin of all things, and that we ought not to circumſcribe him within the compaſs of our narrow reaſon. Deum agnovit, cumque rerum omnium originem, intra anguſtos tamen humanæ rationis cancellos nullatenus circumſcribendum (46) He would have added, that he embraced Chriſtianity as he found it eſtabliſhed in England by the Laws; Religionem Chriſtianam quatenus in Eccleſia Anglicana, reſectis ſuperſtitionis ineptiis, regni legibus ſtabilitur, ex animo amplexus eſt (47); but that he had an averſion to the diſputations of Divines; that he chiefly eſteemed what tends to the practice of piety and good manners; and that he uſed to blame thoſe Prieſts, who vitiated the ſimplicity of Religion by the mixture either of a ſuperſtitious worſhip, or a great many vain and profane ſpeculations. Quicquid autem ad Pietatis exercitia, aut bonos mores conferret, plurimi fecit. Sanctius illi, & reverentius viſum, de Deo credere quam ſcire. Sacerdotes interim inculpare ſolitus eſt, qui Chriſtianam Religionem abſolutam ac ſimplicem, vel ſuperſtitione maculârent, vel inanibus interdum profanis ſpeculationibus implicarent (48). They conclude, that thoſe who accuſed him of Atheiſm, were notorious ſlanderers, who could not alledge any other pretence than this, that he had rejected a great many ſcholaſtic doctrines, according to which certain attributes were aſcribed to God, the model of which is taken from our narrow genius. Quare fortiter calumniati ſunt, qui ipſum Atheiſmi reum detulerunt; quod inde forſitan profectum quia Scholaſticorum aliorumque iſte de grege morem rejecerat, qui otioſi in Muſæis ſuis ſedentes, juxta imbecillem ingenii ſui captum, Naturæ Divinæ incomperta affingunt attributa (49). It is certain that there is no accuſation which has been ſo much abuſed as that of atheiſm. An infinite number of little minds or malicious perſons caſt it upon all thoſe who confine their aſſertions within the great and ſublime truths of ſolid metaphyſics, and the general doctrines of the Scriptures. They would oblige them moreover to adopt all the particular Articles which they are uſed to propoſe a thouſand times to the people. All who dare leave this road are irreligious perſons and free-thinkers, if we believe certain Divines. It was thus Monconys fell under this ſcandalous imputation. He diſputed ſometimes very freely againſt thoſe, who leſſened the Majeſty of God by the conduct which they aſcribed to him, and by the weak reaſons which they made uſe of; and they did him the injuſtice to treat him as a Libertine, though he was poſſeſſed of the moſt ſublime idea imaginable of God. Read the following paſſage. "That agreeable man-

(46) Vita Hobbeſii, pag. 105.

(47) Ibid. pag. 106.

(48) Ibid. pag. 107.

(49) Ibid.

demons [N]. They assert this to be a fable. They own, that in his youth he was a little addicted to wine and women (d); but that however he chose to live a Bachelor, that he might not be diverted from the study of Philosophy. He had thought much more than he had read [O], and never troubled himself about a great Library. He died December the 4th 1679 at the Earl of Devonshire's house, after a sickness of six weeks (e).

(d) Ætate adhuc intra juventutis terminos constante (liceat verum fateri) nec abstemius fuit, nec μισόγυνος. Vita Hobbesii, pag. 104.

(e) Taken from his Life, printed in 1682.

" ner, in which we see him sometimes contradict cer" tain men of narrow minds, who weaken by their " arguments the truths which they would establish,
" made such prejudiced people mistake this instance
" of his openness and candour for a criminal liberty.
" But his solid virtue and sincere piety shone every " where, and left marks of them to be found in " these voyages. In his last sickness he owned to " one of friends, that he had always preserved in his " heart a profound submission and infinite regard to" wards the Deity, of whom he had an idea more
" sublime than any thing which mankind have con" ceived of him. When he was at Alexandria, at a " time, when he seemed to refuse nothing to satisfy his
" curiosity, being one night alone upon the terrasses,
" which serve as a roof to the houses in the East, he " found himself of a sudden so possessed with a sen" sible knowledge of the Deity, that he spent part of " that night with inexpressible comfort in continued
" adorations of the Principle of all Beings (50)."

(50) Preface to Voiages de Monconys, pag. 7.

[N] It is said likewise, that he was fearful of spectres and demons.] His friends have treated this as a mere fable. Nec minus falso à nonnullis insimulatus est, tanquam solitudinem fugeret, spectra metuens & phantasmata, vana stultorum terriculamenta, quæ Philosophiæ suæ lumine dissipaverat (51). i. e. " Nor was he less falsely " charged by some with avoiding to be alone, out " of fear of spectres and apparitions, the vain terrors " of the ignorant, but which he had driven away by " the light of his Philosophy." But it seems they do not deny, that he durst not be alone; they only intimate that it was because he was apprehensive of assassins. If his Philosophy exempted him from the other fear, and not from this, it did not prevent him from being unhappy; one might apply to him a thought of Horace:

(51) Vita Hobbesii, pag. 106.

Somnia, terrores magicos, miracula, sagas,
Nocturnos lemures, portentaque Thessala rides?
. . . . . .
Quid te exempta juvat spinis de pluribus una (52)?

(52) Hor. Epist. 2. lib. 2. pag. 208.

" Do you laugh at dreams, the terrors of Magic, mi-
" racles, witches, nightly apparitions, and Thessa-
" lian portents? . . . . What are you the better for " being delivered from one thorn out of a great
" many?"

To remark this by the'by, his philosophical principles were not at all proper to remove the fear of apparitions of spirits; for to reason consequentially, there are no Philosophers, who have a less right to reject Magic and Sorcery, than those, who deny the existence of God. But, it is said, Hobbes did not believe the existence of spirits. Say rather, that he did not believe any substances distinct from matter. Now as this did not hinder him from believing, that there were a great many substances, which design and do harm or good to others, he might and ought to believe that there are some beings in the air or elsewhere as capable of doing mischief, as the corpuscles, which, as he affirmed, form all our thoughts in the brain. How came these corpuscles to have more knowledge of the means of doing harm, than those other beings? And what reason is there to prove, that these other beings know not the manner of acting upon our brain, in order to make us see a spectre?

Let us view the point in another light. A man would be not only rash, but even very extravagant, if he were to attempt to maintain, that there was a man, who imagined, that he saw an apparition; and I do not believe that the most obstinate and extravagant unbeliever ever asserted this. All that they do is reduced to this, that those persons, who have thought that they saw the apparition of spirits, had their imaginations disturbed. It is confessed then that there are certain parts of the brain, which being affected in such or such a manner, excite the image of an object, which does not really exist without us, and occasion a man, whose brain is thus modified, to think he sees at two paces distance from him a frightful spectre, a fury, a phantom threatning. Such things happen in the head of the most incredulous, either while they sleep, or labour under a most violent fever. Will they venture to maintain after this, that it is impossible for a man, who is awake, and is not in a delirium, to receive in certain parts of the brain an impression very like that, which according to the laws of nature is connected with the appearance of a phantom? If they are obliged to own the possibility of this, they cannot promise that a spectre never will appear before them, that is to say, that when they are awake they shall think they see either a man or a beast, when they are alone in a chamber. Hobbes might therefore imagine, that a certain combination of atoms agitated in his brain, would expose him to such a vision, though he was persuaded that no angel nor soul of a dead person was concerned in it. He was extremely timorous, and consequently he had reason to distrust his imagination, when he was alone in a chamber in the night; for in spite of him, the remembrance of what he had read and heard concerning the apparitions of spirits, would revive, though he was not persuaded, that these things were real. These images, joined to his timorous disposition, might play him a bad trick. And it is very certain, that a man of the same incredulity with himself, but of greater courage, would be amazed, if he should think he saw any person, whom he knew to be dead, enter his chamber. These apparitions in a dream are frequent, whether we believe the immortality of the soul or not. Suppose, that they should happen once to an incredulous man awake, as they often do when he is asleep, we may conceive, that he would be afraid, though he should have a great deal of courage. For a much stronger reason therefore may we believe, that Hobbes would have been greatly terrified.

[O] He had thought much more than he read.] It is frankly owned in his Life, that for a man who had lived so long, his reading was very inconsiderable. He used to say, that if he had spent as much time in reading as other men of learning, he should have been as ignorant as they. Quin & illud sæpe dicere solitus est, quod si tantum libris incubuisset, quantum alii è Literatis vulgo faciunt, eadem cum illis ignorantia laborasset (53). He considered also another thing, which led him not to regard much a large library; which was, that most books are but extracts and copies from others. Lectio ejus pro tanto ætatis decursu non magna; Authores versabat paucos, sed tamen optimos. Homerus. Virgilius, Thucydides, Euclides, illi in deliciis erant. Ingentem Librorum suppellectilem, qua superbiunt Bibliothecæ, non magnifecit, cum Mortales plerumque pecorum ritu antecedentium insistentes vestigiis, vix extra tritas calles, & semitas ab ipsis quorum Tutelæ & Regimini subsunt, præstitutas, evagari audeant (54) i. e. " His reading, " for so long a life, was not considerable. He read " few authors, but those the best. He was greatly " delighted with Homer, Virgil, Thucydides, and " Euclid. He did not value a vast number of books, " which make a shew in libraries, since mankind, " like cattle, commonly follow the steps of those, " who go before, and scarce ever ventured to deviate " from the beaten paths, which are chalked out to " them by those, who are their guides."

(53) Vita Hobbesii, pag. 112.

(54) Idem, ibid.

☞HOBBES (THOMAS). We shall add to Mr. Bayle's article of this Philosopher a catalogue a catalogue of his works [A], and ſome particulars omitted by that writer. Dr. White Kennet informs us (a), that while Mr. Hobbes lived in the Earl of Devonſhire's family, his profeſſed rule was to dedicate the morning to his health, and the afternoon to his ſtudies. And therefore at his firſt riſing he walked out and climbed any hill within his reach; or if the weather was not dry, he fatigued himſelf within doors by ſome exerciſe or other to be in a ſweat, recommending that practice upon this opinion, that an old man had more moiſture than heat, and therefore by ſuch motion heat was to be acquired, and moiſture expelled. After this he took a comfortable breakfaſt, and then went round the lodgings

(a) Memoirs of the Family of Cavendiſh, pag. 107, & ſeqq. ſubjoined to the Doctor's Funeral Sermon on William Duke of Devonſhire, printed at London 1708 in fol.

[A] A catalogue of his Works.] They are as follow. I. He tranſlated into Engliſh The Hiſtory of the Grecian war by Thucydides, London 1628 and 1676 in fol. and ſince reprinted in two volumes in 8vo. II. De Mirabilibus Pecci, a Latin Poem printed at London 1636 in 8vo. Secunda editio, Londini 1666 in 4to. It was tranſlated into Engliſh by a perſon of quality, and the Tranſlation publiſhed with the original at London 1678 in 8vo. III. Elementa Philoſophica ſeu Politica de Cive, id eſt, de Vitâ civili & politicâ prudenter inſtituendâ: Paris 1642 in 4to. Mr. Hobbes printed but a few copies of this Book, and reviſed it afterwards, and made ſeveral additions to it, with which improvements it was printed by Elzevir at Amſterdam 1647 in 12o, under the direction of Monſieur Sorbier, who publiſhed a French Tranſlation of it under this title: Elemens Philoſophiques du Citoyen. Traité de Politique, ou les Fondemens de la Societé Civile decouverts par Thomas Hobbes, & traduits en François par un de ſes Amis, printed by Bleau at Amſterdam 1649 in 8vo. There have been ſince that time ſeveral editions of the Latin text. Dr. John Bramhall, Biſhop of Derry in Ireland, informs us (1), that ten years before, he had given Mr. Hobbes "about ſixty exceptions, one half of them political, the other half "theological, to that book, and every exception juſtified by a number of reaſons, to which he never "yet vouchſafed any anſwer." Gaſſendus in a Letter to Sorbiere tells us, that our Author's book de Cive deſerves to be read by all, who would have a deep inſight into the ſubject. Puſendorf (2) obſerves that he had been much obliged to Mr. Hobbes, whoſe Hypotheſis in this book, though it ſavours a little of irreligion, is in other reſpects ſufficiently ingenious and ſound. Neque parum debere nos profitemur Thomæ Hobbes, cujus Hypotheſis in Libro de Cive, etſi quid profani ſapiat, tamen cætera ſatis arguta & ſana. Conringius (3) accuſes our Author of vanity for boaſting, that civil Philoſophy was not older than his book de Cive, whereas there is nothing good in it which was not always known; and he remarks, that the moſt abſurd conſequences muſt flow from his ſhocking principles that mankind are not naturally inclined to ſociety, but to diſcord and war. Anglus Hobbes libro Elementorum Philoſophicorum de Cive edito non dubitavit hiſce verbis gloriari, Phyſica res novitia eſt, ſed Philoſophiæ Civilis multo adhuc magis, ut quæ antiquior non ſit libro quem de Cive ſcripſi. Inſano profectò faſtu. Satis autem apertum eſt in illis quidem de Cive Elementis nihil eſſe bonum, quod non ob omni retro memoriâ fuerit notum. Ne quidem illud autem potuiſſet ſuperesſe, ſi præjudicii defectu vidiſſet Hobbes quam multum alia deduci debeant ex illo horribili principio, natura inter homines non ſocietatem, ſed diſcordiam inſtitutam eſſe; & verò illo poſito omnis ſocietas humana contra naturæ fuerit inſtitutum. Quo aſſerto neſcio num quid excogitari poſſit abſurdum magis & improbum. IV. An Anſwer to Sir William Davenant's Epiſtle or Preface to Gondibert, Paris 1650 in 12mo, and afterwards printed with Gondibert. Mr. Hobbes's anſwer is dated at Paris January 10th 1650. V. Humane Nature: or the fundamental Elements of Policy; being a diſcovery of the faculties, acts, and paſſions of the ſoul of man, from their original cauſes, according to ſuch philoſophical principles as are not commonly known or aſſerted. By Tho. Hobbes of Malmsbury, London 1650 in 12mo. In the Epiſtle Dedicatory of our Author to William Earl of Newcaſtle, dated May 9th 1640, he obſerves, that "from the principal parts "of nature, reaſon and paſſion, have proceeded two "kinds of learning, mathematical and dogmatical. "The former is free from controverſy and diſpute, "becauſe it conſiſteth in comparing figure and motion only; in which things Truth and the Intereſt of "Men oppoſe not each other. But in the other there is "nothing indiſputable, becauſe it compareth men, "and meddleth with their right and profit; in which "as oft as reaſon is againſt a man, ſo oft will a man "be againſt reaſon. And from hence it cometh, "that they who have written of juſtice and policy in "general, do all invade each other and themſelves "with contradictions. To reduce this doctrine to the "rules and infallibility of reaſon, there is no way, "but firſt to put ſuch principles down for a foundation, "as paſſion not miſtruſting may not ſeek to diſplace; "and afterwards to build thereon the truth of caſes "in the law of nature, (which hitherto have been "built in the air,) by degrees, till the whole have "been inexpugnable. Now, my Lord, the principles "fit for ſuch a foundation are thoſe which heretofore "I have acquainted your Lordſhip withal in private "diſcourſe, and which by your command I have "here put into a method. To examine caſes thereby "between Sovereign and Sovereign, or between Sovereign and Subject, I leave to them that ſhall find "leiſure and encouragement thereto. For my part, my "Lord, I preſent this to your Lordſhip for the true "and only foundation of ſuch ſcience. For the ſtile, "it is therefore the worſe, becauſe, whilſt I was "writing, I conſulted more with Logic than with "Rhetoric: but for the doctrine, it is not ſlightly "proved, and the concluſions thereof of ſuch nature, "as, for want of them, government and peace have "been nothing elſe to this day but mutual fears; and "it would be an incomparable benefit to the commonwealth, that every one held the opinion con"cerning Law and Policy here delivered." Next to the Dedication follows an Epiſtle to the Reader under the name of F. B. i. e. Francis Bowman the bookſeller, but ſaid to be written by Seth Ward, afterwards Biſhop of Sarum (4). In this Epiſtle we are informed, that Mr. Hobbes had written a body of Philoſophy upon ſuch principles and in ſuch order as are uſed by men converſant in demonſtration. This he hath diſtinguiſhed into three parts, De Corpore, De Homine, De Cive, each of the conſequents beginning at the end of the antecedent, and inſiſting thereupon, as the latter books of Euclid upon the former. The laſt of theſe he hath already publiſhed in Latin beyond the ſeas: The ſecond is this now preſented; and if theſe two receive juſtice in the world, there is hopes we may obtain the firſt. He, whoſe care it is and labour to ſatisfy the judgment and reaſon of mankind, will condeſcend ſo far, we hope, to ſatisfy the deſire of thoſe learned men, whom theſe ſhall either have found or made; which cannot be until they ſhall analytically have followed the grand phænomena of ſtates and kingdoms thorough the paſſions of particular men into the elemental principles of natural and corporeal motions. The former work was publiſhed by the Author, and ſo is out of danger; this by a friend with leave from him. And to ſecure this, you are entreated to conſider the relations wherein it ſtands, eſpecially to the book de Cive. It was thought a piece of religion not to make any change without the Author's advice, which could not ſuddenly be obtained; and ſo it comes forth innocently, ſuppoſing nothing to have happened ſince the dedication of it; which, if it ſeem a ſolæciſm to ſome, it may to others give ſatisfaction in calling to mind thoſe times and opportunities, to which we are indebted for thoſe admirable compoſitions. In the ſecond Chapter Mr. Hobbes endeavours to prove theſe points; that the ſubject wherein colour and image are inherent, is not the object or thing ſeen. That there is nothing without us really, which we call an image or colour. That the ſaid image or colour is but an apparition unto us of the motion, agitation, or alteration, which the object worketh in the brain or ſpirits, or ſome internal ſubſtance of the head. And that as in conception of viſion, ſo alſo in conceptions that ariſe from the other ſenſes, the ſubject of their inherence is not the ſubject, but the Sentient.

(1) Preface to his book intitled, A Defence of true Liberty from antecedent and extrinſicall Neceſſity, edit. London 1655 in 8vo.

(2) In the Preface to his Elementa Juriſprudentiæ Univerſalis.

(3) De Civili Prudentiâ, cap. 14.

(4) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 643. 2d edit. London 1721.

lodgings to wait upon the Earl, the Counteſs, and the children, and any conſiderable ſtrangers, paying ſome ſhort addreſſes to all of them. He kept theſe rounds till about twelve o' clock, when he had a little dinner provided for him, which he eat always by himſelf without ceremony. Soon after dinner, he retired into his ſtudy, and had his candle with ten or twelve pipes of tobacco laid by him; then ſhutting the door, he fell to ſmoaking, and thinking, and writing for ſeveral hours. He retained a friend or two at court, and eſpecially the Lord Ar—n, to protect him, if occaſion ſhould require. He uſed to ſay, "that it was lawful to make uſe of ill inſtruments to do ourſelves good. If

In the third chapter he defines Imagination to be conception remaining, and by little and little decaying from and after the act of ſenſe; and ſleep to be the privation of the act of ſenſe, the power remaining; and dreams to be the imagination of them that ſleep. He obſerves, that "the cauſes of dreams, if they be natural, are the actions or violence of the inward "parts of a man upon his brain, by which the paſſages of ſenſe by ſleep benummed, are reſtored to "their motion." With regard to remembrance, he remarks, that by the ſenſes, which are numbered according to the organs to be five, we take notice of the objects without us, and that notice is our conception thereof; but we take notice alſo ſome way or other of our conceptions, for when the conception of the ſame thing cometh again, we take notice that it is again; that is to ſay, we have had the ſame conception before; which is as much as to imagine a thing paſt, which is impoſſible to the ſenſe, which is only of things preſent. This therefore may be accounted a ſixth ſenſe, but internal (not external, as the reſt,) and is commonly called Remembrance. In the fourth chapter he tells, that "the ſucceſſion of conceptions in "the mind, ſeries or conſequence of one after another "may be caſual and incoherent, as in dreams for the "moſt part; and it may be orderly, as when the former thought introduceth the latter; and this is the "diſcourſe of the mind. But becauſe the word diſcourſe is commonly taken for the coherence and "conſequence of Words, I will, ſays he, to avoid "Equivocation, call it Diſcurſion." He remarks, that the cauſe of the coherence or conſequence of one conception to another is their firſt coherence or conſequence, when they are produced by ſenſe. That the remembrance of ſucceſſion of one thing to another, that is, of what was antecedent, and what conſequent, and what concomitant, is called an Experiment, whether the ſame be made by us voluntarily, as when a man putting any thing into the fire to ſee what effect the fire will produce upon it; or not made by us, as when we remember a fair morning after a red evening. To have had many experiments is what we call experience, which is nothing elſe but remembrance of what antecedents have been followed by what conſequents. In the ſixth chapter he obſerves, that "there are two "kinds of knowledge, whereof the one is nothing "elſe but ſenſe, or knowledge original, and remembrance of the ſame; the other is called Science, or "knowledge of the Truth of Propoſitions, and how "things are called; and is derived from underſtanding." In the ninth chapter he remarks, "that "the compariſon of the life of man to a race, though "it hold not in every part, yet it holdeth ſo well for "this our purpoſe, that we may thereby both ſee and "remember almoſt all the paſſions beforementioned. But this race we muſt ſuppoſe to have no "other Goal nor other Garland, but being foremoſt "and in it. To endeavour, is Appetite. To be remiſs, is Senſuality. To conſider them behind, is "Glory. To conſider them before, is Humility. To "loſe ground with looking back, Vain-Glory. To "be holden, Hatred. To turn back, Repentance. To "be in breath, Hope. To be weary, Deſpair. To "endeavour to overtake the next, Emulation. To "ſupplant or overthrow, Envy. To reſolve to break "through a ſtop foreſeen, Courage. To break through "a ſudden ſtop, Anger. To break through with eaſe, "magnanimity. To loſe ground by little Hinderances, "Puſillanimity. To fall on the ſudden, is diſpoſition "to weep. To ſee another fall, is diſpoſition to laugh. "To ſee one out-gone, whom we would not, is Pity. "To ſee one out-gone whom we would, is Indignation. To hold faſt by another, is to love. To carry "him on that ſo holdeth, is Charity. To hurt ones "ſelf for haſte, is Shame. Continually to be out-"gone, is Miſery. Continually to out-go the next be-"fore, is Felicity. And to forſake the courſe, is to "die." In the tenth chapter he tells us, that the difference of wits hath its original from the different paſſions, and from the ends to which the appetite leadeth them. That fancy conſiſts in finding unexpected ſimilitudes of things, otherwiſe much unlike, from whence proceed thoſe grateful ſimilies, metaphors, and other tropes, by which both Poets and Orators have in their power to make things pleaſe or diſpleaſe, and ſhew well or ill to others as they like themſelves; or elſe in diſcerning ſuddenly diſſimilitude in things that otherwiſe appear the ſame. That "indocibility or difficulty of being taught "ariſes from a falſe opinion that men know already "the truth of that, which is called in queſtion." That a principal defect of the mind is that which men call madneſs, which appeareth to be nothing elſe but ſome imagination of ſome ſuch predominancy above the reſt, that we have no paſſion but from it. And this conception is nothing elſe but exceſſive vain-glory, or vain Dejection, which is moſt probable by theſe examples following, which proceed in appearance every one of them from pride or ſome dejection of mind. As firſt, we have had the example of one, that preached in Cheapſide from a cart there inſtead of a pulpit, that he himſelf was Chriſt, which was ſpiritual pride or madneſs. We have had alſo divers examples of learned madneſs, in which men have manifeſtly been diſtracted upon any occaſion, that hath put them in remembrance of their own ability. Amongſt the learned men may be remembered, I think, alſo thoſe that determine of the time of the world's end, and other ſuch points of prophecy. And gallant madneſs of Don Quixotte is nothing elſe but an expreſſion of ſuch height of vain-glory as reading of romance may produce in puſillanimous men. Alſo a rage and madneſs of love are but great indignations of them, in whoſe Brains is predominant the contempt of their enemies or their miſtreſſes. And the pride taken in form and behaviour hath made divers men run mad, and to be ſo accounted under the name of Fantaſtick. And as theſe are the examples of extremities, ſo alſo are there examples too many of the degrees, which may therefore be well accounted follies. As it is a degree of the firſt, for a man without certain evidence to think himſelf inſpired, or to have any other effect of God's holy Spirit than other godly men have. Of the ſecond, for a man continually to ſpeak his mind in a cento of other men's Greek or Latin ſentences. Of the third, much of the preſent gallantry in love and duel. Of rage a degree is malice; and of fantaſtick madneſs, affectation. "As the former examples exhibit to us madneſs, and the degrees thereof, proceeding from the exceſs of self-"opinion; ſo alſo there be other examples of madneſs, and the degrees thereof proceeding from too "much vain fear and dejection; as in thoſe melancholy men that have imagined themſelves as brittle "as glaſs, or have had ſome other like imagination: "and degrees hereof are all thoſe exorbitant and cauſeleſs fears, which we commonly obſerve in melancholy perſons." In the eleventh chapter he remarks, that as "God Almighty is incomprehenſible, it followeth, that we can have no conception or image "of the Deity, and conſequently, all his attributes "ſignify our inability and defect of power to conceive "any thing concerning his nature, and not any conception of the ſame, excepting only this, that "there is a God. For the effects we acknowledge naturally do include a power of their producing before they were produced; and that power preſuppoſeth ſomething exiſtent that hath ſuch power; "and the thing ſo exiſting with power to produce, "if it were not eternal, muſt needs have been produced by ſomewhat before it, and that again by "ſomething elſe before that, till we come to an eternal (that is to ſay the firſt) power, of all powers,

"and

" If I were caſt, ſaid he, into a deep pit, and the Devil ſhould put down his cloven " foot, I would take hold of it to be drawn out by it." Towards the end of his life he had very few books, and thoſe he read but very little, thinking he was now only to digeſt what formerly he had fed upon. If company came to viſit him, he would be free in diſcourſe till he was preſſed or contradicted; and then he had the infirmities of being ſhort and peeviſh, and referring to his writings for better ſatisfaction. His friends, who had the liberty of introducing ſtrangers to him, made theſe terms with them before their admiſſion, that they ſhould not diſpute with the old man, nor contradict him. In October

" and firſt cauſe of all cauſes; and this is it which all " men conceive by the name of GOD, implying eter- " nity, incomprehenſibility, and omnipotency. And " thus all that will conſider, may know that God is, " though not what he is; even as a man that is born " blind, though it be not poſſible for him to have " any imagination what kind of thing fire is, yet he " cannot but know that ſomewhat there is that men " call fire, becauſe it warmeth him." He obſerves, that " by the name of Spirit we underſtand a body " natural, but of ſuch ſubtilty, that it worketh not " upon the ſenſes, but that filleth up the place, which " the image of a viſible body might fill up. Our " conception therefore of ſpirit conſiſteth of figure with- " out colour; and in figure is underſtood dimenſion; " and conſequently to conceive a ſpirit is to conceive " ſomething that hath dimenſion. But ſpirits ſuper- " natural commonly ſignify ſome ſubſtance without " dimenſion, which two words do flatly contradict " one another; and therefore when we attribute the " name of ſpirit unto God, we attribute it not as " a name of any thing we conceive, no more than " we aſcribe unto him ſenſe and underſtanding; but, " as a ſignification of our reverence we deſire to ab- " ſtract from him all corporeal groſſneſs." He tells us likewiſe, that " ſince the knowledge we have of " ſpirits is not natural knowledge, but faith from ſu- " pernatural revelation given to the holy writers of " ſcriptures, it followeth that of inſpirations alſo, which " is the operation of ſpirit in us, the knowledge " which we have, muſt all proceed from ſcripture. " That the knowledge we have of good and evil in- " ſpiration cometh not by viſion of an angel that may " teach it, nor by miracle that may ſeem to confirm " it, but by conformity of doctrine with this article " and fundamental point of Chriſtian Faith, which " alſo St. Paul ſaith is the ſole foundation, That Jeſus " Chriſt is come in the fleſh, 1 Cor. iii. 11." That ſeeing our Faith, that " the ſcriptures are the word " of God, began from the confidence and truſt we " repoſe in the Church; there can be no doubt but " that their interpretation of the ſame ſcriptures, when " any doubt or controverſy ſhall ariſe, by which this " fundamental point, that Jeſus Chriſt is come in the " fleſh may be called in queſtion, is ſafer for any " man to truſt to, than his own whether reaſoning or " ſpirit, that is to ſay, his own opinion." VI. De Corpore Politico; or, Of the Elements of the Law. London 1650 in 12mo. A French tranſlation of this piece was printed at Amſterdam 1653 in 12mo. VII. Leviathan; or, The Matter, Form, and Power of a Commonwealth. London 1651 in fol. reprinted again with the old date in 1680 in fol. A Latin verſion with an Appendix was publiſhed at Amſterdam 1668 in 4to. It was likewiſe tranſlated into Low-Dutch, and printed at Amſterdam 1678 in 4to. To the Engliſh Editions is ſubjoined a Review of the Leviathan. Marchamont Needham (5) tells us, that Mr. Hobbes being at Paris when this Book was firſt publiſhed, " he ſent one of them as a preſent to the King of " Scots (6), which he accepted in regard he had " been his tutor in the mathematicks; but being af- " terwards informed by ſome of his Prieſts, that that " Book did not only contain many principles of " atheiſm and groſs impiety (for ſo they call every " thing that ſquares not with the Clergy-Intereſt) " but alſo ſuch that were prejudicial to the Church, " and reflected dangerouſly upon the majeſty of ſo- " vereign Princes; therefore when Mr. Hobbes came " to make a tender of his ſervice to him in perſon, he " was rejected, and word brought him by the Mar- " quis of Ormond, that the King would not admit " him, and withal told him the reaſon. By which " means Mr. Hobbes declines in credit with his friends " there of the royal ſtamp." A great many Writers have animadverted upon the Leviathan, particularly Sir Robert Filmer in his Obſervations concerning the Original of Government, upon Mr. Hobbes's Leviathan, Mr. Milton againſt Salmaſius, H. Grotius de Jure Belli. London 1652 in 4to. An Examination of the Political Part of Mr. Hobbes's Leviathan. By George Lawſon, Rector of More in the County of Salop. London 1657 in 8vo. The Creed of Mr. Hobbes examined in a feigned Conference between him and a Student of Divinity. London 1670 in 8vo. This was written by Mr. Thomas Teniſon, afterwards Archbiſhop of Canterbury; and who in the Dedication to the Earl of Mancheſter dated at Cambridge June the 4th 1670, obſerves, that Mr. Hobbes hath affirmed of God, that he is a bodily ſubſtance, though moſt refined, and forceth evil upon the very wills of men; framed a model of government pernicious in its conſequence to all nations; ſubjected the Canon of Scripture to the Civil Powers, and taught them the way of turning the Alcoran into the Goſpel; declared it lawful, not only to diſſemble, but plainly to renounce our faith in Chriſt, in order to the avoidance of perſecution; and even managed a quarrel againſt the very Elements of Euclid. " He hath long ago, " ſays Mr. Teniſon, publiſhed his errors in Theology in " the Engliſh tongue, inſinuating himſelf by the hand- " ſomneſs of his ſtyle into the minds of ſuch whoſe " fancy leadeth their judgments; and to ſay truth " of an enemy, he may with ſome reaſon pretend to " maſtery in that language." In 1676 was printed the Earl of Clarendon's Brief View and Survey of the dangerous and pernicious Errors to Church and State in Mr. Hobbes's book, intitled, Leviathan. Oxford 1676 in 4to; the ſecond impreſſion of which was publiſhed the ſame year. The Imprimatur by Dr. Ralph Bathurſt Vice-Chancellor of Oxford, was dated July the 1ſt 1676. The Dedication to the King is dated at Moulins May the 10th 1673. In the Introduction (7) the Earl obſerves, that Mr. Hobbes's Leviathan " contains in it good learning of all kinds, " politely extracted, and very wittily and cunningly " digeſted, in a very commendable, and in a vigorous " and pleaſant ſtyle;" and that Mr. Hobbes was " a " man of excellent parts, of great wit, ſome reading, " and ſomewhat more thinking; one who has ſpent " many years in foreign parts and obſervations, under- " ſtands the learned as well as modern languages, hath " long had the reputation of a great Philoſopher and " Mathematician, and in his age hath had converſation " with very many worthy and extraordinary men; to " which, it may be, if he had been more indulgent in " the more vigorous part of his life, it might have " had greater influence upon the temper of his mind, " whereas age ſeldom ſubmits to thoſe queſtions, en- " quiries, and contradictions, which the laws and li- " berty of converſation require. And it hath been " always a lamentation among Mr. Hobbes's friends, " that he ſpent too much time in thinking, and too " little in exerciſing thoſe thoughts in the company of " other men of the ſame or of as good faculties; for " want whereof his natural conſtitution with age con- " tracted ſuch a moroſity, that doubting and contra- " dicting men were never grateful to him. In a word, " Mr. Hobbes is one of the moſt ancient acquaintance " I have in the world, and of whom I have always " had a great eſteem, as a man, who beſides his emi- " nent parts of learning and knowledge, hath been " always looked upon as a man of probity and a life " free from ſcandal." The Earl informs us (8), that when Prince Charles, afterwards King Charles II, went firſt to Paris from the iſle of Jerſey, and the Lords Capel and Hopton ſtayed with himſelf at Jerſey, he heard ſhortly after, that Mr Hobbes, who was then at Paris, had printed his book de Cive there. The Earl wrote to Dr. Earle, who was then the Prince's Chaplain and Tutor, to remember him kindly to Mr. Hobbes,

(5) Mercurius Politicus, num. 84. from Jan. 8. to Jan. 15. ann. 1651-2.

(6) King Charles II.

(7) Pag. 2. 2d edit. Oxon 1676 in 4to.

(8) Pag. 6, 7.

October 1666, when complaint was made in Parliament againſt his books, and ſome proceedings againſt him were depending, with a Bill againſt Atheiſm and Profaneneſs, he was at Chatſworth, and appeared extremely diſturbed at the news of it, fearing that meſſengers would come for him, and the Earl of Devonſhire would deliver him up, and the two Houſes of Parliament commit him to the Biſhops, and they decree him a Heretic, and return him to the Civil Magiſtrate for a writ de Heretico comburendo. This terror upon his ſpirits made him ſink very much. He would be often confeſſing to thoſe about him, with whom the Earl was well acquainted, and to deſire him to ſend him that book by the ſame token that Mr. Sydney Godolphin, who had been killed in the civil wars, had left Mr. Hobbes a legacy of two hundred pounds. The book was immediately ſent to the Earl by Mr. Hobbes, with a deſire that he would tell him, whether he was ſure that there was ſuch a legacy, or how he might take notice of it to receive it. The Earl ſent Mr. Hobbes word that he might depend upon it for a truth, and that he believed, that if he found ſome way ſecretly (to the end there might be no public notice of it in regard of the Parliament) to demand it of Mr. Francis Godolphin, brother of Mr. Sidney Godolphin, (the former of whom had told the Earl of it,) he would pay it. This information was the ground of the dedication of the Leviathan to Mr. Francis Godolphin, whom Mr. Hobbes had never ſeen. When the Earl went ſome few years after from Holland with K. Charles II (after the murder of Charles I) to Paris, from whence he went ſhortly his Majeſty's Embaſſador to Spain, Mr. Hobbes viſited him, and told him, that Mr. Godolphin confeſſed the legacy, and had paid 100 l. and promiſed to pay the other in a ſhort time; for all which he thanked the Earl, and ſaid he owed it to him, for he had never otherwiſe known of it. When the Earl returned from Spain by Paris, Mr. Hobbes frequently came to him, and told him, that his book, which he would call Leviathan, was then printing in England, and that he received every week a ſheet to correct, of which he ſhewed the Earl one or two ſheets, and thought it would be finiſhed within little more than a month; and ſhewed him the Epiſtle to Mr. Godolphin, which he intended to ſet before it, and read it to him, and concluded, that he knew when the Earl read his book he would not like it, and thereupon mentioned ſome concluſions; upon which the Earl aſked him, why he would publiſh ſuch doctrine; to which, after a diſcourſe between jeſt and earneſt upon the ſubject, he ſaid, The truth is, I have a mind to go home. Within a (9) Pag. 8. "ſhort time after I came, ſays the Earl (9), into Flanders, "which was not much more than a month from the "time that Mr. Hobbes had conferred with me, Leviathan was ſent to me from London; which I read with "much appetite and impatience. Yet I had ſcarce "finiſhed it, when Sir Charles Cavendiſh (the noble "brother of the Duke of Newcaſtle who was then "at Antwerp, and a Gentleman of all the accompliſhments of mind that he wanted of body, being in all "other reſpects a wonderful perſon) ſhewed me a letter "he had then received from Mr. Hobbes, in which he "deſired he would let him know freely what my opinion was of his book. Upon which I wiſhed he "would tell him that I could not enough wonder, that "a man who had ſo great a reverence for civil government, that he reſolved all wiſdom and religion itſelf "into a ſimple obedience and ſubmiſſion to it, ſhould "publiſh a book, for which by the conſtitution of any "government now eſtabliſhed in Europe, whether monarchical or democratical, the author muſt be puniſhed in the higheſt degree and with the moſt ſevere "penalties. With which anſwer, which Sir Charles "ſent to him, he was not pleaſed, and found afterwards when I returned to the King to Paris, that I "very much cenſured his book, which he had preſented, engroſſed in vellum in a marvellous fair "hand, to the King, and likewiſe found my judgment "ſo far confirmed, that a few days before I came thither, he was compelled ſecretly to fly out of Paris, "the Juſtice having endeavoured to apprehend him, "and ſoon after eſcaped into England, where he never "received any diſturbance. After the King's return "he came frequently to the Court, where he had too "many diſciples, and once viſited me. I received him "very kindly, and invited him to ſee me often; but he "heard from ſo many hands, that I had no good opinion of his book, that he came to me only that one "time: and methinks I am in a degree indebted to "him, to let him know ſome reaſon, why I look with "ſo much prejudice upon his book, which hath gotten him ſo much credit and eſtimation with ſome "other men." The Earl afterwards obſerves (10), (10) Pag. 317.

that the "Review and Concluſion of the Leviathan is "only an abridgment and contracting the moſt contagious poiſon, that runs thro' the book, into a leſs "veſſel or volume, leſt they, who ſhould, will not take "the pains to read the book, or reading it may by "inadvertency and incogitancy not be hurt enough by "it, may here in leſs room, and more nakedly, ſwallow his choiceſt doctrine at one morſel; and is in "truth a ſly addreſs to Cromwell, that being then out "of the Kingdom, and ſo being neither conquered "nor his ſubject, he might by his return ſubmit to his "government, and be bound to obey it: which being "uncompelled by any neceſſity or want, but having as "much to ſuſtain him abroad as he had to live upon at "home, could not but proceed from a ſincere heart and "uncorrupted. This Review and Concluſion he made "ſhort enough to hope, that Cromwell himſelf might "read it; where he ſhould not only receive the pawn "of his new ſubject's allegiance, by declaring his own "obligation and obedience, but by publiſhing ſuch "doctrine, as being diligently infuſed by ſuch a maſter "in the myſtery of government, might ſecure the peo"ple of the Kingdom (over whom he had no right to "command) to acquieſce and ſubmit to his brutal "power." The Leviathan was cenſured by the Parliament in October 1666, at which time a bill againſt atheiſm and profaneneſs was brought into the Houſe; and the Univerſity of Oxford condemned this book and that de Cive by a decree paſſed on the 21ſt of July 1683, and ordered them to be publicly burnt, with ſeveral other treatiſes, which were excepted againſt: VIII. A Compendium of Ariſtotle's Rhetoric, and Ramus's Logic. IX. A Letter about Liberty and Neceſſity. London 1654 in 12mo. The third edition was printed in 1684 in 8vo. Dr. Bernard Laney wrote Obſervations upon this piece of Mr. Hobbes, which were printed at London in 1676 in 12mo. Dr. Bramhall Biſhop of Derry publiſhed likewiſe a A Defence of true Liberty from antecedent and extrinſecal Neceſſity, being an Anſwer to a late Book of Mr. Thomas Hobbes of Malmſbury, intitled, A Treatiſe of Liberty and Neceſſity. Written by the Right Reverend John Bramhall, D. D. and Lord Biſhop of Derry. London 1655 in 8vo. Dedicated to the Marquiſs of Newcaſtle. In the Preface Biſhop Bramhall obſerves, that this "Treatiſe was not penned "for the preſs, but privately undertaken, that by the "ventilation of the queſtion truth might be cleared "from miſtakes. The ſame was Mr. Hobbes's deſire at that time, as appeareth by four paſſages in "his book (), wherein he requeſteth and beſeecheth, () Pag. 18, 26, 35, and 80.
"that it may be kept private. But either through forgetfulneſs or change of judgment he hath now cauſed "or permitted it to be printed in England without "either adjoining my firſt diſcourſe, to which he "wrote that anſwer, or ſo much as mentioning this "reply, which he hath had in his hands now theſe "eight years. So wide is the date of his letter in "the year 1652 from truth, and his manner of dealing "with me in this particular from ingenuity, if the "edition were with his own conſent. Howſoever here "is all that paſſed between us upon this ſubject without any addition or the leaſt variation from the "original." The Biſhop tells us (11), that the firſt (11) Pag. 2.
day he read over Mr. Hobbes's Defence of the Neceſſity of all things, was April the 20th 1646; and that then his occaſions permitting him, and an advertiſement from a friend awakening him, he ſet himſelf to a ſerious examination of it. Mr. Hobbes, in anſwer to an argument, which he repreſents as urged by the Biſhop, "that if the concourſe of all the cauſes "neceſſitate the effect, then it follows that Adam had "no him, that he meant no harm, and was no obſtinate man, and was ready to make any ſatisfaction. For his prevailing principle, and his reſolution upon it, was to ſuffer for no cauſe whatever. Under theſe apprehenſions of danger he drew up in 1680 An Hiſtorical Narration of Hereſie and the puniſhment thereof, labouring to prove, that there was no authority to determine Hereſy, or to puniſh it, when he wrote the Leviathan; and that ſince the diſſolving of the High Commiſſion Court no other Courts have any power to decree any opinion to be heretical; and wonders, that ſince his Majeſty had reſtored the Biſhops, and pardoned the Preſbyterians, both the one and the other ſhould accuſe in Parliament his Book of Hereſy; and ſo runs into a complaint of the fierceneſs of Divines. Under the ſame apprehenſions he framed An Apology for himſelf and his Writings, ſetting forth, that the exceptionable things in his Leviathan were not his opinions ſo much as his ſuppoſitions, humbly ſubmitted to thoſe who had the Eccleſiaſtical power, and never ſince dogmatically maintained by him either in writing or diſcourſe. And it is much to be ſuſpected, as Dr. Kennet obſerves (b), that upon this occaſion he began to make a more open ſhew of Religion and Church Communion. He now frequented the chapel, joined in

(b) Ibid. pag. 111, 112.

"no true liberty," had anſwered in theſe words: "I deny "the conſequence, for I make not only the effect, but "alſo the election of that particular effect to be ne"ceſſary, in as much as the will itſelf, and each pro"penſion of a man during his deliberation is as much "neceſſitated, and depends on a ſufficient cauſe, as "any thing elſe whatſoever. As for example, it is "no more neceſſary that fire ſhould burn, than that a "man or other creature, whoſe limbs be moved by "fancy, ſhould have election, that is, liberty to do "what he has a fancy to, though it be not in his "will or power to chooſe his fancy, or chooſe his "election or will. This doctrine, becauſe he ſays "he hates, I doubt had better been ſuppreſſed, "as it ſhould have been, if both your Lordſhip and "he had not preſſed me to an anſwer." The Biſhop in his reply writes thus (12). "My argument was "this; if any of theſe, or all of theſe cauſes formerly "recited, do take away true liberty, (that is, ſtill in"tended from neceſſity) then Adam before his fall had "no true liberty. But Adam before his fall had "true liberty. He miſrecites the argument, and de"nies the conſequence, which is ſo clearly proved, "that no man living can doubt of it. Becauſe Adam "was ſubjected to all the ſame cauſes, as well as we, "the ſame decree, the ſame preſcience, the ſame in"fluences, the ſame concourſe of cauſes, the ſame effi"cacy of objects, the ſame dictates of reaſon. But "it is only a miſtake, for it appears plainly by his "following diſcourſe, that he intended to deny, not "the conſequence, but the aſſumption; for he makes "Adam to have had no liberty from neceſſity before "his fall; then he proceeds ſo far as to affirm, that "all human wills, his and ours, and each propenſion "of our wills, even during our deliberation, are as "much neceſſitated as any thing elſe whatſoever; that "we have no more power to forbear thoſe actions "which we do, than the fire hath power not to burn. "Though I honour T. H. for his perſon and for his "learning, yet I muſt confeſs ingenuouſly, I hate "this doctrine from my heart. And I believe both I "have reaſon ſo to do, and all others, who ſhall ſe"rioufly ponder the horrid conſequences which flow "from it. It deſtroys liberty, and diſhonours the na"ture of man. It makes the ſecond cauſes and out"ward objects to be rackets, and men to be but the "tennis-balls of deſtiny. It makes the firſt cauſe, "that is, God Almighty, to be the introducer of all "evil and ſin into the world, as much as man, yea "more than man, by as much as the motion of the "watch is more from the artificer, who did make it "and wind it up, than either from the ſpring or the "wheels, or the thread, if God by his ſpecial influence "into the ſecond cauſes did neceſſitate them to ope"rate as they did.... Excuſe me, if I hate this "doctrine with a perfect hatred, which is ſo diſhonour"able both to God and man, which makes men to blaſ"pheme of neceſſity, to ſteal of neceſſity, to be hanged "of neceſſity, and to be damned of neceſſity. And there"fore I muſt ſay and ſay again, Quicquid oſtendes mihi "ſic incredulus odi. It were better to be an Atheiſt, "to believe no God; or to be a Manichee, to believe "two Gods, a God of good, and a God of evil; or "with the Heathens to believe thirty thouſand Gods, "than thus to charge the true God to be the proper "cauſe and the true author of all the ſins and evils, "which are in the world." X. The Queſtions concerning Liberty, and Neceſſity, and Chance, ſtated and debated between Mr. Hobbes and Dr. Bramhall, Biſhop of London-Derry. London 1656, in 4to. XI. Elementorum Philoſophiæ Sectio prima de Corpore. London, 1655, in 8vo. In Engliſh, London, 1656, in 4to. Sectio ſecunda, London 1657, in 4to. Amſterdam 1668, in 4to. XII. Six Leſſons to the Profeſſors of Mathematics of the Inſtitution of Sir Henry Savile. London, 1656, in 4to. This is written againſt Mr. Seth Ward, and Dr. John Wallis. XIII. The marks of the abſurd Geometry, rural Language, &c. of Dr. John Wallis. London, 1657, in 8vo. Dr. Wallis having publiſhed in 1655 his Elenchus Geometriæ Hobbianæ, it occaſioned ſeveral books to be written by them againſt each other. XIV. Examinatio & Emendatio Mathematicæ hodiernæ, ſex Dialogis comprehenſa. London, 1660, in 4to. Amſterdam, 1668, in 4to. XV. Dialogus Phyſicus, ſive de Naturâ Aeris. London, 1661, in 4to. Amſterdam, 1668, in 4to. XVI. De Duplicatione Cubi. London, 1661, in 4to. Amſterdam, 1668, in 4to. XVII. Problemata Phyſica, una cum Magnitudine Circuli. London, 1662, in 4to. Amſterdam, 1688, in 4to. XVIII. De Principiis & Ratiocinatione Geometrarum, contra faſtuoſum Profeſſorem. London, 1666, in 4to. Amſterdam, 1668, in 4to. XIX. Quadratura Circuli, Cubatio Sphæræ, Duplicatio Cubi; unà cum Reſponſione ad objectiones Geometriæ Profeſſoris Saviliani Oxoniæ editas anno 1669. London, 1669, in 4to. XX. Roſetum Geometricum, ſive Propoſitiones aliquot fruſtra antehac tentatæ, cum cenſurâ brevi Doctrinæ Wallisianæ de motu. London, 1671, in 4to. There is an account of this book in the Philoſophical Tranſactions, No. 72, for the year 1671. XXI. Three Papers preſented to the Royal Society againſt Dr. Wallis, with Conſiderations on Dr. Wallis's Anſwer to them. London, 1671, in 4to. XXII. Lux Mathematica, &c. Cenſura Doctrinæ Wallisianæ de Libra. Roſetum Hobbeſii. London, 1672, in 4to. XXIII. Principia & Problemata aliquot Geometrica ante deſperata, nunc breviter explicata & demonſtrata. London, 1674, in 4to. XXIV. Epiſtola ad Dom. Anton. à Wood, Authorem Hiſtoriæ & Antiquitat. Univerſit. Oxon. Dated April the 20th, 1674, printed in half a ſheet on one ſide. "It was "written to Mr. Wood, ſays that Hiſtorian (13), upon "his complaint made to Mr. Hobbes of ſeveral de"letions and additions made in and to his life and "character (which he had written of him in that book) "by the publiſher (Dr. Jo. Fell) of the ſaid Hiſt. & "Antiq. to the great diſhonour and diſparagement of "the ſaid Mr. Hobbes. Whereupon, when that Hiſ"tory was finiſhed, came out a ſcurrilous Anſwer to "the ſaid Epiſtle, written by Dr. Fell, which is at "the end of the ſaid Hiſtory." In this Anſwer Dr. Fell ſtiles Mr. Hobbes, irritabile illud & vaniſſimum Malmſburienſe Animal; and tells us, that one Mr. J. A. had ſent a magnificent elogium of Mr. Hobbes drawn up by him, or more probably by Hobbes himſelf, in order to be inſerted in the Hiſt. & Antiq. Univerſ. Oxon. but the Editor finding in this elogium a great many things foreign to the deſign of that work, and far from truth, he ſuppreſſed what he thought proper. And whereas Mr. Hobbes had complained, that in the Hiſtoria & Antiq. only ingenium acre, but not ſobrium was aſcribed to him, Dr. Fell obſerves, that he

(12) Pag. 59.

(13) Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 645.

in the ſervice, and was generally a partaker of the Sacrament. And whenever any ſtrangers, in converſation with him, ſeemed to queſtion his belief, he would always appeal to his conformity in Divine Service, and referred them to the Chaplain for a teſtimony of it. Others thought it a mere compliance with the orders of the family, and obſerved, that he never went to any Pariſh Church, and even in the Chapel upon Sundays he went out after prayers, and turned his back upon the ſermon; and when any friend aſked the reaſon of it, he gave no other anſwer but this, that they could teach him nothing but what he knew. He did not conceal his hatred to the Clergy; but it was viſible, that the hatred was owing to his fear of their civil intereſt and power. He had often a jealouſy that the Biſhops would burn him; and of all the Bench he was moſt afraid of Dr. Seth Ward Biſhop of Sarum, becauſe he had moſt offended him. Dr. Kennet obſerves likewiſe (c), that his whole life was governed by his fears. In the firſt Parliament of 1640, while it ſeemed to favour the meaſures of the Court, he wrote a little Tract in Engliſh, wherein he demonſtrated, as himſelf tells us (d), that "all the power and rights neceſſary "for the peace of the Kingdom were inſeparably annexed to the Sovereignty in the "King's perſon." But in the ſecond Parliament of that year, when they proceeded fiercely againſt thoſe who had written or preached in defence of the Regal Power, he, doubting how they would uſe him, went over into France, the firſt of all that fled, and there continued eleven years (e). At Paris he wrote and publiſhed his Leviathan, a plea for

(c) Ibid. pag. 113.

(d) Conſiderations upon the Reputation, Loyalty, Manners and Religion of Thꝺ. Hobbes, by way of Letter to a learned Perſon, pag. 5.

(e) Ibid. pag. 6.

ſhall not appeal to thoſe, who were converſant with him and his writings, but to Mr. Hobbes himſelf, who in his book De Principiis & Ratiocinatione Geometrarum ſays thus: In magno quidem periculo verſari video Exiſtimationem meam, qui a Geometris ferè omnibus diſſentio, eorum enim, qui iiſdem rebus mecum aliquid ediderunt, aut ſolus inſanio ego, aut ſolus non inſanio; tertium non eſt, niſi quod dicet forte aliquis, inſaniamus omnes. Upon which Dr. Fell obſerves thus. "Si "inſanire eum contingat; non ab Editore injuria facta "eſt; ſi alii omnes eruditi mente ſuâ moti inſanire "illum cenſeant, non eſt quod furioſorum ſententia "illum moveat, nec queratur reperiri hominem unum, "qui demens pariter cum fuerit, communi omnium "ſuffragio calculum adjecerit." XXV. A Letter to William Duke of Newcaſtle, concerning the Controverſy had with Dr. Laney, Biſhop of Ely, about Liberty and Neceſſity. London, 1670, in 12mo. XXVI. Decameron Phyſiologicum: Or ten Dialogues of Natural Philoſophy, &c. London, 1678, in 8vo. To this is added The Proportion of a ſtrait Line to hold the Arch of a Quadrant. An account of this book is publiſhed in the Philoſophical Tranſactions, No. 138, pag. 965. XXVII. His laſt words and dying Legacy. Printed on one ſide of a ſheet of paper in December 1679, and publiſhed by Charles Blunt, Eſq; from the Leviathan, in order to expoſe Mr. Hobbes's doctrine. XXVIII. His memorable Sayings in his Books and at the Table. Printed on one ſide of a broad ſheet of paper, with his picture before them. XXIX. Behemoth: The Hiſtory of the Civil Wars of England from 1640 to 1660. London, 1679, in 8vo. XXX. Vita Thomæ Hobbes. This is a Latin Poem written by himſelf, and printed at London in 4to, in the latter end of December 1679; and a fortnight after that, viz. about the 10th of January, it was publiſhed in Engliſh verſe by another hand, at London 1680, in five ſheets in Folio. The Latin copy was reprinted and ſubjoined to Vitæ Hobbianæ Auctarium. XXXI. Hiſtorical Narration of Hereſy, and the Puniſhment thereof. London, 1680, in four ſheets and an half in folio; and in 1682 in 8vo. This is chiefly extracted out of the ſecond chapter De Hæreſi of his Appendix to the Leviathan. After he has reduced from our Saviour's time the different puniſhments by laws enacted againſt thoſe, who were declared Heretics throughout the ſeveral ages of the church, he proceeds to an account of the laws in force in England againſt Heretics from the firſt propoſition of Chriſtianity, to the laſt civil wars; and obſerves that the High Commiſſion had the ſole power of declaring what was Hereſy according to the ſenſe of the firſt four General Councils, inveſted in them in Queen Elizabeth's reign; that after this Court was taken away at the beginning of the Civil Wars, no perſon ſtood empowered by lawful authority, either to declare what was Hereſy, or to puniſh any one proved to be this way obnoxious. At this time, he tells us, his Leviathan was publiſhed, for the writing of which he could not be accounted heretical; and he gives the reaſons, which induced him to write and publiſh that book. This treatiſe of our Author was animadverted upon by Mr. John Dowell, Vicar of Melton-Mowbray in Leiceſterſhire, in a little tract, intitled, The Leviathan heretical: Or the charge exhibited in Parliament againſt Mr. Hobbes juſtified, &c. Oxford, 1683, in 12mo, in which book, pag. 137, the Author informs us, that Cromwell having gained the Protectorſhip, was ſo highly pleaſed with many of the principles laid down in the Leviathan, that he offered Mr. Hobbes the place of Secretary to him. XXXII. Vita Thomæ Hobbes, written by himſelf in proſe, and printed at Caropolis, i. e. London, and prefixed to Vitæ Hobbianæ Auctarium, 1681, in 8vo, and 1682, in 4to. XXXIII. A Brief of the Art of Rhetoric, containing in ſubſtance all that Ariſtotle hath written in his three books of that ſubject. Printed in 12mo, but without a date. It was afterwards publiſhed in two books. London, 1681, in 8vo, the firſt bearing the title of The Art of Rhetoric, and the other of The Art of Rhetoric plainly ſet forth; with pertinent examples for the more ready underſtanding and practice of the ſame. To which is added, XXXIV. A Dialogue between a Philoſopher and a Student of the Common Laws of England. XXXV. An Anſwer to Archbiſhop Bramhall's book called, The catching of the Leviathan. London, 1682, in 8vo. XXXVI. Seven Philoſophical Problems, and two Propoſitions of Geometry. London, 1682, in 8vo, dedicated to the King in 1662. XXXVII. An Apology for himſelf and his Writings. In this piece he obſerves, that thoſe things, which he delivered in the Leviathan, were not his own opinions, but ſubmitted to the judgment of the Eccleſiaſtical Power; and that he never maintained any of them afterwards either in writing or diſcourſe; and that what is in it of Theology, contrary to the general ſenſe of Divines, was not introduced as his own opinion, but propounded with full ſubmiſſion to thoſe, who had the Eccleſiaſtical Power. XXXVIII. Hiſtoria Eccleſiaſtica carmine Elegiaco concinnata. Aug. Trinob. i. e. London, 1688, in 8vo. XXXIX. Tractatus Opticus, inſerted in Merſennus's Cogitata Phyſico-Mathematica. Paris, 1644, in 4to. XL. Obſervationes in Carteſii de primâ Philoſophiâ Meditationes. Theſe objections, which are called the third, are publiſhed in all the editions of Des Cartes's Meditations. XLI. He tranſlated into Engliſh verſe, The Voyage of Ulyſſes; or Homer's Odyſſes, book 9, 10, 11, 12. London, 1674, in 8vo. And XLII, Homer's Iliads and Odyſſes. London, 1675 and 1677, in 12mo. To which is prefixed a Preface concerning Heroic Poetry. Mr. Pope in the Preface to his tranſlation of Homer's Iliad tells us, that Mr. Hobbes in his Verſion "has given a correct explanation of the "ſenſe in general; but for particulars and circum-"ſtances lopps them, and often omits the moſt b auti-"ful. As for its being eſteemed a cloſe tranſlation, "I doubt not many have been led into that error "by the ſhortneſs of it, which proceeds not from the "following the original line by line, but from the "contractions abovementioned. He ſometimes omits "whole ſimiles and ſentences, and is now and then "guilty of miſtakes, into which no writer of his "learning could have fallen, but through careleſneſs. "His for the abſolute power of Princes, which ſeemed to be calculated for the new meaſures then laid for the Government of France, to obtain the eaſier protection from the Church. The ſame paſſion of fear that brought him into France, drove him back to England. For as ſoon as he was diſmiſſed from his attendance on the King, to eſcape the reſentments of thoſe whom he thought his enemies, he made haſte for England, and confeſſed, that he came home, becauſe he would not truſt his ſafety with the French Clergy (f). He was not called in queſtion by Cromwell, who had no reaſon to diſlike his tenets; and in the other changes he was always ſafe. After the Reſtoration he watched all opportunities to ingratiate himſelf with the King and his prime Miniſters; and looked upon his penſion to be more valuable, as an earneſt of favour and protection, than upon the other account. His following courſe of life was to be free from danger. He could not endure to be left in an empty houſe; whenever the Earl of Devonſhire removed, he would go along with him, even to his laſt ſtage from Chatſworth to Hardwick, when in a weak condition he dared not be left behind, but made his way upon a feather-bed in a coach, though he ſurvived the journey but a few days. He could not bear any diſcourſe of death, and ſeemed to caſt off all thoughts of it. He delighted to reckon upon longer life. The winter before he died he made a warm coat, which he ſaid muſt laſt him three years, and then he would have ſuch another. In his laſt ſickneſs his frequent queſtions were, Whether his diſeaſe was curable? And when intimations were given that he might have eaſe, but no remedy, he uſed this expreſſion, I ſhall be glad then to find a hole to creep out of the world at; which are reported to be his laſt ſenſible words; and his lying ſome days following in a ſilent ſtupefaction ſeemed to be owing to his mind more than to his body. The only thought of death, which he appeared to entertain in time of health, was to take care of ſome inſcription on his grave. He would ſuffer ſome friends to dictate an epitaph, among which he was beſt pleaſed with theſe words, This is the true Philoſopher's ſtone (g).

(f) Ibid. pag. 8.

(g) Kennet, ubi ſupra, pag. 113-117.

" His Poetry, as well as Ogilby's, is too mean for " criticiſm." He left likewiſe ſeveral MSS. among which was his Defence in the affair relating to Daniel Scargil, A. B. of C. C. College in Cambridge, written in one ſheet; a copy of which Sir John Berkenhead had in his poſſeſſion, upon whoſe deceaſe it came into the hands of Henry Birkenhead (14). Mr. Francis Peck has publiſhed (15) two original letters of our Author. The firſt is dated at Paris October $\frac{21}{31}$, 1634, wherein he reſolves the following queſtion; Why a man remembers leſs his own face, which he ſees often in a glaſs, than the face of a friend, that he has not ſeen of a great time? " My opinion, ſays Mr. Hobbes, in " general is, that a man remembers beſt thoſe faces, " whereof he has had the greateſt impreſſions; and that " the impreſſions are the greater for the oftener ſeeing " them, and the longer ſtaying upon the ſight of them. " Now you know, men look upon their own faces but " for ſhort fits, but upon their friends faces a long time " together, whilſt they diſcourſe or converſe together; " ſo that a man may receive a greater impreſſion from " his friend's face in a day, than from his own in a " year. And according to their impreſſion the image " will be freſher in his mind. Beſides, the ſight of " one's friends two hours together is of greater force " to imprint the image of it than the ſame quantity " of time by intermiſſions. For the intermiſſions do " eaſily deface that, which is but lightly imprinted. " In general, I think that that laſteth longer in the " memory," which hath been ſtronglier received by the " ſenſe." The other Letter is dated at Florence, April $\frac{6}{16}$th 1636, addreſſed to his worthy friend Mr. Glen. In this he writes thus: " I long infinitely to " ſee thoſe bookes of the Sabbaoth [Dr. Heylin's Hiſtory of the Sabbath, in two books, London 1636, in " 4to.] and am of your mind, they will put ſuch " thoughts into the heads of vulgar people, as will " conferre little to their good life. For when they ſee " one of the Ten Commandments to be Jus humanum " merely, (as it muſt be if the Church can alter it,) " they will hope alſo, that the other nine may be ſo " too. For every man hitherto did believe, that the " Ten Commandments were the moral, that is, an " eternal law." T.

(14) See Vitæ Hobbianæ Auctarium, pag. 108, 109.

(15) Deſiderata Curioſa, vol. 1. lib. 6. num. 10, 11. pag. 23, 24.

HOCHSTRAT (JAMES) in Latin Hochſtratus or Hochſtratanus, was thus called from the village in which he was born (a). He ſtudied Philoſophy at Louvain, and took his degree of Maſter of Arts there in the year 1485. He entered amongſt the Dominican Friars, and was Prior of their Monaſtry at Cologne, Doctor and Profeſſor of Divinity, and Inquiſitor in the three Eccleſiaſtical Electorates (b). There never was a man who deſerved more than him to be honoured with this laſt employment; for he had all the bad qualities, that are neceſſary for inquiſitors and informers. He was paſſionate; he would impeach any man with the leaſt pretence, and be at once both the judge and the accuſer [A]; he uſed to make very unfaithful extracts from the books of his adverſaries,

(a) Hoogſtraten in Brabant, between Antwerp and Bergen-op-zoom.

(b) Val. Andreas, Biblioth. Belg. pag. 412.

DISPUTES between Reuchlin and Hochſtrat.

[A] He would be at once both the Judge and the accuſer.] This appeared very plainly in Reuchlin's affair. A Jew (1) lately converted to the Chriſtian Religion, had ſlandered him in a book intitled, Manuale ſpeculum. Reuchlin vindicated himſelf in a book intitled, Speculum oculare, in which he ſhewed that his enemies had publiſhed above thirty four Calumnies againſt him (2). Hochſtrat, the chief ſupporter of the converted Jew, engaged the divines of Cologne in this controverſy, and perſuaded them to make extracts from the Speculum oculare, which were publiſhed with artful and malicious remarks, deſigned to defame Reuchlin over all the world as a favourer of Judaiſm. Has propoſitiones . . . . . ubi vidit Reuchlinus peſſime ac non ſine crimine falſi ex Oculari Speculo excerptas . . . . . rogat Theologos illos &c . . . . . erupit tota Theologorum concio ſuppetias Chriſti ſacris recens initiato Judæo latura duce Tungro, qui articulos ſeu propoſitiones de Judaico favore nimis ſuſpectas ex Speculo Oculari extruxit, adjectis annotationibus & animadverſionibus: atque hoc omne non vernacula lingua, qua utrinque hactenus certatum fuit, adornat, ſed Latina; eo haud dubiè conſilio, ut apud exteras gentes nationeſque nomen Capnionis inviſum redderet, & cum multa dictorum citatione ſecurius falleret (3). i. e. " When " Reuchlin ſaw that theſe propoſitions were moſt unfairly extracted from his Speculum oculare, and not " without being falſified . . . . . he deſired thoſe Divines, &c. . . . . The whole tribe of the Divines " aroſe to ſupport the newly converted Jew, having " Hochſtrat at their head, who extracted the propoſitions from the Speculum Oculare, which ſeemed to " favour

(1) Named John Pfeffercorn.

(2) Dilucide, & quod dicimus, ad oculum ibi oſtendit, adverſarios pluribus quam triginta quatuor mendaciis ad ſui contumeliam uſos eſſe. Jo. Henricus Majus, in Oratione de Vita Reuchlini, folio D 3 verſo.

(3) Majus in Oratione de Vita Reuchlini, folio D 4.

(c) See the remark [A].

ries (c), and would never confeſs that he had been a ſlanderer; and he impudently aſſerted hereſies in the very books, in which he pretended to refute the heretics [B]. They forced " favour too much of Judaiſm, and added to them his " own notes and obſervations, and publiſhed the " whole, not in the German tongue, in which the " controverſy had till then been carried on, but in " Latin, with a deſign no doubt to render Reuchlin " odious to all nations, and the better to impoſe upon " the world by a great number of quotations ſuppoſed " to be from his own Book." Reuchlin anſwered this work in a Latin apology directed to the Emperor, upon which he was proſecuted in form before the Elector of Mentz: as he could not appear himſelf on account of his old age, he ſent an attorney thither, who in his name made very well grounded exceptions againſt our James Hochſtrat, which yet were not admitted. Cum propter ſenium & imbecillitatem corporis tantum iter tam brevi temporis ſpacio conficere non poſſet, mittebat eò curatorem Petrum Staffelium Nurtingenſem, qui actorem Hochſtratum tanquam inimicum ſibi infenſiſſimum & meritò ſuſpectum recuſabat, ob eas cauſas, quas publice allegabat . . . . Tametſi vero nil obtineret Reuchlinus (4). i. e. " As Reuchlin could " not undertake ſo great a journey in ſo ſhort a time " becauſe of his old age and infirmities, he ſent thi- " ther Peter Staffelius of Nuring to act for him as " his attorney, who challenged the proſecutor Hoch- " ſtrat as Reuchlin's moſt bitter enemy, and a man " juſtly ſuſpected of partiality for ſuch reaſons as were " then publickly alledged . . . . . Though Reuchlin " could obtain nothing &c." Hochſtrat would not ſuffer himſelf to be accuſed (5); whereupon Reuchlin's attorney appealed to the Court of Rome; notwithſtanding which Hochſtrat procured a ſentence againſt Reuchlin, and without waiting till the fifteen days were paſt, before which it could not be lawfully proclaimed, as though he might already triumph, he ordered all the Curates of Mentz to give the people notice, that all they who had Reuchlin's books ſhould carry them immediately to the Commiſſaries upon pain of excommunication. Interea Hochſtratus quaſi jam acturus triumphum omnibus per Moguntiacum ſacerdotibus mandat, ut publicè populum ſub proſcriptionis pœna monerent, ſi qui Oculare Speculum haberent, illud quantocyus eam in rem delegatis traderent (6). Reuchlin appeals to the Pope; Hochſtrat does the ſame. George Elector Palatine and Biſhop of Spires being appointed by Pope Leo X to try this cauſe (7), named judges who ſummoned the parties to appear before them. Hochſtrat did not appear, and for his non-appearance was condemned to pay all the coſts. He was alſo ſtrictly forbidden to continue his proceedings, and the information of the Divines of Cologne was declared null and void. Hochſtratus licet more conſueto per intervalla citatus, tamen non comparuit. Cauſſa nihilo ſeciùs diſcutitur & ſecundum Reuchlinum pronunciatur; nullum errorem ab Eccleſia damnatum in libro ſæpiùs commemorato reperiri, nec plus eum favere Judæis, quum religio & jura ſinant; injuſtè ergò ac præter veritatem eum delatum à Colonienſibus eſſe. Hochſtratus autem contumaciæ criminis reus &c (8). i. e. " Tho' " Hochſtrat was ſummoned ſeveral times according " to cuſtom, he did not appear. However the cauſe was " tried and determined in Reuchlin's favour; the " judges declared that they did not find in his Book " any error condemned by the Church, and that he " did not favour the Jews more than was conſiſtent " with religion and juſtice; that he was therefore un- " juſtly and falſly accuſed by the Divines of Cologne. " But Hochſtrat being guilty of the crime of contu- " macy or non-appearance, &c." However the Divines of Cologne ordered Reuchlin's book to be burnt. Dum hæc aguntur Spiræ, Colonienſes nefario auſu librum Reuchlini damnant, citra tamen contumeliam, ut aiebant, & Februarii deinde menſe anno ſuprà milleſimum quingenteſimum decimo quarto exurunt, approbantibus factum Lovanienſi, Erphordenſi, Moguntina, & Pariſienſi Univerſitatibus (9). i. e. Whilſt the cauſe was depending at Spires, the Divines of Cologne, by a moſt " villainous attempt, condemned Reuchlin's book, " without pretending however to caſt a brand upon " him *, and burnt his book in February 1514, the " Univerſities of Lovain, Erford, Mentz and Paris " approving their conduct." But I obſerve this only occaſionally; the chief thing I am to prove is, that this Monk pretended to be at once both the Judge and the accuſer. He is charged with this in a Poem intitled Triumphus Doctoris Reuchlini (10). i. e. " Doctor " Reuchlin's Triumph."

Accuſat Capnionem & judicat idem
Acer Hogoſtratus (11). . . . . .
. . . . . .
Sed neque perditior neque flagitioſior alter
In Capniona fuit, tunc, cum tu perdite judex
Lectus, & abſurdis in litibus arbiter eſſes
Idem accuſator. Dic quo veſane pudorem
Fert omnem tibi livor edax (12).

" The fierce Hochſtrat impeaches, and at the ſame " time pretends to judge Reuchlin . . . . . Nor " was there ever a more wicked and profligate " man than you, when you was choſen a Judge in " theſe abſurd controverſies, being at the ſame time " the accuſer of Reuchlin. Tell me, outrageous " man, what gnawing envy made you throw off " all ſhame?"

[B] He impudently aſſerted Hereſies in the very books in which he pretended to refute the Heretics.] We ſhould ſee a catalogue of them, had we the book, with which Agrippa threatned the Dominicans (13): for here follows what he repreſents to the Magiſtrates of Cologne. Unum tamen illum excipio, Jacobum Hocſtratum, tunc Prædicatorum ordinis hæreticorum Magiſtrum, vulgo & veraciter dictum, qui taliter ſcripſit contra Lutheranas hæreſes, ut ipſe ſe proderit hæreticorum omnium peſtilentiſſimum. Sed ne quis veſtrum, illius olim amicus, aut illius hypocriſi excæcatus, vel aliter deceptus, me non favore veritatis, ſed aut invidia, aut alia offenſa iſta dicere putet, rem ipſam digito monſtrabo. Nam in libro ſuo contra Lutheranos, quem Reverendiſſimo Cardinali ac Illuſtri Principi & Epiſcopo Leodienſi dedicavit, in illius lib. 2. diſp. 3. paulo ante finem. 1. cap. ſic ait: Scimus enim conſecratione ſuper debitam materiam ritè facta, Chriſtum eſſe in Sacramento, non autem quòd ſub hæc vel illa determinata hoſtia Chriſtus contineatur (α). Neque tamen putetis, hunc ſolum articulum apud illum reperiri hæreticum, ſed alii multi: quos cùm his nimis longum, vobiſque tædioſum foret referre, enumerabo alibi, in eo ſcil. libro, quem de Fratrum Prædicatorum ſceleribus (14). i. e. " I except " however one, namely, James Hochſtrat, then com- " monly and with reaſon called the Maſter of the Order " of the Predicant Heretics, who wrote againſt the Lu- " theran hereſies in ſuch a manner, as to ſhew himſelf " the moſt dangerous of all Heretics. But leſt any " of you, who were formerly his friends, or might " have been impoſed upon by his hypocriſy, or " otherwiſe deceived, ſhould think that I ſpeak this " out of envy or reſentment, I ſhall prove it moſt " evidently. For in his book againſt Luther, which " he dedicated to the moſt reverend Cardinal and il- " luſtrious Prince and Biſhop of Liege, book 11. " diſp. 3, a little before the end of the firſt chapter, " he ſpeaks thus: We know that when a proper matter " is duly conſecrated, Chriſt is in the Sacrament: but " yet we do not know that he is actually preſent in this " or that particular Hoſt. Do not imagine that this " is the only heretical article to be met with in his " works; there are a great many more, which it " would be here too tedious to mention. But I ſhall " give a particular account of them in another book of " mine, which I have intitled, An Hiſtory of the " Crimes and Hereſies of the Predicant Fryars." See the following part of this paſſage in the remark [S] of the article AGRIPPA.

§ (α) Monſieur BAYLE has not obſerved all that, in Agrippa's works, related to the Hereſies, with which he charged his adverſaries, and particularly Hochſtrat. The ſame Agrippa, in the ſecond chapter of his Apology againſt the Divines of Lovain, ſpeaks thus. Jam vero etiam noſtro ſeculo dogmatiſarunt Colonienſes Theologi, Ariſtotelem ſic eſſe præcurſorem Chriſti in naturalibus, quemadmodum

(4) Idem, ibid. folio D 4 verſo.

(5) Reuchlin. Epiſt. ad Wimphelingum, apud Majum, Not. in Vitam Reuchlini, pag. 391.

(6) Majus, in Vita Reuchlini, folio D 5.

(7) Cauſa ad Leonem X devoluta, qui eam Spirenſi Epiſcopo, Georgio Palatino Duci penitus committit. Idem, ibid. folio D 5 verſo. The author of the Bibliotheque Univerſelle, tom. 8. pag. 501. imagined, that two perſons were meant here, viz. the Biſhop of Spires, and the Elector Palatine, whereas there is but one perſon.

(8) Majus in Vita Reuchlini, folio D 5.

(9) Idem, ibid.

* See the critical remark § β.

(10) Mr. Majus has inſerted it in his Notes on Reuchlin's Life, pag. 480, &c. The author of that Poem calls himſelf Eleutherius Byzenus.

(11) Annot. in Vitam Reuchlini, pag. 485.

(12) Ibid. pag. 493.

(13) See the article AGRIPPA remark [S].

(14) Agrippa, Epiſt. 26. lib. 7. pag. 1037. This Letter is dated Jan. 11, 1533.

forced him once to give ſatisfaction to an honeſt man, whom he had calumniated; but they could not oblige him to it, without making uſe of a very remarkable method; which was, to deprive his whole convent of the benefit of begging [C]. He did not reap all the advantage which he expected from the action he brought in againſt Reuchlin; he was obliged to go to Rome on account of this action; and notwithſtanding the large ſums of money quemadmodum Joannes Baptiſta in gratuitis. Jacobus Hochſtratus in ſuo de invocatione Sanctorum libello, hæreticum pronunciavit ad Scripturam confugere: & alius quidam Theologus palam concionari non erubuit, conſuetudinem potius ſequendam eſſe quàm Scripturam Divinam, adhuc prænominatus Hochſtratus Hæreticorum (ut vocant) Magiſter in opere ſuo contra Lutheranos, inquit in hæc verba: " Scimus enim conſecratione ſuper debita ma-

" teria facta Chriſtum eſſe in Sacramento, non autem
" quod ſub hac vel illa determinata hoſtia Chriſtus
" contineatur, quia, ut ſubdit, hæreticum eſt fidem in" fallibilem & infuſam ad talia particularia per cer-
" titudinem extendere;" eademque ratione concludit, credendum eſſe remiſſionem peccatorum in generali, neminem autem in particulari ſibi eſſe peccata dimiſſa. An non eſt hoc vere magiſtrum Hæreticorum eſſe? i. e.
" The Divines of Cologne have even in this age pub-
" lickly taught, that Ariſtotle was Chriſt's forerunner
" in natural things, even as John the Baptiſt was in " things relating to the Goſpel. James Hochſtrat
" aſſerts, in his little book of the Worſhip of Saints,
" that it is an hereſy to have recourſe to the Scripture;
" and another Divine was not aſhamed to preach pub-
" lickly, that we ought to conform to what is eſtabliſh-
" ed, rather than to the holy Scripture; and the ſame
" Hochſtrat, the Maſter of the Heretics as he is cal" led, ſpeaks thus in his book againſt Luther. We " know that when a proper matter is duly conſecrated,
" Chriſt is in the Sacrament; but yet we do not know
" that he is actually preſent in this or that particular
" Hoſt; becauſe, adds he, it is an hereſy, to extend
" that infallible and infuſed faith to ſuch determinate
" objects: By the ſame way of reaſoning he aſſerts,
" that we ought to believe the remiſſion of ſins in ge" neral, but that no perſon ought to believe that his " ſins, in particular, are forgotten. Is not this, be-
" ing the Maſter of Heretics with a witneſs?" REM. CRIT.

[C] The whole Convent was deprived of the benefit of begging.] It is in Eraſmus's Letters that we meet with this curious particular. Count Nevenar, a man of a diſtinguiſhed character who was learned himſelf and a patron of the learned, reſented very much the ſlanders which James Hochſtrat had publiſhed againſt him; he omitted nothing to oblige that Divine to give him ſatisfaction: he made uſe of the ſtrongeſt arguments; the had recourſe to advices, to reproaches, to threatnings; but all in vain. At laſt he and his relations forbad all their tenants to give the Dominicans eggs and cheeſe. The Fryars imagined that theſe would be but idle threatnings, and continued to go and beg upon theſe Gentlemens eſtates; but they were moſt terribly repulſed; ſo that they were for a whole year deprived of the ſuſtenance they uſed to receive from that quarter. At laſt they obliged Hochſtrat to give the Count ſatisfaction, by a ſolemn retractation, ſeveral copies of which were diſperſed abroad. Eraſmus, who had one, found ſomething very comical in that retractation: for the Monk repeating word for word the reproaches with which he had loaded the Count of Nevenar, did yet proteſt that he always had a very good opinion of the Count (β). The reader will not be diſpleaſed to meet here with the Latin paſſage from Eraſmus (15). Hermannus Comes à Nova Aquila indigne tulerat ſe notatum ab Jacobo Hochſtrato Dominicano. Is erat Rabinus, Prior Monaſterii quod Coloniæ ſanè quàm magnificum eſt & opulentum. Non potuit hominem compeſcere, donec illius cognati denuntiarint Dominicanis, ne poſthac colligerent caſeos in ulla ditione vel Comitis vel cognatorum illius. Illi rati minas eſſe inanes, clàm tentarunt ſolitò more venire ad ova & caſeos. Factus eſt in illos impetus terribilis. Hoc damno totum annum mulctati ſunt; itaque factum eſt, ut Jacobus à ſuis coactus pacis leges acceperit. Habeo illius palinodiam, in qua cum recitet verba plena contumeliæ quæ ſcripſerat in Comitem, tamen affirmat ac propemodum dejerat, ſe ſemper de Comite præclare ſenſiſſe (16). Bella palinodia, ſcurrâ quam Theologo dignior. Such a recantation became a buffoon rather than a Divine. Eraſmus obſerves in another place, that it is to no purpoſe to argue with thoſe, who perſecute the Belles Lettres; he meant chiefly the Monks and their favourers. Theſe people, added he, are unconquerable, through the help of their factions, clamours, and artifices; nothing but a ſtick and hunger can conquer them (17), and he quotes for an inſtance Count Nevenar's conduct with regard to James Hochſtrat. Iſti numero, phalangibus, ſyncretiſmo, improbitate, clamoribus, adde ſi libet fucis ac malis artibus, prorſus invicti ſunt: Nec alia re quàm fuſtibus ac fame domari queunt. Sic vir clariſſimus Hermannus à Novaquila Comes adegit Jacobum Hogeſtratum ad abjectam & ſcurrilem palinodiam, cujus exemplar apud me eſt. Quibus, inquies, præſidiis? Non argumentis, non æquis rationibus, non monitis, non minis, non convitiis; nihil enim eorum non fruſtra tentatum fuit. Sed quibus præſidiis? Caſeis & ovis, quorum in ditione Comitis colligendorum jus illis ademptum fuerat (18). i. e. " Theſe
" men (the Monks) are unconquerable by their num" ber, ſquadrons, union, wickedneſs, clamours, and,
" if you will, by their craft and artifices. Nor can " they be turned but by blows and hunger. Thus the " moſt eminent Herman, Count of Nevenar, forced
" James Hochſtrat to make a mean and diſgraceful re-
" cantation, a copy of which I have got. By what " means, you will aſk? Not by arguments, nor good
" reaſons, nor advices, nor threatnings, nor re-
" proaches, though all this was tried, but to no pur" poſe. By what means then? By depriving the Con" vent of the right of going to beg for eggs and " cheeſe in the Count's territories." Eraſmus was in the right to obſerve that Count Nevenar had made uſe of reproaches. For can there be any thing ſtronger than theſe words? Unica, crede mihi, peſtis eſt in Germania Jacobus Hochſtratus, quam ſi reſtrinxeris ἕως πάντα καλῶς. Homo præter ingentem ſuam audaciam inſigniter impudens atque temerarius. Omnes interroga, ſi libet, per Germaniam doctos viros. Omnes læſit, omnibus æque infeſtus eſt (19). i. e. " Believe me, the " only plague in Germany is James Hochſtrat; if you
" do but reſtrain him, all will be quiet; for beſides his
" exceſſive audaciouſneſs, he is extremely impudent
" and indiſcreet. Aſk all the learned men in Ger" many. He has abuſed them all, and is equally
" hated by all." This is what Count Nevenar repreſents to Charles V in an oration, in which he congratulates him, in the name of the Students in Germany, upon his acceſſion to the Roman Crown; that is, upon his being elected King of the Romans. He had exhorted him a little before to command the Monks not to meddle with any thing but the rules and ceremonies of their order. Fraterculos quoſdam magnis titulis inſanientes, jube ſuorum Cœnobiorum curam gerere, jube domi Fratribus ſuis regendis operam impendere, ſacris faciendis invigilare (20). i. e. " Bid thoſe Monks,
" who grow mad through ambition, to take care of " their Convent, to govern their brethren at home,
" and to apply themſelves to their religious rites and
" ceremonies."

§ (β) We have ſeen above, in the quotation (9), that when the Divines of Cologne condemned a certain work of Reuchlin to the flames, they inſerted the following clauſe in their ſentence; Citra tamen Autoris contumeliam. i. e. " Without pretending to caſt a brand
" upon the Author." And here, one of theſe ſame Divines, giving ſatisfaction to Count Nevenar, whom he had ſlandered in ſeveral libels, declares that he is ſo much the readier to take this ſtep, as he always infinitely honoured and eſteemed the Count. According to the notions which the Divines of Cologne and Hochſtrat had, the conduct of the latter is not more inconſiſtent than that of the former: For it is grounded on an ancient cuſtom eſtabliſhed in all the Courts of Judicature in Germany, in which when the clauſe Salvo honore, i. e. " without prejudice to his reputa" tion;" is inſerted in the ſentence by which a man is condemned to pay any fine whatſoever, ſuch a fine is not in the leaſt diſgraceful. REM. CRIT.]

(15) Eraſm. Epiſt. 29. lib. 19. pag. 841.

(16) There is a more compleat account of this in the 31ſt Letter of the 22d book, pag. 1096.

(17) We ought not to ſay of this kind of devils, that they do not go out but by prayer and faſting: leave out the prayer and mention only faſting.

(18) Eraſm. Ep. 1. lib. 20. pag. 958.

(19) Hermannus Nevenarius dum ann. 1519. in Comitiis Francofurtenſibus Carolo Auſtriaco electo Romanorum Regi, nomine ſtudioſorum Germaniæ adgratularetur, apud Valer. Andream, Biblioth. Belg. pag. 413.

(20) Apud eundem. Val. Andr. ibid.

money he had provided himſelf with, he had all the trouble imaginable to avoid being condemned [D]. He was even in danger of his life on his return [E]; for Reuchlin's friends began already to make uſe of violent means againſt him. He deſerved perhaps that [D] He was obliged to go to Rome on account of the action he brought in againſt Reuchlin; and notwithſtanding large ſums of money... he had all the trouble imaginable to avoid being condemned.] I have obſerved above (21), that the commiſſioners named by the Pope's Sub-delegate gave a ſentence very much to our Dominican's diſadvantage. The commiſſioners which the Pope gave the parties at Rome, would not have pronounced a ſentence leſs favourable to Reuchlin, if they had been ſuffered to give a peremptory decree. But when they were met (22) to finiſh this affair, they received an order from the Pope commanding them to ſuperſede it. Each of the Judges was giving his opinion with the grounds and reaſons of it in writing; it is known that their opinions were to the Dominican's diſadvantage, who to eſcape that heavy blow procured an order from the Pope to ſuperſede the proceedings, and to leave the opinions of the Judges in the hands of the Secretary (23). This is a moſt remarkable inſtance of the immenſe power of that kind of people. If they cannot carry a cauſe; if it be ſo viſibly bad that it is impoſſible to give ſentence for them, yet they have credit enough to avoid a condemnation. They procure all the neceſſary delays, and affect to take them for a kind of determination on their ſide: for they will never confeſs that they were worſted. However the world knows that they are in the wrong. Reuchlin's friend imagined they had got the victory in this affair, and wrote a great many inſulting poems (24).

(21) In the remark [A].

(22) July 20, 1516. Not. in Vitam Reuchlin. pag. 474.

(23) Majus, Notis in Vitam Reuchlini, pag. 474, 475.

(24) Ibid. pag. 478, & ſeq.

Hochſtrat took his journey to Rome with a ſplendid retinue and well provided with large ſums of money. Huic igitur edicto morem gerens Jacobus, Romam contendit, multis magniſque ſuarum aliarumque Univerſitatum, Principum item & aliorum ſummorum virorum commendationibus, pulchro equitatu, &, qui rerum gerendarum, ut & olim fuerunt, & nunc quam maxime ſunt corrupti hominum mores, nervus eſt, ingenti pecuniæ vi inſtructus, qua Capnionis juſtam cauſam, famam fortunaſque omnes facile ſe ſubverſurum, jactitavit (25) i. e. "To "obey therefore this order, Hochſtrat went to Rome, "being provided with certificates from his own Univerſities, and from others, nay even from ſome "Princes and other great men; and, what is the ſi- "news of all buſineſs, conſidering how corrupt men "have always been, and are eſpecially at preſent, carry- "ing with him large ſums of money, by which he boaſt- "ed that he would eaſily caſt Reuchlin, and ruin both "his reputation and his fortune." The perſon who ſuſpected that this money was deſigned to buy ſome votes, was pretty well acquainted with the Court of Rome (26). Here follow his words (27). Item Theologiſtæ, ut etiam comperi, Jacobo Hochſtraten proximis diebus mille quingentos aureos per Trapezitas Romam miſerunt, non ad victum, qui Monachis tenuis eſſe debet, nec ad neceſſarias impenſas litis, nam minore ſummula, ut reor, hæc adminiſtraretur. Sed ut vehementer ſuſpicor & illis male vortat, ad faciendas largitiones, pro obtinendis auro ſuffragiis quæ jure non ſperat (28). i. e. "I have alſo found that ſome days after, the Di- "vines ſent Hochſtrat one thouſand and five hundred "golden crowns, by their bankers at Rome; not for "his ſuſtenance, for the Monks live very ſoberly, nor "for the neceſſary expences of his ſuit, for I think it "could have been carried on with a much leſs ſum; "but I violently ſuſpect (may it turn to their diſadvan- "tage) he deſigns to bribe the Judges with that mo- "ney, and to get thoſe votes by dint of money, which "he cannot lawfully obtain." What follows is more ſurpriſing ſtill; theſe ſame Divines threatned to make a ſchiſm, if Reuchlin was not condemned, and they ſpoke of Leo X with the utmoſt contempt. Nam modo reverendiſſimum Cardinalem Grimanum (29) ut indoctum cavillantur, modo ut ſemper ſuſpectum infamant. Præterea audent aperte jactare perverſiſſimi homines, niſi ſecundum ſe pronunciatum in urbe fuerit, ab Eccleſia & Summo ejus Pontifice ſe defecturos, & ſchiſma novum ſuſcitaturos. Alii dicunt, quicquid contra ſe ſtatuerit Papa, nullius momenti eſſe, neque pro Papa habendum eum, qui ab ſe ſuaque ſententia diſſentiat. Tam cæca, tam præceps eſt arrogantia iſtorum, ut non pudeat etiam poſtulare obnoxium ſibi Summum Pontificem eſſe, ſe palam omnibus Eccleſiam eſſe dictitant, ſine ſe in rebus fidei Papam nihil decernere nec poſſe, nec debere, conclamant. Nihil hercle ſecius aut honorificentius de Summo Pontifice loquuntur, quam de puero ſub ferula adhuc vivente, cui nihil niſi ad pædagogi ſui nutum integrum ſit aut liberum loqui (30). i. e. "Sometimes they except "againſt Cardinal Grimani, as though he was an ig- "norant man; and ſometimes they traduce him as "though he had always been ſuſpected of hereſy. "Beſides, theſe moſt wicked men dare to boaſt openly, "that if the cauſe be not determined at Rome on their "ſide, they will ſeparate from the Church and from "the Pope. and raiſe a new ſchiſm. Others ſay, "that whatever the Pope ſhall determine againſt them, "will be void, and that he, who differs from them "and from their opinion, is not to be held a Pope. "Their blind and inconſiderate arrogance goes ſo far, "that they are not aſhamed to challenge the Pope "himſelf as their enemy; they declare before all the "world that they are the Church, and pretend that "the Pope neither ought nor can determine any thing "in matters of faith without their conſent. Nay they "ſpeak as diſreſpectfully of the Pope, as of a ſchool- "boy, who is ſtill under the rod, and who is not per- "mitted nor free to ſpeak any thing, but according "to his maſter's will and pleaſure."

(25) Ibid. pag. 417.

(26) See the article FOULQUES, remark [L].

(27) Hermannus Buſchius Paſiphilus, in Epiſt. ad Reuchlin, apud Majum, Not. in Vit. Reuchlini, pag. 404.

(28) In the Dialogue intitled, Hochſtratus Ovans, he is introduced ſpeaking thus; Neceſſe habui vulgatam incedere viam, agere literis commendatitiis, pecuniis niti & largitionibus immodicis, ut magnæ ſunt opes nobis mendacia ſtruere contra inſontem, quæ non inſolens, neque imperite confinxi, atque haud difficulter credita ſunt Romanenſibus. Apud Majum, ibid. pag. 465.

(29) He was President or Chairman of the Commiſſion.

(30) Idem Buſchius, in Epiſt. ad Reuchlin, apud Majum, ibid.

[E] He was even in danger of his life on his return.] If he had not had notice beforehand of the ambuſcade which the Reuchliniſts had prepared for him, on the road from Nuremberg to Cologne, he would certainly have fallen into it; and even after he had notice of it, it would not have been in his power to eſcape the ſnare, had he not been provided with a ſafe conduct, which he obtained from the Marqueſs of Brandenburg. Mr. Majus confeſſes all this. Non tantum bonorum odium, ſays he (31), ſed ingens præterea periculum ſibi accerſivit, quod vix ac ne vix quidem evaſit. Nam cum Roma diſcedens Noribergam iter feciſſet, Coloniam inde perrecturus, inſidiæ ipſi à Reuchliniſtis parabantur, quas, ſi præmonitus non fuiſſet, certe haud effugiſſet. Ac ne ſic quidem exceſſiſſet, evaſiſſet, erupiſſet, niſi Marchionis Brandenburgenſis ſalvo conductu à perſequentibus tutus fuiſſet.

(31) Annotat. in Vit. Reuchlini, pag. 477.

[F] It is not true that he met with the fate which Paul Jovius mentions.] He pretends that the ſatires which Reuchlin publiſhed againſt the barbarous ſtile of the Monks, vexed James Hochſtrat to ſuch a degree, that he died with grief; and that thoſe ſatires obliged that Inquiſitor's friends to apply, in their diſtreſs, to the Court of Rome, for a prohibition to ſell and print thoſe ſatires. Paul Jovius means the Obſcurorum virorum Epiſtolæ: i. e. "The Letters of obſcure men:" he pretends that Reuchlin is the author of them, and he gives us ſuch a notion of them as is not very honourable to the Monks in general, and particularly to Reuchlin's perſecutors. Admirabili facetiarum lepore conditæ, quibus ad excitandum riſum, cucullatorum Theologorum ineptiſſimè, atque ideo ridiculè Latina lingua ſcribentium, ſtylus exprimitur. Ulciſcebatur enim infeſtam nomini ſuo turbam, jucundiſſimo ſatyræ illudentis genere, quum maligna cucullatorum conſpiratione tanquam Judæis parum æquus hoſtis, ac ex animo planè recutitus impietatis accuſaretur (32). i. e. "Theſe letters are written in the "moſt humorous and pleaſant manner; for in order to "make the reader laugh, the author has imitated the "ſtile of the Monkiſh Divines, who write moſt "ſillily, and ridiculouſly in Latin. Thus he re- "venged himſelf of that whole tribe, who hate him, "by a moſt agreeable kind of ſatire; for he had been "repreſented by a wicked conſpiracy of the Monks, "as a man who played booty when he pretended to "write againſt the Jews, being himſelf a Jew in "heart." The beſt method to prove that this Hiſtorian is miſtaken is, by obſerving that James Hochſtrat ſurvived Leo X and Reuchlin. It is therefore falſe, 1. that the Epiſtolæ Obſcurorum Virorum having made this Inquiſitor die with grief, his friends and accomplices petitioned Leo X to condemn that work. 2. That Reuchlin, in order to evade Leo X's prohibition, compoſed a ſecond volume of letters ſharper than the former, and publiſhed them with another title. Here follow

(32) Jovius, in Elogiis, cap. 143. pag. m. 285.

that kind of death, which, according to Paul Jovius, carried him off; but it is not true that he met with that fate which this Hiſtorian mentions [F]. He did not die with grief for being ridiculed in the ſatyrs of his adverſaries. He was one of the firſt that wrote againſt Luther [G], and one of Eraſmus's perſecutors [H]. In a word, if a man was but an enemy of the unintelligible jargon of the ſchools, this was ſufficient to draw upon him Hochſtrat's indignation and anger. He died at Cologne in the year 1527 (d). There are ſeveral works of his extant, moſt of which relate to his controverſies with Reuchlin and Luther. There was a very ſevere epitaph made upon him [I].

(d) Valer. And. Biblioth. Belgic. pag. 413. See the paſſage quoted from Eraſmus in the remark [H].

He

follow theſe two falſities of Paul Jovius. Hic liber avide coemptus & evulgatus adeò graviter calumniatores ejus ordinis perculit, ut conjurationis princeps Hochſtratus letali dolore ſauciatus interierit; & reliqui æſtuantes à Leone ſuppliciter impetrarint, ut edicto divendi, atque imprimi vetaretur; ſed edicti majeſtatem Reuchlinus falſo ingenio ludificatus, ſecundum Epiſtolarum volumen, tanquam ex titulo minimè vetitum, altero quidem aculeatius impreſſoribus tradidit, ita ut cucullati miſerè cum Hydra luctantes, animos in ea lite deſponderint (33). It will perhaps be objected that notwithſtanding theſe two chronological errors, it may ſtill be true, that the Epiſtolæ Obſcurorum Virorum were the occaſion of James Hochſtrat's death. I anſwer, that abſolutely ſpeaking it is falſe that they produced that effect; for they were publiſhed at leaſt ten years before this Monk's death. He died in the year 1527, and I have read in a letter dated Auguſt the 16th 1517 that Eraſmus did very much diſlike thoſe letters (34). One might carry theſe critical obſervations ſtill further, for it is very probable that they were written by Hutten (γ) (35) and not by Reuchlin.

(33) Idem, ibid.

(34) Magnopere mihi diſplicebant Epiſtolæ Obſcurorum Virorum. Eraſm. Epiſt. ad Joann. Cæſarium, inſerta Lamentationibus Obſcurorum virorum, citante Majo, Notis in Vitam Reuchlini, pag. 425.

I am leſs ſurprized that Paul Jovius committed theſe blunders, than to ſee that Mr. Majus has inſerted them as unqueſtionable facts in his life of Reuchlin, and that he did not perceive he contradicted himſelf. He ſuppoſes that when the Speculum Oculare had been burnt at Cologne, Reuchlin finding himſelf attacked in ſeveral ſatires, publiſhed, in order to revenge himſelf, thoſe Letters of obſcure Men, which ſoon occaſioned James Hochſtrat's death. Hic liber adeo graviter calumniatores Colonienſes perculit, ut conjurationis caput Hochſtratus PAULO POST letali dolore confectus ſauciatuſque interierit (36). i. e. "The ſlanderers of Cologne were "ſo vexed at this book, that James Hochſtrat, the "chief promoter of the conſpiracy, died SOON AFTER "with grief." Mr. Majus relates afterwards that Reuchlin appealed to the Pope, and that James Hochſtrat went to Rome on that account, and was like to fall into his enemies ambuſh on his return to Cologne.

(35) Jacob. Thomaſius in Præfatione ad Pauli Manutii Epiſtolas certa fide explora-tum ſe habere affirmat, Huttenum eſſe earum auctorem. i. e. "James Thomaſius aſſerts "in his Preface "to his Notes on "Manucius's "Epiſtles, that "he knows certainly that "theſe Letters "were written "by Hutten." Idem Majus, ibid.

(36) Majus, in Vita Reuchlini.

* (γ) The Epiſtolæ Obſcurorum Virorum were written by Hutten.] We are perſuaded that the reader will not be diſpleaſed to meet here with a paſſage, which will acquaint them with the chief and true author of thoſe letters. "All the world is acquainted with the "book intitled Epiſt. obſc. Vir. but men are not agreed "about the perſon or perſons to whom we are indebted "for that ſatyr. It is generally believed that Ulric "Hutten is the author of it; and it is true that he had "a conſiderable ſhare in them. But nobody ever "thought of JOHN CROTUS, who was contemporary with Luther and his friend, and who afterwards returned into the pale of the Church of Rome, "being perſuaded to it by the Cardinal and Archbiſhop "Albert. Mr. John Chriſtopher Olearius has met "with and juſt publiſhed a letter to this John Crotus: "it was written to him ſince his laſt changing his "religion; which is objected to him in an ironical "manner, by one of his intimate friends, whoſe name "is unknown. He wonders that the author of the "Epiſtolæ Obſcurorum virorum ſhould have turned a "Courtier to Albert, and a Protector of the Monks; "he puts him in mind of the love he always had for "that work, and adds that Eraſmus eſteemed it ſo much, "that he learnt two letters of it by heart (*). Mr. "Olearius promiſes to publiſh John Crotus's life with "his letters (§)." ADD. REM.]

(*) This is inconſiſtent with what is aſſerted by Eraſmus himſelf above, quotation (34).

(§) Bibliotheque Germanique, for the year 1571, tom. 3. pag. 302.

[G] He was one of the firſt that wrote againſt Luther.] He followed a wrong method, if we may credit Father Maimbourg, who aſſerts, that "what rendered Luther's cauſe more plauſible ſtill was, that James Hoſtraten, a Dominican Inquiſitor, writing againſt him, "exhorted the Pope not to make uſe any more againſt "ſuch a wicked man of any argument but fire and "ſword, to rid the world the ſooner of him (37)." I

(37) Maimbourg, Hiſt. du Lutheran. liv. 1. pag. 30. under the year 1518. He quotes Luth. contra Jac. Hoſtra. tom. 1.

ſhall now tranſcribe a paſſage from Valerius Andreas, which affords me at once both a proof of the aſſertion in my text, and a matter of cenſure. Primos inter in Lutherum calamum ſtrinxit: ob id tum ab hæreticis quos in primis oderat, tum etiam ab aliis vitæ atque ingenii liberioris, ut tunc tempora ferebant, ſcriptis laceſſitus, & nominatim à Joan. Reuchlino ſive Capnione Epiſtolis quas obſcurorum virorum titulo vulgavit (38). i. e. "He "is one of the firſt who exerted his pen againſt Luther; for which not only the heretics, whom he "hated above any other men, but alſo ſome, whoſe "life and genius was too free, as times went then, attacked him in their writings, and eſpecially Reuch"lin, in his Letters of Obſcure Men." The war which the Monks carried on againſt Reuchlin began before Luther ever attacked the indulgences, and ended of itſelf, when Luther declared againſt Rome. Reuchlin continued united with the ſtrongeſt party, and never meddled with the Lutheran controverſy. It is therefore abſolutely falſe, that he abuſed Hochſtrat in ſeveral ſatirical pieces, to puniſh him for being one of the firſt that wrote againſt Luther. The Epiſtolæ Obſcurorum Virorum were publiſhed before the Proteſtant Reformation began. Whence it appears that Valerius Andreas is fully convicted of an anachroniſm. Let us obſerve that Hochſtrat's exhortation to the Pope againſt Luther are a very evident proof of his paſſionate temper. Eraſmus wrote a letter to him (39) in the year 1519, which abounds with very good advices concerning the inexcuſable bitterneſs he met with in Hocſtrat's writings againſt Reuchlin. Concerning Hochſtrat's proceedings with regard to Luther, ſee Eraſmus's letters (40).

(38) Val. And. Biblioth. Belgic. pag. 412.

(39) It is the laſt of the 16th book.

(40) The 18th of the 26th book, pag. 1249.

[H] ... And one of Eraſmus's perſecutors.] This is what we find in the following words (41). Aliquot ex hoſtium numero perierunt: Lovanii Ecmondanus Carmelitata vomitu præfocatus.... Coloniæ periit Jacobus Hoghſtratus coryphæus hujus tragœdiæ, qui tamen in morte dicitur nonnullis verbis prodidiſſe parum ſinceram conſcientiam. i. e. "Some of my adverſaries are dead. "Egmondanus the Carmelite was choaked in vomiting... At Cologne died James Hochſtrat, the ring"leader of this tragical plot, who yet is ſaid to have diſ"covered by ſome words which he ſpoke, when he was "dying, that he was not very ſincere in his religion." Eraſmus complains in the letter, in which he gives this inquiſitor ſuch good advice, that he had been abuſed by him, on account of his opinion concerning the diſſolving of marriages (42).

(41) Eraſm. Ep. 13. lib. 19. pag. 829. It is dated in May 1527.

(42) See the pag. 740. of Eraſmus's Letters, of the London edition.

[I] There was a very ſevere epitaph made upon him.] Paul Jovius tranſcribes it. Hoſtrati autem tumulo, ſays he (43), hoc nobile carmen Capnionis puer affixit (γ).

(43) Jovius, in Elogiis, pag. 286.

Hic jacet Hoſtratus, viventem ferre patique
Quem potuere mali, non potuere boni.
Creſcite ab hoc taxi, creſcant aconita ſepulcro:
Auſus erat, ſub eo qui jacet, omne nefas.

i. e. "Capnion's ſootman put the following noble epi"taph on Hochſtrat's tomb. Here lyeth Hochſtrat; "when he was alive the wicked could bear with and "ſuffer him, good men could not. Let Yew and Monks- "bane grow over his tomb: for he, who lyeth here, "dared any wicked attempt."

§ (γ) Reuchlin, as all the world knows, died in the year 1523. Now if the author of theſe verſes, as it is here aſſerted, was actually Reuchlin's ſervant, when Reuchlin died, theſe verſes could not be made upon Hochſtrat's real death, which did not happen till the year 1527. But the truth of the matter with regard to this pretended epitaph is as follows. About the year 1515 was publiſhed in 4to the firſt volume of theſe famous Epiſtolæ Obſcurorum Virorum, containing only forty one letters. The ſecond edition alſo in 4to does not contain any more. But the third edition, which was alſo in 4to, and which, if we may judge of it by the letter it is printed in, was publiſhed ſoon after the two former, contains an Appendix of eight letters, the laſt of which, which is under the name of Hochſtrat, and dated from Rome, contains four paſquils in the form of epitaphs made for himſelf; the firſt of four lines, the ſecond and third of one diſtich each, and the fourth of four lines like the firſt. Now the pretended epitaph tranſcribed by Paul Jovius is nothing elſe but the ſecond of theſe paſquils, to which are prefixed the two firſt lines of the fourth.

He did not do the Divines of Paris much honour, when he publiſhed at Cologne the judgment they gave againſt Luther in the year 1521, concerning the falſe Dionyſius Areopagita [K].

Some unknown perſons, who, as Hochſtrat relates in this epiſtle, met him one day in the ſtreets of Rome, dropt a paper at his feet. He took it up, and found in it ſeveral ſatyrical epitaphs upon his pretended death, from which epitaphs that, which Paul Jovius gives us, has been made up. So that it is ſo far from being true, that this epitaph was compoſed upon and after Hochſtrat's death, that on the contrary it is only an imitation of the following one, which Politianus made againſt his enemy Mabilus Marullus.

* Fœtens.

*Flecte viator iter, fœtet * nam putre Mabili*
Hac fovea corpus conditur atque animus.

i. e. "Go another way, traveller, for the ſtinking "and rotten corps of Mabilus lyeth here in this grave "with his ſoul."

This epitaph of Mabilus, who yet ſurvived Politianus, is to be found amongſt the latter's poems; and the reaſon which Monſieur Bayle gives for it, is, that one may abuſe a man ſo outrageouſly in an epitaph, and meet with ſuch a fruitful field that way, that ſeveral Poets have falſely ſuppoſed their adverſary's death, that they might make an advantage of this common topic. This reflexion, which Mr. Bayle makes in the remark [O] of the article POLITIANUS, gives us the key of this pretended epitaph, Hic jacet Hochſtratus, &c. which as we have obſerved, was written ten years, more or leſs, before Hochſtrat's death, and in the heat of his controverſy with Reuchlin. CRIT. REM.]

[K] He publiſhed at Cologne the judgment of the Divines of Paris... concerning the falſe Dionyſius Areopagita.] It was in the year 1521. You will meet with this judgment in the ſecond volume of Luther's works, of the Jena edition. You may alſo meet with other editions of it. Father Nourri was therefore in the wrong to imagine, that he publiſhed it for the firſt time, when he inſerted it in his Apparatus ad Bibliothecam maximam veterum Patrum, in the year 1624 (44).

(44) See the Acta Eruditor. of Leipſic; the 2d vol. of the Supplem. pag. 737.

☞HODGES (NATHANIEL), an eminent Engliſh Phyſician in the ſeventeenth Century, was ſon of Dr. Thomas Hodges Vicar of Kenſington near London, and Dean of Hereford [A]. He was educated at Weſtminſter ſchool, and became a Student of Chriſt Church in Oxford in the year 1648 by the favour of the Viſitors (a). February the 13th 1651 he took the degree of Bachelor of Arts (b); May the 31ſt 1654 that of Maſter of Arts (c); and June the 4th 1659, accumulated the Degrees of Bachelor and Doctor of Phyſic (d). Upon his ſettling in London he gained a very conſiderable practice; and continued there during the plague in 1665; an account of which he publiſhed in Latin in 1672 [B]. April the 2d the ſame year he was choſen Fellow of the College of Phyſicians at London (e). Beſides the treatiſe abovementioned he publiſhed at London 1660 in 8vo another intitled, Vindiciæ Medicinæ & Medicorum: An Apology for the Profeſſion and Profeſſors of Phyſick, &c. In the latter part of his Life he fell into very unfortunate circumſtances, and was confined for debt in Ludgate-priſon, where

(a) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 768. 2d edit. London 1721 in fol.

(b) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 2. col. 95.

(c) Idem, ibid. col. 105.

(d) Idem, ibid. col. 125, 126.

(f) From the Regiſter of that College.

[A] Son of Dr. Thomas Hodges Vicar of Kenſington near London, and Dean of Hereford.] This Dr. Hodges was a Preacher ſome time before the Long-Parliament, and was afterwards a Member of the Aſſembly of Divines, and took the Covenant (1). After the Reſtoration he became Vicar of St. Peter's Cornhill, and in 1661 Dean of Hereford in the room of Dr. Herbert Croſts, made Biſhop of that See. He held this Deanery to his death, and was ſucceeded in it by Dr. George Benſon, in 1672. He hath extant, I. A Glimpſe of God's Glory, a ſermon preached before the Houſe of Commons at a ſolemn Faſt, September 28, 1642, on Pſal. cxiii. 5, 6. London, 1642, in 4to. II. The Growth and Spreading of Hereſy, a faſt Sermon before the Houſe of Commons, March 10, 1646, on Pet. ii. 1. London, 1647, in 4to. III. Inacceſſible Glory: or the Impoſſibility of ſeeing God's face whilſt we are in the body; a Sermon preached at the funeral of Sir Theodore de Mayerne, in the Church of St. Martin's in the Fields, on Friday the 30th of March 1655, on Exod. xxxiii. 20. London, 1655, in 4to.

(1) Wood, Faſti Oxon. vol. 2. col. 31.

[B] An account of which he publiſhed in Latin, in 1672.] It was printed at London in 8vo, under the title of ΛΟΙΜΟΛΟΤΙΑ; ſive Peſtis nuperæ apud Populum Londinenſem graſſantis Narratio Hiſtorica. Authore Nathaniele Hodges, M. D. è Colleg. Londin. London, 1672, in 8vo. The Dedication to Sir George Ent, Preſident, Dr. Baldwin Hamey, Dr. Francis Gliſſon, Dr. Alexander Fraſier, Dr. Timothy Clerke, Dr. John Micklewait, Sir Charles Scarburgh, and Dr. G. Bevoir, Fellows of the College of Phyſicians, is dated from his houſe in the pariſh of St. Stephen's Walbrook, January 1, 1672. There are prefixed to it commendatory Poems in Latin by Henry Bagſhaw, D. D. John Lawſon, M. D. and Adam Littleton, D. D. A tranſlation of it into Engliſh was printed at London in 1720, in 8vo, under the following title: Loimologia: or an Hiſtorical Account of the Plague in London in 1665, with precautionary Directions againſt the like Contagion. By Nath. Hodges, M. D. and Fellow of the College of Phyſicians, who reſided in the City all that time. To which is added an Eſſay on the different Cauſes of Peſtilential Diſeaſes, and how they become contagious. With Remarks on the Infection now in France, and the moſt probable Means to prevent its ſpreading here. By John Quincy, M. D. Dr. Quincy in the Preface obſerves, that this treatiſe of Dr. Hodges "contains the "beſt account of the late viſitation by the Plague here "in England, of any hitherto extant; and though "ſome readers may indeed obſerve, that the enthuſi"aſtic ſtrain of the preceding times very much hurts his "ſtyle and perſpicuity; ſuch an influence had the ſpirit "of deluſion, even over matters of ſcience; however "the affected peculiarities and luxuriances of that "kind are here avoided..... As for what every "perſon may do for his private ſafety, I have given "ſeveral additional hints, either fuller or plainer than "Dr. Hodges hath done. And becauſe his antidotes "and precautionary medicines are now obſolete, and "not by much ſo elegant or eaſy to be procured, as "the preſent practice and ſhops do ſupply, I have "added ſome Formulæ to be complied with or altered, "as different exigencies and better judges may think "fit." In a tract intitled, A Collection of very valuable and ſcarce Pieces relating to the laſt Plague in the year 1665, printed at London 1721, in 8vo, there is publiſhed An Account of the firſt Riſe, Progreſs, Symptoms, and Cure of the Plague: being the Subſtance of a Letter from Dr. Hodges to a perſon of Quality: Dated from his houſe in Watlin-ſtreet, May 8, 1666.

H.

where he died in 1684. His body was interred in the Church of St. Stephen's Walbrook London, where a monument is erected to him. The Author of the Preface to A Collection of very valuable and ſcarce pieces relating to the laſt plague in the year 1665, printed at London 1721 in 8vo ſtiles our author a faithful Hiſtorian and diligent Phyſician, and tells us, that "he may be reckoned among the beſt obſervers in any age of Phyſic, and "has given us a true picture of the plague in his own time."

HOE (MATTHIAS), a famous Lutheran Miniſter, was born at Vienna in the year 1580. He was ſent ſo young to ſome Proteſtant College (a), that he found himſelf a Lutheran, before he had ever conſidered that he was born in the Church of Rome. He ſtudied Divinity at Wittemberg, and as ſoon as the year 1602 he was called to the Court of Saxony to preach before the Elector. The next year they committed to his care the management of ſome churches in the Voigtland; and after he had continued eight years in that poſt, he was ſent to Prague in the year 1611, to be Superintendent of the German Churches there. Two years after he was again called to the Court of Saxony, and raiſed to the dignity of Eccleſiaſtical Counſellor and firſt Preacher to his Highneſs. He continued in theſe employments the remainder of his life, and died March the 4th 1645. He had taken his degree of Doctor of Divinity at Wittemberg in the year 1604. His marriage which laſted forty three years, and from which iſſued ſix ſons and four daughters, made him full amends for all the vexations he might have from other quarters [A]. He was a Gentleman born (b); and his pen was ſo warlike, that it ſufficiently ſhewed he did not degenerate. He publiſhed a great many books (c), ſome in Latin, the others in German. He would not in the leaſt conſent to a reunion of the Proteſtant Churches [B]. But it is laid to his charge, that for a ſum of money he procured a reunion of ſome Princes of the Empire with the Emperor [C], to the great prejudice of the Proteſtants. What he publiſhed on the Revelation of St. John ſeems to be written by a man of a very turbulent ſpirit [D].

I imagine that he was more ſorry to ſee the Elector Palatine raiſed to the Throne of Bohemia,

(a) Poſtea orthodoxa id ſibi vindicavit Eccleſia, ſiquidem parentum cura frugis bonæ adoleſcens puritoris ævi, hoc eſt fidei hauriendæ gratia, ad loca Evangelica ablegatus. Spizelius, in Templo Honoris reſerato, pag. 165.

(b) Taken from Henning. Witte, Memor. Theol. renovat. pag. 1014, & ſeq.

(c) See the Catalogue of them apud eundem, pag. 1021.

[A] His marriage . . . . made him full amends for all the vexations he might have from other quarters.] I have put the moſt favourable conſtruction upon Witte's Latin words; for as they are a little dark, one might imagine his meaning was, that Matthias Hoe's marriage was ſo happy, that it afforded him more pleaſures than vexations (1). This would be leſſening the joys of that match. I chooſe therefore to follow the other interpretations, which is, that the advantages of it being put in the ſcale, with all the vexations to which the huſband was otherwiſe expoſed, the former would outweigh the latter: So that his dear ſpouſe comforted him under all the vexations and all the troubles he had to encounter. He would therefore have deſerved to be very much pitied, had he been a ſingle man.

(1) Illius amore & convictu ſuaviſſimo totis uſus eſt octo tribus & quadraginta annis, ut multo plura haberet de quibus gaudium quam dolorem conciperet. Henning. Witte, Memor. Theolog. renovat. p. 1018.

[B] He would not in the leaſt conſent to a reunion of the Proteſtant churches.] Guſtavus, a little before his death, had called together a number of Lutherans and Calviniſts at Leipſic, in order to procure an agreement and reunion between them. The regard they paid to this Prince's authority made them ſeparate in a friendly manner, and with great hopes of a peace; but his death made all their hopes vaniſh away. However Dury continued to uſe his beſt endeavours to procure the reunion, and went to Frankfort when the Proteſtants were met. But hereupon came a very paſſionate letter from Hoe againſt the Reformed, which did a great deal of harm. It is Grotius that acquaints us with this. Rex Sueciæ magnus Guſtavus . . . . non multum ante mortem Lipſiæ conventum inſtituerat utriuſque ſententiæ Proteſtantium . . . . Effecit ſua auctoritate ut amicè diſcederetur cum magna ſpe reſtituendæ unitatis. Sed triſtis exitus tanti Regis ſalubre hoc cœptum interſcidit. Neque tamen defuit ejuſdem negotii commendator ex Angliâ Duræus, multorum Angliæ antiſtitum inſtructus literis, qui Francofurtum an Mœnum venerat eo ipſo tempore, cùm ibi conventus Ordinum Proteſtantium haberetur. Sed rem per ſe difficilem implicatiorem etiam reddidit doctoris Hoii ex Aula Saxonica reſponſum immite in eos quos Calvinianos vocat (2). The Doctors of the Augſburg Confeſſion infinitely extol the vigilance and care, with which he oppoſed the leaſt innovation. They even aſſert that he expoſed himſelf thereby to very great dangers. In ſolis radiis pridem ſcriptum arbitror quos ille tuendæ fidei gratia pertulerit labores, quibuſcum difficultatibus ſit conflictatus, quæ ſubierit pericula, dum quidvis ſatius cenſebat, quam ut quicquam in Germania de Evangelicæ Religionis integritate (quam adverſarum partium promachi contaminare ſunt auſi,) decederet ac minueretur (3). i. e. "I believe that all "the world has known this a great while, what "pains he took to defend the faith, how many difficulties he had to ſtruggle with, to what dangers he "was expoſed. for he would have done any thing "rather than conſent that the Evangelical Religion, "which the ringleaders of the adverſaries dared to "defile, ſhould ſuffer the leaſt detriment in Germany."

(2) Grotius, Ep. 444. Part 1. pag. 165.

(3) Spizelius, in Templo Honoris reſerato, pag. 165, 160. Henning. Witte, Memor. Theol. pag. 1016.

[C] It is laid to his charge, that for a ſum of money he procured a reunion of ſome Princes of the Empire with the Emperor.] In the year 1635 the Elector of Saxony and the Landgrave of Heſſe, made a treaty with the Emperor, and ingaged in his party againſt the Crown of Sweden. This was the proper method to ruin all that Guſtavus had done in Germany for the advantage of the Proteſtant Religion. It was thought, that the Emperor had ſent a round ſum of money to Dr. Hoe, to perſuade him to remove all the difficulties and ſcruples, which ſuch a peace might have raiſed in his mind. Puffendorf, whoſe words I quote, is my voucher. Arguebatur quoque Saxonicus Theologus Matthias Hoeus decem untialium millia à Cæſare accepiſſe, eximendis Principis ſui animo ſcrupulis, quos alias facile iſta pax generare poterat (4).

(4) Puffendorf. Rer. Suecicar. lib. 7. pag. 123. See the Bibliotb. Univerſelle, tom. 3. pag. 458.

[D] What he publiſhed on the Revelation of St. John ſeems to be written by a man of a very turbulent ſpirit.] We ought not in the leaſt to doubt, conſidering what temper he was of, but his Commentaries on the Apocalyps were deſigned to raiſe a general war againſt the Church of Rome; that is to ſay, to lay all Europe under the moſt terrible diſtreſs that can befall it. However it be, the Biſhop of Meaux (*) reckons him amongſt thoſe interpreters of the Apocalyps, who have no other deſign but to ſound the trumpet of war. "The Lutherans, ſays he (5), were not more mode- "rate than the Calviniſts; and the chief Preacher at "the Elector of Saxony's Court, named Matthias "Hoe, publiſhed at Francfort (†) a book, the title "of which was, The Condemnation and final Deſtruction of the proſtitute, the Roman Babylon, or the VIth book of a Commentary on the Revelations. The book "itſelf does not betray leſs paſſion than the title; and "this is, what was diſperſed through Germany, and "in the North." The Biſhop of Meaux has extracted this from a letter written by an Arminian Miniſter, from which I ſhall tranſcribe a paſſage, becauſe it contains ſeveral other particulars proper for this article. "I have the Catalogue of the books that were to be "ſold at the laſt fair at Frankfort: it contains a great "many polemical books againſt Popery, and amongſt "others one with this title: Judicium & excidium (*) Boſſuet.

(5) In his Explication de l'Apocalypſe, pag 2. of the Advertiſement, Dutch edition.

(†) It was printed at Leipſic.

Bohemia, than to see him a fugitive after the battle of Prague; for it appears from a letter he wrote to a Lord of that country, that he did not like the project of giving the Crown of Bohemia to that Elector, and that he looked upon Calvinism as a kind of Antichrist, not much better than the Popish Antichrist [E].

" Meretricis Babyloniæ Romanæ, seu Commentariorum " in Apocalypsin S. Johannis liber sextus, authore Mat- " thia Hoe Doctore Theologo. Lipsiæ in 4to. This " Hoe is the chief Preacher at the Elector of Saxony's " Court; he is of a noble family of Austria, and has " been long ago suspected of being secretly a Papist. " I wonder that at this time, and in the present situa- " tion of public affairs, he should think it proper to " write against Popery in so smart and odious a stile, " especially, since the Elector of Saxony always en- " deavoured to preserve the Emperor's good will to- " wards his house (6)." Hoe began his work on the Revelation in the year 1610 (7), and finished it in the year 1640. It contains eight books, which have been reprinted at Leipsic, in Folio, in the year 1671. One will never be able to prevent factions and turbulent men from making a wrong use of the dark and difficult passages in St. John's Revelation, with a design to raise a war. They do not like peace; they long for war; in which they run not the least danger themselves, and find means to make themselves necessary. It is not improbable, but they, that are at the helm, find their account in such turbulent men; they look upon them as proper persons to rouse the people's spirits and hopes, by putting sometimes one sense and then another upon the prophecies, according as the state of the public affairs requires it. Such turbulent men are indeed to be dreaded, and therefore their masters shew some regard for them.

(6) Charles de Nielles, in his Letter to Uytenbogaerd, dated from the Castle of Louvestein, June the 3d 1628. It is the DCXXXVII in the folio edition of the Epistolæ Eccles. & Theol.

(7) He published then the 1st book; the last was printed in the year 1640. See Spizelius, in Templo Honoris reserato, pag. 171.

[E] It appears from a letter he wrote . . . . that he looked upon Calvinism as a kind of Antichrist not much better than the Popish Antichrist.] This Letter has been printed. Read the following passage from the Memorabilia Ecclesiastica, or Remarkable Events in the Church, during the XVIIth Century. Cùm in eo essent occupati Bohemiæ Proceres, Legatis Moraviæ, Silesiæ & Lusatiæ præsentibus, ut Fridericum quintum, Electorem Palatinum, sacris Calvinianis addictum, in Regem suum eligerent, Mathias Hoë, t. t. Concionator Aulicus Dresdensis, Epistolam sub 23. Aug. scripsit ad Joachimum Andream Slikium, qua (postmodum typis excusa) vir celeberrimus fidelissimè monuit, ut quid, præsertim intuitu religionis, Ordines isti facerent, facere saltem deberent, probè perpendant. Inter alia spiritum Calvinisticum appellans Anti-Christum Orientalem, atque componens cum Occidentali, ut non multò meliorem, allegante Hornbekio in Summa Controversiarum religionis, libro nono de Lutheranis p. m. 699. i. e. " When the States of Bo- " hemia were deliberating, before the Embassadors of " Moravia, Silesia, and Lusatia, about raising to the " throne the Elector Palatine Frederic V, who was a " zealous Calvinist, Matthias Hoe, at that time " Preacher to the Court at Dresden, wrote about the " 23d of August, a Letter to Joakim Andrew Slikius, " which has since been printed; in this Letter " that most celebrated man advised the States duly to " weigh and consider whatever they should do, or at " least ought to do, especially with regard to religion. " Amongst other things, he called the Calvinistical " spirit the Eastern Antichrist, and compared it with " the Western Antichrist, as not being much better, as " Hoornbeeck relates, in his Sum of Religious Contro- " versies, book the IXth, of the Lutherans, p. 699." It is probable that the Author I quote did not see that Letter, since he mentions it only upon Hoornbeeck's credit.

HOELZLIN (a) (JEREMY) Greek Professor in the University of Leyden, was born at Nuremberg. He applied himself with so good a success to the Greek and Latin Tongues at Augsburg, that he excelled all his school-fellows in both these Languages. He afterwards studied Philosophy in the University of Altorf. His method of studying differed very much from that of the other students; he did not much mind what was read in the public Lectures; but as he understood the Greek tongue very well, he would read the original authors themselves, and the ancient interpreters of Aristotle, as Themistius, Alexander of Aphrodisium, Symplicius, Ammonius, &c. He did not study Aristotle only, he applied himself also to understand Plato, and was a great admirer of the Stoics. After he had spent eight years in this kind of study, he took his degree of Doctor of Philosophy, and applied himself to the study of Divinity, and of the Hebrew Tongue. He was afterwards Rector or Principal of a College at Amberg in the upper Palatinate. He was forced to leave that place, and to retire to Bremen, having been robbed of the best part of all he had in the world. Count Benthem designed to make him Principal of his College at Rhede, but dying immediately, the City of Ham offered our Hoelzlin the like employment. But as the Emperor's soldiers were committing very great disorders in that country, he would not expose himself to their outrages. He looked therefore for a more secure harbour, and found it in Holland. He retired to Leyden, where he published a Translation of the Psalms, which was judged to be accurate. The University did him the honour to retain him, when he was called to Middleburg and to the Brill [A]. They judged him worthy to appear on a greater stage, and raised him to the Professorship of the Greek Tongue, which Vossius had lately resigned. He undertook to translate Apollonius Rhodius [B], and notwithstanding his distempers he

(a) He is always called Hoeslinus in his Funeral Oration.

[A] He was called . . . . to the Brill.] He was actually Rector of the College of the Brill, if we may depend upon Vossius, whose words I am so much the more ready to transcribe, as they want to be corrected, since the surname of our author has been wretchedly corrupted, not without a very gross solecism. Vossius had just been observing, that Anthony Æmilius refused the Professorship of the Greek tongue, which the Curators of the University of Leiden had offered him; then he adds: Arbitror professionem eam deinceps offerendam Mag. Jeremiæ Hoelellas quondam correctori Ambergensis Gymnasii Electoralis Collegæ Beckmani: nunc Brilanæ est Scholæ Rector. Vir est moribus simplex, sed trium linguarum & Philosophiæ admodum gnarus (1). i. e. " I believe that this Professorship ought next " to be offered to Jeremy Hoelel (Hoelzlin), for- " merly Sub-Principal in the Electoral College at " Amberg, and Beckman's collegue; and now Rector " of the College at the Brill; he is a very plain man " in his way of living, but very well skilled in three " languages and in Philosophy."

* It should have been Hoelzlino.

(1) Vossius, Ep. 148. ad Joann. Meursium, pag. 281. edit. Lond. 1693. This Letter is dated the 30th of August 1631.

[B] He undertook to translate Apollonius Rhodius.] The edition of this Poet, with Hoelzlin's Translation and Commentary, was published at Leiden in the year 1641 by Elzevir, ex Officina Elzeviriana. Monsr. Menage gave it in a very indifferent character (2). He transcribes first these words of Monsieur Baillet. There are ancient scholia extant upon Apollonius . . . the new edition, which Jeremy Hoelzlin published of this Poet is esteemed by some; but others do not value it much more than

(2) Anti-Baillet, tom. 1. pag. 389, 390.

he compleated it, having put the finiſhing hand to it ſix days before he died. He was dropſical, and ſo weak, that he was not able to write any more; and yet he took this work ſo much to heart, that he dictated to another what he thought neceſſary to complete it. He died January the 25th 1641. He had been married a long while (b), but never had any children: upon which account they congratulate him in his funeral oration, becauſe of the troubles and difficulties he met with, when the rage of the war forced him to leave his country (c).

(b) He married a Miniſter of Nuremberg's daughter.

(c) Taken from his Funeral Oration, delivered by Anthony Thyſius.

than ſeveral of thoſe which are called Variorum. Monſieur Menage anſwers afterwards what relates to the Scholia or notes; and then he continues thus. "As for Jeremy Hotzlin, he is a wretched writer. He "abounds with Hebraiſms; he affects to make uſe "of obſolete words, and invents new ones. I ſhall "obſerve here by the by, that he mentions Conrad "Ritterſhuſius as his patron. Conradus Riterſhuſius, "ſanctiſſimus ille Juris interpres & vindex, idemque "patronus olim meus, inſigniter pius & conſtans ani-"mus (3). i. e. Conrad Ritterſhuſius, that moſt honeſt "interpreter and aſſerter of the Law, formerly my "patron, and my moſt affectionate and conſtant "friend." He ſpeaks thus in page 115. There are "at the end of his Apollonius ſome notes of Mr. "Holſtenius, which are very judicious." It is obſerved in Hoelzlin's Funeral Oration, that when he was at Altorf he had a great ſhare in the friendſhip of Scipio Gentilis, Michael Picard, Conrad Ritterſhuſius, and Daniel Swenſerus; and that as they wrote ſome Greek and Latin verſes in his praiſe, he did the ſame in theirs; and that ſome of theſe verſes have been printed. Cum quibus Græcis Latiniſque carminibus certabat, quorum non pauca in lucem venerunt.

(3) It ſhould be amicus.

HOESCHELIUS (DAVID) born at Augſburg April the 14th 1556, was a very learned man. The public is indebted to him for the editions of ſeveral ancient Greek authors [A]. He ſpent all his life-time in teaching the youth in the College of St. Ann, of which he was made Principal in the year 1593 by the Magiſtrates of Augſburg. They made him alſo their Library-keeper, and the care he took to enrich their Library cannot be ſufficiently commended [B]. He was very well acquainted with the beſt manuſcripts and with the beſt editions, and he took care that the manuſcripts, which were bought for the ornament of that Library, ſhould not lie buried there as a treaſure hid under ground; he publiſhed the moſt ſcarce and curious of them, to which he added his own notes. He made very good ſcholars, and drew a great number of ſtudents to Augſburg (a) [C]. He died there in the year 1617. I ſhall relate what Scaliger ſaid of him [D]. Monſieur Huet has commended our Hoeſchelius, not only for the care he took (a) Taken from Spizelius, in Templo honoris reſerato, pag. 328. and from Freher. Theatr. p. 1511, 1512.

[A] The public is indebted to him for the editions of ſeveral ancient Greek authors.] He publiſhed Origen's eight books againſt Celſus, in Greek and Latin, at Augſburg, in the year 1605 in 4to. The wiſdom of Jeſus the ſon of Sirach, or the Eccleſiaſticus, in Greek and Latin, with notes, at Antwerp in the year 1604. Photius's Bibliotheca in Greek with notes, at Augſburg, in the year 1601, in folio. Procopius's Hiſtory in Greek, with notes, in the ſame City, in the year 1607, in folio. Theſe two laſt had never been printed before. Geographica aliquot excellentiſſimorum Authorum Marciani, Scylacis, Artemidori, Dicæarchi. i. e. "The Geographical Works of ſome of the moſt emi-"nent Authors, as Marcianus, Scylax, Artemido-"rus, Dicearchus;" at Augſburg, in the year 1600, in 4to. Three or four treatiſes of Philo. Eclogæ Legationum Dexippi Athenienſis, Eunapii, P. Patricii, Priſci Sophiſtæ, Malchi Philad. Menandri, cum excerptorum corollis è libris Diodori Siculi amiſſis. i. e. "A "choice Collection of the Embaſſies of Dexippus the "Athenian, Eunapius, P. Patricius, Priſcus the So-"phiſt, Malchus Philad. Menander; with ſome ex-"tracts from Diodorus Siculus's books which are "loſt:" At Augſburg, in the year 1603, in 8vo. Some treatiſes of the antient Fathers, &c.

[B] The care he took to enrich their library cannot be ſufficiently commended.] Spizelius acquaints us with this in the following Latin paſſage; in which the reader will ſee, that Anthony Eparchus Biſhop of Corfu had made a collection of excellent manuſcripts, which fell into Hoeſchelius's hands. Cum inſuper celebratiſſimæ Bibliothecæ Auguſtanæ adminiſtratio ipſi eſſet demandata, omni virium niſu ejus procuravit incrementum, nec ulli parcens labori, libros excuſos pariter ac manuſcriptos, maximè Græcos, melioris item notæ authores, ac librorum editiones conquiſivit, ſicque Bibliothecam Anguſtanam veluti publicum aliquod Ærarium inſtruxit ad omnium præſcitæ indigentiam ſublevandam. Et cum rariſſimorum Codicum MSS. Græcorum, magno ære ab Antonio Epartho Epiſcopo Corcyrenſi coemptorum copiam eſſet conſecutus, maximam curam adhibuit, ne theſaurus iſte librarius in arcanis Bibliothecæ hujus receſſibus veluti in perpetuo quodam cuſtodiretur carcere, ſed in publicam etiam lucem magno cum totius Reipublicæ literariæ bono & commodo prodiret (1). i. e. "When beſides this the moſt fa-"mous library of Augſburg was committed to his care, "he did all that lay in his power to increaſe it; nor "did he ſpare any labour to make a collection both "of printed books and of manuſcripts, eſpecially in "the Greek tongues, as alſo of the beſt authors and of "the beſt editions; thus he made the library of "Augſburg a kind of public treaſury to aſſiſt all "thoſe that wanted to conſult it. And when he had "procured the collection of the moſt ſcarce Greek "manuſcripts, bought for a large ſum of money by "Anthony Eparchus Biſhop of Corfu, he took a great "deal of care that this treaſure ſhould not lie uſeleſs "and buried in ſome corner of the library as in a "perpetual priſon, but be publiſhed for the good, "benefit, and uſe of the learned." The catalogue of the Greek manuſcripts in that library, compoſed by Hoeſchelius, and publiſhed in the year 1595, is a maſterpiece in its kind (2).

(1) Spizelius, in Templo Honoris reſerato, pag. 330.

(2) See Colomies, Biblioth. Choiſie, pag. 194.

[C] He made very good ſcholars, and drew a great many ſtudents to Augſburg.] I ſhall again make uſe of Spizelius's expreſſions. Quam præclare, ſays he (3), quamque feliciter demandatæ ſibi functioni ſatisfecerit, plurimi teſtari poſſunt viri eruditi qui è variis Germaniæ, Italiæ, Belgiique civitatibus Hoeſchelii gratia Auguſtam ſe contulerunt, quibus viri hujus inſtitutione uti, inque Lingua Græca proficere curæ & cordi fuit. Vere de illo dici poteſt, quod

Mille foro dedit juvenes, bis mille miniſtrûm
Adjecit numero purpureæque togæ.

(3) Spizelius, in Templo Honoris reſerato, pag. 329, 330.

i. e. "How nobly and ſucceſsfully he acquitted "himſelf of his functions, can be teſtified by thoſe "learned men, who for his ſake came to Augſburg "from ſeveral cities in Germany, Italy and the Low-"Countries, and who were willing and took care to "improve by his lectures, and to learn the Greek "tongue from him. So that we may truly ſay of him, "that he provided the Bar with a thouſand young "men, and furniſhed the Church with two thouſand."

The Sieur Colomiés names ſome travellers, who were extremely well pleaſed with him (4).

(4) Biblioth. Choiſie, pag. 195.

[D] I ſhall relate what Scaliger ſaid of him.] "Hoeſchelius, a Lutheran, but a learned man: if "Velſer did not ſupport him, they would by this time "have deprived and baniſhed him. He is a great "pedant, took to diſcover old manuſcripts, but alſo for his ſkill and ability in tranſlating them (b).

(b) Huetius, de Claris Interpret. pag. 229. See alſo Colomiés, Biblioth. Choiſie, pag. 194. of the 1ſt edition, and pag. 202. of the ſecond edition.

" pedant, but a very good man. Scaliger ſent him his " copy of Procopius; but he got a more compleat one " from the Library of Bavaria. Hoeſchelius has printed " in his Procopius ſome parts of my letters, and one " of thoſe of Caſaubon. He is about publiſhing Ori- " gen . . . Hoeſchelius non eſt magnus Græcus, ſed dili- " gentiſſimus (5). i. e. " Hoeſchelius is no great Gre- " cian, but a very ſtudious man."

(5) In Scaligeran ſecundi, pag. m. 112.

(a) He ſucceeded to Tilemannus Heſhuſius in the year 1588. Melch. Adam, in Vit. Theol. pag. 622.

HOFFMAN (DANIEL) Superintendant and Profeſſor at Helmſtad (a), was the head of a Theological party [A], which occaſioned ſome troubles towards the end of the ſixteenth Century. He raiſed difficulties againſt the formulary of union, which was to be ſubſcribed by all the Divines, and inſtead of concurring with Doctor John Andreas to ſupport that formulary, he had recourſe to captious diſtinctions. He would not admit the doctrine of Ubiquity, but only of Chriſt's preſence in ſeveral places. This controverſy, which did not laſt long, left people's minds inclined to a diviſion [B]. So that there was ſometime after a controverſy carried on with very much heat, Hoffman ſtill being at the head of a party. Amongſt other queſtions, they diſputed concerning the uſe of Philoſophical principles in Divinity; and it is remarkable that the Profeſſors of Philoſophy declared for the party which was the moſt favourable to the Orthodox [C], Daniel

[A] He was the head of a theological party.] This was the thirteenth ſchiſm that roſe in the Lutheran Church. Decimi tertii ſchiſmatis autores Helmſtadienſes, interque eos præcipui Heſhuſius & Hoffmannus, peſſimo exemplo extiterunt. Formulæ enim concordiæ cum ſubſcribendum, & Apologia conficienda eſſet, illi, livore dicam an protervia, pium J. Andreæ conatum ſpernentes, cum Chriſtum exaltatum omnibus rebus ob realem idiomatum communicationem deberent dicere præſentem, multipræſentiam ejus ſaltem defendebant (1). i. e. " The " ſeventeenth ſchiſm was occaſioned by the Divines " of Helmſtad, and eſpecially by theſe two ringleaders, " Heſhuſius and Hoffman: which was of very dan- " gerous conſequence. For when the formulary of " union and concord was to be ſubſcribed, and an apo- " logy for it publiſhed, they, either out of ſpite, or out " of arrogance, making no account of John Andreas's " pious endeavours, maintained only that Chriſt is pre- " ſent in ſeveral places, whereas they ſhould have ac- " knowledged, that Chriſt ſince his exaltation is pre- " ſent every where, becauſe of the communication of " the attributes and properties of his two natures." The Jeſuit Adam Contzen obſerves under the year 1584, that Hoffman's adverſary was Henry Julius Duke of Brunſwick's preacher (2), and that this Prince being Adminiſtrator of the Biſhopric of Halberſtad, commanded both parties to be quiet. See alſo what he obſerves in the year 1592.

(1) Micrælius, Syntagm. Hiſtor. Eccleſ. lib. 3. Sect. 2. pag. 871. edit. 1679.

(2) Hinc factum ut Daniel Hoffmannus Superintendens & Profeſſor Helmſtadienſis, & Baſilius Staterus Henrici Julii Ducis Brunſwicenſis concionator aulicus, graviter inter ſeſe de hoc dogmate contenderent. Adamus Contzen, in Jubilo Jubilorum, pag. 234. See alſo pag. 286.

[B] . . . This controverſy . . . left people's minds inclined to a diviſion.] The firſt author I have quoted in the following remark proceeds thus: Sed in cineribus ſuffocata eſt controverſia, cui utinam fomes novus poſtea non eſſet quæſitus! Sopita jaceat cum altera illa, qua de reſurrectione impiorum quærebatur, an virtute meriti Chriſti futura ſit, necne? ut & cum illa, qua quærebatur, an ſemper in forma ſyllogiſtica diſputari debeat: & cum aliis quæſtionibus vexatis, de philoſophiæ uſu & abuſu (3). i. e. " But this controverſy was ſoon ſup- " preſſed; and would to God, that new diſputes had " not been raiſed afterwards! With this controverſy " let that alſo reſt, which aroſe concerning the reſur- " rection of the wicked, whether or not it will hap- " pen by vertue of Chriſt's merit? And that other " queſtion, whether or not we muſt always argue in " form, and by ſyllogiſm? And thoſe thread-bare diſ- " putes concerning the uſe and abuſe of Philoſophy."

(3) Micrælius, Syntagm. Hiſt. Eccleſ. pag. 871.

[C] The Profeſſors of Philoſophy declared for the party, which was the moſt favourable to the Orthodox.] This is the character, which James Thomaſius gives them in one of his Prefaces. Celebris eſt, ſays he (4), quæ parentum noſtrorum memoria Juliam concuſſit Academiam, Hofmanniana controverſia, finiente ſeculo proximè præterito cœpta, ineunte hoc noſtro ſeculo non ſine Philoſophorum, qui tum ab ὀρθοδοξίας partibus ſtabant, laude ſopita. De qua nihil addam, tum quod ob recentiorem memoriam nemini res eſt ignota . . . tum maxime, quod in perſona Theologi unius alteriuſve inconſiderati, ſanctiſſimæ ſcientiæ parcendum eſſe omnino exiſtimo. i. e. " The " Univerſity of Helmſtad has been troubled in our fa- " ther's time by the famous Hoffmannian controverſy, " which began in the latter end of the laſt century, " and was happily ſuppreſſed in the beginning of this; " the Profeſſors of Philoſophy gaining a great reputa- " tion by declaring for the Orthodox. I ſhall not ſay " any thing more of this controverſy, both becauſe it " is ſo modern, that all the world is ſufficiently ac- " quainted with it . . . and becauſe I am of opinion " that we ought to have that regard for the moſt ſa- " cred ſcience, as not to expoſe it, in the perſon of two " or three inconſiderate Divines." He examines in this diſcourſe whether the ſame propoſition can be true in Philoſophy, and falſe in Divinity, as ſome perſons pretended; and he obſerves, that amongſt thoſe, who dared to aſſert ſuch a paradox, ſome were driven to it by an exceſſive reſpect for Ariſtotle, and others by an immoderate hatred for that Philoſopher; theſe laſt were the Divines. Ad Theologos venio, è diverſo planè affectu idem dogma defenſantes. Non enim amore, ſed odio Ariſtotelis, non veneratione, ſed dedignatione Philoſophorum, in iſtam temeritatem, ne quid gravius dicam, præcipitati ſunt (5). i. e. " I come now to the Divines, " who aſſerted the ſame doctrine, namely, that the " ſame propoſition may be true in Philoſophy, and falſe in " Divinity, but from a quite different principle. For " they came to this raſhneſs and inconſiderateneſs, not " to ſay any thing worſe, not through their love but " their hatred to Ariſtotle, not out of veneration but out " of ſcorn for the Philoſophers." That the reader may the better know what was our Daniel Hoffman's opinion, I ſhall tranſcribe here another paſſage from Thomaſius; it contains a particular which alone deſerves to be mentioned. (6) Niſi enim fallor, infelix illud & ſcandalo plenum certamen, quod noſtra memoria ſuper Quæſtione: ſitne DEUS peccati cauſa per accidens? certatum fuit, è ſepultæ Hofmannianæ controverſiæ cineribus aut propullulavit, aut videri ſaltem voluit propullulaſſe. Non planè abludere à vero quæ dixi, facile (opinor) perſpiciet, qui C. L. Viri, Pauli Slevogti Pervigilium de diſſidio Theologi & Philoſophi in utriuſque principiis fundato, (hoc enim libello nomen eſt,) pervolutaverit (*). Enimvero hic inter primos fuit, qui quæſtionem modò dictam in iſthoc ſcripto, quod vigeſimus tertius hujus ſeculi annus produxit in ſcenam, excitaret, hujuſque negativam in Scholis Theologorum, affirmativam inter Philoſophos veram eſſe (†) defenderet. Cui anno ſtatim ſequente Vir non minoris eruditionis laude clarus Andreas Keſlerus diſcurſuum Theologicorum quadigram (§) oppoſuit. i. e. " If " I am not miſtaken, that unhappy and ſcandalous " controverſy, which has been carried on in our day, " about this queſtion; whether GOD be accidentally " the cauſe of ſin: that controverſy, I ſay, blazed " out, or at leaſt, would ſeem to blaze out, from the " dead aſhes of the Hoffmannian controverſy. This " will appear to be true to whoever peruſes the moſt " celebrated Paul Slevogt's Lucubrations, intitled, The " Diſpute between the Divines and the Philoſophers " grounded

(4) Thomaſius, Præfat. 42. pag. 244.

(5) Idem, ibid.

(6) Idem, ibid. pag. 245.

(*) Confirmant ſuſpicionem, quæ leguntur in veſtibulo dicti Pervigilii: aperta enim ibi litis, Helmſtadii ab Hofmanno agitatæ, mentio. Faciunt huc & quæ leguntur in controverſia Crameriana Magdeburgenſi, nam & huic aliquid affinitatis cum Hofmanniana conſtat intercеſſiſſe.

(†) Vide ibi Diſcurſum IV, pag. 64, D ſeq.

(§) Pro defendenda (quod ipſum quoque legitur in titulo) Philoſophi ac Theologi concordia.

Daniel Hoffman and Beza wrote againſt each other upon the controverſy about the Lord's Supper. See the remark in which I give the titles of ſome of Hoffman's works [D].

It was not only about the doctrine of Ubiquity that our Doctor diſputed with the other Miniſters; he was alſo engaged in a controverſy upon the ſubjects relating to Predeſtination; for he cenſured Hunnius who had explained them differently from the ſenſe of the Book of Concord. He even charged him with preaching from Luther's pulpit a doctrine more pernicious than that of the Papiſts. The Book of Concord, ſaid he, teaches that the cauſe of election is entirely without us; but Hunnius and Mylius teach, that election is grounded on God's fore-knowledge of men's faith. Hunnius and Mylius cauſed Hoffman to be condemned in an aſſembly of Divines held in the year 1593, and threatened him with excommunication, if he would not ſubſcribe to their opinion. The next year he publiſhed an apology againſt them (b). Hoſpinian gives us a more accurate account of this. He tells us (c), that ſome Divines of Leipſic, Jena, and Wittemberg, having been at Samuel Haber's ſecond wedding in the year 1593, met at Polycarp Lyſerus's houſe, and that ſome of them were of opinion that they ſhould declare in a public and authentic manner, that Daniel Hoffman was a Calviniſt, and one of thoſe Heretics that are to be rejected: but the majority voted that they ſhould write to him, to entreat him to conform to their doctrine, which if he refuſed to do, he ſhould be excommunicated. Hunnius wrote him a long letter to that purpoſe in the name of them all. It was againſt this letter that Hoffman publiſhed the next year an apology (d), in which he explained the reaſons why he could not follow the opinions of the Divines of Wittemberg: he declared that he had met in their books with above an hundred errors inconſiſtent with the articles of the Chriſtian faith (e).

(b) Taken from Henry Alting, Theolog. Hiſtor. pag. 302.

(c) Hoſpinian, de Origine & progreſſu Libri Concordiæ, cap. 51. pag. 429.

(d) Idem, ibid. pag. 431, & ſeq.

(e) Idem, ibid. pag. 434.

" grounded on their reſpective principles. For he was " one of the firſt, that ſtarted this queſtion in a work " which he publiſhed the 23d year of this century, " wherein he aſſerted that the negative was true " amongſt the Divines, and the affirmative amongſt " the Philoſophers. The next year Andrew Keſler, " a man famous for his learning, anſwered him in four " theological diſſertations."

To aſſert that what is true in Philoſophy is falſe in Divinity, is a moſt pernicious error.

Thomaſius was in the right to obſerve, that it is a very ſcandalous thing to ſee it aſſerted, that it is true in Philoſophy, that God is the cauſe of ſin by accident, but that it is not true in Divinity. He was very much in the right to approve of Caſman, who aſſerted, that ſuch a parting and dividing of the truth was a proper method to maintain the moſt impious doctrines (7). And indeed this is very proper to introduce ſcepticiſm; ſince by arguing thus, truth is reduced to the ſame condition with the properties of bodies. For as the ſame body appears ſmall or big according as we ſee it with or without a convex glaſs, we have a right to conclude from thence, that we do not know whether it be ſmall or big abſolutely ſpeaking; and that the abſolute ſmallneſs or bigneſs of the bodies is unknown to us. If therefore the ſame propoſition were true and falſe according as we conſider it either as Divines, or as Philoſophers, it would follow from thence by a neceſſary conſequence, that we do not know the truth in itſelf, and that it only conſiſts in a mutable relation to the diſpoſition of our minds, as the goodneſs of meat conſiſts only in a certain relation to the diſpoſition of our tongue, which coming to be altered, the ſame food which pleaſed our palates, does not pleaſe it any longer. I ſhall now quote an author who tells us, that Hoffman and his followers maintained, that Philoſophy muſt be baniſhed from all Univerſities, as a moſt pernicious ſcience, according to which ſeveral theological truths were falſe. The Miniſters who oppoſed this faction were deprived, but at laſt this controverſy was ended by the Prince's authority, and Hoffman was obliged to ſubmit. Contendebant Hofmannus & ipſius aſſeclæ, Philoſophiam pugnare cum Theologia: multa eſſe vera in Theologia quæ ſint falſa in Philoſophia & contra; exterminandam Chriſtianis Academiis ut noxiam, ut toties etiam graviter ab antiqua Eccleſia damnatam. His ſe initio ſtatim oppoſuerunt ejus Academiæ Philoſophi, Duncanus Liddelius Scotus Med. D. Corn. Martini, Joh. Caſelius & alii, rati ad ſe pertinere ejus defenſionem cujus profeſſores eſſent. Res contentionibus diu acta eſt, ita ut Hofmannus eos tandem à Miniſterio excluderet qui contrarium ſentirent. Habitæ ſæpius diſputationes & magni fluctus in illo ſimpulo excitati. Extant ejus tamen aliquammulta acta. Tandem lis ſopita eſt authoritate Principis: reſtitutus honos ſuus Philoſophiæ ejuſque Doctoribus eſt. Hoffmanniani ceſſerunt (8).

(7) Non erubuerim dicere, duplicem illam veritatem eſſe pſeudariſtotelicum figmentum ad omnes errores & Atheiſmos excuſandos & defendendos. Caſman. Coſmopœiæ, cap. 1. Quæſt. 6. apud Thomaſ. Præfat. 42. pag. 243.

(8) Georgius Hornius, Hiſt. Philoſoph. lib. 6. cap. 12. pag. 321, 322. See the article NIHUSIUS, remark [C].

Henry Julius, Duke of Brunſwick, ordered that Daniel Hoffman ſhould acknowledge his error and retract it publicly. This order was executed March the 7th, 1601. See the Memorabilia Eccleſiaſtica ſeculi à nato Chriſto decimi ſeptimi, p. 23, and 24 (9); and Grawerus in his book De unica Veritate. i. e. " That " truth is ſingle."

[D] I give the titles of ſome of Hoffman's works.] He publiſhed at Helmſtad in the year 1583, Quæſtionum & Reſponſionum in graviſſima Controverſia de ſacroſancta Cœna pars prima. i. e. " Part the firſt of " Queſtions and anſwers relating to the moſt impor- " tant Controverſy about the Lord's Supper." in 8vo. Beza refuted it the next year; but ſoon after was publiſhed (10), Danielis Hoffmanni Apologia miſſa ad Theodorum Bezam, qua τὸ πικρὸν in verbis Cœnæ dominicæ immotum, Bezæ autem Demonſtrationes falſiſſimæ demonſtrantur. i. e. " An Apology for Daniel Hoffman " ſent to Beza, in which the literal ſenſe of the Words " of the Inſtitution of the Sacrament is aſſerted, and " Beza's Arguments proved to be falſe." In the year 1585 Beza publiſhed Reſponſionis pars altera contra Danielem Hoffmannum. i. e. " The ſecond Part of the " Anſwer to Daniel Hoffman." And in the year 1586 Beza publiſhed Conſpicillum ad Danielis Hoffmanni Demonſtrationes &c. i. e. " A pair of Spectacles for " Daniel Hoffman's Demonſtrations &c." Here follow the titles of ſome other works of Hoffman. Reſponſio ad rationes & ſigna Chriſtophori Pezelii &c. quibus docuit veros ſacramentarios agnoſcere: i. e. " An " Anſwer to Chriſtopher Pezelius's means and ſigns, " &c. by which he teaches to diſcover the true Sacra- " mentarians." De XVII Erroribus craſſioribus Jacobi Andreæ. i. e. Of the ſeventeen moſt palpable Errors " of James Andreas". Theſe two books are in the German language. De uſu & applicatione notionum Logicarum ad res Theologicas, & de inuſitatarum precationum reductione, contra Goclenium. i. e. " Of the " uſe and application of Logical notions to Theologi- " cal Subjects, and of aboliſhing obſolete prayers, " againſt Goclenius." At Francfort, 1596. Liber Apologeticus reſpondens chartis Miniſtrorum Eccleſiæ Bremenſis. i. e. " An Apology to anſwer the Papers of " the Church of Bremen." At Helmſtad, 1585. Officina Locorum Theologicorum. i. e. " Collection of " Theological Common-Topicks." Explicatio Sententiæ in Epiſt. Canonica Joh. Apoſtoli, Sanguis Jeſu Chriſti Filii Dei mundat nos ab omni peccato. i. e. "An " Explication of this ſentence in St. John's canonical " Epiſtle, The blood of Jeſus Chriſt, the Son of God, " cleanſeth us from all ſin." At Helmſtad, 1581.

(9) This book, written by Andrew Carolus, Abbot of St. George in the country of Wirtemberg was printed at Tubingen, in the year 1597.

(10) At Helmſtad in 1585.

* He had been a Tanner.

HOFMAN (MELCHIOR) from a Tradeſman * ſet up for a Preacher, and began to dogmatize in Livonia and other places, though he had not received from any perſon the

(a) Ex pellione in Theologaſtrum tranſmutatus. Mollerus, ubi infra, citat. (c).

the leaſt power or authority to preach (a). He left Saxony, being very much diſcontented, and went into Holſtein in the year 1527. He was appointed a Miniſter at Kiel by the King of Denmark, and ſupported himſelf in that poſt near two years, notwithſtanding Luther's oppoſition [A]. He preached I know not what mixture of Zuinglianiſm and Fanaticiſm; and he ſeldom explained any thing to his audience but the conſtruction of the Moſaical Tabernacle, the Viſions of St. John's Revelation, and other ſubjects like theſe. He pretended that the laſt day would come in the year 1534. They who attempted to refute him either upon this article or upon any other, met with their match; for as he had a very ill tongue, he anſwered them in the moſt paſſionate manner [B]. He loaded Marquardus Schuldorpius with injuries, and cruelly charged him with the crime of inceſt [C]. The King of Denmark deſigning to prevent the ill conſequences with which theſe controverſies might be attended, ordered a conference to be held in the year 1529 (b), in which Hofman was confounded and ſilenced, and as he perſiſted in his opinions, was baniſhed from the Dutchy of Holſtein. He went to Straſburg, where he publiſhed a falſe account of that conference [D]. He was impriſoned in the year 1532, after a public diſputation with the Miniſters. This made him loſe his credit with ſome of his followers. He died in or about the year 1533 (c). He was not born in the Duchy of Holſtein, as has been publiſhed by ſome [E].

(b) It was held at Flenſburg.

(c) Taken from John Mollerus's Iſagoge ad Hiſtoriam Cherſoneſi Cimbricæ, Part 3. pag. 128, & ſeq.

(d) Argentinæ inclareſcere cœpit. Freder. Spanhemius, De Origine & Progreſſu Anabaptiſt. num. 22. pag. m. 211.

Several authors aſſert that Hofman began to be famous at Straſburg (d), and that he was followed by a crowd of diſciples, and that going to Embden in the year 1528 [F], he publiſhed his Viſions there with ſo wonderful a ſucceſs, that he paſſed for the

[A] He ſupported himſelf in that poſt notwithſtanding Luther's oppoſition.] Here follows what Luther wrote to a Miniſter of Keil (1). A Melchiore pellifice velim cavere vos omnes, ac curare apud Magiſtratus ne ad conciones admittatur, etiamſi literas Regis oſtentet. A nobis enim receſſit indignabundus, dum non voluimus ejus ſomnia probare. Ad docendum neque valet, neque vocatus eſt. Hæc dicite nomine meo omnibus veſtris, ut ipſum vitent ac tacere cogant. i. e. "I would have you all "beware of Melchior the Tanner, and prevail with "the Magiſtrates not to ſuffer him to preach, tho' he "ſhould ſhew the King's letters: for he went from us "in a paſſion, becauſe we would not approve his "dreams. He is neither proper to teach, nor "called to it. Tell this to your whole congregation, "that they may avoid him, and force him to be ſilent." Luther would not have them hearken to this man, who ſet up for a Preacher without any capacity and calling. Francis Burchard Counſellor to the Dukes of Saxony did alſo adviſe to beware of that man (2).

(1) Luther. Ep. ad Wilb. Praveſt. anno 1528. See tom. 2. Epiſt. Lutheri à Joh. Aurifabro Francofurti ad Viadrum, anno 1597. edit. pag. 371. Mollerus, Iſagoge ad Hiſt. Cherſon. Cimbricæ, Part 3. pag. 129.

(2) In Epiſt. ad Petrum Suavenium, Concil. Danicum, A. 1528 ſcripta, quam exhibet J. Manlii Farrago Epiſt. Melanchth. Part 3. pag. 493, 494. Mollerus, ibid.

[B] He anſwered them in the moſt paſſionate manner.] All his books were written in the vulgar tongue: His apology againſt Nicholas Ambſdorf, the firſt Miniſter at Magdeburg, was printed in the year 1528. This Miniſter had refuted his opinion concerning the end of the world. Oppoſuit ei Hofmannus apologiam amarulentiſſimam . . . in iſta convitiorum plauſtra in Adverſarium evomit (3). i. e. Hofman anſwered him in "a moſt bitter apology . . . in which he loads his bit"ter adverſary with injuries."

(3) Moller. ibid. pag. 130.

[C] He charged Schuldorpius with the crime of inceſt.] The ground of this charge was that Schuldorpius had married his own niece. Marq. Schuldorpio, Kilonienſi, Parocho Sleſvic. qui ſuam de Sacra Cœna Sententiam impugnarat, itidem ſcriptis, Kilonii anno 1528 impreſſis . . reſpondit, & hominem, cum alias ob cauſas, tum ob matrimonium cum filia ſororis, ope eloquentiæ ſuæ caninæ, miſere exagitavit (4). i. e. "Marquardus Schuldorpius, of "Kiel, and Miniſter of Sleſwick, had refuted his opi"nion about the Lord's Supper; Hofman anſwered "him in two writings publiſhed at Keil in the year "1528, and by means of his ſcurrilous eloquence, "he abuſed him moſt wretchedly, amongſt other rea"ſons, becauſe Schuldorpius had married his own "ſiſter's daughter." Schuldorpius in his defence (*) urged amongſt other arguments Luther's authority, from whom he produced a letter, in which Luther confeſſed that he had adviſed him to that match, and aſſerted that it was lawful, (ſince Abraham had married Sara, who was his ſiſter or niece.) Utrique Schuldorpius mox repoſuit Epiſtolam ad fideles Civitatis Kilonienſis Saxonicam eique adjecit Lutheri ad ſe literas, in eandem Dialectum transfuſas, in quibus ille conjugio huic, cujus ſe ſuaſorem fuiſſe fatetur, ingenti cum παῤῥησίᾳ patrocinari, Abrahami, Saram ducentis, exemplo defendere iſtud non dubitat (5).

(4) Idem, ibid.

(*) It was a Letter to the Faithful at Kiel, in the German Tongue.

(5) Idem, ibid. pag. 131.

[D] He publiſhed a falſe account of this conference.] He boaſted that he had ſilenced Pomeranus (6), and aſſerted that the Secretaries of the conference were falſifiers (7). Pomeranus, in order to refute thoſe ſlanders, publiſhed the acts of the conference in the moſt authentic manner; and added to them a refutation of Hofman's work, and an account of Heggius's converſion (8). This converſion was the fruit of the conference. Heggius had been one of our Hofman's ſeconds, and he acquired ſuch knowledge in that conference, that it obliged him to forſake Hofman's ſect. Paraſtatæ Hofmanni fuere Johan. à Campen, & Jac. Hegge Dantiſcanus ad ſaniorem mentem in colloquio hoc reducti (9). i. e. "Hofman's aſſiſtants were John of Campen, and "James Heggius, who were converted at this con"ference." Hofman's other Second had done the ſame. Let us obſerve, that Pomeranus was not at the conference as an actor to diſpute, but as one of the moderators under the King of Denmark's eldeſt ſon (10). He put an end to this meeting by an oration in which he refuted Hofman's arguments. Finem Colloquio oratione Bugenhagii adverſus argumenta ipſius ἀναισχυνταξικὴ impoſitum (11).

(6) His true name is John Bugenhagius. But they uſe to call him Pomeranus, becauſe he was of Pomerania.

(7) Mollerus, pag. 133.

(8) Idem, ibid.

(9) Idem, Mollerus, pag. 131, 132.

(10) Moller. pag. 131.

(11) Idem, ibid.

[E] He was not of the Duchy of Holſtein, as has been publiſhed by ſome.] Here follow Mollerus's words (12): Suevus ortu fuit, non autem Holſatus uti Conrad. Dietericus (†) & Sebaſtianus Schmidius (‡), falſo ſibi perſuadent. i. e. "He was a native of Germany, and "not of Holſtein, as Conrad. Dietericus, and Sebaſ"tian Schmidius falſly imagine."

(12) Idem, pag. 127.

(†) In Analyſi Periochæ Evangel. Dom. II. Adventus.

(‡) In Diſſ. de Chiliaſmo Apocalyptico, pag. 9.

[F] Several authors aſſert . . . that he went to Embden in the year 1528.] The arguments which Mollerus offers us, leave us no room to doubt but Hofman was at Kiel in the years 1528, and 1529, and retired thither from Saxony very much diſcontented (13). We ought therefore to believe, that they, who ſuppoſe that he went from Straſburg to Emden in the year 1528, are miſtaken. Ottius obſerves, that ſeveral authors aſſert this, and yet he does not anſwer them. Embdam Argentorato obiiſſe Melchiorem Hoffmannum plures ajunt. Ergo non demum anno 1531 eò conceſſit niſi forte redierit, vel diutius ibi commoratus ſit (14). We learn from theſe words, that ſome perſons pretend that Hofman went to Embden in the year 1531. This, I think, is the true time when he was Miniſter at Embden; for ſince he publiſhed an account of the conference of Flenſburg (15) at Straſburg, in the year 1529, it is a proof that he went to Straſburg when he was baniſhed from Holſtein. It is very probable, that he went from Straſburg to Embden, and returned afterwards to Straſburg. He was there in the year 1532. Take notice, that Mollerus promiſes us an account of the troubles he raiſed both at Straſburg and at Embden, after he was gone from Holſtein (16). Is not this telling us, that he went to Embden after he had preached his idle fancies at Straſburg in the year 1529? Hoornbeeck was in the right to ſay, that he returned from Embden to Straſburg, but not that he went from Straſburg to Embden in the year 1528 (17). This author obſerves, that when Hofman went from Embden, he left there one Trypmaacker, who falling out with his collegues, retired into Holland, where he was the firſt apoſtle of the Anabaptiſts.

(13) An. 1527. Magdeburgo in Holſatiam delatus. Mollerus, Introd. ad Hiſtoriam Cherſoneſi Cimbricæ, pag. 128. Seckendorf, Hiſt. Lutheran. lib. 2. pag. 122. makes him ſet out from Wittemberg.

(14) Johan. Henricus Ottius, Hiſt. Anabapt. ad ann. 1528, num. 1. pag. 45.

(15) It was held a little after Eaſter in the year 1529. See Mollerus, ubi ſupra, pag. 131.

(16) Tumultuum quos Hermannus poſt abitum ex Holſatia, Argentinæ & Embdæ concitavit Anabaptiſtico-Entbuſiaſticorum. Idem, ibid. pag. 133.

(17) Hoornbeeck, Summa Controv. pag. m. 362.

the firſt Patriarch of the Anabaptiſts in the Low-Countries, and in Lower-Germany [G]. He infatuated his followers to ſuch a degree, that they took him for that Elias whom God is to ſend upon earth before the day of judgment. He returned to Straſburg, being in hopes to ſee a prophecy fulfilled, which related to him [H]: this prophecy had been delivered by a good old man in Frieſland. Being at Straſburg he preached Anabaptiſm openly; and the diſturbances he raiſed there occaſioned the meeting of a Synod in June 1532. He was ſuffered to diſpute with the Miniſters, who refuted him in the ſtrongeſt manner; but yet he continued to dogmatize, ſo that it was thought neceſſary to ſhut him up in a priſon [I]; for it was feared, that there would ſoon ariſe very great diſorders, becauſe Hofman's followers aſſerted, that the City of Straſburg was to be the new Jeruſalem, in which Chriſt's Kingdom was to be eſtabliſhed; and that as Hofman was the Elias who was to come, ſo Polterman was the Enoch who was to aſſiſt him. When Hofman was in priſon, they aſſerted, that he was to come out of it with a hundred and forty four thouſand men ſealed, who would anathematize the earth, and bear down before them all the obſtacles the world ſhould pretend to put in their way. Our Elias, and our Enoch, ſaid they, are the two olive-trees, and the candleſticks mentioned in St. John's Revelation (e); no man will be able to hurt them, and if any man will hurt them, fire will proceed out of their mouth, and devour their enemies. When they ſaw that Hofman did not come out of priſon at the time appointed by ſome Prophets, they were amazed; but to amuſe them, he ſent them word, that they ſhould reſt for two years, after the example of Ezra and Haggai, who were obliged to interrupt for two years the building of the Temple. He died in priſon, and thus he diſappointed all his diſciples in their expectations (f). I ſhall mention ſome of his hereſies [K]. There are writers who aſſert, that he began to dogmatize near the Rhine, after the defeat of the peaſants in the year 1525 (g).

(e) See the 11th chapter of St. John's Revelation, ver. 4, 5.

(f) Taken from Frideric Spanheim, de Orig. & Progr. Anabaptiſm. pag. 211.

(g) Joh. Henricus Ottius, Hiſt. Anabapt. ad ann. 1525, num. 21. pag. 36.

HOLINSHED, baptiſts. Caſſander has been miſtaken concerning the time when this fanatic was miniſter at Embden. Donec tandem, ſays he, ſub ann. 1532 Melchior quidam Hofmannus, arte pellio, hanc novam contagionem cum aliis quibuſdam non minus perniciosis erroribus in Germaniam hanc inferiorem & Belgicam invexit (18). i. e. "Till "at laſt, about the year 1532, a certain man named "Melchior Adam, a Tanner by trade, introduced "this new infection, with ſome other errors not leſs "pernicious, into Lower Germany, and the Low-"Countries."

(18) Caſſander, Epiſt. Dedicat. Tractatus de Baptiſm.

[G] He paſſed for the firſt Patriarch of the Anabaptiſts in the Low-Countries, and in Lower-Germany.] This appears from Caſſander's words, which we have juſt now quoted. Here follow two other witneſſes: Huic Patriarchæ etiam eorum qui in inferiori Germania ſuccreverunt, Anabaptiſtarum tradux adſcribi ſolet. Thus ſpeaks Frederic Spanheim (19). Qui huc Anabaptiſtica deliria attulit ex Germania ſuperiori primus fuit Melchior Hofman. This is what Hoornbeeck obſerves (20).

(19) Spanhem. de Orig. & Prog. Anabaptiſt. num 22. pag. m. 211.

(20) Hoornbeeck, Summa Controv. pag. m. 361.

[H] He was in hopes of ſeeing a prophecy fulfilled which related to him.] Whilſt he was planting his goſpel at Embden with great zeal, and re-baptized as many perſons as he could, there was a good old man, who made him long to return to Straſburg. This old man was of his cabal; he propheſied, that the Magiſtrates of Straſburg would put Hofman in priſon, but that at the end of ſix months the priſoner would be delivered, and would go and preach the Goſpel over all the world, like another Elias, being attended with a great number of Prophets, and with the hundred and forty four thouſand men ſealed, mentioned in St. John's Revelation (21). Hofman having diſputed publickly with the Miniſters, June the 12th 1532, and having continued to ſpread his enthuſiaſtical notions, after he had been refuted, was put in priſon. When he ſaw the firſt part of the prophecy fulfilled, he became more arrogant. He ſhook off the duſt from his ſhoes, threw his hat on the ground, and proteſted before God, that he would live upon nothing but bread and water, till he ſhould ſhew the perſon that ſent him. He was diſappointed in his expectations, for he died in priſon (22). There are a thouſand inſtances which ſhew, that in the moſt chimerical predictions there have been ſome particulars, which proved true in the event. This has been a ſtrong deluſion, and nothing contributed more than this to miſlead the viſionaries and their adherents. It is therefore with regard to theſe matters, that we ought to ſay, the end crowns the work, and we muſt take care not to judge of the whole by a part only, ex unge Leonem; we muſt wait for the concluſion, and miſtruſt the firſt ſucceſſes. They are but a ſnare, and a dangerous allurement.

(21) Chap. 7, and 14.

(22) Taken from Hoornb. Summa Controv. pag. 362.

[I] It was thought neceſſary to ſhut him up in a priſon.] Spanheim, Hoornbeeck, and ſeveral others aſſert, that Hofman diſputed in June 1532, and that he was not impriſoned till after he had obſtinately continued to dogmatize, after this diſpute. But we ſhall now quote an author, who places this conference in June 1533, and who aſſerts that this fanatic was taken from priſon in order to diſpute with the Miniſters. Anno 1533 Menſe Junio die 11, Hofmannus Argentorati è vinculis ad publicam diſputationem productus & admiſſus fuit: à quo tempore inſtaurationem Regni DEI ortam eſſe ſui affirmabant. Iſdem Hoffmannus * authoritatem prædictionum cujuſdam verè deliri Leonardi Joeſt civis Argentinenſis & aliorum ſimilium fanaticorum hominum, multa vana de urbe Argent. prædixit, &c. quæ tamen ab urbe non recepta, ſed aqua & igni interdicebatur omnibus, qui eam ſectam publicè privatimque tuebantur (23). i. e. "On the 11th day of June, in the year "1553, Hofman was carried from the priſon at "Straſburg, and admitted to a public diſputation: "His followers aſſerted, that the reſtoration of God's "Kingdom began from that time. The ſame Hof-"man, depending on the prophecies of a certain Ci-"tizen of Straſburg, named Leonard Joeſt, who was "really crazy, and of ſome other fanatics like him, "foretold a great many ſilly things concerning the "City of Straſburg, &c. which however were not "minded by the Magiſtrates; for all the inhabitants "were forbidden, upon pain of baniſhment, to pro-"tect that ſect either publickly or privately." Ottius (24) admits this Chronology; whence it appears that a great many errors have crept into the accounts of thoſe who wrote the Hiſtory of Anabaptiſm. He quotes a paſſage from Henry Urſinus (25), in which we are told, that Hofman propheſied that ſame year, that Straſburg would be the new Jeruſalem, as the City of Rome was Babylon; that Straſburg would be beſieged that ſame year; and that there would be a great ſlaughter, and that this man preferred his own predictions to all thoſe of Iſaiah, and Jeremiah, and that Matthias and his party applied to the City of Munſter all thoſe fine prerogatives of Straſburg, at which Hofman was very much diſpleaſed, when he knew it.

* I ſuppoſe it ſhould be authoritate.

(23) Ottius, in Hiſt. Anabapt. ad ann. 1533, num. 6. pag. 61. He quotes Revius in Hiſtoria Georgii. He ſhould have quoted Nicolaus Bleſdikius; for it is he that wrote the Hiſtory of David George: Revius only publiſhed it.

(24) Ottius, ibid.

(25) Henricus Urſinus, Præfat. in Apocalypſ. in fine.

[K] I ſhall mention ſome of his hereſies.] He aſſerts, I. That the WORD was not united with the fleſh taken from the Virgin Mary; his reaſon was, that all human fleſh is defiled with ſin, and conſequently curſed. II. That Jeſus Chriſt has but one nature only. III. That it is in man's power to be ſaved, and that we are ſaved or damned according to the good or bad uſe we make of our free-will. IV. That Pædo-baptiſm, or the chriſtning of infants comes from God's enemy, and from man rather than from God (26).

(26) Taken from Spanheim, de Orig. & Progr. Anabapt. pag. 211.

☞HOLINSHED, or HOLINGSHED (RAPHAEL), famous for the Chronicles publiſhed under his name [A], was deſcended of a family of that name at Boſeley in Cheſhire, and was a Miniſter of the Church of England. He died at Bramcote in Warwickſhire towards the latter end of the year 1580. After his death all or moſt of his Notes, Collections, Books, and Manuſcripts came into the hands of Thomas Burdet Eſq; of Bramcote (a).

(a) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 312. 2d edit. London 1721.

[A] Famous for the Chronicle publiſhed under his name.] The firſt edition of this work was printed at London 1577 in fol; and the ſecond in 1587 in fol. In the firſt edition he was aſſiſted by Mr. William Harriſon, a native of London, educated at Weſtminſter under Mr. Alexander Nowell in the latter end of the reign of King Henry VIII, or the beginning of Edward VI; and afterwards ſent to Oxford and Cambridge, and at laſt domeſtic Chaplain to Sir William Brook Knight, Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, and Baron of Cobham in Kent. He wrote An Hiſtorical Deſcription of the Iſland of Britain; with a brief Rehearſal of the Nature and Qualities of the People of England; and ſuch commodities as are to be found in the ſame; in three books, printed in the firſt and ſecond volume of Holinſhed's Chronicle. In the ſecond edition of this Chronicle in 1587, Mr. John Hooker, alias Vowell, Chamberlain of Exeter, made ſeveral additions and improvements to it, and continued it to the year 1586. One of the Continuators of this Chronicle was the Reverend Mr. Abraham Fleming, a great number of whoſe papers are in the hands of Mr. Francis Peck, M. A. who at the end of the firſt volume of his Deſiderata Curioſa promiſed to publiſh the following manuſcripts written in Mr. Fleming's hand; 1. De Caſtratione Chronicorum quæ Raphaelis Holingſhedi nuncupantur; & imprimis de eorundem Cenſuris, quando Roberti Comiti Leiceſtriæ, D. Thomæ Bromley, Cancellario, & D. Gul. Cecil Theſaurario oblata, prout ea omnia Camdenus Flemingo retulit. 2. Cenſuræ aliæ diverſorum hominum malevolentium, ſeu nimium ſubtilium in eadem Chronica; cum reſponſionibus Abrahami Flemingi. 3. The Council's Letter to Whitgift Archbiſhop of Canterbury, touching the Examination and Reformation of the Additions of the new Edition of Hollingſhed's Chronicle, Thurſday 1 Feb. 1586. 4. Whitgift Archbiſhop of Canterbury's Letter to Thomas Randolph, Henry Killigrew Eſqrs; and Mr. Hammond, touching the Examination and Reformation of the Additions to the new Edition of Hollingſhed's Chronicle, on Thurſday 1 Feb. 1588. 5. Abrahami Flemingi (qui præerat Typis & Prælo) de modo caſtrandi reformandique Chronica prædicta brevis & vera Relatio. In the curious Catalogue of the Library of Mr. Richard Smith (1) there is mentioned an Edition of Hollingſhed's Chronicle in two Volumes in fol. 1587, with the addition of many ſheets, that were caſtrated, being not thought fit, and ſo not allowed to be printed in the ſecond Impreſſion.

(1) Bibliotheca Smitheana, ſive Catalogus Librorum in quavis Facultate inſignianum; quos in uſum & Bibliothecæ ornamentum multo ære ſibi comparavit Vir clariſs. & doctiſs. Ricardus Smith Londinenſis, pag. 276. edit. London T. 1682, in 4to.

☞HOLYOKE, or HOLYOAKE (FRANCIS), who writes himſelf in Latin de ſacrâ Quercu, was born at Nether Whitacre in Warwickſhire about the year 1567, and ſtudied in the Univerſity of Oxford about the year 1582 in Queen's College; but it does not appear, whether he ever took a degree. He taught ſchool at Oxford, and in his own country; and became Rector of Southam in Warwickſhire in February 1604. He was elected a Member of the Convocation of the Clergy in the firſt year of King Charles I's reign. Beſides his Dictionary [A], he publiſhed a Sermon of Obedience eſpecially unto Authority Eccleſiaſtical &c. on Heb. xiii. 17. preached at a Viſitation of Dr. William Hinton, Archdeacon of Coventry. Oxford 1610 in 4to. He ſuffered extremely in the civil wars for

[A] His Dictionary.] It was printed at London, 1606 &c. in 4to. The 4th edition in 1633 at London in 4to is printed under the following title: Dictionarium Etymologicum Latinum, antiquiſſimum & noviſſimum, nunc demum infinitis penè Laboribus & continuis vigiliis compoſitum & abſolutum à Franciſco de Sacra Quercu. Or, A Dictionarie declaring the Originall and Derivation of all words uſed in any Latine Authors, with the reaſon of their Derivations and Appellations, never any in this Kinde extant before. Whereunto, beſides the hard and moſt uſefull words in Divinitie, Philoſophie, Phyſicke, and Logicke, are added many thouſand other words out of the Civill and Canon Lawes, Gloſſaries, Criticks, and other approved Authors, old and new; with their Greeke in more exactneſſe than ever was in Calepine, Morelius, or any other; and alſo the Coines, Meaſures, Weights, and Greeke Roots, and many other uſefull Additions, as will appeare in the Epiſtle to the Reader, and better in the Work itſelfe. Hereunto is alſo annexed the Proper Names, adorned with their Etymologies, illuſtrated and explained with Hiſtories, Proverbes, Mythologies, &c. Together with the Chronologie of the Perſons, and the beginning of noted Cities, and plantation of ſundry Countries; the Geographie, and the Names both antient and new of the moſt remarkable places. Laſtly, Rider's Dictionarie, the Engliſh before the Latine, compiled by Rider, is augmented with many hundreds of words, both out of the Law, and out of the Latine, French, and other Languages, ſuch as were and are with us in common uſe, but never printed until now, to the perfecting of the Worke. Now the fourth time newly corrected and very much augmented by the great Induſtrie and Paines of Francis Holy-Oke. This edition is dedicated to Dr. William Laud, then Biſhop of London. There is likewiſe another Dedication to William Craven, Baron of Hamſted-Marſhall dated from Southam. In the Preface to the Reader, which is dated from Queen's College in Oxford, our author obſerves that he had been charged with compiling his work from other Dictionaries, and eſpecially that of Thomaſius; but that he had done nothing but what other Dictionary-Writers before him had done. Cooper, ſays he, tranſlated his Dictionary from the Latin-German Dictionary of Tirifius of Zurich; and Thomaſius firſt compiled his from Calepine and Cooper, and afterwards enlarged it from Junius's Nomenclatura and ſeveral Gloſſaries and Herbals. At laſt Dr. Philemon Holland, a very learned Phyſician, greatly augmented Thomaſius's work from the beſt authors. Mr. Holyoke then informs us, that he was obliged to Dr. Thomas James for communicating ſeveral words collected from the Fathers; and to Mr. Robert Burton, Mr. Sixſmith Fellow of Brazen-Noſe College, Mr. Watſon Fellow of Lincoln College, and Mr. Wethereld Fellow of Queen's College, for their ſeveral communications. To this edition are prefixed Latin and Greek poems in honour of the author, written by Dr. John Dove, Dr. John Budden, Dr. Thomas James, Mr. Robert Burton, Mr. William Fletcher, Dr. John Wall of Chriſt Church, Dr. John Aiſgil Fellow of Corpus Chriſti College, Dr. Thomas Jackſon Preſident of that College, Dr. Thomas Clayton Regius Profeſſor of Phyſick at Oxford, Dr. John Bambridge Savilian Profeſſor of Aſtronomy, Mr. Ph. White, and Mr. Gerard Langbaine of Queen's College. The Dedication to that part of the work, intitled Dictionarium Etymologicum propriorum nominum, to Sir Clement Throckmorton, is dated at Southam in February 1611. Mr. Wood obſerves (1), that "that part of Rider's "Dictionary, which had the Latin before the Engliſh "was ſwallowed up by the greater attempts of "Francis Holyoke, who ſaith, that he deſigned and "contrived it ſo, before the Vocabularies or Dictio-"naries of Becman, Funger, and Martin came out; "notwithſtanding it appears, that he was beholden to "them, and made uſe of their materials in his Dic-"tionary, that he publiſhed ann. 1606." H.

(1) Athen. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 577. 2d edit. London 1721.

for his attachment to the King, and died November the 13th 1653 in the eighty ſeventh year of his age, and was interred in St. Mary's Church at Warwick (a).

(a) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 167. 2d edit. London 1721.

☞HOLYOKE or HOLYOAKE (THOMAS) ſon of the preceding, was born in 1616 at Stony-Thorp near Southam in Warwickſhire, and educated in Grammar Learning under Mr. White at Coventry; from whence he was ſent in Michaelmas Term 1632 at the age of ſixteen years to Queen's College in Oxford (a), where he took the degree of Bachelor of Arts July the 5th 1636 (b), and that of Maſter May the 16th 1639 (c), and became Chaplain of the ſaid College. In the beginning of the civil wars, when Oxford became the Seat of King Charles and was garriſoned for his uſe, he was put into commiſſion for a Captain of a Foot Company conſiſting moſtly of Scholars. In this poſt he did great ſervice, and had the degree of Doctor of Divinity conferred upon him by the favour of his Majeſty, though no ſuch matter occurs in the public Regiſter of the Univerſity, which was then ſometimes neglected (d). After the ſurrender of the garriſon of Oxford to the Parliament, he, by the name of Thomas Holyoke, without the addition of Maſter of Arts, Bachelor or Doctor of Divinity, obtained a licence from the Univerſity to practiſe Phyſic (e); whereupon ſettling in his own country, he exerciſed that Faculty with good ſucceſs till the Reſtoration in 1660, in which year Thomas Lord Leigh, Baron of Stone-Leigh in Warwickſhire, preſented him to the Rectory of Whitnaſh near Warwick. He was ſoon after made Prebendary of the Collegiate Church of Wolverhampton in Staffordſhire. In 1674 Robert Lord Brook conferred upon him the Donative of Breamour in Hampſhire, (which he had by the marriage of his Lady,) worth about two hundred pounds per ann. but before he had enjoyed it a year, he died of a fever June the 10th 1675. His body was interred near that of his father in the Church of St. Mary in Warwick. His Dictionary was publiſhed after his death in 1677 in fol.

(b) Idem, Faſti Oxon. vol. 1. col. 266.

(c) Ibid. col. 279.

(d) Idem, Ath. Oxon. ubi ſupra.

(e) Idem, ibid. and Faſti Oxon. vol. 2. col. 60.

H

HONORIA, the ſiſter of Valentinian III, drew upon her this Emperor's indignation by her diſſoluteneſs, and ſhe endeavoured to revenge herſelf by another crime. She ſent a meſſenger to Attila to perſuade him to conquer the Empire, and ſhe promiſed to marry him. The authors differ a little in their accounts of this ſtory. Some pretend that ſhe did not abandon herſelf to lewdneſs, till ſhe found that her deſign to marry that King of the Huns had miſcarried [A]. Others aſſert, that ſhe had led a diſſolute life before ever ſhe had any ſuch thought [B].

[A] Some authors pretend, that ſhe did not abandon herſelf to lewdneſs, till ſhe found that her deſign to marry the King of the Huns had miſcarried.] A modern author, who quotes Sigonius and Marcellinus, relates, that Honoria being devoured by the flames of luſt, ſent an Eunuch to Attila, to offer herſelf in marriage to him, with the whole Empire: that Attila ſent Embaſſadors to the Emperor Valentinian to demand Honoria even with threatnings; but that before they were returned to him, he fell in love with a young Lady of his own nation, that he married her, and killed himſelf on his wedding day with exceſſive drinking, and careſſing his bride too much; that Honoria finding herſelf thus diſappointed in her hopes, abandoned herſelf to her gallants, who got her with child, after which ſhe was ſent to Conſtantinople. Hæc libidine inflammata eunuchum legatum ad Attilam Hunnorum regem miſit, conjugium & regnum ei offerens. Miſit igitur Attila legatos ad Valentinianum, qui ſuaſionibus minas adjicientes Honoriam petebant, ſed priuſquam legati Roma reverterentur, Attila . . . . puellæ cujuſdam . . . . amore captus . . . . nuptias cum ea celebravit . . . . Honoria igitur cum ſpe ſua fruſtraretur aliis ſe ſubſternit: inde gravida facta, Conſtantinopolim mittitur (1).

(1) Chriſtian. Matth. Theatr. Hiſtor. pag. m. 733.

[B] Others aſſert that ſhe had led a diſſolute life, before ever ſhe had any ſuch thought.] "Honoria, the "Emperor Valentinian's ſiſter, having proſtituted her- "ſelf to the ſteward of her houſhold, was ſhamefully "baniſhed from the palace by her brother, and obliged "afterwards to retire into the Eaſt to the Court of "Theodoſius; this inſpired her with ſo violent a re- "ſentment, that finding no other means to be re- "venged, ſhe ſent ſecretly to Attila, to perſuade "him to invade Italy, the conqueſt of which would "be eaſy for him, conſidering Valentinian's weakneſs, "and the great confuſion in which the affairs of the "whole Empire were (2)." According to Bonfinius's account (3), ſhe was in a Convent when ſhe ſent to found Attila; who finding that buſineſs went on very ſlowly, imagined that he was impoſed upon; which determined him to marry the King of the Bactrians's daughter. Since Honoria was in a Convent, it is a proof that ſhe had not led a chaſte life.

(2) Maimbourg, Hiſt. de l'Arian. lib. 11. pag. 6, 7. of the 3d vol. Dutch edit.

(3) Hiſt. Hungar. Decad. 1. lib. 7.

HONORIUS the Roman Emperor, and ſon of Theodoſius. That I may not repeat what is to be found in Moreri, I ſhall only mention his marriages. He married ſucceſſively Stilico's two daughters [A], who, it is ſaid, died both, without having been known by their huſband. Zoſimus relates hereupon ſome very remarkable particulars [B], which

[A] He married . . . Stilico's two daughters.] The firſt was named Mary, and the other Thermantia. Their mother Serena, who was poſſeſſed with ambition, did not wait till Mary was fit for an huſband, but made haſte to marry her with the Emperor; and after Mary's death, ſhe was as much in haſte to give Thermantia to the ſame Prince. It appears from the words, which I ſhall now tranſcribe, that they both died virgins. Stilico Comes, cujus filiæ duæ Maria & Thermantia ſingulæ uxores Honorii principis fuerant, utraque tamen virgo defuncta (1). And yet the Poet Claudianus aſſerts, that Honorius and Mary lay together (2). We ſhall ſee in the following remark what Zoſimus relates.

(1) Marcellin. Comes, in Chron. apud Barth. in Claud. pag. 766. edit. in 4to.

(2) Tyrio qua fuſus Honorius oſtro Carpebat teneros Maria cum Conjuge ſomnos. Claud. de Bello Gildonico, ver. 327.

[B] . . . . Zoſimus relates hereupon ſome very remarkable particulars.] Serena, who could not reſolve to delay her daughter Mary's marriage with the Emperor, nor conſent that nature ſhould ſuffer any violence by the conſummation of Mary's marriage, who was not yet ripe, imagined a certain medium, which was to have Honorius debilitated. She found a woman who was very well ſkilled in that kind of faſcination, and who put Honorius in ſuch a condition, that when he lay with his young ſpouſe he neither would nor could perform what is called the conjugal duty. Mary died in a ſhort time, and with her maidenhead. Honorius courted ſometime after Thermantia, Mary's ſiſter. Ὁ δὲ βασιλεὺς Ὀνώριος ἀπὸ πολλῆς Μαρίας αὐτῷ τελευτησάσης τὸν γαμετὴν τὴν ταύτης ἀδελφὴν Θερμαντίαν ἠτεῖτο οἱ δοθῆναι πρὸς γάμον (3). Impera-

(3) Zoſimus, lib. 5. pag. m. 333.

tor

which are not to be met with in any other Hiſtorian; but he is juſtly charged with a very great contradiction [C], which is obvious to every reader of the meaneſt capacity.

tor autem Honorius, Maria conjuge jampridem rebus humanis exemta, ſororem ejus Thermantiam ſibi matrimonio jungi petebat. The father did not much like this match, but Serena deſired it moſt paſſionately, in order to ſupport her credit. The wedding was therefore concluded, but this marriage did not laſt long; for Thermantia died ſoon after, having met with the ſame fate as her ſiſter; that is to ſay, that ſhe lay with a man who neither would nor could know her. The witch, whom Serena had before employed, repeated her enchantments. Zoſimus does not relate this expreſly; it is only a conſequence which I infer from his words. Τῷ γάμῳ πρὸς τὴν Μαρίαν Ὁνωρίῳ ἐνιστα μένῳ, γάμων, ὥραν ἤπω τὴν κόρην ἄϱ᾽ ἔσεσθαι ἡ μήτηϱ ὁρῶσα, καὶ ἔτε ἀναβαλέσθαι τὸν γάμον ἀνεχομένη, καὶ τὸ παρ᾽ ἡλικίαν εἰς μίξιν ἐκβῆναι, φύσεως ἀδικίαν καὶ ὕβϱιν ἕτερον εἶναι νομίζουσα, γυναικὶ τὰ τοιαῦτα θεϱαπεύειν ἐπισταμένῃ περιτυχοῦσα, πράττει διὰ ταύτης τὸ συνεῖναι μὲν τὴν θυγατέϱα τῷ βασιλεῖ καὶ ἀμόλεκτϱον εἶναι. Τὸν δὲ μήτε ἐθέλειν μήτε δύνασθαι, τὰ τῷ γάμῳ προσήκοντα πράττειν. Ἐν τούτῳ τῆς κόρης ἀπειϱα γάμων ἀποθανούσης, εἰκότως ἡ Σεϱήνα βασιλείᾳ γονῆς ἐπιθυμοῦσα δέει τοῦ μὴ τὴν τοσαύτην αὐτῇ δυναστείαν ἐλαττωθῆναι, τῇ δευτέϱᾳ θυγατϱὶ συνάψαι τὸν Ὁνώϱιον ἔσπευδεν. ἃ δὴ γενομένης τελευτᾷ μὲν ἡ κόρη μετ᾽ ὀλὸν ταὐτὰ τῇ πϱοτέϱᾳ παθοῦσα (4). i. e. "When the marriage of Honorius and Mary was agreed upon, her mother Serena, who knew that her daughter was not yet of an age fit to be married, and who yet could not reſolve to delay the wedding, though ſhe was perſuaded that it was forcing nature to expoſe her ſo young to an huſband; her mother, I ſay, met with a woman who knew how to remedy ſuch things, and by her aſſiſtance ſhe managed the buſineſs ſo, that her daughter lived indeed and lay with the Emperor, but he neither would nor could perform the functions of an huſband. Soon after Mary dying a virgin, Serena, who very much deſired that the Emperor ſhould have children, leſt if he had none, ſhe ſhould loſe her great power, found means to make him marry her other daughter, who alſo died ſoon after, meeting with the ſame fate as her ſiſter had done."

(4) Zoſim. lib. 5. pag. m. 333.

[C] He is charged with a very great contradiction.] The reader has ſeen juſt now, that he aſſerts that Thermantia died ſoon after her marriage; yet he tells us in the ſame book, that Honorius having put Stilico to death, ſent Thermantia back to her mother. Ὁ δὲ βασιλεὺς Ὁνώϱιος τὴν μὲν γαμετὴν Θεϱμαντίαν παϱαλυθεῖσαν τῷ βασιλείῳ θεόντι τῇ μητϱὶ πϱοσέταξε παϱαδίδοσθαι μηδὲν διὰ τοῦ ὑφοϱωμένην (5). Imperator autem Honorius uxorem Thermantiam auguſtali dejectam ſolio matri ſuæ reddi juſſit, nulla tamen idcirco ſuſpicione gravatam. Stilico was killed the ſame year in which Honorius married Thermantia, that is to ſay, under the Conſulſhip of Baſſus and Philip, in the year 408. As to Stilico's other daughter, ſhe was married with the Emperor in the year 398, which was the year of the war againſt Gildo. See the paſſage quoted from Claudian (6).

(5) Idem, ibid. pag. 346. and in pag. 350. he mentions the preſents which the Eunuchs received, who had conducted Thermantia to her mother.

(6) In the remark [A].

☞HOOKE (ROBERT) an eminent Engliſh Mathematician and Philoſopher in the ſeventeenth Century, was ſon of Mr. John Hooke (a), Miniſter (b) of Freſhwater in the Iſle of Wight. He was born there on Saturday July the 18th 1635, and baptized by his father on the 26th of that month (c). His father deſigning him for the Miniſtry, took ſome pains to inſtruct him; but his conſtitution being extremely infirm from his infancy, and he being ſubject to frequent pains of the head, his father laid aſide all thoughts of making him a ſcholar. Being thus left to himſelf, he ſpent his time in making "little mechanical toys, in which, as he obſerves himſelf, he was very intent, "and for the tools he had, ſucceſsful; ſo that there was nothing he ſaw done by any "mechanic, but he endeavoured to imitate, and in ſome particulars could exceed." His father obſerving by theſe indications his great inclination to mechanics, thought to put him apprentice to ſome eaſy trade, as that of a Watchmaker or Limner, he ſhewing moſt inclination to thoſe or the like curious mechanical performances; for making uſe of ſuch tools as he could procure, "and ſeeing an old braſs clock taken to pieces, he attempted "to imitate it, and made a wooden one that would go. Much about the ſame time he "made a ſmall ſhip about a yard long, fitly ſhaping it, adding its rigging of ropes, "pullies, maſts, &c. with a contrivance to make it fire off ſome ſmall guns, as it was "ſailing croſs a Haven of a pretty breadth. He had alſo a great fancy for drawing, "having much about the ſame age copied ſeveral prints with a pen, that Mr. Hoſkins "(ſon of the famous Hoſkins, Cowper's maſter) much admired one not inſtructed could "ſo well imitate them." Theſe indications of a mechanic genius appeared in him when very young; for his father died in October 1648 (d). How he ſpent ſome of the following years of his life, we have no particular information; except that he was for ſome time with Sir Peter Lely the Painter, though probably not long, the ſmell of the oyl-colours increaſing his head-ach (e). After this he was ſent to Weſtminſter-ſchool, and lived with Dr. Buſby, as a ſcholar in his houſe [A]. In 1653 (f) he went to Chriſt Church in the Univerſity of Oxford, and became Servitor to Mr. Goodman there (g). About the year 1655 he began to diſcover that admirable inventive genius, which afterwards appeared ſo conſpicuous in his writings, which we ſhall give an account of in the note [B]. While he reſided at Oxford, he aſſiſted Dr. Thomas Willis, the Phyſician, in

(a) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 1039. 2d edit. London 1721.

(b) Life of Dr. Robert Hooke, pag. 2. prefixed to the Poſthumous Works of Dr. Hooke, edit. London 1705 in fol. Mr. Wood, ubi ſupra, ſays that he was Curate of that pariſh.

(c) Life of Dr. Rob. Hooke, ubi ſupra. Mr. Wood ſays, that he was baptized on the 19th of that month.

(d) Life of Dr. R. Hooke, ubi ſupra.

(e) Ibid. pag. 3.

(f) Ibid. Wood, ubi ſupra, ſays in 1650.

(g) Life of Dr. Hooke, pag. 3.

[A] Lived with Dr. Buſby, as a Scholar in his houſe.] Mr. Richard Waller tells us (1), that while he continued there, "he applied himſelf to Latin and Greek, "in which he made a ſufficient proficiency for the "time; and had a competent knowledge; and at "the ſame time got ſome inſight into the Hebrew and "ſome other Oriental languages. While he lived "with Dr. Buſby, he fell ſeriouſly upon the ſtudy of "the mathematics, the Doctor encouraging him there-"in, and allowing him particular hours for that pur-"poſe. In this he took the moſt regular method, "and firſt made himſelf maſter of Euclid's Elements, "and thence proceeded orderly from that ſure baſis to "the other parts of the mathematics, and after to the "application thereof to mechanics, his firſt and laſt "miſtreſs." Mr. Wood obſerves (2), that while he liv'd with Dr. Buſby, he made himſelf maſter of the firſt ſix books of Euclid; and of his own accord learned to play 20 leſſons on the organ; and invented thirty ſeveral ways of flying, as he and Dr. Wilkins of Wadham College have reported.

(1) Life of Dr. Robert Hooke, pag. 3.

(2) Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 1039. 2d edit. 1721.

[B] Began to diſcover that admirable inventive genius, which afterwards appeared ſo conſpicuous in his writings, which we ſhall give an account of in the note.] With regard to his philoſophical writings at Oxford before the reſtoration and the eſtabliſhment of the Royal Society, in his chymical operations; who recommended him to Mr. Boyle, whom he likewiſe ſerved in the ſame affair, and explained to him Euclid's Elements and Des Cartes's Philoſophy (b). November the 5th 1662 Sir Robert Moray propoſed to the Royal Society a perſon, (b) Wood, ubi ſupra.

Society, he writes thus in ſome manuſcript notes of his. "At theſe meetings, which were about the year 1655, "(before which time I knew little of them) divers "experiments were ſuggeſted, diſcourſed, and tryed "with various ſucceſſes, though no other account was "taken of them but what particular perſons perhaps "did for the help of their own memories; ſo that "many excellent things have been loſt; ſome few "only by the kindneſs of the authors have been ſince "made public. Amongſt theſe may be reckoned the "Honourable Mr. Boyle's Pneumatic Engine and Ex-"periments firſt printed in the year 1660; for in 1658 "or 1659 I contrived and perfected the air-pump for "Mr. Boyle, having firſt ſeen a contrivance for that "purpoſe made for the ſame honourable perſon by "Mr. Gratorix, which was too groſs to perform any "great matter." The Draught of this air-pump and all its parts, as it was afterwards publiſhed by Mr. Boyle, was in Mr. Waller's hands deſigned by Mr. Hooke, who informed Mr. Waller, that he was then ſent to London by Mr. Boyle, to get the barrel and other parts of that engine, which could not be made at Oxford. "The ſame year, ſays Mr. Hooke, I con-"trived and made many tryals about the art of flying "in the air, and moving very ſwift on the land and "water, of which I ſhewed ſeveral deſigns to Dr. "Wilkins, then Warden of Wadham College; and at "the ſame time made a module, which by the help "of ſprings and wings, raiſed and ſuſtained itſelf in "the air. But finding by my own tryals, and after-"wards by calculation, that the muſcles of a man's "body were not ſufficient to do any thing conſi-"derable of that kind, I applyed my mind to con-"trive a way to make artificial muſcles; divers de-"ſigns whereof I ſhewed alſo at the ſame time to "Dr. Wilkins; but was in many of my tryals fruſ-"trated of my expectations." What is here men-tioned of his attempts about flying, is confirmed by ſe-veral draughts and ſchemes of his upon paper of the me-thod, which might be attempted for that purpoſe, and of ſome contrivances for ſuccedaneous wings, not un-like thoſe of the bats, to the arms and legs of a man; as likewiſe of a contrivance to raiſe him up by means of horizontal vanes placed a little aſlope to the wind, which being blown round, turned an endleſs ſcrew in the center, which helped to move the wings, to be ma-naged by the perſon by this means raiſed aloft. The ſchemes were in the hands of Mr Richard Waller, with ſome few fragments relating thereto, but ſo im-perfect, that he did not judge them fit for the public. But to return to Mr. Hooke's notes. "About this "time having an opportunity of acquainting myſelf "with aſtronomy by the kindneſs of Dr. Ward (3), "I applied myſelf to the improving of the Pendulum "for ſuch obſervations; and in the year 1656 or 1657 "I contrived a way to continue the motion of the Pen-"dulum, ſo much commended by Ricciolus in his Al-"mageſtum, which Dr. Ward had recommended to "me to peruſe. I made ſome tryals for this "end, which I found to ſucceed to my wiſh. The "ſucceſs of theſe made me further think of improv-"ing it for finding the longitude; and the method I "had made for myſelf for mechanic inventions quickly "led me to the uſe of ſprings inſtead of gravity for the "making a body vibrate in any poſture; whereupon "I did firſt in great and afterwards in ſmaller mo-"dules ſatisfy myſelf of the practicableneſs of ſuch "an invention, and hoping to have made great ad-"vantage thereby, I acquainted divers of my friends, "and particularly Mr. Boyle, that I was poſſeſſed of "ſuch an invention, and craved their aſſiſtance for "improving the uſe of it to my advantage. Im-"mediately after his Majeſty's Reſtoration, Mr. Boyle "was pleaſed to acquaint the Lord Brouncker and Sir "Robert Moray with it, who adviſed me to get a pa-"tent for the invention, and propounded very proba-"ble ways of making conſiderable advantage by it. To "induce them to a belief of my performance, I ſhewed "a pocket-watch accommodated with a ſpring, ap-"plied to the arbor of the Ballance to regulate the "motion thereof, concealing the way I had for find-"ing the longitude. This was ſo well approved of, "that Sir Robert Moray drew me up the form of a "patent, the principal part whereof, viz. the deſcrip-"tion of the watch, ſo regulated, in his own "hand-writing, I have yet by me; but the diſ-"couragement I met with in the management of this "affair made me deſiſt for that time." In confirma-tion of what is here related, Mr. Waller tells us (4), that he had met with a draught of an agreement be-tween the Lord Brouncker, Mr. Boyle, and Sir Robert Moray, with Robert Hooke, M. A. to this purpoſe, that Robert Hooke ſhould diſcover to them the whole of his invention to meaſure the parts of time at ſea as exactly as they are at land by the pendulum clocks invented by Monſieur Huygens. That of the profits to be made thereby not exceeding 6000 pound, Ro-bert Hooke was to have $\frac{1}{4}$: of whatever was made more of it, not exceeding 4000 pound, Robert Hooke was to have $\frac{2}{3}$: of the reſt, if more could be made of it, he was to have the $\frac{1}{2}$; and to be publicly owned the author and inventor thereof. This is the ſubſtance of onedraught. There are ſome others, which differ only in the diviſion of the profits. In purſuance of this deſign there were ſeveral papers drawn up, viz. the draught of an Act of Parliament to oblige all maſters of ſhips to pay ſo much per tun for the uſe of this invention; as alſo a warrant to be granted by the King to Robert Hooke M. A. for a patent for the ſole uſe of the ſaid invention for fourteen years, and ſigned by his Majeſty's command, William Morrice. Thus far the matter then proceeded: and how it came to ſtop here, may be juſtly wondered; but to give the reader the beſt ſatisfaction we can in this matter, we ſhall tranſcribe a paragraph out of the poſtſcript to his treatiſe of Helioſcopes, printed in 1676. "This treaty "with me had been finally concluded for ſeveral thou-"ſand pounds, had not the inſerting of one clauſe "broke it off, which was, That if after I had diſco-"vered my invention about the finding the longitude by "watches (though in themſelves ſufficient) they or any "other perſon ſhould find a way of improving my prin-"ciples, he or they ſhould have the benefit thereof during "the term of the patent, and not I. To which clauſe "I could no ways agree, knowing it was eaſy to "vary my principles an hundred ways; and it was "not improbable but there might be ſome addition "of conveniency to what I ſhould at firſt diſcover, it "being facile inventis addere; and judging it unreaſon-"able to be deprived of the benefit of my inventions, in "themſelves ſufficient, becauſe others might vary them, "or any other ways improve them, of which it was "very probable they would have no thought, if they "had not the advantage of being inſtructed by my "diſcovery, it having been hid ſome thouſands of "years already, as indeed the effect hath made evident "and certain, there having been nothing done by any "body elſe upon that matter ever ſince. Upon this "point our treaty was broken off, and I concealed the "farther diſcovery of any of the other more conſi-"derable parts of my inventions for the regulating "of time-keepers, as hoping I might find ſome better "opportunity of publiſhing them together with my "way of finding the longitude of places, for which I "hoped to have ſome benefit, to repay all the labour, "ſtudy, and charge I had been at for the perfecting "thereof. Upon this I was told, that I had better "have then diſcovered all, ſince there were others, that "would find it out within ſix months. To which I "anſwered, that I would try them one ſeven years; "and it is now above twice ſeven, and I do not find "it yet found out. Indeed Mr. Huygens hath made "uſe of that part I diſcovered, and ſomewhat Mr. "Leibnitz hath hit upon; but both of them are imper-"fect. About two years after [the breaking off the "abovementioned treaty] I was alarmed by one of "thoſe, that had been concerned in it, who told me, "he had news that the longitude was found out by a "perſon of honour, by means of Mr. Huygen's pendulum "clock, carried to ſea, and hung to the underſide of the deck "of a ſhip by the help of a ball and ſocket. But upon "his deſcription of the thing I preſently told him,

(4) Life of Dr. Robert Hooke, pag. 5.

(3) Dr. Seth Ward, Savilian Profeſſor of Aſtronomy at Oxford, and afterwards Biſhop of Sarum.

perſon, who was willing to be entertained as a Curator by the Society, offering to furniſh them every day when they met with three or four conſiderable experiments. This propoſition being unanimouſly received, Mr. Hooke was named to be the perſon, and accordingly on the next day of their meeting November the 12th he was unanimouſly admitted Curator, with the thanks of the Society ordered to Mr. Boyle for diſpenſing with him for their uſe; and they ordered that Mr. Hooke ſhould come and ſit among them, and both bring in every day three or four of his own experiments, and take care of ſuch others as ſhould be recommended to him by the Society (i). From this time the Society's Journals gave ſufficient teſtimonies of his performances. In 1663 he was nominated, among others, by the Chancellor of Oxford, to have the degree of Maſter of Arts conferred on him (k). The year following Sir John Cutler having founded a mechanic Lecture, he ſettled an annual ſtipend on Mr. Hooke for life, intruſting the Preſident

(i) Life of Dr. Hooke, pag. 9.

(k) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2 col. 1039, 1040. and Faſti Oxon. vol. 2. col. 156.

" that that invention would do mine no harm; and in" deed it was experimentally found uſeleſs to that effect
" not long after, upon a trial made of carrying one of " the ſaid clocks to ſea in one of his Majeſty's pleaſure-
" boats in the year 1662. The invention indeed in " itſelf was ingenious, and did much more than what
" Mr. Huygens did expect. But wanting a little ad" dition (which I concealed, and Mr. Huygens hath " not got yet that I hear of) it failed of the effect that " was expected. Notwithſtanding this, it was not long " after publiſhed firſt in Low-Dutch, and immediately
" following in Engliſh, wherein what made for it
" was related, but what made againſt it was concealed,
" though they were both equally known. But on the " other ſide all that I could obtain was a catalogue of " difficulties, firſt in the doing of it; ſecondly, in the " bringing it into public uſe; thirdly, in making ad" vantage of it. Difficulties were propounded from the " alteration of climates, airs, heats, and colds, tempera" ture of ſprings, the nature of vibrations, the wear" ing of materials, the motion of the ſhip, and di-
" vers others. Next it would be difficult to bring it
" to uſe; for ſeamen know their way already to any " part, and men would not be at the unneceſſary charge
" of the Apparatus; and obſervations of the time could " not well be made at ſea, and they would no where
" be of uſe, but in the Eaſt and Weſt India voyages,
" which were ſo perfectly underſtood, that every com" mon ſeaman almoſt knew how to pilot a ſhip thi-
" ther. And as for making any benefit, all people
" loſt by ſuch undertakings. Much had been talked " about premiums for the longitude, but there never " was any ſuch thing; no King or State would ever
" give a farthing for it, and the like." Our author ſuffering this invention to be undiſcovered to the laſt gave ſome perſons cauſe to queſtion, whether he was ever poſſeſſor of it, and to doubt whether what in theory ſeemed very promiſing, would anſwer when put to the teſt of practice. Others indeed more ſeverely judged that it was only a kind of boaſting in him to aſſert that, which had not yet been performed, though attempted by many. However the matter is, it is certain that he perſiſted in the affirmation to the laſt, and not many weeks before his death told Mr. Richard Waller and other perſons, that he knew a certain and infallible method to diſcover the true place of a veſſel at ſea, as to its Eaſt and Weſt diſtance from the port departed from. Whether by watches, or other time-keepers, or by any other ways, it is known; though indeed by what is before mentioned, it ſhould ſeem to be by watches, for the improvement of which he made many trials, and read ſeveral diſcourſes. However, this matter produced the diſcovery of that moſt uſeful and practicable method of regulating pocket-watches by a ſpiral ſpring applied to the arbor of the balance, as they are now made without any conſiderable addition ſince; the account of which we ſhall tranſcribe from the poſtſcript to his diſcourſe of Helioſcopes publiſhed in 1676. " Finding, ſays he, in the Tranſ-
" actions (5), a paſſage inſerted out of the French
" Journal des Sçavans about the invention of applying
" a ſpring to the balance of a watch for the regulating
" the motion thereof, without at all taking notice that
" this invention was firſt found out by an Engliſhman,
" and long ſince publiſhed to the world; I muſt beg
" the reader's patience, whilſt I, in vindication of my " own right againſt ſome unhandſome proceedings, do
" acquaint him with the ſtate of the matter. About
" ſeventeen years ſince, being very inquiſitive about " regulating the meaſure of time, in order to find the " longitude, I did (from a Mechanical Algebra, which " I was then maſter of) find out and perfect this
" contrivance, both as to the theory and experimen-
" tal verification thereof, of which I then diſcourſed
" to ſeveral of my friends, but concealed the modus.
" About fifteen years ſince, viz. in the year 1660, I " was in treaty with divers perſons of honour for the " diſcovery thereof upon propoſed articles of encourage" ment. This I can prove by undeniable witneſſes
" yet living, and I have ſtill all the papers, articles,
" and tranſactions of this matter by me in their own
" hand-writing. In order to bring this treaty to " paſs, I was neceſſitated to diſcover ſomething of my " invention about meaſuring time, which was this " way of applying ſprings to the arbor of the balance
" of a watch, for the regulating the vibrations thereof
" in all poſtures. And this I did to the end I might " gain ſomewhat of belief to theſe noble perſons, with " whom I was to treat, that I had ſomewhat more
" than ordinary, and was not one of the heard-of pre-
" tenders to that invention, which effect it had. In the " year 1664 I read ſeveral of my firſt Cutlerian Lectures
" upon this ſubject in the open hall at Greſham Col" lege, at which were preſent, beſides a great num" ber of the Royal Society, many ſtrangers. I there
" ſhewed the ground and reaſon of that application of " ſprings to a balance of a watch for regulating its " motion, and explained briefly the true nature and
" principle of ſprings to ſhew the phyſical and geo-
" metrical ground of them. And I explained above
" twenty ſeveral ways, by which ſprings might be ap" plied to do the ſame thing; and how the vibrations
" might be ſo regulated, as to make their durations
" either all equal, or the greater ſlower or quicker
" than the reſt, and that in any proportion aſſign-
" ed. Some of theſe ways were applicable to leſſer
" vibrations, others to greater, as of 2, 3, 4, 5,
" 6; or what number of revolutions were deſired; the " models of which I there produced, and I did at the " ſame time ſhew wherein the aforeſaid ſea-clocks were " defective. All theſe particulars were at ſeveral other " times diſcourſed of and tried before the Royal So" ciety. I alſo, at the earneſt deſire of ſome friends,
" in the years 1664 and 1665, did cauſe ſome of
" the ſame watches to be made, though I was unwil-
" ling to add any of the better applications of the " ſpring to them, as waiting a better opportunity for " my advantage. Of all theſe things the Publiſher of " the Tranſactions was not ignorant, and Mr. Huygens
" might have heard of them, at leaſt he might have " read enough in the Hiſtory of the Royal Society to have " informed him in this matter. For in page 247 of " that Hiſtory, amongſt other experimented inventions,
" there are recounted ſeveral new ways of Pendulum
" Watches for the pocket, wherein the motion is regu-
" lated by Springs, &c. Mr. Huygens might therefore,
" if he had pleaſed, have mentioned the firſt inven-
" tor; as he might alſo that of the circular Pendu-
" lum, which is mentioned in the ſame page of the " aforeſaid Hiſtory. But though he would not own
" that he knew my publiſhed invention, yet I am ſure,
" he hath manifeſted, that he knows no more than
" what I had formerly diſcovered, he having not in " the leaſt mentioned the other contrivance, without " which the other part of the invention is but lame
" and imperfect. Wanting that, the ſaid watches will " not be exact, nor ſhew the longitude at ſea or land;
" but on the contrary they will be ſubject to great ine-
" qualities

(5) Num. 112. pag. 272.

ſident, Council and Fellows of the Royal Society to direct and appoint him with reſpect to the ſubject and number of his Lectures. January the 11th 166$\frac{4}{5}$ he was elected by that Society Curator of Experiments for life, with an additional Salary to Sir John Cutler's annuity (l). During the receſs of the Royal Society on account of the plague in 1665, he attended Dr. Wilkins and ſome other ingenious Gentlemen into Surrey, near Banſtead Downs, where they made ſeveral Experiments (m). September the 19th 1666 he produced to the Royal Society a model for rebuilding the City of London deſtroyed by fire, with which the Society were well pleaſed; and Sir John Laurence, the late Lord Mayor, addreſſed himſelf to the Society, expreſſing the preſent Lord Mayor's and Aldermen's approbation of it, they preferring it before the model of the City Surveyor. It is ſaid, that by one part of this model of Mr. Hooke's it was deſigned to have all the chief ſtreets, as from Leaden-Hall-Corner to Newgate, and the like, to lie in an exact ſtrait

(l) Life of Dr. Hooke, pag. 10, 11.

(m) Ibid. pag. 11.

" qualities of motion and carriage, and will be apt " with many of theſe motions to be ſtopped. . . I for- " bear now to mention any farther the carriage of " the writer of the Tranſactions in this affair." Mr. Hooke's reſentment to Mr. Oldenburg, the publiſher of the Philoſophical Tranſactions, appears ſtrongly from this paſſage; and the reaſon of it was, that when Mr. Oldenburg inſerted an extract of the Journal des Sçavans concerning Mr. Huygens's new invention of very exact and portative watches, he did not take notice, that this invention was firſt found out by Mr. Hooke, and long ſince publiſhed by him to the world. Mr. Oldenburg, on occaſion of his advertiſing this very treatiſe of Helioſcopes in the Philoſophical Tranſactions for the year 1675, No. 118, undertakes to juſtify himſelf from any blame on this account by ſaying, " It is " certain the deſcriber of helioſcopes ſome years ago " cauſed to be actually made ſome watches of this " kind, yet without publiſhing a deſcription of them " in print to the world. And it is as true, that none " of theſe watches ſucceeded, nor was any thing ſince " done to amend the invention, until Mr. Huygens, by " a letter to the Royal Society, communicated to them " a contrivance of his very exact pocket-watches; for " which intelligence the ſaid Society thought fit to " return him thanks, yet ſo as to intimate to him, " that Mr. Hooke had ſome years ago invented a " watch of the like ſtructure. Not long after this " came over a deſcription of Mr. Huygens's invention, " together with a delineation of the figure of the " ſame, which I produced at the public meeting of " the Royal Society, where Mr. Hooke not only ſaw " it, but took a copy of the figure itſelf at the ſame " time . . . . Which done, both figure and deſcription " were at Mr. Huygen's deſire printed in the Tranſ- " actions, No. 112; Mr. Hooke well knowing, that " they were deſigned to be publiſhed in one of thoſe " tracts, and who might therefore, if he had deſired " notice ſhould be taken at the ſame time of his earlier " invention, have given the author of them ſome inti- " mation of it, which would certainly have been " complied with, as hath been done upon other occa- " ſions; witneſs ſeveral of the ſame tracts, wherein " divers diſcoveries of this accuſer have been formerly " both printed and vindicated from the uſurpation of " others." Mr. Hooke was highly provoked at Mr. Oldenburg's aſſerting, that none of his watches ſucceeded; and therefore in the poſtſcript to his Lampas, printed at London 1677, he thus replies to it. " The publiſher of the Tranſactions in that of October " 1675, endeavours to cover former injuries by accu- " mulating new ones . . . . Otherwiſe he would not " have affirmed, that none of my watches ſucceeded. " For how could he be ſure of a negative, whom I " have not acquainted with my inventions, ſince I " looked on him as one, that made a trade of intelli- " gence? Next, whereas he denies their being pub- " liſhed to the world in print, he prevaricates, and " would have it believed they were not publiſhed to " the world, though they were publickly read of in " Sir John Cutler's Lectures; . . . . and though they " were made and ſhewn to thouſands both Engliſh " and foreigners, and writ of to many; and laſtly, " in the year 1666 publiſhed to the world in print " in the Hiſtory of the Royal Society." Mr. Hooke likewiſe anſwers to what Mr. Oldenburg alledged about his taking a copy of Mr. Huygen's draught and deſcription, and to ſome other particulalars of his defence. But as he had inſinuated, that Mr. Oldenburg was not faithful in the management of the Royal Society's intelligence, the latter obtained the following declaration from the Council of the Society, dated November 20, 1676. " Whereas the publiſher of the " Philoſophical Tranſactions hath made complaint to " the Council of the Royal Society of ſome paſſages " in a late book of Mr. Hooke, intitled, Lampas, &c. " and printed by the Printer of the ſaid Society, re- " flecting on the integrity and faithfulneſs of the ſaid " publiſher in his management of the intelligence of " the ſaid Society: this Council hath thought fit to " declare in the behalf of the publiſher aforeſaid, that " they knew nothing of the publication of the ſaid " book; and farther, that the ſaid publiſher hath car- " ried himſelf faithfully and honeſtly in the manage- " ment of the intelligence of the Royal Society, and " given no juſt cauſe of ſuch reflection." Mr. Richard Waller obſerves (6), that Mr. Hooke informed him, that about the year 1660, he having ſhewn a move- ment regulated by a ſpiral ſpring to the Lord Brouncker, &c, and "Mr. Huygens having for ſome time ap- " plied himſelf to invent ſeveral ways to regulate time- " keepers by the correſpondence he held with Mr. " Oldenburg, among other matters had notice of " this, for which there was afterwards an application " made to procure a patent. This is indeed poſſible, " continues Mr. Waller; but whether it were ſo or not, " I cannot determine. That Mr. Hooke had, many " years before Huygens mentioned it, diſcovered the " invention, is certain by what is related in the Hiſtory " of the Royal Society among ſeveral new inventions, " in theſe words; There have been invented ſeveral " kinds of pendulum watches for the pocket, wherein the " motion is regulated by ſprings, &c. Now though " this does not mention the ſprings being ſpiral, or " faſtned to the arbor of the ballance, yet it appears " it was ſo by what is related above; and a paſſage " I have ſeen in a letter from Sir Robert Moray to " Mr. Oldenburg, dated Oxon Sept. 30, 1665, clears " it, in which are theſe words: You [meaning Olden- " burg] will be the firſt that knows when his [that is " Huygens's] watches will be ready; and I will there- " fore expect from you an account of them, and, if he " imparts to you what he does, let me know it. To that " purpoſe you may aſk him, if he doth not apply a " ſpring to the arbor of the balance, and that will " give him occaſion to ſay ſomewhat to you. If it " be that, you may tell him what Hooke HAS " DONE IN THAT MATTER, AND WHAT HE " INTENDS MORE. Although I cannot be aſſur- " ed what Oldenburg wrote to Monſieur Huy- " gens; yet it is probable their intimacy procured " what he knew; and it is evident, that Huygens's " diſcovery of this was firſt publiſhed in the Journal " des Sçavans, and from thence in the Philoſophical " Tranſactions for March 25th, 1675, about ten years " after that letter of Sir Robert Moray's, and near " fifteen after Hooke's firſt diſcovery of it. To this " I ſhall add what Mr. Oldenburg has printed, Philoſ. " Tranſact. No. 118. It is certain the deſcriber of " Helioſcopes [meaning Hooke] ſome years ago cauſed " to be actually made ſome watches of this kind; which " indeed (he there ſays) were unſucceſsful. Which " whether ſo or not, I cannot learn ſo many years " after, though I am inclined to think that expreſſion " proceeded from paſſion; the invention and principle " of Hooke's and Huygens's being both the very ſame " as are now uſed." Mr. Waller then remarks (7), that in the declaration of the Council of the Royal Society in behalf of Mr. Oldenburg, there is no contradiction to Mr. Hooke's being the firſt in that inven- tion;

(6) Life of Dr. Hooke, pag. 6.

(7) Ibid. pag. 7.

ſtrait line, and all the other croſs ſtreets turning out of them at right angles, and all the churches, public buildings, market-places, &c. in proper and convenient places. The rebuilding of the city, according to the Act of Parliament, requiring an able perſon to ſet out the ground to the ſeveral proprietors, Mr. Hooke was pitched upon and appointed one of the City-Surveyors, Mr. John Oliver a glaſs-painter being the other (n). In this employment he got moſt part of that eſtate, which he died poſſeſſed of, as was evident by a large iron cheſt of money found after his death, which had been locked down with the key in it, with a date of the time, by which it appeared to have been ſo ſhut up for above thirty years. In this was contained the greateſt part of what he left behind him, which was to the value of many thouſand pounds in gold and ſilver. "That "he might by this place juſtly acquire a conſiderable eſtate, ſays Mr. Waller (o). I think "cannot be denied, every particular perſon after the fire being in haſte to have his concerns

(n) Ibid. pag. 13; and Wood, Ath. Oxon. ubi ſupra.

(o) Life of Dr. R. Hooke, pag. 13.

tion; and that it cannot be denied but that Mr. Hooke was frequently deſired to perfect his inventions about watches and time-keepers, which, when urged, he as often promiſed, and when any new contrivance was by any perſon produced, he then ſhewed ſomething of his own, either the ſame, or excelling it, which was a proof that he had tried the ſame before. Particularly when on the 9th of Auguſt 1666, Mr. Mercator ſhewed to the Society a watch of his own invention, repreſenting the æquation of time to the approbation of the company, Mr. Hooke at the ſame time produced a new piece of watch-work of his own contrivance to meaſure time exactly both at ſea and land, of which he was deſired to bring in the deſcription, which, though promiſed, was, it ſeems, never done. But to proceed to our author's other performances; in 1655 and 1656, there were many curious experiments, obſervations, and enquiries made at Oxford, and inſtruments for thoſe purpoſes contrived, as particularly the Barometer, of which Mr. Hooke ſays, the firſt occaſion of the invention was a ſuggeſtion of Mr. Chriſtopher Wren, in order to find whether the hypotheſis of Des Cartes for giving the reaſon of the tides from the preſſure of the moon upon the air in its paſſage by the Meridian were true or not. About 1658 or 1659, he obſerves that he "contrived ſeveral Aſtronomical inſtruments for "making obſervations both at ſea and land, which "I afterwards, ſays he, produced before the Royal "Society." Some of theſe ſeem to be the inſtruments mentioned in his Aſtronomical Lectures publiſhed in his Poſthumous Works (8). About the ſame time he contrived the Circular Pendulum, and the uſe of it for continuing the motion of another Pendulum, which he afterwards ſhewed to the Royal Society in 1663; about which time and afterwards there are ſeveral particulars relating to the Circular Pendulum entered into the Journals of that Society as his. A movement to this purpoſe is deſcribed in his Animadverſions on the firſt part of the Machina Cœleſtis, p. 68, Edit. London, 1674. In 1661 he publiſhed at London in 8vo. An Attempt for the explanation of the Phænomena, obſervable in an experiment publiſhed by the Honourable Robert Boyle, Eſq; in the XXXVth Experiment of his Epiſtolical Diſcourſe touching the Air; and the ſame year at London in 4to, A Diſcourſe of a new Inſtrument lately invented by him to make more accurate Obſervations in Aſtronomy than ever were yet made, &c. May 14th or December 17th 1662, he read to the Society an Account of the Diverſity of the Parts of water. November 26th, A brief Account of the Experiments tried with Glaſs-Balls, and a conjecture of the cauſe. December 10th, An Account of the Rarifaction of the Air; and Obſervables in the ſix branched Figures frozen in Urine; Figures obſerved in Waters frozen; Figures obſerved in ſnow: And of the difference of Gravity by removing the body further from the Surface of the Earth upwards. December the 24th he read a paper of driving Water out of a Glaſs by its own Vapours. January 14th, 166$\frac{2}{3}$, he read an account of ſome Tryals for finding how much the preſſure of Water is increaſed by the Deſcent of heavier, or the Aſcent of lighter bodies therein; and An Account of an Experiment touching the different Weight of cold and warm water. January the 28th, he read an Account of ſome Tryals for finding out the Preſſure of the parts of Water upon one another, and the elaſtical power of the Air. February the 11th he read a paper of the Refraction of Ice. February the 18th he read a Deſcription of the Inſtrument for finding the Force of falling Bodies. May the 6th, 1663, he read Queries concerning the Condenſation of Air, to be reſolved by Experiments in the Compreſſing Engine. May the 13th he read a paper of Experiments propoſed to be made in the Compreſſing Engine. And on the ſame day, or the 20th following, he read an Account of what happened to a Carp included in a veſſel of Water, out of which the Air was pretty well exhauſted. June the 3d he read a paper of the exhauſting Air out of Water, which returns into Water again. July the 1ſt or 15th he ſhewed an Experiment touching the uniting and mixing of Air and Water. July the 22d he read a Deſcription of the Water-raiſing-Engine preſented by his Highneſs Prince Rupert to the Society, after the way of Cavallerius's Hydrocantiſterium novum. September the 9th he read a Deſcription of an Inſtrument for tryal of Gun-powder. February the 10th he read an Account of Experiments concerning the Weight of the Air, and the Proportion of the Weight of the Air to that of Water. April the 13th 1664, he read an Account of an Experiment of the riſing of Water in the Bolt-head upon Immerſion in cold, and falling thereof upon the Immerſion of it in hot. April the 27th he ſhewed an Experiment for the Condenſation of Spirit of Wine; and another for the Condenſation of Water. June the 8th he read a brief Relation of ſome Obſervations made, and of the beſt information that could be had concerning the Effects of a Clap of Thunder and Lightening, which happened June the 7th, 1664, about four in the Afternoon at the Sign of the Poet's Head in Piccadilly, London. In July he produced an experiment to ſhew the number of Vibrations of an extended ſtring made in a determinate time, requiſite to give a certain tone or note, by which it was found that a wire making two hundred ſeventy two vibrations in one ſecond of time, ſounded G Sol Re Ut in the ſcale of all Muſic (9). He made likewiſe other experiments of the diviſion of a Monochord. November the 2d, he read an Account of a Viper's Teeth; and November the 23d an Account of opening a Viper. December the 14th he read Some Conſiderations about the moſt likely Way of ſettling an univerſal meaſure by the help of Pendulums. In 1665 he publiſhed his Micrographia: or ſome philoſophical Deſcriptions of minute Bodies made by magnifying Glaſſes, with Obſervations and Enquiries thereupon. London &c. in folio. March the 21ſt 166$\frac{5}{6}$ he read a paper concerning gravity. About the ſame time he produced a very ſmall quadrant for obſerving accurately to minutes and ſeconds. It had an area moving on it by means of a ſcrew lying on the limb of the quadrant. Poſſibly this was the firſt ever made after that manner, though it is now ſufficiently known and practiſed. A large one of this ſort and of all its parts, with the reſt of the Apparatus and manner of uſing it, is at large publiſhed by Mr. Hooke in 1674 in his Animadverſions on Hevelius's Machina Cœleſtis, p. 54. May the 23d 1666 he read a paper, "explicating (as is ſaid in "the Journals of the Royal Society) the inflexion of a "direct motion into a curve by a ſupervening attractive "principle, which was ordered to be regiſtered. The "diſcourſe contained therein is an introduction to an "experiment to ſhew that circular motion is com-"pounded of an endeavour by a direct motion by the "tangent, and of another endeavour tending to the "center. To which purpoſe there was a Pendulum "faſtened to the roof of the room with a large wooden "ball of Lignum Vitæ on the end of it: and it was "found, that if the Impetus of the endeavour by the "tangent at the firſt ſetting out was ſtronger than the "endeavour to the center, there was generated ſuch an "elliptical

(8) See pag. 500, &c.

(9) Life of Dr. Hooke, pag. 10.

" cerns expedited; ſo that, as I have been informed, he had no reſt early and late from " perſons ſolliciting to have their grounds ſet out; which, without any fraud or in- " juſtice, deſerved a due recompence in ſo fatiguing an employ." Mr. Oldenburg, Secretary of the Royal Society, dying during the Society's receſs in 1677, Mr. Hooke was deſired to take his place, and write down the minutes of what conſiderable matters paſt, which he did on the 25th of October the ſame year (p). In the beginning of the year 1687 his brother's daughter Mrs. Grace Hooke died, who had lived with him ſeveral years, the concern for whoſe death he hardly ever wore off, being obſerved from that time to grow leſs active, and more melancholy and cynical (q). In December 1691 having received a warrant from Dr. Tillotſon, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, for a degree of Doctor of Phyſic, he went on the 7th day of that month, and took the oaths before Sir Charles Hedges in Doctors Commons. About this time he was employed about the contriving

(p) Ibid. pag. 20.

(q) Ibid. pag. 24.

" elliptical motion whoſe longeſt diameter was parallel " to the direct endeavour of the body at the firſt im- " pulſe. But if that Impetus were weaker than that " endeavour to the center, there was generated ſuch an " elliptical motion, whoſe ſhorteſt diameter was pa- " rallel to the endeavour of the body in the firſt point " of the impulſe. If both were equal, there was made " a perfect circular motion. There was alſo made " another experiment by faſtening another pendulous " body by a ſhort ſtring on the lower part of the wire, " by which the greater weight was ſuſpended, that " it might freely make a circular or elliptical mo- " tion round the bigger, whilſt the bigger moved cir- " cularly or elliptically about the center; the intention " whereof was to explicate the manner of the moon's " motion about the earth, it appearing evidently there- " by, that neither the biggeſt ball, which repreſented " the earth, nor the leſs, which repreſented the moon, " were moved in ſo perfect a circle or ellipſis, as other- " wiſe they would have been, if either of them had " been ſuſpended and moved ſingly; but that a certain " point, which ſeemed to be the center of gravity of " the two bodies (howſoever poſited and conſidered, as " one) ſeemed to be regularly moved, in ſuch a cir- " cle or ellipſis, the two balls having other peculiar " motions in ſmall epicycles about the ſaid point." Auguſt the 1ſt 1666 he read his Obſervations of the Comet in 1664, afterwards printed in his Tracts, and intitled, Cometa. November the 21ſt he read an Account of Inclining Pendulums. September the 19th he produced a model for rebuilding the city of London deſtroyed by the great fire. January the 9th 166$\frac{6}{7}$ he was ordered by the Royal Society to proſecute his obſervations of the earth's parallax propoſed by him formerly. A large account of the reſult of his obſervations therein was printed in his Attempt to prove the Motion of the Earth, London 1674, in 4to; being the firſt of his Cutlerian Lectures publiſhed. February the 28th following he firſt produced his reflecting Teleſcope, which is deſcribed, with the reaſon of the principle, in his treatiſe of Helioſcopes printed in 1676. In a letter of Mr. John Collins, F. R. S. to a friend concerning Mr. Newton's reflecting teleſcope, communicated to us by the very ingenious William Jones Eſq; F. R. S. we have the following paſſage. " Mr. Hook " finding Mr. Newton's reflecting teleſcope to gain " eſteem, did ſoon after put in a propoſal in writing " to the Royal Society in words to this effect. The " perfection of teleſcopes, microſcopes, ſcotoſcopes, " and burning-glaſſes, by figures as eaſily made, as " thoſe that are plain or ſpherical, whereby the light " and magnitude of objects is prodigiouſly encreaſed, " and whatſoever hath hitherto been attempted, or al- " moſt deſired in dioptrics, and accompliſhed with a " cypher containing the myſtery: the which he diſ- " cloſed to Lord Brouncker and Dr. Wren, who re- " port plauſibly of it. And what is done in this way, " is perſormed by glaſs refraction. Mr. Hook more- " over affirmed, coram multis, that in the year 1664, " he made a little tube, of about an inch long, to put " in his fob, which performs more than any teleſcope " of fifty feet long, made after the common manner: " but the plague happening, which cauſed his abſence, " and the fire, whence redounded profitable employ- " ments about the city, he neglected to proſecute the " ſame, being unwilling the glaſs-grinders ſhould know " any thing of the ſecret." March the 14th following he read to the Society a paper about making a lamp that ſhall always keep the ſurface of the oyle at the ſame height till it is ſpent. March the 21ſt he read a Deſcription of a very eaſy and ſimple Inſtrument, but univerſal, for the Deſcriptions of all kinds of plain Dials, whether Horizontal, Mural, Inclined, Reclined, or Declined, together with a Declaration of the Principles and Reaſons of it. June the 17th 1667 and afterwards he read ſeveral diſcourſes of the cauſes, powers, and effects of Earth-quakes, affirming the great hills and mountains in the world to have been raiſed by them; of which ſubject he at ſeveral times afterwards made very many diſcourſes and lectures, the greateſt part of which are publiſhed in his Poſthumous works. In July 1667 he tryed ſeveral experiments upon himſelf in an Exhauſted Receiver large enough to contain a man. At this time he contrived a Micrometer of leſs charge and difficulty than that invented by Mr. Gaſcoigne with ſcrews. This ſeems to be the ſame with that deſcribed in his Poſthumous works p. 498. December 19 he exhibited to the Royal Society ſome Experiments concerning Reſpiration upon Fœtus's taken out of a maſtiff bitch. December the 26th he brought in a farther deſcription of a Sea-Barometer. The ſame year his Method for making an Hiſtory of the Weather was printed in Sprat's Hiſtory of the Royal Society, p. 173. January the 2d 167$\frac{7}{8}$ he propoſed to the Royal Society ſome ways of diſcovering the various preſſures of the air. January the 16th he produced his new contrivance of promoting the vibrations of pendulums, ſo as to prevent all checks, which he affirmed had not been provided againſt by any contrivance to that time. March the 12th he exhibited the deſcription of an inſtrument for collecting the wind, or for making the ſlower motions of the air ſenſible. April the 9th 1668 he produced two inſtruments to promote the ſenſe of hearing. May the 14th he ſhewed an experiment of the penetration of liquors in oyl of vitriol and fair water. May the 21ſt he gave an account of an experiment of ſtatics to examine the incorporating of liquors. May the 28th he read an account of an experiment to ſhew the dilatation of bodies. June the 11th he communicated an obſervation about the ſeed of moſs. He afterwards propoſed to the Royal Society ſeveral methods of meaſuring of a degree of the earth, and invented ſeveral inſtruments; and, as is entered in the Journal of that Society, October the 28th 1669, he was of opinion, " that one of the exacteſt ways of meaſuring was, by " making accurate obſervations of the heavens to a " ſecond by a perpendicular tube, and then to take " exact diſtances by angles to a ſecond alſo." This ſeems to be the method obſerved by the French not long after, as may be ſeen by a particular treatiſe of it publiſhed by Monſieur Picart, as likewiſe by what Du Hamel ſays in his Hiſtory of the Academy of Sciences, pag. 98. It appears alſo by ſome notices and looſe papers of Mr. Hooke, that he invented a ſort of travelling calaſh for this purpoſe, which ſhould deſcribe upon a paper, not only the menſuration of the way gone over, but the ſeveral aſcents and deſcents, together with the turnings and windings of the calaſh, or the points of the compaſs, upon which the perſon travelled, with other contrivances. There were alſo other models for meaſuring a degree propoſed to be made in St. James's Park on the Canal, which were never proſecuted. In January 16$\frac{7}{8}$ he firſt propoſed a drop of Mercury for an univerſal ſtandard, which is deſcribed more at large in his Poſthumous Works, pag. 472. In April following he ſhewed an experiment with a ſolution of copper to repreſent the appearance of clouds and other aerial meteors, by dropping into it ſeveral ſalts, &c. At contriving and ſurveying the hoſpital near Hoxton, given by the will of Alderman Aſke, and remarkable for the due proportion of its parts, and beauty of the whole. He was blamed for exceeding the ſum at firſt propoſed to be expended upon it; and he owned to Mr. Richard Waller, that it had far exceeded the firſt eſtimate, which he had given in of the charges, but not by his fault or miſtake, but partly by new additions and alterations of the firſt deſign, and chiefly by his not procuring and agreeing with the workmen himſelf; which if he had done, as he ſaid, he would have engaged that it ſhould have come to little or no more than his firſt propoſed ſum. He alſo propoſed, that there might be inſtituted in that place a mathematical ſchool for boys to be inſtructed in the principles of Aſtronomy and Navigation; which at firſt was well approved of by the perſons concerned in the management of that affair (r). On the 18th of July 1696 his Chancery-ſuit for Sir John Cutler's ſalary was determined in his favour to his great the ſame time he ſhewed the uſe of introducing the ſpecies into a dark room for painting, and contrived a box for that purpoſe. In March 1671 he ſhewed ſeveral experiments to explain the nature and cauſe of gravity. Particularly on the 9th of that month an experiment was made, in which ſome flower put into a void ſhallow glaſs with a large ſloping brim and a pretty tall foot, was made to riſe and ran over like a fluid, by the knocking on the edge of the glaſs, and alſo by the forcibly moving of one's finger round the edge of the ſame. Leaden bullets alſo being put into this glaſs did by knocking move it like a fluid. This was propoſed to conſider what might be the cauſe of gravity, and ſuggeſt an hypotheſis to explicate the motion of gravity. The ſame year ſeveral diſcourſes and papers paſt between him and Mr. Iſaac Newton concerning a new theory of light and colours. About this time he made a propoſition for perfecting all ſorts of optic glaſſes, the ſecret of which was delivered in an anagram to the Lord Brouncker. Not long after this began a diſpute between Monſieur Hevelius and Mr. Hooke concerning the preference of plain and teleſcopical ſights for aſtronomical inſtruments, which was thus occaſioned. Mr. Hooke by means of Mr. Oldenburg had recommended to Hevelius the application of teleſcopical ſights to his exquiſitely contrived and elaborated inſtruments, affirming that by them an angle might be taken to a much greater exactneſs than with plain ſights, and gave him a ſhort, but, as he thought, a ſufficient information of the manner of applying them to the inſtrument; and intimated, that if any thing required a farther explication, he was ready to give it. However Hevelius could not be prevailed with to make uſe of them; whether he thought himſelf too experienced to be informed by a young Aſtronomer, as he conſidered Mr. Hooke; or whether having made ſo many obſervations with plain ſights, he was unwilling to alter his method, leſt he might bring their exactneſs into queſtion; or whether being by long practice accuſtomed to the uſe of them, and not throughly apprehending the uſe of the other, nor well underſtanding the difference, as Mr. Molyneux has obſerved in his Dioptrics, is indeed uncertain. Not long after came out the firſt Part of his Machina Cæleſtis; and Mr. Hooke took occaſion in his Cutlerian Lectures to read ſeveral diſcourſes upon that book and the inſtruments therein deſcribed, which Lectures were printed in 1674 at London in 4to, under the title of Animadverſions on the firſt Part of the Machina Cœleſtis of the learned and deſervedly famous Aſtronomer Johan. Hevelius, Conſul of Dantzick. In this Treatiſe defending zealouſly the uſe of teleſcopic ſights and their preference to plain ſights, he happened to let fall ſome expreſſions, which gave offence to Hevelius; who ſeveral years after publiſhed his Annus Climactericus, which revived the diſpute, and cauſed ſeveral learned men to intereſt themſelves in the controverſy. We ſhall here ſubjoin from Mr. Hooke's manuſcripts what he wrote himſelf in anſwer to what ſome perſons had written upon this ſubject. But for the better underſtanding of this, we ſhall obſerve, firſt, that Hevelius having ſent his Annus Climactericus to the Royal Society, Dr. Wallis was deſired to give an account of it, which was printed in the Philoſophical Tranſactions Num. 175. pag. 1162, in which the Doctor having uſed ſome expreſſions, which Mr. Hooke thought reflected too ſeverely upon him; and Mr. Molyneux not long after ſending a letter to the ſame purpoſe, he wrote the following vindication of himſelf. "There having been lately "read in a meeting of this honourable Society a let"ter from Mr. Molyneux, containing ſeveral reflec"tions that concerned me, which, without ſome ſa"tisfactory anſwer, muſt needs make me ſuffer in the "opinion of thoſe, who have not truly underſtood "the matter of controverſy; and the high eſteem "I have of the juſtice and judgment of this illuſtrious "company, perſuades me the rather to make my de"fence here. The objections in the letter were theſe. "That if it be true, which has been aſſerted, not "only by ſome celebrated Aſtronomers, but chiefly "by Mr. Hooke in his Animadverſions, &c. the en"deavours of Hevelius will be fruſtrated, and his "vaſt charges to no more purpoſe than Tycho's, and "all his ſplendid Apparatus but meer lumber. For "upon this queſtion as to plain ſights, the price of "his Aſtronomical labours of his whole life depends. "But ſurely this were an event highly deplorable, "not only to the party himſelf immediately con"cerned, but the whole Reſpublica Literaria. Se"condly, mention is made of the ſlightneſs and "ſmallneſs of what I had publiſhed, which was "only a pamphlet, that aſſerted, that notwithſtand"ing all this, yet merely for want of teleſcopic "ſights and ſome new kind of invented diviſions on "Mr. Hevelius's inſtruments, I went ſo far as to "doubt, whether his obſervations could be true, and "always the ſame to two or three minutes, and that "the whole import of it beſides this was nothing but "the deſcription of an inſtrument, which he never "heard was put in practice. The third objection "againſt me is, that though Monſieur Hevelius had "earneſtly requeſted from me or any one elſe, that "had teleſcopic inſtruments, to ſend him ſome diſ"tances of fixed ſtars obſerved by them; yet he "could never be ſo happy as to obtain any from me, "though afterwards he did from ſome others, &c. "Theſe and ſome other diſcourſes ſpread abroad ta"citly inſinuate, that the publiſhing thoſe Animad"verſions was a very ill action; and the learned in "general have received a great prejudice thereby. It "concerns me therefore to clear myſelf of this im"putation. For anſwer then I ſay, Firſt, If what I "have publiſhed in thoſe Animadverſions be true and "certain, then I deſire to know whether it were bet"ter for the Reſpublica Literaria to be acquainted "with it, or to remain poſſeſſed with the belief of "ſome aſſertions of Monſieur Hevelius, which are "really miſtakes (not to ſay worſe) though poſſibly "till that time, wherein I publiſhed them, they were "generally believed to be truths, as he has taken a "great deal of pains to induce a belief of in the "Firſt Part of his Machina Cæleſtis from pag. 293 "to pag. 300. which I rather mention, becauſe "ſome perſons have thought and aſſerted, that I was "the firſt aggreſſor in print, the contrary to which "thoſe ſix pages aſſert. Secondly, Whether thoſe "deplorable events of leſſening the price of Monſieur "Hevelius's works, if that were true, when put into "the balance, will outweigh the detecting a miſtake, "or diſcovery of a truth in a matter of ſo great mo"ment in Natural Philoſophy, as concerns the moſt "conſiderable parts of knowledge in the theory of "the Univerſe, eſpecially of celeſtial bodies; for if "truth be that, which is moſt prevalent with all "philoſophical ſpirits againſt any particular intereſt; "then, great ſatisfaction, after it had made him uneaſy for ſeveral years. In his Diary he ſhews his ſenſe of it in theſe terms DOMSH GLISSA, which may be read thus: Deo opt. max. ſummus Honor, Gloria in ſecula ſeculorum Amen. I was born on this day of July 1635, and God has given me a new birth: may I never forget his mercies to me, whilſt he gives me breath, may I praiſe him. His health was extremely broken a conſiderable time before his death, and his ſight failed him. He died March the 3d 170$\frac{2}{3}$, being ſixty ſeven years, ſeven months and thirteen days old. His corps was decently interred in the church of St. Hellen at London, being attended by all the members of the Royal Society then in town. As to his perſon, he was but deſpicable, being very crooked, and always pale and meagre. He wore his own hair of a dark brown colour, very long, and hanging neglected over his face, uncut and lank; which about three years before his

(r) Ibid. pag. 25.

" then, I hope, I ſhall prove I have not offended " in that particular in my publication of thoſe " Animadverſions. And Hevelius himſelf was of " the ſame mind, when at the ſixty firſt page " of his Preface he writes, (ſpeaking of his diſ- " paraging ſome things of Tycho Brahe) in hoc " negotio ſemper in cujuſvis animo hærere debet, a- " micus Plato, amicus Ariſtoteles, ſed magis tamen " amica veritas. Nor do I find him ſo ſhy in pro- " claiming the miſtakes of Tycho's obſervations, when " it was made for his own reputation; for in the " thirty fourth page of his preface he ſays, that the " greateſt part of Tycho's obſervations differed from " his own four, five, ſix, and even ten minutes. At " the thirty ninth page he ſays, that of 780 in Tycho's " catalogue there are but 260 which differ not leſs " than two minutes; but all the reſt differ 3′ 5′ 10′ " 20′ 30′ 40′ 45′ 50′, nay a whole degree from the " truth, and that fifteen differ above a degree, and " ſome many more, even to eight degrees in longi- " tude, and in latitude to thirteen whole degrees, " ſometimes in defect, ſometimes in exceſs; yet for all " this Hevelius would be thought highly to value Tycho " Brahe, and not to have made any reflections upon " him. Nor has the detecting miſtakes even in per- " ſons of as great fame been looked upon ſo ill a " thing, but rather a meritorious action, as might be " inſtanced in Dr. Pell's ſhort anſwer in a $\frac{1}{4}$ of a ſheet " of paper to Longomontanus's work, which had " been the buſineſs of thirty years. Another inſtance " may be of Phocilides upon Lanſbergius, the learned " Savilian Aſtronomic Profeſſor againſt Bullialdus &c. " all which authors were well eſteemed for their detecting " miſtakes, and diſcovering truth. And as for any " diſreſpectful or undervaluing ſentiments I had of He- " velius or his performances, I hope what I have " printed in my Animadverſions will prevail with the " unprejudiced to believe the contrary, where I ſay, " p. 43, and 44; That I would not be underſtood by " theſe Animadverſions to undervalue the works and per- " formances of a perſon ſo highly meriting the thanks of " the learned world, for his great expence and vaſt pains, " in performing a work ſo highly uſeful to aſtronomy and " navigation, that I did not in the leaſt doubt but that " it would be a work of perpetual eſteem, and much pre- " ferable to any thing of the like kind yet done in the " world; and that he had gone as far as was poſſible " for humane induſtry to go with inſtruments of that kind, " which were as complete and exact as inſtruments with " plain ſights could be made; and that he had calculated " with all imaginable care and ſkill, and delivered " them with the like candor and integrity. But yet " that it was my opinion, that this ought not to diſcourage " others from making uſe of teleſcope-ſights, and to make " better obſervations with inſtruments by that means " more exact. This I hope may apologize for my " writing thoſe Animadverſions. But in the next place, " I muſt make ſome defence for what is ſaid in them. " This Gentleman ſays, I went ſo far as to doubt " whether Hevelius's obſervations could be made true " and always the ſame to two or three minutes. I " wiſh the place had been quoted where I ſaid ſo, " ſince I only ſaid p. 7. that I believed it impoſſible " for any one to diſtinguiſh with common ſights any " diſtance in the heavens to leſs than half a minute, " and very few to a minute. And I am apt to be- " lieve there may be ſome inſtances even in Hevelius's " catalogue, that will verify this aſſertion. And for " any other aſſertion, which is really mine in that " treatiſe, I do not doubt of ſatisfying any unpre- " judiced perſon by experiment if deſired, which I ſay " is really my aſſertion; for by miſtake or otherwiſe, " ſome things have been fathered upon me I never " ſaid, viz. that I ſhould aſſert, that an inſtrument of " a ſpan radius might be made, that ſhould perform " obſervations ſixty times more accurate than could be " done with his beſt inſtruments. Which aſſertion is " none of mine, and whoever have ſpread theſe fal- " ſities, might have found better employment. I ſay " indeed, that a very ſmall inſtrument, curiouſly made, " exactly divided and inſtructed with teleſcope-ſights, " will perform much better in all obſervations (except " the ſun) than the largeſt inſtruments without ſuch " ſights, for the reaſon before alledged from the defect " in our eyes, which cannot diſtinguiſh an angle leſs " than half a minute; nor is this a defect in my own " eyes only (as Hevelius ſomewhere ſeems to hint) " for the experiment may eaſily be tried with the beſt " eyes. Nor is it any diſparagement to Hevelius's " obſervations to compare them with Tycho Brahe's, " though I ſhould have ſuppoſed them but of equal " value; ſince the mere repeating of his obſervations " would be of great uſe in aſtronomy, theſe being al- " moſt one hundred years after his. For we muſt by " ſuch compariſons judge of many conſiderable en- " quiries concerning celeſtial bodies, which cannot by " other means be ſo well detected, for which I refer " to the 76th page of my Animadverſions, viz. to know " whether thoſe celeſtial bodies, which are ſuppoſed ſo " fixed, do not vary their poſitions to each other, and " alſo their magnitudes, which I had good grounds to " believe. As to the objection, that my pamphlet " contained little beſides the deſcription of an inſtrument " never put in practice. I conceive there may be ſe- " veral miſtakes; for I am of opinion, upon peruſal " there will be ſomewhat elſe in that treatiſe worth " conſideration. Next that there have been inſtru- " ments made, perfected, and uſed after that way by " Sir Jonas Moore, by Mr. Gregory in Scotland, by " Mr. Halley and many others; I believe very few " aſtronomical inſtruments ſince have been made with " plain ſights. And if the multitude of authorities " were neceſſary, I could produce Auzout, Picart, " Mariot, Romer, de la Hire, Montaneri, Gotignies, " and others, not to name thoſe of our own nation. " As to my not returning the obſervations of certain " diſtances of ſtars, which Hevelius deſired, it is ſuffi- " ciently known what inconveniences we lay under in " this place after the fire of London; and had I found " conveniences, yet the unkind reception thoſe things " found, which I ſent him, was enough to deter me " from ſuch a compliance; though he was ſenſible how " I had often been ready to gratify his curioſity in " many other particulars. But when his Machina " Cæleſtis was publiſhed, I was obliged to write thoſe " Animadverſions, in which, I hope, all unprejudiced " readers will juſtify my procedure; at leaſt I am " ready to prove any thing I have therein aſſerted."

We ſhall inſert here an original letter of Mr. Hooke relating to the diſpute between him and Hevelius, communicated by the learned William Jones Eſq; F. R. S.

" Sir,

" I thank you very much for the opportunity you " have given me of being any ways ſerviceable to a " perſon, who has ſo highly obliged the learned world " as the excellent Hevelius has both by the curious " and learned pieces he has already publiſhed, and by " thoſe other great undertakings, which he has given " them cauſe to hope for and expect from his indefa- " tigable endeavours. And in truth, Sir, upon the " conſideration of the ſubject he has deſigned, being his death he cut off, and wore a perriwig. He was of an active, reſtleſs, indefatigable genius even almoſt to the laſt, and always ſlept little to his death, ſeldom going to ſleep till two, three, or four a clock in the morning, and ſeldomer to bed, oftner continuing his ſtudies all night, and taking a ſhort nap in the day. His temper was melancholy, miſtruſtful and jealous, which more increaſed upon him with his years. He was in the beginning of his being made known to the Learned, very communicative of his philoſophical diſcoveries and inventions, till ſome accidents made him, to a crime, cloſe and reſerved. He laid the cauſe upon ſome perſons challenging his diſcoveries for their own, and taking occaſion from his hints to perfect what he had not, which made him ſay, that he would ſuggeſt nothing till he had time to perfect it himſelf, which was the reaſon that many things are loſt, which he affirmed that he knew. He had a piercing judgment into

" ignorant

" ignorant of what inſtruments he makes uſe of, and " of what help that northern climate affords for that " purpoſe, I have often wiſhed, that he was furniſhed " with as good optic glaſſes as are now in uſe in other " parts of the world, and with ſome good method of " making uſe of them for determining the diameters " and parallaxes of the planets, and for finding the " poſitions and diſtances of the ſmaller fixed ſtars, &c. " for then I could not doubt to receive from his judg- " ment and diligence in the uſe of them better effects " than have been hitherto produced by others. And " in particular I have wiſhed, that thoſe ſextants, at " leaſt, he makes uſe of for meaſuring the diſtances of " ſtars, were furniſhed with teleſcopical ſights, which is " no ſmall advantage for regulating and aſſiſting the " ſight, which, if he deſires it, I ſhall be moſt ready " to gratify him with any information, that the ſmall " experience I have in thoſe things, will furniſh me " with. The longeſt glaſs I have ſeveral times made " uſe of, is a ſpherical lens convex on both ſides of a " ſphere, whoſe radius is 60 foot, and the focus or " length of the glaſs is near about the ſame length. " It is made of a piece of glaſs of between $\frac{1}{4}$ and $\frac{1}{2}$ " an inch thick, and between 5 and 6 inches over. " It bears an aperture of about three inches, ſometimes " 4 or more, according to the uſes I deſign it for. " It diſcovers many things not viſible thro' a very good " 36 glaſs; ſuch as the ſhadow of the Satellites, and " the verticity of Jupiter and Mars on their axes. " Some make uſe of two convex eye-glaſſes; but I " for the moſt part make uſe of but one, and a very " convex lens, convex on both ſides of a ſphere of " .. inches radius. Sometimes I uſe ſuch as are more " ſhallow, but ſeldom any deeper. The method by " which that I have was made, was by the ordinary " way in a very large diſh, and wrought on the tool " by the hand without any kind of engine till ſuch " time as it be exceeding bright and well poliſhed, " and have received the perfect figure of the ſcutella, " in which it was wrought; otherwiſe the glaſs will " be worth nothing; in the doing of which there is " great difficulty. The tube I make uſe of, is about " 66 or 68 feet in length, and conſiſts only of two " long ſquare boxes or tubes made of very thin and " light ſlit deal here and there bound together with " very thin plates of iron, under which within the tube " there are placed ſeveral ſquare portions or cells, " which ſerve to keep off the adventitious rays, and " to keep the ſides of the tubes ſquare and ſteady. " Each of theſe boxes are about ten inches ſquare, " and about 33 foot long. Theſe two are thruſt into " a ſmall ſquare box in the middle about two or three " foot long, made of thicker boards bound about with " iron, and having two long boards fixed to them of " about ſix foot high, and joined at the top by a " piece interjacent between them. Over the top of " which there is afterwards ſtretched a rope, that ſerves " to ſet the tube ſtrait, and to keep it from warping. " This being done, the whole machine is hung by a " handle after the manner of a pair of ſcales, the two " ends of the tube near equally counterpoiſing each " other; and by that handle it is drawn by a tackle " up to any height deſirable, by the ſtrength of one " man only, the whole tube not weighing at moſt above " 200 pound weight, and when up it is manageable " with the greateſt facility imaginable. I have " enquired the loweſt rate any ſuch object glaſs will " be ſold for, and find it will not be afforded for leſs " than 25 pounds ſterling, and the eye-glaſſes will coſt " 40 or 50 ſhillings more. If Mr. Hevelius deſire any, " upon his ſignifying his mind to me, I ſhall endeavour " to get him the beſt that can be made here, and at the " loweſt rate." In 1672 our author read before the Royal Society an Account of ſome Experiments about Refractions and Colours. May 7, 1673, he read a paper concerning Arithmetical Inſtruments. January the 15th 1674, he ſhewed to the Royal Society a way to determine how ſmall an angle the unaſſiſted eye is able to diſcern; by which it was found, that none of the perſons eyes preſent could obſerve a much leſs angle than of a minute. The reader may ſee a more ample account of this in his Animadverſions upon Hevelius's Machina Cæleſtis, pag. 8. From this time many magnetical experiments were made by him; and on the 19th of March following he propoſed a theory of the variation, the ſubſtance whereof was this, That the magnet hath its peculiar poles diſtant ten degrees from the poles of the earth, about which they move, ſo as to make a revolution in three hundred and ſeventy years; whence the variation hath altered of late about ten or eleven minutes every year, and will probably continue to do ſo for ſome time, till it begins to grow ſlower and ſlower, and will at length be ſtationary and retrograde, and in probability may return. At the ſame time he propoſed the making of a very eaſy and nice inſtrument to obſerve the variation of the variations of the needle in different parts of the world. What this inſtrument was, is difficult to be determined now; but the figure of an inſtrument ſomething to that purpoſe may be ſeen in his Poſthumous Works, pag. 486. February the 4th, $167\frac{4}{5}$, ſeveral obſervations and diſcourſes having been made in the Royal Society about the ſtructure of the muſcles of animals, Mr. Hooke ſaid, " That his " obſervation was, that the fleſhy part of a muſcle " conſiſted of an infinite number of exceedingly ſmall " round pipes, extended between the two tendons of " the muſcles, and ſeemed to end in them: which " tendons in the muſcles of beef boiled would be eaſily " ſtript off from theſe pipes, and ſo leave the round " ends of thoſe pipes very diſtinct and viſible. That " the reaſon of the moving of a muſcle might be " from the filling or emptying of thoſe pipes, whoſe " ſides ſeemed to be flexible like thoſe of a gut." He intimated likewiſe, that he knew a way of making ſuccedaneous muſcles for a man to ſupply the defect of his muſcles for flying, and give one man the ſtrength of ten or twenty, if required. March the 18th he made an experiment of a new property of light, having before read ſome diſcourſes upon that ſubject. This experiment is publiſhed in his Poſthumous Works, p. 186. In 1676 he publiſhed his Deſcription of Helioſcopes, and ſome other Inſtruments, London, in 4to, and in 1677 his Lampas: Or a Deſcription of ſome Mechanical Improvements of Lamps and Water-poiſes. London, 1677, in 4to. The ſame year being choſen Secretary of the Royal Society in the room of Mr. Oldenburg, he ſhewed ſeveral experiments and inſtruments in order to explain the gravitation and alterations in the air by vapours, &c. contriving an air-poiſe to ſhew the different ſpecific gravity of the air by a large thin ball of glaſs counter-poiſed. In February $167\frac{7}{8}$, upon account of Monſieur Gallet's obſervation of the oval figure of Mercury in the Sun, he gave ſeveral reaſons for the prolated oval figure of the planets, ſome of which are printed in his Poſthumous Works, pag. 355, with a demonſtration thereof. He remarked, " that " all fluids on the ſurface would run into that ſhape, " and that it was not improbable but that the water " here about the earth might do ſo by the influence of " the diurnal motion of the earth, which compounded " with that of the moon, he conceived to be the cauſe " of tides." From this time he made microſcopical obſervations into the diſpoſitions of others, and would ſometimes give ſhrewd gueſſes and ſmart characters. From his youth he had been uſed to a collegiate or rather monaſtic life, which might be ſome reaſon of his continuing to live ſo like an Hermit or Cynic too penuriouſly, when his circumſtances, as to eſtate, were very conſiderable, ſcarcely affording himſelf neceſſaries. He declared ſometimes that he had a great project in his head as to the diſpoſal of the moſt part of his eſtate for the advancement of natural knowledge, and to promote the ends and deſigns, for which the Royal Society was inſtituted; to build an handſome fabrick for the Society's uſe, with a Library, Repoſitory, Laboratory, and other conveniences for making experiments; and to found and endow a perpetual Phyſico-Mechanic-Lecture of the nature of what himſelf read. But though he was often ſollicited by his friends to put his deſigns down in writing, and make his will as to the diſpoſal obſervations on Animalcula in pepper-water and other ſeeds ſteeped in water, confirming Monſieur Liewenhoek's aſſertions; and propoſed ſome improvements of microſcopes. Some propoſals were made by him of inſtruments more accurate than thoſe formerly invented for ſounding the ſea's depth, and bringing up any ſubſtances from the bottom, or any aſſigned depth; which were ſome years after more perfected. April the 25th, 1678, he ſhewed an experiment farther to explain the action of a muſcle, "which was by a chain of ſmall bladders faſtened together, ſo as by blowing into one pipe, the whole "might be ſucceſſively filled, and by that means contracted, ſuppoſing the fibres of the muſcles, which "ſeemed like a necklace of pearl in the microſcope, "might be filled with a very agil matter, which he "thought moſt likely to be air, which being included "in ſo thin ſkins was eaſily wrought upon by heat, "cold, or the acting properties of the liquors that paſs "between them, and ſo perform the lengthening and "contracting of the muſcles." The ſame year he publiſhed Lectures and Collections, &c. London, 1678, in 4to. The firſt lecture contains obſervations on the comet in April 1677. In Auguſt the ſame year he read ſeveral diſcourſes, and ſhewed experiments in order to confirm his theory of ſprings and ſpringing bodies, which are publiſhed in his book intitled Lectures de Potentia reſtitutivâ: Or, of Springs, explaining the Power of ſpringing Bodies. London, 1678, in 4to. The ſum of this hypotheſis is comprized in a cypher at the end of his Deſcription of Helioſcopes, being the third of a decimate of inventions, which he there mentions, that he was maſter of; ſome of which he diſcovered himſelf, affirming that he had a century of the like uſeful inventions. Others of them Mr. Richard Waller had the good fortune to find out (10), who firſt tranſcribes what Mr. Hooke ſays of them, and then adds the decyphering of them. The ſecond invention, which is the firſt cypher, is thus expreſſed: "The true Mathematical and Mechanical Form of all "manner of arches for building, with the true butment neceſſary to each of them, a problem, which "no architectonic writer hath ever yet attempted, "much leſs performed: ab, ccc, dd, eeeeee, f, gg, iiiiiiii, ll, mmmm, nnnnn, oo, p, rr, sss, ttttt, uuuuuuuu, x; which decyphered is theſe words; "ut pendet continuum flexile, ſic ſtabit continuum rigidum inverſum, which is the Linea Catenaria." The third is his Theory of Springineſs in theſe letters, ce, iii, no, sss, tt, uu, which ſignifies ut tenſio ſic vis: this is the principle of his Theory of Springs. The ninth, which is the next cypher, is concerning a new ſort of Philoſophical Scales of great uſe in Experimental Philoſophy, cde, ii, nn, oo, p, sss, tt, uu, Ut pondus ſic tenſio. The laſt is mentioned as a very extraordinary invention in Mechanics above the chimeras of perpetual motions for ſeveral uſes; aa, a, b, cc, dd, eeeeee, g, iii, l, mmm, nn, oo, pp, q, rrr, s, ttt, uuuuu; Pondere premit aer vacuum quod ab igne relictum eſt. This ſeems to be the ſame with the Marquis of Worceſter's method of raiſing water by fire, and is the 68th of his century of inventions, publiſhed in the year 1663; and is the principle upon which Mr. Savery's engine for raiſing water is founded. In 1679 he printed this general title to his ſix Lectures before publiſhed, viz. Lectiones Cutlerianæ: Or, a Collection of Lectures, Phyſical, Mechanical, Geographical, and Aſtronomical, &c. together with an Index. He began likewiſe in October the ſame year to publiſh, in 4to, Philoſophical Collections, containing an account of ſuch Phyſical, Anatomical, Chymical, &c. Obſervations, as have lately come to hand. The laſt number of which was publiſhed in April 1682. February the 5th, 1679, he exhibited to the Royal Society an Account of the weight of Lead and Tin ſingly, or when melted together. In the beginning of the ſame year, and afterwards, he repeated ſeveral experiments to examine the uſe of the air in reſpiration, by including animals in common rarified and condenſed air; as likewiſe concerning the neceſſity of the air to maintain fire, in order to illuſtrate his theory of fire further, viz. "That air is a menſtruum that diſſolves "all ſulfurous bodies by burning, and that without "air no ſuch diſſolution will follow, though the heat "applied be ever ſo weak;" which was tried particularly by a charcoal encloſed in an iron caſe with a ſcrew ſtopper, which though violently heated, yet the coal was not burnt nor waſted when taken out. He made ſome experiments to explain the different gravitation of the air, and to ſhew that vapours preſs only according to their own gravity, and not according to the ſpace, which they take up in the atmoſphere. He ſhewed ſome contrivances to be added to the weather-cock, as an hygroſcope; a contrivance to meaſure the quantity of rain, ſnow, or hail, fallen in a certain time, which engine was ſoon after perfected in all its parts, and ſet up in the Repoſitory of the Royal Society. In July the ſame year he read before that Society a diſcourſe concerning a way to help ſhort ſighted perſons, which he called Myopibus Juvamen. This is printed in his third Collection, p. 59. At the ſame time he gave his thoughts concerning the reaſon of the different apparent magnitude of the ſun and moon in the meridian, and near the horizon, which he ſuppoſed to be a deception of the eye, as judging them, when near the horizon, to be further off than when nearer the zenith, becauſe, as he alledged, the diameters meaſured were really the ſame in both places, or rather ſomething leſs in the horizon than in the zenith, being removed a ſemidiameter of the earth further off. He made experiments of the mixtures of metals, particularly of copper and tin, in which there was obſerved a real penetration, the Compoſitum being ſpecifically heavier than either of the metals before mixture; for whereas copper is to water as 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ to 1, and tin to water as 7 $\frac{17}{20}$ to 1, the Compoſitum was as 8 $\frac{1}{4}$ to 1. In December the ſame year an experiment being ſuggeſted to try whether the earth moved with a diurnal motion or not, by the fall of a body from a conſiderable height, and it being alledged that it would fall to the eaſt of the true perpendicular, Mr. Hooke read a diſcourſe on that ſubject, wherein he explained what the line deſcribed by a falling body muſt be, ſuppoſed to be moved circularly by the diurnal motion of the earth, and perpendicularly by the power of gravity; and ſhewed that it would not be a ſpiral line, but an eccentrical-elliptoeid, ſuppoſing no reſiſtance in the medium; but ſuppoſing a reſiſtance, it would be an excentric-ellipti-ſpiral, which after many revolutions would reſt in the center at laſt; and that the fall of the body would not be directly eaſt, but to the ſouth-eaſt, and more to the ſouth than the eaſt. This was tried, and the ball was ſtill found to fall to the ſouth-eaſt. The remainder of this year was ſpent in making experiments of the mixture of ſeveral metals. Among the reſt Mr. Hooke took notice of the mixture of copper and tin of ſeveral particulars; as, firſt, "That the colour of the "copper was quite deſtroyed, it appearing much of "the colour of iron poliſhed. Secondly, that the com-"poſition, though made of two very malleable metals, "was yet very brittle and friable. Thirdly, that it diſpoſal of his eſtate to his own liking in the time of his health, and after when himſelf and all others thought his end drew near; yet he could never be prevailed with to perfect it, ſtill procraſtinating it, till at laſt this great deſign proved an airy phantom, and vaniſhed into nothing. Thus he died at laſt without any will or teſtament that could be found. He always expreſſed a great veneration for the Deity, as may be ſeen in a great many paſſages of his writings, and ſeldom received any remarkable benefit from God without thankfully acknowledging the mercy; he never made any conſiderable diſcovery in nature, or invented any uſeful contrivance, or found out any difficult problem, without ſetting down his acknowledgment to God, as many places in his Diary teſtify, frequently in theſe and the like words, abbreviated thus, DOMGM. He was a frequent ſtudier of the Scripture in the originals. "To conclude, ſays Mr. Waller (s), all his errors and "blemiſhes were more than made amends for by the greatneſs and extent of his natural "and

(10) Life of Dr. Hooke, pag. 20, 21.

(s) Ibid. pag. 28.

"bore a pretty good poliſh and reflexion. Fourthly, "that though copper is exceedingly hard to be melt- "ed, yet the mixture melted very eaſily. Fifthly, "that viewing the poliſhed ſurface with a microſcope, "it appeared very full of ſmall holes in the metal." In April 1680 he produced a new invented level. In May he read a paper of obſervations upon an unuſual ſort of hail-ſtones, which fell on the 18th of that month. June the 27th, he read an account of the ſwimming of unmelted with melted lead. July the 8th, upon a debate in the Royal Society concerning the experiment of the Lord Bacon's of the internal motion of bodies, Mr. Hooke related, that he had obſerved, "that the motion of the glaſs filled with "water was obſerved to be vibrative, perpendicular "to the ſurface of the glaſs; and that the circular "figure changed into an oval one way; and that "the reciprocation preſently changed it into an oval "the other way; which he diſcovered by the motion "of the undulation or riſing of the water in the glaſs, "which was obſerved to be in four places of the ſur- "face in a ſquare poſture. The ſame glaſs being "ſtruck on the edge with a viol-bow, this ſquare "undulation was very plain; and there was alſo diſ- "covered another undulation, by which the water "was obſerved to riſe in ſix places like an hexagon; "and upon further trials alſo in eight places like an "octagon. Each of theſe gave their particular and "diſtinct ſounds or notes, the 4 and 8 were octaves, "and the 6 and 4 were fifths." In November he read ſome obſervations which he had made of a comet then appearing; which, with other obſervations and diſcourſes of other comets, are publiſhed under that title in his Poſthumous Works, pag. 194. About this time he ſhewed a contrivance by a Statera to examine the attractive power of a magnet at ſeveral diſtances, and made many experiments with it. In April 1681, and afterwards, he read his lectures of Light and Luminous Bodies, which are publiſhed in his Poſthumous Works, pag. 71, & ſeq. In July the ſame year, he ſhewed a way of making muſical and other ſounds by the ſtriking of the teeth of ſeveral braſs wheels, proportionally cut as to their numbers, and turned very faſt round; in which it was obſervable, that the equal or proportional ſtrokes of the teeth, that is 2 to 1, 4 to 3, &c. made the muſical notes; but the unequal ſtrokes of the teeth more anſwered the ſound of the voice in ſpeaking. In November he mentioned a new ſea-quadrant for making obſervations more accurate than could be done by any inſtrument yet known. This is publiſhed at the end of his Poſthumous Works. At the ſame time he firſt mentioned his new compaſſes for deſcribing all ſorts of ſpirals, as likewiſe of the rumb-lines. Soon after this he ſhewed and demonſtrated a very expeditious way of drawing the rumb-lines exactly true upon a globe, by an inſtrument grounded upon the ſame principle with the other. He ſhewed alſo a very eaſy way of finding all the poſſible Foci of rays refracted by a plano-ſpherical lens; the convex ſide of which was turned towards the Focus; as alſo the quantity of rays that would paſs through ſuch a glaſs, whoſe convexity was of the full bigneſs of an hemiſphere. In January 168½ he ſhewed an inſtrument to deſcribe all ſorts of Helixes upon a cone; by which he affirmed that he was able to divide any given length, though very ſhort, into almoſt any aſſignable number of given parts, as ſuppoſe an inch into 100000 equal parts. This he conceived to be very uſeful for perfecting Aſtronomical and Geographical inſtruments. At the next meeting of the Royal Society he produced another inſtrument, by which he deſcribed a certain curve-line, which may be called an Invented Parabola, or Parabolical-Hyperbola, having theſe properties, that it is infinite both ways, and hath two aſymptotes, as in an Hyperbola, &c. He ſhewed alſo a third inſtrument for exactly deſcribing the ſpiral of Archimedes, by a new property thereof, and that as eaſily and truly as a circle, whereby not only any given arch might be divided into any number of equal parts, but a ſtrait line given equal to the circumference of a circle. March the 1ſt he ſhewed a way, by the ſame inſtrument, of deſcribing all varieties of eclipſes. In the ſame year he read the remainder of his diſcourſe of Light, and a lecture explaining the nature of memory, and how we came by the notion of time, printed in his Poſthumous Works. From this time, or rather ſomething before, he began to be more reſerved than he had been formerly; ſo that though he often made experiments, and ſhewed new inſtruments and inventions, and read his Cutlerian Lectures, yet he ſeldom left any full account of them to be entered in the Journals and Regiſters of the Royal Society, deſigning, as he ſaid, to fit them himſelf for the preſs, and then make them public, which he never performed. July the 4th, 1683, he read a paper to ſhew how high water will riſe in any place; another concerning a rule to calculate the preſſure of water in a pipe; and an account of an experiment ſhewing the way to find the time and comparative expanſion of any metal when melted. July the 11th he ſhewed the Model of a new ſort of Wind-Mill; and a Way to ſtay any great weight from falling down to the bottom, when the rope or chain, by which it is drawn, happens to break. July the 18th he ſhewed how to convert an horizontal circular Motion into a perpendicular, or any otherwiſe ſloped circular Motion, and vice verſa. October the 31ſt he ſhewed the Way of making of Glew, or tranſparent ſubſtance for taking the impreſſion of Medals; and November the 7th another way with the ſame properties. November the 14th he ſhewed an Inſtrument to meaſure the Velocity of the Air or Wind, and to find the Strength thereof. November the 28th he exhibited Part of a Way-Wiſer, for knowing the Way of a Ship at Sea. November the 5th he ſhewed an Inſtrument for the exact finding any deſired part of any Weight given, being a proportional balance. December the 12th he ſhewed another Model of an Inſtrument for weighing. December the 19th he ſhewed Scales and Weights for triplicating any Weights ſmall enough to be weighed by them. January the 9th, 168¾, he ſhewed the Model of a Beam to find the aliquot or aliquant Parts of any ponderous part given. January the 16th he exhibited an Inſtrument for ſhewing the comparative weight of any two bodies, or any aliquot or aliquant parts of the ponderable bodies. January the 23d he ſhewed a ſtiliard of his invention. February the 6th he exhibited an Apparatus to try whether the magnetical Vertue in Steel might be excited and increaſed by any Body not accounted magnetical. February the 13th he ſhewed an Experiment to examine the Comparative Weight of Ice and Water. February the 20th he exhibited experiments to ſhew, 1. "That the blebs "in ice are filled with air, which has the ſame pro- "perty with common air. 2. That water, though it "is boiling hot, is yet ponderous enough to make a "piece of iron put into it ſwim and float upon it.' February the 27th he exhibited experiments to examine the limits of heat and cold in water, as a liquid, beyond

" and acquired parts, and more than common, if not wonderful ſagacity, in diving " into the moſt hidden ſecrets of nature, and in contriving proper methods of forcing " her to confeſs the truth, by driving and purſuing the Proteus through all her changes " to her laſt and utmoſt receſſes. . . . There needs no other proof for this than the great " number of experiments he made, with the contrivances for them, amounting to ſome " hundreds; his new and uſeful inſtruments and inventions, which were numerous; his " admirable facility and clearneſs in explaining the Phænomena of Nature, and demon- " ſtrating his aſſertions; his happy talent in adapting theories to the Phænomena obſerv- " ed, and contriving eaſy and plain, not pompous and amuſing experiments to back and " prove thoſe theories; proceeding from obſervations to theories, and from theories to " further trials, which he often aſſerted to be the moſt proper method to ſucceed in the " interpretation of nature. For theſe his happy qualifications he was much reſpected by " the moſt learned Philoſophers both at home and abroad; and as with all his failures he " may be reckoned among the great men of the laſt age, ſo had he been free from them, " poſſibly he might have ſtood in the front." He contrived the building of the new Bethlehem at London, Mountague Houſe in the pariſh of St. Giles's in the Fields, the College

beyond which it becomes a ſpirituous body of air, or a ſolid of ice. March the 19th he ſhewed magnetical experiments tried with ſeveral rods of ſteel, by touching them on the loadſtone. May the 5th 1687 he read a lecture of the Unequal Diurnal Motion of the Earth, printed in his Poſthumous Works. In July he ſhewed an experiment of the communication of motion by a packthread extended a very conſiderable length, and afterwards running over a pulley, brought back to the place, near to which the other end was faſtened; and it was found, that any addition of weight or motion given to the one end would be immediately ſenſible at the other end of the ſtring, though it muſt paſs in going and returning ſo great a length. There were other ways ſhewn of communicating motion, as by a long cane ſuſpended by ſtrings, or by wires diſtended a great length; in which it was obſervable that the ſound was propagated inſtantaneouſly, even as quick as the motion of light, the ſound conveyed by the air coming a conſiderable time after that by water. June the 20th 1688 he read a farther deſcription containing ſeveral ways of making a portable Sea-Barometer, with the great uſes of it in foretelling changes of the weather and ſtorms. From this time for ſome years we find little done by him, except his reading the lectures founded by Sir John Cutler, ſeveral of which are printed in his Poſthumous Works. Of theſe he read in December 1691 ſeveral relating to improvements of ſounding inſtruments, which he called Nuntii inanimati ad fundum Abyſſi emiſſarii. Thurſday September the 8th 1692 he ſets down an earthquake obſerved by himſelf 55 minutes paſt one a clock p. m. He remarks, that there was no wind, but rain all day. This earthquake was felt at the ſame time not only in moſt parts of England, but alſo in ſeveral parts of Germany. The ſame year he read a curious diſcourſe deſcribing the tower of Babel or Belus. In 1693 he read ſeveral lectures about earthquakes, and an explication of Ovid's Metamorphoſis, printed in his Poſthumous Works. March the 5th $169\frac{2}{3}$ he read a lecture about the prolated ſpheroidical figure of the ſkin, and other phænomena thereof, of the Maculæ and Faculæ, &c. of making an helioſcope by four reflex planes in a twenty four foot tube, or a teleſcope for planets and fixed ſtars, by two reflexions in a tube of forty foot with Monſieur Huygens's 120 foot glaſs. June the 27th 1698 he read a lecture upon Huygens's Coſmotheoros, and ſhewed a model of Saturn and his Ring. Mr. Hooke has the following papers printed in the Philoſophical Tranſactions, viz. A Spot in one of the Belts of Jupiter obſerved in May 1664, Numb. I. p. 3. An Anſwer to the Conſiderations made by Monſieur Auzout upon Mr. Hooke's new Inſtrument for grinding of Optic Glaſſes, Numb. IV. p. 63. A Method by which a Glaſs of a ſmall Plane-convex Sphere may be made to refract the Rays of Light to a Focus of a far greater Diſtance than is uſual, Numb. XII. p. 202. A new Contrivance of a Wheel-Barometer much more eaſy to be prepared than that, which is deſcribed in his Micrography, Numb. XIII. p. 218. The particular Obſervations of the Planet Mars formerly intimated to have been made by Mr. Hooke in February and March laſt 1665, Numb. XIV. p. 239. Some Obſervations lately made at London concerning the Planet Jupiter, Numb XIV. p. 145. A late Obſervation about Saturn June 29, 1666, Numb. XIV. p. 246. Directions for Obſervations and Experiments to be made by Maſters of Ships, Pilots, and other fit Perſons in their Sea Voyages, ſuggeſted partly by Sir Robert Moray, partly by Mr. Hooke, &c. Numb. XXIV. p. 433. More Ways for the ſame purpoſe of Mr. Townly touching the Invention of dividing a Foot into many thouſand Parts, Numb. XXV. p. 459. An Experiment of preſerving Animals alive by blowing through their Lungs, Numb. XXVIII. p. 539. A Deſcription of an Inſtrument for dividing a Foot into many thouſand Parts, and thereby meaſuring the Diameters of Planets to a great Exactneſs, &c. as it was promiſed, Numb. XXV. The Draught and Deſcription of Mr. Hooke, Numb. XXIX. p. 541. Note to be obſerved, Numb. XXIX. p. 556. A Contrivance to make the Picture of any thing appear on a Wall, Cup-board, or within a Picture-Frame &c. in the midſt of a light Room in the Day-time, or in the Night-time in any Room that is inlightned with a conſiderable number of Candles, Numb. XXXVIII. p. 741. Obſervations of ſome Spots in the Sun returned after they had paſſed over the Upper Hemiſphere of the Sun, which is hid from us, according as was predicted (Numb. LXXV. p. 2253.) Numb. LXXVII. p. 2295. Obſervations of the Eclipſe of the Moon September the 8*th* 167 1, Numb. LXXVII. p. 2296 An Account of ſome Obſervations of the late Eclipſe of the Moon January the 1*ſt* 167$\frac{3}{4}$, Numb. CXI. p. 237. Some Obſervations and Conjectures concerning the Chineſe Characters, Numb. CLXXX. p. 36. A Deſcription of an Invention whereby the Diviſions of the Barometer may be enlarged many given proportions, Numb. CLXXXV. p. 241. Obſervationes nonnullæ Eclipſeos nuperæ Solaris Maii 1. St. Vet. Obſ. Hookio & Halleio, Numb. CLXXXIX. p. 370. His Poſthumous Works were publiſhed by Mr. Richard Waller, Secretary of the Royal Society, at London 1705 in fol. and contained, I. A General Scheme or Idea of the preſent State of Natural Philoſophy, and how its Defects may be remedied by a methodical Proceeding in making Experiments and collecting Obſervations, whereby to compile a Natural Hiſtory, as the ſolid Baſis for the Superſtructure of true Philoſophy. II. Lectures of Light, explicating its Nature, Properties, and Effects, &c. Though Mr. Hook has not in theſe lectures treated of the ſeveral alterations and affections of the rays of light from Reflection, Inflection, and Refraction, &c. as his intention appears from ſeveral paſſages in his writings to have been; yet we meet here with ſeveral no leſs difficult than curious points explained, particularly that great problem of Memory, and how we obtain the ideas of Time and Duration. III. A Diſcourſe of the Nature of Comets. To this is added A Diſcourſe of Gravity. IV. Obſervations upon Dr. John Dee's Book of Spirits. V. Lectures and Diſcourſes of Earthquakes and ſubterraneous Eruptions; explicating the Cauſes of the rugged and uneven Face of the Earth; and what Reaſons may be given for the frequent finding of Shells and other Sea and Land Petrified Subſtances ſcattered over the whole Terreſtrial Superficies. VI. Lectures concerning Navigation and Aſtronomy. And in 1726 there was printed at London 8vo a book under the following title: Philoſophical Experiments and Obſervations of the late eminent Dr. Robert Hooke F. R. S. and Geom. Prof. Greſh. and other eminent Virtuoſo's in his time. With Copper Cuts. Publiſhed by W. Derham F. R. S.

T.

College of Physicians, and the Theatre joined to it, and the Monument upon Fish-ſtreet Hill; and was often uſed in deſigning other buildings (t).

(t) Wood, Ath. Oxon. vol. 2. col. 1040.

☞HOOKER (RICHARD), a very learned and judicious Engliſh Divine in the latter end of the ſixteenth Century, was born at Heavy-Tree near Exeter about the year 1553, according to Mr. Walton (a), or about Eaſter 1554, according to Mr. Wood (b). His parents were more remarkable for their virtue and induſtry, than extraction or riches (c); though his great grandfather John Hooker was Mayor of Exeter in 1490, and his grandfather in 1529 (d). His parents intended him for ſome trade; but his ſchoolmaſter, who obſerved the pregnancy of his genius, perſuaded them to continue him at ſchool (e), till by the aſſiſtance of his uncle John Hooker, then Chamberlain of Exeter (f), and Dr. John Jewel, Biſhop of Saliſbury, he was ſent to the Univerſity of Oxford, and became one of the Clerks of Corpus Chriſti College in 1567 (g), Scholar December the 24th 1573 (h), Fellow of the College and Maſter of Arts in 1577 (i), Deputy-Profeſſor of the Hebrew Language July the 14th 1579 in the room of Mr. Thomas Kingſmill, whoſe ſtudies had diſordered his ſenſes (k). In October the ſame year he was with Dr. John Reynolds and others expelled his College by Dr. John Barfoote, then Vice-Preſident of the College, and Chaplain to Ambroſe Earl of Warwick [A]; for what reaſon, is not known; but they were reſtored the ſame month (l). Not long after his taking Orders, he was appointed to preach at St. Paul's Croſs in London [B] about the year 1581; and lodging at the houſe of Mr. John Churchman, was induced to marry his daughter Joan [C]; upon which he was obliged to quit his College; and on the 9th of December 1584 was preſented by John Cheny Eſq; to the Rectory of Drayton-Beauchamp in Buckinghamſhire [D]; and the year following, by

(a) Life of Mr. Richard Hooker. By Izaac Walton, printed with the Lives of Dr. John Donne, Sir Henry Wotton, and Mr. George Herbert, pag. 158. 4th edit. London 1675.

(b) Ath. Oxon. vol. 1. col. 302. 2d edit. London 1721.

(c) Walton, ubi ſupra.

(d) Izaak's Memoirs of Exeter, pag. 96, 115.

(e) Walton, pag. 159.

(f) Idem, pag. 160. Worthies of Devon. By John Prince, pag. 393. edit London 1701, in fol.

(g) Wood, ubi ſupra.

(h) Walton, pag. 161.

(i) Idem, ibid.

(k) Wood, col. 302. and 330.

(l) Walton, pag. 172, 173.

[A] In Oct. the ſame year he was with Dr. John Reynolds and others expelled his college by Dr. John Barfoote, then Vice-Preſident of the college, and Chaplain to Ambroſe Earl of Warwick.] We have ſome account of this affair in a letter written by Dr. Reynolds to Sir Francis Knolles, which was as follows (1). "I am ſorry, "Right Honourable, that I am enforced to make "unto you ſuch a ſuit, which I cannot move, but "I muſt complain of the unrighteous dealing of "one of our college, who hath taken upon him "againſt all law and reaſon to expell out of our "houſe both me and Mr. Hooker, and three other "of our fellows for doing that, which by oath we "are bound to do. Our matter muſt be heard before "the Biſhop of Wincheſter, with whom I do not "doubt but we ſhall find equity. Howbeit, for as "much as ſome of our adverſaries have ſaid, that the "Biſhop is already foreſtalled, and will not give us "ſuch audience as we look for; therefore I am humbly "to beſeech your Honour, that you will deſire the Biſhop by your letters, to let us have juſtice; tho' it be "with rigour, ſo it be juſtice: our cauſe is ſo good "that I am ſure we ſhall prevail in it. Thus much "I am bold to requeſt of your Honour for Corpus "Chriſti College ſake, or rather for Chriſt's ſake, "whom I beſeech to bleſs you with daily increaſe of "his manifold gifts, and the bleſſed graces of his "holy Spirit.

"London Octob. 9, 1579. Your Honour's in Chriſt to command, "John Reynolds."

(1) Life of Mr. Richard Hooker. By Izaac Walton, pag. 172.

[B] Appointed to preach at St. Paul's Croſs in London.] In this firſt public appearance to the world, he was not ſo happy as to be free from exceptions againſt a point of doctrine delivered in his ſermon; which was, that in God there were two wills, an antecedent, and a conſequent will; his firſt will, that all mankind ſhould be ſaved; but his ſecond will was, that thoſe only ſhould be ſaved, that did live anſwerably to that degree of grace, which he had offered or afforded them (2). This ſeemed to croſs an opinion of Calvin, then taken for granted by many without examining it. Our author in his Anſwer to Maſter Travers's Supplication obſerves, that what he taught in this ſermon "was not huddled "in amongſt other matters in ſuch ſort, that it could "paſs without noting; it was opened, it was proved, "it was ſome reaſonable time ſtood upon. I ſee not "which way my Lord of London (3), who was preſent and heard it, can excuſe ſo great a fault as patiently without rebuke or controulment afterwards, "to hear any man there teach otherwiſe than the word "of God doth, not as it is underſtood by the private "interpretation of ſome one or two men, or by a ſpecial conſtruction received in ſome few books, but as it "is underſtood by all Churches profeſſing the Goſpel, "by them all, and therefore even by our own alſo "amongſt others."

(2) Ibid. pag. 174.

(3) Dr. John Aylmer, Biſhop of London.

[C] Lodging at the houſe of Mr. John Churchman, was induced to marry his daughter Joan.] The Preachers at St. Paul's croſs, beſides their ſtipend, were allowed lodging and diet for two days before, and one day after the ſermon, at a houſe called the Shunamite's Houſe, then kept by Mr. Churchman, formerly a ſubſtantial Draper in Watling Street, but now reduced to poverty. To this houſe Mr. Hooker came very weary; but by the care of Mrs. Churchman was recovered from his fatigue and cold. "This, ſays Mr. Walter (4), was ſo "gratefully apprehended by Mr. Hooker, that he "thought himſelf bound in conſcience to believe all "that ſhe ſaid; ſo that the good man came to be perſuaded by her, that he was a man of a tender "conſtitution; and that it was beſt for him to "have a wife that might prove a nurſe to him; "ſuch a one as might both prolong his life, and "make it more comfortable; and ſuch a one as ſhe "could and would provide for him, if he thought "fit to marry... He truſted her to chooſe a wife for "him, promiſing upon a fair ſummons to return to "London, and accept of her choice; and he did ſo "in that or about the year following. Now the wife "provided for him was her daughter Joan, who "brought him neither beauty nor portion; and for "her conditions, they were too like that wife's, which "is by Solomon compared to a dropping houſe; ſo that "the good man had no reaſon to rejoice in the wife of "his youth, but too juſt cauſe to ſay with the holy "Prophet, Wo is me that I am conſtrained to have my "habitation in the tents of Kedar."

(4) Pag. 175.

[D] Preſented... to the Rectory of Drayton Beauchamp in Buckinghamſhire.] While he reſided upon this living, his two Pupils, Mr. Edwin Sandys and Mr. George Cranmer, took a journey to ſee him, and found him with Horace's Odes in his hand, tending his ſmall allotment of ſheep in a common field, which he told his pupils he was obliged to do then, his ſervant being gone to dine, and aſſiſt his wife in ſome neceſſary houſhold buſineſs. When his ſervant came and releaſed him, his two pupils attended him into the houſe, where their beſt entertainment was his quiet company, which was preſently denied them, he being called to rock the cradle. The reſt of their welcome was ſo like this, that they ſtaid but till morning, which was time enough to diſcover and pity their tutor's condition; "and they having, ſays Mr. Walton (5), in "that time rejoiced in the remembrance, and "then paraphraſed on many of the innocent re"creations of their younger days, and other like "diverſions, and thereby given him as much pre"ſent comfort as they were able, they were forced "to leave him to the company of his wife Joan, "and by the recommendation of Dr. Edwin Sandys Archbiſhop of York was choſen Maſter of the Temple in the room of Mr. Richard Alvey, B. D. deceaſed (m). In this ſtation he had a conteſt with Mr. Walter Travers, a Puritan Miniſter, and Lecturer of the Temple, who was ſilenced by order of Archbiſhop Whitgift; upon which he appealed to the Privy Council, but without ſucceſs; and his petition was anſwered by Mr. Hooker [E]. He laid the foundation of his book concerning the Laws of Eccleſiaſtical Polity, while he was at the Temple; but finding it no fit place to finiſh what he had there deſigned, he ſollicited the Archbiſhop for a remove from that ſtation [F]; who in 1591

(5) Pag. 177.

(m) Idem, pag. 178, 179.

" and ſeek themſelves a quieter lodging for next night. " But at their parting from him, Mr. Cranmer ſaid, " Good Tutor, I am ſorry your lot is fallen in no better " ground as to your parſonage, and more ſorry that your " wife proves not a more comfortable companion after " you have wearied yourſelf in your reſtleſs ſtudies." To " whom the good man replied, My dear George, if " Saints have uſually a double ſhare in the miſeries " of this life, I that am none ought not to repine at what " my wiſe Creator hath appointed for me; but labour (as " indeed I do daily) to ſubmit mine to his will, and " poſſeſs my ſoul in patience and peace." At their return to London Mr. Edwin Sandys acquaints his father, who was then Archbiſhop of York, with his Tutor's ſad condition; and accordingly that Prelate recommended our author in 1585 to the place of Preacher to the Temple.

[E] Mr. Travers appealed to the Privy Council, but without ſucceſs; and his petition was anſwered by Mr. Hooker.] Mr. Travers had charged Mr. Hooker very ſeverely for his charitable opinion of Papiſts dying in their ſuperſtitions. He ſaid, that it encouraged evil affected men to continue ſtill in damnable ways, and others weak in faith to ſuffer themſelves to be ſeduced to the deſtruction of their ſouls. To this Mr Hooker anſwered, that they who were preſent at that ſpeech of his could juſtify, that nothing paſſed his lips more than was contained in their writings, whom for ſoundneſs of doctrine, learning, and judgment Mr. Travers not only allowed, but honoured. That what he had ſaid, was only this: I doubt not but that God was merciful to ſave thouſands of our fathers living heretofore in Popiſh Superſtition, in as much as they ſinned ignorantly. And even this, he ſaid, was ſpoken in a ſermon, the greateſt part of which was againſt Popery. Mr. Travers had diſliked, that Mr. Hooker had termed God a permiſſive and no poſitive cauſe of the evil, which the ſchoolmen called Malum Culpæ. Secondly, that to the objections of thoſe, who ſaid, If I be elected, do what I will, I ſhall be ſaved; Mr. Hooker had anſwered, that the will of God in this point was not abſolute, but conditional, i. e. to ſave the elect believing, fearing, and obediently ſerving him. Thirdly, that to ſtop the mouths of ſuch as repined againſt God for rejecting caſtaways, he had taught, that they were not rejected, no not in the purpoſe and counſel of God, without a foreſeen worthineſs of rejection, going (though not in time, yet in order) before. " For if " God's electing do in order (as needs it muſt) pre- " ſuppoſe the foreſight of their being that are elected, " though they be elected before they be, not only " the poſitive foreſight of their being, but alſo " the permiſſion of being miſerable, becauſe election " is through mercy, and mercy doth always pre- " ſuppoſe miſery; it followeth, that the very choſen " of God acknowledge, to the prejudice of the riches " of his exceeding free compaſſion, that when he in " his great determination ſet it down, thoſe ſhall live " and not die, they lay as ugly ſpectacles before him, " as lepers covered with dung and mire, as ulcers putrified in their father's loins, miſerable, worthy to " be held in deteſtation. And ſhall any forſaken crea- " ture be able to ſay unto God, thou didſt plunge me " into the depth, and aſſign me unto endleſs torments, " only to ſatisfy thine own will, finding nothing in " me, for which I could ſeem in thy ſight ſo well " worthy to feel everlaſting flames?" When he ſaw, that Mr. Travers carped at theſe things, only becauſe they lay not open, he promiſed at ſome convenient time to make them as clear as the light, both to him and all others. When he was aſked, what his grounds were, he anſwered, that St. Paul's words concerning this caſe were his grounds. The next demand of Mr. Travers was, what author Mr. Hooker followed in expounding of St. Paul, and gathering that doctrine out of his words againſt the judgment, as he ſaid, of all churches and all good writers? Mr. Hooker anſwered, that he was well aſſured, that to controul this over-reaching ſpeech, the ſentences, which he might have cited out of church-confeſſions, together with the beſt learned monuments of former times, and not the meaneſt of our own, were more in number than perhaps he would willingly have heard of. But that Mr. Travers had given him at that time great cauſe to think, that alledging of other men's words, to ſhew their agreement with our author's, would as much have diſpleaſed Mr. Travers, as the thing itſelf, for which it had been alledged. " For he knoweth, ſays Mr. Hooker, " how often he hath in public places bitten me for " this, although I did never in any ſermon uſe many " of the ſentences of other writers, and do make moſt " without any, having always thought it meeteſt, " neither to affect nor to contemn the uſe of them." And when Mr. Travers had miſliked the uſing of human authority, in preaching, Mr. Hooker " alledged " that, which under no pretence in the world might " be diſallowed, namely reaſon, not meaning thereby " my own reaſon, as now it is reported, but true " ſound divine reaſon; reaſon whereby thoſe concluſions might be out of St. Paul demonſtrated, and " not probably diſcourſed of only; reaſon proper " to that ſcience, whereby the things of God are " known." Mr. Travers excepted alſo againſt Mr. Hooker, becauſe in one of his ſermons, the latter had aſſerted, that the aſſurance of things, which we believe by the word, is not ſo certain as of that we perceive by ſenſe. To this Mr. Hooker anſwers: " And is it " certain? Yea, I taught, as he himſelf, I truſt, will " not deny, that the things, which God doth pro- " miſe in his word, are ſurer unto us than any " thing we touch, handle, or ſee. But are we ſo " ſure and certain of them? If we be, why doth " God ſo often prove his promiſes unto us, as he " doth by arguments taken from our ſenſible experi- " ence. We muſt be ſurer of the proof than of the " thing proved; otherwiſe it is no proof. How is " it then if ten men do all look upon the moon, " every one of them knoweth it as certainly to be " the moon as another; but many believing one and " the ſame promiſes, all have not one and the ſame " fullneſs of perſuaſion? How falleth it out, that " men being aſſured of any thing by ſenſe, can be no " ſurer of it than they are; whereas the ſtrongeſt " in faith that liveth upon the earth, hath need to " labour, and ſtrive, and pray, that his aſſurance, " concerning heavenly and ſpiritual things, may grow, " increaſe, and be augmented?" With regard to Mr. Travers's reflection upon him for aſſerting in one of his ſermons, that he doubted not but God was merciful to ſave thouſands of our fathers living heretofore in Popiſh ſuperſtitions, in as much as they ſinned ignorantly; Mr. Hooker in his anſwer profeſſes this to be his judgment, and declares his reaſons for this charitable opinion, as follow. He firſt ſtates the queſtion about Juſtification and Works, and how the foundation of faith without works is overthrown; and then proceeds to diſcover that way, which natural men, and ſome others, have miſtaken to be the way, by which they hope to attain true and everlaſting happineſs. And having diſcovered the miſtaken, he directs to that true way, by which alone everlaſting life is attainable, and theſe two ways he demonſtrates thus: " That the " way of nature; this the way of grace. The end " of that way, ſalvation merited, preſuppoſing the " righteouſneſs of men's works; their righteouſneſs " a natural ability to do them; that ability the good- " neſs of God, which created them in ſuch perfection. " But the end of this, ſalvation beſtowed upon men " as a gift, preſuppoſing not their righteouſneſs, but " the forgiveneſs of their unrighteouſneſs, juſtification;

1591 preſented him to the Rectory of Boſcomb in Wiltſhire (n). July the 17th the ſame year he was inſtituted into the Prebend of Nether-Haven in the Church of Saliſbury (o). He continued at Boſcomb till he had finiſhed four books of his Eccleſiaſtical Polity [G], which were entered into the Regiſter Book in Stationer's Hall the 9th of March (n) Idem, pag. 209, 210.

(o) Faſti Eccleſ. Anglic. By John Le Neve Gent.

" their juſtification, not their natural ability to do " good, but their hearty ſorrow for not doing, and " unfeigned belief in him, for whoſe ſake not doers " are accepted, which is their vocation; their vo- " cation the election of God, taking them out of the " number of loſt children; their election a mediator, " in whom to be elected; this mediation inexplicable " mercy; this mercy, ſuppoſing their miſery, for " whom he vouchſafed to die, and make himſelf a " mediator." He declares likewiſe, that " there is " no meritorious cauſe for our juſtification but Chriſt; " no effectual but his mercy; and that we deny the " grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, we abuſe, diſannul, " and annihilate the benefit of his paſſion, if by a " proud imagination we believe we can merit ever- " laſting life, or can be worthy of it." This belief he aſſerts to be deſtructive of the very eſſence of our juſtification; and he makes all opinions bordering upon this to be very dangerous. " Yet nevertheleſs, " ſays he, conſidering how many virtuous and juſt " men, how many ſaints and martyrs have had their " dangerous opinions, among which this was one, " that they hoped to make God ſome part of amends " by voluntary puniſhments, which they laid upon " themſelves; becauſe of this or the like erroneous " opinions, which do by conſequence overthrow the " merits of Chriſt, ſhall men be ſo bold as to write on " their graves, Such men are damned; there is for them " no ſalvation? St. Auſtin ſays, Errare poſſum, Hæ- " reticus eſſe nolo. And except we put a difference be- " twixt them, that err ignorantly, and them that ob- " ſtinately perſiſt in it, how is it poſſible that any " man ſhould hope to be ſaved? Give me a Pope or " a Cardinal, whom great afflictions have made to " know himſelf, whoſe heart God hath touched with " true ſorrow for all his ſins, and filled with a love " of Chriſt and his Goſpel, whoſe eyes are willingly " open to ſee the truth, and his mouth ready to re- " nounce all error, this one opinion of merit excepted, " which he thinketh God will require at his hands, " and becauſe he wanteth, trembleth, and is diſ- " couraged, and yet can ſay, Lord cleanſe me from all " my ſecret ſins; ſhall I think becauſe of this or a like " error, ſuch men touch not ſo much as the hem of " Chriſt's garment? If they do, wherefore ſhould I " doubt but that virtue may proceed from Chriſt to " ſave them? No, I will not be afraid to ſay to " ſuch a one: You err in your opinion; but be of good " comfort; you have to do with a merciful God, who " will make the beſt of that little, which you hold well; " and not with a captious ſophiſter, who gathereth the " worſt out of every thing, in which you are miſtaken." But it will be ſaid, continues our author, the admittance of merit in any degree overthroweth the foundation, excludeth from the hope of mercy, from all poſſibility of ſalvation. To this he anſwers: " What though they " hold the troth ſincerely in all other parts of Chriſti- " an faith; although they have in ſome meaſure all " the virtues and graces of the ſpirit; although they " have all other tokens of God's children in them; " although they be far from having any proud opi- " nion that they ſhall be ſaved by the worthineſs " of their deeds; altho' the only thing that troubleth " and moleſteth them be a little too much dejection, " ſomewhat too great a fear ariſing from an errone- " ous conceit, that God will require a worthineſs in " them, which they are grieved to find wanting in " themſelves; although they be not obſtinate in this " opinion; although they be willing and would be " glad to forſake it, if any one reaſon were brought " ſufficient to diſproye it; although the only cauſe, " why they do not forſake it ere they die, be their " ignorance of that means, by which it might be diſ- " proved; although the cauſe, why the igno- " rance in this point is not removed, be the want of " knowledge in ſuch as ſhould be able and are not to " remove it: Let me die, if ever it be proved, that " ſimply an error doth exclude a Pope or Cardinal in " ſuch a caſe utterly from the hope of life. Surely I muſt " confeſs, that if it be an error to think that God " may be merciful to ſave men even when they err, " my greateſt comfort is my error. Were it not for " the love I bear to this error, I would never wiſh to " ſpeak or to live."

[F] Sollicited the Archbiſhop for a removal from that ſtation.] After the publication of his Anſwer to Mr. Travers's Supplication, he grew daily into greater repute with the moſt learned and wiſe of the nation; but it had a contrary effect with many perſons in the Temple, who were zealous for Mr. Travers and his ſcheme of church-diſcipline; ſo that though Mr. Travers had left the place, yet the ſeeds of diſcontent could not be rooted out of that ſociety by all the excellent ſenſe and mild conduct of Mr. Hooker. Upon this he requeſted of the Archbiſhop to be removed from thence, and ſpake to this purpoſe: " When I loſt the " freedom of my Cell, which was my College, yet I " found ſome degree of it in my quiet country-parſon- " age. But I am weary of the noiſe and oppoſitions " of this place; and indeed God and nature did not " intend me for contentions, but for ſtudy and quiet- " neſs. My particular conteſts with Mr. Travers " here have proved the more unpleaſant to me, becauſe " I believe him to be a good man; and that belief " hath occaſioned me to examine mine own conſcience " concerning his opinions; and to ſatisfy that, I " have conſulted the Scripture and other laws both " human and divine, whether the conſcience of him, " and others of his judgment, ought to be ſo far com- " plied with as to alter our frame of church-govern- " ment, our manner of God's worſhip, our praiſing " or praying to him, and our eſtabliſhed ceremonies " as often as his and others tender conſciences ſhall re- " quire us. And in this examination I have not only " ſatisfied myſelf, but have begun a treatiſe, in which " I intend a juſtification of the laws of our Eccleſiaſti- " cal Polity; in which deſign God and his holy " angels ſhall at the laſt great day bear me that wit- " neſs, which my conſcience now does, that my mean- " ing is not to provoke any, but rather to ſatisfy all " tender conſciences; and I ſhall never be able to do " this, but where I may ſtudy and pray for God's " bleſſing upon my endeavours, and keep myſelf in " peace and privacy, and behold God's bleſſing ſpring " out of my mother earth, and eat my own bread " without oppoſitions; and therefore, if your grace " can judge me worthy of ſuch a favour, let me beg " it, that I may perfect what I have begun."

[G] His Eccleſiaſtical Polity.] He ſent the manuſcript of it to the Lord Treaſurer Burleigh with a letter dated at London March the 13th 1592, and publiſhed by Mr. Strype (6). The firſt four books of this work were printed at London 1594 in fol. and the fifth book was publiſhed by itſelf at London 1597 in folio; to which was prefixed an Epiſtle Dedicatory to Archbiſhop Whitgift, which in the later editions is put before the whole work. At the end of his edition of his firſt four books he ſubjoined this advertiſement to the reader. " I have for ſome cauſes thought it at this time more " fit to let go theſe firſt four books by themſelves, " than to ſtay both them and the reſt, till the whole " might together be publiſhed. Such generalities of " the cauſe in queſtion as are here handled, it will " be perhaps not amiſs to conſider apart, by way of " introduction unto the books, that are to follow con- " cerning particulars." This work was read with admiration in this Kingdom, and their fame ſpread itſelf into foreign nations (7). Mr. Camden wiſhed (8), that " for " the honour of this and the benefit of other nations " they were turned into the univerſal language." Mr. Strype tells us (9), that " it is a juſt Diſcourſe of the " Eccleſiaſtical ſtate of this Church, built upon reaſon " and judgment, managed with admirable clearneſs " and conviction, and with a ſtrain of great learning " and modeſty withal accompanying it; deſigned for " a vindication of the Church of England, as it ſtood " reformed

(6) Num. 17. Appendix to B. 4. of the Life of Archbiſhop Whitgift.

(7) Walton, pag. 22.

(8) Annals of Q. Elizabeth, ad ann. 1599.

(9) Life of Archbiſhop Whitgift, B. 4. c. 9. pag. 400.

March 1592, but not publiſhed till 1594 (p). In 1595 he ſurrendered Boſcomb to Dr. Caldwell Biſhop of Saliſbury, and was ſucceeded in it by Mr. Benjamin Ruſſel, who was inſtituted into it on the 23d of June. July the 7th the ſame year he was preſented to the Rectory of Biſhops-Bourne near Canterbury; in which living he continued till his death without any addition of dignity or profit (q). Mr. Walton obſerves (r), that his complection was ſanguine with a mixture of choler; but that his motion was ſlow even in his youth, as well as his ſpeech, never expreſſing an earneſtneſs in either of them, but an humble gravity ſuitable to the aged. He was of mean ſtature, and ſtooping,

(p) Walton, pag. 211.

(q) Idem, ibid.

(r) Pag. 158.

" reformed at firſt and eſtabliſhed by Law, againſt " thoſe that ſo much and ſo intemperately cried out " for another platform of government, which that " moſt judicious Divine did happily refute." In 1599 it was attacked by a pamphlet in 4to, intitled, A Chriſtian Letter of certain Engliſh Proteſtants, unfeigned Lovers of the preſent State of Religion, authorized and profeſſed in England, unto that reverend and learned man Mr. Hooker, requiring reſolution in certain Matters of Doctrine contained in his five Books of Eccleſiaſtical Polity. This was anſwered in a piece intitled, A juſt and temperate Defence of the five Books of Eccleſiaſtical Polity, &c. againſt an uncharitable Letter of certain Engliſh Proteſtants, London 1603 in 4to. written by William Covel D. D. Our author propoſed to have publiſhed eight books of his Eccleſiaſtical Polity, and Mr. Walton obſerves (10), that he lived to finiſh the three laſt; but whether we have them as finiſhed by himſelf, is a queſtion. Mr. Walton tells us (11), that he had been informed by one, who very well knew Mr. Hooker and the affairs of his family, that about a month after his death, Archbiſhop Whitgift ſent one of his Chaplains to inquire of Mrs. Hooker for the three remaining books of the Eccleſiaſtical Polity written by her huſband; of which ſhe would not or could not give any account; and that about three months after that time the Biſhop procured her to be ſent for to London, where ſhe was examined by ſome of the Privy Council concerning the diſpoſal of thoſe books. But by way of preparation for the next day's examination the Biſhop invited her to Lambeth, and after ſome friendly queſtions ſhe confeſſed to him, " that one Mr. Charke and another " Miniſter, who lived near Canterbury, came to her, " and deſired that they might go into her huſband's " ſtudy, and look upon ſome of his writings; and " that there they burnt and tore many of them, aſ- " ſuring her that they were writings not fit to be ſeen; " and that ſhe knew nothing more concerning them." Her lodging was then in King-ſtreet in Weſtminſter, where ſhe was found next morning dead in her bed, and her new huſband ſuſpected and queſtioned for it, but declared innocent of her death. Dr. John Spencer, who was of the ſame college with Mr. Hooker, and betwixt whom there was ſo firm a friendſhip, that they continually adviſed together in all their ſtudies, and particularly in what concerned thoſe Books of Polity (12), had delivered into his hands (it is ſaid, by Archbiſhop Whitgift) the rough draughts of the three laſt books, to be made as perfect as might be by him, who both knew Mr. Hooker's hand-writing, and was beſt acquainted with his intentions. " And a fair teſtimony " of this, ſays Mr. Walton (13), may appear by an " epiſtle firſt and uſually printed before Mr. Hooker's " five books (but omitted I know not why, in the laſt " impreſſion of the eight printed together in the year " 1662, in which the Publiſhers ſeem to impoſe the three " doubtful books of Mr. Hooker) with theſe two let- " ters J. S. at the end of the ſaid epiſtle, which was " meant for this John Spencer." In this epiſtle we find the following words. " There is a purpoſe of ſet- " ting forth the three laſt books alſo, their Father's " Poſthumi. For as in the great declining of his body " ſpent without ſtudy, it was his ordinary petition to " Almighty God, that if he might live to ſee the " finiſhing of theſe books, then Lord let thy ſervant " depart in peace (to uſe his own words) ſo it pleaſed " God to grant him his deſire; for he lived till he " ſaw them perfected. And though like Rachel he " died as it were in the travel of them, and haſtened " death upon himſelf by haſtening to give them life; " yet he held out to behold with his eyes theſe partus " ingenii, theſe Benjamins, ſons of his right hand, " though to him they were Benonies, ſons of pain and " ſorrow. But ſome evil diſpoſed minds, whether of " malice or covetouſneſs, or wicked blind zeal, it is " uncertain, as if they had been Egyptian midwives, " as ſoon as they were born, and their father dead, " ſmothered them, and by conveying away the perfect " copies left unto us nothing but old unperfect and " mangled draughts, diſmembered into pieces, and " ſcattered like Medea's Abſirtus; no favour, no " grace, not the ſhadows of themſelves almoſt remain- " ing in them. Had the father lived to ſee them " brought forth thus defaced, he might right- " fully have named them Benonies, the ſons of " ſorrow. But ſeeing the importunities of many great " and worthy perſons will not ſuffer them quietly to " die and to be buried, it is intended that they ſhall ſee " them as they are. The learned and judicious eye " will yet perhaps delight itſelf in beholding the " goodly lineaments of their well-ſet bodies, and in " finding out ſome ſhadows and reſemblances of their fa- " ther's face. God grant that as they were with their bre- " thren dedicated to the Church for meſſengers of peace; " ſo in the ſtrength of that little breath of life, that " remaineth in them, they may proſper in their work, " and by ſatisfying the doubts of ſuch that are wil- " ling to learn, may help to give an end to the ca- " lamities of thoſe our civil wars." Mr. Walton obſerves (14), that this epiſtle of Dr. Spencer was written and firſt printed within four years after the death of Mr. Hooker, in which time all diligent ſearch had been made for the perfect copies, and then allowed to be not recoverable, and therefore endeavoured to be compleated out of Mr. Hooker's rough draughts. " And " I do profeſs, continues Mr. Walton, by the faith of " a Chriſtian, that Dr. Spencer's wife, who was my " aunt, and ſiſter to George Cranmer, told me forty " years ſince in theſe or in words to this purpoſe; " that her huſband had made up or finiſhed Mr. Hooker's " laſt three books; and that upon her huſband's death- " bed, or in his laſt ſickneſs, he gave them into her hand, " with a charge they ſhould not be ſeen by any man, " but be by her delivered into the hands of the then " Archbiſhop of Canterbury, which was Dr. Abbot, or " unto Dr. King, then Biſhop of London; and that ſhe " did as he injoined her." Mr. Walter conceives, that from Dr. Spencer's, and no other copy, there have been divers tranſcripts, as particularly that in Sir Thomas Bodley's library, in that of Biſhop Andrews, in the Lord Conway's, in the Archbiſhop of Canterbury's, in Archbiſhop Uſher's, and many others; and moſt of theſe, ſays Mr. Walton (15), pretended to be the author's own hand, but much diſagreeing, being indeed altered and diminiſhed, as men have thought fitteſt to make Mr. Hooker's judgment ſuit with their fancies, or give authority to their corrupt deſigns. For proof of part of this Mr. Walton produces the following teſtimonies. Dr. Barnard, ſometime Chaplain to Archbiſhop Uſher, in his Clavi Trabales, printed in 1661, declares, that in his ſearch and examination of that Prelate's manuſcripts, he found the three written books, which were ſuppoſed to be the ſixth, ſeventh, and eighth books of Mr. Hooker's Eccleſiaſtical Polity; and that in the ſaid books, now printed as Mr. Hooker's, there are ſo many omiſſions, that they amount to many paragraphs, and cauſe many incoherencies. Dr. Barnard ſets down the omiſſions at large. Mr. Fabian Philips atteſted under his own hand, that Dr. Sanderſon Biſhop of Lincoln, a little before his death, affirmed to him that he had ſeen a manuſcript aſſerted to be the hand-writing of Mr. Hooker, " in which there was no mention made of the King " or Supreme Governor's being accountable to the peo- " ple." Dr. Henry King, Biſhop of Chicheſter, in a letter to Mr. Izaak Walton dated at Chicheſter November the 17th 1664, and prefixed to Mr. Walton's Life of Mr. Hooker, obſerves, that " Dr. John Spencer, " after the death of Mr. Hooker, was ſo careful to " preſerve his unvaluable ſixth, ſeventh, and eighth " books of Eccleſiaſtical Polity, and his other writings, " that

(10) Pag. 233.

(11) Ibid.

(12) Idem, pag. 234.

(13) Ibid.

(14) Pag. 235.

(15) Pag. 236.

ing, his face full of heat-pimples, occaſioned by his inactivity and ſedentary life; of ſo baſhful a diſpoſition, that as in his younger days his pupils might eaſily look him out of countenance, ſo neither then, nor in his elder years did he ever willingly look any man in his face. He was ſhort or weak ſighted, and where he fixed his eyes at the beginning of his ſermon, there they continued till it was ended. His dreſs was very mean (s). But the reputation of his writings and ſanctity of life was ſo eminent, that he was univerſally admired, and viſited by a great many men of learning (t). His ſermons were neither long nor earneſt, but uttered with great zeal and an humble voice; and the deſign of them was to ſhew reaſons for what he advanced, and with theſe reaſons ſuch a kind of Rhetoric, as rather convinced and perſuaded, than frightened men into piety (u). Beſides his Eccleſiaſtical Polity he wrote ſome other pieces [H]. He died at Biſhops-Bourne November the 2d 1600 [I], in the forty ſixth year of his age, and was interred in the Church there, where a monument has ſince been erected to his memory by Sir William Cowper. He left four daughters, Alice, Cecily, Jane, and Margaret [K], to (s) Idem, pag. 217, 218.

(t) Idem, pag. 217.

(u) Idem, pag. 219, 220.

" that he procured Henry Jackſon, then of Corpus " Chriſti College, to tranſcribe for him all Mr. Hooker's " remaining written papers, many of which were im- " perfect, for his ſtudy had been rifled or worſe uſed " by Mr. Charke and another of principles too like " his. But theſe papers were endeavoured to be com- " pleated by his dear friend Dr. Spencer, who be- " queathed them as a precious legacy to my father (16), " after whoſe death they reſted in my hands, till " Dr. Abbot, then Archbiſhop of Canterbury, com- " manded them out of my cuſtody, by authorizing " Dr. John Barkeham to require and bring them to " him to his palace in Lambeth; at which time, I have " heard, they were put into the Biſhop's library, and " that they remained there till the marytrdom of Arch- " biſhop Laud, and were then by the brethren of the " faction given with all the library to Hugh Peters, " as a reward for his remarkable ſervice in thoſe ſad " times of the Church's confuſion. And though they " could hardly fall into a fouler hand, yet there wanted " not other endeavours to corrupt and make them " ſpeak that language for which the faction then fought, " which indeed was to ſubject the ſovereign power to " the people." In 1648 there was publiſhed at London in 4to, Of the Lawes of Eccleſiaſtical Politie; the ſixth and eighth Books. By Richard Hooker. A Work long expected, and now publiſhed according to the moſt authentique Copies. To this is prefixed the following advertiſement to the reader. " Here is preſented unto thee " two of the three ſo long expected and much deſired " books of learned Mr. Hooker's Eccleſiaſtical Polity; " viz. the ſixth and the eighth, as they were preſerved " in the hands of thoſe mirrors of learning, Dr. An- " drews late Lord Biſhop of Wincheſter, and the pre- " ſent Dr. Uſher, Lord Archbiſhop of Armagh, with " great hopes the ſeventh would have been recovered, " that they might have been publiſhed to the world's " view at once; but endeavours uſed to that purpoſe " have hitherto proved fruitleſs. And hearing that " ſome erroneous, if not counterfeit copies are abroad, " hath occaſioned the publiſhing of theſe, to prevent " as much as may be any addition of abuſes to the " abuſed author; and alſo that he, which ſo much " deſired the unity of the Church, might have the " divided members of his labours united." In this edition the ſeveral copies compared before the publication were that in Sir Thomas Bodley's library at Oxford, that in the Archbiſhop of Canterbury's library, that in Biſhop Andrews's library, two copies in Archbiſhop Uſher's poſſeſſion, and one in the hands of the Lord Viſcount Conway. Theſe two books with an addition of a ſeventh was publiſhed by Dr. John Gauden, ſucceſſively Biſhop of Exeter and Worceſter, at London 1662 in folio under this title: The Works of Mr. Richard Hooker, (that learned, godly, and eloquent Divine) vindicating the Church of England as truly Chriſtian and duly reformed, in eight Books of Eccleſiaſtical Polity, now compleated, as with the ſixth and eighth, ſo with the ſeventh, &c. out of his own MSS. never before publiſhed. With an Account of his holy Life and happy Death. The eighth book is commonly ſuppoſed to have been firſt publiſhed, together with the ſixth and ſeventh, by Dr. Gauden; but, as we obſerved before, the ſixth and eighth books, were printed at London in 1648; nay, all the eight books, with certain tractates and ſermons, and the author's life, were publiſhed in two volumes in folio in 1617, as the title-page informs us.

(16) Dr. John King Biſhop of London.

[H] Beſides his Eccleſiaſtical Polity he wrote ſome other pieces.] I. Anſwere to a Supplication preferred by Mr. Walter Travers to the Honourable Lords of the Privie Council. Oxford 1612 in 4to. II. Cauſes of Contention concerning Church-Government. Oxford 1641 in 4to. III. A Diſcourſe of Juſtification, Works, and how the Foundation of Faith is overthrown; on Abak. i. 4. Ox- 1612 in 4to. IV. A Sermon of the Nature of Pride; on Abak. ii. 4. Oxford 1612 in 4to. V. A Remedie againſt Sorrow and Feare, delivered in a Funeral Sermon, on John xiv. 27. Oxford 1612 in 4to. VI. Of the Certaintie and Perpetuitie of Faith in the Elect, eſpecially of the Prophet Abakkuk's Faith: A Sermon on Abak. i. 4. VII. Two Sermons upon Part of St. Jude's Epiſtle, viz. verſ. 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. Oxford 1614 in 4to. All theſe Sermons were publiſhed by Mr. Henry Jackſon, Fellow of Corpus Chriſti College Oxford, with Wickliff's Wicket; and reprinted without Wickliff's Wicket at London 1632 in folio at the End of the Five Books of Eccleſiaſtical Polity, and again at the End of the Eight Books, London 1682 in fol. VIII. A Sermon on Matth. vii. 7. found in the Study of Dr. Andrews, Biſhop of Wincheſter. Publiſhed by Mr. Iſaac Walton at the End of his Life of Dr. Sanderſon, Biſhop of Lincoln. London 1678 in 8vo.

[I] He died at Biſhops-Bourne November the 2d 1600.] His ſickneſs was occaſioned by a cold taken in his paſſage by water between London and Graveſend, from the malignity of which he never recovered. During his illneſs he was employed in his ſtudy, and ſaid often to Dr. Saravia, that " he did not beg a long " life of God for any other reaſon, but to live to " finiſh his three remaining books of Polity." It is thought, that he haſtened his own death by his application to compleat that work. About a month before his death he began to loſe his appetite, and then to have an averſeneſs to all food, ſo that he ſeemed for ſome weeks to live by the ſmell of meat only; and yet he ſtill ſtudied and wrote. A few days before his death, his houſe was robbed, of which being informed, he aſked, are my books and written papers ſafe? and being anſwered, that they were, his reply was, then it matters not, for no other loſs can trouble me (17). There were different accounts concerning the time of his death. Camden (18) tells us, that he died in 1599. In the inſcription upon his monument erected by Sir William Cowper his death is placed in 1603. But both theſe accounts are undoubtedly erroneous; for it is atteſted under the hand of William Somner, Regiſter to the Archbiſhop for the Province of Canterbury, that our author's will was dated October the 26th 1600, and proved the 3d of December following. And Archbiſhop Laud has fixed his death on the 2d of November 1600 in the following words, which he wrote with his own hand in the title-page of Mr. Hooker's Eccleſiaſtical Polity; Richardus Hooker, vir ſummis doctrinæ doctibus ornatus, de Eccleſiâ præcipuè Anglicanâ optimè meritus, obiit Novemb. 2. circiter horam ſecundam poſtmeridianam, anno 1600.

(17) Walton, pag. 225, 226.

(18) Annals of Elizabeth, ad ann. 1599.

[K] He left four daughters, Alice, Cecily, Jane, and Margaret.] One of his elder daughters was married to one Chalinor, ſometime a Schoolmaſter in Chicheſter. Margaret, his youngeſt daughter, was married to Ezekiel Clark, B. D. Rector of St. Nicholas in Harbledown near Canterbury, and by him had a ſon, Ezekiel, Rector of Waldron in Suſſex, and a daughter. His other daughters died before they were marriageable (19).

(19) Walton, pag. 231, 232.

T.

to each of whom he gave one hundred pounds; and left his widow ſole executrix. It appeared by his inventory, that his eſtate (a great part of which conſiſted of books) came to 1092 l. 9 s. 2 d. (w). He had a ſiſter, Elizabeth Harvey, who lived to the age of 121 years, and died in September 1663 (x).

(w) Idem, pag. 231.

(x) Idem, pag. 232.

☞HOOPER (GEORGE), a very learned Writer [A], and Biſhop of Bath and Wells, was born at Grimley in Worceſterſhire November 18 1640, and was ſon of George Hooper Gent. by Joan his wife, daughter of Edmund Giles of White Lady Aſton Gent. (a). His father removed to Weſtminſter for the better education of his ſon, who was educated in the ſchool there, and in 1656 elected thence a Student of Chriſt Church in the Univerſity of Oxford. January the 16th 166$\frac{9}{7}$ he took the degree of Bachelor of Arts; and in 1664 that of Maſter of Arts. He applied himſelf with great vigour to the ſtudy of Philoſophy, Mathematics, the Greek and Roman Antiquity, and Oriental Languages, in the laſt of which he was encouraged by Dr. Pocock, by whoſe aſſiſtance

(a) The memoirs, from which this article is compiled, were communicated by our author's daughter Mrs. Prowſe.

[A] A very learned writer.] This appears from his writings, of which we ſhall give the reader a catalogue. He publiſhed the following ſermons, viz. 1. A Sermon preached before the Lord Mayor at Guildhall Chapel, October 30, 1681, on Gal. v. 22, 23. London, 1682, in 4to. 2. A Sermon preached before the King at Whitehall, Novem. 5, 1681, on Mat. xxii. 21. London, 1682, in 4to. 3. A Sermon preached before the Queen at Whitehall, Sunday, January 25, 1690, on Luke xvi. laſt verſe. London, 1691, in 4to. 4. A Sermon preached before the King and Queen at Whitehall, January 14, 169$\frac{4}{3}$, on John vii. 17. London, 1694, in 4to. 5. A Sermon preached before the King, January 20, 1695, on John iii. 20. 6. A Sermon preached before the Houſe of Commons, April 4, 1701, on Phil. iii. 20. 7. A Sermon preached before the Houſe of Lords, January 30, 170$\frac{4}{3}$, on the Martyrdom of King Charles I, on 2 Cor. x. 3, 4. 8. A Sermon on the Day of Thankſgiving for the Peace, July 7, 1713, on Pſal. cxxii. 7. His other writings are as follow. I. The Church of England free from the Imputation of Popery, printed in 1682, and bound up with the London Caſes. II. A fair and methodical Diſcuſſion of the firſt and great Controverſy between the Church of England and the Church of Rome, concerning the Infallible Guide. In three Diſcourſes; whereof the firſt is introductory, and ſtates the points, which are preliminary to this and all the other controverſies between the two churches. The ſecond conſiders at large the pretences to modern Infallibility, and ſhews them to be groundleſs. The third, by the help of the former, briefly examines the pretended rational account of the Roman Catholics concerning the Eccleſiaſtical Guide in Controverſies of Religion, and detects its artifice. The two firſt parts were licenſed by Dr. Maurice in 1687; but the third was never printed. III. The Parſon's Caſe under the preſent Land-Tax, recommended in a Letter to a Member of the Houſe of Commons, 1689. IV. A Diſcourſe concerning Lent. In two Parts. The firſt, an Hiſtorical Account of its Obſervation. The ſecond, an Eſſay concerning its Original: This ſubdivided into two Repartitions, whereof the firſt is preparatory, and ſhews, that moſt of our Chriſtian Ordinances are derived from the Jews. And the ſecond conjectures, that Lent is of the ſame Original. The Imprimatur is dated Feb. 5, 1694. In the Vth ſection of the Xth Chapter of the firſt part he recapitulates the ſubſtance of that part in the following manner. "And thus have we "viewed the practice of Lent through the firſt 400 "years. We have ſeen in the laſt of theſe centuries, "when Chriſtianity came to be more openly profeſ- "ſed under the Chriſtian Emperors, and abounded in "writers, many expreſs and undeniable teſtimonies of "the general obſervation, though in a different man- "ner, of the forty ſeaſon, then commonly ſo called "from forty days. In the next age above it, the "third, and as high too as the middle of it, a time "that affords us not many authors, and when there "was little occaſion to ſpeak of this matter, we have "however a very punctual account of their ſtrict man- "ner of keeping the Paſſion Week, from one of the great- "eſt men of the church (1), who happened to be con- "ſulted about a nicety of ending this Lent. And "that there was great ſtrictneſs in the Holy Week, "equal to any that was uſed after, may well induce "us to imagine, that theſe men had not left the de- "votion of all the preceding weeks to be added by "the very next generation; eſpecially when we "find the forty ſeaſon expreſly mentioned in Origen, "a maſter of this Dionyſius, as conſecrated to faſting. "For that place of Origen, though we have it only "from the verſion of Ruffinus, and he none of the "moſt exact tranſlators; yet certainly, if he was not "the worſt that ever was, is much more likely to "be truly rendered than wrong, there being no rea- "ſon to faſten the falſity on this word more than on "any other of the ſentence, nor any wonder to find "that ſpoke of now, which not long after was cele- "brated ſo much." But to proceed, we have ſeen further from Tertullian, an author to be reckoned to the ſecond Century as well as to the third, that the days, in which our Lord was taken away, Good Friday and the Holy Saturday at leaſt, if not the whole week, were, in the opinion of the church of his time, to be faſted by all from Apoſtolical Authority; and that no other days were to be faſted neceſſarily, and as by divine precept, but as diſcretion only, and as Chriſtians ſhould think fit in godly prudence. Upon the account of which diſcretionary uncertainty the argument he was engaged in made it not proper for him to ſay any more concerning them, nor to tell us the ſeveral cuſtoms of ſeveral Churches about that arbitrary part of Lent; though it may otherwiſe be collected even from him, that there was then ſuch an additional time obſerved. But to go yet higher and nearer to the Apoſtolical age, about the year 190, and not 90 from the death of St. John, Irenæus a venerable and now a very old Biſhop, who had converſed familiarly with the great Polycarp, as Polycarp had with St. John and other Apoſtles, has happened to let us know, though incidentally only, the various obſervation of his time; that ſome thought they ought to faſt one, ſome two, and ſome more days, and ſome forty; as we have learned too in the general both from him and the Biſhops of almoſt the whole Church currently with him, that ſome ſuch Ante-Paſchal Faſt had been all along obſerved in all places, up to the time of the Apoſtles themſelves. The ſecond Part is an Eſſay concerning the Original of Lent, ſubdivided into two Repartitions; in the firſt of which Repartitions our author endeavours to ſhew, that moſt of the antient Chriſtian Ordinances were derived from the Jews. For this purpoſe he obſerves firſt, that it is not diſhonourable for Chriſtian Ordinances to be borrowed from the Jews. "Among the antient Heretics, ſays "he (2), ſome, it is known, read our Saviour and "his Goſpel, but rejected the Moſaical Law, and "blaſphemed its God. And there may be many now "(tho' more innocent) who, at this diſtance from the "riſe of Chriſtianity, may either have loſt the remem- "brance of its Original, and forgot that the laſt cove- "nant has any dependence on the firſt; or elſe in pride "of our great privileges may ſcornfully overlook the "diſpenſation of Moſes as a beggarly element, and in "the vanity of a neighbour-nation may think it a "diſparagement to the Chriſtian Religion to be thought "of Jewiſh extraction. And there may ſeem to have "been more cauſe given for this conceit from ſome "learned books of late, which have treated concern- "ing the Jewiſh and the Ægyptian antiquities, and "which have been miſunderſtood ſo far by ſome to "the prejudice of the old Teſtament, that thoſe, "who have not conſidered the matter well, may look "upon it as very diſhonourable to Chriſtianity, to bor- "row any thing from that nation, which is ſuſpected to "have borrowed ſo much of all its neighbours, and "to have robbed even the Religion of the Ægyptians. "But they need not fear, for truth can never ſuffer "from truth; and if it ſhall indeed appear, that the "Moſaic Religion was conformable to the worſhip of "their assistance he became a great master of the Arabic tongue, the knowledge of which he made great use to explain several obscure passages of the Old Testament. In 1669 he drew up a short Treatise in Mathematics, which Mercator desired to have from him, in order to publish it; but it still remains among his manuscripts. In 1672 he became Chaplain to Dr. Morley Bishop of Winchester, who soon after gave him the Rectory of Havant, which being an unhealthy place, he resigned it for that of Woodhey in Hampshire, where he succeeded Bishop Ken. July the 9th 1673 he took the degree of Bachelor of Divinity. Archbishop Sheldon being acquainted with Mr. Hooper's character, prevailed

(1) Dionyſius Biſhop of Alexandria.

(2) Part 2. Repat. 1. cap. 1. pag. 153, & ſeq.

" their eastern neighbours, it may notwithstanding no " less maintain its divine authority. Knowledge, we " know, as well as Empire, began in that part of " the world; and there the many traditions concern- " ing God, descended from Noah and others of his " inspired sons, were lodged and preserved; blended, " we may think, and much corrupted with many " falsities and superstitions; variously too by its va- " rious depositaries, the Chaldeans, Ægyptians, Phœ- " nicians, Arabians, &c. Now all these had some- " thing of the same Religion, as they had of the " same Language, but in a different dialect and man- " ner; and what if God was pleased, by the minis- " try of Moses, to reform it from the many additi- " ons, impious or immoral, with which it had been " severally adulterated, retaining some indifferent " customs innocently introduced, instituting others in " opposition to the more dangerous errors, and di- " recting some eminent parts of the whole to a fur- " ther prospect of another and more perfect revela- " tion yet to come; and all these Laws, for the use " of a peculiar people, to reduce into one code, and " authorize by a new sanction." Such a Reformed Religion we may suppose that of the Jews to have been; and need not therefore be afraid, if our Religion be said to be a further Reformation of that Judaism; a title Mr. Selden frequently gives it, but to be understood, not as if it were a repurgation of the old from any error, but as it is the completion and perfection of it according to the original design. And as certainly as our blessed Saviour and his Apostles were of Hebrew lineage, so certain it is, that our Religion is grafted on the Jewish. Neither do the expressions only and allusions of the Gospel relate to the customs of the Law, not well otherwise to be understood; but some of its chief instruments are known to be derived thence. For as before many of the Mosaic Rites were unquestionably designed to prefignify our Saviour; so some of them were afterwards taken into his service, always to minister unto him; not admitted only for the present out of condescension to the native or proselyte Jews, of whom then the greatest number of converts consisted; but some formally adapted, and others laudably continued, for perpetuity. He instances then in such ordinances, as are mentioned in Scripture, as Baptism, which was a rite, by which, as well as by others, proselytes were admitted into Judaism; and tells us, that Christian Baptism, as expressed in the new Testament, is an imitation of it. In the third chapter he informs us of the nature of the Paschal Sacrifice, and the description which the Jewish Traditions give of that supper, agreeably, says he, to the History in the Gospels of our Lord's Supper, and to the nature of it. In the fourth chapter he shews, that the Church of Christ succeeds to the Church of the Jews; that the Officers of the one were raised from the officers of the other. In the fifth chapter he describes the Excommunicates of the Jews and their condition; and the condition of the Mourners among the Jews compared with that of the Excommunicate; and observes, that their Excommunicates were restrained from the liberty, not only of civil conversation, but of religious communion: and that excommunication is mentioned in the New Testament as practised by the Jews and Christians. In the sixth he mentions the circumstances relating to baptism, under five heads, practised in the Church of Christ in the second Century; and shews, that all these were agreeable to Jewish custom: and first in general, as to the persons baptized and baptizing, and the solemn time of baptism; and in particular, secondly, as to the distinction and instruction of its Candidates; thirdly, as to the action of baptism; fourthly, its confirmation; and fifthly, the sequel and close of the whole ceremony. In the seventh chapter he takes notice of several particulars practised in the Lord's Supper by the primitive Christians, which varied from those of the Paschal Supper; and these particulars shew our Lord's Supper to have succeeded the Paschal in its general nature, as a memorial of thanks. He describes a Jewish offering of praise and thanks, with the feasting upon it; and shews, that the Christian Eucharist answered to it, and in what manner; and takes notice of a tradition of the Jews, that in the days of the Messiah only the Eucharistical Sacrifice should remain. In the eighth chapter he shews, that the distinction of Clergy and Laity is specified by Tertullian; that of Bishops, Priests, and Deacons, by him, (Irenæus also being his leader, for the Apostolical authority of Bishops,) and by Ignatius as the other, at least of the Laity and Clergy, by St. Clemens of Rome. He observes, that the first distinction was derived from the language of the Old Testament; the offices of the second from those of the Jewish Sanhedrim, and likewise of the Temple; the Upper Parts of our Churches being also supposed to answer the Temple Courts, of the Priests and the Altar. In the ninth chapter he shews, that the sentence and effects of Excommunication were the same with Christians as with Jews; and the relaxation of it alike; and observes their agreement in the estimate of the Guilt of Sins, and the appointments of penance. In the tenth chapter he takes notice of a parallel of Christian rites mentioned by Tertullian, and of those usages mentioned by Origen, particularly about prayer, 1. Disposition of mind. 2. Posture of body. 3. Direction of the face. 4. Times of daily prayer. 5. Matter and method. He represents the antient order of Christian prayer, and the order of the Jewish, and compares them; and gives a parallel of some few other usages. In the eleventh chapter he answers the second prejudice against a Jewish Origination of Lent from want of authority in the Talmudical writings, by shewing, 1. That those traditional accounts were not without some antient foundations of their own. 2. That they are confirmed in many points by collateral evidence. 3. That they were not borrowed by the Jews from foreign authors. In the same chapter he answers the third prejudice against such an origination, from the novelty of it. In the first chapter of the second Repartition he observes, that our Easter was kept for some time with the Jewish Passover; that the notification of Easter by Paschal Letters agrees with the practice of the Jews; and that the Ante-Paschal Preparation of Christians answers to a like preparation of the Jews before their days of expiation. In the second chapter he compares the sacrificial performance on the Jewish expiation day, with that of our Saviour on his passion day. In the third chapter he observes, that the devotional duty of the Jews on their expiation day is practised by Christians on the passion day; and compares some circumstances of the eves of those days. In the fourth chapter he shews, that there was a penitential season with the Jews preparatory to their expiation day; and that some certain days next before it were kept uniformly by all; more also generally, though in various numbers; and forty by many; but the first of the forty universally observed; and that forty days were a solemn space of penitence in the Jewish discipline; and he compares the Christian Lent with the Jewish. In the fifth chapter he remarks, that this origination of Lent is very probable, and its observation a testimony to our Lord's expiatory sacrifice. However, that the consideration of that expiatory sacrifice is a good reason for our observing the passion day, and likewise some preparatory time before it. V. In the Philosophical Transactions for October 1699 there is a piece of our author's intitled, prevailed with Biſhop Morley to permit his Chaplain to remove to Lambeth; but that Biſhop ſtill retained a ſincere affection for him, and ſent for him to attend him in his laſt ſickneſs. In 1675 the Archbiſhop collated him to the Rectory of Lambeth, and not long after to the Præcentorſhip of Exeter, which was an option of the Archbiſhop. July the 3d 1677 he took the degree of Doctor of Divinity. The ſame year he was ſent into Holland to attend the Princeſs of Orange as her Almoner, there being another Chaplain for the family. In this ſtation he was directed to regulate the performance of Divine Service in her Highneſs's Chapel according to the uſage of the Church of England; which he did in ſo prudent and decent a manner as to give no offence. He continued there about one year, when he deſired leave of the Princeſs to return to England on the account of his intended marriage, which ſhe with much regret conſented to upon a promiſe of his return; which he performing ſtaid about eight months longer, when her Highneſs permitted him to return home. In 1680 upon the death of Dr. Alleſtree he was offered the place of Divinity Profeſſor in Oxford, but declined it. About the ſame time he was made Chaplain to King Charles II. In 1685, the evening before the execution titled, A Calculation of the Credibility of human Teſtimony, conſiſting of theſe four propoſitions. Firſt, concerning the credibility of a report made by ſingle ſucceſſive reporters, who are equally credible. Secondly, concerning concurrent teſtifications. Thirdly, concerning the credit of a reporter for a particular article of that narrative, for the whole of which he is credible in a certain degree. Fourthly, concerning the truth of oral or written tradition in whole or in part ſucceſſively tranſmitted, and alſo co atteſted by ſeveral ſucceſſions of tranſmittents. VI. New danger of Preſbytery, 1703. VII. Marks of a defenceleſs cauſe, VIII. The Narrative of the Proceedings of the Lower Houſe of Convocation vindicated. IX. De Valentinianorum Hæreſi Conjecturæ, quibus illius Origo ex Ægyptiacâ Theologiâ deducitur. London 1711 in 4to, pagg. 27. In the beginning of this piece, our author obſerves, that the Chriſtian doctrine was not delivered at firſt to all the heathens in its native purity and ſimplicity. It was corrupted by ſome men for ſome private ends, and adapted to the ſuperſtitions of the Gentiles. Thus we read in the Scriptures, that the new inhabitants of Samaria corrupted the doctrine of Moſes. It is well known, that a Perſian was the author of Manicheiſm. The hereſy of Marcion proceeded from an opinion which generally prevailed among the Eaſtern Nations, that there were two eternal principles, one of good, and the other of evil; and that all the confuſion obſervable in this world was occaſioned by their perpetual ſtruggling. According to this doctrine, Marcion acknowledged two Gods, authors of the old and new Teſtament. He believed, that the former, being an ill principle, gave laws to the Jews, a Nation, which was always hated, eſpecially in the time of that heretic. But the latter, ſaid he, being a good principle, and deſigning to overthrow the Empire of his rival, ſent Jeſus Chriſt into the world, who gave better laws to mankind, and brought them into a ſtate of happineſs. After theſe obſervations our author proceeds to the doctrine of Valentinus. He believes, that though it appears to us monſtrous and extravagant, the Egyptians had a different notion of it. That heretic is ſaid to have been a native of Egypt; and it is not improbable, that he adapted the Chriſtian Religion to the opinions of his countrymen. This conjecture our author endeavours to prove in the ſequel of his diſcourſe. In the firſt place, he gives a very exact account of the doctrine of Valentinus; and in order to render it more intelligible, he has added a genealogical table of the Æones, &c. mentioned by that heretic and his followers. He then enquires into the origin of the Valentinian Syſtem, and compares it with the Egyptian Theology. X. An inquiry into the ſtate of the antient Meaſures, the Attick, the Roman, and eſpecially the Jewiſh. With an Appendix concerning our old Engliſh money and meaſures of content. London 1721 in 8vo. In the preface he tells us, that upon the peruſal heretofore of two very curious tracts, which were publiſhed about the ſame time in the year 1684, the one by Dr. Cumberland, late Biſhop of Peterborough, and the other by Dr. Edward Bernard, firſt printed with Dr. Pocock's Commentary on Hoſea; and upon reading the Roman Foot and Denarius of Mr. John Greaves, by them moſt juſtly celebrated; he began to enquire more nearly into the ſtate of the old Hebrew Meaſures, and going upon the ſure foundation of Mr. Greaves, and in the method of Biſhop Cumberland, and aſſiſted by the copious informations of Dr. Bernard, he caſt his thoughts into the following ſcheme. Firſt having the nature in general of the ſeveral meaſures of Length, Content, and Weight, and their convenient relation one towards another, he laid down the Engliſh meaſures, as thoſe, to which he was to reduce the Jewiſh, for his clearer underſtanding of them. And then, becauſe the knowledge of the Jewiſh meaſures was chiefly to be had from the accounts of them, that are given us by men of different ages and nations; and it was as neceſſary to have their ſeveral meaſures adjuſted to the Engliſh; he was obliged to take into his notice ſome of the modern, but more eſpecially thoſe, which had been uſed in old time by the Athenians and Romans. And thus provided he was in the laſt place to produce and compare the moſt probable informations, which have been given us of thoſe Jewiſh meaſures, and to form thence as clear and as certain account of them as he could. And accordingly his Inquiry conſiſts of four parts. The firſt treats of Meaſures in general, and particularly of the Engliſh, and ſome other modern ones, as the preſent Roman, the Spaniſh, the Holland, and the Egyptian. The ſecond takes a view of the Attic Meaſures, for the ſake of thoſe Greek authors who are to be conſulted. The third inſpects the Roman, which could not be ſo well underſtood without the Attic, for the ſake of the Latin writers. The fourth conſiders the Jewiſh Meaſures themſelves. To the whole is ſubjoined an Appendix concerning the denominations and computation of the Engliſh money and meaſures of content. In this Appendix he obſerves (3), that, in his opinion, "all the old Engliſh meaſures of content, which we received from the Saxon, were in "all probability derived to them from the Saracens, "as well as our money;" and he remarks (4), that "with regard to the names of veſſels, which are "known in Spain and Italy, ſuch as Pipe, Butt, Barrel, &c. he ſhould look for them in the Mediterranean, and there among thoſe Eaſtern people, from "whence the goods contained in them came. For "conſidering that all menſuration of weight appears "plainly to be Phœnician; and that meaſures of "content, even of water, were highly neceſſary to "them for their proviſion in their voyages by land as "well as ſea; and that of liquids, wine and oil were the "original products of that coaſt; (not only the word "Wine, but the fabulous names of Bacchus, Semele, "and Silenus with his Aſs, atteſting to ſuch an original:) one may be thence inclined to think, that "the Phœnician names of veſſels were carried to the "Greek Iſlands along with their contents; and that "the Saracens afterwards, when they were maſters of "that ſea, readily took up the words they found of "the Oriental Language, as well as impoſed new "from the ſame. This is what may be conjectured "from many of the Levant veſſels, not only thoſe "that hold water, but thoſe that ſwim in it; for they "ſometimes borrow names one from the other. And "it may not therefore be improper to enquire after "them in the South-Eaſt, notwithſtanding the Saxons, Danes, and Normans have been potent navigators in their time, and may be preſumed to have "brought in upon our iſland their Germanick appellations." Dr. John Arbuthnot in the Preface to

(3) Pag. 468, 469.

(4) Pag. 473, 474.

tion of the Duke of Monmouth he received by the Earl of Rocheſter a meſſage from the King, immediately to attend the Duke. When he came to the Tower, and acquainted the Duke with his Majeſty's order, he received it with ſome confuſion and ſurprize; but the Doctor aſſuring him, that he was charged with no particular commiſſion, the Duke told him, that he was very welcome and acceptable to him; and after much free converſation with him, ſaid, that he would ſee him in the morning as ſoon as he was up. The Doctor ſate up all night, and in the morning the Duke told him, that he was ſure he had made his peace with God. Much time was ſpent to deſire his Grace to conſider the nature and foundation of ſuch a full perſuaſion, which the Doctor very faithfully laid before him with as great plainneſs and decency, as the Duke's firm adherence to this belief would admit of, in which he perſiſted to his laſt moment. In the morning the Duke was attended by the Biſhops of Ely and Bath and Wells, and Dr. Teniſon, who with Dr. Hooper accompanied him to the ſcaffold, where the Biſhop of Ely chiefly diſcourſed with the Duke, and preſſed him to own the truth of the doctrine of Non-reſiſtance, and confeſs himſelf guilty of rebellion. In 1691, upon the promotion of Dr. John Sharp to the Archbiſhopric of York, Queen Mary, during the King's abſence in Holland, ordered the Earl of Nottingham to ſend for Dr. Hooper to come to her, when ſhe offered him the Deanery of Canterbury, of which he had not the leaſt expectation; for he never directly or indirectly made intereſt for any one preferment. He aſked her Majeſty, which of his two livings he ſhould reſign; who told him, that though the King and ſhe never gave two livings to one man, yet they never took them away, and ordered him to keep both. But when the Queen would not name one, he reſigned Woodhey. In 1698 the Prince and Princeſs of Denmark were very deſirous to have had him Præceptor to the Duke of Glouceſter; but the King appointed Biſhop Burnet for that ſervice. In 1701 he was choſen Prolocutor of the Lower Houſe of Convocation; and the ſame year was offered the Primacy of Ireland by the Earl of Rocheſter, then Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. In 1702 he was by the Queen's expreſs command, though contrary to his inclination, made Biſhop of St. Aſaph, in which See he continued about half a year, and generouſly refuſed the uſual mortuaries or penſions paid by the Clergy in Wales to their new Biſhops, ſaying, that they ſhould never pay ſo dear for the ſight of him. In 1703 he had the like order to remove to the See of Bath and Wells, which he earneſtly requeſted her Majeſty to diſpenſe with, not only on account of the great expence of ſuch a ſudden tranſlation, and a reluctance to remove, but alſo out of regard to his old friend Dr. Ken, the deprived Biſhop of that See, for whom he begged that Biſhopric, which the Queen readily granted; but Biſhop Ken deſired to be excuſed, and never ceaſed to importune Biſhop Hooper to accept it, and from that time ſtiled himſelf, late of Bath and Wells. But before Biſhop Hooper could be prevailed with to accept this Biſhopric, he requeſted the Queen to permit him to hold the Præcentorſhip of Exeter in Commendam, with a diſpenſation for non-reſidence, for the ſole benefit of Biſhop Ken; which her Majeſty readily conſented to, commending Biſhop Hooper for making that propoſal to her. But the then Biſhop of Exeter objecting againſt it, the Queen, to ſatisfy him, deſired Biſhop Hooper to reſign it, ſaying, that ſhe would take care of the deprived Biſhop, and then ordered him a penſion of two hundred pounds per ann. which was punctually paid him out of the Treaſury to the time of his death. By his ſteady, wiſe, and courteous conduct he gained the affections of the Gentry and Clergy of his Dioceſe, of which he was fully poſſeſſed; and in return no offers could make him think of a tranſlation from them. For he often refuſed a ſeat in the Privy Council, and could not be perſuaded to accept of the Biſhopric of London on the death of Biſhop Compton, nor of the Archbiſhopric of York on the death of Archbiſhop Sharp. He ſate in the See of Bath and Wells twenty four years and ſix months, and died at Barkely in Somerſetſhire, whither he ſometimes retired, on the 6th of September 1727, and was interred in the Cathedral of Wells under a marble monument erected to his memory [B].

Dr.

his Tables of ancient coins, weights, and meaſures, explained and exemplified in ſeveral Diſſertations (5), gives a great character of the author's Inquiry, and tells us, that "if one conſiders the uniformity of the "whole deſign, accuracy of the calculations, ſagacity "of the conjectures, ſkill in reſtoring and comparing "paſſages of antient authors, and the incomparable "learning that ſhines through the whole, it excels very "far all that ever was publiſhed upon the ſubject." And he ſtiles this work an ingenious Inquiry (6).

(5) Printed at London 1727 in 4to.

(6) Pag. 19, and 40.

XI. De Patriarchæ Jacobi Benedictione, Gen. XLIX. Conjecturæ: Publiſhed by the Reverend Mr. Hunt of Hart-Hall in Oxford, with a preface and notes collected out of the Arabic manuſcripts in the Bodleian Library. The Biſhop had kept this piece by him above forty years, and ſhewn it to Dr. Pocock, as appears from a letter of the Biſhop written to the Doctor on that occaſion. He put it into Mr. Hunt's hands juſt before his death, with directions to print it in the manner Mr. Hunt has done; and it was printed ſoon after at the expence of Mrs. Prowſe, the Biſhop's daughter. The impreſſion conſiſted only of a hundred copies, which were chiefly deſigned for preſents to friends. Among the manuſcripts which he left behind him, he gave leave to have publiſhed a Latin Sermon preached in 1672, when he took his degree of Bachelor of Divinity, and a Latin Tract on Divorce.

[B] A marble monument erected to his memory.] The epitaph inſcribed on it is as follows.

"In hoc ſacrario cineres ſuos requieſcere voluit
"Reverendus admodum Præſul
"GEORGIUS HOOPERUS, S. T. P.
"Magnum Eccleſiæ Anglicanæ Decus.
"Scientias quippe maximè reconditas,
"Matheſin univerſam,
"Antiquitates patrias exteraſq;
"Linguas pœne omnes, quotquot aut oriens protulit aut occidens,

"Jus

Dr. Thomas Coney publiſhed a character of him (b) ſoon after his death [C].

(b) In Miſt's Journal of October 21, 1727, and at the end of the Doctor's Twenty five Sermons, London 1730 in 8vo.

" Jus Civile, Municipale, Canonicum,
" Elegantiorum Literarum venuſtate temperaverat:
" Theologiam vero
" Aſſiduâ ſacri Codicis & primævorum patrum lectione,
" Quaſi alias omnes ſcientias ignorare maluiſſet,
" Totam penitus hauſerat,
" Saniorem haud dubiè amplexus.
" Summo tamen Eruditionis Amore ſemper incenſus,
" Non ita ſtudiis ſe totum tradidit,
" Ut arduis negotiis impar,
" Aut hominum ignarus,
" Aut difficilis, inconcinnus, aſper evaderet.
" Inerat enim illi
" Comitate Aulis Principum dignâ
" Chriſtiana Simplicitas condita;
" Ingenium non ad Literas magis
" Quam ad res agendas habile & verſatile;
" Mira in conciliandis ſibi hominibus ſolertia,
" Sed Animarum ſaluti unicè intenta.
" Ita cum artes doctrinaſq; longè diſſitas conjungerat,
" Summiſq; honoribus par
" Nullum unquam ambiret
" Aditum ſibi ad famam eximiam,
" Ad primarios tum in Republicâ quam Eccleſiâ viros,
" Ad Reginarum denique pientiſſimarum
" Mariæ & Annæ patrocinium,
" Virtute ſolâ pateſecit.
" Itaq; ab illâ Decanatu Cantuarienſi,
" Ab hac Inſulâ primo Sanct: Aſaphenſi,
" Deinde Bathono-Wellenſi ornatus eſt.
" Quo in munere ampliſſimo
" Cum Gregi ſuo fideliter invigilaret,
" Inopes occulto plerumq; munificentiæ fonte,
" Sed perenni, ubere, latè fluenti reficeret,
" Preſbyteros ſuos indulgentiâ paternâ foveret,
" Impigerrimos quoſq; etiam ruri latentes,
" In lucem & ſplendorem nec opinantes evocaret,
" Bonorum omnium Amorem & Obſervantiam meruit,
" Poſteris morum exemplar pulcherrimum reliquit.
" Obiit VI Septembris A. D. M.DCC.XXVII.
" Ætatis LXXXVII."

[C] Dr. Thomas Coney publiſhed a character of him ſoon after his death.] The Doctor tells us, that his learning was not ſmattering and ſuperficial but ſolid and univerſal; and his talents ſo great in every diſtinct part of knowledge, that the maſters of each faculty have thought their profeſſion to be the Biſhop's peculiar ſtudy. The Lawyer might ſuppoſe him bred to the Bar, and converſant in nothing but Statutes and Reports. The Caſuiſt might think his whole time ſpent in Canoniſts and Schoolmen; and the Divine, in Fathers and Councils. The Antiquary might tie him down to Medals and Charters; and the Linguiſt fancy him always poring upon Lexicons, or elſe the ſeveral Eaſtern Languages could not be ſo familiar to him as Latin and Greek. The Philoſopher found no ſcience out of the reach of his comprehenſive genius; nor the Maſters of polite Literature, any graces in the Claſſics, which had eſcaped his obſervance. Yet in all theſe ſeveral attainments, his ſurpriſing excellency was, that the variety of learning did not diſtract his thoughts, nor the intenſeneſs of ſtudy ſour the facetiouſneſs of his humour. He ſo tempered the crabbedneſs of the Mathematics with the politeneſs of the Orator, the legends of the Rabins with the fidelity of the Fathers, and the occurrences of Modern Hiſtory with the tranſactions of Antiquity, that he was as delightful in his converſation, and as entertaining in his friendſhips, as he was profound in his knowledge, and ornamental in his life. With regard to the character of a gentleman, his accompliſhments were ſo great, as not only to excel thoſe of his own profeſſion, but to be a match for ſuch as had made converſation and ceremony their ſole and ultimate ſtudy. It is obſervable, that much ſtudy makes men pettiſh and moroſe; that a recluſe life is an impediment to converſation; and that learning itſelf is imperious and dogmatical. But in our Prelate all theſe acquiſitions had the quite contrary effects. His ſtudy was to promote good manners; his retirement, to make a more glorious appearance; and his learning, to propagate affability and condeſcenſion. The private courſe of his life would force any one to confeſs, that he was far from affecting popularity, or doing any thing for noiſe and oſtentation. But his appearance was ſo venerable, his converſation ſo endearing, and his demeanor ſo uncommon, as to render him the moſt popular and noted Prelate of his order. But in the midſt of theſe civilities and accompliſhments, it is ſtill remarkable, that the gravity of the Biſhop kept the aſcendant of the Gentleman; and that his principles were too ſtiff to bend to any company. His zeal and integrity were inviolable; and truth was never loſt in a croud of words. His ſincerity was no ſufferer by his complaiſance; nor was the Courtier too hard for the Chriſtian. He looked upon himſelf as married to his Dioceſe; and notwithſtanding his numerous acquaintance and extended friendſhips in other parts of the Kingdom, he confined his preferments to his own children, the reſiding Preſbyters of his proper Dioceſe. Nepotiſm had no ſhare in his favours, and relations were kept at a diſtance. The laborious Clergyman would find himſelf ſurprized into a preferment, whilſt he was ſweating at his duty. The modeſt and humble man would be dignified in his obſcurity, without the fatigue of attendance, or the formality of a petition. The care of his Pariſh was the beſt recommendation of a Paſtor to this vigilant Prelate; and the continuance in his duty the moſt obliging requital that could be made him. Where the ſervice was great and the congregation numerous, ſome marks of diſtinction were certainly placed, and the Miniſter was ſeaſonably advanced, to ſecure an higher reverence to his perſon and a kinder acceptance of his labours. Every one of his Clergy had the favour of a ſon, the acceſs of an equal, and the reception of a friend. No angry looks did intimidate the petitioner, no tedious formalities protract buſineſs, nor any imperious Officers inſult the Clergy. T.

HOORNBEECK (JOHN), Profeſſor of Divinity in the Univerſities of Utrecht and Leyden, was one of the moſt illuſtrious Divines in Holland in the ſeventeenth Century. He was born at Harlem (a) in the year 1617, and ſtudied there till he was fifteen or ſixteen years old, when he was ſent to Leyden, where he made a conſiderable progreſs in the Sciences, under the learned Profeſſors, that Univerſity was provided with. Having ſpent two years in that City, he went to ſtudy at Utrecht in the year 1635, whence he returned to Leyden the next year. He was admitted a Miniſter in the year 1639, and went to perform the functions of his office ſecretly at Cologne. He acquitted himſelf of all the duties of his poſt with a great deal of piety and prudence, and was never diſcouraged by the dangers to which he was expoſed in a City, where moſt of the inhabitants were zealous Papiſts. He returned into Holland in the year 1643, and was the ſame year promoted (b) to the degree of Doctor of Divinity with great applauſe the 21ſt of December. The proofs he gave of his great learning were ſuch, that he was choſen to fill the Chair of Divinity Profeſſor, which had been vacant at Utrecht ſince Schotanus's death. He choſe to accept that poſt rather than any of the employments, that were offered him in other Cities [A]. In July 1644 he was inſtalled Profeſſor of Divinity

(a) John Hoornbeeck, his grandfather, retired thither with his wife, in the year 1584, leaving Flanders, his native country, for the ſake of his Religion.

(b) In the Univerſity of Utrecht.

[A] Several employments were offered him in other cities.] In February 1644 the Church of Maeſtricht would have him for her Miniſter. That of Graft in North-Holland called him in March that ſame year,

Divinity at Utrecht, and the next year he was choſen alſo Miniſter in ordinary of the Church of that city. How difficult ſoever the functions of theſe two employments were, yet he acquitted himſelf of them with great diligence and care [B], which rendered his noble talents ſo uſeful to the public, that it made him univerſally beloved and eſteemed. But leſt he ſhould ſink under ſo many labours, the Magiſtrates diſcharged him of part of his paſtoral functions. He was choſen to exerciſe the ſame employments at Leyden, which he had at Utrecht, and accepted them in the year 1654. He was a great ornament to that celebrated Univerſity till he died September the 1ſt 1666. He deſerved to live much longer; but we ought rather to wonder that ſo laborious a man as he was [C] lived about forty nine years, than that he did not live longer. The great number of books which he publiſhed [D] are a moſt evident proof of his great application and extenſive learning.

and the Chair of Divinity Profeſſor in the illuſtrious ſchool of Harderwyck (1) was offered him in the month of May following (2). It is very glorious for a man thus to be wiſhed for in ſeveral places at the age of twenty ſeven.

(1) A city of Guelderland.

(2) Taken from John Hoornbeeck's Life prefixed to his book De Converſione Indorum.

[B] He acquitted himſelf of his new employment with great diligence and care.] I kept the particular account of it for this remark, in which I ſhall make uſe of the author's words, who wrote our Hoornbeck's life. In utraque autem ſtatione (3) per decennium fere perſeveravit, tanta eruditionis, eloquentiæ, pietatis, & diligentiæ fama; omnibuſque ordinibus adeo gratus, ut nullus in majori fuerit exiſtimatione, non Ultrajecti ſolum, ſed in toto Belgio. Nempe aſſiduus erat in docendo, precando, concionando, legendo, diſputando, regendo, præſidendo, catechiſationibus habendis, membris Eccleſiæ, imprimis ægris viſitandis. Quibus artibus optimis certe, Magiſtratus Trajectini gratiam adeo meruit & invit, ut Magiſtratus optimus ſuo proprio motu, non petentem, nec forte cogitantem, liberaverit dimidia parte oneris Paſtoralis, ſervato tamen integro honore & honorario. i. e. "He continued almoſt ten years in theſe two "employments, with ſuch a reputation of learning, "eloquence, piety, and diligence, and ſo much be- "loved by perſons of all ranks, that no perſon was "ſo much eſteemed as he, not only at Utrecht, but "through all the United Provinces. For he made it "his conſtant care to teach, to pray, to preach, to "read, to hold diſputations, to viſit his flock, and "eſpecially the ſick, and catechize the youth. Theſe "commendable arts gained him the favour of the "Magiſtrates of Utrecht, ſo that they exempted him "from one half of his paſtoral functions, though they "ſuffered him to enjoy all the honours and preroga- "tives of them, and continued to pay him his whole "ſalary." If you will ſee the character of a good paſtor, read what follows. Membra Eccleſiæ frequenter inviſebat, pios animabat, ignaros docebat, malos corrigebat, hæreticos confutabat, afflictos ſolabatur, ægros recreabat, infirmos roborabat, dejectos erigebat, pauperibus ſubveniebat, omnes denique juvabat pro eorum ſtatu & conditione, omnibus aderat in omnibus, omnibus ſe omnia faciebat, gravibus gravem, bilaribus hilarem, afflictis condolentem, doctis doctum & Doctorem, plebi Paſtorem, errantibus ducem ut in viam reduceret veritatis. i. e. "He often viſited the members of his Church; he "encouraged the pious, inſtructed the ignorant, re- "proved the wicked, refuted the heretics, comforted "the afflicted, refreſhed the ſick, ſtrengthened the "weak, cheared up the drooping, aſſiſted the "poor; in a word he was uſeful to all, in whatſo- "ever ſtate or condition they were; he was ready "to help all that wanted his aſſiſtance; he made "himſelf all things to all; he was grave with the "grave, chearful with the chearful, mournful with "the afflicted, learned and a Doctor with the learn- "ed, a paſtor to his flock, and a guide to lead thoſe "that erred into the paths of truth." Here follows the character that is given of him with regard to his diligence in his functions as a Profeſſor. Studioſos vero Theologiæ velut filios omni cura complectebatur, laboreſque ſuos præcipuos iis impendebat; non lectiones ſolum in eorum gratiam habebat, ſed frequentia Collegia omnis generis, atque Diſputationes ordinarias & extraordinarias, ex quibus reſultarunt tot vaſta & egregia volumina ad inſtitutionem juventutis, imo ad uſum omnium, ſed inprimis ad converſionem hæreticorum (4). i. e. "He took as much care of the Students in Divinity "as if they had all been his own children; his chief "labours were ſpent for them; he uſed to read not "only public lectures for them, but even private "Lectures upon ſeveral ſubjects, and to hold ordinary "and extraordinary diſputations, which have pro- "duced ſo many large and excellent volumes, "uſeful not only for the inſtruction of youth, but "alſo for the uſe of all men, and eſpecially for the "converſion of heretics."

(3) That is to ſay, his poſt of Profeſſor, and that of Paſtor in ordinary.

(4) Ex Vita Joan. Hoornbeeki.

[C] So laborious a man as he was.] This the reader may know already, by the particulars related in the foregoing remark; but it will ſtill better appear from the following paſſage: it relates to the time when he was Divinity Profeſſor and Miniſter at Leiden. Curam Eccleſiæ ſuo jure poterat in Collegas derivare, quia primario Paſtori (5) ab ea immuni adjunctus, cum eo labores, honores, præmia, & privilegia omnia ex decreto ſapientiſſimi Magiſtratus æqualiter diſtribuebat. Sed ab Eccleſiæ cura, membrorumque & ægrorum viſitatione diſpenſari noluit, contra vero, cum dimidias tantum Paſtoris vices demandatas haberet, integras voluit implere, zelo & diligentia ſtupenda in homine alias occupatiſſimo, imo non tam onerato quam oppreſſo, & tantum non fatiſcente ſub multiplici onere, cui plures ſimul juncti vix eſſent pares. Concionabatur in Templo, legebat in Academia, præſidebat in Conſiſtorio, Catechiſationes inſtituebat in Choro, Collegia habebat in domo, ſcribebat in muſæo, ſæpe in lecto, membra Eccleſiæ viſitabat in ædibus, ægros etiam & peſtiferos, curam ad omnes & ad omnia extendebat (6). i. e. "He had a right to leave the care of "the Church to his collegues; for being an aſſiſtant "to the firſt paſtor, who was diſcharged from that "care, he might ſhare with him all the labours, ho- "nours, profits and privileges, by a decree of the "moſt prudent Magiſtrates. But he would not be "diſcouraged from the care of the Church, and of "viſiting his flock and the ſick. On the contrary, "though he was intruſted but with one half of the "paſtoral functions, yet he would perform them all. "Which ſhewed a wonderful zeal and diligence in a "man who was otherwiſe extremely buſy, and rather "oppreſſed than loaded, and almoſt ſinking under "the variety of his labours, to which ſeveral other per- "ſons joined together had hardly been equal. He "preached in the Church, read lectures in the Univer- "ſity, was Moderator in the Conſiſtory, explained the "Catechiſm in the Choir, had private lectures at "home, wrote in his ſtudy, and often in bed, viſited "the members of his Church at their houſes, even the "ſick, and them that had got the plague; he ex- "tended his care to all men and all things."

(5) It was Profeſſor Heidanus.

(6) Ex Vita Joan. Hoornbeeki.

